SUDRAS IN ANCIENT INDIA
(A Survey of the Position of the Lower Orders down to circa A.D. 500)

BY
RAM SHARAN SHARMA,
M.A. (Patna), Ph.D. (London)
HEAD OF THE DEPARTMENT OF HISTORY, PATNA UNIVERSITY

MOTILAL BANARSIDASS
DELHI  VARANASI  PATNA

1958
CONTENTS

CHAPTER

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Preface</td>
<td>A</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abbreviations</td>
<td>B-C</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roman Equivalents of Nagari Letters</td>
<td>D</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I. Introduction</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The place of the südras in the historiography of the ancient Indian social order</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>II. Origin</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fight between the Āryans and the non-Āryans</td>
<td>8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Difference between the Dāsas and the Dasyus</td>
<td>13</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inter-tribal struggles among the Āryans</td>
<td>14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Social adjustment between the Āryans and the non-Āryans</td>
<td>18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The servile class and the Dāsas in the age of the Rg Veda</td>
<td>22</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mass migration of the Āryans and the rise of social divisions among them</td>
<td>24</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Absence of sharp class distinctions among the Āryans</td>
<td>26</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The first appearance of the südras as a social class</td>
<td>29</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Südras as a tribe</td>
<td>30</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Südras as an Āryan tribe</td>
<td>33</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Were the südras originally kṣatriyas?</td>
<td>36</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Etymological derivation of the term südra</td>
<td>38</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The status of the südra varṇa at the time of its origin</td>
<td>40</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III. Ambiguous Position (c. 1000—c. 600 B.C.)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sources for the study of the position of the südras in the later Vedic period</td>
<td>42</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Südras as the labouring class</td>
<td>43</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
CHAPTER

The use of the terms ‘slaves’ and ‘serfs’ for the śūdras
Śūdra ṛatmins
Participation of the śūdras in the rituals of the rājasūya sacrifice
Śūdra soldiers in the aśvamedha sacrifice
King’s desire for the support of all the four varṇas
Exclusion of the śūdras from coronation rituals
Interpretation of a passage from the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa
Free marital relations between the higher and lower classes
The beginning of the assimilation of the aboriginal tribes
Upanayana and the śūdras
Śūdras’ participation in some religious rites Gods worshipped by the śūdras
Evidence against śūdras’ participation in the Vedic sacrifice Inconsistent position of the śūdras in the later Vedic period

IV. Imposition of Disabilities (c. 600—c. 300 B.C.)

Sources for the study of the śūdras in the pre-Mauryan period
Śūdras and the crafts
Śūdras and slaves
Living conditions of the śūdras
Dāsās, pessas, kāmakkaras and bhaṭakas
Economic disabilities of the śūdras according to the Dharmasūtras Contrast between the living standards of the śūdras and those of the higher varṇas Political and legal discriminations against the śūdras
CHAPTER

Social disabilities of the śudras ... 111
Exclusion of the śudras from the rite of upanayana and Vedic education ... 119
Exclusion of the śudras from sacrifices and sacraments ... 121
Manual occupations held in contempt by the higher varṇas ... 123
Five despised castes of the early Pāli texts ... 125
Origin of untouchables ... 130
Effects of the reforming religious movements on the position of the śudras ... 133
End of the ambiguous position of the śudras ... 139
Reaction of the śudras to their disabilities ... 140

V. The Mauryan State Control (c. 300—c. 200 B.C.)

The problem of the authenticity of the Arthaśāstra ... 143
Independent śudra cultivators in the new Mauryan settlements ... 147
Agricultural labourers and slaves ... 149
Employment, control and wages of the artisans ... 152
High administrative posts as the preserve of the higher varṇas ... 157
Enrolment of the śudras as spies and soldiers ... 159
Varṇa legislation of Kauṭilya ... 160
Civic status of the śudras vis-a-vis the position of slaves ... 163
Marriage practices of the śudras and the formation of the mixed castes ... 168
Religious condition of the śudras ... 171
General conduct of the lower orders ... 173

VI. Weakening of the Old Order (c. 200 B.C.—c. A.D. 200)

Sources for the post-Mauryan period ... 175
Obliteration of distinctions between the vaiśyas and the śudras ... 176
| Changes in the position of the artisans | 179 |
| Manu's economic measures against the śūdras | 181 |
| Wages and living conditions of the labourers | 183 |
| Position of the śūdras in post-Mauryan polity | 187 |
| Severe punishments for śūdras offending against superior varnas | 190 |
| Śūdras and slaves in Manu | 195 |
| Social practices of, and discriminations against, the śūdras | 198 |
| Forms of marriage followed by the vaiśyas and śūdras | 202 |
| Mixed castes and untouchables in Manu | 204 |
| Manu's injunctions against the śūdras' right to Vedic studies and sacrifices | 209 |
| Religious rights of the śūdras | 211 |
| The role of the śūdras in the Kali age | 212 |
| Hostile activities of the śūdras | 215 |
| Signs of weakening in the semi-servile status of the śūdras | 217 |

VII. The Phase of Transformation (c. A.D. 200–c. 500)

| Sources for the Gupta period | 221 |
| Śūdras as wage earners | 224 |
| Wages of the agricultural labourers and cowherds | 225 |
| Weakening of the institution of slavery | 227 |
| Emergence of śūdra cultivators | 231 |
| Growing importance of śūdra artisans | 235 |
| Improved relations between the employers and employees | 238 |
| Śūdra traders | 240 |
| The place of the śūdras in the political organisation of the Gupta period | 241 |
| Continuance of varṇa distinctions in the administration of law and justice | 244 |
CHAPTER

Lessening of varṇa discriminations in the administration of criminal law and recruitment to army .............................................. 249
Hostility of the śūdras to the existing social order .............................................. 252
Some improvement in the social status of the śūdras .............................................. 254
Brāhmaṇa boycott of the śūdras' food .............................................. 256
Food habits of the śūdras .............................................. 257
Marriage practices of the śūdras .............................................. 259
The condition of the untouchables .............................................. 261
Education of the śūdras .............................................. 265
Changes in the religious position of the śūdras .............................................. 267
The contribution of Vaiśṇavism and Śaivism to the religious equality of the śūdras .............................................. 274
Main changes in the position of the śūdras in the Gupta period .............................................. 278

VIII. Recapitulation and Conclusion

Main phases in the development of the position of the śūdras down to A.D. 500 .............................................. 280
Reason for the comparative calmness of the śūdras in ancient Indian society .............................................. 283

Bibliography .............................................. 286
Index (Sanskrit, Pāli and Prākīrti Words) .............................................. 303
General Index .............................................. 308
Errata .............................................. 317
PREFACE

I took up the study of this subject about ten years ago, but the pressing duties of an Indian university teacher and lack of proper library facilities prevented me from making any appreciable progress. The major part of the work was done in two academic sessions (1954-6) at the School of Oriental and African Studies, made possible by the generous grant of study leave by the Patna University. This book, therefore, substantially represents my thesis approved for the degree of Ph. D. at the University of London in 1956.

I wish to thank Dr. F. R. Allchin, Professor H. W. Bailey, Dr. T. N. Dave, Dr. J. D. M. Derrett, Professor C. von Furer-Haimendorf, Professor D. D. Kosambi, Professor R. N. Sharma, Dr. A. K. Warder and numerous friends, from whom I have received various kinds of help in the course of this work. I am grateful to Dr. L. D. Barnett for his valuable suggestions and encouragement from time to time. I must express my thanks to my esteemed friend Dr. Dev Raj, but for whose help in proof-reading and allied matters the publication of the book would have been further delayed. I have also to acknowledge my debt to Dr. Upendra Thakur, who has prepared the index helped me in proof-reading. Above all, I consider myself fortunate in having worked with Professor A. L. Basham, whose exacting standards of scholarship, love of intellectual independence on the part of his students and friendly guidance have contributed much to the making of this work. But I am responsible for any errors of fact and judgment, or technical irregularities, that may have remained unnoticed. I have been, however, helpless in the case of some printing mistakes, which could not be removed in spite of my best efforts.

R. S. Sharma
AI - Ancient India, Delhi.
AICL - Ancient India as Described in Classical Literature.
AIE - Ancient Indian Education.
AIMA - Ancient India as Described by Megasthenes and Arrian.
AK - Amarakosa.
Aṅg. N. - Anguttara Nikāya.
Anu. P. - Anuśāsana Parva.
Antag. - Antagoda - Dāsāṇa.
AO - Archiv Orientalis, Prague.
Ap. Śr. S. - Āpastamba Śrautasūtra.
AS - Atharvasūtra.
ASR - Archaeological Survey (of India) - Reports.
ASS. - Anandârama Sakrîa Series.
Āśo. Śr. S. - Āśvalāyana Śrautasūtra.
Āyār. - Ayāroṇga Sutta.
AV. - Atharva Veda.
Bau. Dh. S. - Baudhāyana Dharmasūtra.
Bhaṅ. P. - Bhāṅgavata Purāṇa.
Bhaṅ. P. - Bhāṅgavata Purāṇa.
Bṛ. - Brhaspati Smṛti.
Bṛ. Saṃhitā - Bhṛat Saṃhitā.
Bṛ. U. - Bhṛadāryaṇyaka Upaniṣad.
Chat. U. - Chāndogya Upaniṣad.
CHI - Cambridge History of India.
CII - Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum.
Dīgha N. - Dīgha Nikāya.
Dīya. - Dīvyaśāstra.
DKA - Dynasties of the Kali Aga.
Ed. - Edited by, Edition.
EI - Epigraphia Indica, Calcutta and Delhi.
Gaut. Dh. S. - Goutama Dharmasūtra.
GOS - Gaṅgâpad Oriental Series.
HIL - History of Indian Literature.
Hist. & Essays - Hī ṛṣīnaviḥśāstra.
Hist. & Essays - Hī ṛṣīnaviḥśāstra.
HOS - Harvard Oriental Series.
HPL - History of Pali Literature.
HSL - History of Sanskrit Literature.
IA - Indian Antiquity, Bombay.
IC - Indian Culture, Calcutta.
IHQ - Indian Historical Quarterly, Calcutta.
Ind. Alt. - Indische Alterthumskunde.
JASB - Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Calcutta.
JRASB - Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society of Bengal, Calcutta.
Kā. Śr. S. - Kātyāyana Śrautasūtra.
Kātna. N. S. - Kāmnadaka Nitisāra.
Kāś. N. S. - Kānasūtra.
Kap. S. - Kaṭiṭhala Saṃhitā.
Kāṭyāyana Smṛti.
KŚ-Kāṭhaka Saṃhitā.
Kumb.-Kumbkonam Edition of the Mahābhārata (also indicated as SE).
Lātyā. Śr. S. - Lātyāyana Śrautasūtra.
Majj. N. - Majjhima Nikāya.
Mamu-Mamu Smṛti.
Mār. P. - Mārakandeya Purāṇa.
Mat. P. - Matsya Purāṇa.
Mbh. - Mahābhārata.
Mīlinda-Mīlinda-pañha.
MR - Modern Review, Calcutta.
MS - Maitravāṇi Saṃhitā.
Nār.-Nārāda Smṛti.
NE - Northern Edition of the Mahābhārata (also indicated as Cal.).
NF - Neue Folge.
NS - New Series.
Pā-Pāṇini’s Grammar.
Pañc. Br. - Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa.
Pat. - Patañjalī’s Mahābhāṣya.
P.K. - Pillar Edict of Asoka.
Pete. A. - Petavasthū Asthakohā.
Roman Equivalents of Nāgari Letters

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>अ</th>
<th>ए</th>
<th>ऋ</th>
<th>ए</th>
<th>क</th>
<th>ख</th>
<th>छ</th>
<th>च</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>a</td>
<td>e</td>
<td>ai</td>
<td>kh</td>
<td>k</td>
<td>kh</td>
<td>c</td>
<td>c</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>आ</td>
<td>आ</td>
<td>ओ</td>
<td>ओ</td>
<td>ग</td>
<td>ज</td>
<td>ज</td>
<td>j</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>i</td>
<td>i</td>
<td>o</td>
<td>o</td>
<td>g</td>
<td>j</td>
<td>j</td>
<td>j</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>इ</td>
<td>इ</td>
<td>उ</td>
<td>उ</td>
<td>घ</td>
<td>झ</td>
<td>झ</td>
<td>jh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>उ</td>
<td>उ</td>
<td>ठ</td>
<td>ठ</td>
<td>घ</td>
<td>झ</td>
<td>झ</td>
<td>jh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ठ</td>
<td>ठ</td>
<td>ड</td>
<td>ड</td>
<td>न</td>
<td>ढ</td>
<td>ढ</td>
<td>l</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ड</td>
<td>ड</td>
<td>ध</td>
<td>ध</td>
<td>भ</td>
<td>भ</td>
<td>भ</td>
<td>b</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ध</td>
<td>ध</td>
<td>ढ</td>
<td>ढ</td>
<td>ब</td>
<td>ब</td>
<td>ब</td>
<td>b</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ढ</td>
<td>ढ</td>
<td>ण</td>
<td>ण</td>
<td>म</td>
<td>म</td>
<td>म</td>
<td>m</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ण</td>
<td>ण</td>
<td>न</td>
<td>न</td>
<td>श</td>
<td>श</td>
<td>श</td>
<td>s</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>न</td>
<td>न</td>
<td>स</td>
<td>s</td>
<td>य</td>
<td>य</td>
<td>य</td>
<td>y</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>स</td>
<td>s</td>
<td>र</td>
<td>r</td>
<td>ल</td>
<td>l</td>
<td>l</td>
<td>l</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>र</td>
<td>r</td>
<td>ल</td>
<td>l</td>
<td>व</td>
<td>v</td>
<td>v</td>
<td>v</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ल</td>
<td>l</td>
<td>म</td>
<td>m</td>
<td>व</td>
<td>v</td>
<td>v</td>
<td>v</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>व</td>
<td>v</td>
<td>व</td>
<td>v</td>
<td>व</td>
<td>v</td>
<td>v</td>
<td>v</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>व</td>
<td>v</td>
<td>व</td>
<td>v</td>
<td>व</td>
<td>v</td>
<td>v</td>
<td>v</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Anusvāra : m

Visarga : h
CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTION

The modern study of the ancient Indian social order owed its inception to the efforts of the East India Company, which could not govern an alien people without some knowledge of their institutions. The preface to A Code of Gentoo Laws (1776), one of the first English works which have some bearing on the early social history of India, states that "the importance of the commerce of India and the advantages of a territorial establishment in Bengal" could be maintained only by "an adoption of such original institutes of the country, as do not intimately clash with the laws or interests of the conquerors." In his preface to the translation of the Manu Smṛti (1794) Sir William Jones, the father of modern Indology, adds that, if this policy is pursued, "the well-directed industry" of "many millions of Hindu subjects" "would largely add to the wealth of Britain." Four years later, on the basis of these sources, Colebrooke wrote an essay on the "Enumeration of Indian classes", which appeared to him among the most remarkable institutions of India. Soon after (1818) these sources were utilised by Mill to describe the caste system in his History of India. While discussing the disabilities of the śūdras he came to the conclusion that the vices of caste subordination were carried to a more destructive height among the Hindus than among any other people, and remarked that the hideous society of the Hindus continued in his times. But from the same sources

1. Vivādārṇavaśātra, Translator's preface, p. IX. This work was translated from English into German in 1778.
2. Institutes of Hindu Law, Preface, p. XIX. Cf. Discourse of Colebrooke in the first general meeting of RAS (15 March, 1823), Essays, i, 1-2.
5. The History of India, ii, 166; i, 166-9; 169 fn. I. It seems that Mill's generalizations about the history of India exercised the most dominant influence on later British historians.
Elphinstone (1841) deduced that the condition of the śūdras "was much better than that of the public slaves under some ancient republics, and, indeed, than that of the villains of the middle ages, or any other servile class with which we are acquainted". He also perceived that such a servile class did not exist any longer in his time.

But there is no doubt that many age-old social practices continued into the 19th century. The glaring contrast between the rising industrial society of England and the old decaying society of India attracted the attention of the educated intelligentsia, who were being permeated with the spirit of nationalism. They realised that the practices of sati, lifelong widowhood, child marriage, and caste endogamy were great obstacles to national progress. Since these practices were supposed to derive sanction from the Dharmāsāstras, it was felt that necessary reforms could be effected easily if they could be proved to be in consonance with the sacred texts. Thus in 1818 Rammohan Roy published his first tract against sati, in which he tried to show that, according to the śāstras, it was not the best way for the salvation of a woman.

In the fifties of the same century Ishwarchandra Vidyasagar ransacked Smṛti literature in order to make out a case for widow remarriage. In the seventies Swami Dayanand, the founder of the Ārya Samaj, brought out a collection of original Sanskrit texts called the Satyārthaprakāśa to support widow remarriage, rejection of caste based on birth, and the śūdras' right to Vedic education. We do not know how far the early social reformers drew inspiration from the contemporary works of Muir, who tried to prove that the belief in the origin of the four varnas from the primeval man did not exist in ancient times,

1. The History of India, i, 34.
3. In 1902 an old Indian writer laments that the brāhmaṇas should be made to take their place below Eurasian (Anglo-Indian) industrialists. J.C. Ghosh, Brahmanism and Sudra, p. 46.
8. Original Sanskrit Texts, i.
and from those of Weber, who presented the first important critical study of the caste system on the basis of the Brähmaṇas and the Sūtras.

On the occasion of the introduction of the Age of Consent Bill in 1891, Sir R. G. Bhandarkar brought out a well-documented pamphlet citing Sanskrit texts to establish that a girl should be married only when she attains maturity. On the other hand B. G. Tilak, to whom any stick was good enough to beat the alien rulers, cited texts against this Bill.¹ ²

This tendency to quote ancient scriptures in support of modern reforms can be well summed up in the words of R. G. Bhandarkar (1895): “In ancient times girls were married after they had attained maturity; now they must be married before; widow marriage was in practice, now it has entirely gone out... ... Interdining among the castes was not prohibited, now the numberless castes... ... cannot have intercommunication of that nature”³.

But the attempt of the Indian scholars to present their early social institutions in a form more acceptable to the modern mind did not always commend itself to western writers. Thus Senart (1896) pointed out that the castes have been compared by Hindus of English upbringing with the social distinctions that exist among Europeans, but that they correspond only very remotely to western social classes.⁴ Similarly Hopkins (1881) stated that the position of the śūdra was not different from that of the American house slave before 1860.⁵ Reviewing Hopkins’ generalizations, Hillebrandt (1896) held that the position of the śūdras should be judged in comparison with the slaves of the ancient world and not in the context of developments in later times.⁶

1. Indische Studien, x, 1-160.
Criticising Hopkins, Ketkar (1911) complains that European writers are influenced by their ideas of racial discrimination against the Negroes, and hence unduly exaggerate this in their treatment of the caste system.\(^1\) The main trend noticeable in the works of recent Indian writers such as Ketkar, Dutt, Ghurye and others is to present the system in such a way as may help to recast it in response to present requirements.\(^2\) Thus it would appear that problems of ancient Indian society have been largely studied against the background of struggle between the reformist and orthodox schools. The dominant motives of reform and nationalism have undoubtedly produced valuable works on India's early social life; but what appeared to be seamy and ugly in comparison with modern standards came to be either ignored or explained away unconvincingly. For instance, it has been argued that the disabilities of the śūdras did not reduce their happiness or well-being.\(^3\)

It is this tendency to concentrate on favourable aspects of early social life that accounts for the almost complete absence of works on the position of the śūdras in ancient India. Even European writers gave their attention mainly to the study of the upper classes of Hindu society. Thus Muir devoted 188 pages to the legends of struggles between brāhmaṇas and kṣatriyās,\(^4\) and Hopkins (1889) presented a comprehensive study of the "Position of Ruling Caste in Ancient India."\(^5\) The admirable work of Fick (1897) on the social organization of northeastern India also mainly confined itself to the treatment of kṣatriyas, brāhmaṇas and gahapatis or sēṭhis. It is difficult to explain these writers' lack of interest in the fortunes of the lower orders unless we suppose that their vision was circumscribed by the dominant class outlook of their age.

The first independent work on the śūdras is a short article

---

2. Ketkar, op. cit., p. 9; Radhakrishman's foreword to Valavalkar's Hindu Social Institutions. The works of Dutt and Ghurye display a better historical sense, but see Dutt, op. cit., Preface, p. VI.
4. Original Sanskrit Texts, i, Ch. IV.
5. JAOS, xiii, 57-376. by V. S. Śastri (1922), who discusses the philosophical basis of the term südra. In another article (1923) on this subject he tries to show that the südras could perform Vedic rituals. In a recent article (1947) Ghoshal deals with the status of the südras in the Dharmasūtras. The latest article is by a Russian writer G. F. Ilyin (1950), who, on the basis of the Dharmasūstra evidence, demonstrates that südras were not slaves. The only monograph on südras (1946) is published by a well-known Indian politician, who confines himself to the question of their origin. The author is entirely dependent for his source-material on translations, and, what is worse, he seems to have worked with the fixed purpose of proving a high origin for the südras, a tendency which has been very much in evidence among the educated sections of the lower caste people in recent times.
A single passage of the Śānti Parvan, which states that the südra Paijavana performed sacrifice, is sufficient to establish the thesis that südras were originally kṣatriyas. The author does not bother himself about the complex of various circumstances which led to the formation of the labouring class known as the südras. A very recent work (1957), allied to our subject, brings together scattered information on labourers in ancient India, but does not make any significant addition to our knowledge.
The main object of this book is to explore the field of Labour Economics in ancient India, and in doing so the author notices in the past parallels to modern wage-boards, arbitrators, social

1. I A, I, 137-9.
3. IC, xiv, 21-27.
4. Śūdras und Sklaven in den altindischen Gesetzbüchern,” in Sozietatwissen-
5. Kane’s compilation of the Dharmasūstra extracts regarding südras provide valuable raw material for an historical study of their position.

6. Ambedkar, Who were the Shudras?
7. Ibid., Preface, p. IV.
8. It is to be noticed that in recent caste movements many südra castes claim to be kṣatriyas. Thus the Dusadhás claim to be the descendants of Dvārakasana, and the Goālās those of the Yadus. security etc., with the result that this work suffers from much modernism. Moreover, the book mainly draws on the Arthāśāstra of Kauṭilya, is sketchy, and lacks historical sense.

The present work has been undertaken not only to provide an adequate treatment of the position of the śùdras in ancient times, but also to evaluate their modern characterizations, either based on insufficient data, or inspired by reformist or anti-reformist motives. An attempt will be made to present a connected and systematic account of the various developments in the position of the śùdras down to circa A. D. 500.

This study has to be mainly based on literary sources, the precise dating of which or of their various parts has been a baffling problem. We have adopted the generally accepted chronology of the literary texts, but in the case of differences of opinion we have indicated our own reasons for adopting an unconventional dating.

Although the texts belong to different periods, they repeat ad nauseam the same formulae and terminologies, which make it difficult to detect changes in society; hence special attention has been paid to the study of variants. Many of these texts cannot be understood without the aid of the commentators, who not unoften project the ideas of their own times into earlier periods.

Further, the literary texts, brāhmaṇical and non-brāhmaṇical, seek to establish the supremacy of the brāhmaṇas or of the kṣatriyas, or of both, but they hardly show any sympathy for the śùdras. It is argued that the Dharmaśāstras and other treatises are books written by the enemies of the śùdras and as such have no evidential value. But the law-books of other ancient societies also follow the principle of class legislation as the Dharmaśāstras do; unfortunately for lack of sufficient data we cannot definitely say how far the Dharmaśāstra laws were followed.

Since the śùdras were regarded as the labouring class, in this study particular attention has been paid to the investigation of their material conditions and the nature of their economic and social relations with the members of the higher varpas. This has naturally involved the study of the position of slaves, with whom the śūdras were considered identical. The untouchables are also theoretically placed in the category of śūdras, and hence their origin and position has also been discussed in some detail.

In order to explain and illustrate certain developments in the position of the śūdras, wherever possible comparisons have been made with similar developments in other ancient societies and among primitive peoples known to anthropology.
CHAPTER II

ORIGIN

In 1847, it was suggested by Roth that the śūdras might have been outside the pale of the Āryan society. Since then it has usually been held that the fourth varṇa of brāhmaṇical society was mainly formed by the non-Āryan population, who were reduced to that position by the Āryan conquerors. This view continues to derive support from the analogy of conflict between the white-coloured Europeans and the non-white population of Asia and Africa.

If Dāsas and Dasyus be identical with the original inhabitants of India speaking non-Āryan languages, it is possible to adduce evidence in favour of this view from the Rg Veda. In the numerous hymns of that collection, which are repeated in the Atharva Veda, the Āryan god Indra appears as the conqueror of the Dāsas, who mostly appear to have been human beings. It is said that Indra consigned the base Dāsa varṇa to the cave. As the controller of the world, he takes upon himself the task of bringing the Dāsas into subjection, and is asked to prepare himself for their destruction. The recurring theme of the Rg Vedic prayers to Indra is the request for the overthrow of the Dāsa tribes (viśas). Indra is also represented as having deprived the Dasyus of all good qualities, and as having subjugated the Dāsas.

1. ZDMG, i, 84.
2. VI, ii, 265, 388; R. C. Lutt, A Hist. of Civ. in Anc. India, i, 12; Falt, Caste in India, p. 83; N. K. Dutt, Origin and Growth of Caste in India, pp. 151-52; Ghurye, Caste and Class, pp. 151-2; D. R. Bhandarkar, Some Aspects of Ancient Indian Culture, p. 10.
3. Muir thinks that there is nothing to show that they were non-Āryans. Original Sanskrit Texts, ii, 387.
4. yénæd vīśæi ṣvāvā kṛtānī, yō dāsaṃ vāṃvāmānuḥ gūḥkāḥ. RV.II. 12.
5. RV, XX. 34. 4.
6. ...yathāvidyāṃ no ati dāsamāryāḥ. RV, V. 34. 6.
7. RV, II. 11. 4; VI. 25. 2; and X. 148. 2.
8. RV, IV. 28. 4.
There are more references to the destruction or subjugation of Dasyus by Indra than of Dāsas. It is stated that having killed the Dasyus he protected the Áryan varṇa. Prayer is made to him to fight against the Dasyus in order to increase the strength of the Áryans. It is significant that there are at least twelve references to the slaughter of the Dasyus, mostly by Indra. On the contrary, although there are references to the killing of individual Dāsas, the word dasahatyā does not occur anywhere. This indicates that the two were not identical and may suggest that the Áryans followed a policy of ruthless extermination towards the Dasyus, which, in the case of the Dāsas, was tempered with moderation.

The fight between the Áryans and their opponents mainly took the form of the destruction of the fortresses and walled settlements of the latter. Both the Dāsas and Dasyus were in possession of numerous fortified settlements, which are also associated with the enemies of the Áryans in a general way. This naturally reminds us of the later discoveries of fortifications in the Harappā settlements.

It seems that the nomadic Áryans coveted the wealth of their enemies accumulated in the settlements, for the possession of which there went on a regular warfare between them. The worshipper expects that all those who make no oblation should be killed and their wealth should be given to the people. The Dasyus are described as rich

1. \( ...\)hatvī dasū \( \text{āy} \) ḍaṁ \( \text{āy} \) ḍaṁ \( \text{vār̥} \) ṣamāvat. RV, III, 34. 9; AV, XX, 11. 9 (not in the Paippalāda recension).
2. I, 103. 3; AV, XX, 20. 4.
3. The term dasū-hādyā occurs in RV, I, 51. 5-6, 108. 41; X, 95. 7, 99-17. Dasū-ghāṇī occurs in RV, IV, 16, 10, and dasū-hān in RV, X, 47. 4. Dasū-gāṭhāma occurs in RV, VI, 16. 15, VIII. 39. 8, and is reproduced in VS, XI. 34. There are many other references to the hostility between the Áryans and Dasyus, viz. RV, V, 7, 10, VII. 5, 6 etc. Indra is called dasū-hā in RV, I, 100. 12; VI, 45, 24; VIII. 76, 11, 77, 3. There are similar references to the slaughter of Dasyus by Indra in AV, III. 10, 12; VIII. 8, 5, 7; IX, 2, 17 & 18; X, 8, 11; XIX, 46.2; XX, 11. 6, 21. 4, 29. 4, 34. 10, 37-4, 42, 2, 64, 9, 78, 3, and by Agni in AV, I, 7. 1; XI. 2. Manyu is called dasū-hā in AV, IV, 32. 3.
4. RV, I, 103. 3; II, 19. 6; IV, 30. 20; VI, 20. 10, 31.4.
5. RV, I, 33.13, 53.8; VIII. 17.14.
7. RV, IV, 30. 13; V, 40. 6; X, 69. 6.
8. asmāḥyamanaḥ vedanaṃ daddhi' sārścidehate. RV, I, 176. 4.
(dhaninah) but without sacrifice.\(^1\) Mention is made of two Dāsa chiefs who are called wealth-seeking.\(^2\) Desire is expressed that through Indra\(^3\) the might of the Dāsa be subdued, and his collected wealth be divided among the people. The Dasyus also possessed jewels and gold, which probably excited the greed of the Āryans.\(^4\) But to a people of cattle culture such as the Āryans, it was primarily the cattle of their enemies which held the greatest temptation. Thus it is argued that the Kikaṭas do not deserve to have cows because they make no use of milk products in the sacrifice.\(^5\) On the other hand it is likely that the enemies of the Āryans valued the horses and chariots of the latter. VĀ Rg-Vedic legend tells us that the Asuras had captured the city of a royal sage named Dabhiti, but on their retreat were intercepted and defeated by Indra, who recovered cattle, horses and chariots and restored them to the prince.\(^6\)

The Dasyu way of life further antagonised the Āryans. Apparently the tribal and semi-settled life of the Āryans based on cattle keeping was incompatible with the sedentary and urban life of the people of the indigenous culture.\(^7\) The predominantly tribal life of the former expressed itself through several communal institutions such as the gāna, sabhā, samiti and the vidatha in which the sacrifice played a very important part. But the Dasyus had nothing to do with sacrifice. This was true of the Dāsas as well, for Indra is described as coming to the sacrifice distinguishing between the Dāsa and the Ārya.\(^8\) A whole passage occurring in the seventh book of the Rg Veda consists of a string of adjectives such as akratān, aśraddhān and ayajanān applied to the Dasyus to emphasise their non-sacrificing character.\(^9\) Indra is asked to discriminate between the sacrificing Āryans and

1. RV, I. 33. 4.
2. dhavandād vyabhāḥ vasnayuyottodvaraje varseṣuṁ saṁbaran ca. RV, VI. 47. 21.
3. vayāṁ tād asya sdmhṛtaṁ vāsu i′ndreṇa vi′bhajemahi. RV, VIII. 40. 6.
4. RV, I. 33. 7-8.
5. kīṁ te kruṇanti kī′kaṇeṣu gava naṁ dāśaṁ duḥre na tapani gharmaṁ. RV, III 53. 14.
6. RV, II. 15. 4.
8. RV, X. 86. 19; AV, XX. 126. 19.
9. RV, VII. 6. 3.
non-sacrificing Dasyus. They are also called ayajvānah. The word anindra (without Indra) is used at several places, and presumably refers to the Dasyus, Dāsas and perhaps, some Āryan dissenters. In the Āryan view the Dasyus practised black magic. Such a belief is especially found in the Atharva Veda, in which the Dasyus appear as evil spirits to be scared away from the sacrifice. It is said that an all-powerful amulet enabled the sage Aṅgiras to break through the Dasyus' fortresses. The evil character of the Dasyus in the Atharva Veda seems to have been based on their fighting record in the Rg Vedic period. According to the Atharva Veda the god-blaspheming Dasyus are to be offered as victims. It is believed that the Dasyus are treacherous, not practising the Āryan observances, and hardly human.

The difference between the Āryan and the Dasyu way of life was further brought out by indicating the relation in which the Dasyus stood to the Āryan vrata, generally meaning law or ordinance. If it be possible to establish some connection between this word and vrata, which means tribal troops or groups, it may be suggested that the term vrata probably means tribal law or usage. The Dasyus are generally described as avrata and anyavrata. The word apavrata is used at two places and perhaps applies to the Dasyus and dissenting Āryans. It is notable that such adjectives are not applied to the Dāsas, which again indicates that they were more amenable to the Āryan way of life than the Dasyus.

1. RV, I. 51. 8.
2. RV, I. 33. 4.
3. I. 133.1; V. 2. 3.; VII. I. 8. I 6; X. 27. 6; X. 48. 7.
4. RV, IV. 16. 9.
5. AV, II. 14.5.
7. AV, XII. 1. 37.
8. RV, X. 22. 8.
9. P. V. Kane, JBBERAS, NS, xxix, 12.
10. RV, I. 51. 8-9; I. 101. 2; I. 175. 3; VI. 14. 3; IX. 41. 2. The term avrata, however, has nowhere been applied to the Dāsas.
11. RV, VIII. 70. 11; X. 22. 8.
12. RV, V. 42. 9; in V. 40. 6 the term apavrata is identified with darkness.
There are reasons to think that there was difference of colour between the Āryans and their enemies. It appears that the Āryans, who are called human (mānusī prajā), worshipping Agni Vaiśvānara, on occasions set fire to the settlements of the dark-hued people (asikrivīśaḥ), who deserted their possessions without fighting. The Āryan deity Soma is described as killing people of black skin, who apparently were Dasyus. Further, Indra had to contend against the Rākṣasas of black skin (tvacamasiknim), and at one place he is credited with the slaughter of fifty thousand ‘blacks’ (kṛṣṇas) whom Sāyaṇa regards as Rākṣasas of black colour. The god is also described as tearing off the black skin of the Asura. An important exploit of Indra, which may have some historical basis, refers to his fight against a hero known as Kṛṣṇa. It is stated that, when Kṛṣṇa encamped on the Aṃśūmati or Yamunā with ten thousand soldiers, Indra mobilised the Maruts (the Āryan viś) and fought against the adeviḥ viśaḥ with the help of the priest-god Bṛhaspati. Adeviḥ viśaḥ are explained by Sāyaṇa as Asuras of black colour (kṛṣṇarūpāḥ asurasenāḥ). It is suggested that Kṛṣṇa was the non-Āryan dark hero of the Yādava tribe. This seems likely because later traditions speak of hostility between Indra and Kṛṣṇa. There is also reference to the killing of the kṛṣṇagarbhā, doubtfully interpreted by Sāyaṇa as pregnant wives of an Asura named Kṛṣṇa. Similarly mention is made of the overthrow of the kṛṣṇayoniḥ dāsiḥ by Indra. Sāyaṇa fancifully takes them as the lowest demon-like troops (nikṛṣṭajāṭīḥ ... āsuriḥ senāḥ), but

2. ghnaṇitah kṛṣṇām api trdeam...sāhdeṣe so dāyaṁvratām. RV, IX. 41. 1-2.
3. RV, IX. 73. 5.
4. RV, IV. 16. 13. Götlander, however, does not introduce the Rākṣasas in this context.
5. RV, I. 130. 8.
6. ... dhā draṣṭo aṁśuṃdiyā upadāḥ dhāruyattāṃ vṛttaḥ śūcaḥ; viśo adevirbḥyāh caraṁ trīḥ haṣṭāś ca vyājanāḥ. RV, VIII. 96. 15-15.
7. Kosambi, JBBRAS, NS, xxvii, 43.
8. yāḥ kṛṣṇagarbhā nirākṣhān tṛjāśānā. RV, I. 101. 1.
9. sa vyāduyoniḥ kṛṣṇāṁ puraṇaḥ oddiṣṭatvaḥ... RV, II. 20. 7. Sāyaṇa’s comm. Bıt Götlander suggests that dāsiḥ implies understood puraḥ, and that the poet is thinking in terms of pregnancy.
Wilson takes kṣyna in the sense of black. If the latter meaning be correct, it would appear that the Dāsas were black in colour. But the description 'black' may have been applied indiscriminately to them as it was to the Dasyus and other enemies of the Āryans. The above references, however, leave little doubt that the Āryan followers of Indra, Agni and Soma had to fight against the black people of India. In one reference, the Rg Vedic hero Trasadasyu, son of Purukutsa, is described as the leader of the ‘dark-complexioned’ men. This may indicate that he had established his hold over them.

If the word anāsa² applied to the Dasyus is taken in the sense of ‘noseless’ or one with a flat nose, and the term ṛṣasipra applied to the Dāsas³ as bull lipped’ or having big protruding lips, it would appear that the enemies of the Āryans were physiognomically different.

The term mṛdhraṇāk, which occurs in its different forms at six places in the Rg Veda,⁴ gives some idea of difference in the manner of speech between the Āryans and their enemies. It qualifies Dasyus at two places.⁵ Sāyaṇa explains it as ‘of hostile speech’, and Geldner renders it as ‘of wrong speech’.⁶ Unless the term mṛdhraṇacah is taken in the sense of ‘inintelligible speech’, it does not give any evidence of linguistic difference between the Āryans and the Dasyus, but only shows that the latter hurt the sentiments of the Āryans by their improper speech. Thus although the main issue in the war between the Āryans and their enemies was the possession of cattle, chariots and other forms of wealth, differences in race, religion and mode of speech also served to exacerbate relations.

If inferences can be drawn from the relative occurrences of the terms dāsa and dāṣyu in the Rg Veda, it would appear that the Dasyus, who are mentioned eighty-four times, were obviously

1. RV, VIII. 19. 36-37.
2. RV, V. 29. 10. Sāyaṇa explains anāsa as one without speech (āyakarita).
3. RV, VII. 99. 4.
4. RV, I.174.2; V. 29. 10, 32. 8; VII. 6. 3, 18.19. Not at four places, as in Who were the Shudras, p. 71.
5. RV, V. 29. 10; VII. 6. 3.
6. In RV, I.174.2 Geldner translates mṛdhraṇacah as ‘misunderstood’.
numerically stronger than the Dāsas, who are mentioned sixty-one times. The struggle against the Dasyus was attended with much bloodshed. The Āryans, who in the early stage of their expansion coveted cattle for their upkeep, naturally did not understand the value of urban settlements and organised agriculture. The destruction of the pre-Āryan urban settlements seems to have been complete. It is this which accounts for the disappearance of urban life during the Vedic period. While the spoils of war, especially cattle, must have added to the power of the warriors and priests, raising them above the viś, it was slowly realised that the peasants of the older culture could provide labour power with which the Āryans could carry on agriculture.

Alongside the conflict between the Āryans and their enemies there went on the internal conflict in the Āryan tribal society. Through a battle song addressed to Manyu (personified Wrath), his aid is invoked for overcoming the two kind of enemies, Āryans and Dāsas. Indra is asked to fight against both the godless Dāsas and Āryans who are described as the enemies (istrawah) of his followers. It is said that Indra and Varuṇa killed the Dāsas and Āryans who were the adversaries of Sudās and thus protected him. On behalf of the good and righteous people prayer is made to the two chief Rg Vedic deities Agni and Indra to counteract the hostile activities and oppressions of the Āryans and Dāsas. Since Āryans were one of the chief enemies of their fellow men, it is no wonder that along with the Dāsas they also are said to have been destroyed by Indra. If Wilson’s translation of a Rg Vedic passage be accepted, Indra is lauded for having saved the people from the Rākṣasas and Āryans on

1. Computed on the basis of refs. given in Viśvabandhu Śāstri’s Vedic Koli.
2. Wheeler suggests the complete break-up of organised agriculture on account of the invasion of the uncivilised nomads (i.e. Āryans). op. cit., p. 8.
3. sāhyānanā ḍaṃṣamtyāṃ trīyā yujī sahaṅkṛitena sahāsil sahaṅsata. RV, X. 83.1 identical with AV, IV. 32. 1.
4. RV, X. 38.3 ; cf. AV, XX. 36. 10.
5. dāsā ca uṣṭrāh hitamādyāni ca suddham indrāvarupdvasāvatam. RV, VII. 82.1.
6. RV, VI. 60. 6.
7. RV, VI. 33.3 ; cf. X. 102. 3.
the bank of the seven rivers, and is further called upon to deprive the Dāsas of their weapons.¹

Of thirty-six occurrences of the word ārya in the Rg Veda nine make clear mention of hostility among the Āryans themselves.² At one place the Āryan enemies are lumped together with the Dasyus and at five places with the Dāsas, which again suggests that the Dāsas were on better terms with a section of the Āryans than were the Dasyus. They were considered as natural allies of the Āryans in their inter-tribal conflicts, which gradually undermined the tribal basis of their society, and helped the process of fusion between the Āryans and Dāsas. Five of these references occur in the earlier portions of the Rg Veda, which shows that the internal conflict was a fairly old process.

The most important evidence for internal conflict within the Āryan fold at an early date is the record of the Dāsarājña battle, which is the only important historical event in the Rg Veda. Geldner thinks that RV, VII. 33, which speaks of this battle, belongs to an early period.³ The Battle of Ten Kings was primarily a conflict between two main branches of the Rg Vedic Āryans, namely the Pūrus and the Bhāratas, in which the non-Āryans may have joined as auxiliaries.⁴ While the Bhāratas were led by the famous Rg Vedic hero Sudās and assisted by their priest Vasiṣṭha, their enemies comprised ten kings belonging to the five well-known tribes—Anus, Druhyus, Yadus, Turvaśas and Pūrus, along with five less known tribes—Ālina, Paktha, Bhalānas, Śiva and Viṣāpin. The opposing confederacy was organised by the priest Viśvāmitra and led by the Pūrus.⁵ It appears that the battle was, in fact, a memorable attempt of

1. yd ṛkpadāṃhāso mucḍdyvodbryāt sapāśa śiṅdhuśu;
  udhārdādasya tuvinrṇṇa nīnanaḥ. RV, VIII. 24. 27. Geldner takes the passage in the sense of Indra's turning aside the weapon of the Dāsa from the Āryan.

2. RV, VI. 33.3, 60.6; VII. 83.1; VIII. 24. 27 (a disputed passage); X. 98.3, 69.6, 83.1, 86. 19, 102.3. Four of these refs. have been correctly quoted by Ambedkar, op. cit., pp. 83-4.

3. VI, i, 356, f.n. 4 of s. v. Dāsa-rajña.

4. RV, VII. 33.2-5, 83.8 The actual battle hymn occurs in RV, VII. 18.

5. VA, p. 245. On account of their hostility to other Āryans the Pūrus are called mrdhraiḍaḥ in RV, VII. 18. 13.
the lesser Áryan tribes to maintain their separate identities, but they were completely routed by the Bhāratas under Sudās on the Paruṣṇi. There is no indication of the treatment of these conquered Áryans, but essentially it might have been the same as in the case of the non-Áryans.

It is not unlikely that there were many other inter-tribal conflicts of this kind, of which we have no records. Indications of such struggles are found in references which represent the Áryans as violators of vrataś established by the gods. Five such passages quoted by Kane from the Rg Veda can be interpreted in this light.¹ In a dialogue between the primeval priest Atharvan and Varuṇa, the priest boasts: “No Dāsa by his greatness, not an Áryan, may violate the law that I will establish.”²

Muir has quoted as many as fifty-eight passages from the Rg Veda, which he interprets as containing denunciations of religious hostility or indifference shown by the members of the Áryan community.³ Many of these passages belong to the kernel (Book II—VIII) of the Rg Veda, and may be taken as reflecting the conditions prevailing in the earliest period of the Áryan settlements. Several of these are directed against the illiberal people who are called aṛādhasam,⁴ aṣṭrapatam⁵ or aṣṭrapataḥ.⁶ At one place Indra is described as the enemy of the prosperous (edhamānāduit) probably of Áryans who rendered him no service;⁷ since Dāsas and Áryans who concealed their treasure from the people were considered objects of attack.⁸ For the sake of his people Agni is said to have captured property whether situated in the plains or the hills, and to have overcome

1. JBBRAS, NS, xxix, 11.
2. nā m əśō nāryo mahitōd vratōm māmāya yddahdm dhariśyō. AV, V, 11.33.
3. Paipp., VIII, 1.3.
4. JRAS, NS, ii, 286-294.
5. RV, i, 84. 8.
6. RV, I, 125. 7.
7. RV, VI, 44. 11.
8. RV, VI, 47. 16; JRAS, NS, ii, 286-294.
9. yāyāyōm viśeśō aṛyo dāsah śeśadhipī ariḥ. RV, VIII, 51. 9. Sāyaṇa’s comm. to this passage, and also that of Uvāṭa and Mahīdhara to a similar passage in VS, XXXIII, take dāsa as an adjective of ārya, but Geldner (RV, VIII, 51. 9) takes ārya and dāsa as two independent nouns. In any case it is clear that the Áryan was also an object of attack.
ORIGIN

their Dāsa and Āryan enemies. ¹ These passages suggest that even the Āryan enemies were deprived of their possessions (presumably cattle) and consequently reduced to the status of impoverished non-Āryans.

Many passages show a general hostility towards the people known as Panis² Muir understands them as niggards.³ According to the authors of the Vedic Index Panī in the Rg Veda denotes a person who is rich, but who does not give offerings to the gods, or bestow daksinās on the priests, and who is therefore an object of intense dislike to the composers of the Samhitā.⁴ In one passage they were described as bekaṇājas or ‘usurers’ (?) subdued by Indra.⁵ The fact that the Panis were capable of making sacrifices and entitled to wergeld shows that they were members of the Āryan fold.⁶ Hildebrandt identifies them with the Parnis⁷ who formed part of “the Dahae, a great group of Scythian tribes of horsemen and warriors”.⁸ The authors of the Vedic Index think that the term is wide enough to cover either the aborigines or hostile Āryan tribes.⁹

Of the passages which represent Panis as niggards, and condemn illiberal people in general, some may have been inspired by greedy priests eager for gifts, but on the whole they seem to reflect the tendency among certain Āryans to accumulate wealth at the cost of their fellow tribesmen, who naturally expected some share in their acquisitions through sacrifices made to Indra and other gods,¹⁰ thus providing frequent occasions for the common feasts of the community. Failure to check this process was bound to give rise to economic and social inequalities.

¹ sāmajāyā parvātyā oṣṭūni iddā yatriṇyāryā jijetha. RV, X. 69-6.
² RV, I. 124-10 ; 182-3 ; IV. 25-7, 51-3 ; V. 34-7. VI. 13-3.
³ 53-6-7.
⁴ JFRAS, NS, ii, 286-294.
⁵ VI, 1, 471.
⁶ Ibid. RV, VIII. 66-10.
⁷ VI, i, 472.
⁸ Ibid.
⁹ Ghirshman, Iran, p 243.
¹⁰ i, 472.
¹⁰ RV, VII. 40-6.
It remains to be examined how the extra-tribal and inter-tribal struggles of the Aryans led to the disintegration of tribal society and the formation of social classes. Although the word varṇa is applied to the Āryan and Dāsa in the Rg Veda, it does not indicate any division of labour, which became the basis of the broad social classes of later times. Ārya-and Dāsa-varṇas represent two large tribal groups, which were in the process of disintegration into social classes. There is sufficient evidence for this in the case of the Āryan people. Criticising Senart Oldenberg rightly points out that caste does not exist in the Rg Veda, but the collection does give the impression of slowly emerging social classes in their embryonic stage. The word brāhmaṇa occurs fifteen times and kṣatriya nine times. Nevertheless, as would appear from the repeated occurrences of words such as jana and viś, and from the nature of its institutions, Rg Vedic society was basically tribal in character. We do not know whether the Āryans possessed slaves at the time of their first advent in India. According to Keith the Vedic Indians were primarily pastoral; at least this holds good of the Āryans known from the early parts of the Rg Veda. Anthropological investigations show that some pastoral tribes also keep slaves although in a relative sense slavery is more developed among agricultural tribes.

But there is no doubt that the urban population of Harappā society had differences of wealth almost amounting to class divisions. Wheeler suggests that between the Harəppans and Mesopotamians slaves formed one of the articles of trade. It is reasonable to hold that the Harappā urban settlements could not have flourished without the surplus in agricultural products provided by the peasants in the adjacent countryside.

1. RV, III.34-9.
2. dandvoy danaya śaunnta na d vakṣantvātīdvā varṇam. RV, I.104.2; III 34-9.
3. ZDMG, ii, 272.
4. Jana is mentioned about 275 times and viś about 170 times.
5. CHI, i 99.
8. The Indus Civ., p. 94.
The pattern of the Indus political system has been likened to that of Sumer—a priest-king governing a servile population through a rigid bureaucracy. We do not know in what relation the Dasyus and Dāsas stood to the various classes and peoples of Harappā society. As the Āryans advanced further east in the Gaṅgā valley, they probably encountered the Copper Hoard people who were the earlier inhabitants of that region. It is clear that, like other peoples in the copper age, these peoples also may have been divided into classes.

For lack of data it is difficult to get a precise idea of the effects of the Āryan impact on Harappā society and vice versa. Spoils of war must have added to the wealth and social status of the tribal leaders, who could afford to patronise priests by making gifts of cattle, and in some cases of female slaves. Thus a sacrificer is described as moving with his chariot “first in rank and wealthy, munificent and lauded in assemblies”.

Despite the paucity of information reasonable hypotheses may be made about the social adjustment between the Āryans and survivors of Harappā society and other peoples. In the first flush of the Āryan expansion the destruction of the settlements and the peoples such as the Dasyus seems to have been so complete that very few people in north-western India would remain to be absorbed into the new society. But this may not have been the case in the succeeding stages of their expansion. While the majority of the survivors and especially the comparatively backward peoples would be reduced to helotage, the natural tendency would be for the viś of the Āryan society to mix with the lower orders and for the Āryan priests and warriors to mix with the higher classes of earlier societies. That in some cases the enemies of the Āryans were given high status in the new composite society is clear from two references. At one place Indra is described as converting the Dāsas into Āryas.

2. Lal, AI, No. 9, 93.
Śāyāṇa explains this as teaching them the Āryan way of life. At another place Indra is said to have deprived the Dasyus of the title of the ārya. May this suggest that some Dasyus were raised to Āryan status and then deprived of it, presumably on account of their anti-Āryan activities? All this leads us to suppose that some of the surviving priests and chiefs from the enemy peoples were given corresponding positions (possibly of inferior nature) in the new Āryan society.

It has been contended that Brāhmanism is a pre-Āryan institution. But the equation of the word brāhmaṇa with the Latin flāmen, the designation of a type of priest whose office was created during the period of the Roman kings, undermines this hypothesis. Besides this equivalence there is the well-known similarity between the Atharvan priests of Vedic Indian and Athravans of Iran. But nevertheless a major objection remains to be answered. Keith says that the state of Rg Vedic belief and the comparative magnitude of the Vedic pantheon must have been the product of much priestly effort and the outcome of wholesale syncretism. Further, sufficient evidence has been adduced from Vedic and epic traditions to show that Indra was a brahmicide, and that his chief enemy Vṛtra was a brāhmaṇa. This also confirms the hypothesis that developed priesthood was a pre-Āryan institution, and implies that all the conquered people were not reduced to the position of the dāsas and śūdras. And hence, though the brāhmaṇa as such was an Indo-European institution, the priestly class of the Āryan conquerors may have been largely recruited from the conquered. Though there is nothing to indicate the proportion, it seems that some of the pre-Āryan priests found their way into the new

1. ahāṃ śāyaśya śaṅkāhitā vādharyamān na yād rā āryaṁ nāma dāsa vē. RV. X. 49.3.
3. Dumézil, Flāmen-Brāhmaṇa, Chs. II & III. For another view see Paul Thieme, ZDMG, NF, 27, pp. 91-129.
4. CHI., i, 103.
society. It would be wrong to think that all the ‘blacks’ were reduced to the status of the śūdra helots, since there are some references to black seers. In the Rg Veda the Āsvins are described as presenting fair-skinned women to black (śyāvāya) Kanva, who probably is named kṛṣṇa ‘black’ at another place and is the poet of the hymns (RV, VIII. 85 and 86) addressed to the twin gods. It is perhaps again Kanva who is mentioned as kṛṣṇa ṛṣi in the first book of the Rg Veda. Similarly Dirghatamas, mentioned as a singer in one hymn of the Rg Veda, may have been of dark colour, if his name was given to him on account of his complexion. It is significant that in several passages of the Rg Veda he is known by his metronymic Māmatelya alone, and a later legend says that he married Usij, a slave girl and begot Kākṣīvant. Again in the first book of the Rg Veda priestly Divodāsas, whose name suggests a dāsa origin, are described as composing new hymns, while in the tenth book the Āṅgiras author of the RV, X. 42-44 is called ‘black’. Since most of the above references occur in the later portions of the Rg Veda it would appear that towards the end of the Rg Vedic period some of the black seers and Dāsa priests were working their way into the newly organised Āryan community.

Similarly it appears that some of the conquered chiefs received high status in the new society. Priestly acceptance of gifts from the Dāsa chiefs such as Balbūtha and Taruksa earned them unstinted praises, through which they gained in status in the new order. That the Dāsas were in a position to make gifts and were looked upon as liberal donors can be deduced from the very meaning of the roots daśi from which the noun Dāsa is

1. RV, I, 117.8, but Sāyaṇa explains śyāvāya as kuṣṭarogena syāmacarṇya.
2. RV, VIII 85.3-4. Kanva is also mentioned in RV, VIII. 50.10.
3. RV, I.116.23; cf. I. 117.7. Pargiter thinks that the Kānvāyanas are the only proper brāhmaṇas. DKA, p. 35.
4. RV, I.158.6; Ambedkar, Who were the Śrādas?, p. 77.
5. VI, i. 366. In the Sat. Br., XIV. 9.4.15, there is the case of a mother wishing for a black son who possesses the knowledge of the Veda.
6. Hillebrandt’s suggestion, VI, i. 369.
7. RV, I. 190. 10.
8. Kosambi, JBBRAS, NS, xxvi, 44. derived. The process of assimilation went on in later times, for the later literature records the tradition that Pratardana Dāvadāsi went to the world of Indra, who was historically the titular ruler of the Āryan invaders.

Early literature throws hardly any light on the process of assimilation between the Āryan commoners (viś) and those of the survivors of earlier societies. It is likely that most of them were reduced to what came to be known as the fourth vārṇa in Āryan society. But, if we leave out the Puruṣa-sūkta, there is no evidence of the śudra vārṇa in the Rg Veda. In the early Rg Vedic period there existed, however, a small servile class of female slaves. It seems that, when the male members of the enemies of the Āryans were killed, their wives were reduced to slavery. Thus it is stated that Trasadasyu, the son of Purukutsa, gave away fifty women as gifts. Further evidence for the existence of female slaves is to be found in the earlier portions of the Atharva Veda. Therein the female slave is described as wet-handed, smearing the pestle and mortar, and also as throwing lye on the droppings of the cow, which shows that she was engaged in domestic work. This collection provides the earliest reference to a black dāsi. References, therefore, suggest that in the early Vedic society female slaves were employed in domestic work. The use of the word dāsi makes it obvious that these were the womenfolk of the conquered Dāsas.

The use of the word dāsa in the sense of slave is to be found mostly in the later portions of the Rg Veda. Two cases occur in the first book, one in the tenth book, and one in the supplementary hymns (called vālakhilya) inserted in the eighth book.

1. s. s. dāśi, dāś, Monier-Williams, Sansk.-Eng. Dict.
3. RV, VIII.19.36.
4. yādā dāśyārdhastā sāmaṅtā uḷākhalam mūsalam śumbhātāpah. AV, XII. 3-13; Paipp., XVII.37.3.
5. AV, XII.1-9; in the parallel passage in the Paipp. XVII. 16.9 the term dāśi is replaced by devi.
7. RV, I.92-8, 158.5. after Geldner's tr.
8. RV, X.62.10.
9. RV, VIII. 56.3.
The only early reference of this type is found in the eighth book, in the Rg Veda there seems to be no other word which could mean slave, and it is thus clear that male slaves hardly existed in the early Rg Vedic period.

Of the number and nature of slaves in the later Rg Vedic period, references give only a vague idea. In the vēlakhīlya there is mention of a hundred slaves, who are placed in the same category as asses and sheep. The word dāsa-pravarga in another later reference may mean wealth or assemblage of slaves. This would suggest that towards the end of the Rg Vedic period slaves were increasing in number, but there is no evidence of their being engaged in productive activities. They seem to have been in the nature of domestic servants attending on their priestly or warrior masters. These masters were usually warriors, only one reference mentions a priest Dirghatamas as owning slaves. They could be freely given away. It seems that failure to pay debts resulted in the enslavement of the defaulter. But the very name dāsa shows that war was the most important source of slavery during the Vedic period.

Who were the Dāsas? They have been generally confused with the Dasyus. But the absence of the word dāsa-hatyā (slaughter of the Dāsas), in contrast to dasyu-hatyā (slaughter of the Dasyus), the appearance of Dāsas as auxiliaries in the inter-tribal wars of the Aryans, the absence of their description as apa-vrata, anya-vrata, etc., the mention of dāsa viśas (clans) at three places, and above all their indentification with the Iranian

1. RV, VII. 86.7. Hillebrandt regards this as of doubtful nature. He wrongly adds ‘vieleicht’ to VII.86.3, which should be VII.86.7. 711, iii. 16.
2. Saṭām me gurabhdānām Saṭāmānānāvatānām; Saṭām dāsā dī srājāh. RV, VIII. 56.3. It is possible that 100 may be a conventional number.
4. RV, I.158. 5-6.
5. uti śrīrī parinirvānāṁ smṛtiṣṭī gopariṇāṁ; yuddhastuvā u māmāhe. RV, X.62.10.
7. Supra, pp. 9, 15.
8. RV, II.11.4, IV.28.4 and VI.25.2. B. N. Dutt thinks that the mention of Dāsa viś in RV, VI.25.2, means that the Dāsa gets the vaisya rank (Studies in Hindu Social Polity, p. 334). But since the vaisyas did not exist then as a social class viś can be better interpreted here as clan.
Dahae, a Scythian tribe, sharply distinguish the Dāsas from the Dasyus, who seem to have had hardly anything in common with the Āryans. On the contrary, the Dāsas were probably an advance guard of mixed Indo-Āryan peoples who came to India at the time when the Kassites appeared in Babylonia (c. 1750 B.C.). This can be linked up with the archaeological hypothesis which assumes either a continuous movement or two main movements of peoples from Northern Persia towards India and places the first movement fairly soon after 2000 B.C. It is perhaps this which accounts for the Āryan policy of conciliation towards them and the easy assimilation into the Āryan fold of their chiefs such as Divodāsa, Balbūtha and Tarukṣa. It is because of this that the Dāsas appear as frequent allies of the Āryans in their inter-tribal conflicts. Thus it would appear that the name dāsa in the sense of slave was derived not from the non-Āryan inhabitants of India but from a people allied to the Indo-Āryans. In the later period of the Rg Veda the term dāsa may have been employed indiscriminately not only to cover the survivors of the original Indo-European dāsas but also pre-Āryan peoples such as Dasyus and Rāksasas, and also those sections of the Āryans who were impoverished or reduced to subjection on account of internal conflicts within their ranks.

Had the number of the Āryans been small, they could have imposed themselves as a new ruling minority consisting of the upper classes on the conquered peoples as did the Hittites, Kassites and the Mitanni in Western Asia. But the Rg Vedic evidence is fatal to such an hypothesis. Not only is there mention of mass slaughter of the conquered peoples, but also of the settlements of numerous Āryan tribes. Recent discoveries of

1. The Dahae may have been closely allied in race and language with the Iranian, but this is not very clearly proved. (Vi. i. 357, fn. 20). Zimmer calls the Doai or Daai of Herodotus, l. 126, a Turanian tribe. (Ibid.)
2. It is suggested that the Dāsas and Āryas were on a social level, above the Dasyu-Bhils. Shafer, Ethnography in Anc. India, p. 32.
4. i.e. varṇa, VI, ii; p. 255, fn. 67.
5. For RV tribes see lA, pp. 245-8 and for later Vedic tribes, pp. 252-262.
Painted Grey Ware, which is undoubtedly a continuation of the Grey Ware tradition of Iran, and is said to be as old as the 12th century B.C., are associated with the Āryan. The fact that this pottery occurs at numerous sites in the upper Gaṅgā and Sutlej basins and in the Ghaggar Valley and that it can be assigned to the period circa 1100-800 B.C. indicates that the people who made it came in substantial numbers.

Again, the distribution of the Āryan languages over the greater part of India presupposes mass migration of their speakers. As will be shown later, in Northern India the śūdras, along with the vaśyas, accounted for the overwhelming majority of the population, but there is nothing to show that they spoke non-Āryan languages. On the other hand, in the later Vedic period the śūdras understood the Āryan speech, as is clear from the formula of address used for their on the occasion of the sacrifice. In this connection a tradition from the Mahābhārata is significant: "Sarasvati, consisting of the Veda, was formerly designed by Brāhmaṇa for all the four castes; but the śūdras having through cupidities fallen into ignorance, a condition of darkness, lost the right to the Veda." Weber understands this passage to mean that in ancient times the śūdras spoke the language of the Āryans. It is possible that some of the autochthonous tribes abandoned their speech in favour of Āryan dialects, as in modern times several tribal peoples in Bihar have given up their languages and adopted Āryan dialects such as Kurmāli and Sadānā, but their number must have been small as compared to that of the people whose language they adopted. Even in modern times, when the Āryan-speaking people enjoy much better facilities for spreading their language and culture, they have not been able to oust the non-Āryan languages which, in some cases, have shown capacity for vigorous growth.

1. B. Lal, "Protohistoric Investigation", AI, No. 9, 97.
2. Besides Hastināpurā this ware has been discovered at over thirty other sites in the upper Gaṅgā and Sutlej basins, and at twenty sites in the Ghaggar valley. Ibid., 96.
4. sarvāśaḥṣatāra etc. hi yedam brāhmaṇa sarvasvatiḥ, śīlāt brāhmaṇa pārcā lobbā etajhānādām gathā. SP, 101-15.
5. Indische Studien, ii, 94, fn.
On the basis of the foregoing discussion it would not be overbold to state that the Āryans came to India in large numbers.
With some possible admixture from the enemy tribes, warriors and priests could account only for a small minority of the Āryan population. In course of time the majority of the Āryans could not escape the fate of being reduced to the position of commoners and helots. But in the Rg Vedic period the process of economic and social differentiation was still in its very early stage. In the predominantly tribal society the military leaders had hardly any fixed and regular source of surplus grain or cattle, on which they and their priestly supporters could live and flourish. Their most important source of income lay in the occasional exaction of tribute and spoils of war from the conquered peoples, which also, preumably, they had to share with the members of the tribe.¹
Bali is the only word indicating some sort of tax in the Rg Veda.
Generally it means a tribute or offering made to a god,² but it is also used in the sense of tribute paid to the king.³ Probably the payment of bali was voluntary,⁴ as there was no machinery of collection or collector such as the bhāga-dugha of later Vedic times⁵ to realise it from the people. We have no instance of the grant of land by the tribal kings to their warrior or priestly followers, presumably because the land belonged to the tribe as a whole. The equalitarian character of Rg Vedic society is further evident from the prescription of the same wergeld for everybody, male or female,⁶ the compensation amounting to a hundred cows.⁷

In essence the Rg Vedic Āryan society, and perhaps the society described in the Atharva Veda, was characterised by the absence of sharp class divisions amongst its members, a feature which is usually found in early societies.⁸ Perhaps the Purānic:

1. R. S. Sharma, JBRs, xxxviii, 434-5; xxxix, 418-5.
2. RV, I. 70-9; V.1.10; VIII. 100-9.
3. 'Bāli' (paying tribute) in RV, VII. 6.5; X. 173.6.
5. VI, ii. 100.
6. Max Müller's tr. of RV, V. 61.8, SBE, xxxii, 361.
7. VI, ii. 331.
He also refers to the absence of classes among the Nāgas and Kookies of Eastern India (p. 11).
speculation regarding the origin of the varṇas refers to this stage, when it states that until the advent of the Tretā age there was no varṇa division and nothing like the greed or the tendency to steal. But even in the earliest period, in addition to the slowly emerging military leaders and priests, there were husbandmen and artisans who practised a number of crafts. Common words for weaver, tanner, carpenter and painter suggest their Indo-European origins. The existence of a widespread Indo-European word for chariot shows that the chariot-maker may have been known to the Indo-Europeans. The rathakāra (chariot-maker), however, does not appear in the Rg Veda, where the carpenter’s work is referred to in several early passages. It appears from the Atharva Veda that chariot-makers (rathakāra) and metal workers (karmāra) enjoyed a position of importance in society. In the early portion of that collection a newly elected king prays to a plant amulet (parṇa-maṇi) to help him to strengthen his position among the skilful builders of chariots, and the ingenious workers of metal, who constitute the folk around him. These artisans are to be made his helpers, and in this sense seem to be on a par with the kings, king-makers, charioteers (sūta) and troop leaders (grāmaṇi), who constitute the folk round about the king and are likewise to be made his helpers.

Obviously the crafts mentioned above were practised by the members of the Āryan community (viṣ), and no social stigma was attached to them. A later passage from the Rg Veda des-

1. varṇaśramayavasthāśca na tadāsanaṃ samkarah; na lipsanti hi tā'nyonyan- nāvijñānti caiva hi. Vi. p., i, VIII.60 ; cf. Digga Nikāya, Aggaṇasutta.

4. RV, IV. 35.6, 36.5; VI. 32.1.

5. ye dhīvāno rathakārdh karmāraya maniṣṭaḥ; upāstinparaṇa mdhyam trāṇaṃ sūrāṅkaṃ nīdiḥ jādān. AV, III.5.6.

Bloomfield’s tr. is followed here. Whitney gives the same tr. as Bloomfield, but takes upāsins in the sense of subjects after Sāyaṇa. Sā. takes dhī- vānaḥ and maniṣṭaḥ as separate nouns meaning fishermen and intellectuals. The Pāipp. text is slightly different; ye takṣāno rathakārdh karmārā ye maniṣṭaḥ; sarvāṃ tān parna rāndhayopasthāṃ kṛṣu medinam. III. 13.7.

6. Presumably he was the head of the village both for civil purposes and military operations. VI, i, 247.

7. AV, III. 5. 7.
cribes the carpenter as one who usually bends over his work till his back aches. This may convey some idea of the difficult nature of his work, but implies no contempt for it. That the carpenters were a low caste, or formed a separate class of the people is certainly not true of Vedic times. But the smith (karma), the carpenter (taksan), the tanner (carmamana), the weaver and others, whose occupations were quite dignified in the Rg Veda and apparently practised by respected members of the vii, came to be reckoned as sudra in the Pali texts. It is likely that non-Aryans also pursued these crafts independently, but there is no doubt that many descendants of Aryan artisans, who stuck to the old professions, were relegated to the position of the sudras.

The earliest speculation regarding the origin of the four varnas is to be found in the mythical story of creation embodied in the Purusasukta (hymn of man) of the Rg Veda. This is considered as an interpolation in the tenth book of that collection. But it is reproduced with slight changes in the later Vedic literature, and in the traditions of the epic, Puranas and Dharmastras. It states that the brahma, emanated from the mouth of the primeval man, the kshatriya from his arms, the vaisya from his thighs and the sudra from his feet. Either it shows that the sudras were supposed to belong to the same stock, and hence were a section of the Aryan community, or it represents an attempt to find a common mythical origin for the heterogeneous brahmanical society. In point of time the Purusasukta version may be ascribed to the end of the period of the Atharva Veda, in which it occurs in the latest portion. It seems to provide a

1. RV, I. 105,18.
2. VI, i. 297.
3. RV, VIII. 5, 38.
4. VI, ii. 265,6.
6. Pañca Br., V. I. 5-10; Vaiśasaneśi Samhita, XXXI, 11; Taittirīya Ārambaka, III. 12,5,6.
7. Mbb, XII. 73, 4-8.
8. Viṣṇu P., i. VIII. 155-9; Markā P., ch. 49; Viṣṇu P., i. Ch. VI.
10. RV, X. 90,12.
11. Ar, XIX. 6,6.
theoretical justification for the disintegration of tribal society into classes. Already in the Rg Vedic period division of labour had gone a long way. But although members of the same family worked as poet, physician and grinder,¹ this did not involve any social differentiation. Towards the end of the period of the Atharva Veda, however, differentiations of functions tended to develop into differentiations of rank, and tribes and clans gradually disintegrated into social classes. It appears that the Śūdra tribe, or sections of the Āryans employed in servile work, sank to the position of the fourth varṇa, and in this sense the tradition of the common origin of the four varṇas may have an element of truth. But it does not represent the whole truth. It is possible that in subsequent times the descendants of the Āryan śūdras went on multiplying in the new fertile Gangetic settlements, but from the Vedic period onwards large numbers of aborigines of varying stocks were successively incorporated in the śūdra varṇa.² Obviously the old tradition of the common origin of the varṇas could not explain the accession of the non-Āryan tribes to the brāhmaṇical fold, but it could serve as a useful fiction. It could help to assimilate and keep the heterogenous elements together, and, in so far as the śūdras were supposed to have been born from the feet of the first man, it could justify their servile position in brāhmaṇical society.

When do the śūdras first appear as a social class meant for the service of the three higher varṇas? Rg Vedic society had some male and female slaves who acted as domestic servants, but they were not so considerable as to constitute the servile varṇa of the śūdras. The first and the only reference to the śūdras as a social class in the Rg Veda is to be found in the Puruṣasūkta passage already referred to, which recurs in the nineteenth book of the Atharva Veda.³ In the same book there are two other passages, which also seem to refer to the existence of four varṇas. In one of them prayer is made to the darbha (grass) to make the worshipper dear to brāhmaṇa, kṣatriya, śūdra and ārya. Here, Ārya probably stands for vaiśya. In the second passage is expressed a desire to become dear to gods, to kings and to both śūdra and ārya. It appears that here gods stand for brāhmaṇas and āryas for vaiśyas. We have to bear in mind that all these passages occur in the nineteenth book, which, along with the twentieth, forms a supplement to the main collection of the Atharva Veda. An earlier passage mentions a charm made by brāhmaṇa, rājanya or śūdra and includes a spell that it may recoil on the maker. This belongs to the second grand division (Book VIII-XII) of the Atharva Veda, which, according to Whitney, is ‘palpably of hieratic origin.’ This suggests that the varṇa system developed under priestly influence. The only other reference relevant to our purpose, which, on the basis of Whitney, can be assigned to the early period of the Atharva Veda, mentions brāhmaṇa, rājanya and vaiśya, but leaves out the śūdra. It is evident then that the śūdras appear as a social class only towards the end of the period of the Atharva Veda, when the Puruṣasūkta version of their origin may have been inserted into the tenth book of the Rg Veda.

¹. RV, IX.112.3.
². Oldenberg, ZDMG, li, 286.
³. AV, XIX.6.6.

One would like to know why the fourth varṇa came to be called śūdras. It appears that just as the common European word ‘slave’ and the Sanskrit ‘dāsa’ were derived from the names of conquered peoples, so also the word śūdra was derived from a conquered tribe of that name. There is no doubt that Śudra existed as a tribe in the fourth century B. C., for Diodoros records the advance of Alexander against a tribe called Sodrai, who occupied portions of modern Sind. The existence of some of the tribes mentioned by the Greek writers can be traced back

1. AV, XIX.32.8; Paipp., X.1.4.8.
2. AV, XIX.62.1; Paipp., II.32.5.
5. AV, X.1.3.
6. HOS, vii, p. CLV.
7. AV, V.17.9; Paipp, IX.16.7.
8. McCrindle, Invasion of India, p. 293. Arrian mentions Sogdoi (Ibida., p. 157), which may be wrong. Sydroi are again clearly mentioned by Ptolemy (VI.20.3) as inhabiting the central portion of Archosia, which covered a considerable portion of eastern Afghanistan and the eastern frontier of which was skirted by the Indus. (McCrindle, Ancient India as described by Ptolemy, p. 317).
to a much earlier period. For instance, the Abastanoi of Arrian (called Sambastai by Diodoros) may be indentified with the Ambaṣṭhas of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, which mentions an Ambaṣṭha king. The same case may apply to the Śūdra tribe, and thus it may be possible to trace the śūdra varṇa of circa 10th century B.C. from the Śūdra tribe of the 4th century B.C.

Three references to Śūdra in the earliest portion of the Atharva Veda can be interpreted in this light. They belong, according to Whitney, to the first grand division of the Atharva Veda (Book I-CVII) which is ‘in very large measure of popular origin’ and is by all odds ‘the most characteristic part’ of that collection. In two of them the worshipper desires to see everybody whether Ārya or Śūdra with the help of a herb, in order to detect a sorcerer. There is no mention of brāhmaṇa or rājanya in this connection. The question is whether the Ārya and Śūdra represent here two social classes (varṇas) or two tribal groups. The latter supposition seems to be plausible. The earlier opposition between Ārya and Dāsa or Dasyu is replaced by one between Ārya and Śūdra. It is worth stressing that these references do not give any idea of the social distance or disabilities, which are implicit in the conception of varṇa. They may be compared with another passage from the same collection which speaks of Ārya and Dāsa, and in which it is claimed by the priest or Varuṇa that no Dāsa or Āryan can damage the course he maintains. Mention has been made of similar passages in the Rg Veda in which the worshipper desires to overcome his enemies, both Āryans and Dāsas or Dasyus. The one obstacle in the way of the correct interpretation by brāhmaṇical commentators of such Vedic texts as have direct bearing on social relations has been the tendency to look ahead to later developments. An example is the meaning of the words ārya and dāsa in the Rg Veda. Sāyaṇa takes ārya as the member of the first there.

1. PHAI, p. 255.
3. HOS, vii, pp. CXLVIII and CLV.
4. iṣṭyāḥam śraddhaṃ paśyāmi yāsca śūdra utdṛṣṭaḥ.
AV, IV. 20.4, 8; Paipp., VIII.6.8.
5. AV, V.11.3.
varṇas, and dāsa as the śūdra;¹ this is obviously based on the later division of society into four varṇas, which Śāyaṇa's interpretation is meant to justify. Likewise in the Atharva Vedic reference under discussion Śāyaṇa explains ārya as a member of the three varṇas,² which naturally makes śūdra the representative of the fourth. But it becomes very hard to interpret earlier texts, if they are approached with the later conception of ārya and śūdra as developed in the Dharmaśāstras.

That the Śūdras appear as a tribe in the earliest part of the Atharva Veda can be also inferred from the third reference, in which the fever takman is asked to attack a wanton śūdra woman along with the Mujavants, Balhikas and Mahāvrṣas.³ All these peoples seem to have been inhabitants of north-eastern India,⁴ where, in the Mahābhārata, the Śūdra tribe is described as living, along with the Ābhirās.⁵ Another verse also repeats the desire that the fever should go to the foreign people.⁶ All this would suggest that the context in which the Śūdra woman is mentioned relates to the attitude of hostility of the Āryans of the period of the Atharva Veda towards the foreign tribes inhabiting north-western India. And hence the word śūdrā here probably means a woman of the Śūdra tribe. In the parallel passage from the Paippalāda recension śūdrā is replaced by dāsi,⁷ which shows that in the author's view the terms were interchangeable. Therefore, the occurrence of the term śūdra in what is regarded as the earliest and the most characteristic part of the Atharva Veda, should be understood not in the sense of varṇa, but in that of a tribe, which suits the contexts better.

Coupled with the Ābhirās the Śūdras are repeatedly mentioned as a tribe in the Mahābhārata, which contains traditions that may look back at least to the 10th century B. C. This epic makes a clear distinction between the śūdra class (kula), which

¹ Comm. to RV, II. 12.4.
² Comm. to AV, IV. 20.4.
³ AV/V. 22. 7 and 8.
⁴ Cf. VA. pp. 258-9.
⁵ śūdrāh kāśmīrāh paśubhīḥ saha. Mbh, VI. 10. 66, 46 where aparandhṛāh in the Cr. Edn. is a mistake for aparantēḥ is mentioned along with the kulas of kṣatriya and vaiśya, and the śudra tribe, which is mentioned with the Ābhīras, Daradas, Sukhāras, Pahlavas etc. As a tribe the Śūdras find place in the list of peoples conquered by Nakula in the course of his all round victorious march (dig-vijaya), and in that of those sending presents to Yudhishthira on the occasion of his great coronation sacrifice (rājasūya). In determining the chronology of these peoples, a distinction has to be made between Śūdras and Ābhīras, who probably existed at the time of the Bhārata war, and others, such as Śakas, Tukhāras, Pahlavas, Romakas, Chinas and Hūnas, whose names were later interpolated into the list. Non-Indian sources of the first few centuries preceding or succeeding the Christian era give no indication of the foreign connections of the Śūdras and Ābhīras. There is hardly anything to support the view that the Ābhīras came to India in the early centuries of the Christian era. It appears that they existed as a tribe at the time of the Bhārata war and in the period of chaos, which followed the aftermath of the great war, they spread themselves over the Panjāb. The repeated mention of the Śūdras along with the Ābhīras would suggest that they were an old tribe flourishing at the time of the war. This fits in well with the interpretation of the term śudra in the sense of tribe in the earliest part of the Atharva Veda.
⁶ AV, V. 22. 12, 14.
⁷ Paipp., XIII.1.9.

The next question is whether the Śūdras were an Āryan or pre-Āryan tribe, and if Āryan, when did they come to India? Contradictory views have been expressed on the ethnological classification of the Śūdra tribe. Formerly it was maintained that the Śūdras were an earlier wave of Āryans; later it came to be held that they were a stem of the pre-Āryan

1. Ibid., II. 29. 8-9. Pahlavas and Barbaras are also mentioned. Ibid., II. 29. 15.
3. Ibid., VI.10.66.
4. Ibid., II.47.7.
5. Ibid., II.47.7 ff.
peoples.\(^1\) No evidence has been adduced in support of either view, but in the light of the available data one may be inclined to think that the Śūdra tribe had some affinity with the Āryans. It is interesting to note that they are always bracketted with the Ābhīras,\(^2\) who spoke an Āryan dialect called Ābhīrī.\(^3\) The fact that the people of the śūdra class could understand the Āryan speech in the period of the Brāhmaṇas also may suggest, though remotely, that the Śūdra tribe was acquainted with the Āryan language. Further, the Śūdras have never been mentioned in lists of the pre-Āryan peoples, such as Draviḍas, Pulindas, Šabaras etc. They are always located in the north-west,\(^4\) which, in later times, was an area mainly occupied by the Āryans.\(^5\) The Ābhīras and the Śūdras were settled near the Sarasvatī.\(^6\) It is stated that, because of her hostility towards them, the Sarasvatī vanished into the desert.\(^7\) These references are significant, for along with the Drṣadvatī the Sarasvatī marked one of the boundaries of the region known as Ārya-daśa. Reference has already been made to the Dāhae, the Iranian parallel to Indian Dāsa, but it is difficult to establish such an equation in the case

1. Fick, SOND, p. 315; Keith, CHI, i, 86; Lassen, Ind. Alt., ii, 174; cf. Weber, Indische Studien, xviii, 85-86 and 255. Zimmer identifies the Śudra of Prolcmy with Brāhūrī (ALT. LEB., p.435), but there seems to be no basis for such a supposition. cf. Hopkins, Religions of India, p. 548, fn. 3. Fargier thinks that Śudras and Ābhīras were considerably intermixed and closely connected aboriginal races (Mārk., P., Tr., pp. 313-14, fn.).

2. Mbh., VI. 10. 45 and 46; 65 and 66; In the critical edition of the Mbh., VII.19.7, śūrābhītā seems to be a wrong reading. It should be śūrdvābhīrā as found in other Mss. (fn. on VII.19.7). Śudras and Ābhīras are again mentioned together in the Mahābhārata of Patanjali (Pat. on Pa., i, 2.72.6).

3. The earliest specimens of Ābhīrokta are found in the Naṣaditra of Bharata, a work of the second or third century A.D. (F.D.G. Gane, Introduction to Bhavisayātākāhī, pp. 50-51). These are clearly very much allied to Sanskrit.

4. The Mbh. lists in practically the same form occurs in the Purāṇas, in which the Śudras are mentioned as a people along with the Ābhīras, Kālatoyakas, Apārantas, Pahlavas (wrongly mentioned as Pallavas in the Cr. Edn. VI. 10.66) and others. Mārk. P., ch. 37. 35-36 and Māyā P., ch. 113.40. In the Gupta period the Śudra tribe seems to have held a definite territory, which is listed in the Viṣṇu Purāṇa (IV.24.18) along with the territories Saṅgrāha, Avanti and Arbuda. There is no justification for Dikshitar's reading as Śūru (Gupta Polity, pp. 3-4), for the text clearly mentions Śūdra territory.

5. Muir, Original Sanskrit Texts, ii, 355-357.

7. śudrābhīrān prati duṣṣād yatra naṣṭā sarasvatim. Mbh. (Cal.), IX. 37.1.
of Śūdra. It has been doubtfully suggested that Śūdra may be equated with the Greek word Küdros,¹ which is used by Homer (circa 10th cen.-9th cen. B. C.) in the sense of great, and is applied as an epithet generally to divine beings and rarely to mortals.² In later times in India Śūdra was a term of opprobrium applied to people disliked by the brāhmaṇas; on the contrary it was a term of approbation in Homeric Greece. This may be explained very tentatively by suggesting that members of a hypothetical Indo-European Kudra tribe became important among the leaders of the tribes which later invaded Greece, while those of this tribe who entered India were subjected by their fellow invaders. That the same term carries inverted meanings in different contexts is clear from the example of asura. While Asura was associated with evil in India, his prototype Ahura was a god in Iran. The analogy may apply to the use of the term Śūdra in India and Greece but cannot be regarded as definitive unless it is proved that the Küdroi were a tribe in Greece. Nevertheless, on the basis of all that has been said above, it is probable that the Śūdras, like the Dāsas, were a people allied to the Indo-Āryan stock.

If they were allied to the Indo-Āryans, when did they come to India? It has been suggested that they were an earlier wave of Āryan immigrants.³ But since they are not mentioned in the Rg Veda, it is likely that they represent a later thrust of foreign tribes into north-western India towards the close of the Rg Vedic period. On the basis of archaeological evidence it is possible that the movement of peoples into India was a continuous process lasting for nearly a millenium after 2000 B. C.⁴ a hypothesis which is also supported by linguistic evidence.⁵ It is, therefore, probable that the Śūdras came to India towards the end of the second millenium B. C., when they were defeated by the Vedic Āryans and were gradually absorbed into the later Vedic society as the fourth varna.

¹ Wackernagel, "Indoiranisches", Sitzungsberichte der Königlich Preussischen Akademie der Wissenschaften, 1918, 410-411.
² s.n. küdrous, Liddell and Scott, A Greek-English Lexicon, i.
³ Weber, ZDMG, iv. 301, f. 2; cf. Roth, ZDMG, i. 84.
⁴ Stuart Piggott, Antiquity, iv, No. 96, 218.
It has been asserted that the kṣatriyas were reduced to the position of sūdras as a result of their long struggle with the brāhmaṇas, who ultimately deprived their adversaries of the right to the upanayana (investiture with sacred thread). On the basis of a solitary tradition occurring in the Śānti Parvan of the Mahābhārata, that Pajavana was a sūdra king, it is claimed that sūdras were kṣatriyas in the beginning. Such a view seems to be without any foundation in facts. Firstly, kṣatriyas as a well-defined varṇa with their rights and duties did not exist in the Rg Vedic period. Fighting and management of the common affairs were the concern of the whole tribe and not confined to a group of chosen warriors. From the very beginning the slowly emerging groups of warriors and priests co-operated in leading the viś in their fight against the Āryan as well as non-Āryan peoples. As time passed, the warriors bestowed on the priests generous gifts, and the religious rituals were much elaborated, so that the power of the priests who performed them and of the warriors who patronized them was much strengthened as against that of the common people. Secondly, in spite of the echoes of the struggle between priests and warriors during the later Vedic period, as reflected in the stories of Parasurāma and Viśvāmitra, there is nothing to show that the upanayana formed the issue, and that it was decided against the kṣatriyas. Perhaps the struggle centred round the question of social supremacy, which determined the nature of the privileges to be enjoyed by them. There was some dispute regarding the brāhmaṇical monopoly of knowledge, which was successfully challenged by the kṣatriyas. It seems that Aśvapati Kaikaya and Pravāhaṇa Jaivali were not improbably teachers of the brāhmaṇas. Kṣatriya rulers such as Janaka of Mithilā contributed to the growth of the Upaniṣadic thought, and the kṣatriya ruler Viśvāmitra climbed to priesthood. In north-eastern India the kṣatriya revolt reached its climax with the preachings of Gautama Buddha and Vardhamāna Mahāvīra, who claimed social primacy for the ksātriyas and gave the next place to the brāhmaṇas. The real issue was, who would get the first place in society, brāhmaṇa or ksātriya? Neither in post-Vedic nor in pre-Mauryan literature is there anything to show that the brāhmaṇas intended to reduce the ksātriyas to the third or fourth varṇa, or that the ksātriyas wanted to do the same to the brāhmaṇas.

2. Ibid., pp. 309-42. It was Lassen who drew attention to the fact that the ancient king Sudās was called sūdra in the Mahābhārata, 1, 969.

Thirdly, it is wrong to think that in the beginning the loss of the upanayana was the decisive test of a śūdra. In this case modern court decisions¹ cannot serve as a guide for conditions at the time when the śūdra class came into being. Loss of the upanayana in the case of the śūdra, as will be shown later, is to be found only from the end of the later Vedic period, and, even so, it was not the only disability imposed on him as a mark of his servility but one of several. As will be noticed later, the loss of the upanayana was not the cause of the conversion of Āryans into śūdras but the consequence of their having sunk to the lower orders as a result of the rise of economic and social inequalities.

Fourthly, it is difficult to vouch for the authenticity of the tradition in the Śānti Parvan that Pajavarna was a śūdra. He has been identified with Sudās, the head of the Bhārata tribe, and it is argued that this famous hero of the Battle of Ten Kings was a śūdra.² There is nothing in the Vedic literature to support his view, and the Śānti Parvan tradition is not corroborated by any other source, epic or Purānic. The tradition says that Śūdra Pajavarna performed sacrifices, and occurs in a context where it is stated that the śūdras can perform five great sacrifices and make gifts.³ It is difficult to judge whether the tradition was true or false, but clearly it was meant to serve as a precedent for śūdras making gifts and sacrifices, which, as will be shown later, was in keeping with the liberal attitude of the Śānti Parvan. It may be also pointed out that in later times the term śūdra or vṛṣala was applied indiscriminately by the brāhmaṇas to anybody who went against them. We do not know whether this was the case with the śūdra Pajavana. In many cases such statements do not mean that kṣatriyas and brāhmaṇas were reduced to the status of śūdras, but they merely suggest the śūdra origin of these personages, especially on the side of their mother.1

2. Ibid., p. 139.

Evidently the Śūdra tribe performed military functions, as was the case with the Āryan tribes and their tribal institutions.2 In the Mahābhārata the army of the Śūdra people is mentioned along with that of the Ambaśṭhas, Śibis, Sūrasenas etc.3 But this could not make the whole tribe of the kṣatriya varṇa, as we know it, with well defined functions and privileges. Therefore, the theory that the kṣatriyas were reduced to the position of śūdras has hardly anything to commend itself.

The attempts at an etymological derivation of the term śūdra seem to be uncertain, and hardly help to elucidate the problem of the origin of the varṇa. The earliest attempt is to be found in the Vedānta-sūtra of Bādarāyaṇa, where the word is divided into two parts śuk ‘grief’ and dra from root dru ‘to rush’.4 While commenting on this passage Śaṅkara gives three alternative explanations why Jānaśruti5 was called a śūdra; viz: (i) ‘he rushed into grief’ (śucām abhidudrāva), (ii) ‘grief rushed on him’ (śucā vā abhidudravne), and (iii) ‘he in his grief rushed to Raikva’ (śucā nā raikvam abhidudrāva).6 Śaṅkara concludes that the word śūdra can be understood only by explaining the meaning of its components and not otherwise.7 Bādarāyaṇa’s derivation of śūdra and Śaṅkara’s gloss thereon have been rightly regarded as unsatisfactory.8 The Jānaśruti referred to by Śaṅkara is said to have ruled among the Mahāvṛṣas, a people who are mentioned in the Atharva Veda as living in north-western India.

1. A number of sūtras, whose mother belonged to one or the other section of what was regarded as the śūdra varṇa, are enumerated in the Bhaviṣya P., I.42, 22-26. The list occurs in several other Purāṇas and the Mbh. Infra, p. 63.
2. R. S. Sharma, JBRs, xxxviii, 435-7 ; xxxix, 416-7.
4. śucāvatvādādāraśaravatvādādāraśatvāt tatadādharopatas dejate. Ved. S., 1:3.34.
5. Mentioned as a king in Cha. Up., IV. 2.3.
6. Śaṅkara’s comm. to Ved. S., I. 3.34.
7. śūdra avayavārthām sambhatāt rūdhārthasya cāsamthavāt. Ibid.
8. IA, li, 137-8.
It is doubtful whether he belonged to the śūdra varṇa. Either he belonged to the Śūdra tribe, or to some other north-western people who were dubbed as śūdras by brāhmaṇical writers.

A very similar derivation of the term is given by the author of the Uṇādi-sūtras in the grammar of Pāṇini, where śūdra is resolved into two components, i.e. root śuc or śuk+ra. It is difficult to account for the suffix ra, and in this case also the derivation seems to be fanciful and far-fetched.

Brāhmaṇical traditions in the Purāṇas also connect the term śūdra with the root śuc, to be grieved. It is said that those who grieved and ran, and were addicted to manual tasks, and were inglorious and feeble, were made śūdras. But such explanations of the term śūdra rather reflect the position of the varṇa in later times than account for its etymological derivations. In this respect the Buddhist explanation of the term seems to be as fanciful as the brāhmaṇical. According to the Buddha, those who were of dreadful and mean conduct (ludācāri. khuddacarati) came to be known as suddas, and thus the word suddha came into existence. In the Buddhist lexicon of the early medieval times śūdra became a synonym of ksudra, and on this basis it is suggested that śūdra is derived from ksudra. Both derivations are philologically unsatisfactory, but are important as illustrating the ideas associated with the concept of the śūdra varṇa in ancient times. While the brāhmaṇical derivation betrays the miserable condition of the śūdra, the Buddhist tradition refers to his mean and inferior status in society. The derivations merely show how even etymological and linguistic explanations are influenced by prevailing social conditions. A recent writer derives the term śūdra from the root śoi ‘swell’ + the root drā ‘run’ and suggests that this term means ‘one who runs after gross life’;

1. śuc-dāsa. II. 19.
2. IA, ii, 137-8.
3. śocantaśca dravantaśca, paricaryāsu ye ratāḥ; nistajao alpavijāsca śūdraśa tanaḥpravritta saḥ. Veyu P., i. VIII. 158. The Bhavīṣya P., I. 44. 23ff. adds that the śudras were so called because they received droppings of the Vedic knowledge; ye te śrutadṛṣṭiḥ prāptāḥ śūdrāstenaḥ kirtitāḥ.
4. suddha tava akkharaḥ upani bhāttam. Digha Nikāya, ii, 95.
5. s.u. śūdra, Mahāyānapatti.
therefore according to him the śūdra is 'an unintelligent fellow meant for manual labour.' It is extraordinary that he should have derived the term śūdra from two roots, and that too hardly without any old etymological basis. The meaning which he labours to ascribe to this term only betrays the traditional attitude towards the śūdra, but does not throw any light on his origin.

The miserable or negligible status of the śūdra varṇa at the time of its origin is hardly born out by the picture of society in the Rg Veda and the Atharva Veda. Nowhere in the collections is there any evidence of restrictions regarding food and marriage either between the Dāsa and the Āryan, or between the śūdra, and the higher varṇas. The only early reference, which implies such social distance between the varṇas, is to be found in the Atharva Veda, where it is claimed that the brāhmaṇa enjoys the right to become the first husband of a woman as against the rājanya and vaisya. The śūdra does not come in for notice, probably because his varṇa did not exist at that stage. There is nothing to show that dāsas or śūdras were considered as impure, or that their touch imparted pollution to the food or the body of
of the members of the higher varṇas.

This discussion on the origin of the śūdra varṇa may be summed up by stating that large sections of people, Āryans and pre-Āryans, were reduced to that position, partly through external and partly through internal conflicts. Since the conflicts centred mainly around the possession of cattle, and perhaps latterly of land, those who were dispossessed of these and impoverished came to be reckoned as the fourth class in the new society. The view that the śūdra varṇa was made up of the pre-Āryans seems to be as one-sided and exaggerated as the view that they mainly consisted of the Āryan peoples.

The generally held sociolo-

Commemoration Volumes, p. 44.
2. It is wrongly stated by N. N. Ghosh that such restrictions between the Āryan and the Dāsa are vouchsafed by the Rg Veda. IC, xii, 179.
3. AV, V. 17.8-9.
5. Gheld, Ethnology of the Mahābhārata, pp. 89-93; B. N. Dutt, Studies in Indian Social Polity, pp. 28-30; Ambedkar, Who were the Śūdras, p. 239.
6. Cf. VI, ii. 265.
gical theory that a division into classes is always originally connected with ethnical dissimilarities only partly explains the origin of the śūdras and dāsas (slaves). It is more than likely that dāsas and śūdras were respectively named after tribes of these names having affinities with the Indo-Āryans, but in course of time they came to include large groups of the pre-Āryan and degraded Āryan populations. It seems fairly clear that in the early Vedic period there was no considerable śūdra or slave population, and that the śūdras did not suffer from those disabilities which gradually fell on them from the late Vedic period onwards.

1. Landtman, op. cit., p. 38.
CHAPTER III

AMBIGUOUS POSITION
(c. 1000-c. 600 B.C.)

The later Vedic literature, which is almost the only source for the study of the position of the Śūdras during that period, mainly deals with rituals, pervading all aspects of the life of the people. Every important public or individual act is accompanied by an appropriate ritual, which not seldom takes into account the fact that society was divided into four varṇas.

Information gleaned from the rituals mainly relates to the land of the Kuru-Pañcālas, where the major part of the later Vedic literature was composed.1 This literature roughly covers the period from circa 1000 to circa 600 B.C., and presupposes various phases of social development, differing according to the times to which a particular text can be assigned. Thus the collections (Saṃhitās) of the Black school of the Yajus are earlier than those of the White school.2 Of the Brāhmaṇas the Śatapatha and the Aitareya, which make important statements on the inter-relation between the varṇas, are ‘comparatively modern’, while the Pañcavimśa and Taittiriya are the most ancient.3 Even later than the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa and the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa is the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa,4 and so is the Kaushitaki or Śāṅkhāyana Brāhmaṇa.5 In some cases it is difficult to draw a line between the Śrautasūtras and the Brāhmaṇas; thus the Baudhāyana Śrāvasūtra may be regarded as a late Brāhmaṇa.6 The Āpastamba Śrāvasūtra seems to be similarly old.7 In addition to these, the dates of other principal Śrāvasūtras (viz. Āśvalāyana,

---

1. Winternitz, HIL, i, 195-6. Keith says that the home of the Taittiriya school was the middle country, as was the home of the Kāṭhaka, the Maistrāṇi, and even the Vaiṣṇava and the Śatapatha. HOS, xvii, p. XCIII.
3. Wackernagel, Althil. Ge ammzist, i, pp. XXX-XXXI; Keith, HOS, xxv, 44.
4. Keith, HOS, xxv, 46.
5. Winternitz, HIL, i, 191.
Kātyāyana, Śāṅkhaśāyana, Lāṭyāyana, Drāhāyana and Satyāśākha) have been fixed between 800 and 400 B.C. At present the number of the Upaniṣads exceeds even two hundred, but only six of them can be ascribed to the pre-Buddhist period. In examining the material from the different strata of later Vedic literature regard has to be paid also to the relative dating of the various parts of individual texts. Moreover, in the later Samhitās, and especially in the Brāhmaṇas, we find far more frequent use of optatives than in the Rg Veda and the Atharva Veda. Hence many statements in the later Vedic literature are not in the form of the record of facts that actually occurred, but are to be interpreted as instructions and advice. But occasional evidence for things which may have happened can be culled from the narrative portion of the Mahābhārata, which reflects happenings in the later Vedic period.

Since the śūdras appear in post-Vedic times mainly as the serving class, we will begin the study of their position in the later Vedic period with an inquiry into their economic conditions. In an early reference they are described as being in possession of cattle, which could be taken away by the people of the higher varṇas for sacrifice. This is corroborated by another reference in an early Brāhmaṇa, in which the śūdra is represented as being born without god and sacrifice, but owning many cattle (bāhūpaśute). It is obvious that such śūdras, who held independent property in cattle, which seem still to have been the chief form of wealth, may not have been under the necessity to serve others.

Nevertheless, there are some references to the functions of the śūdras as a serving class. It is stated in the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa that the śūdra is created from the feet of Prajāpati without any god, and therefore the lords of the house are his gods

1. V.A. p. 476.
2. Ibid., p. 467.
3. Here it is not possible to do more than refer to the opinions of generally accepted authorities.
5. Cf. PHAI, pp. 7-8.
6. MS IV 217 and 30.
7. Pañce. Br., VI.1.11.
and he is to earn his living by washing feet. In other words, according to a later source he has to live by serving people of higher varṇas. The former source further informs us that, as a result of the Horse Sacrifice (aśvamedha), the nourisher vaiṣya becomes wealthy, and the rising śūdra becomes an expert worker. It is not known whether the term karmakartā is used here in the sense of hired labourer, a meaning always attached to a similar term karmakara in post-Vedic literature. In an early Upaniṣad, however, the śūdra is called Pūsan or the nourisher, a title (posayiṣyuḥ) applied to the vaiṣya in the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa. This would, then, suggest that he was the tiller of the soil, engaged in sustaining and producing activities for the nourishment of society. Probably in the earlier part of this period, like the vaiṣyas, he paid part of his produce as taxes, an obligation from which he was freed in post-Vedic times.

But the impression that the śūdras constituted the labouring class is gained from several other references. In the puruṣamedha (human sacrifice) a brāhmaṇa is to be sacrificed to the priesthood, a rājanya to the nobility, a vaiṣya to the Maruts (the class of peasants), and a śūdra to toil (tupase). It was thought that the śūdra symbolised hard work. In the list of sacrificial victims, members of four varṇas are followed by those of various occupations such as chariot-maker, carpenter, potter, smith, jeweller, herdsman, shepherd, farmer, brewer, fisherman and hunter, in addition to certain peoples such as Nişāda, Kirāta, Parṇaka, Paulkasa and Bainda, who presumably were included in the broad term of

2. suśrūṣā śūtrayataretāṃ varṇānām. Satyāṣādha Śr. Su., XXVI. 1.7, but this is not to be found in any other early Śr. S.
3. utthātā śūdro daḵṣyaḥ karmakartā. Jai. Br., II, 266. Perhaps there is no parallel for this passage in other Brāhmaṇas.
4. Karmakara occurs in Tai. Br. III, 11. 10.3, in the sense of a ṛtvik priest and not as a hired labourer. There seems to be no mention of karmakara in other Brāhmaṇas.
6. II. 266.
7. Mookerji, AIE, p. 158.
8. VS, XXX. 5; Śat. Br., XIII. 6. 2. 10; Tai. Br., III, 4. 1.1.
9. VS, XXX. 6-21; Tai. Br., III, 4. 2-17.
the śūdra. The list, therefore, shows that although the crafts had increased in number, they were no longer practised by the members of the viś. The idea was gaining ground that śūdras included artisans and workers of various kinds.

What was the nature of relations between the śūdra workers and their employers? The authors of the Vedic Index say that slaves were certainly included in the term śūdra. But the number of slaves seems to have been very small. We learn of ten thousands of female slaves, captured from various countries and given away by Aṅga to his brāhmaṇa priest Ātreya. The number is obviously exaggerated and conventional. Āruṇi, the father of Śvetaketu, boasts that he possesses gold, cattle, horses, maidservants (dāsīs), retinue and dress, but does not speak of male slaves. Tradition has it that the brāhmaṇas received female slaves at the time of the great coronation sacrifice of Yudhiṣṭhira, which may be ascribed to the later Vedic period. Clearly, then, during this period female slaves were owned on a considerable scale by the ruling chiefs and priests, but the same cannot be said of male slaves. The term dāsa is mentioned in the Aītareya and Gopatha-Brāhmaṇas but not in the sense of a slave. It is remarkable that, in the list of words for servants (paricaṇaṇakarmāṇaḥ) given in the Nighaṇṭu, there is no mention of dāsa, although there occur ten synonyms for servants. Perhaps the number of male slaves was so negligible as not to attract any notice. This would naturally rule out the possibility of male śūdras being employed as slaves on any considerable scale. Therefore Keith’s statement, that in the period of the Brāhmaṇas for the peasant working in his own fields was

2. Ibid.
3. deśād-deśāt samoḥhānāṁ sarvāsām ādhyaudhitiṁ; daśādaddāt sahasrāṇi ātreya niṣkakanṭhyāḥ. Aīt. Br., VIII. 22. The chapter is a part of the later portion of this work.
5. Mbh. (Cal.), II. 33. 52. Kṛṣṇa, the sūta king of Aṅga, is found offering a hundred Māgadhī slave-girls decked and trained in music and similar accomplishments. Mbh. (Cal.), VIII. 38.7. 18.
7. III. 5.
being substituted the landowner cultivating his estate by means of slave labour, may not represent the true state of affairs.

Slaves, working on land are first heard of in the Śrauta-śūtras, which were composed towards the end of the Vedic period. One of them informs us that two slaves are to be given away along with grain, plough and cattle, suggesting thereby that slaves were employed in ploughing and could be freely disposed of by their masters. But in several passages the practice of making gifts of land and of the people working on it is looked upon with disfavour. Thus it is stated that at the aśvamedha sacrifice the sacrificial fee could not include land and men working on it (bhūmipūrasavarjam). Again, in connection with the gifts in the one day (ekāha) sacrifice, it is laid down that land and śūdras could not be given away (bhūmiśūdравarjam). There is, however, the alternative that sometimes the śūdras could be also given away, but the commentary adds that this can be done only in case of those who are born slaves. There are two similar references from the Śāṅkhāyana Śrautasūtra. One of them says that in the pūrṇaṃśāmedha sacrifice land with men is given away as sacrificial fee. One other is not clear, and perhaps suggests that in the sacrifice of all (sarvamedha) land is given ‘along with’ the people. These references indicate a new social development towards the close of the Vedic period. Śūdras were employed as slaves working on lands owned by individuals (mostly ruling chiefs), and they could be given away as gifts along with the land itself, although this did not go without challenge from the authors of the Aśvalāyana and Kātyāyana Śrautasūtras.

It is held that śūdras were serfs in the Vedic period. The term serf denotes one who is attached to the soil of his master.

2. ...dāsamithunau dhāndaśāyam śīrāṃ dhemārūti. Lāvyā. Śr. S., VIII. 4. 14.
5. Śūdradānāṃ nā darśanaśārodhyāṃ. Ibid., XXII. 11.
7. sahāpurṇaṃ ca diyate. Śāṅkhā. Śr. S., XVI. 14. 18.
8. sahābhūmi ca diyate. The comm. adds sahāpurṇaṃ ca. Ibid., XVI. 15. 20.
9. VI, ii, 389.
He owns a patch of land for which he pays taxes to his master and works on his fields, but can be transferred along with the land to other owners. This interpretation of the word śudra does not quite suit the relevant references. Firstly, individual ownership of land in the Vedic period was of a very limited nature. Ownership implies free disposal of property, but there are no examples of land grants in the Samhitās. There is one such example, however, in the Chāndogya Upaniṣad, in which a whole village is granted by the king Jānaśruti to Raikva. Another instance is to be found in two later Brāhmaṇas. They inform us that land could be given away only with the consent of the clan, and even then the earth refused to be transferred. In the earlier period there is no example of śudras being given away with the land. The development is to be found in some of the Śrautasūtras, but according to a commentary such śudras appear to be born slaves (garbhādāsa) and not serfs attached to the soil. This seems to be confirmed by the fact that in post-Vedic times the śudras do not appear as peasants paying taxes. In the vajapeya ("the drink of strength") sacrifice peasants (viṣ or vaiśyas) are described as food for the nobility. It is perhaps because of this that the vaiśya is to be afflicted with misery and sin. In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa the vaiśya is described as one paying taxes (باطहर्) and oppressed at will (ajayeyam). All this would indicate that the vaiśya had to pay part of their products to the rulers who lived on them. Absence of such references in the case of the śudras shows that they were not supposed to possess any taxable property. In an Upaniṣad Soma is described as eating the kṣatriyas and vaiśyas respectively, with his two mouths, the brāhmaṇa and the rājanya. Here the rājanya is represented as paying taxes to the brāhmaṇa, and the vaiśya to the

1. IV. 2. 4ś5.
2. Ait. Br., VIII. 23; Sat. Br., XIII. 7ś1. 15;
3. Ibid.
5. vaiśya' dhamāno na kṛtyate...brāhmaṇasya ca rājanasya cādyo' dharmikī yajñāḥ.
6. Sat. Br., V. 1. 10; Sat. Br., V. 2. 1. 17; VIII. 7. 1. 2, 2. 2.
7. VII. 29.
rājanya. As usual the śūdra is left out on the ground of his inability to pay.

It is difficult to define the position of the śūdras in the Vedic period in terms of slavery or serfdom. Although the references give the impression of their being the labouring masses, generally they do not seem to have been slaves or serfs owned by individuals. Apparently just as the community exercised some sort of general control over land, so also it exercised similar control over the labouring population. And, in this sense, the śūdras may be compared to the helots of Sparta, with the difference that they were not treated with the same amount of coercion and contempt.

Although in the later Vedic period artisan sections of the viś were reduced to the position of śūdras, there is nothing to show that crafts or agricultural operations in which they were employed were looked upon with contempt. So far as agriculture is concerned, there was a positive attitude of aiding, encouraging and honouring it by applying charms and performing a number of domestic rites.¹ As to the crafts, there is no evidence of contempt even for leather-work.² This would suggest that impurity did not arise from the nature of the task, which remained unchanged even in subsequent times. Significantly enough in the Śrautasūtra a ceremonial act was called śilpa,³ a word which also means craft. The absence of contempt for manual labour during the later Vedic period may be likened to a parallel development in Greece, where during the period from Hesiod to Socrates (cir. 800-cir. 400 B. C.) public conscience was favourably disposed towards it.⁴ Respect for manual labour in the later Vedic period probably lingered from the old simple society, in which even the king lent his hand to ploughing.⁵

The śūdras seem to have played a correspondingly important part in the political life of the period. In the formative stage

². S. K. Das has collected the relevant references. The Eco. History of Ancient India, pp. 139-40.
³. Āṣa. Śr. S., VIII. 4. 5-8; IX. 10. 11, 11. 2.
⁵. Case of Janaka of Videha. of the Indo-Āryan polity they enjoyed a considerable share in the functions of the state. It is striking that they found place in the exalted body of about a dozen ‘high functionaries of the state’ called ratnins (jewel-holders), which may be compared to the council of twelve, an institution of great antiquity among several Indo-European peoples such as the Old Saxons, Frisians, Celts etc. The ratnins were so important that on the occasion of the rājasāya sacrifice the king had to repair to their houses to perform the ceremonies of offering jewels to various gods. The list of ratnins shows that they included the representatives of all the vāṇās. Thus two of the ratnins, the rathakāra and the takṣan, who are mentioned in several texts, belonged to the artisan section of the śūdra vāṇa. The fact that all kinds of metals are prescribed as the sacrificial fee in the ceremonies at their homes shows that they owed their importance to their association with metal-working. It has been shown earlier how the king in the Atharva Veda tries to secure the aid of the karmāra and the rathakāra. But in the present list the place of the karmāra is taken by the takṣan, who, along with the rathakāra, may have been in charge of all the activities connected with metal-working and cart-making, without which the Āryan expansion and settlements farther east could not have made any headway. These two ratnins are not, however, mentioned in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, where their place is taken by the govikartana (huntsman) and pālāgala (messenger). There are reasons to think that these two also belonged to the śūdra vāṇa. The ceremony of offering jewels is followed by an act of expiation on the part of the king, who is considered guilty of having brought the non-sacrificing

2. Chadwick, The Heroic Age, p. 370.
4. ...takṣaratathakārayoghe. MS. II. 6. 5; Āp. Śr. S., XVIII. 10. 17; Sātyā. Śr. S., XIII. 4. 8. It is to be noticed that takṣa and rathakāra are not mentioned in a similar description of ratnins in TS, I. 8.9. 1-2 and KS, XV. 4.
5. sarvāyasāni dākṣiṇā. Ibid.
śūdras into contact with the sacrifice. Sāyaṇa goes too far when he includes even the senāṇi (commander) among the śūdra ratnins. In all likelihood the reference to non-sacrificing śūdras applies only to the pālāgala and the govikartana. That the pālāgala was a śūdra can be inferred from the fact that the pālāgalī is addressed as a śūdra. At another place the term pālāgala is defined as false envoy (anyatadūta); the quality here ascribed to the pālāgala is always in later times associated with the śūdra.

The govikartana, who is mentioned as a ratnin in several other lists besides that of the Satapatha, is specified as 'of low caste' (hinajāti) by Sāyaṇa. Presumably he was the keeper of game and forests and may have been a śūdra. Keith takes kṣattṛ, one of the ratnins, in the sense of a carver, which would mean that he also was a śūdra. But this rendering seems to be doubtful, for in the epic kṣattṛ means a chamberlain, and there is no special reason for believing that the word was used with a different meaning in the Brāhmaṇas. Among the ratnins it is taksan who can be better rendered as a carver. Thus it would appear that in some cases artisans, and in other cases herdsmen and messengers, from the śūdra varṇa, were considered important enough to be approached by the king on the occasion of his great coronation sacrifice.

But the position of the śūdra ratnin needs further clarification. Firstly, they are not specified by their varṇa name, as

1. eṣa'etattamah praviśattyanam vo' tamah praviśati yadayañyāṇiniṣeṣkena / p rasajatyañjyāṇannaś etdayāñjena prasajati śūrānsteadyānstaḥ. Sat. Br., V. 3 2 2-4.
2. The provision for expiation by means of offerings to Soma and Rudra, and Mitra and Bṛhaspati, looks like an attempt to reconcile two opposite views, one earlier and the other later, about the participation of the śūdra in the sacrifice. The king could enter into sacral relations with the śūdra, but the sin arising out of it had to be removed by another rite. It is to be noted that this does not occur in the Black Tajus texts or in the other texts of the White Tajus (Ghoshal, Hin.P. L. i, 133.)
3. śūdān stamṇyādin...Commm. to Sat. Br., V. 3 2 2.
6. Ibid., VI. 3 12.
9. He derives it from kṣad to carve HOS, xviii, 120.
10. kṣattṛ, Monier-Williams, Śansk-Eng. Dict. Acc. to Sāyaṇa he is the son of a kṣariya woman by a śūdra. is to be found in the case of the brāhmaṇa, the rājanya and the vaiśya ratnins.\(^1\) Secondly, in respect of powers, functions and representation the scales may have weighed heavily against the śūdra ratnins, whose appearance in political rituals in course of time may have been reduced to a matter of form. The number of the śūdra ratnins in individual lists varies from two to three.\(^2\) There is nothing to indicate that their presence secured the representation of the whole śūdra varṇa, but certainly some sections of that community could find a place in the polity.

Jayaswal views the ceremony of the offerings of jewels (ratnāhavinśi) as a great constitutional change inasmuch as the śūdra, “the conquered helot, is now worshipped by the man who is going to become king”.\(^3\) This implies that the conquered pre-Āryan masses were deliberately given a high status in the Āryan polity. But it is clear that at least the two śūdra ratnins, the rathakāra and the takṣan, owed their positions not to any deliberate policy of exalting the conquered in the Āryan political organization but to their original membership of the Āryan tribes, which had now disintegrated into varṇas; for in the Atharva Veda the rathakāra and karmāra (whose place is now taken by the takṣan) are clearly described as part of the viś (folk) round the king.\(^4\) Their indispensability as skilled workers in metals and chariot-makers may have also contributed to their importance in early society. Nevertheless, it is not unlikely that in the sequel the existence of these śūdra ratnins gave some reflected importance to the other sections of the śūdra varṇa.

The śūdra’s participation in the political life of the period is further evident from the ritual of the game of dice, which is prescribed as a rite in the rājasya sacrifice and presented to us in two versions. In the earlier version, which occurs in the Black Yajus texts, the brāhmaṇa, the rājanya, the vaiśya and the śūdra

\(^1\) The list of the ratnins in the Samhitās and Brāhmaṇas has been compiled by Ghoshal on the page facing p. 249 in Historiography and other Essays.

\(^2\) In one list (MS, II. 6 5, IV. 3-8) their number is three, and in two, lists it is two (KS, XV. 4; Sat. Br., V 9 ff.). It is strange that they are not mentioned in the texts of the Black School of the Yajus (TS, I 8 9 ff.; Tai. Br., I 7 3).

\(^3\) Hindu Polity, ii, 21.

\(^4\) AV, III. 5. 6.
participate in a game of dice for the sake of a cow, which is won by the king.¹ In the later version, which occurs in the White Pyās texts, the vaisya and śūdra are eliminated as candidates in competition for the cow, which is staked by the kinsman (ṣajāta) of the king and won for him by the officiating priest (adhyāryu).² It appears that this contest for the cow was originally a tribal custom to test the sagacity and wit of the leader. It is, therefore, the old tradition of tribal solidarity and homogeneity which accounts for the participation of all the varnas in the game of the dice. But with the passage of time the character of the ritual changed; the vaisya and the śūdra were excluded from the game. Nevertheless, it is significant that in the earlier period even a śūdra could join as a competitor in a game, which formed one of the preliminaries to the formal consecration of the king.

Again, the śūdra appears in another ceremony of the rājasūya sacrifice, in which the sacrificer gives first gold to the brāhmaṇa and purchases splendour with it; then a bow with three arrows to the rājanya and purchases lustre with it; next a goad to the vaisya with which he purchases nourishment; and finally a pot of beans to the śūdra with which he purchases longevity.³ Although varna distinctions are maintained and śūdras are probably represented as labourers engaged in agriculture, none the less they are brought into contact with the king and are considered capable of conferring longevity on him.

The śūdra is possibly connected with another ceremony of the rājasūya sacrifice, in which the newly consecrated king is called on to ascend the four quarters of the sky, when brahma in the east, kṣatra in the south, vish in the west and phala, varcas and puṣṭam in the north are asked to protect him.⁴ Jayaswal

---

¹ tatra paśṭhāhīṁ vidīcyam brāhmaṇo rājanya vaisyāḥ śūdrāḥ. Vārāha Śr. S., III. 3. 3. 24. MS. IV. 4. 6; Āś. Śr. S. (Garbe’s edn.), XVIII. 19. 2-3; Saṁyā. Śr. S., XIII. 6. 29-30.
² VS, X. 29; Sat. Br., V. 4.4.19-23; Kā. Śr., S., XV, 7. 7.11-20.
³ KŚ, XXXVIII. 1. This passage has no parallel in VS, Kā. S., TS and MS, but it occurs in a modified form in Tā. Br., II. 7.9.1. & 2, which mentions the gifts and results but does not bring in the four varṇas. In place of ojas it gives sīrṣam. Cf. Saṁyā. Śr. S., XXIII. 4.21, in which the passage occurs in connection with the odanasara oblation.
⁴ phala and varcas in VS, X. 10-13; bala and varcas in TS, I. 8. 13; puṣṭam and phalam in MS, II. 6. 10; puṣṭam and varcas in KŚ, XV, 7.
says that phala is evidently a substitute for śūdra.\textsuperscript{1} This is not accepted by Ghoshal who takes the ceremony as symbolising the influence of three higher castes in the Vedic polity.\textsuperscript{2} It has been also suggested that phala denotes industrial classes.\textsuperscript{3} In our opinion the term phala, which is used in Vedic literature\textsuperscript{4} in its literal sense as meaning ‘fruit’ and not in its later secondary sense as ‘result’, may not be unconnected with the producing activities of the śūdra, but the same cannot be said of the term varcas which means lustre. As to the word puṣṭam (nourishment), it is generally associated with the vaiśyas, but in one passage the śūdra is also called puṣan (nourisher).\textsuperscript{5} It may, therefore, be tentatively suggested that the terms phalam and puṣṭam reflect the producing activities of the śūdra, who is thus indirectly called upon to protect the king in the north.

We know that respectable śūdras were invited to the great coronation sacrifice (rajasūya) of Yudhishṭhira.\textsuperscript{6} The contradictory statement that no non-sacrificing śūdra was present on the occasion\textsuperscript{7} probably reflects the later attempt to exclude śūdras from political power. At any rate it seems clear that at least some sections of the śūdras participated in the coronations of kings.

According to a passage of the Yajus collections of both the schools,\textsuperscript{8} on the occasion of the rajasūya sacrifice the king established among the viś (people)\textsuperscript{9} prays to Sūrya for the expiration of the sin committed against the arya and the śūdra. Relying on Pāṇini\textsuperscript{10} the commentators Uvāta and Mahidhara take the word arya in the sense of vaiśya.\textsuperscript{11} This shows that not even the king was free to oppress the members of the two lower \textsuperscript{1} Op. cit., ii, 29, fn. 2.

\textsuperscript{2} Hist. and Essays, p. 264.
\textsuperscript{3} S. V. Venkateswara, Indian Culture Through the Ages, pt. I, p. 11.
\textsuperscript{4} VI, ii, 52.
\textsuperscript{5} Br. Uṣ., I, 4, 13.
\textsuperscript{6} viśasa ca mānyām śudrān sārvānāṃ saha ca. Mbh., II. 30. 41.
\textsuperscript{7} na tasyāṃ samvidhau śūdraḥ kaścid ānāma caḥ rathuḥ. Mbh., II. 33. 9.
\textsuperscript{8} yadhūḍre yadare yadnāsakṛtam vaiṣyam yadekasyā bhi dharmān tasyāvagājanamāni. VS, XX, 17 (on the occasion of the sautrāṇa sacrifice); TS, I, 8, 3, 1; AS, XXXVIII, 5; cf. Sat. Br., XII, 9.2.3.
\textsuperscript{9} VS, XX, 9.
\textsuperscript{10} aṛyaḥ sādhvavāisyayaḥ. Pā., III, 1. 103.
\textsuperscript{11} Comm. to VS, XX, 17. The VI takes it in the sense of aṛya.
varṇas, a situation entirely different from the one in the Aita-reya Brähmana, where the vaisya appears as one to be oppressed, and the śūdra as one to be beaten at the pleasure of the king.

In the aśvamedha sacrifice, which was supposed to confer universal sovereignty upon its performer, the śūdras appear as the armed guards of the horse which is sent out on an expedition of world-wide conquest.

That the śūdra could use weapons can also be inferred from an early passage, which states that with the king as helper they slay a king, with the vaisya a vaisya, and with the śūdra a śūdra. The traditional account in the Mahābhārata refers to a king called Dambhodbhava who used every day to challenge armed soldiers of the ksatriya, vaisya and śūdra classes to prove themselves his equal in fighting. While enumerating different leaders and peoples participating in battle, the epic refers to the case of all the four varṇas taking part and thereby gaining righteousness, heaven and glory. Thus the fact that śūdras also acted as soldiers again betrays the influence of the old tribal polity, in which every member could take up arms.

It is to be further noted that the āyogava, who is defined by the commentator as a son of a vaisya woman by a śūdra, is to act as a vigilant dog in the horse sacrifice. Perhaps this refers to the practice of enlisting the aboriginals as watchmen. The Satapatha Brāhmaṇa furnishes the unique case of an āyogava king Maruṭa Āvikṣita performing the aśvamedha sacrifice, in which the Maruts act as his body-guards, Agni as his chamberlain, and

1. VII. 29. See infra, pp. 59-60.
2. sataṁ śūdrā varūthinah. Āp. Śr. S. (Garbe’s edn.), XX. 5. 13; cf Kā. Śr. S., XX 50. It seems that moved by later bias the Satyāśūdra Śr.Ś., which is a popular version of the Āp. Śr. S., leaves out the śūdra varūthinah. Satyā. Śr. S., XIV. 1. 46.
3. tasmād rājñā rājānam aśabhuvā ghnanti vaisyena vaisyam śūdraena śūram. TS, VI. 4. 8.
4. āstī kaścidāśīsto v ā dāvidho vā bhavedyutthi; śūdro vaisyaḥ ksatriyo vā brāhmaṇo vāpi sāstrabhir. Mbh., V. 94-7.
5. tēṣāmākāraṇam yuddham dehapāmaḥyakānānam; śūravikṣatrasāyanaḥ dharmayam svargyam yajakānam. Mbh., VIII. 32. 18. The Cr. Edn. reads vīrāṇām in place of vīrāṇām, but the latter occurs in Ms T1. 3G and seems to be more suitable.
the All-Gods (Višvedevas) as his courtiers (sabhāsadas). This does not seem to be a case of a śūdra king but probably is an example of a non-brāhmaṇical ruler being assimilated to the brāhmaṇical polity. The definition of āyogava does not appear until the Dharmasūtras, and we cannot be sure that Marutta Āvikṣita was a low caste king.

It was provided in the āsvamedha sacrifice that the house of the rathakāra should serve as the resting place for the horse and its guardians. This shows that the rathakāra continued to hold his political position in the later ritual of the āsvamedha as well.

The āsvamedha sacrifice was performed with the object of conquering all the four varṇas, which shows that the ruler felt the necessity of securing the allegiance of all sections of society. The same impression is acquired from another passage, in which, on the occasion of the rājasūya sacrifice, the priest makes the king successful in gaining splendour, strength, offspring and firm footing, which qualities are respectively associated with the brāhmaṇa, the kṣatriya, the vaiśya and the śūdra. A passage of similar import is to be found in the Tāttiriya Samhitā. According to it the rājanya has to repeat the kindling verses thrice; because in addition to the allegiance of the warrior, he has to secure the obedience of three other classes of people, namely, the brāhmaṇa, the vaiśya and the śūdra. All this shows that the obedience of the śūdra was not taken for granted as in some later sources. That it was found essential for the king to win his support also is evident from a passage of the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa. It informs us that the Pāṇcāla prince Darbha Śatāniki was honoured among the brāhmaṇas, the kṣatriyas, the vaiśyas and the śūdras successively though the use of the gāyatri, the triṣṭubh, the jāgati and the anuṣṭubh metres.

1. Sat. Br., XIII. 5. 4-6.
2. Sat. Br., XIII. 4. 2. 17; Āp. Śr. S. (Garbe’s edn.), XX. 5. 18; Kā. Śr. S., XX. 55; Satyā. Śr. S., XIII. 1. 47.
5. TS, III. 5. 10. No parallel in other collections of the Yajus.
6. Jai. Br., II. 102. The same idea is conveyed by the Sāṅkh. Śr. S., XIV. 33, 18-19 in a slightly different form.
A remarkable passage occurring in all the collections of the Yajus contains a prayer to Agni to confer brilliance on 'our' priests, warriors, vaisyas and sūdras.¹ The context, in which this passage occurs in the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā, deals with formulas for the performance of the vasordhāra, a sort of consecration service of Agni as king. On this occasion the officiating priest (adhvaryu) recites formulas meant to bestow all temporal and spiritual blessings on the sacrificer. It is not clear, but may not be improbable, that the ritual is prescribed for the king, who prays to Agni to place lustre in all the varṇas of his subjects including the sūdras.

There was no uniformity in the nature and extent of the sūdra’s participation in what may be described as rituals of a political character. In some cases the minutiae of ceremonies varied according to varṇa, and naturally the sūdra was given the lowest place; in other cases all the varṇas, including the sūdra, participated in the ceremony in the same manner, and could expect similar blessings. At any rate, compared to rules in the Dharmaśāstras, it is worth notice that in the later Vedic period the sūdras could have some share in political power along with the members of the three higher varṇas.

But there is also the other side of the picture. Already during this period a clear tendency had begun to exclude the sūdra from participating in the communal life. Thus the sūdra could not take part in the sprinkling ceremony on the occasion of the rājasūya sacrifices, unlike the members of the three higher varṇas.² It has been contended by Jayaswal that the śvetā or the śvetā-mitra, who appears in the texts as the fourth person to sprinkle water on the king, is a sūdra in the sense...

---

¹. rucam viṣyeṣu śūḍreṣu mayi dhehi rucā rucam. TS, V. 7.6. 4; VS, XXIII. 48; KS, XL. 13; MS, III. 4.8; TS, V. 7.6. The Sat. Br., IX. 4.2.14 has "rucam no dhehi brāhmaṇeyi ḥ". J. Eggeling thinks that the other three varṇas are understood, and, therefore, in translating the passage notes them in the brackets (SBE, xliii, 238). But the text probably furnishes a typical example of brāhmaṇical juggling with the old ritual in the interests of their priestly pretensions.

of a man of hostile tribe. Such an interpretation seems to be without any authority. Whatever be the correct meaning of this term, it is clear that it has nothing to do with the śūdra at any place in literature. It is also stated that on the occasion of the rājasūya sacrifice the three higher varṇas could request the king to grant a place for the worship of gods. Although the exulsion of the śūdra would naturally follow from the theory that he was born without gods, it can be also taken to indicate his declining importance in political life.

The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa explains certain rites as establishing the control of the kṣatria (ruling chiefs) over the viś (community). The śūdra is left out, presumably because the king’s control over him is taken for granted. Another passage, which speaks of the brāhmaṇa and the kṣatriya being established among the viś but leaves out the śūdra, conveys a similar idea.

The śūdra was not admitted to the vājapeya (drink of strength) sacrifice, which was supposed to increase the strength of the king. According to one text it was open to the brāhmaṇa, kṣatriya and vaiśya, but in other texts even the vaiśya came to be excluded.

There is an indication of the lack of civic status of the śūdra in a minor ceremony described in the Taittiriya Brāhmaṇa. In explaining a rite of new and full-moon day ceremonies (dariapūrṇamāsa) it is argued that the śūdras who are in front of their masters seek their favour, and that those who are not capable of making contradictions are to be treated in the same manner as the śūdras. This would suggest that the śūdras were

1. Hindu Polity, ii, 25. What Jayaswal further says implies that in later times the śūdra always appears as a participant in the abhiskekana ceremony, but there is nothing to prove this until we come to the coronation rites of the Agni Purāṇa (ch. 218-16-20), a work of early mediaeval period.
4. Sat. Br., I. 3. 4-15; II. 5. 2-6; II. 5. 2-27; cf. XII. 7. 3. 15.
5. Ibid., XI. 2. 7. 16.
6. Śāṅkh. Śr. S., XVI. 17-4 quoted in VI, ii, 256.
7. Vṛddha Śr. S., III. 11.1; Ghoshal, Hist. & Essays, p. 283. The vaiśya was, however, associated with some of the minor ceremonies of the vājapeya sacrifice along with the kṣatriya (Kā Śr. S., XIV.75).
8. Taî Br., III. 3.11.2. with Bhaṭṭabhāskara’s comm. not expected to speak against their master, and were thought to be completely servile.

An important development in later Vedic polity is the tendency to claim a special position for the brāhmaṇa and the kṣatriya, distinguishing them from the vaiśya and the sūdra. Ghoshal cites a number of examples to show the importance of the brahma and the kṣatra as two dominant forces in society, their mutual antagonism and their close political alliance. Prayers for the protection of the two upper classes are to be found in the Saṃhitās as well as in the Brāhmaṇas. If such references are closely analysed, they seem to yield two results. Firstly, most of them occur in later literature, especially in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa. Secondly, while the earlier references generally point to the combination between the two upper varṇas, the later do it to the specific exclusion of the vaiśya and the sūdra. Thus the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa clearly states that the brāhmaṇa and the kṣatriya enclose the vaiśya and the sūdra. The same text also avers that those who are neither kṣatriya nor purohita (priest) are incomplete. Attention has been already drawn to the exclusion of the vaiśya and the sūdra from the game of dice in the later version of this rājasūya rite. In connection with the same coronation sacrifice the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa states that the brāhmaṇa precedes the kṣatra but the vaiśyas and the sūdras follow him. Therefore it would appear that the tendency to equate the vaiśya with the sūdra and exclude them from public life is implicit in earlier texts, but becomes explicit and pronounced in later literature.

This review of the role of the sūdra in the public life of the later Vedic period may be closed with an examination of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa passage, which has been interpreted as indicating an absolutely servile position of the śūdra in the Vedic polity. Such a view is not justified by a close scrutiny of the context and meaning of the crucial passage. It is said that a king named Viśvantara Sāusadmanā performed a sacrifice without the priestly clan of the Śyāparṇas, who were removed from the altar. Their case was taken up by their learned leader RāmaMārgaveya, who protested against the dismissal of the priests, on the ground that he possessed the knowledge of the food to be taken by the king in lieu of soma on the occasion of the rājasūya sacrifice.\footnote{1}
The passage in question describes in his words the possible results of the various kinds of food to be taken by the king, and in doing so indicates the kind of relation which subsists between the ruling varṇa of the warrior and the three other varṇas. It is said that if the king takes soma, the food of the brāhmaṇa, his progeny will be a brāhmaṇa with all his characteristics. He will be an acceptor of gifts, a drinker of soma, a seeker of livelihood and one to be removed at will (yathākāmā-prayāpyah)\footnote{2}. If the king takes curd, the food of the vaiśya, his progeny will be a vaiśya, and will have all the vaiśya’s characteristics. He will be tributary to another, eaten by another, and oppressed at will. But we are more concerned with the epithets which describe the position of the śūdra. It is stated that if the king takes water, the food of the śūdra, he will favour the śūdras and his progeny will have all their characteristics.\footnote{3} He will be (i) anyasya presyaḥ, (ii) kāmotthāpyah and (iii) yathākāmavādhyah. Keith correctly renders the first epithet as ‘the servant of another’, but the same cannot be said of his translation of the other two epithets. The second epithet kāmotthāpyah is rendered by him as one ‘to be removed at will\footnote{4} and by Haug as ‘to be expelled’\footnote{5} at the pleasure of the master. On this basis it is said that the śūdra was a tenant-at-will who

\footnotesize{\footnote{1} Ait. Br., VII. 27-8.}
\footnotesize{\footnote{2} Mair, Haug and Weber take the word as active in sense, ‘moving at will’. But the verb is clearly used in the passive causative sense (VI, ii, 255), which Siyana recognises.}
\footnotesize{\footnote{3} atka yadi atah, ādvānum sa bhaksyaḥ; śūdravistena bhaksena jīnam iṣyasi, śūdrakalpaṃ te prayāyāmājanisyaṃ. Ait. Br., VIII. 29.}
\footnotesize{\footnote{4} HOS, xxv, 815.}
\footnotesize{\footnote{5} Tr. of Ait. Br., p. 485.}
could be thrown out of his holding at any time.\textsuperscript{1} But Sayana’s comment to this term states that the śūdra could be made to work at any time of the day or night whenever the master desired.\textsuperscript{2} His interpretation seems to be quite feasible because the plain meaning of the utthāpana is the act of causing to get up to rise. In early Sanskrit the sense of expulsion is conveyed by other words such as nirvāsana\textsuperscript{3} or niskāsana. The third epithet yathākāmavādhyah has been rendered by Keith as ‘to be slain at will.’\textsuperscript{4} but Sayana interprets the phrase as meaning that the śūdra could be beaten by the angry master if he went against his will\textsuperscript{5}. Sayana’s interpretation is supported by the Nirukta, in which, as against three places where vadha means to to kill,\textsuperscript{6} at five places it means to hurt or wound.\textsuperscript{7} Haug is, therefore, right when he renders the third epithet as ‘to be beaten at pleasure’.\textsuperscript{8}

The ready and uncritical acceptance of the false view that according to the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa the śūdra could be slain at the pleasure of the master\textsuperscript{9} led to the natural corollary that in the Vedic period he had no wergeld, which he came to have in the period of the Dharmasūtras, when the relation of simple slavery was being abolished.\textsuperscript{10} It is evident that such a view rests on a dubious interpretation of the term yathākāmavādhyah. Moreover, although the wergeld (called vairya or vairadeva) was probably fixed at a hundred cows,\textsuperscript{11} there is neither any reference to the variation of this amount according to the varna nor to the denial of this right to any varna. There seems also to have been provision of penance for the expiation of the sin of manslaughter (vairahatyā) through sacrifice\textsuperscript{12}, but this is also kept free from

1. Ghoshal, op. cit., i, 158.
2. mithyāśirādu matyāśirādu yadātīśirāciddinā icchā bhavati tadānām ayam utthāpyate.
4. HOS, XXV, 315.
5. vadhyāḥ = kupitena śāminā tādāyō bhavati icchāmanatikramyo.
6. III, 11; V. 16 and X. 11.
7. III. 9; IX. 15, 16, 18; X. 29.
9. VI, ii, 256.
11. VI, ii, 331.
12. Tai. Br., l. 5.9.5-6; cf. III. 4.1.7.
considerations of varṇa. Therefore it would appear that in later Vedic society varṇa distinctions were not so sharp and wide as to degenerate into the acute civic discriminations of the Dharma-sūtras; in which the śūdra was entitled to the lowest wergeld of ten cows.

Reverting to the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa passage, the meanings which have been suggested for the two epithets applied to the śūdra seem to be plausible. In the whole of Vedic literature there is no parallel passage, which describes the śūdra as one to be expelled and slain at the will of the master.

Whether the alternative meanings suggested above represent the true state of affairs is difficult to determine. This is because the Book VII of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, in which the passage in question occurs, is a later part. It would not be surprising if some of the epithets here applied to the various varṇas were used by a discarded priest to ingratiate himself into the favour of his patron king. It is not without significance that even a brāhmaṇa is described as one to be removed at will. In such a case the position of other varṇas can be well imagined.

All these considerations, however, in no way disprove the low status of the śūdra in the later Vedic polity. Our object is to define it as precisely as we can. And it is abundantly clear that while the śūdra was associated with several ceremonies of the two important sacrifices of political nature, the aśvamedha and the rājasūya, there had already begun, possibly towards the end of the Vedic period, a definite tendency to exclude him from rituals connected with political life. In many cases the vaiśya was also condemned to the position of the śūdra and deprived of his old rights.

Ritual literature can be also made to yield some information on the social conditions of the śūdra. A passage of the Yajus collections states that the vaiśyas and the śūdras were created together. This runs counter to the Puruṣasūkta version, in which the vaiśya precedes the śūdra in the order of creation.

1. Keith, HOS, XXV, 29; cf. VI, ii, 256.
2. VS, XIV. 30; MS, II. 8.6; KS, XVII. 5; Kṣ. S., XXVI. 24; TS, IV. 3.10.2.
with the result that the latter is assigned the lowest place in society. But the tendency to put the vaishya and the sudra in the same social category is noticeable in some rites, which show that a vaishya can be the husband of a sudra woman and vice versa. It is ironically stated that the arya husband of a sudra woman does not seek prosperity, the idea being that such a marriage condemns him to a life of prolonged penury. The commentators take the term arya (with short initial vowel) in the sense of vaishya, which provides evidence of marriage between the vaishya and the sudra woman; but the authors of the Vedic Index regard these references as instances of illicit union between the arya and the sudra. In most cases the reading is arya, and therefore the interpretation of the commentators seems to be right. The reading arya is also accepted by J. Eggeling in his translation of the Satapatha Brâhmaṇa, where he rightly renders it as vaishya. But it is not beyond all possibility that the texts may have been tampered with to suit new situations, when marriage between the members of the higher varnas and the sudra was looked upon with disfavour. On the basis of such an assumption it is possible to think of free marital relations between the Aryan and the Sudra tribes or the people who came to be included in the sudra varna. Later such relations came to be confined to the two lower varnas.

In the Brâhmaṇas priests and nobles seem to have been free to intermarry with the lower classes, including the sudra, as the cases of Vatsa and Kavaṣa indicate. Vatsa was called a sudra-putra by his brother Medhātithi, which shows that this was probably not used as a term of abuse. It is said that Vatsa proved his brâhmaṇahood by walking through the fire unscathed and thus wiped out this reproach. This case shows that the so-

1. Śat. Br., XII. 2.9.8; Tai. Br., III. 9.7.3; VS, XXIII. 30-31.
2. śastra yadasya sārā na paśyā dhanāyati. VS, XXIII. 30; MS, III. 13.1.
3. Śat. Br., XIII. 2.9.8; Tai. Br., III. 9.7.3; VS, XXIII. 30-31.
5. ŚBE, xlv, 326.
6. Keilh., CIII, i, 126.
cial rank of a person was not determined by his birth but by his worth. The case of Kavaṣa Ailūṣa being born of a dāṣī seems to be doubtful. The epithet dasyāḥ putraḥ applied to him is regarded by Sāyaṇa as a term of abuse. The Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa provides an instance of the legal marriage of the slave girl Usij, the mother of Ṛṣi Dirghatamas, if we may adopt her description given in the Brhaddevatā. The Purānic traditions inform us that Kakṣīvat, a brāhmaṇādīn, was the son of Dirghatamas by a śūdra maid-servant of King Bali, and in the epic he is mentioned as being of śūdra birth (śūdra-yoni). It has been pointed out that Mahidāsa, the author of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, was a śūdra. There is nothing to support this view unless his surname Aitareya be interpreted as his being the son of Itarā, which means vile, low or rejected, but this seems to be too far-fetched. In a late Brāhmaṇa Sudakṣīṇa Kṣaimi, a seer and priest, is addressed as a śūdra, but there are no particulars about his parentage, except that he was a descendant of Kṣema, and possibly in his case this epithet is used as a term of abuse. About a dozen Ṛṣis, whose mothers belonged to what may be regarded as the one or the other section of the śūdra varṇa, are enumerated in the Bhavisya Purāṇa. With minor modifications the list recurs in several other Purāṇas and the Mahābhārata. It informs us that Vyāsa was born of a fisherwoman, Paraśara of a śvapāka woman, Kapi-jalāda of a caṇḍāla woman, Vasistha of a prostitute (gaṇikā), and the best of sages (muniśreṣṭha) Madanapāla was the child of a boatwoman. As a justification for this kind of list, it is said at the end that the origins of the Ṛṣis, rivers, pious people, great souls and of the bad character of women cannot be discovered. Nothing definite

1. Ibid.
4. VI, ii, 259; Brhaddevatā, IV. 24-25.
8. According to Sāyaṇa, VI, i, 121-122.
can be said about the chronological position of these rśis or of their actual existence, but such a list testifies to the practice of priests and rśis marrying śūdra or slave women during the later Vedic period. It seems that kings and chiefs too married śūdra women. The pāḷgali, who was the fourth and the least respected wife of the king, was a śūdra.¹

The above examples show that marriage between people of higher varṇas and śūdra women was not discountenanced.² Probably in the beginning the Vedic Indians and the aborigines married within their respective tribes.³ Even when tribes disintegrated, and their members were divided among the four varṇas, the old practice may have continued for a time. But already during the later Vedic period varṇa distinctions had become so strong as not to permit marriage between the male members of the lower classes and the females of higher classes. There had begun also the tendency to look upon the śūdra woman as an object of pleasure for men of the higher varṇas. Thus in a comparatively later Brāhmaṇa the anuṣṭubh metre is compared to a śūdra harlot fit for being approached.⁴

During this period we also find traces of contempt for the caṇḍāla. It is stated that those who are of good conduct will attain good rebirth as a brāhmaṇa, a kṣatriya or a vāśya; but those who are of bad conduct will enter the stinking womb of a dog, swine or caṇḍāla.⁵ It is to be noted that, unlike the case of the caṇḍāla, birth in the śūdra varṇa is not described as impure (kapūyām), though it seems to have been looked upon as undesirable. It further appears that the caṇḍālas, who were an aboriginal tribe,⁶ were coming to be regarded as of reprehensible conduct. But in the early texts of this period the caṇḍāla appears as a victim in the puruṣamedha sacrifice,⁷ which gives no indication of his

¹ Sāṅkh. Sr. S., XVI. 4.4.
³ CHI, i, 129.
⁴ Sāṅkh. Br., XXVII. 1. This Brāhmaṇa is considered to be of later origin than the Satapatha and Aitārya Brāhmaṇas.
⁵ CHI. Up., VI. 10.7.
⁶ It seems that Triśāṅka, who is described as dark in complexion, was probably the leader of the Caṇḍāla tribe. Rāmāyaṇa, I. 58. 10-11.
⁷ VS, XXX. 21; Tai. Br., III. 4.1-17.
being untouchable. The Paulkasa, however, was associated with loathsomeness.\(^1\)

In the social ethics of the period under review certain bad qualities had come to be associated with the śūdra. We find Śunahśepa of the Áṅgiras clan condemning his father Ajīgarta as a śūdra, because he had sold him for three hundred cows as an object of sacrifice to Varuṇa.\(^2\) Though the son was released by the god and the father gave him a hundred cows to blot out his stain, Śunahśepa rebuked him in harsh words. As he said, “...thou art still not free from the brutality of a śūdra, for thou hast committed a crime for which no reconciliation exists”.\(^3\) This would suggest that, like Ajīgarta, in times of hunger the śūdras were prepared to part with their children. It was thought that for the sake of material gains they could be brutal and callous towards their near and dear ones.

It is interesting to note further that when Śunahśepa was adopted as a son by Viśvāmitra and given the first rank among his hundred sons, with the right of primogeniture, the fifty older sons refused to accept this position. This infuriated the father, who cursed them to have descendants of lower castes, such as those of the Andhras, Puṇḍras, Śabaras, Pulindas, Mutibas, Dasyus and antas (outcastes).\(^4\) While this account provides an early example of the priestly ingenuity in the invention of genealogies for non-Āryan peoples in order to assimilate them to the lower ranks of brāhmaṇical society, it also shows that recalcitrant and disobedient sons were regarded as Dasyus and antas. In his commentary to this passage Sāyaṇa also includes caṇḍālas and other low castes, but they are not mentioned in the text.\(^5\)

In one of the supplementary formulae of the Vājasaneyi Saṃhitā, to be used in connection with various seasonal and domestic sacrifices, a desire is expressed for talking kalyaṇīvāk to the member of all the varṇas.\(^6\) It is contended that this refers

\(^1\) VS, XXX. 17; Tai Br., III. 4. 1-14.

\(^3\) nāpāgaḥ swadrān nyāyād asamāhyam trayā kṛtam. Ait. Br., VII. 17.

\(^4\) Ait. Br., VII. 18.

\(^6\) yathemām vacan kā'yaśīśādādāh jānebhyaḥ; brahma vajanyabhyaḥ śūdrāya eṣāya ca svāya cārātrāya ca. VS, XXVI. 2.
to the equal right of all classes to the study of the Veda. But the term kalyāṇeṇak does not stand for the Veda. The commentators are right when they take it in the sense of kind and courteous speech. It would imply that friendly words were to be used in talking to the members of all the varṇas. A distinction, however, appears in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, where, in the instructions for the performance of a certain ceremony, modes of address vary according to the varṇas. Thus the terms ‘come hither’ (ehi), ‘approach’ (āghah), ‘hasten hither’ (ādṛava) and ‘run hither’ (ādhaṅga) are respectively used in calling the preparer of the offerings (haviṣkṛta) from the brāhmaṇa, the rājanyabandhu, the vaiśya and the śūdra classes. Such discriminations are frequently noticed in the social intercourse of post-Vedic times.

Of the four stages of life (āśramas), which appear at the end of the Vedic period, only the life of the householder is prescribed for the śūdra in later times, but there is no reference to such a distinction during this period. Although the four āśramas are mentioned in the Chāndogya Upaniṣad, there is no reference to their connection with the varṇas. This brings us to the question of the education of the śūdra, for, according to later texts, he cannot be admitted to the stage of studentship (brahmacarya āśrama), which begins with the ceremony of the upanayana. The earliest mention of the upanayana is to be found in the Atharva Veda, where the youth is initiated (upa-ni) into a new life by the teacher, for he is supposed to be born from his belly. The initiate becomes a brahmacārin, but there is nothing to indicate his varṇa. On the basis of Āruṇi’s exhortation to his son Śvetaketu that he ought to pass through the brahmacarya it has been held that for a long time the upanayana was confined only to priestly or literary families, from whom it was extended to the whole brāhmaṇa class and then finally to all the Aryans. This may be true if the upanayana be taken as the start-

1. Mookerji, AIE, p. 53.
2. Uvata and Mahādhara’s comm. to VS, XXVI. 2.
5. AV, XI. 5.3.
6. Atelkar, Education in Ancient India, p. 10.
ing point of literate learning, since in ancient societies education was generally in the hands of the priests. The fact that the brahmacārin was normally a brāhmaṇa is known from several sources. But this does not seem to be true of the upanayana and the brahmacārya if they are taken as signifying the beginning of a new life by a person on his formal admission as a full-fledged adult member of the tribe. Such an interpretation can be put on the tradition that gods, men and demons spent their brahmacārya period under the guidance of their father Prajāpati, who was their teacher. This cannot be taken to mean that literate learning was widespread among the early peoples, but can only suggest that some form of initiation into the life of the community was a universal practice among the Vedic Indians or their ancestors—a fact which is supported by the prevalence of similar practices among primitive peoples. This practice of initiation was also extended to the Vṛāyas, who were admitted into Āryan society through the acquisition of brahmacārya.

It is significant that a practice of initiation similar to the upanayana also prevailed among the early Iranians. Speaking of the practice of the initiation of the male and female Iranians by means of the investiture with a sacred thread at the age of fifteen, which marked their admission into the community of the followers of Ahura Mazda, Geiger says that it was an ancient custom which was modified and developed in later times. That the practice of initiation prevailed among the Spartans is also well known. Hence we may suppose that initiation was practised among the Vedic Indians as well. As such in the beginning the śūdra members of the disintegrated Āryan tribes may have continued to perform the initiation rites of the upanayana and the brahmacārya in the same manner as they performed several other

1. TS, VI. 3. 10.; Gopātha Br., I 2.2 and 4; Sat. Br., XI. 5. 4-12.
2. Br. Ut., V. 2.1.
3. AV, XI Ṛ, XV; Pañca Br., XVII. 1.2. Bloomfield thinks that the converted Vṛāya is exalted as a type of the perfect brahmacārin. The Altarveda, p. 94.
4. Vendidad, XVIII, 9 and 54. 9; Spiegel, Altiranisches, iii, 700. cf. 548-9.
rituals. The Samhitās and Brāhmaṇas do not refer to the śūdra’s exclusion from the rite of the upanayana.

The Chāndogya Upaniṣad informs us that Jānaśruti, who was instructed in the knowledge of life (prāṇa) and air (vāyu) by Raikva, was a śūdra. But elsewhere he appears as the chief of a people called Mahāvṛṣas, who lived in the north-west. He was dubbed a śūdra either because of his association with the people of the śūdra tribe who also lived in the same region, or because of the defamatory use of this term for those who lay outside the pale of brāhmaṇical society.

Jānaśruti may not have been a śūdra, but there are other indications to show that the śūdra was not completely debarred from acquiring certain kinds of knowledge. Thus it is stated in the Taîtiriya Brāhmaṇa that the vaiśya was born of the Rg Veda, the kṣatriya of the Yajur Veda, and the brāhmaṇa of the Śaṁ Veda. This obviously implies that the Atharva Veda was meant for the śūdra—a provision which is later on vaguely repeated in the Āpastamba Dharmasūtra. It means that the śūdra was excluded from the acquisition of the orthodox Vedic knowledge but not of other forms of knowledge. This impression is also acquired from several passages of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa. They inform us that the priest could instruct snake-charmers, usurers, fishermen, bird-catchers, Selagās, Niśādas, Asuras and Gandharvas, many of whom seem to have belonged to the śūdra varṇa.

The subjects taught are the Itihāsa, the Atharva Veda, the art of snake-charming (sarpavidyā) and demonology (devajana-vidyā). The list of students and subjects suggests that during the early period the priests did not keep themselves aloof from the practice of arts and crafts, which came to be included within the scope of activities assigned to the śūdra varṇa. But it is not clear whether such instruction was accompanied by the imparting of literate learning to the śūdras.

3. Winternitz, HIL, i, 229, fn. 3.
5. Śat. Br., XIII, 4.3.7-13.

Towards the end of Vedic period there set in the tendency to exclude the śūdra from the upanayana and consequently from education. Such an idea is possibly conveyed by a passage of the Chāndogya Upaniṣad, where a famous student claims to have been the glory of the brāhmaṇa, the rājan, and the vaiśya. But at another place the learner wishes to be popular with every section of the people including the śūdra. The first clear exclusion of the śūdra is found in a late Śrautasūtra, which lays down seasons for the upanayana of the three higher varṇas. It clearly states that the upanayana, the study of the Veda and the establishment of fire can bear fruit only in the case of those who are not śūdras and do not indulge in wicked activities. Another text provides that the initiated student (upanita) should not talk to a śūdra. It is further prescribed that the śūdra should wash the feet of the student who has completed his course (snātaka) in a ceremony known as the offering of honey (madhuparka). It is difficult to say whether the above references from the two Śrautasūtras indicate conditions in the later Vedic period. They may be assigned to the very end of that period, and perhaps even to post-Vedic times, for one of the earliest Grhyasūtras, contemporaneous with the early Śrautasūtras, makes it clear that the rathakāra was entitled to the upanayana.

It seems, then, that in the beginning the upanayana was the affair of the whole tribe; but as the tribe disintegrated into classes, it became a prerogative, a honorific distinction to be attained by means of wealth and high social position, which gave the initiated access to more or less exclusive, often secret societies. Just as in Iran it was denied to the Hūti class, so also in India.

3. Ibd., XIX. 1-4; XXVI. 1-20.
4. Ibd., XXVI. 1-6.
5. Drāhā. Śr. S., VII. 3-14.
it was denied to the śūdra varṇa. Following Senart's view that clan exogamy and tribe endogamy later developed into the features of the caste system, it may well be argued that tribal initiation was transformed into the upanayana of the three higher varṇas, with the result that it helped to bring about the social degradation of the śūdra.

Although the loss of the upanayana led to the denial of education to the śūdra, perhaps it did not matter much in the period which we consider. We are still in doubt as to the precise nature of education during the later Vedic period, and there is no direct proof that literacy prevailed at that stage. It is likely that even the kṣatriya and the vaiśya "performed their duties towards the Veda in a very perfunctory way, if at all". A later text shows that ordinarily the student made only a token performance of his Vedic studies, and education may have been primarily the concern of the brahmana. But the upanayana indicated something more than a right to education. It came to signify the higher social status of those who were entitled to this ritual.

The śūdra was not admitted to the upanayana, on the ground that it was a Vedic ritual. But the religious life of Vedic times shows that he was not always excluded from Vedic rituals. Many texts provide for the establishment of fire for sacrifice by the rathakāra, who could perform it in the rainy season. He occupies the fourth place in the list after the brahmana, the kṣatriya and the vaiśya. In the Āśvalāyana Śrautasūtra the place of the rathakāra is taken by the upakrusṭa. This term literally means a person scolded at or chid, but, according to

1. In the recent excavations at Hastināpura several needle-like pointed tools have been discovered in the phase of occupation ascribed to 1100-800 B.C., but it is not certain that they were used for writing. Al, No. 10-11, 14.
4. Tai. Br., I. 1.4.8 ; Āp. Śr. S. (Garbe's edn.), V. 11. 7 ; Kā. Śr. S., I. 9 ; Satyā. Śr. S., III. 1 ; Vārāha Śr. S., I. 1.1-4.
5. Āp. Śr. S. (Caldand's and Garbe's edn.), V. 3.19 ; Kā. Śr. S., IV. 179-B1 ; Satyā. Śr. S., III. 2 ; Vārāha Śr. S., I. 4.1.1 ; Vaikhā. Śr. S., 1.1 ; cf. Āśva. Śr. S., II. 1.13.
the commentator, it stands for a carpenter (takṣaka). This would suggest that although the carpenters were reviled, they continued to be admitted to the sacrifice. Another such person, who enjoyed the right to the Vedic sacrifice, was the chief of the Niṣādas (niṣāda-sthapati). But his sacrifice was meant for the pacification of animals through the worship of Rudra-Paṣupati. In a similar reference at another place only the Niṣāda is mentioned. But the commentator says that it refers to the Niṣāda chief (sthapati), and adds that in the Āpastamba Śrautasūtra he is a travaṁika (of the first three varṇas). In the Mahābhārata also the head of the Niṣādas (niṣādādhipati) is said to have performed sacrifices. A passage of the Rg Veda refers to the participation of ‘five peoples’ (pañcajanāh) in the sacrifice. The Nirukta explains the term pañcajanāh as meaning the four varṇas and the Niṣādas. This cannot be taken as applying to the period of the Rg Veda, as is sometimes done. Neither does the word niṣāda occur in the Rg Veda nor is the existence of the four varṇas a well-established fact there. Obviously the term pañcajanāh refers to the five Rg Vedic tribes, whose members offered sacrifices without any distinction. Yāska’s interpretation, however, shows that in his time the śūdras as well as the Niṣādas, who eame to be specified in the Dharmasūtras as a mixed caste born of a brāhmaṇa and a śūdra woman, could take part in the sacrifice. Thus the references prove that occasionally the Niṣāda people and generally the Niṣāda chief enjoyed the right to the Vedic sacrifice. It was laid down that in the viśvajit sacrifice the sacrificer would have to stay for three nights with the Niṣāda

1. takṣakakarmopajijñakrusya ityucate. Āśva.Śr.S., II. 1.13. with the comm. of Nārāyaṇa.
2. Āp. Śr. S. (Garbe’s edn.), IX. 14.12 ; Satyā. Śr. S., XV. 4. 20 ; Vārāha. Śr. S., I. 1.1.5 ; cf. Kā. Śr. S., I. 12.
3. Āp. Śr. S. (Garbe’s end.), IX. 14.11 ; Satyā. Śr. S., XV. 4.19 ; Vārāha Śr. S., I. 1.1.5.
7. RV, X. 53.4.
as well as with a vaśya and rājanya. This shows that the Niśāda people were indirectly associated with this sacrifice.

Of the two categories of people enjoying the right to sacrifice, it is clear that the rathakāra was a member of the Āryan community, but the Niśādas seem to have been a non-Āryan people living in their own villages. There are several references to the black colour of the Niśāda people in the Mahābhārata and the Viṣṇu Purāṇa. Probably as a step in their brāhmaṇization, the Niśādas as a tribe were allowed to carry on their own sacrifice in the Vedic way, which privilege later came to be confined only to their chief. Thus it is evident that right up to the end of the Vedic period the right of sacrifice was enjoyed by the rathakāra and the Niśādas, who fell under the category of śūdras. What is more important, Yāska’s interpretation of the term pañcajanāḥ would show that in his opinion the whole śūdra varṇa enjoyed this right.

There is specific mention of the participation of the śūdra in several religious rites. He could take part in the preparation of the offerings (hāviṣ) for the god along with the members of the three varṇas, although the mode of address employed for him reflects his lowest place in that rite. Similarly along with the members of other varṇas he could drink soma, and had to undergo atonement in case of vomiting. Referring to the case of the dāśi-putra Kavaṣa Ailūṣa Hopkins points out that the śūdra’s son shares the sacrifice and the śūdra drinks soma in one of the half-brāhmaṇical, half-popular festivals. It is curious to note that a passage from the Kāṣṭhaka Śaṁhitā does not permit śūdras and women to drink soma. This is, however,

1. ...niśādeṣu haiva tā vased...vaśya vā ha tā brāhtriyasya vā vased... rājena haiva tā vased. Jps. Br., II. 184; Pañe. Br., XVI. 6.7; Kaśñitaki Br., XXV. 15; Āp. Śr. S. (Garbe’s edn.), XVII. 26-18; Lāłyā. Śr., S., VIII. 2-8.
2. There is a reference to the Niśāda-grāma in the comm. to the Lāłyā. Śr. S., VIII. 2-8.
3. Quoted in Shaler, Ethnography of Ancient India, p. 10.
4. Śat. Br., I. 1.4.11-12; Āp. Śr. S (Galand’s edn.), I. 19-9.
5. cattāra vai varṇāḥ. brāhmaṇo rājanya vaśyāḥ śūdra na haitēśamekaiccanā bhavati yah somaṁ vanati, sat yat haitēśamekaiccātyāttṣyuddhaiva praśaiccātiḥ. Sat. Br., V. 5-4-9.
not found in other collections of the Tajus, and hence seems to be either an interpolation or at best the view of the Kāṭhaka school.

The śūdra also participated in two other minor rites. He could take part in the rite of offering prepared food (odana-sava) like the members of the other three varṇas, the condition being that food varied according to the varṇa. Similarly the rite of offering first fruits could be performed by the members of all the varṇas.

The śūdra's part in the solstice ritual known as the mahā-vrata furnishes important evidence of his participation in the religious life of the period. According to it the śūdra stays outside the vedi and the ārya stays inside. They fight over the possession of hide, and the victory goes to the ārya. In some texts the śūdra varṇa and the ārya varṇa are distinctly mentioned. Where the reading is ārya, it means vaiṣya; on the other hand where it is ārya it means a member of the first three varṇas. In some texts the place of the ārya is taken by the brāhmaṇa, who appears as the opponent of the śūdra, a feature which becomes common in post-Vedic times. Another Vedic passage, in which the two come in for special notice, states that neither a brāhmaṇa nor a śūdra can be offered as sacrifice to Prajāpati. The passage, which occurs in the later portion of the Vājasaneyi Samhitā, probably indicates that, while the brāhmaṇa is too high for the purpose, the śūdra is too low.

As to the significance of the mahāvrata ceremony, it possibly preserves the memory of fights for cattle both among the Āryans themselves and between Āryans and non-Āryans, who were

1. ājyamanthaḥ brāhmaṇaḥ payomanaṁ tājanyo dadhimaṇaṁ vaiṣya udmaṇaṁ śūdraḥ. Satyā. Śr. S., XXIII. 4-17. The passage suggests the comparative poverty of the śūtras.
2. Āśva. Śr. S., II. 9-7.
4. Jā. Br., II. 404-5. The term ārya varṇa occurs in KS., XXXIV. 5, but there is no mention of śūdra varṇa.
5. Saṅkha. Śr. S., XVII. 6. 1-2; Lātyā. Śr. S., IV. 3-9.5-6.
7. atśṛḍa abhrāmānāste prajāpatyāḥ. VS, XXX. 22. reduced to the position of śūdras. The Śāikhyana Śrautasūtra states that this antiquated and obsolete custom ought not to be performed.¹ This would show that the śūdra could enter into sacral relations with the members of the higher varṇas in an old ritual such as the mahāvratā, but ceased to do so when such rituals went out of vogue.

The śūdra also had his place in the funeral rituals of the later Vedic period. It was laid down that the śūdra could have his sepulchral mound, though it would be only as high as the knee, the height varying according to the varṇa.²

The śūdras are described as having and worshipping gods like any other class of the community. In the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upanishad the śūdra is called Pūṣan, which suggests that this god is assigned to him.³ Similarly in the mythology of the Mahābhārata the twin Aśvins, physicians of the gods, are regarded as śūdras.⁴ It is significant that in the ratnavaiśī ceremony the Aśvins are associated with the samgrahīty⁵ and Pūṣan with the bhāgadugha.⁶ But in the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa Pūṣan, along with the Viśvedevas (All-Gods) and the Maruts (peasant-gods), is associated with the vaiśyas.⁷ In a way the Viṣvedevas are indirectly assigned to the śūdras as well. The anusṭubh, which is a later and popular metre ascribed to the śūdra,⁸ is also assigned to the Viṣvedevas.⁹ It is stated that through the recitation of this metre Prajāpati¹⁰ and Indra were honoured among the Viṣvedevas, and the Pañcāla prince Darbha Sātāniki among the śūdras.¹¹ Therefore in this case the Viṣvedevas of divine society correspond to the śūdras of human society.

¹. XVII. 6.1-2.
². Śat. Br., XIII. 8.3.11. It is interesting to note that the tomb of the kṣatriya is to be the greatest in height and that of the brāhmaṇa to be the next.
⁵. Śat. Br., V. 3.1.8.
⁶. Ibid., V. 3.1.9.
⁷. Tai. Br., II. 7.2.1 and 2.
⁸. TS, VII. 1.1.4-5; Pañc. Br., VI. 1.6-11.
¹⁰. Prajāpati is not mentioned in the Śāikhyana Śrautasūtra.
Of the gods associated with the śūdras, Pūṣan seems to have been a shepherd god and, as such, probably represents the cattle-rearing and nourishing activities of the Āryan viś. The Āśvins, who are described in the later portion of the Rg Veda as sowing the grain with the plough and milking food for man, may be associated with the agricultural activities of the viś. The Viśvedevas are assigned to the viś because of their being great in number. The fact that precisely the same three gods who were associated with the Āryan viś later came to be directly or indirectly ascribed to the śūdra would suggest that even when sections of the viś were reduced to the position of śūdras, they continued to retain their old Vedic gods.

There is also evidence to show that considerable sectors of the lower orders, Āryan and non-Āryan, worshipped Rudra-Paśupati, who seems to have been a pre-Āryan deity. In the śatarudriya litany, accompanying the offerings appropriate to various forms of Rudra, reverence is shown to all sections of society headed by the brāhmaṇa and followed by the rājanya, the sūta and the vaiśya together with the different kinds of artisans and aboriginal peoples. But the first three varpas are mentioned in only one collection of the Tajus. While the śūdra as such is not mentioned in any of them, all the Tajus lists speak of reverence being shown to the rathakāras (cartwrights), the kulālas (potters), karmāras (smiths), the Niśādas, the Puṇjiṣṭhas (aboriginal people working as fishermen or catchers of birds), the śvanis (dog-feeders or dog-keepers) and the mrgayas (hunters), who may well be put in the fourth varṇa. Besides, the Taittiriya Saṃhitā mentions makers of bows and arrows (dhanukāras and ṭukāras), who may also fall under this category.

These artisans and tribal peoples worshipped Rudra as their patron god. According to Weber the "Rudra book dates from

1. Dutt, A History of Civ. in Anc. India, i. 60-61.
2. ydvam ṛṣyeśvainā vāṇantēṣaṃ duḥántā mānuṣaye āstṛā..... RV. I. 117.21.
3. MS, II. 9-5.
4. VS, XVI. 27; KS, XVII. 13; Kap. S., XXVIII. 3; MS, II. 9-5; TS, IV. 5-4.2; Kāśyapa S., XVII. 4.
5. TS, IV. 5-4.2.
the time of these secret feuds on the part of the conquered aborigines as well as of the Vṛāyas or unbrāhmaṇised Āryans, after their open resistance had been more or less crushed." He further points out that various mixed castes were not established without vigorous opposition from those thrust down into the lower castes. This would imply, then, that in the process of struggle against the growing privileges of the higher varṇas there went on considerable intermingling between the discomfited sections of the Āryan tribes and the masses of the conquered aborigines, with the inevitable result that some Āryans, such as the rathakāra and the karmāra, rallied under the banner of a non-Āryan god Rudra. It is worth notice that in the ratnahavīṣi ceremony Rudra is described as the god of the govikartana, who is specified by Śāyaṇa as ‘of whatever low caste’. It has been shown earlier that Rudra-Paśupati was the god of the Niśāda chief. Thus it is beyond all doubt that the śūdras also had their gods, some Āryan others non-Āryan. Therefore the brāhmaṇical statement in the stories of creation that the śūdra did not have any gods does not represent the correct position. One creation legend at least implies that Day and Night were the gods of the śūdras. Clearly the brāhmaṇical legends show a deliberate attempt to deprive the śūdra of the right to worship and sacrifice, which he formerly shared with his Āryan fellows, or enjoyed independently as a member of the aboriginal tribes.

The mass of evidence in favour of the śūdra’s participation in the Vedic sacrifice is more than counterbalanced by the evidence against it. It is repeatedly stated that the śūdra has no right to sacrifice on account of his low birth, and that he is incapable of making sacrificial offerings. A rite connected with the building of the fire altar (agnicayana), without which there

1. Ind. Lit., pp. 110-111.
2. Ibid.
5. TŚ, VIII. 1.1; Paṅc. Br., VI. 1.6-11.
6. VS, XIV. 30; Sat. Br., VIII. 4.3.12.
7. Tai., Br., III. 2.3-9; Kāṭ. Śr. S., I. 5; cf. Śāṅkh. Śr. S., I. 1.1-9; Aśva. Śr. S., I.3.3.
8. Tai., Br. III. 2.3-9.
can be no Vedic sacrifice, is explained as removing Agni from the śūdra varṇa. But the fact that such direct statements about the exclusion of the śūdra from the Vedic sacrifice are not found in the Samhitās may suggest their late origin. None the less, even in those texts there are numerous references, which have this implication. The instructions for the ceremony of the establishment of fire for sacrifice speak of only the first three varṇas, whose seasons for this purpose are mentioned in the Brāhmaṇas. Even the rathakāra is left out. In this connection it is stated that the fire coincides with the universe, which consists of the brāhmaṇa, the kṣatriya and the viś. It is also said that the rājanya and the viś are born of sacrifice and hence of the brāhmaṇa. Again the assertion that only members of the first three varṇas are able to sacrifice and hence a śūdra cannot enter the sacrificial ground is in accord with the above statements.

In addition to the śūdra’s exclusion from the general Vedic sacrifice, there are instances of his dissociation from certain specific Vedic rituals. For instance, the Soma sacrifice (soma-yāga) is prescribed for the brāhmaṇa, the vaiśya and the rājanya. The agnihōtra (an oblation to Agni) is to be performed by an ārya, who according to the commentator, is a member of the three higher varṇas. The śūdra is expressly prohibited from milking the cow for the milk required at the agnihōtra, because he is supposed to be born of untruth. Accordingly the earthen pot for milking (sthālī) is to be prepared by an Āryan. But such a prohibition does not occur in the Vājasaneyi and the Taittirīya collections of the Tājus; it occurs only in the supplementary

1. Šat. Br. VI. 4-4-9.
2. MS, III. 1-5; III. 2-2. Only the brāhmaṇa and rājanya are mentioned in TS, V. 1-4-5; KS, XIX. 4; and Kap. S., XXX. 2. Even the vaiśya is excluded.
3. Šat. Br., II. 5-2-36.
4. Ibid., III. 2-1-40.
5. VI, ii. 390.
7. Āp. Šr. S. (Garbe’s edn.), VI. 3-7 with the comm. of Rudradatta.
8. Tai. Br., III. 2-3-9-10; Kap. S., XLVII. 2; MS, IV. 1-3; Āp. Šr. S. (Garbe’s edn.), VI 3-11; Baudhā. Šr. S., XXIV. 31; Śāṅkh. Šr. S., II. 8.3; Satyā. Šr. S., III. 7.
9. asato vā eta sambhūta yacchūdraḥ. Āp. Šr. S. (Garbe’s edn.), VI. 3-12.
10. MS, I. 8-3.
portions of the Maitrāyaṇi and Kāpiśṭhala collections. The corresponding passage in the Kāṭhaka Saṃhitā is without accent, which suggests its later insertion. Furthermore, the Āpastamba Śrautasūtra, which is considered as the oldest of its kind,¹ gives the alternative provision that the śūdra can milk the cow.² The commentator tries to circumvent this meaning by pointing out that he can do it when allowed.³ All this would show that the ban on the śūdra's milking of the cow at the agniḥotra may not belong to the genuine portions of the Saṃhitās. It may be ascribed to the time of the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa.⁴

Harsh provisions, which even forbid bodily contact with and sight of the śūdra on certain ceremonial occasions, began to appear towards the end of the Vedic period. A person consecrated for the sacrifice is asked not to speak to the śūdra,⁵ and the same condition is imposed on a person who has been initiated (uḍaṇita).⁶ The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa lays down that at the pravargya ceremony (an introductory Soma rite) the performer should shun contact with a woman and a śūdra because they are untruth.⁷ Except one such reference in the Kāṭhaka Saṃhitā, this is the earliest example of bracketting the woman with the śūdras—a practice which is frequently found in later literature.⁸ It is also provided that a woman performing a rite for the sake of a son should not be touched by a vṛṣala, male or female,⁹ who in later times is identified with the śūdra and depicted as anti-brāhmaṇical. In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa even a carpenter's touch is regarded as imparting ceremonial impurity to the sacri-

1. Garbe, Āp. Śr. S., ii, Preface, p. XII.
2. duḥyād vā. Āp. Śr. S. (Garbe's edn.), VI. 3. 13.
5. Śat. Br., III. 1.1.10; na śūdrena saṃbhāṣera. Drā. Śr. S., VIII. 3.14; Lāṭyā. Śr. S., III. 3. 15-16, applies this condition to the performer of the sattra sacrifice. Satyā. Śr. S., X. 2.
6. Drā. Śr. S., VIII. 3.14; Satyā. Śr. S., XXIV. 8.16 also adds woman to whom a brahma迦rin should not talk after initiation.
7. Śat. Br., XIV. 1.1.31; also in Satyā. Śr. S., XXIV. 1.13.
ficial vessels. But at another place, if the reading in the Mādhyaṇḍīna recension of that text is correct, the takṣan appears as reciting the mantra for Āruṇī. It has to be remarked that all such references about avoiding contact with the śūdra occur either in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa or the Śrautasūtras, which indicates that the idea of the ceremonial impurity of the śūdra involving prohibition of physical and visual contact with him appeared towards the close of the Vedic period.

A review of the position of the śūdra in the religious life of the later Vedic period shows that, in addition to the rathakāra and the niśāda, who could take part in the Vedic sacrifice, the śūdra varṇa as such had its gods and could participate in several Vedic rites. It is true that in most cases the mode of participation was meant to indicate the śūdra’s low position in society, but on that account this privilege was not completely denied to him. The process of his exclusion, which is already in evidence in some of the earlier texts, became stronger towards the very close of the Vedic period. It seems that the growth of economic and social differentiation gradually changed the character of the tribal sacrifice, which tended to become individual and involved more and more gifts to the priests. In course of time the sacrifice came to be the prerogative of the higher varṇas, who could afford the means to pay for it. This can be inferred from the commentary of Śaṅkara to a passage of the Bṛhadāranyaka Upaniṣad, where he says that God created the vaiṣyās to acquire wealth, which is the means of performing rites. Similarly in the Mahābhārata Yudhīṣṭhira is represented as stating that sacrifices cannot be performed by people who are poor, for they require a large store of diverse kinds of articles. He further says that merit attaching to sacrifices can be acquired only by kings and princes, and not by those who are destitute of wealth and helpless. This would imply that generally the śūdra, who could ill afford to make gifts on the occasion of the sacrifice, was unable to perform it. In the case of a rich śūdra association with sacrifice was not considered undesirable, for it was laid down that fire could be accepted from his house.

2. Sat. Br. II. 3.1.31. In the Kāṇva recension it is Dakṣa.

3. I. 4.1.12.

It is argued that "a sense of danger with which the purity of the Brāhmaṇical faith was threatened from the idolatrous practices of the aboriginal subjects" first suggested to the brāhmaṇas "the necessity of raising an insurmountable barrier between the Aryan freeman and the men of the servile class". This seems to be a rather naive explanation. It is obviously based on the assumption that the śūdras were made up only of the conquered peoples, which is incorrect. Even so the Rg Veda, the Atharva Veda and many earlier references in later Vedic literature do not show any indications of protecting the purity of the brāhmaṇical faith by raising strong barriers against the śūdras. Possibly the śūdras who were recruited from the conquered aboriginals were excluded from the Vedic sacrifice because of their different religious practices, but this cannot be regarded as the only cause of such a development. We have already pointed to possible reasons for the śūdra's exclusion.

The position of the śūdra, which emerges from an analysis of the Vedic rituals, does not seem to be consistent. Economically on the one hand, there is mention of his owning cattle and probably functioning as an independent peasant; on the other hand the śūdras seem to have been domestic servants, agricultural labourers and in some cases slaves. Politically, we hear of śūdra ratnīns, but there is also mention of the śūdras and the vaisya being

1. na te sākyā daridrasya vajñāḥ prāptum pitāmahaḥ; bahūpakaraṇaḥ vaiṣṇā nanā sambhāravistarāḥ. pārthicas rājṛṣṭhairyā va sākyāḥ prāptum pitāmahaḥ; nāthamānyānairvagunairkālaṁbhīrsamhātaḥ. Mbh. (Kumb.), XIII. 164.2-3; (Cal.) XII. 107.2-3. This passage seems to have been the product of a much later period, but it may be taken as reflecting conditions in the later Vedic period.

2. yo brāhmaṇo rājanayo vaisyasyaśūdo vā'sura īva bahupuṣṭasyātasya ghṛtādhyādhyāt puṣṭikāmasya. Āp. Sr. S. (Garbe's edn.), V. 14.1. Of course the adjective bahupuṣṭaj is applied to the brāhmaṇa, the rājānya, and the vaisya as well but seems to be of special significance in the case of the śūdra, who is described as being removed from the fire.

3. Eggeling, SBE, xii, Introd., p. XIII.
enclosed by the brāhmaṇa and the kṣatriya. Socially, it is inaccurate to think that śūdras were saddled with restrictions regarding food and marriage;\(^1\) there is, however, some evidence of contempt for birth in a caṇḍāla family and of the ascription of certain bad qualities to the śūdra. Religiously, the śūdra was permitted to take part in certain rites, and yet excluded from several specific rituals as well as from the Vedic sacrifice in general. In other words, Keith is right when he says that in the Samhitās and Brāhmaṇas the position of the śūdra is ambiguous.\(^2\)

The contradiction in the position of the śūdra during the later Vedic period may be partly explained by the chronological position of the references. Generally the non-admission of the śūdra to rituals, which permeated all spheres of life, is to be found almost exclusively in later texts. But we also find rights and disabilities existing side by side. This may be accounted for by the existence of decaying tribal features alongside growing varṇa distinctions. As a member of the Āryan tribes the śūdra retained some of the tribal rights of taking part in various rituals, even when he was thrown into the ranks of the serving class.

A striking feature of the śūdra’s position during this period is the special status accorded to the artisan sections of that varṇa, such as the rathakāra and the takṣan. This was possibly owing to their great value as workers in wood and metal, without whom the Āryans could not expand and flourish. It has been shown earlier that the takṣan seems to have been a smith. His high status in Vedic society is in keeping with his honourable position in primitive agricultural communities, in which he serves even as a councillor of kings.\(^3\)

It is not possible to accept the thesis propounded in the Vedic Index and accepted by several writers\(^4\) that the śūdra was a serf in the beginning, that his life was insecure and then

1. IC, xii, 183.
2. CHI, i, 129.
gradually his old disabilities began to be removed. Such a view does not hold good of those Āryans who were degraded to the position of śūdras. Of course the non-Āryans were subjected to a policy of extermination in course of early wars, but there is nothing to show that at that time those who were conquered were encumbered with disabilities. On the contrary, the process seems to have been just the reverse. While the earlier references point to the participation of the śūdra in the communal life, the later references point to his exclusion, with the result that towards the close of the Vedic period disabilities overwhelmed the old tribal rights. They become so marked and perhaps so oppressive as to evoke protests from the Upaniṣads. It is stated in the Brhadāranyaka Upaniṣad\(^1\) that even the caṇḍālas and paulkasas cease to be as such in the world of the soul, where all distinctions disappear. The Chāndogya Upaniṣad\(^2\) states that even a caṇḍāla is entitled to the leavings of the agnihotra sacrifice, round which hungry children sit just as they sit round a mother. We do not know how far such protests in favour of the lower order were derived from the old ideal of tribal equality, but the possibility cannot be entirely ruled out. This tendency was carried forward by the reformation movements of post-Vedic times, while the opposite tendency, which sought to impose increasing disabilities on the śūdra varṇa, was continued by the compilers of the Grhyasūtras and Dharmasūtras.

1. IV. 3.22.
2. V. 24.4.
CHAPTER IV

IMPOSITIONS OF DISABILITIES

(c. 600—c. 300 B.C.)

For the study of the position of the śūdras in post-Vedic times, the brāhmaṇical sources, which mainly comprise the Dharmasūtras (law-books), the Gṛhyasūtras (books dealing with domestic rites) and the grammar of Pāṇini, can be supplemented by the early Buddhist and Jain texts. The chronological position of these sources can be fixed only roughly. In the latest study of the subject made by Kane the principal Dharmasūtras have been assigned to the period 600-300 B.C.¹ The sūtras show a grammatical freedom which is hardly conceivable after the period of the full influence of Pāṇini,² whose grammar has been assigned to the middle of the 5th century B.C.³ The law-book of Gautama, which contains most information relating to the śūdras, is believed to be the oldest of the Dharmasūtras.⁴ But its mention of Yavanas as born of śūdra females and Kṣatriya males,⁵ more examples of the joint notices of the vaiśya and the śūdra⁶ as found in the later Dharmasāstras, the attempt to introduce uniform laws for the whole of of India,⁷ the provision of punishment for cow-killing,⁸ the enumeration of nearly twenty mixed castes⁹—all these features show that its contents underwent great revision in later times.¹⁰

². Keith, CHI, i, 113.
³. Agarwala, India as known to Pāṇini, p. 475.
⁷. Bühler, SBE, ii, p. XLIX.
⁹. Ibid., IV. 16-21.
Therefore all its laws relating to society may not reflect conditions in the pre-Mauryan period.

The land of the Āryans (Āryavarta), to which the Dharmasūtras were to apply, embraced the region between the Punjāb and Bihār, and between the Himālayas and the hills of Mālwa, but the lawgiver Baudhāyana belonged to the south though the same cannot be said with certainty about Āpastamba, who refers to a peculiar śrāddha usage of the northerners (udīcyas). The school of Vasiṣṭha probably flourished in the regions of the northwest.

To the period 600-300 B.C. may be also assigned the principal Gṛhyasūtras, which have been characterised as 'the most reliable reports' on the daily life of the ancient Indians.

Of the Buddhist sources the four collections of the suttas (dialogues), i.e., the Dīgha, the Majjhima, the Sānhyutta and the Aṅguttara together with the Vinaya Piṭaka, may be roughly ascribed to the pre-Mauryan period. It is more difficult to fix the date of the Jātakas, in which the gāthās (verses), being the canonical texts, constitute the oldest stratum. But even the stories of the past, which are in the form of commentary in prose, may be put in the pre-Mauryan period; nevertheless, the present stories occasionally seem to reflect conditions in the Mauryan period, and are clearly later additions. While the scene of the stories of the past lies in the western or central part of India, the scene of the majority of the stories of the present is in Sāvatthi or Rājagaha. Further, the third, fourth and fifth volumes of the Jātakas can be generally considered as parts that have

1. CHI, i, 242.
3. CHI, i, 249-50.
5. Winternitz, HIL, i, 274.
6. Law, HPL, i, 30-33.
7. Ibid., 15.
8. For early date of the Jātakas see T.W. Rhys Davids, Buddhist India, p. 207.
9. Cf. Law, HPL, i, 30; Hopkins, CHI, i, 260, fn. 1. The most recent discussion of the question is to be found in the article of O. Fis'er AO, xxii, 238-9. assumed their present shape in a period posterior to the majority of the simple stories of the first and second volumes.\footnote{Ibid., xxii, 249; Rhys Davids, op. cit., p. 208.}

It has been recently suggested that the Jātakas represent a state of society which provided suitable conditions for trade, perhaps during the Sātavāhana period.\footnote{D. D. Kosambi, An Introduction to the Study of Indian History, pp. 259-60. Cf. Daniel H. H. Ingalls, JAOS, lxxvii, 223-4.} But the finds of punch-marked silver and copper coins coupled with a large number of iron objects, assigned to the period of the North Black Polished Ware (\textit{circa} 600-250 B.C.), clearly point to the definite beginnings of urban life\footnote{Rude beginnings of urban life, as will appear from recent excavations at Hastināpura and Katra in Mathura, may be traced earlier than 600 B.C.} and the rise of trade and commerce.\footnote{This line of study has to be pursued further; a comparison between the archaeological remains of the N.B.P. period and the contents of the early Pāli texts will not only help to establish the date of these literary sources on a firm footing but will add to our knowledge and understanding of the material life in pre-Mauryan times.} Besides, Kauṭilya’s regulations regarding industry and commerce, if true of Mauryan times, do presuppose some progress in such economic activities in the earlier period. Again, the Jātakas hardly refer to the trade and commerce of southern India, with which the Romans were in active intercourse under the Sātavāhanas. Nor do the Jātakas allude to so many guilds and occupations as we find in the Sātavāhana period.\footnote{Infra., Ch. VI.} Moreover, since the Buddhist birth stories are represented in the reliefs and sculptures of Śārīraka and Bhārhat in the second century B.C., they can be taken back at least two centuries earlier, especially in a country where old religious traditions continued to provide the motif for works of art till mediaeval times. Thus although the gāthās and past stories may be regarded as reflecting the state of affairs existing in the two or three centuries preceding the establishment of the Mauryan empire, for the purpose of our study those parts of the Jātakas which deal with the caṇḍālas may be regarded as later additions because the Jātaka references to these despised people are not corroborated fully by the brāhmanical texts of the pre-Mauryan period. We may also note that the long list of mixed castes given by Manu does not find its counterpart in the Jātakas.
There are greater chronological uncertainties in the case of the Jain sources, which have not been edited and studied as well as the Buddhist texts. It is held that the canonical works were first compiled somewhere towards the end of the fourth or the beginning of the third century B.C. But, dealing as they do with the life of Mahāvīra, they may be utilised for the pre-Mauryan period, from which they were not far removed in point of time.

Diverse opinions have been expressed on the authenticity of these literary sources, which are difficult to interpret in the absence of historical works or epigraphic records. There is a tendency to discard the brāhmanical works in favour of the Buddhist texts. It is said that the attempt of the Dharmaśāstras to fit the varṇas into fixed patterns seems to be artificial and speculative. Against this it is urged that what is common to a number of Dharmaśūtras must have some basis in fact. It is argued that such a charge used to be made against the scholastic writers of mediaeval Europe and has been rebutted by modern scholars. It will not be proper, however, to place absolute reliance upon either brāhmanical or non-brāhmanical sources. A correct picture of the social conditions of the pre-Mauryan period can be based only on a co-ordinated study of all kinds of texts. Unfortunately this is to be found neither in the Cambridge History of India, Vol. 1 nor in The Age of Imperial Unity, which

2. T. W. Rhys Davids, Dialogues of the Buddha, i, 286.

6. So far these sources have been studied only piecemeal. Jolly’s Hindu Law and Custom and the encyclopaedic work of Kane on the History of the Dharmaśāstra do not treat the contents of the law-books chronologically. Excellent monographs based on the Pāli sources by Fick, Rhys Davids, R. Mehta and A.N. Bose suffer from the same defect. J. C. Jain’s Life as Depicted in the Jain Canons lumps together all material without any regard to time and place. In spite of chronological treatment in some cases works on the Indian caste system hardly take into account non-brāhmanical sources.

7. Separate chapters (VIII-IX) are devoted to social conditions as known from early Buddhist literature and the Dharmaśūtras respectively.
tries to put together materials available in literary sources bearing on the period from 600 B.C. to A.D. 300, but leaves out of consideration the Dharmasūtras and the Grihyasūtras.\(^1\)

There can be no difficulty in accepting facts attested by all these sources; where such concord is wanting, materials furnished by Buddhist and Jain sources may be taken as reflecting more of actual conditions than the rules laid down in the Dharmasūtras. None of our sources, however, represent the view point of the śūdras and other submerged sections of society. While the Dharmasūtras emphasise the supremacy of the brāhmaṇas, the Buddhist and Jain sources emphasise the primacy of the kṣatriyas, only occasionally showing some lurking sympathy for the lower orders. Moreover the information gleaned from the former is generally limited to Northern India, but that from the latter to north-eastern India.

There is some direct information about the śūdras in the Dharmasūtras, a little in the early Pāli texts and still less in the Jain texts. Perhaps on account of the scantiness of such information it has been argued by Fick that except for the theoretical discussions nothing points to the real existence of the fourth caste, the śūdras, in the early Pāli texts.\(^2\) This view has been rightly questioned by Oldenberg.\(^3\) We can quote instances to show that a person was to be known and his status defined by the name of his caste. Thus the identity of an archer is enquired in terms of his being a kṣatriya, a brāhmaṇa, a vaisya or a śūdra.\(^4\) A common illustration provided by the Buddha in the course of his discourses is that a wise man is expected to know whether his lady-love is of the kṣatriya, brāhmaṇa, vaisya or śūdra class.\(^5\) Even T.W. Rhys Davids, who is inclined to reject the priestly evidence in toto, points out that in a general way the fourfold varṇa system in the Buddhist texts corresponds to the actual facts of life.\(^6\) All this establishes beyond doubt that the

---

1. Ch. XXI.
3. ZDMG, i, 286.
5. Digha N. i, 193; Majj. N., ii, 33 and 40.
6. Buddhist India, p. 54.
śūdras exist as a social class in the Buddhist texts, although their position and functions are not so sharply defined as in the brāhmanical laws. That the śūdras constituted the serving class was only implied in the texts of the later Vedic period. But during this period the Dharmasūtras made the explicit and emphatic statement that the duty of the śūdra was to serve the three higher varṇas, and thus to maintain his dependants.¹ He was expected to run his independent house, which he supported by various kinds of occupation. Gautama informs us that the śūdra could live by practising mechanical arts.² It seems that sections of the śūdra community worked as weavers, wood-workers, smiths, leather-dressers, potters, painters etc. Although these crafts are mentioned in the early Pāli texts,³ there is no indication of the varṇa of their followers. The gahapati⁴ (householder), who roughly corresponds to the vaiśya in the brāhmanical system, is described at one place as living by arts and crafts.⁵ If a man of substance could become a gahapati, it is possible that some of the well-to-do śūdra artisans such as the smith Cunda who served a sumptuous dinner to Gautama Buddha and his followers,⁶ or the conspicuously rich potter Saddālaputta, who was in possession of five hundred potter’s shops and a large number of potters working under him,⁷ were gahapatis. This may be also true of the head of the village of a thousand smiths, who gave his daughter in marriage to the Bodhisattva.⁸ Although the term gahapati is now here applied to such artisans, it is possible that some of them rose to this position by virtue of their wealth.

We cannot go into the history of crafts and craftsmen, which might well form the subject of a separate monograph. But certain broad points may be noticed. The artisan members of the śūdra varṇa played an important role in the agrarian

². śīlapaṇḍita. X. 60.
³. Mehta, Pre-Buddhist India, pp. 194-204.
⁴. Known as gābhāvai in the Jain texts.
⁸. Jāt., iii, 281.
economy of the pre-Mauryan period. Workers in metal not only made axes, hammers, saws, chisels etc., meant for the carpenters and smiths, but also supplied agriculture with ploughshares, spades and similar implements, which enabled the farmers to provide surplus food for people living in the towns. The urban life and the thriving trade and commerce, which appear for the first time in north-eastern India during this period, could not have been possible without considerable amount of commodity production by the artisans. In the principal towns the crafts were organised into guilds, the chiefs of which stood in a special relation to the king. Certain artisans were attached to the household of the king and enjoyed his patronage. According to the gloss on Pāṇini’s grammar these were known as royal artisans, of which the royal barber (rāja-nāpita) and the royal potter (rāja-kulāla) are especially mentioned. This is also corroborated by a later Jātaka story, which speaks of the royal potter (rāja-kumbhakāra) and the royal garland-maker (rāja-mālākāra). Some artisans were also attached to the seṭṭhis and gahapatis. We learn that a seṭṭhi had his own tailor (tunnakāra), who lived under his patronage and worked for his house. Mention is also made of the weavers of the gahapati, who supplied yarn to him. But the majority of the artisans were probably not attached to such masters; as instances of independent craftsmen we might cite the villages of the carpenters and smiths, or the artisans living in the towns. Possibly the king exercised some sort of loose control over the artisan villages through the patronage of their chief. Thus the jeṭṭhaka

1. Jāt., v, 45.
3. Big cities such as Sāvatthi were twenty in number, and six of them were considered important enough to be the scene of the Buddha’s passing away (Dīgha N., ii, 147).
4. Mrs. Rhys Davids, CHI, i, 206.
5. Vtūtī to Pā., VI. 2. 63.
7. Ibid., vi, 56.
8. gahapatikāsa tantusāyehi. Iīn., iii, 258-9. Obviously such a gahapati probably employed them for commodity production for trade.
10. Ibid., 281.
11. ’CHI, i, 208.
(head) of the village of a thousand smiths is called a favourite of the king (rājavarāhā). 1 There was no such control over the scattered families of artisans, who lived in the villages catering to the needs of the agriculturists. They are mentioned as grāmāsilpina by Pāṇini. 2 Probably every village had its potter, carpenter, smith, weaver and barber. According to Pāṇini there were two kinds of carpenters, the grāmataksa who worked for daily wages at the house of his clients in the village, and the kaustaksya who worked at his own residence 3 and was "an independent artisan, not particularly bound under engagement to any one." 4 A Jātaka gāthā refers to an itinerant smith, who carries his furnace wherever he is called to go. 5 The artisans owned their implements and in some cases had free access to materials. Thus we learn of a brahmanā carpenter, who gained his livelihood by bringing wood from the forest and making carts. 6 This may have been the case with the potter, who could obtain a free supply of clay and fuel, but not with the weavers and workers in metal. Nevertheless, by and large, those who were served by the artisans were not their masters, as was the case in Greece and Rome, where slaves were employed in handicrafts, 7 but just their clients. The only control exercised by the state over the artisans in general lay in the imposition of a kind of corvee. It was laid down that in lieu of taxes they would have to work for a day in a month for the king. 8 Otherwise the Dharmasastra rules give the impression that those śudras who worked as craftsmen and artisans were independent people, for these occupations are prescribed for them in case they fail to maintain themselves by service. 9

2. VI, 2.62.
3. Pā., V. 4. 95.
4. Gloss on Pā., V. 4. 95.
5. Jāt., vi, 189.
6. Ibid., iv, 207.
7. There is a reference to the craft of the home born slave in Diēka N., i, 51, but this may indicate domestic service. Another reference speaks of slaves and servants being engaged by a brahmanā in trade (Jāt., iv, 16).
The mass of the śūdra population seems to have been employed in agricultural operations. The Dharmasūtras assign agriculture to the vaiśyas, who were independent peasant proprietors paying a part of the produce as taxes to the state. But the fact that the śūdras had not to pay any land revenue shows that they were landless labourers. Āpastamba states that the śūdras, who live by washing the feet, are exempt from taxes. This would imply that non-serving śūdras could become taxpayers. But in an older manuscript of this law-book the term pādāvakātí does not occur, which suggests that it was inserted later to provide justification for the exemption of the śūdras. Generally therefore the śūdras possessed no taxable property in the form of land, and as such most of them had to work on the land of others. This is amply clear from a passage of the Majjhima Nikāya, which presents a classification of the earnings of the four varṇas. It informs us that the brāhmaṇa lives on charities, the kṣatriya on the use of the bow and the arrow, the vaiśya on agriculture and tending of cattle, and the śūdra on the use of the sickle and the carriage of crops on the pole hung over his shoulder.

Other references in the early Pāli texts speak not of the śūdras as such, but of the dāsas (slaves) and kammakaras (hired labourers) as being employed in agricultural operations. There can be little doubt that the landless śūdras were employed as kammakaras. There is evidence to show that the dāsas also mostly belonged to the śūdra varṇa. This can be deduced from the phrase suddo vā sudda-dāso vā, which is used by the Buddha to define the position of the śūdra after his enumeration of the first three varṇas. It would be wrong to translate the term suddadāso-vā as the slave of a workman. The crucial phrase is clearly an example of a case in apposition, and means the śūdra who is a slave. It is inconceivable that here the kṣatriyas, the brāhmaṇa-

4. MS. G according to Bühler’s classification.
5. suddassu sandhanam... asūtabhāvanī. Majj. N., ii. 180.
6. Dīgha N., i. 104.
7. T. W. Rhys Davids, SBB, ii. 128.
manas, and the setthis, who are elsewhere represented as owning slaves, should be left out and the sūdra should be singled out as owning slaves. Therefore Oldenberg is right in inferring that the statement in question does not make any distinction between the sūdra and the dāsa. It is significant that the earliest identification of the sūdra with the slave is found in an early Pāli text and not in the Dharmaśūtras, from which this position can be inferred only indirectly. It is only in the post-Mauryan period that Manu states this position in clear and strong words.

Slavery was not exclusively confined to the members of the sūdra varṇa. Even gāmabhajakas (village headmen), ministers, brāhmaṇas, kṣatriyas and men of high birth might be reduced to slavery. In any case the number of such people cannot have been considerable, the mass of the slave labour being supplied by the sūdra varṇa. Slavery arising out of debt, purchase, free will and fear can be rather expected in the case of the people of the lower orders than in that of the members of the higher varṇas. For example, Isidāśi, the daughter of a cart-driver, was carried off as a slave by a merchant on account of her father’s failure to pay his debts. But it is indicative of the limited number of slaves during this period that in the Jātakas there is no mention of slaves captured in war.

While some of the slaves, especially women, were employed in domestic service, others were engaged in agriculture. The slaves and hired labourers worked even on smaller holdings, but more often on larger plots. In the early Pāli texts there

1. ZDMG, li, 286. N.K. Dutt writes that in the Buddhist literature the slaves are nowhere called by the name of sūdra (op. cit., p. 272). This case provides a clear implication to the contrary.
3. Ibid., vi, 389.
5. Bose, Social and Rural Economy of N. India, ii, 423.
7. s. v. Isidāśi Theri, Pāli Dict. of Proper Names, i, 323.
10. CHI, i, 207; Vin., I, 240. cf. Śūya, II, 1.13 which refers to both large and small fields. The dāsas and kammakaras of the Śakyas and Koliyas were employed in irrigating their fields (Jāt., v, 413). are at least two examples of big farms in Magadha, each of a thousand karīsas (8000 acres according to Childers,)\(^1\) and of another field in Kāśi being ploughed with five hundred ploughs,\(^2\) all owned by the brāhmaṇas. There is also reference to a village trader depositing five hundred ploughs with a town merchant, showing thereby that he possessed large landed property.\(^3\) Five hundred or a thousand may be conventional numbers, but they provide an indication of the tendency towards consolidation of holdings, which reached its climax with the state control of agriculture in the Mauryan period. It is obvious that larger holdings could not have been worked without a considerable number of dāsas and kammakaras.

We have hardly any idea about the numerical strength of slaves and hired labourers in relation to their employers.
Even in the case of Attica, where statistics are available, it is very difficult to reach agreement on the proportion of the free to slave population.\(^4\) But the paucity of data in the case of India makes it much more difficult to obtain any definite information on this point. A later sutta states that few are those who abstain from accepting male and female slaves.\(^5\)
The brāhmaṇical theory that the śūdras are meant for the service of the three higher varṇas is broadly reflected in the employment of slaves and labourers by the brāhmaṇas,\(^6\) the kṣatriyas,\(^7\) and the seṭṭhis and the gahapatis.\(^8\) According to the Dharmasūtras the brāhmaṇas could exchange slaves for slaves but could not sell them.\(^9\) All this would suggest that slavery prevailed on a considerable scale, but in any case it cannot be compared to the position in Attica where in the 5th century B. C. slaves comprised about a third of the total population.\(^10\)

1. Jāt., iii, 293 ; iv, 276.
7. Jāt., v, 413.
The Dharmasūtras throw some light on the living conditions of the members of the śūdra varṇa. Gautama provides that, the śūdra servant should use the shoes, umbrellas, garments and mats, which are thrown away by the people of the higher varṇas. The same picture is obtained from a Jātaka story, which informs us that clothes gnawed by rats were intended for the use of the dāsas and the kammakaras. Gautama further adds that the remnants of food are meant for the śūdra servant. The Apastamba Dharmasūtra instructs the pupil to put down the remains of food left in his dish either near an uninitiated ārya or near a śūdra slave belonging to his teacher, which clearly implies that the remains of food were to be eaten by the śūdra servant. This is also attested by the Hiranyakasīṅ Gṛhyasūtra, which lays down that, in a three-day vow undertaken after the completion of his studies, a student should not give the leavings of his food to a śūdra. Pāṇini refers to special terms applied to food leavings, which were presumably given to domestic servants. We learn from a passage of the Vinaya Pitaka that the sick wife of a merchant preserved the ghee which she had vomited, for the use of the dāsas or the kammakaras who might apply it to their feet or burn it in a lamp. It is also recorded that five hundred people accompanied the Order of the monks led by the Buddha in the hope of eating the remnants of their food. All this would show that there was nothing unusual about the śūdra servants eating the remnants of the food of their masters.

Apastamba expresses the noble sentiment that a person should stint himself, his wife and children but not his slave who works for him, but we can hardly believe that this maxim

1. jṛṇāntyupānaichatravāsaḥ kārī āni. X. 58.
3. X. 59.
5. I. 2.3.1-2 (SBE tr.).
7. varam etam sahipī dāsānaṃ vā kammakaranaṃ vā pādabhaṅjanaṃ vā pādiṣṭakaṇe vā āśīttaṃ. Vin., i, 272.
8. Vin., i, 220.
was taken very seriously, though it shows that in the better households slaves were well fed and kindly treated. The slaves and hired labourers may not have been starved, but in general the food served to them was definitely inferior to that of their masters. Thus a brāhmaṇa monk boasts that even his slaves and servants eat rice and meat, and use clothes and ointment made in Kāśi,¹ which shows that ordinarily such people were given inferior food and dress. A similar claim is made by the Buddha, who says that while in the houses of others the dāsas and kammakaras are fed on rice with sour gruel, in the house of his father they receive rice, meat and milk.² That the slave received a fixed type of food is clear from the repeated use of the abusiv ephrase dāsa-paribhoga.³ Sour gruel was the food of a poor man working for wages.⁴ A Jātaka story refers to a potter’s hireling, who after a full day’s work with the clay and the wheel “sat all clay-besmeared on a bundle of straw eating balls of barley groat dipped in a little soup.”⁵

The phrase that a person lived a hard life on a workman’s wages commonly occurs in the Jātakas.⁶ At one place the workman, who is the Boddhisatta, bewails his lot in these words: “I get a māsaka or a half-māsaka for my wages and can hardly support my mother.”⁷ The daily earning of a grass-cutter is mentioned as two māsakas, which he gets in the market in return for the grass mown.⁸ The māsaka of this period was probably a punch-marked copper coin. According to the commentaries of the early Pāli texts this coin occupied such a low position in the scale of currency that it was considered next to nothing.⁹ The māsaka of the later period was one-sixteenth in value of the silver paṇa,¹⁰ but we are not certain whether this represents its

¹ dāsakammakaraṇi na sālimāṇsodananā bhūjantī, kāśikavatthām nāśentī. Jāt., i. 355 (present story).
² kanajakam bhojanaṃ diyyati. Ang. N., i, 145.
³ Ibid., i, 451, 459.
⁴ Ibid., iii, 406-7.
⁵ Ibid., vi, 372.
⁶ pāreṣam bhatiṃ kātā kicchena jīvati. Jāt., i, 475; ii, 139; iii, 325, 406, 444.
⁷ Jāt., iii, 326.
⁸ nagarādāvare vikīmate māsake gaheto. Jāt., iii, 130.
⁹ s. v. māsaka, Pāli-Eng. Diec.
¹⁰ S. K. Chakravorty, Ancient Indian Numismatics, pp. 56.
relation to the silver pāṇa in pre-Mauryan times. During this period the māṣaka counted in value only when it amounted to to five in number,¹ but even this paltry sum was not given to a wage-earner. Therefore it is not possible to make much of the story in the Gaṇgamāla Jātaka,² in which a water-carrier proposes to enjoy a city festival along with his wife with the meagre savings of one māṣaka, each contributing half of it. It is characteristic of the didactic nature of the story that the water-carrier refuses to part with his petty sum of a half-māṣaka even when he is offered unlimited wealth by the Bodhisatta king Udaya. Ultimately he gets half the kingdom, but realises the evils of desire and becomes an ascetic to achieve its final extinction. The evident moral is that a person could remain satisfied even with half a māṣaka, although it would be ideal to do even without that. As the gāthā says: “Little desire is not enough, and much but brings pain”³. On the whole the estimate of Fick that wages of the day-labourers in the Jātakas were hardly sufficient to enable them to eke out their livelihood seems to be fair. This may well apply to large sections of the śūdras, who worked as hired labourers.

There does not seem to be much difference between the various sub-sections of the serving population. A Jain text places slaves, servants (pessas) and beasts of burden in the same category.⁴ The Pāli texts make frequent mention of the dāsas, pessas and kammakaras.⁵ The pessas we remessengers or servants, who were sent on minor errands. As noticed earlier, there was no difference either in the nature of work⁶ assigned to the dāsas and the kammakaras or in the type of food given to them.⁷ It will be shown later that if they committed offences they were subjected to the same punishments. There is nothing to show that socially the hired labourer was classed beneath

---

4. Sūya., I, 4.2.12.
5. Dīgha N., i, 141; Aṅg. N. ii, 207-8; iii 37; iv, 266, 393.
7. Jāt., iii, 300.
the domestic slave. Perhaps the difference between the dāsas and the kammakaras lay in the nature of their relation with their masters. In contrast to the kammakara, the slave was regarded as the property of the master and could be inherited and shared. The absolutely servile status of the slave was indicated by his distinguishing mark, which seems to have been a shaved head with a topknot. At one place, however, along with the dāsas the kammakaras also are reckoned among the property of a sēṭṭhi. This indicates the tendency to reduce the hired labourer to the status of a slave. A Jātaka story shows that while the slaves lived in the house of their masters, the kammakaras went to their lodgings in the evening. But we do not know how far this was a general practice. Obviously the life of the hireling was sometimes harder than that of the slave. He could not enjoy that security of livelihood which was assured to the slave or the permanent domestic servant. Gautama lays down that the ārya, under whose protection the sūdra places himself, should support him if he becomes unable to work. But the practice did not conform to this precept, for a gāthā states that people throw away the outworn servant like a she-elephant.

There seems to be some difference between the kammakara and the bhaṭṭaka (wage earner). In the Vinaya Pitaka the kammakara is defined as a bhaṭṭaka who is āhataka. The authors of the Pali-English Dictionary interpret the term āhataka as 'beaten'. This would mean that the kammakara is a worker who can be beaten—a definition which sounds curious and is not given even in the case of a dāsa. Perhaps the term āhataka is not cognated with the Sanskrit word āhata, but with the term āhata,

1. References quoted in CHI, i, 203, fn. 8 do not support this view.
2. Sutta-nipāta, 769; Āvāraṇa, verse 6; Udana, III. 17; Sākyagālem, III. 7.
5. Ibid., iii, 129.
6. ...attana vaisanaḥ kānāmaḥ antvā. Jātī, iii, 445.
7. CHI, i, 205.
10. Also written as bhaṭṭaka.
11. This derivation is adopted in s.v. āhataka, Pāli-Eng. Dic. which means taken, seized or brought. This would suggest that the kammakaras were attached to their master in a special way. They were probably brought under his control either on account of their failure to pay debts or owing to having their habitations on his land. They seem to have been in the position of semi-slaves, who could be sometimes treated even as an item of property. Thus there is little evidence for the view that in the pre-Mauryan period the kammakaras were free labourers who entered into contracts as to their work and wages and that in the case of disputes wages were settled by experts. This view better represents the position of the bhṛtakas, whose relation with their employers was comparatively free from elements of subjection. The bhṛtaka lived on wages, i.e. bhṛtī, which is mentioned by Pāṇini either in the sense of service for hire or simply as wages. It seems that the bhṛtaka was hired for a particular period. According to an early Jain text there were four kinds of bhṛtakas: (i) the divasabhāyahā who worked on daily wages, (ii) the jattabhāyahā who was engaged for the duration of a journey, (iii) the uccattabhāyahā who was employed on contract to complete the work in an agreed time, (iv) the kakhālabhāyahā (such as an earth digger) who was paid according to the amount of work done. As workers on contract some artisans may have been also employed as bhṛtakas. A later Jātaka distinguishes between the bondsmen (attano purisā) who are asked to keep watch over the various portions of their master’s rice fields, and a bhata who gets a salary (bhati) for the same work and is liable to the payment of compensation in the case of any damage to the crops. A gāthā states that the purisa should always work for the interest of the person in whose house he is fed. The use of the phrase dāsakammakarapurisa shows that the bondsman served either as

1. An alternative derivation from the term āhitaka (i.e. pledged) is not favoured by grammatical rules.
2. Bandyopadhyaya, Eco. Life and Progress in Anc. India, p. 94.
3. Pā., I. 3.36; III. 2.22.
4. Ibid., V. 1. 80.
5. Thānāṅga, IV. 271 with the comm. of Abhayadevasūri.
a slave or a hired labourer.\footnote{Jāt., iv; Āṅg. N., i, 206; Vin., i, 240.} and that there was not much distinction between these different types of workers.

We can have some idea of the economic position of the śudras from some rules governing the relations between the employers and the employees. It is characteristic of the predominantly agrarian and pastoral economy of the pre-Mauryan period that the rules of this kind refer to the relations between the master on the one hand and his agricultural labourers and herdsman on the other. It is laid down by Āpastamba that, if the servant in tillage gives up his work, he shall be given physical punishment.\footnote{Ibid., 3.} The same provision applies to the herdsman who abandons tending the cattle;\footnote{Ibid., 4.} it is further provided that in such a case the cattle shall be entrusted to some other herdsman.\footnote{Ibid., 6.} If the loss of the cattle is due to the negligence of the herdsman, he is held responsible for it.\footnote{XII, 16-7.} Gautama does not refer to these provisions, but he ordains that the master of the cattle or his herdsman, as the case might be, shall be called to account for any damage caused to anyone by the cattle in his charge.\footnote{Dh. S., XXVIII. 24 with Haradatta’s comm.} None of these lawgivers state the obligations of the master towards his herdsman or agricultural labourers. Thus, compared to their masters, these wage-earners were placed in a disadvantageous position.

The economic disabilities imposed on the śudras by the Dharmasūtras shed further light on their material condition. Reference has been made to the imposition of compulsory service on the artisans for a day in a month by the king. Gautama lays down that in order to defray the expenses of the wedding of a girl, and when engaged in a rite enjoined by the sacred law, a person could take money by fraud or force from a śudra.\footnote{Dharmatrasāmyoge ca śudrāt. Gaut.} Members of the vaiśya, the kṣatriya and perhaps of the brāhmaṇa varṇas, who did not observe the rites and duties of their class, could also be subjected to this procedure in the order of their social status, but only when a śūdra was not available. This law, which provides a license for the extortions from the śūdra community by the members of the upper varās, is not to be found in any other Dharmasūtra, although it has its parallel in the Manu Smṛti. It may be a later insertion, which reflects the tendency of a brāhmaṇical school to exploit the śūdra to the full.

The law of inheritance contains discriminatory provisions relating to the share of the son of a śūdra wife. According to Baudhāyana in the case of issues from the wives of different castes, four shares would go to the brāhmaṇa, three to the kṣatriya, two to the vaiśya and one to the śūdra son. In such a case Vasiṣṭha provides for the shares of the sons of only the three higher varṇas, leaving out the śūdra son. He quotes the opinion of others as stating that the śūdra son may be regarded as a member of the family but not an heir, a provision which is confined by Baudhāyana to the case of the nisāda son of a brāhmaṇa father and śūdra mother. Gautama provides for the disinheritance of the śūdra son of a brāhmaṇa in very clear and emphatic terms. According to him if the brāhmaṇa died without male issue, though his son by the śūdra wife might be obedient like a pupil, yet he could receive only a provision for maintenance out of the estate of his deceased father. Thus it would appear that of the authors of the Dharmasūtras only Baudhāyana provides for the share of the śūdra son of a brāhmaṇa, Vasiṣṭha and Gautama being opposed to this. Possibly the liberalism of Baudhāyana was due to his connections with the south, where brāhmaṇism had not penetrated deeply. Further, the provisions show that they related only to the

1. anyatātraśūdrād bahupaiṣorhinakarmān. Ibid., XXVIII. 25 with Haradatta’s comm.
3. Bau. Dh. S., II. 2.3.16.
4. Vas. Dh. S., XVIII. 47.50.
5. śudrāputra eva śaṣṭha bhavatityahuritvete dāyūdabāndhavaḥ. Vas. Dh. S., XVII. 38.
7. Ibid., II. 2.3.16.
sūdra son of a brāhmaṇa. It is not clear whether such rules of inheritance applied to the sūdra sons of the kṣatriya and the vaiśya, although this is very probable. There is no corroborative evidence in the light of which the actual operation of these rules can be known. At any rate these could affect only a fringe of the sūdra population, for the regular marriage of sūdra women with persons of higher varṇas was not a widespread practice.

In an appraisal of the general economic position of the sūdras during the pre-Mauryan period, a special note has to be taken of their characterization as the serving class, which was first clearly stated during this time. It was this function of service which imparted homogeneity to the otherwise heterogeneous elements of that varṇa. As members of the serving class, along with the vaiśya peasants, the sūdras performed the role of the primary producers, and thus provided the material foundations for the growth of society. As agricultural ‘labourers’ they helped to open to cultivation the thickly wooded areas of Kośala and Magadha, which in the texts are referred to as being divided into large and small holdings worked by slaves and hired labourers. As will be noticed later, Kauṭilya advocated the policy of employing sūdra labour for the breaking of virgin soil in the new settlements. Further, as artisans, the sūdras contributed to technological development and produced marketable commodities, which led to the rise of numerous towns with their thriving trade and commerce.

But the sūdras did not enjoy the same standards of living as the members of the higher varṇas, who employed them. Repeatedly in the Pāli texts the khattiya, the brāhmaṇa and the gahapati are called mahāśāla (opulent), implying thereby that the dāsas, pessas, kammakaras, purisas and bhatakas were not in that fortunate position. Some of the rich sūdra artisans

1. It was laid down by Gautama that the vaiśya and the sūdra should make their gains by labour. nirvāppi vaiśyaśuddreyoh. Gaut. Dh. S., X. 42.

3. Aṅg. N., iv, 239; Jāt. i, 49. Literally the term means ‘having great halls’. Phrases of similar import for indicating rich people are even now used in popular parlance in Bihār.
might be prosperous gahapatis, but in a predominantly agrarian economy, land being mostly in the hands of the brāhmaṇaś, the kṣatriyaś and the seṭṭhis, most of the śudras had to live on wages in the fixation of which they had no voice. It is said that the great mass of the people were well-to-do peasantry or handicraftsmen, mostly with land of their own. This may apply to the vaiśya or the gahapati class but not to the śudras, who had to live by working on the land of others. They were condemned to this position not simply because of their birth, but because of their birth in poor families. This point is clearly underlined in the course of a Buddhist argument to disprove the brāhmaṇa’s claim to supremacy. It is said that, if the śudra grew wealthy, he could engage not only another śudra as his servant, but also another kṣatriya, brāhmaṇa or vaiśya. Normally in such cases, which would be few, the contradiction between the low social status and the high economic position of a person could be resolved by raising him in the social scale. In later times such a policy was practised by the brāhmaṇas in assimilating the foreign ruling chiefs to the kṣatriya fold. It is possible, therefore, that those śudras who were favoured by fortune could rise to a high social status.

As producing masses the śudras correspond to the slaves and helots in contemporary Greek city states. Theoretically just as the Greek citizens could claim the service of their unfree men, so also the Indian dvijas (twice-born) and āryas could claim the labour-power of the śudras. But in several respects the economic position of the śudras was different. Neither the śudra agricultural labourers nor the śudra artisans, especially the latter, were so completely at the mercy of their employers as the slaves of Greece and Rome. Unlike the slave in Greece, the śudra

1. Fick, op. cit., p. 119. According to Gautama (X. 5-6) agriculture, trade and usury are lawful for a brāhmaṇa provided he does not carry on the work himself.
2. For instance see Fis’er, "The Problem of the Seṭṭhi in Buddhist Jātakas", AO, xxii, 238-265.
3. Rhys Davids, Buddhist India, p. 102.
5. An exception is to be made in the case of the Cretan agricultural slave who could own property, in which the dowry rights of the female slave were protected. Westermann, op. cit., p. 16.
held property, not sufficient enough to be taxable, but subject to some other liabilities. Thus the law imposed on him the obligation to maintain his master of a higher varna by drawing upon his savings, if the latter fell on evil days. It was further laid down that the vaisya and the sudra should overcome their misfortunes by means of their property. The use of the phrase dasa-bhoga shows that even the slave held property, though to hold it may have required the consent of his master. Perhaps on account of these differences the varna system, which mainly rested on the sudra class as its chief source of labour-power, proved to be a more effective organization of production than slavery. Though functioning in an evidently larger area and population than those of Greece, it never felt the necessity of making the sudras work under the same conditions as the slaves and helots.

The politico-legal status of the sudras during this period seems to be a counterpart of their economic position. In contrast to their importance in later Vedic polity they lost their place in the political organization of the period. According to Apastamba the king could appoint only the aiyas, i.e. the members of the first three varnas, as officials in charge of the villages and towns. Lesser officers serving under them were also required to fulfil the same qualifications.

Apastamba also lays down that the king's court should be adorned by pure and truthful aiyas, who were to act as the councillors and judges of the king. In these references the term a r y a is rightly interpreted as the member of the first three varnas. No sudra was ever regarded as an aiy, any more than he could be 'reborn'. But it is wrong to think that even during this period the use of the term ārya indicates racial distinction.1 Thus the term ārya-kṛta in Pāṇini2 evidently means one who is made free.3 It is stated in a Buddhist text that among the Kāmbojas and Yavanas the āryas become dāsas and the dāsas become āryas,4 which clearly shows that the āryas were free, in contrast to the dāsas who were unfree. Therefore the political distinction between the āryas and the āţudra seems to have been of the same type as that between the citizen and the non-citizen in Greece and Rome. Since the āţudra was considered unfree, it was not thought proper to associate him with the work of administration. It would thus appear that the lower classes had no influence in the affairs of the states of the time. Thus a Jain source mentions various categories of kṣatriyas and brāhmaṇas attending the assembly of the king, but does not speak of the gahapatis (i.e. vaisyas) or the āţudras.5 It seems that normally even the vaisyas could not be appointed as councillors, although according to the Pāli texts the seṭṭhis, who received the setṭhichatta (the canopy of a seṭṭhi) from the king,6 may have been given some administrative functions. A Jātaka informs us that a tailor's son was made treasurer (bhāṇḍāgārika),7 but such instances are rare.

2. kṣatriya bāhuviṛyaṇa taredāpadamātmanah dhanena vaisyāśūdrau. Vas. Dh. S. XXVI.16.
5. Ibid., II. 10.26.5.
8. Hopkins, CHI, i, 240.

It is said that one of the most powerful dynasties of this period was of āţudra extraction and that the āţudras acquired supreme power in the lower Gaṅgā valley.8 These statements can be considered true only in so far as they indicate the low birth of the Nanda rulers. They should not be taken to mean that political power passed into the hands of the āţudra community; for there is nothing to show that the rise of the Nandas put an end to the political disabilities of the āţudra.

As to their role in the republican governments of this period, it has been rightly said that the "ruling assembly in the

1. Ibid.
3. Agrawala, op.cit., p. 79.
4. Digha N., ii, 149.
5. Sūryaśāstra, III.1.9.
6. Fis'et, AO, xii, 261.
7. Jāt., iv, 43.
Saṃgha-Gaṇa consisted of a kṣatriya aristocracy ranking higher in the social scale than the brāhmaṇas and the gāhapatis, not to speak of inferior classes. On the basis of a passage from the Gautama Dharmasūtra Jayaswal says that the śūdra could be a member of the paura (relating to the town or capital) body which was consulted by the king. Assuming that the paura was a corporate body, Jayaswal's interpretation in the case of the śūdra is not borne out by the commentary of Maskarin, who explains the term paura as samānavadā, i.e. an inhabitant of the same place.

As regards the right to appear as witnesses in the law courts, Baudhāyana extends this privilege to the members of all the varṇas with certain exceptions. He does not debar the śūdra from acting as a witness in the cases of the higher varṇas,—a provision which is also noticeable in the law-book of Vasiṣṭha. According to Gautama the śūdras could be summoned as witnesses, but in the opinion of his commentators this eventuality could occur only when the twice-born with the requisite qualifications were not available. It is not clear whether this relates to their presence as witnesses in the cases of the twice-born or in their own cases. Probably it refers to the former situation. Vasiṣṭha, however, clearly states that a twice-born of the same varṇa can appear as a witness for men of his own class, good śūdras for good śūdras and men of low birth for similar people. Good śūdras were evidently those who strictly followed the brāhmaṇical precepts regarding their duties. This would suggest that bad śūdras were not to be entertained as witnesses in the suits of good śūdras. Thus the later authors of the Dharmasūtras, i.e. Gautama and Vasiṣṭha, exhibit the tendency to exclude the śūdra witnesses from the cases of the higher varṇas. We have no means of finding out whether this discrimination was observed, but it is in keeping with the spirit of the varṇa legislation which pervaded the Dharmasūtras. It may be noted, however, that in the taking of testimony in Greece during this period the slave might be subjected to interrogation under the use of the bastinado or the rack, but such cruel measures for extracting confessions are not prescribed in the Dharmasūtras.

Gautama lays down that members of the various castes, and guilds of cultivators, traders, herdsmen, moneylenders and artisans could administer their affairs according to their respective customs, provided they did not override the dharma law. In other words those sections of the śūdras who were organised into guilds of artisans or castes could follow their own rules in the administration of their internal affairs. But if they were involved in civil or criminal suits with the members of the other varṇas, they might be subjected to legal discriminations. As noticed earlier, in civil law the śūdra son of a brāhmaṇa father could only claim either the smallest share in inheritance or no share at all.

In criminal cases also the Dharmasūtras provide no equality before the law. According to the law of Gautama if a brāhmaṇa abused a kṣatriya or a vaiśya, he would have to pay a fine, but if he abused a śūdra, he would go scot-free. Further, if the śūdra intentionally reviled the twice-born man by criminal abuse, or criminally assaulted him with blows, he was liable to be deprived of the limb with which he offended. Aśiṣtaṁba bluntly states that, if the śūdra abuses a law-abiding ārya, his tongue should be perforated. Penances provided for the expiation of the sins of abusing respectable persons and speaking minor untruths also discriminate against the śūdra, who was ordered to fast for seven days in such cases; on the other hand a member of the first three varṇas had merely to abstain from milk, pungent condiments and salt for three days only. And finally Āpastamba and Gautama lay down that, if in conversation, sitting, lying down or on the road, the śūdra assumed a position equal to that of the twice-born man, he should be flogged.

6. jihvāchchedanam śūdrasya āryam dhārmikam èkrotañah.
7. This is also prescribed for women. Áp. Dhs. I.9.26.4.

Laws relating to adultery provide the most severe punishment for the śūdra. Āpastamba lays down that, if a śūdra commits adultery with an āryā, i.e. a female member of the first three varṇas, he should be put to death, while the woman might be purified by a penance if no child was born from their adulterous intercourse. But, according to the same authority, if an ārya commits the same offence with the śūdra woman, he should be banished. In the case of theft, the law, as laid down by Gautama, imposes the smallest fine upon the śūdra, which increases if the offender belongs to a higher varṇa. Thus, if the śūdra is required to pay eight times the value of the stolen property, the brāhmaṇa has to pay sixty-four times. While it may indicate the former’s inability to pay higher fines, the law presupposes a higher standard of conduct on the part of the members of the higher varṇas, who were little expected to commit thefts. This is in keeping with the provision that only members of the first three varṇas should be appointed officials, one of whose chief functions was to protect the people against thieves.

So far as the operation of these criminal laws is concerned, a passage from the Majjhima Nikāya shows that in cases of adultery and theft the same punishment applied to the offender, irrespective of his varṇa. Therefore the discriminatory laws of the Dharmasūtras in this regard need not be taken too seriously.

1. Ibid., I.9.26.3.
2. vāci pathi layāyāṃsana iti samibhavato devatādanan. Āp. Dh. S., II. 10.27.15; Gaut. Dh. S., XII. 7.
4. Ibid., II. 10.27.10.
5. nāya āryah śūdreyām. Āp. Dh. S., II. 10.27.8.
8. evam sante tame cattāro vappā samasamā honti. ii, 88.
But the non-brāhmanical sources show that the offending dāsas, kammakaras and other classes of workers were subjected to corporal punishments by their masters. Thus we can cite two instances of beating, in which the victims are female slaves.1 In one case the offence is the neglect of work2 and in another the failure to bring her wages back to her master.3 Although there is mention of a slave who was petted and permitted to learn writing and handicrafts, he lived under the perpetual fear of getting 'beaten, imprisoned, branded and fed on slave's fare'4 at the slightest fault.

Corporal punishment was, however, not only confined to the dāsas, who were not sui juris. Along with them the pessas and the kammakaras are frequently described in the Buddhist dialogues as working under the king harried by stripes and fear, weeping with tears on their faces.5 A simile from a Jain text informs us that the presyas (messengers or servants) are made to work by being beaten with sticks.6 Such being the treatment of workers who seem to have committed no fault, the fate of the guilty can hardly be expected to be better. That the smallest offence of the wage-earners was visited with the most severe punishments forms the subject of the following passage from the Sūyagātāṃ: "A man will (occasionally) severely punish even the smallest offence of his domestics, viz., a slave or messenger or hired servant or vassal (bhāgilla-bhāgika)7 or parasite; e.g. punish him, pull out his hair, beat him, put him in irons, in fetters, in stocks, into prison, screw up in a pair of shackles (his hands and feet) and break them, cut off his hands or feet or ears or nose or lips or head or face (?),8 pierce his feet,

1. CHI, i, 205.
2. Ibid.
3. Tāt., i, 4°2.
4. Ibid., i, 451.
5. dāvds-tajjāt bhoya-tajjitā assumukhā rudamānā parikammānā karonti. Majj. N., i, 344; Saññ. N., i, 76; Aṅg. N., ii, 207-8; iii, 172; cf. Diṅga N., i, 141.
6. Sūyagātāṃ, I. 52.5.
7. One who gets the sixth part of the products (e.g. of agriculture), of the work for which he is hired. SBE, xlv, 374, fn. 9.
8. Jacobi finds it difficult to translate the two words vegacakahāya and aṅgaṭṭahāya. Ibid., 375, fn. 1.
tear out his eyes, teeth, tongue, hang him, brush him, whirl him round, impale him, lacerate him, pour acids (in his wounds), belabour him with cutting-grass, bind him to a lion's tail (!), or a bull's tail, burn him in a wood on fire, let him be devoured by crows and vultures, stop his food and drink, keep him a prisoner for life, let him die any of these horrid deaths."

The above passage describes the conduct of the unrighteous people, who were evidently outside the fold of Jainism, and therefore may not be free from an element of exaggeration. But it undoubtedly shows that the master inflicted different kinds of cruel punishments not only on his slaves but on various other categories of workers employed by him. All this would suggest that corporal punishment for the offending members of the serving class was not uncommon though the artisan members of the śūdra varṇa were perhaps free from this humiliation. In Greece also the slave might pay for minor misdeeds with corporal punishment, but the free man was exempt from this indignity.

For the first time the Dharmasūtra law introduces different rates of wergeld for the members of the different varṇas, there being no such distinction in Vedic times. Three of them lay down that for slaying a kṣatriya the offender should give one thousand cows, for slaying a vaiśya one hundred cows and for slaying a śūdra ten cows, with a bull in every case. Baudhāyana says that the amount should go to the king, but

1. jā viṣya se bāhiriyā pariṣa bhanavai, tāṁ jahāddāte i vā pesa i vā bhayae i vā bhāille i vā kumukkure i vā bhogaparise i vā tesim pi ya naṁ annayuṃprasī ahālahugamśi avacāhavapi savyaṃ ça ganyoṃ dandamś nivattai. tāṁ jahāmdāṃ dandēhe, imaṁ mushehe; imaṁ taṭheha, imaṁ taḷheha, imaṁ aśvaśabandhaṃ kareha, imaṁ niyalaśabandhaṃ kareha, imaṁ hāṭaḥśabandhaṃ kareha, imaṁ cārāgaśabandhaṃ kareha, imaṁ niyalajyala saṃkṛddhyamadiyam kareha, imaṁ hāṭachinnamāṃ kareha, imaṁ pāyacchinnaṃ kareha, imaṁ kaṇṇachinnamāṃ kareha, imaṁ nakkasṭha-īśamukhamayam kareha, veyasocchāḥyaṁ aṅgacchāhiyam pakkhaḥpriddhyam kareha, imaṁ noyamuddāsīyam kareha, imaṁ daryayuddāsīyam vasanappūṭdyam jībhappūṭdyam olambhyam kareha, ghasīyaṃ kareha, gholiyaṃ kareha, sālāyaṃ kareha, sālabhśniyam kareha, khārabattiyaṃ kareha, vaṭṭhatiyaṃ kareha, sīhapucchhiyam kareha, vasabhaṇḍacyaṃ kareha, davaṇḍidaddha- yantar kāgranumakāhīyaṃ bhattaptāniruddegaṃ imaṁ jāvaṭṭiyaṃ saśabandaṃ kareha, imaṁ annayareṇa asuhodyam kumāreṇa māreha. Śāyagodha, II. 2.20. Jacobi’s tr., Śīya., II. 2.63, SBE, xvi, 374-5.

2. Westermann, op.cit.p. 17.

Āpastamba seems to favour the brāhmaṇa in his place. In any case the amount is not to be paid to the relations of the murdered man. The nature of penances provided for the expiation of the sin of murder also varies according to the varṇa of the murdered person. According to Gautama, for killing a kṣatriya the guilty man should maintain the normal vow of continence for six years, for killing a vaiśya for three years, and for killing a śūdra for one year. Vasiṣṭha, however, increases the term of the penance by three years in the case of a vaiśya, and by two years in the cases of a kṣatriya or a śūdra. But the Śāma-vidhāna Brāhmaṇa, which is regarded by Burnell, a work of this period, provides the same penance for the expiation of the sin of killing the members of the first three varṇas, prescribing a different penance for the sin of killing a śūdra. This may suggest that the first distinction in respect of the wergeld was made between the śūdras and the traivarnikas. Later this was pushed to extremes by prescribing different rates of fine for the murder of the members of the different varṇas. There must be some basis for the law of the wergeld, which is found in most of the Dharmasūtras. Different rates of wergeld varying according to class are found not only in later societies but also in the famous code of Hammurabi. But how far and in what ways such a law was observed in the case of the śūdra cannot be determined in the absence of the court decisions on this point.

What is most shocking to the modern democratic mind is the fact that Āpastamba and Baudhāyana provide the same penance for killing a śūdra as for killing a flamingo, a bhāsa, a peacock, a brāhmaṇī duck, a pracalāka, a crow, an owl, a frog, a muskrat, a dog etc. This extreme view, which attaches the same importance to the life of a śūdra as to that of an animal or a bird, may not have found universal acceptance, for the same lawgivers prescribe

1. I.6.24.1 with Haradatta's comm.
2. XXII. 14-16.
3. XX.31-33.
4. Śām. Br., Introd., p. X.
5. Śām. Br., I. 7.5-6.
7. It is interesting to note that the Śām. Br., I.7.7, prescribes almost the same penance for killing a śūdra as for killing a cow.
a wergeld of ten cows and a bull for killing a śudra. But there is no doubt that the early brāhmanical law attached very little importance to the life of a śudra.

Thus, with the complete substitution of society based on varṇa for tribal society during post-Vedic times, the members of the śudra varṇa ceased to have any place in the work of administration. They were probably excluded from all administrative appointments and subjected to corporal punishments for minor offences. In a way this was natural, for they could not generally afford to pay fines. The penalties laid down by the rules of penances and criminal law in respect of the śudras are indeed proportionately much higher than those prescribed for offences committed by the higher varṇas. But they at least imply that the śudra was invested with rights of person and property. He could not be killed with such impunity as a slave in Greece.

In the pre-Mauryan period the social position of the śudra also underwent a change for the worse. The lawgivers emphasised the old fiction that the śudra was born from the feet of the god, and apparently on this basis imposed on him numerous social disabilities in matters of company, food, marriage and education, amounting in several cases to his social boycott by the members of the higher varṇas in general and the brāhmaṇas in particular. It was laid down by Baudhāyaṇa that a śnātaka should not go on a journey with outcastes, a woman or with a śudra. Haradatta’s comment on a passage of Gautama states that the term śnātaka here means a brāhmaṇa or a kṣatriya, which implies that the rule did not apply to the vaiśya. Again, one of the rites essential for securing success was that the student desiring it should not talk to women and śudras. All association with the outcaste (patita), who is defined as the son begotten by a śudra on a female of an unequal caste (evidently higher),

2. Ghoshal, IC, xiv, 27.
4. II. 3.6.22.
5. Comm. to IX. 1, SBE, ii, 216.
was considered undesirable. These were obviously meant to reduce opportunities of social contact between the śūdra and the higher varṇas. In this respect the Dharmasūtras exhibit a clear tendency to widen the social distance between the brāhmaṇa and the śūdra. Āpastamba and Baudhāyana hold that, if a śūdra comes as a guest to a brāhmaṇa, he should be given some work to do and may be fed after the work had been performed. He should not be fed and received by the brāhmaṇa, but by his slaves, who should fetch rice from the royal stores for this purpose. According to Gautama a non-brāhmaṇa should not be the guest of a brāhmaṇa, except on the occasion of a sacrifice, when the vaiśyas and the śūdras should be fed with his servants for mercy’s sake. On the occasion of the Vaiśvadeva ceremony, however, even the caṇḍālas, dogs and crows should be given a portion, if they came at the end of the rite. It seems that this sacrifice, in which a number of deities were invited to partake of the offerings, retained some of the communal and tribal characteristics, which transcended the new class distinctions.

Gautama lays down that the śūdra should be shown consideration by a young person if he was eighty years old and lived in the same town. This implies that in showing respect to him premium was put on his age and not on his other qualities. In contrast to this it was obligatory on a śūdra to honour an ārya, although the later might be younger in age. Forms of salutation and greeting, which are regulated in the Dharmasūtras according to varṇa, reflect the servile position of the śūdra in society. It is laid down by Āpastamba that a brāhmaṇa should salute by stretching forward his right arm on a level with his ear, a kṣatriya holding it on a level with his breast, a vaiśya

2. Āp. Dh. S., II.2.4.20. These stores were to be maintained by the king for the brāhmaṇas.
3. V.43.
4. anyāmbhrtyaṁ saḥāntṣasṁartham. V.45.
5. Āp. Dh. S., II.4.9.5; Bau. Dh. S., II.3.5.11; Vas. Dh. S., XI.9.
6. VI.10.
7. avaroṣṭyaṁ śudreṇa. Ibid., VI.11.
holding it on a level with his waist, and a śūdra holding it on a level with his feet.\textsuperscript{1} Different terms are prescribed for making enquiries about the welfare and health of the members of the different varjās. Thus the term used for the health of a kṣatriya is ‘anāmaya’ and for that of a śūdra is ‘ārogya’.\textsuperscript{2} It is further provided that in greeting a kṣatriya or a vāisyā a person should use pronouns and not their names,\textsuperscript{3} which implies that only the śūdra could be addressed by his name, the position of the twice-born classes being too high for such familiarity. In the early Pāli texts a kṣatriya is never addressed by his name or in the second person by any person belonging to the lower classes.\textsuperscript{4} The mother of king Udaya, whom the barber Gaṅgāmāla calls by his family name, shouts angrily; “This filthy son of a barber, of low origin, forgets himself so much that he calls my son, lord of earth, who is a khattiya by caste, Brahmadatta.”\textsuperscript{5}

The idea that food touched by the śūdra is defiled and cannot be taken by a brāhmaṇa is first expressed in the Dharmasūtras. According to Āpastamba food touched by an impure brāhmaṇa or a higher caste person becomes impure, but is not unfit for eating.\textsuperscript{6} But if it is brought by an impure śūdra, it cannot be taken.\textsuperscript{7} The same is the case with the food which is looked at by a dog or an atapātra, to whose class belong the patita and the caṇḍāla.\textsuperscript{8} Another rule states that if a śūdra touches a brāhmaṇa while the latter is eating, he should leave off eating because the śūdra’s touch defiles him.\textsuperscript{9} Āpastamba appears to be more conservative when he says that it is not permissible to take the food offered by a śūdra even if he follows the prescribed laws.\textsuperscript{10} But the word śūdravajjanam, which is taken as prohibiting receiving the food of \textsuperscript{1} I.2.5.16.

\textsuperscript{3} sarvanāmanā striyo rajanyayaiṣau ca na nāmā. Āp. Dh. S., I.4.14-23.
\textsuperscript{4} Fick, op. cit., p. 83.
\textsuperscript{5} Jāt., iii, 452.
\textsuperscript{6} I.5.16.21.
\textsuperscript{7} Ibid., I.5.16.22.
\textsuperscript{8} Āp. Dh. S., I.5.16.30 with Haradatta’s comm.
\textsuperscript{9} Ibid., I. 5.17.1.
\textsuperscript{10} sarvarvarnāṇāṃ svadharme vartamānāṇāṃ bhaktavyam śūdravajjamītyeke.
Ibid., I. 6.18.13.
a śūdra, does not occur in an older manuscript. This shows that such a view did not prevail in the earlier stage, when only the food of an impure śūdra was to be avoided. Nevertheless, the Dharmasūtras unanimously enjoin the brāhmaṇa to shun the food given by a śūdra. A passage of the Āpastamba Dharmasūtra read with the commentary of Haradatta allows him to accept the food of a śūdra in times of distress, provided it is purified by contact with gold and fire and abandoned as soon as the brāhmaṇa gets an alternative source of livelihood. No such condition is attached by Gautama, who, while permitting a brāhmaṇa to accept a śūdra’s food in the case of his loss of livelihood, allows him to accept food from a herdsman, a labourer in tillage, an acquaintance of the family, and a servant. But Gautama does not permit him to support himself by following the occupations of a śūdra. Moreover, he is alone in laying down the rule that a snātaka (i.e. a brāhmaṇa or a kṣatriya according to Haradatta) should not sip the water of a śūdra. In some cases the rules regarding the brāhmaṇa’s boycott of the śūdra’s food were sought to be enforced by various threats and penances. According to Vasiṣṭha, the most deserving brāhmaṇa was one whose stomach did not contain the food of a śūdra. Such a rule would naturally deprive the guilty brāhmaṇa of the sacrificial gifts, which constituted the main source of his income. It was further declared by the same authority that, if a brāhmaṇa died with the food of a śūdra in his stomach, he would be born either as a village pig or in the family of that śūdra. Further, a brāhmaṇa whose body is nourished by the essence of a śūdra’s food may daily recite the Veda, may offer prayers, but cannot find the path that leads upwards. Again, if, after eating the

1. Ms. G U 2 according to Bühler’s classification, Āp. Dh. S., Introd., P. III.
2. Āp. Dh. S., II.8.18.2; Bau. Dh. S., II. 2.3.1; Vas. Dh. S., XIV. 2-4.
5. vṛttīcchernāreṇa śūdrāt. XVII. 5.
7. VII. 22.
8. IX. 11.
10. VI. 27-29.
food of a śudra, he has conjugal intercourse, even his sons would belong to the śudra caste and he would not ascend to heaven.¹ Baudhāyana lays down that, if a person commits the offence of eating the food of a śudra or of cohabiting with a śudra female, his sin can be expiated by performing seven prāṇāyāmas (suppressions of breath) daily for a week.² For the same purpose he also provides the penance of performing the ceremony of taking boiled barley grain.³ These penances, however, should not be taken as representing the state of affairs in this period. The first occurs in the fourth praśna, which according to one view is as late as the 10th century A. D.,⁴ and the second occurs in the third praśna, which according to Bühler, is a later addition to the original work.⁵

The Dharmasūtras give the impression that generally the ideal brāhmaṇa avoided the food of a śudra,⁶ especially if he was impure. But the penances and threats for enforcing this ban seem to be of later origin and were probably not effective during this period. It is clear that no such ban was imposed on the kṣatriya and the vaiśya. Thus at the Vaiśvadeva ceremony the śudra could be engaged in the preparation of the food under the superintendence of the men of the first three varṇas.⁷ While cooking he should remain absolutely neat and clean so that the food might not be contaminated. For this purpose he should cause the hair of his head, his beard, the hair on his body and his nails to be cut, preferably on the eighth day of each half of the month or on the days of full and the new moon. Besides he should take his bath with his clothes on.⁸ Ordinarily it was provided that the śudras living in the service

1. Ibid.
2. IV.1.5.
4. Hultzsch, The Baudhāyana dharmaśāstra, Introd., p. IX.
5. Ibid.
6. The contrast between the brāhmaṇa and the vṛṣāla is emphasised in the Nirukta, III. 16.
7. ...aryādiṣṭhitā va śudrāh samskartāraḥ suḥ. Áp. Dh. S., II.2.3.1-4. The passage does not occur in a later ms. (G¹ according to Bühler’s classification). Obviously it was removed in later times to exclude the śudras completely from preparing food.
8. Ibid., II. 2.3.6-8.
of the āryas should trim their hair and nails every month; their mode of sipping water, according to Baudhāyana, being the same as that of the āryas. The fact that a śūdra could be permitted to prepare food even at a religious ceremony, in which the greatest degree of purity was expected, shows that ordinarily his food was accepted by the members of the higher varṇas, perhaps excluding the brāhmaṇa in some cases. Even in a later Jātaka the occupation of a cook is described as one to be practised by slaves or hired labourers. In one case, however, the kṣatriya father avoids eating with his daughter by a slave wife. But this passage occurs in the present story of a later Jātaka, and hence may not apply to this period. Prescriptions which forbade contact with food touched by the impure, and especially with the leavings of their table, and punished transgressions of the rules, are found in the early Pāli texts, but there is nothing to show that they were particularly directed against the śūdras. This was probably due to the fact that the old Indo-European practice, according to which all the members of the clan could partake of the common meals provided on special occasions, continued to exercise influence for some time even when tribes and clans had broken up into varṇas.

The marriage rules of the Dharmasūtras were dictated by considerations of varṇa. Of the eight forms of marriage, which first appear during this period, the gāndharva (love marriage) and the pāsiṣṭa (marriage by seduction which implied some sort of consent) were considered lawful for the vaiśyas and the śūdras. According to Baudhāyana the first was meant for the vaiśyas and the second for the śūdras. In justification of this view he states that because of their preoccupations with agriculture and service

1. I.5.10-20; this passage is not to be found in the ms. Ct (according to Hultzsch's classification), one of the southern group of the ms. derived from a more original form of the text than the northern. (The Baudhāyana-dharmaśāstra. Introd., p. VIII).
2. Jāt., v., 293.
3. Ibid., iv, 145-6.
4. Fick, SONI, p. 47.
5. Senart, Caste in India, pp. 182-3.
the wives of the vaisyas and the sūdras cannot be kept under control. This suggests that the employment of the womenfolk of the lower orders for earning their livelihood rendered them comparatively independent of their husbands; the inability of the women of the higher varṇas to earn their living made them more dependent but more respectable in society.

The stability of marriage relations was considered in terms of varṇa. In the opinion of Vasiṣṭha, the higher the varṇa the more stable would be the marriage. Thus it was laid down that, if the husband leaves his home, a wife of the brāhmaṇa or the kṣatriya varṇa, who has issue, shall wait for five years, a wife of the vaisya varṇa for four years, and one of the sūdra varṇa for three years. If she has no issue, the waiting period will be cut down by one year in the case of the brāhmaṇa, and by two years each in the cases of the kṣatriya, the vaisya and the sūdra, with the result that in such a case a wife of the sūdra varṇa will have to wait for only one year. Such a rule again implies the comparative independence of the women of the lower orders, among whom marriage ties were easily dissoluble.

But the sūdra women were not treated on a footing of equality by their husbands from the higher varṇas. It is stated by Vasiṣṭha that a sūdra wife, who belongs to the black race, can be espoused as concubine for the sake of pleasure, but cannot be accepted in a regular marriage. A passage from the same source allows an ārya to marry wives from the sūdra caste, if the wedding is not accompanied by the recitation of the proper Vedic texts, but Vasiṣṭha himself does not consider it desirable. For such a marriage causes the degradation of the family and the loss of heaven after death.

In the opinion of Āpastamba it is

1. oṣṇitrikalatā hi vaisyaśūdrā bhaavati, kṣaṇaśasrāyudhikṛtā. Bau. Dh. S., I. 11. 20. 14-15. Bühl er's translation that the vaisyas and sūdras are not particular about their wives does not convey the meaning of the passage accurately (SBE, xiv. 207).
2. Vas. Dh. s., XVII. 78.
6. atra hi dhruvah kulaśākṣuḥ pratyayā ēsvargah. Vas. Dh. S., I. 27. Among the ancient Teutons a free man who wedded a slave was himself reduced to slavery. Landtman, The Origin of the Inequality of the Social Classes, p. 262.
not desirable that a brāhmaṇa should cohabit with a śūdra woman or serve a person of the black race. But Āpastamba and Baudhāyana provide for purificatory rites for those who have connections with a woman of the śūdra varṇa. But the two passages occurring in the Baudhāyana Dharmasūtra are found in the fourth prāṣṭa, which, as shown earlier, is a later addition. Therefore such penances need not be seriously taken as applying to this period. The view that the śūdra wife should be avoided comes into conflict with an earlier rule of Vasiṣṭha, which says that a brāhmaṇa can take three wives, a kṣatriya two, and a vaiśya and a śūdra one each, in the order of their varṇas. This clearly allows the members of the first two varṇas to enter into regular marriage relations with śūdra women, and hence the idea that the śūdra wife should be accepted only for the sake of pleasure may have been of later origin. Further, it is obvious that a large number of wives could be maintained only by well-to-do people. Thus while the rule of polygamy for the members of the higher varṇas seems to be in line with their better economic status, the monogamy of the śūdra is in keeping with his unhappy economic situation.

Although marriage with women of lower castes was permissible, the Dharmasūtras show great aversion for connections of the reverse type. According to Gautama a son begotten by a śūdra on a woman of unequal caste was regarded as a patita. It is mostly to such marriages and connections that the early law-books trace the origin of about a dozen mixed (varṇasamkara) castes. Thus the issue begotten by a śūdra on a woman of the kṣatriya varṇa is known as a kṣatṛ, and the one begotten on a female of the vaiśya caste as a māgadhā. The son of a śūdra

1. 1.9.27.10-11.
3. Vas. Dḥ. S., 1.24. Baudhāyana (1.8.16. 1-4) allows four wives to the brāhmaṇa, three to the kṣatriya, two to the vaiśya and one to the śūdra.
4. Both Vasiṣṭha and Baudhāyana prescribe only one wife for the śūdra, although the former prescribes this for the vaiśya also.
5. Generally the jātis of this age were endogamous. Fick, SONI, p.51.
6. IV. 27.
by a brāhmaṇa woman is branded as a caṇḍāla. According to Gautama people begotten by the brāhmaṇa, the kṣatriya, the vaiśya and the śūdra on a woman of the śūdra caste are respectively known as pāraśavas, yavanas, karaṇas and śūdras. The son of a brāhmaṇa by a śūdra woman is called a niśāda. His issue by a female of the śūdra caste is known as the pulksa, and the son begotten by a śūdra on a female of the niśāda caste is known as a kukkuṭaka. The issue of the union of a kṣatriya and a śūdra woman is known as an ugra, while that of a vaiśya and a śūdra is to be regarded as a rathakāra. The above list of castes would show that in the opinion of the Dharmasūtras anuloma (in regular order) and pratiloma (inverted order) connections between the śūdra and members of the higher varṇas were regarded as the most plentiful source of the origin of the mixed castes, many of whom were relegated to the position of untouchables. But most of these mixed castes were nothing more than backward tribes, who were annexed to the four original and recognised varṇas by giving them a wholly arbitrary genesis. Nevertheless, in course of time such explanations may have influenced new formations of castes, for these have taken place even in recent times.

Although the early Gṛhyasūtras nowhere clearly refer to the exclusion of the śūdra from the rite of initiation, the Āpastamba Dharmasūtra states that he cannot be admitted to the upanayana and the study of the Veda. The presence of a śūdra, and particularly that of a caṇḍāla, is considered a sufficient ground for stopping the recitation of the Veda. Under such conditions

1. Ibid., Vas. Dh. S., XVIII. 1.
5. Ibid., I. 9.17.5.
8. There are several tribes of this type in Chotānagpur, and some castes of this type in eastern Nepāl.
9. aṣṭāṭrā̄gyād aṣṭaṭkarmanāṇaṁ upanāyanaṁ vedādhyayanaṁ magṇyādhyayam phalavantī ca karmāṇī. I.1.1.6.
Baudhāyana and Gautama prefer the interruption of all studies.\(^1\) The latter further adds that the study should not be always carried on in the same town.\(^2\) This has been interpreted by Maskarin to mean a town which is inhabited mainly by śūdras.\(^3\) Gautama alone states that, if a śūdra recites the Vedic texts, his tongue should be cut out; and if he remembers them, his body should be split in twain.\(^4\) This terrible measure seems to reflect the extremist attitude of Manu,\(^5\) and hence may be treated as an interpolation in the law-book of Gautama. Nevertheless, it is evident that even during this period the idea of imparting Vedic education to a śūdra was vehemently opposed.

A passage from Āpastamba, however, favours the education of the śūdra in Vedic literature. While stating that a student should pay the fee to the teacher for the teaching of the Veda, he declares that the later can accept it either from an ugra or a śūdra, under all circumstances.\(^6\) This may indicate an earlier state of things, when the śūdra was admitted to Vedic education. But later on this was denied to him, not only by Gautama and Vasiṣṭha but also by Āpastamba himself. The Veda being the source of the law (dharma), as a natural corollary Vasiṣṭha declares that a śūdra is not worthy of receiving any advice or the contents of law.\(^7\) Apparently such a dictum was meant to keep the śudras in complete ignorance of the law by which they were governed.

Āpastamba provides that women and śūdras may learn a supplement to the Atharva Veda.\(^8\) It is suggested that this comprises dancing, music and other branches of everyday art and learning.\(^9\) In commenting on a passage of Gautama Maskarin refers to a

---

3. tatra śūdrādibhāgyaṁ the anadhāyaṁ.
4. udāharaye jihvičchedah, dhārāne śaritabhedaḥ. XII. 4-6.
5. VIII. 270-272.
8. Āp. Dh. S., II. 11.29.11-12 with the comm. of Haradatta.
9. SBE, ii. 169.
similar type of education. He quotes the Smṛtis as stating that a niṣāda should be initiated and educated in the art of elephant training. All this may imply that the śūdras could receive training in arts and crafts but were debarred from receiving Vedic education, which was more or less identical with literate learning. Thus the Dharmasūtras sought to establish a divorce between literate education, which was confined to the members of the twice-born varṇas, and technical training, which lay in the sphere of the śūdras. It was also stated that Vedic study impedes pursuit of agriculture and vice versa. Such a rule would naturally affect not only the śūdras but also those vaiśyas who carried on agriculture themselves. We do not know how far this policy worked in practice. A later Jātaka informs us that two caṇḍāla boys went in disguise to receive education at Taxila, but, when they were detected through the inadvertent use of their own dialect, they were expelled from the institution. Nevertheless, other Jātaka stories show that the schools had on their rolls sons of merchants and tailors, and even fisherman. Thus in practice even during this period the śūdras were not completely excluded from receiving education.

The Dharmasūtra’s exclusion of the śūdra from Vedic education naturally led to his exclusion from sacrifices and sacraments, which could be performed only with the Vedic mantras. A rule of the Āśvalāyana Gṛhyasūtra is interpreted as suggesting that the śūdra could hear the Vedic mantras to be recited on the occasion of the madhuparka ceremony. Similarly Jaimini quotes an old teacher Bādari as stating that the Vedic sacrifice can be performed by members of all the four varṇas. But he does not approve of this idea, and thus seems to represent

4. Ibid., iv, 38.
5. Ibid., iii, 171.
7. Hopkins, Mutual Relations of the Four Castes in Mānu, p. 86, fn.l.
9. Ibid., VI. 1.33f.
the dominant view of his age. The śūdra could not lay the sacred fire for the Vedic sacrifice. He could not perform any sacrament. He came to be excluded from the Vedic sacrifice to such an extent that in the performance of certain rites even his presence and sight were to be avoided. Ordinarily a śūdra could not use even the current exclamation namah, he could do this only if he was especially permitted to do so. Gautama, however, quotes certain authorities who allow a śūdra to perform a select list of small Vedic sacrifices known as the pāka-jajñas (simple domestic rites). Baudhāyana quotes others as stating that submersion in water and bathing are prescribed for all the varṇas, but sprinkling water over the body along with the recitation of the mantras is the particular duty of the twice-born.

It is argued that the non-performance of various ceremonies and sacrifices were an advantage to the śūdra, who was free from the obligation of observing them. But what was an advantage to him from the modern point of view was a disadvantage according to the dominant social outlook of those times, which condemned those who did not perform sacrifices to a low social status. Gautama lays down that a śūdra shall live with his wife. Haradatta quotes another commentator as interpreting this to the effect that a śūdra can only lead the life of the householder and not that of the student, the hermit or the ascetic. It seems that in later times a brāhmaṇa, as a rule, passed through four, a nobleman through three, a citizen through two, and a śūdra through one of the āśramas. This may not have always been the case, but the discrimination against the śūdra is consistent... with his function of service to the members of the upper varṇas, a task which he could only perform as a householder.

The sūdra was, however, permitted to offer funeral oblations. But Gautama and Vasiṣṭha provide that the impurity caused to him by birth or death of a kinsman (sapiṇḍa) shall last for a month. According to Vasiṣṭha this period lasts for ten, fifteen and twenty days respectively in the case of a brāhmaṇa, a rājanya and a vaishya. Gautama, however, cuts down the period by four days in the case of a ksatriya and eight days in that of a vaisyā. The longest period of impurity in the case of a sūdra, if observed, must have caused great hardship to him. Unable to earn his living, he would be compelled to throw himself at the mercy of a creditor or his master. Even in recent times, in the period of impurity caused by death, poor sūdras have been seen begging from door to door. But in one respect the sūdra’s position was better. He was not considered so impure as to be forbidden to touch the corpse of the higher varṇas. He could carry the corpse even of a brāhmaṇa to the cremation ground, where he could touch the funeral pyre.

Of the three higher varṇas, the brāhmaṇa was expected to carry out his religious duties most scrupulously. Thus Baudhāyana lays down that a brāhmaṇa who does not perform the samhāra morning and evening should be made by the king to do the work of a sūdra. The brāhmaṇa also fell from status if he took to manual occupations. Baudhāyana states that the brāhmaṇas who tend cattle, live by trade, work as artisans, actors, servants or usurers should be treated like sūdras. Gautama goes a step further and states that, if an ārya adopts the occupations of a non-ārya, (i.e. a sūdra), he is reduced to

2. Ibid., XIV, 2-4; Vas. Dh. S., IV. 30.
4. XIV. 2-4. According to others the period of impurity in the case of a vaishya may last for half a month (Ibid.).
6. Áśva. Gr. S. (SBE tr.), IV. 2. 19-21. The word used here is ‘vrśala’.
8. Ibid., I. 5.10.24; cf. Vas. Dh. S., II. 27.
his status. Commenting on this passage, Haradatta thinks that even a brähmana who performs the occupation of a non-ārya need not be served by a śūdra. He curiously adds that a śūdra who does the work of an ārya must not be despised by others following non-āryan occupations. Evidently there seems to be no point in such a contempt, for the āryas were higher in status. Such rules suggest that the members of the higher varṇas, especially the brähmaṇas, felt contempt for manual occupations, which reduced them to the position of śūdras when they were forced to earn their living with their hands. In the Vinaya Pātaka agriculture, trade and tending of cattle are regarded as a high type of work. This obviously refers to the functions of the vaiśya. On the other hand the work of a carpenter and a sweeper is regarded as of low type. The same text enumerates five low occupations (hīnasipāṇi) of the nalakāra (bamboo worker), the kumbhakāra (potter), the pesakāra (weaver), the chamma-kāra (leather worker) and the nahāpita (barber). At one place, however, the occupations of the weaver, the bamboo worker, the potter and the barber are put in the list of ordinary crafts, which shows that generally the fifth craft, that of the leather worker, was universally looked upon with contempt.

Taking the social status of these crafts separately, the potter does not generally appear in dark colours. But at one place the work of the weaver (tantavāya) is described as of inferior type. The barber also seems to have been an object of derision. Thus although the barber Upāli became a monk, he was reviled by the nuns as one of low birth whose occupations are shampooing and cleaning of dirt. All this indicates a tendency to hold

1. āryānāryayaśayatiṣeṣe karmeṇaḥ sāmyeṣa. X. 67.
2. In the Jātakas there are instances of brähmaṇas living by manual occupations.
4. Ibid. The term kottakakāmam is explained as tacchakakama in the Vin. A., p. 439; but Horner translates it as work of a store-(room)keeper. SEB, xi, 175.
5. Vin., iv, 7.
10. kastava malamajjano nilānajacco. Vin., iv, 308.
some crafts in low esteem. Since these crafts were practised by various sections of the śúdramas, in course of time the occupations of the śúdra varṇa as a whole came to be stigmatized. This is evident from a passage of the Dīgha Nikāya, which uses the phrase "luddācāra khuddācāra ti"1 in defining the functions of the śúdramas. This means that the śúdramas are those who live on hunting and other humble pursuits. In a Jain text also the terms vṛṣala, grhadāsa (born slave) and 'low born wretch' are used as terms of contempt like dog, thief, robber, cheat, liar etc.2

The early Pāli texts often mention the five despised castes of the caṇḍāla, the nesāda, the veṭa, the rathakāra and the pukkusa.3 They are described as having low families (niça kula)4 or inferior births (hinajāti).5 The enumeration of low trades, crafts and castes seems to be broadly true of pre-Mauryan times, for the Buddha argues at length with the monks that they should not create such distinctions in the order by insulting speech referring to the former jāti, the sīппa, the kamma etc. of the monks.6

Several despised jātis of the Buddhist texts roughly correspond to the untouchable sections of brāhmaṇical society. According to the Buddhist and Jain texts the caṇḍālas and the pukkusas were not included in the śúdra varṇa.7 But the Dharmasūtras incorporate them in the list of the mixed castes, who are supposed to have śúdra blood. According to Patañjali Pāñini seems to have included the caṇḍāla and the mṛtapa (a person who watches dead bodies) in the list of those śúdramas who lived outside towns and villages, and whose contact permanently defiled the bronze vases of brāhmaṇas.8

Originally the caṇḍālas seem to have been an aboriginal tribe. This is clear from their use of their own dialect.9 In

1. Dīgha N., iii, 95.
2. Ajāt., II. 4.1.8; cf. Dīgha N., i. 92-3.
4. Ibid.
6. Vin., iv, 4-11.
7. Śamīy. N., i, 102, 166; Sūja., 1.9.2-3; Fick, op. cit., pp. 20-30.
8. Sūtraṇāmanitvavatānām. Pā., II. 4-10; Mahābhāṣya, i, 475.
In a Jain text they are mentioned along with the other tribes such as the Śabarās, the Dravīḍas, the Kalinīgas, the Gauḍas and the Gāṇḍhāras. But gradually the caṇḍālas came to be looked upon as untouchables. Āpastamba holds that to touch and see a caṇḍāla is sinful. This passage, however, it not to be found in the two earlier manuscripts of his Dharmasūtra, which shows that untouchability appeared probably towards the end of the pre-Mauryan period. A similar provision occurs in the later work of Gautama, who provides that, if a caṇḍāla defiles the body, it can be purified by bathing dressed in clothes.

In the Pāli texts the caṇḍālas are clearly depicted as untouchables. A later Jātaka describes the caṇḍālas as the meanest men on earth. Contact with the air that touched a caṇḍāla’s body was regarded as pollution. The very sight of a caṇḍāla forbode evil. Thus the daughter of a seṭṭhi of Banaras, seeing a caṇḍāla, washes her eyes, that have been contaminated by a mere glance at that despised person. Food and drink, if seen by him, were not to be taken. Partaking of his food, even without knowledge, led to social ostracism. It is said that sixteen thousand brāhmaṇas lost their caste because they unknowingly took food which had been polluted by contact with the leavings of a caṇḍāla’s meal. There is also the case of a brāhmaṇa, who ate the table leavings of a caṇḍāla from hunger, and committed suicide in order to avoid the contempt of his former caste people. In a Jātaka story when a caṇḍāla enters a town, the people beat him and render him senseless. A similar story recurs in a Jain text of later times. It is said that when two sons of a mātanga leader of Banaras led a singing and dancing party

1. Śūṇyakālan (SB Ed.). II. 2-27.
3. MSS. Gu 2, 3 according to Bühler’s classification (op. cit., Introd., p. 111.)
during the festival of a god of love, the high caste people belaboured them with kicks and blows and turned them out of the town.\textsuperscript{1} By and large, the Jātaka references suggest that although the caṇḍālas were despised as untouchables by the members of the higher varṇas, they were especially hated by the brāhmaṇas.

When the caṇḍālas were absorbed in brāhmaṇical society, probably on account of their being hunters and fowlers, they were assigned the task of removing dead bodies of animals and human beings. They always appear to be associated with the removal and cremation\textsuperscript{2} of corpses.\textsuperscript{3} This work was also done by the paṇas, who were known as caṇḍālas.\textsuperscript{4} The caṇḍālas were also sometimes engaged for street sweeping.\textsuperscript{5} The caṇḍāla does not appear as an executioner of criminals in the Dharmasūtras. In the Jātaka he is employed in whipping and cutting off the limbs of the criminal.\textsuperscript{6} It has been suggested that the coraghātaka (executioner of a thief) of the Jātaka may have been a caṇḍāla.\textsuperscript{7} Some of the caṇḍālas earned their living by the occupations of jugglers and acrobats,\textsuperscript{8}—a practice which is still followed by the backward nomadic people wandering from place to place in Northern India.

The caṇḍāla led a life of misery and squalor. A simile from a Pāli text informs us that a caṇḍāla boy or girl, clad in rags, with begging tray in hand, on entering village or town assumes a humble mein and then goes on.\textsuperscript{9} We learn from a later Jātaka that the caṇḍāla possessed a pair of coloured garments (in order to distinguish him from the rest of the population), a girdle, a ragged robe and an earthen bowl.\textsuperscript{10}

\textsuperscript{1} Uttarā. Ṭikā, 13. p. 185a quoted in Jaina, op. cit., p. 144.
\textsuperscript{2} Rām., 1. 58. 10.
\textsuperscript{3} chavachadhāka-caṇḍāla. Comm. to Jāt., iii, 195.
\textsuperscript{4} Antaga., 65.
\textsuperscript{5} Jāt., iv, 390.
\textsuperscript{6} Ibid., iii, 41, 179.
\textsuperscript{7} Bose, op. cit., ii, 458.
\textsuperscript{8} Ibid., 439-440.
\textsuperscript{9} ...kalephattho nantikavāsi gāmam vā niganam vā pavisante nīcicītven veta va allhoffetvā pavisati. Anū. N., iv, 376.
\textsuperscript{10} Jāt., iv, 379.
In popular parlance the term caṇḍāla signified a person who was without any virtues, a person without faith and morals.

Fick rightly says that in their depiction of the caṇḍāla the Jātakas show that the reality was not far different from the priestly theory. But it is important to note that most of the references relating to the caṇḍālas are found in the later Jātakas, especially in the fourth volume, and hence may apply to the end of the pre-Mauryan period or even to later times.

The pulkasas or the pukkusas seem to have been an aboriginal tribe that lived by hunting, but they were gradually absorbed in brāhmanical society for certain tasks such as removing flowers from the temple and the palace. The fact that they could approach the temple premises to remove flowers shows that they were not regarded as being quite as degraded as the caṇḍāla.

The veṇas were another aboriginal tribe who lived by hunting and working in bamboo. A later Jātaka mentions a veṇukāra or velukāra who goes into the forest with his knife to collect a bundle of bamboos for his trade. The Dharmasūtras invent an origin for the veṇas as well. According to Baudhāyana a vaiṛa is the offspring of a vaidehaka father (born of a vaiśya father and a kṣatriya mother) and an ambaśṭha mother (born of a brāhmaṇa and a vaiśya mother). Thus, unlike the caṇḍāla and the pulkasa, the vaiṇa was not supposed to have śudra blood. Although in a later Jātaka verse the term veni is bracketed with the caṇḍāla as a term of rebuke, there is nothing to show that the veṇas were regarded as untouchables like the caṇḍālas. The commentary to the Vinaya Piṭaka clearly states that birth as a veṇa means birth as a carpenter (tacchaka). The veṇa and the takṣaka being identical, it appears strange that the latter,

1. Aṣ. N., iii, 206.
3. There is no indication of this in the Pāli texts, but Manu (X. 49) and Viṣṇu (XVI. 9) prescribe hunting as their occupation.
who enjoyed a high status in later Vedic society, was relegated to the position of a despised caste in the Buddhist texts.

The rathakāra is also regarded as a despised caste in the Buddhist texts, but in the brāhmaṇical texts he continues to enjoy a high social standing. The Gṛhyaśūtras provide for his upanayana. Rhys Davids suggests that the rathakāras were an aboriginal tribe. But this does not seem to be correct, because they formed part of the āryan viś in Vedic times. It is likely, however, that in later times some of the aborigines were assimilated to the ranks of the rathakāras. On the basis of a passage from a later Jātaka it is suggested that the rathakāra fell in status because of his having taken to leather work. But the rathakāra also continued to be employed to make the wheels of the chariot, which was used by the kings. Further, although the craft of the leather worker (cammakāra) is regarded as low, he himself is not put in the list of the despised castes. Perhaps one of the reasons why the rathakāra is treated as a condemned caste in the Buddhist texts is the Buddhist aversion to war, for which the rathakāra prepared chariots. In any case it is clear that they were not degraded to the same level as the candāla and the pukkusa.

It is not so difficult to explain the inclusion of the nesādas in the Buddhist list of despised castes. This agrees with their low position in the Dharmasūtras. They were a pre-āryan tribal people, who are described as short-limbed, of the complexion of charred wood, with blood-red eyes, high cheekbones, low-topped nose, and copper-coloured hair. The tradition of their curious origin from the body of Veṇa, the king who proved tyrannical to the priestly class, may indicate the resistance

2. Dialogues of the Buddha, i, 100.
8. Mbh., XII. 59.99-101. B. C. Law argues that these were Niṣadhas, and not Niśādas (Tribes in Ancient India, p. 100), but the Cr. Edn. of the Mbh. clearly mentions Niṣādas.
they offered to the process of brāhmaṇization. Even when adopted into brāhmaṇical society, the niśādas continued mainly as hunters, who lived in their own villages. Possibly some of the niśādas found their way into the priestly class. The niśāda gotra reported by the gavatāśha of Pārīnī, though not mentioned in any of the standard gotra lists, would not be possible unless some brāhmaṇas had been adopted from aboriginal priests or had served the aborigines as priests. All the same, it is clear that during this period the niśādas definitely fell from the status which they enjoyed in later Vedic society.

At least some of the despised castes of the Pāli texts, particularly the niśādas and the caṇḍālas, were treated as untouchables. Collectively the untouchables were known as the antyas or the bāhyas, i.e. people living outside villages and towns. Gautama condemns an antya as the vilest person (pēpiṣṭhak). Vasiṣṭha distinguishes between the good śūdras and the antya-yonis, who can appear as witnesses only in their own cases. In the Āpastamba Dharmasūtra the word antah is used in relation to the caṇḍālas and shows that he lived at the end of the village. In the same text the bāhyas, among whom the recitation of the Veda is forbidden, are explained by Haradatta as the ugras and the niśādas. The antāvasāyins are described by Vasiṣṭha as a caste begotten by a śūdra on a vaiṣya woman. It is said that a brāhmaṇa father who dwells with the antāvasāyins or cohabits with one of their women should be rejected. Generally the untouchables lived at the end of villages or towns or in their own settlements. Their segregation was not the result of any deliberate policy of expulsion from old āryan settlements. It seems

2. Ibid., vi, 71f.
3. IV. 1.100.
4. Kosambi, JAOS, lxxv,44. This depends on the assumption that the niśāda gotra was a brāhmaṇical gotra, which is doubtful.
5. IV. 28. At another place Gautama states that the antyas should be given impure garments (XIV. 42).
6. XVI. 30.
7. I.3.9.15.
8. I.3.9.18.
9. XVIII.3.
10. Gaut. Dh. S., XX.1; cf. XXIII, 32. rather that the whole population of tribal villages were condemned to the position of untouchables by the brāhmaṇas.

It is not possible to accept the explanation of the origin of untouchability as given in the Dharmasūtras, which attribute it to the intermixture of castes. It has been suggested that in the majority of instances the origin of untouchables took place as a result of complete isolation and loss of tradition of the Buddhist communities. But such a view is untenable, for this social phenomenon appears in the pre-Mauryan period, which witnessed the rise and growth of Buddhism. It has been contended that those who continued beef-eating were condemned as untouchables. This may have swelled the ranks of the untouchables in later times, but cannot be taken as an explanation of their origin, for except for a late reference in the Gautama Dharmasūtra, there is nothing which may imply that beef-eating was prohibited in brāhmaṇical society during this period. It is also argued that the spirit of contempt leading to untouchability “was evidently not a part of the original Indo-Aryan institutions, but was a thing borrowed from the Dravidians, among whom in the south even in modern times untouchability plays such a prominent part.” But there is no evidence that untouchability prevailed in the south among the Dravidians before their brāhmaṇization. On the contrary, Baudhāyana, a lawgiver from the south, and Āpastamba, who is also sometimes associated with that region, maintain a less conservative attitude towards the śūdras in matters of food and company than the two other authors of the Dharmasūtras from the north. Besides, it has been shown earlier how certain crafts and occupations were held in ill repute by the members of the upper varṇas, who claimed to be āryas. Finally, the idea of untouchability has been traced to the theoretical impurity of certain occupations.

1. MR (Dec. 1323), 712-13. This view has been further developed by Ambedkar. The Untouchables, Ch. IX.
2. Ambedkar, The Untouchables, Ch. X.
3. XXII. 13. declares cow-killing as a minor sin which has to be expiated by a penance.
5. Ghurye, Caste and Class, p. 159.
But the vital question is why certain occupations should be regarded as impure.

One of the reasons for the origin of untouchability was the cultural lag of the aboriginal tribes, who were mainly hunters and fowlers, in contrast to the members of the brāhmaṇical society, who possessed the knowledge of metals and agriculture, and were developing urban life. The low material culture and the consequent wretched condition of these tribes is described in the Buddhist texts in these words: "A fool, should he become a human being after the lapse of a very long time, comes into one of the low stocks — caṇḍālas, nesādas, venas, rathakāras and pukkusas, he is reborn to a life of vagrancy, want and penury, scarcely getting food and drink for his stomach or clothes to his back..." This would suggest that these despised castes had a very precarious living, and were in far worse conditions than those sudras who were employed as dāsas and kammakaras, and as such enjoyed some security of livelihood. This contrast in material life was accentuated by the spirit of contempt growing in brāhmaṇical society itself. As in the case of contemporary Greek society, there had appeared in post-Vedic society a spirit of contempt for manual works and occupations. Gradually as the upper varṇas, especially of the brāhmaṇas and the kṣatriyas, withdrew more and more from the work of primary production and tended to be hereditary in their positions and functions, they not only developed a contempt for manual work but also extended it to the hands that practised it.

Against the background of a very low material culture of the aborigines, the increasing contempt for manual work, combined with primitive ideas of taboo and impurity associated with certain materials, produced the unique social phenomenon of untouchability. This was particularly true of the work of the caṇḍālas who dealt with corpses, with which were linked primitive ideas of impurity and horror. Consequently it was felt necessary

1. Fick, op. cit., p. 324.
2. ...na lābhī annassa pānassa vattahassa pānassa...Majj. N., iii, 169-70; Ang., ii, 85.
3. Past and Present. No. 6, 5. to avoid contact with such persons. In later times the idea of untouchability was extended not only to the niśādas and pulkusas but also to craftsmen such as the leather workers and the weavers.
For during this period although the crafts of the cammakāras and pesakāras were considered contemptible, they themselves were not regarded as untouchables.

We may finally consider how far the religious reforming movements of this period affected the position of the śūdras.
So far as religious emancipation is concerned, Buddhism opened its door not only to the members of the four varṇas, who could be admitted to the Saṅgha and become ascetics, but even to the candālas and the pukkusas, who could attain the bliss of the nirvāṇa. When the robber Angulimāla is admitted to the Buddhist Order, he exclaims: “Verily I have obtained an āryan birth”. This would show that the Buddhist admission of the śūdras to their church was as good as restoring to them the old tribal right of initiation, of which they were dispossessed by brāhmaṇical society. But while the tribal initiation prepared the people for the practical life of this world, this prepared them for the spiritual emancipation from the miseries of life.

Buddhism made no distinction in the imparting of knowledge.
The Buddha argues that just as the king or the owner of the royal domain should not appropriate all revenues to himself, so also a brāhmaṇa or a śramaṇa should not monopolise all knowledge to himself. In the Buddhist view anybody could be a teacher irrespective of his caste. It is said that a teacher is always to be respected, be he a sudda, a candāla or a pukkusa. It is typical of the Buddhist attitude that in a Jātaka story a brāhmaṇa loses the charm learnt from a candāla because of denying his teacher out of shame. In another case the candāla, who is the Bodhisatta, kicks a fellow brāhmaṇa pupil, who is defeated in an academic dispute, but the action is condemned by the teacher.\(^1\)

Early Jainism also admitted to its monastic order members of all the varṇas, and tried to uplift the caṇḍālas. Thus a later Jain source refers to the case of a king who occupied a lower seat in learning spells from a mātaṅga.\(^2\) The Uttarādhyāyana informs us that Harisena, a sovāga (i.e. caṇḍāla) by birth, visited the sacrificial enclosure of a brāhmaṇa teacher and lectured to him on the value of penance, good life, right exertion, self-control, tranquility and celibacy.\(^3\)

Unlike the brāhmaṇas, the early Jain monks accepted food from lower class families, including those of the weavers.\(^4\) Similarly a Buddhist monk or nun could approach families of all the four varṇas for a meal, or could eat at their houses when invited by them.\(^5\) But we do not know whether the lay devotees of these religions followed their teachers in this respect.

That the members of the lower orders actually got into the Buddhist church is suggested by a number of instances. Mātaṅga, the son of a caṇḍāla, is said to have attained infinite bliss, which many köśārīyas and brāhmaṇas could not attain;\(^6\) a monk is described as a former vulture-trainer;\(^7\) and caṇḍālas appear as adopting the homeless state although Fick thinks that “the actual existence of such holy men is extremely doubtful”.\(^8\) He gives no good reason however for his lack of faith in the statement of the Pāli canon on this point. In the list of the authors of the Thera—and Therigāthas, at least ten among 259 theras\(^9\) and eight out of about fifty-nine theris\(^10\) belonged to sections of society which may be regarded as śūdras. They included an actor, a caṇḍāla, a basketmaker, a trapper, a prostitute and a female.

\(^1\) Jāt., iii, 233.
\(^3\) Uttarā., XII ff.
\(^4\) Āyār., II.1 2.2.
\(^5\) Vin., iii, 184.5; iv, 80, 177.
\(^6\) Sut. Nipā., 137 and 198.
\(^7\) Dictionary of Pāli Proper Names, i, 174.
\(^8\) Fick, op. cit., pp. 77-78.
\(^10\) Calculated on the basis of the list given in Law, HPL, ii, 508-16.
slave. We have no similar information to throw light on the proportion of the members of the lower orders in the Jain church; but it is significant that the first female disciple of Mahāvīra is said to have been a captured slave. It is suggested that the homeless condition was often a reaction from surfeit of wealth and power which the people of the lower orders were totally denied. But this is hardly borne out by evidence either in the case of the Buddhist or the Jain church. According to a Jain canon some of the causes of the renunciation of the world were poverty, sickness, sudden anger and insult. There might be some truth in the following abuse hurled by the householders at the monks: “those who become śramaṇas are the meanest workmen, men unable to support their families, low-caste men, wretches, idlers.” In order to discourage the influx of such people, it was said that a miserable man who becomes a monk in order to get food from others will be reborn as a boar greedy of wild rice. A Buddhist text informs us that in the realm of Bimbisāra the Śangha enjoyed special protection from the king, on account of which at times prisoners, thieves, persons condemned to the punishment of whipping, debtors and runaway slaves took refuge in the Buddhist Order and got themselves ordained. When these cases were brought to the notice of the Buddha, he laid down that such people should not be admitted into the Order. A passage of the Dīgha Nikāya also makes it clear that members of the lower orders sought an end of their misery by becoming Buddhist monks. In the Sāmañña-phala sutta Ajātaśatru of Magadha, after pointing out the advantages derived by mahouts, horsemen, home-born slaves, cooks, barbers, bath attendants, confectioners, garland-makers, washermen, weavers, basket-makers and potters from their occupations, enquires of the Bud-

1. Ibid, ii, 501-508; 508-516.
4. purijñā, rogiñjītā, rosā and apādhitā pavaśijā. Thānāṅga, X. 712.
5. Sāvagadham, II. 2.54.
6. Ibid., I. 7. 25.
7. kārabhedako coro...coro...kasāhato katadaṇḍakaṃmo...īvāyiko...dāvo...
In every case it is said: pālaññati bhikkhūsu pabbajjito heti. Vin., i, 74-76.
8. hathārāhā, asārohā...dāsakaññuttā ājārikā kappakā naññapakā sūtā mālā-kārā rajapātā pekalā...Dīgha. N., i, 51.
dha whether the members of the Order, who have given up the world, derive any corresponding advantages visible in this life from their own profession. In his reply the Buddha lays bare the contrast between the luxurious and full life of the king, who is in possession of the five pleasures of sense, and the life of a slave-servant who rises up earlier, goes to bed later, is always keen to carry out the master's orders and anxious to make himself agreeable to his master in everything.\(^1\) The Buddha further adds that the slave wants to live like a king and in order to earn merits for that purpose becomes a recluse. And he poses the counter-question: “The very man whom, under ordinary circumstances, you would treat as a slave-servant, —what treatment would you mete out to him after he had joined the Order?”

The king confesses that he would treat him as a person worthy of honour and respect, and would honour him with a seat, robes, a bowl, a lodging place and medicine.\(^2\) The above discourse of the Buddha leaves no doubt that the life of a recluse offered to the members of the lower orders not only prospects of immediate relief from poverty, but was also supposed to earn merit for a happier life in the next birth. In the same passage the Buddha contrasts the luxurious life of the king with the life of a tax-paying agriculturist householder, and states that he may also be actuated by similar motives for a happier life and decide to become a recluse.\(^3\) It is significant that there is no mention of the brāhmaṇas and the kṣatriyas in this connection, which may suggest that in joining the Saṅgha the poorer sections of the vaiśyas, and the śūdras, were generally moved by materialistic interests. They envied the life of the monks, who having eaten good meals, lie down in beds sheltered from the wind.\(^4\)

But the rules of the Buddhist and Jain churches did not favour the release of considerable sections of the labouring masses from their worldly obligations. There was no permission

---

1. dāso kammakaro pabbutthāyī pacchā-nipāti kiṃkarapāṭissāti manāpa-cāri pīya-cādi mukhullakako. Ibid., i, 60.
2. Ibid., i, 60-61.
4. samanā sakyaputtiyā...subhojanāni bhūjīte tu nivātesu sayanessu sayanti. Vin., i, 77.
either for a slave or a debtor to join the Buddhist church, unless the former had been manumitted by his master and the latter had cleared his debts. But the Buddhist position with regard to the admission of the slave to the church seems to be contradictory. In the course of a discourse the Buddha pointedly asks Ajātaśatru if he would claim back the ex-slave, who is a member of the Order, and compel him to work again as slave. To this the king replies in a clear negative. This may suggest the possibility of a dāsa-kammakara joining the Buddhist church without the permission of his master, but such cases were probably rare. In the Jain church also, among those who were excluded from entering the monastic order, were robbers, king’s enemies; debtors, attendants, servants, and forcibly converted people.

While accepting the existing social and economic relations Buddhism and Jainism tried to improve the position of slaves in some other ways. Thus a Dharmasūtra forbids trade in human beings only for the brāhmaṇa, who can, however, exchange slaves for slaves. But the Buddhist and Jain sources prohibit trade in human beings even for their lay devotees. Nevertheless, a Buddhist text states that the āryan disciple grows in servitors and retinue, which shows that the lay devotees could increase the number of their slaves by other methods. The monks did not keep slaves. A passage from a Jātaka story has been represented as meaning that the slaves of the bhikkhus go to town to get dainty fare for their sick masters. But this is based on an incorrect rendering of the passage, which does not refer to slaves or servants but to other bhikkhus who attended on their sick brethren and who are addressed as āvuso—a term usually applied to the monks.

1. Digha N., i, 5.
2. Ibid., i, 60.
3. Thānāṅga, III. 202; Jain, op. cit., p. 194.
5. manuṣyānām ca manuṣyaḥ. Ibid., I. 7.20.15; Vas. Dh. S., II. 39.
6. Aṅg. N., ii, 208; kesādāmiye...Ucāsaga., p. 51.
7. dāsakammakaraṇorische vaddhati. Aṅg N., v, 137.
8. Jāt., iii, 49.
10. Jāt., iii, tr., 33; text, 48.
11. Ibid.
Buddhism and Jainism tried to inculcate among their followers a spirit of generosity and kindness towards their employees. Thus a passage from the Dīgha Nikāya enjoins that employers should treat their slaves and workpeople decently. They should not be given tasks beyond their strength. They should receive food and wages, be cared for in times of sickness, and be given occasional holidays and shares in the unusual delicacies of the master. On the other hand the servants should be content with their wages, work satisfactorily and maintain the reputation of their master. Similar instructions were issued by Aśoka to his subjects. In the Jātakas also, if the master is the Bodhisattva, the slave receives good treatment. A Jain text states that wealth should be accumulated not only for the sake of kinsmen and kings, but also for the sake of dāsas, dāsis, kammakaras and kamma-karīs, suggesting thereby that these latter deserve to be well maintained by the employer.

We have no precise idea about the extent of the lay following of the heretical sects among the people of the lower classes. Buddhism counted some followers in the artisan community. The Ājīvika sect was in some way especially connected with the potter caste, and made a special appeal to its members. But in any case the reforming religions did not make any fundamental change in the position of the lower orders. The proportion as well as the importance of such people in the Buddhist church seems to have been negligible. In spite of its theory of equality a marked leaning to aristocracy (of all the three varieties, birth, brain and bullion) lingered in ancient Buddhism as an inheritance from the past. It may be going too far to assert that the social organization in India was not in the least altered by Buddha’s appearance. But evidently the Buddhists rarely questioned the fundamentals of the varṇa system, which identified the śūdras with the serving class. Thus while refuting the brāhmaṇical

1. Dīgha N., iii, 191.
3. Ayūr; 1. 2.5.1.
4. Case of the smith Cunda, Dict. of Pāli Proper Names, i, 876-77.
5. Basham, History and Doctrines of the Ājīvikas, p. 134.
7. Fick, SONI, p. 32.
claims to superiority over the three other varṇas, Gautama argues that as regards descent the ksatriyas are higher and the brāhmaṇas are lower. But he does not question the superiority of either the brāhmaṇas or the ksatriyas over the vaiśyas and the śūdras.\(^1\) Buddhism, therefore, merely tries to show that caste is of no value in the search for emancipation.\(^2\) Like Christianity, none of the religious reforming movements of this period ever attacked the basis of slavery; they never tried to abolish the economic and political disabilities of the śūdras.

The above study will show that the ambiguous position of the śūdras disappeared in post-Vedic times, when they were deprived of the remnants of their tribal rights and saddled with economic, political, social and religious disabilities. They were sharply distinguished from the three upper varṇas, denied the right to Vedic sacrifice, initiation, education, and administrative appointments, and above all were specifically assigned the task of serving the twice-born as slaves, agricultural labourers and artisans. In this respect the picture of the lower orders, as it appears in the early Buddhist and Jain works, is not essentially dissimilar. The Buddhist texts repeatedly describe the members of the first three varṇas as opulent,\(^3\) but leave out the śūdras, the dāsas and the kammakaras. The Buddha is described as having visited the assemblies of the brāhmaṇa, the khattiya and gahapati devotees (upāsakas),\(^4\) but the assembly of the śūdras is not mentioned.

It would be superficial to suggest that mere ideas of ceremonial purity and cleanliness led to the exclusion of the śūdras from the sacrificial rites and table of the people of the higher varṇas.\(^5\) The fact has to be stressed that such ideas could develop only after a considerable section of society had been condemned to the position of a hereditary working class and consequently had come to be regarded as impure because of their

---

3. Aṅg-N. iv, 239; Samy N. iv, 239; Jāt. i, 49.
5. Dutt, Origin and Growth of Caste in India, p. 133. Even during this period the śūdras prepared food for the higher varṇas on the occasion of the vaiśnavadeva sacrifice.
manual work. This spirit of contempt for the physical labour of the lower orders ultimately degenerated into the practice of unapproachability.

The Dharmasūtras, especially of Vasiṣṭha and Gautama, display a strong tendency to reduce the vaiśyas to the position of śūdras in matters of purity, food and marriage—a process which has its parallel in the Buddhist texts. The Buddha declares that in the way they are addressed, received, approached and treated, the kṣatriyas and the brāhmaṇas take precedence over the vaiśyas and the śūdras. In a later Buddhist text (probably of the Mauryan period) gotras are associated only with the kṣatriyas and the brāhmaṇas. In an introductory passage of a Jātaka it is claimed that the Buddhas are never born in the vaiśya or the śūdra caste but they are born in the two other higher castes. This passage, however, does not form part of the Jātaka proper, and may be ascribed to a later period. A similar idea is expressed with regard to the birth of the Jain teachers, who are supposed to be never born in low, mean, degraded, poor, indigent or brāhmaṇical families. Apparently the brāhmaṇas are included in this list because of heretical hostility to them. But the remaining members of the list may be roughly assigned to the lower orders. The tendency to approximate the vaiśyas to the position of śūdras probably gained ground towards the end of our period. It may have swelled the numbers of the śūdras by throwing into their ranks impoverished sections of the vaiśyas, but this does not seem to have affected their status during this period. Similarly the reforming religions did not effect any significant change in the existing social system, and in the main the economic and politico-legal disabilities of the śūdras continued as ever.

There is very scanty information as to how the śūdras reacted to these disabilities. But even on this basis it is difficult to accept the view that “the bitter struggle for existence was wanting” and that the social order worked harmoniously. A passage from Vasiṣṭha enumerates the following characteristics of the śūdras: backbiting, untruth, cruelty, faultfinding, condemnation of the brāhmaṇas and continued hostility. This may give an indication of the hostile attitude of the śūdras to the existing order in general and to its ideological leaders, the brāhmaṇas, in particular. But, as shown earlier, the masters seem to have been more hostile and callous towards their slaves and hired labourers than the latter towards their masters. The solitary instance of the revolt of the dāsas, which is found in the Vinaya Piṭaka, is of a mild nature. It is said that at one time the slaves of the Śākyas of Kapilvastu got out of hand, and robbed and violated some Śākyan women, who had gone off to a jungle for feeding some monks.

4. anta kulesu vā panta...uccha...darīda...kisiṇa...bhikkhīga...mākopa...
Kalahāra, II. 17, cf. 22.

The usual form of protest adopted by the members of the lower orders was to run away from their master’s work. This happened not only in the case of the gahapatis oppressed with taxes but also in that of the artisans and the slaves. A later Jātaka informs us that, failing to carry out the orders for which pre-payment had been made, a settlement of woodworkers were summoned to fulfil the contract. But instead of “abiding in their lot” with “oriental stoicism” they made a mighty boat secretly and emigrated with their families, slipping down to the Gāṅgā by night, and so out to sea till they reached a fertile island. Escape from work seems to have been a common practice with the dāsas. Mrs. Rhys Davids wrongly states that there are no instances of runaway slaves. In the Jātakas there are at least two instances of slaves gaining freedom by flight. Runaway slaves are also mentioned as joining the Buddhist church.

5. sāvāyādāsakā suveruddhā hanti...sāvāyā yido aṭṭhinipisu ca...Vin., iv, 181-2.
8. CHI, i, 205.
a later Játa, in order to save their lives, intended victims for sacrifice offer to work in chains as slaves of a tyrannical priest.\(^1\) This may suggest that in some cases chains were used to prevent the escape of the slaves. The late Buddhist tradition about Makkhali Gosāla, the Ājivika leader, being a runaway slave, even if not true,\(^2\) presupposes the possibility of escape on the part of a slave. In one case the dāsas and the kammakaras, in the absence of any control from the master, ran away with his possessions.\(^3\) All these instances show that usually the members of the working class expressed their resentment against the existing order by fleeing from their work, slave revolts of the Greek or the Roman type being absent. The Dharmasūtras, however, state that in the case of an intermixture of the varṇas, even the brāhmaṇas and the vaiśyas can take up arms in self-defence, the kṣatriyas always enjoying this right.\(^4\) The fact that in an emergency only the members of the three varṇas could bear arms\(^5\) suggests that the lawgiver had in mind an eventuality when the śūdras might attempt to remove by force the frontiers of the varṇas. Although there is no example of such an attempt, except the mild revolt of the slaves in Kapilavastu, the provision laid down by Vasiṣṭha implies that, in view of the disabilities imposed on the śūdras, the members of the upper varṇas apprehended revolts on their part.

---

2. Bashām, op.cit., p. 37
4. Bau. Dhi. S., II.2.4.18. ātimatrāne varṇasamājārge... Vas. Dh. S. III. 24-25. The word varṇasamājārge occurs in Ms. B, which is considered as the most important by Filhér (Vasiṣṭha Dharmaśāstra, Intr. p.5). Other MSS. use the terms dharmasamājārge and varṇasamākāre.
5. Slaves were not used as combatants in war among the Greeks and Romans. Westermann, The Slave Systems of Greek and Roman Antiquity, p. 37.
CHAPTER V.

THE MAURYAN STATE CONTROL
(c. 300 B.C.—c. 200 B.C.)

Our chief source for the study of the position of the śūdras during the Mauryan period is the Arthasāstra of Kauṭilya, which can be supplemented by the fragments from the account of Megasthenes, and the inscriptions of Asoka. But perhaps no single question in ancient Indian history has been debated so much as the date and authenticity of the Arthasāstra. On the one hand it is passionately held that the work belongs to Kauṭilya, the minister of Candragupta; on the other this is vehemently denied and the work is ascribed to the first or the third century A.D. It is not possible to recapitulate the whole controversy, but certain observations seem to be necessary. The one great weakness of the arguments of the opposite school is their negative character. A verse at the end of the Arthasāstra clearly attributes this work to one who destroyed the Nandas—a tradition which is recorded in later brāhmaṇical and Jain literature. This verse is particularly valuable in view of the fact that such biographical notices about the authors of the Dharmasūtras and the Smṛtis are conspicuously wanting in other cases. Further, no literary source gives any alternative information suggesting that Kauṭilya belonged to some other period.

In a recent paper some new grounds have been adduced to show that the Arthasāstra was a work of the period from the first to the third centuries A.D. It is contended that in Kauṭilya’s classification of knowledge positive sciences had begun to be separated from philosophy, and that this process can be assigned to the early centuries of the Christian era. But there is no doubt that the principal disciplines mentioned by Kauṭilya, i.e. kalpa, (ritual), vyākaraṇa (grammar), and nirukta (etymology), existed as subjects of study in the pre-Mauryan period. It is to be further noted that the mention of the lokāyata (materialistic) system of philosophy in the Arthaśāstra does not imply any later date for that work. The lokāyata system is perhaps pre-Buddhistic, and definitely pre-Mauryan, for it is clearly mentioned in the early Buddhist texts.

1. A fairly exhaustive bibliography on the subject is to be found on pp. 285-6 of The Age of Imperial Unity.

It is also argued that the compilation of the Arthaśāstra presupposes a long tradition in the field of political science which could only develop in the course of several hundred years. This fact is acknowledged by Kauṭilya himself, who mentions as many as ten predecessors in his field. That there was a long tradition of this kind in the pre-Mauryan period is testified by the Dharmasūtras. According to one calculation the artha contents account for $\frac{1}{15}$ of the Āpastamba Dharmasūtra, $\frac{1}{12}$ of the Baudhāyana Dharmasūtra, $\frac{1}{6}$ of the Gautama Dharmasūtra and $\frac{1}{3}$ of the Vasiṣṭha Dharmasūtra. This points to the growing importance of the subject of artha, ultimately leading to the creation of an independent work on the Arthaśāstra of Kauṭilya.

It is further maintained that the Arthaśāstra policy of avoiding extremes and following a middle path is found in the philosophical work Madhyānta-vibhaṅga, which can be ascribed to the third century A.D. But the enunciation of the doctrine of the middle path known as the majjhima paṭipada is as old as the text of the Vinaya Piṭaka, where in his very first sermon the Buddha is represented as teaching his followers to abandon the the two extremes of asceticism and luxury.

1. Ibid., pp. 44-45.
2. Ibid., p. 45.
4. Dīgha N., i, 130 ; Majj. N., ii, 165.
5. Kalyanov, op. cit., p. 46.
6. AS, l. 2.8.
9. Vin., i, 10 ; Sanny. N., v, 421.
Finally, it is held that the kind of relations of production, the social system and political institutions described in the Arthasastra are in a much more advanced stage of development than those referred to in the reports of Megasthenes and in the inscriptions of Aśoka, and seem to be characteristic of the period between the first and the third centuries A.D.¹ But the evidence for such a view seems to be tenuous. The capital fact in the relations of production as known from the Arthasastra is a large measure of state control over all sectors of economy. The Kauṭilyan state does not only control trade, industry and mining, but the superintendents of agriculture, while working the state farms with the help of the dāsas and karmakaras, mobilise the services of the blacksmiths, the carpenters, the diggers etc. for the purpose.² This development is borne out by the fragments quoted by Strabo from Megasthenes. We learn that great officers of the state not only superintended the rivers and looked after irrigation, but also measured the land and supervised occupations connected with land such as those of woodcutters, carpenters, blacksmiths and miners.³ Similarly the social system outlined in the Arthasastra is modelled after the brāhmaṇical pattern.

The distinctive feature of the Arthasastra polity is to exalt monarchical power (rāja-sāsana) over all other sources of authority,⁴ and to make it felt among the subjects through as many as thirty departments. That this was the general policy of the Mauryan empire is in the main borne out by the inscriptions of Aśoka, who acted as a promulgator of the dharma and who possessed a fairly well organised bureaucracy. Significantly enough the tendency towards the all-pervading power of the state as represented by the king also manifested itself in the empire of Alexander and was carried forward by the Hellenistic monarchies which arose on its ruins.⁵ Thus Strabo, quoting from

³. McCrindle, ALMA, p. 86, Frag. 34.
Megasthenes, rightly compares the magistrates in India with similar officers in Hellenistic Egypt.\(^1\) Kauṭilya claims to have studied the practices prevailing in the contemporary states,\(^2\) and hence his exaltation of the monarchical power seems to reflect the spirit of the age.

But there is no denying the fact that, like so many other works, the Arthaśāstra may have been recast in later times. Therefore the problem is to find out the later accretions made to the primary kernal.\(^3\) Nevertheless, it is now generally recognised that the Arthaśāstra contains genuine Mauryan reminiscences.

Although the Mauryan empire extended practically over the whole of India except the far south and although Kauṭilya shows a wide geographical horizon, possibly the provisions laid down in the Arthaśāstra reflect conditions obtaining in Northern India. In so far as the Arthaśāstra measures were meant to serve the needs of the empire by overriding parochial and sectarian considerations, they may have been applied to the whole of it; but the detailed instructions regarding the control of economic activities or the policy of bringing virgin soil under the plough may have been limited to the areas near the heart of the empire.

In defining the functions of the śūdra varṇa Kauṭilya uses the Dharmasūtra terminology. He states that the śūdra’s means of livelihood is derived from his service of the twice-born.\(^4\) But they can support themselves by the professions of artisans, dancers, actors etc.,\(^5\) which are apparently independent occupations, not implying the service of the twice-born.

The Dharmasūtra terminology used by Kauṭilya may suggest that the śūdras continued to be completely dependent for their livelihood on their masters of the upper varṇas. But the Arthaśāstra introduces us to some independent śūdra cultivators owning land. Kauṭilya lays down that in founding a new settlement villages, consisting of a hundred to five hundred families each, should be set up at the interval of two or four miles and should be mainly inhabited by śūdra kāraṇakas (cultivators).

---

Some scholars take the terms śūdra and kāraṇaka as forming a dvandva compound (śūdrakāraṇakāraṇa), indicating thereby that śūdras were not peasants, while others treat śūdra as an adjective of kāraṇaka. The interpretation of this phrase is rendered difficult by the fact that it occurs neither anywhere else in the Arthaśāstra, nor in any brāhmanical text; the available commentaries on the Arthaśāstra do not cover the section on the jānapadānivesa. At one place the kāraṇaka has been considered as a karmakara, i.e. a hired labourer, but probably the word here cannot be taken in that sense. It is not unlikely that in new settlements initiated by the state landless śūdras were enrolled as temporary peasants.

(Kauṭilya provides that in the new settlements land should be made suitable for cultivation by the state and then given to the taxpayers for life. It seems that this settlement was made with śūdra cultivators, who were responsible for the payment of taxes to the state. But they held land on a tenure which probably did not apply to cultivators (presumably the vaiśyas) in the old villages. The śūdra cultivators were to be provided with grain, cattle and money, for, without these, landless labourers could not overnight turn into sturdy farmers and make use of the land assigned to them. The concession was made with the hope that they would willingly pay taxes to the state. Secondly, the śūdra cultivators probably did not

1. śūdrakāraṇakāraṇam kulāśātāram pāñcaśatākalaparam grāmām kṣetraśīmyamanāmaryānakṣam nīveṣayet. AŚ, II, 1.
2. I. J. Sorabji, Some Notes on the Adhyakṣaṇacāra. Bk. II of the Kauṭilyam Arthaśāstram, s.v. śūdrakāraṇaka prāya in AŚ, II, 1; J.J. Meyer, Das altindische Buch vom Welt- und Staateleben, tr. of AŚ; I.
3. TGS, i, 109; SS's tr. of AŚ, II, 1.
4. TGS's comm. to the term dāṅkārmakaraṇkalpa in AŚ, III, 13.
5. AŚ, II, 1. TGS interprets the term 'aikopuruṣalā' as 'individually' (i, 111) and SS (tr.) as 'for life time'.
6. AŚ, II, 1.
enjoy security of tenure. Kauṭilya provides that if in the settlements cultivators fail to carry on their work, they will be distrained of their lands, which will be allotted to the trader (vaidehaka) or the village officer (grāmabhytaka) for cultivation.¹ This may not have been the case with the old vaishya cultivators, who enjoyed de facto hereditary possession over their fields.

In the new settlements, besides agriculture, the services of the śūdra population could be utilised for other purposes. It is stated that a new settlement, which is mainly inhabited by the śūdras (avara varnaprāya), is capable of yielding sure results and bearing all burdens imposed on them by the state.² According to the commentary Nayacandrikā the meaning of the term bhoga indicates that the śūdras were to be engaged not only in cultivation but also in carrying loads and building forts.³ It is also said that a settlement inhabited by śūdras enjoys the advantage of numerical strength.⁴ For the purpose of opening up new lands to cultivation or rehabilitating old sites the śūdras were to be drafted from the areas which were overpopulated or induced to migrate from foreign kingdoms.⁵ It is stated that the jnnapada should have a numerous population of the lowest varṇa.⁶ All this would suggest that the country had a considerable śūdra population, perhaps the majority belonging to this varṇa. It is, however, not known what percentage of this population was accounted for by these tax-paying independent śūcra cultivators. Such cultivators, being confined to the new settlements, must have been limited in number. And in other parts of the country, mainly inhabited by established vaishya peasants, the śūdras may not have been principally liable for payment of the

1. Ibid.
2. tasyān ca tvarvarṇābhinvetam sa ca bhogaśahattādecceravarnaprāyā śreyasi bāhulyāt dhruvavateca...AŚ, VII. 11. The Nayacandrikā (p.33) explains the term avaravarṇaprāya as śūdaprāya.
4. AŚ, VII. 11.
5. paradelāpavāhanena svadeśābhīgyandevamanena ca. AŚ, II. 1.
6. avaravarṇaprāyaḥ. AŚ, VI. 1.
land revenue and other charges, as is suggested by Ghoshal. Even the śūdras who were peasants in new settlements were not exempt from the imposition of forced labour, for in the section on the janapadenivēla Kauṭilya warns that the king should protect agriculture against oppressive corvée (viṣṭi).2

Probably the main body of the śūdra population continued to be employed as agricultural labourers and slaves. Slavery, as known from the Dharmasūtras, was domestic in nature. Kauṭilya is the first and the only brāhmaṇical writer who furnishes evidence of dāsas being employed in agricultural production on a substantial scale.3 While in the early Pāli texts there are only three instances of big farms, in the Mauryan period there seem to have existed numerous such farms, worked with slaves and hired labourers in the direct employ of the sitādhyakṣa (superintendent of agriculture). He supplied them with agricultural implements and other accessories, and requisitioned the services of carpenters, blacksmiths and other artisans for the purpose.4 This fact is broadly attested by Megasthenes, who mentions the officers superintending occupations connected with land and also those of the artisans.5 Arrian speaks of the superintendents of agriculture,6 who probably performed the functions of the sitādhyakṣa. Strabo informs us that the third caste of shepherds and hunters led a nomadic life and were given an allowance of corn from the king for keeping out the wild beasts and birds from the land.7 They seem to be similar to the nomadic aboriginals (sarparāhāḍikāḥ, i.e. people engaged in catching snakes and others),8 who were pressed into the service of agriculture by the sitādhyakṣa.9 The Mauryan state therefore was a great employer of dāsas and karmakaras, artisans and the aboriginal peoples, who apparently belonged to

3. Ibid., II. 14.
4. Ibid.
5. McCrindle, AIMA, p. 86, Frag. 34.
6. Ibid., AICL, p. 53, fn. 4.
7. Ibid., p. 48, Frag. 41.
8. According to Bhāṭṭasvāmin the rajjuvartakaś were śvāpākṣes and others, and the sarparāhāḍikās were śabarās and others. JBORS, xii, 143.
the śūdra class. And in this respect the organization of agricultural production in this period resembles to some extent that which prevailed in Greece and Rome.

Kauṭilya lays down that, if fields cannot be sown (apparently due to shortage of labour power), they can be leased to those who cultivate for half the share of the produce.¹ Those who live by bodily labour (i.e. karmakaras) and therefore do not possess seeds and oxen necessary for cultivation can cultivate such lands, but may retain only one fourth or one fifth of the produce; presumably their seed and oxen were provided by the state.² Kauṭilya enunciates the principle that the sharecroppers should pay to the king as much as they can without entailing any hardship upon themselves, but he does not indicate the nature of such hardships.³ It seems that the sharecroppers were also allotted some land with hard soil, for which they had not to pay anything to the state.⁴ Evidently there were two kinds of sharecroppers—the one retaining half and the other retaining $\frac{1}{3}$ or $\frac{1}{5}$ of the crops. The former are described by the commentator Bhaṭṭasvāmin as grāmyakutumbinaḥ.⁵ In the section on the durganiavāsa (building of the capital) Kauṭilya provides that the kutumbinas should be settled on the boundary of the capital to meet the requirements of their field work and other occupations.⁶ It is said that they shall work in flower gardens, forest gardens, vegetable gardens and paddy fields⁷ and collect plenty of grain and merchandise as authorised. In this context the term kutumbinaḥ has been explained by T. Gaṇapati Śāstri as a person belonging to the lowest varṇa (varṇāvarāgām),⁸ and by Shama Sastry as families of workmen.⁹ Thus the kutumbinas were probably śūdra sharecroppers and agricultural labourers. This use of the term is rather unusual since in most

¹ AŚ, II. 24.
³ AŚ, II. 24.
⁴ anyatra kyāḥrekhyaḥ. Ibid.
⁵ TBOCS, xii, 137.
⁶ karmāṇitakṣetrapalena va kutumbinaṁ simānaṁ sthāpayet. AŚ, II. 4.
⁷ In his translation SS says that these were allotted to them, but there is nothing in the text to support this.
⁸ i. 130.
⁹ Tr., p. 54.
sources kutumbinaḥ means simply the head of a family, but the context indicates that here it has a specialised meaning.

Possibly in the old settlements a large number of śudras, agricultural labourers, slaves and artisans was employed by proprietors of the higher varṇas. The gopa, who is in charge of the collection of taxes from the peasants, is required to register the total number of the inhabitants in each village and also of half a dozen producing sections of society—namely the karṣakas (cultivators), the gorakṣakas (herdsmen or owners of cattle), the vaidechakas (traders), the kārus (artisans), the karmakaras and the dāsas. It seems that the list includes the members of the two lower varṇas, the first three groups belonging to the vaiśyas and the remaining three to the śudras. Megasthenes does not enumerate the producing castes in this order. While the vaiśya agriculturists (karṣakas) of Kauṭilya roughly correspond to the caste of husbandmen mentioned by Megasthenes, the vaiśya traders and śūdra artisans and labourers correspond to the third caste of Megasthenes the members of which work at trades, vend wares and are employed in bodily labour. Megasthenes further adds that some of these pay taxes and render to the state certain prescribed services. The first part of the statement probably refers to the traders and the second part to the artisans and labourers. In the Arthasastra the śudras probably come under the category of the non-taxpayers, whose number also is to be recorded by the gopa. In the tax-paying villages a list is to be maintained of those who supply free labour (viṣṭi) to the state. Commenting on a passage of the Arthasastra Bhaṭṭavāmin suggests that one type of villages was meant only for supply of free labour in lieu of taxes and its inhabitants were employed in building fortresses etc. T. Geṇapati Śāstri rightly

2. AS, II. 35.
4. Ibid. AICh, p. 53, Strabo, Frag. 46.
5. Ibid.
6. AS, II. 35.
7. Ibid.
8. AS, II. 15. elavanto viṣṭip atikarāḥ...durgādikarmē 329bhiḥ. JBOBS, xii, 196.
says that this type of work was done by the karmakaras,\(^1\) for the class of the dāsas and the karmakaras is regarded as always liable to forced labour.\(^2\) All this would suggest that, excepting those who were temporary peasant proprietors in the new settlements established by the state or sharecroppers working on the crown lands, the sūdras were mostly tax-free and were generally employed as agricultural labourers and slaves, who did not possess any independent means of livelihood.

Kauṭilya gives us some information about the working conditions of the herdsmen, who seem to have been employed in large numbers by the state, under the general control of the superintendent of cattle.\(^3\) He fixes their wages at \(1/10\) of the butter clarified,\(^4\) but is very particular about their functions. While emphasising the responsibilities of the herdsmen, Kauṭilya provides that, if the loss of the animal is on account of the fault of the herdsmen, even capital punishment can be inflicted on him.\(^5\) This extreme measure, which is not mentioned in the law-books of the pre-Mauryan period, was either inspired by the great economic importance attached to animal wealth, or by the teachings of Buddhism and Jainism, or by both the factors.

We may next examine the Arthaśāstra evidence regarding the employment, control and wages of the artisans in so far as they throw light on the general position of the sūdras. Reference has already been made to the artisans who were mobilised by the state to help agriculture. Many others seem to have been employed by the state in weaving,\(^6\) mining,\(^7\) storekeeping,\(^8\) manufacture of arms,\(^9\) metal work\(^10\) etc. In the earlier period artisans such as weavers appear in the employment of the gahapati, but now they are employed in larger numbers by the

1. i, 344.
2. ...dāvakarmakaraevargasena viśṭh. AŚ, II. 15.
3. AŚ, II. 29.
4. Ibid., III. 13.
5. svayam hantā ghātu, yitaḥ kṛtā hārayita ca vadhyah. Ibid., II. 29.
6. AŚ, II. 23.
7. Ibid., II. 12.
8. Ibid., II. 15.
9. Ibid., II. 18.
10. Ibid., II. 17.
The artisans probably owned their tools, but were supplied with raw materials by the state. There is no mention of slaves being engaged in any of these crafts. They also did not work in mining operations, which were conducted by the karmakaras.

But the employment of artisans by the state seems to have been mainly limited to the capital and perhaps the important cities, which had a considerable artisan population. It is laid down that the artisans can reside to the north of the royal palace and the guilds of workmen and others should be allotted their residence in the several corners of the capital. It is further stated that people of the śūdra caste and artisans manufacturing worsted threads, cotton threads, bamboo mats, skins, armour, weapons and scabbards should be allotted their dwellings to the west of the royal palace. Probably some of these worked under sūtrādhyaś, while others worked under the superintendent of armoury. Megasthenes informs us that the armour-makers and ship-builders received wages and provisions from the kings and worked only for them. Besides, in the city there was a committee of five to look after everything relating to industrial arts. All this suggests that the state control and employment of artisans was mainly confined to the cities. But Megasthenes also states that great officers of the state supervised the occupations of woodcutters, carpenters, blacksmiths and miners, which may indicate some sort of general control over the artisans living outside the city.

The Aśvalāyana is the earliest Indian text which lays down general rules regarding the relation between the employers and the employees. Artisans are regarded as a source of

1. AŚ, II. 23.
2. Ibid., II. 12.
3. Ibid., II. 4.
4. tataḥ paramārūṇāḥ śatravanacarmacarmalastraḥ c nāyakā ca api śuddrasca paricīṇām disamadhicaye u. AŚ, II. 4.
5. AŚ, II. 23.
6. Ibid., II. 18.
8. Ibid., AIMA, p. 87, Frag. 34.
9. Ibid., p. 86, Frag. 34.
trouble, against which several measures are provided in the section on the kārūkara-rakṣaṇaṃ. The artisans must fulfil their engagements as to time, place and form of work. Failure in this respect, except when due to "troubles and calamities", will involve not only the forfeiture of a quarter of their wages, but also a fine twice the amount of wages and the payment of damages into the bargain.\(^1\) The violation of instructions in the course of work shall be punished with the forfeiture of wages and a fine twice the amount.\(^2\) A servant, who neglects his work, for which pre-payment has been made, shall be fined 12 pañās and be made to work till his job is finished.\(^3\) He will not be, however, subjected to such a fine if he is incapable of doing work due to reasons beyond his control.\(^4\) On the other hand Kauṭilya also lays down certain regulations protecting the artisans. Thus those who seek to deprive the artisans of their just earnings, by minimising the quality of their work or obstructing the sale and purchase of goods, shall be fined a thousand pañās.\(^5\) An employer not taking work from his labourer shall be fined 12 pañās,\(^6\) and if he refuses to take work without any sufficient grounds, the work will be taken as done.\(^7\) Kauṭilya concedes one privilege to the artisans who are organised into guilds. They can have a grace of seven nights over and above the period agreed upon for executing the contract.\(^8\)

As regards the fixation of wages, Kauṭilya enunciates the general principle that wages should be fixed according to the time and quality of the work. He further states that artisans, musicians, physicians, cooks and other workmen shall obtain as much wages as similar persons employed elsewhere usually get, or as much as experts shall fix.\(^9\) The servant shall get the promised wages; but if they are not settled first, a cultivator

---

1. AŚ, IV. 1.
2. Ibid.
3. AŚ, III. 14.
4. Ibid.
5. AŚ, IV. 2.
6. bhavatūkṣyāyato bhūtakṣyākurete tā devaśapono devaḥ.  AŚ, III. 15.
7. Ibid.
8. AŚ, III. 14.
(i.e. an agricultural labourer) should get $\frac{1}{10}$ of the crops grown, a herdsman $\frac{1}{10}$ of the butter clarified and a trader $\frac{1}{10}$ of the sale proceeds.¹ Here a distinction has to be made between the sharecropping agricultural labourers who were entitled to receive $\frac{1}{4}$ or $\frac{1}{5}$ of the crops on the crown lands, and the general agricultural labourer who received only $\frac{1}{10}$ of the crops.

According to Kauṭilya disputes regarding wages are to be decided on the strength of evidence furnished by witnesses. If they are not available, the employer shall be examined.² The fact that the employee is not to be examined in this connection obviously makes it difficult to establish the guilt of the master. But if it is found that he has failed to pay wages, the master should be punished with a fine either ten times the amount of the wages or six paṇas. Besides, misappropriation of wages will mean a fine of twelve paṇas or of five times the amount of the wages.³ On the basis of these rules we get two different rates of wages, namely $\frac{3}{5}$ paṇa or $2\frac{2}{5}$ paṇa. Thus it seems that the daily wage of a worker varied from $\frac{3}{5}$ paṇa to $2\frac{2}{5}$ paṇas. At one place Kauṭilya states that, in addition to the provisions, the agricultural workers should receive a monthly wage of $1\frac{1}{8}$ paṇas. The Arthasastra shows a wide gap between the pay of the higher officials, who, as will be shown, were recruited from the upper classes, and the artisans who belonged to the lower orders. The highest pay is provided for the priest (ṛtvij), the teacher, the minister, the purohitā, the commander of the army etc., who get a (monthly) salary of 48,000 paṇas.⁴ Lesser officials are recommended a salary of 24,000, 12,000 or 8,000 paṇas⁵ but the artisans are recommended 120 paṇas.⁶ It is important, however, to note that the vardhakī, who seems to have been the chief carpenter, is provided a salary of 2,000 paṇas like the physician and the charioteer.⁷ Consideration is also shown to the grāmabhartaka (the

---

¹ AŚ, III. 13.
² Ibid.
³ Ibid.
⁴ AŚ, V. 3.
⁵ Ibid.
⁶ Ibid.
⁷ Ibid.
village officer) and the servant leading the spies, the first getting a salary of 500 paṇas and the second getting 200 paṇas. The smallest salary of 60 paṇas is recommended for the servants who are in charge of quadrupeds and bipeds, workmen doing miscellaneous work, attendants upon the royal person, bodyguards and the procurer of free labour. Presuming that this payment was made on a monthly basis, it works out at the rate of two paṇas a day for an ordinary labourer. But the rate of \( \frac{3}{5} \) paṇa a day worked out earlier may suggest that private individuals paid even less than 2 paṇas.

The artisans and wage earners were the worst paid members of society, but we can have no precise idea about their standard of living on account of the lack of information about the purchasing power of the paṇa. Kautšila, however, provides that the dāsas and karmakaras in the employ of the state should be given “particles of rice” for their support by the superintendent of the storehouse. What remains after such disposal should be given to the cooks engaged in preparing cakes, who may have been slaves, for these were engaged in cooking in the pre-Mauryan period. In connection with the disposal of bad liquor it is said that this should be given as wages to the dāsas and karmakaras because of the low type of their work. Kautšila differentiates between the diet of an ordinary ārya and that of a śūdra. An ārya should get as his ration one prastha of pure and unsplilt rice, \( \frac{1}{3} \) prastha of salt, \( \frac{1}{4} \) prastha of soup and \( \frac{1}{4} \) prastha of butter or oil; while anavāra should get the same quantity of rice and salt but \( \frac{1}{4} \) prastha of soup and only half of oil recommended for an

1. The grāmabhūtaka cannot be taken as an ordinary village servant, as SS thinks (Tr., 277); his salary of 500 paṇas shows that he was a village officer of some importance.
2. AŚ, V. 3.
3. Ibid.
4. Nāpi kāh dāmakarmakaras ātakārāśāmato nāyā asubāsakāhāmāyām prayaccheta. AŚ, II. 15. The term nāpīkā here presumably means a broken part of a grain. The workmen were given the broken grain after threshing.
5. Ibid.
6. dāmakarmakāre bhya tāvetām dadyā as, II. 25 with the comm. of TGS, i, 292.
ārya,\(^{1}\) butter being not provided in his case. In this context an avara means a person of the low caste (nikṣṭanām) and is a śūdra. But an ārya stands for an ordinary member of the higher varṇas,\(^{2}\) for rations for the āryas of higher grades such as the king, queen and chiefs of army are provided in much greater quantities.\(^{3}\) All this would show that the śūdras were fed on inferior food.

During the Mauryan period the economic position of the śūdras seems to have undergone several changes. For the first time a section of the śūdras, who were hitherto agricultural labourers, were provided with land in new settlements, though differing in some respects from the old cultivators. They also came to be engaged as sharecroppers on the crown lands. But probably the śūdras were employed on a far larger scale as slaves and labourers in agricultural production by the state. The members of the lower order, who lived in villages either working under the individual cultivators or independently, were subjected to corvée on a much larger scale than in the period of the Dharmasūtras, when it was mostly confined to the artisans.\(^{4}\) The phenomenon had become now so widespread that a class of government servants known as the viṣṭi bandhakās worked as procurers of free labour.\(^{5}\) Though as workers and artisans the śūdras were the worst paid people in society, fixation of wages may have helped to improve their position. Nevertheless, there seems to have been no appreciable change in their standard of living, except perhaps in the case of the śūdra karṣākas.

Unlike the Dharmasūtras, Kauṭilya does not make any explicit statement excluding the śūdras from high administrative posts. But his list of requisite qualifications for kingship and high governmental posts shows that these were looked upon as the special preserve of the members of the three higher varṇas. He states that, in preference to a strong and base-born king,

1. pumsaḥ sadbhāgassūpaḥ ardhasnehamavānapām. The term praṣṭaḥ, the alternative reading for pumsa, mentioned by SS and accepted by TGS seems to be the correct reading. cf. Prana Natha, Eco. Condition in Anc. India, pp. 150-1.
2. He is described as a madhyamapratipattiṣa ṣadhuṣaṛṣyaḥ by Brāhmaṇaṃ.
3. AS, II. 15.
4. T. W. Rhys Davids, Buddhist India, p. 49.
5. AS, V. 3.
people will naturally obey a king of noble birth, even if he be weak, and therefore in his opinion the king should be born of a higher family. He says that just as the reservoir of water belonging to the caṇḍālas serves only their purpose, so also the king of low birth confers patronage only on low born people and not on the āryas. Incidentally Kauṭilya’s dislike of a low born king shows that he could not have agreed to serve under a king born of a śūdra mother. Hence it is not possible to make much of the śūdra origin of the Mauryas, as has been done in some cases. It is practically certain that Candragupta belonged to the Moriya clan of the kṣatriya community.

In the Arthaśāstra the amātyas constitute the highest cadre of officials from which the chief priest (purohita), the minister (mantrin), the collector (sāmāhārtā), the treasurer (sannidhātā), officers in charge of the harem, ambassadors and the superintendents of more than two dozen departments are to be recruited. But an item common to the qualifications of the amātyas laid down by Kauṭilya and other thinkers whom he quotes is noble birth. This is expressed variously as “father and grandfather being amātyas”, abhijana and jānapadobhijātaḥ. It is doubtful whether such a qualification could provide any scope for the śūdras. As Aristotle puts it, good birth is nothing but ancient wealth and virtue combined,—a thing which could hardly be found among the lower orders. Megasthenes mentions the professional class of councillors and assessors, who, though small in number, monopolised the highest posts of government, executive and judicial. At another place he states that the noblest and the richest took part in the direction of the state affairs, administered justice and sat in council with the king. That they formed an exclusive caste is obvious from

1. AS, VIII. 2.
2. Ibid., VI. 1.
4. PHAI, p. 267.
6. Ibid.
7. Politics, p. 163.
9. Ibid., p. 138, Frag. 56.
the rules that they could not marry outside their own caste, exchange one profession or trade for another, or follow more than one business. All this shows that the avenues to the higher bureaucracy were closed to the people of the lower orders.

The śūdras, however, were given a place in the espionage system, which constituted a vital part of the Mauryan administrative machinery. Kauṭilya provides that, amongst others, women of the śūdra caste can be employed as wandering spies. It is further said that those who are employed as procurers of water for bathing, shampooers, bed-makers, barbers, toilet makers, water servants, actors, dancers and singers, should keep an eye on the private character of the officers of the king. Evidently most of these seem to have been śūdras. Working as menial servants, and thus coming into contact with their masters every minute, they were thought to be the best persons to report correctly on their private character. Further, according to Kauṭilya, almost all sections of people, including cultivators, herdsmen and jungle tribes, should be recruited as spies to watch the movement of enemies—a provision which covers śūdras as well. Members of the lower orders also acted as messengers, for Kauṭilya states that messengers, though untouchables, do not deserve death.

What is more important, the Arthaśāstra provides for the enrolment of śūdras in the army. The Dharmasūtras give the impression that normally only the kṣatriyas, and in emergency only the brāhmaṇas and the vaisyās, could take up arms. While defining the army as an indispensable element of the state, Kauṭilya also declares that the hereditary army purely composed of kṣatriya soldiers is the most splendid. But he has no liking for the army of brāhmaṇas, who can be won over by salutations and supplications. On the other hand he prefers the army composed of vaisyās and śūdras on account of its numerical

1. Ibid., pp. 85-6, Frag. 33.
2. AS, I. 12.
3. Ibid.
4. Ibid.
5. ... antāvasāyino'pyavadiyāḥ. AS, I. 16.
6. Ibid.
7. AS, IX. 2.
strength.¹ But it is doubtful whether the members of the two lower varṇas were actually recruited as soldiers during this period. Megasthenes clearly states that the husbandmen (roughly corresponding to the vaiśyas) were exempted from military service, and soldiers were meant to protect them.² Both Arrian and Strabo speak of the fighting-men as forming the fifth caste of the Indian population and being maintained at the expense of the state.³ That there was a class of soldiers can also be inferred from the use of the term bhaṭamayēṣu in the Asokan inscriptions.⁴ We learn from Megasthenes that one division of the army supplied servants, who performed miscellaneous tasks, such as acting as bandsmen, looking after the horses, and serving as mechanics and their assistants.⁵ Arrian also refers to the servants who attend not only on the soldiers but also on their horses, elephants and chariots.⁶ Possibly śūdras were recruited as menial servants and attendants in the standing army and not as full-fledged soldiers. Kauṭilya’s rule, however, may suggest that vaiśyas and śūdras could be enlisted in the army in times of emergency. In the new settlements aboriginal tribes such as the vāgurikas, the śabaras, the pulindas and the caṇḍālas were entrusted with the work of internal defence.⁷

In the administration of law and justice Kauṭilya follows the principle of varṇa legislation. According to him, degraded people (patita), caṇḍālas and persons of mean avocations are among those who cannot act as witnesses in civil suits, except in the transactions of their respective communities.⁸ He also lays down that the servant cannot give evidence against the master.⁹ Similarly the pledged labourer and the slave cannot enter into agreements on behalf of their masters.¹⁰ Kauṭilya provides

¹ bahulasāram vā vaiśyasūdrabalami. Ibid.
² McCrindle, AIMA, pp. 83-84, Frag. 33.
³ Ibid., p. 217, Arrian, Frag. 12; AICL, p. 53, Strabo, Frag. 47.
⁴ R.E. 4 (Shāhībāzgarhi), l. 12.
⁵ McCrindle, AIMA, p. 88, Frag. 34.
⁶ Ibid., p. 217, Frag. 12.
⁷ AŚ, II. 1.
⁸ AŚ, III. 11.
⁹ Ibid.
¹⁰ AŚ, III. 1.
for different kinds of warnings tendered by the court to the members of the different varṇas. The most severe warning is to be given to a śūdra who is reminded of terrible spiritual and worldly consequences which shall follow as a result of his false deposition. In this connection only the śūdra is to be fined and bound down to service by the court, there being no mention of these things in the case of the three upper varṇas. This provision is immediately followed by another, in which Kauṭilya prescribes a fine of 12 paṇas for witnesses giving false evidence. This may suggest that the penal measure was probably meant for the śūdra witness. Megasthenes says that a person convicted of bearing false witness suffers the mutilation of his extremities. This measure may have been confined either to the members of the lower orders or to a particular area.

In the award of punishments Kauṭilya upholds the varṇa distinctions of the Dharmasūtras. Thus, according to him, if among the members of the four varṇas and the antavasāyins (untouchables), any one of a lower caste speaks ill of a person of a higher caste, he shall have to pay a higher fine than in the case of a person of a higher caste defaming a person of a lower caste. The Arthaśāstra has also the rule that the limb of a śūdra with which he strikes a brāhmaṇa should be amputated. We are in doubt whether this passage is the work of Kauṭilya, for it agrees rather with the extremist attitude of Manu. In another provision Kauṭilya states that, if a kṣatriya commits adultery with an unguarded brāhmaṇa woman, he shall be punished with the highest amercement, a vaiśya shall be deprived of his property, and a śūdra shall be burnt alive wound round in mats. A śvapāka who commits adultery with an ārya woman shall be put to death, while the woman shall have her ears and

1. AŚ, III. 11.
2. ... avyathāvāde danyāscūnubandhaḥ. Ibid. In his translation SS (p. 200) leaves out the word ‘unubandhaḥ’.
3. AŚ, III.11.
4. McCrindle, AlMA, p. 70, Frag. 27.
5. AŚ, III. 18.
6. AŚ, III. 19.
7. brāhmaṇayāmagnutāyōm kṣatriyasyottamaḥ, sarvasvan vaiśyaḥ, śūdraḥ kaśāgniḥ dahyet. AŚ, IV. 13.
nose cut off. It is not surprising that these severe measures were applied against the śūdras and śvapākas, for even in the case of adultery against a woman of the śvapāka caste Kauṭilya provides for the branding and banishment of the guilty.

Kauṭilya’s law of prohibition of some kinds of food and drink does not apply in the same way to the members of all the varṇas. Thus a person who causes a brāhmaṇa to partake of prohibited food or drink shall be punished with the highest amercement; the same offence against a kṣatriya will be punished with the middle amercement, against the vaisya with the first amercement and against the śūdra with a fine of 54 paṇas. In the case of embezzlement or misappropriation the most severe punishment is laid down for the menial servants. If an officer or a clerk is guilty of this offence, he shall be fined, but in such a case a servant shall be given capital punishment.

In the law of inheritance Kauṭilya maintains the old distinction between the varṇas. Sons born out of the intermixture of castes such as the sūta, the māgadh, the vrātya and the rathakāra are entitled to their shares only in the case of abundance of paternal property. Kauṭilya further provides that the sons who are inferior in birth to the above kinds of sons are entitled to no share but can depend for subsistence on the eldest son. This naturally excludes the āyogava, the kṣattā, the niṣāda, the pulkasa and the caṇḍālas from shares. The position of the pāraśava (i.e. a son begotten by a brāhmaṇa on a śūdra woman), however, is better. It is said that, if a brāhmaṇa has no issue, the pāraśava son shall get one third share in paternal property; the remaining two shares shall devolve either on his surviving sapiṇḍas, or, failing them, on his teacher or student.

1. TGS construes this passage differently from SS. While the former has śvapākasyādārgamicn vadhah (ii, 181), the latter has śūdrazvapākasya bhātṛyāganan vadhah (ĀŚ, IV. 13, p. 236). TGS, however, seems to be correct in using the word ārya which also occurs in the Munich manuscript (Tr., p. 264).

2. ĀŚ, IV. 13.
3. Ibid.
4. ĀŚ, II. 5.
5. ĀŚ, III. 6.
6. Ibid.
7. Ibid.
8. Ibid.
suggest that, if the brāhmaṇa father had no issue, even the sons born from the śūdra wife were given considerable shares. In the case of a brāhmaṇa having sons from wives of all the four castes, Kauṭilya accepts the Dharmaśutra principle of division of shares. He extends this even to the case of kṣatriya and vaiśya fathers begetting sons on the wives from three or two castes, in every case the śūdra son getting the smallest share.

The question of the civic status of the śūdra vis-a-vis the position of slaves in the Arthaśāstra needs a careful examination. Like the authors of the Dharmaśutras, Kauṭilya clearly recognises an ārya as a free man, and states that on no account can an ārya be subjected to slavery. As a corollary to this he ordains that the selling or mortgaging by kinsmen of a śūdra who is not a born slave, has not attained majority, but is an āryaprāṇa (ārya in birth), shall be punished with a fine of 12 paṇas, and that everybody engaged in the transaction shall be severely penalised. This implies that sons of the three higher varṇas begotten on a śūdra woman cannot be reduced to slavery through the process of purchases or pledging: perhaps they might be relegated to that position through other processes such as judicial punishment, capture in war, voluntary enslavement etc. Thus Kauṭilya refers to the āryaprāṇa captured in war being reduced to slavery. Therefore his rule clearly shows that, with the exception of the minor śūdra sons of the members of the three varṇas, other members of the fourth varṇa could be made slaves. Even in the case of these specified śūdras, whose numbers must have been very small, the fine prescribed for making themselves is the smallest, i.e. 12 paṇas, which gradually increases in the cases of the vaiśya, the kṣatriya and the brāhmaṇa.

1. AŚ, III. 6.
2. Ibid.
3. AŚ, III. 13.
4. udāraḍāvavjamāryaprāṇamaapraaptavyāvahāram śūdram vikrayādhānam naya-tawajanasya deśadāpamā danaḥ. AŚ, III. 13.
6. Altogether nine sources of slavery are specified in the AŚ (III. 3). Other varieties also may have existed.
7. AŚ, III. 13.
8. Ibid.
But under certain special circumstances such as domestic distress or inability to pay fines or debts even the life of an ārya could be mortgaged.¹ So far as these mortgaged people (āhitakas) are concerned, Kautūliya lays down a number of liberal rules. It is provided that his kinsman shall redeem the pledged person as soon as possible. He cannot be employed in impure work. If a pledged woman attends on her master while bathing naked, or if the master violates her chastity or abuses or hurts her, he shall not be entitled to the value of that woman, which will automatically secure her freedom. In the case of rape with a pledged young woman, the master shall not only forfeit the purchase value, but also pay a certain amount (śulka) to her and twice the amount (of the śulka) to the government. If the master has illicit connection with a pledged female slave working as a nurse, he shall be punished with the first amercement. In the same context it is stated that use of violence towards a high born attendant shall entitle him to run away.² This shows that the āhitakas also probably hailed from the higher varṣa. Unfortunately in the translation of the above passage Shama Sastry does not make any distinction between the dāsa and the āhitaka, and indiscriminately uses the word slave for both of them.³ But that the dāsas and the āhitakas were two distinct categories of employees is clear from several statements of Kautūliya. He prescribes that agreements entered into by the dāsa and the āhitaka should be declared void.⁴ He also states that the king should see to it that people pay attention to the claims of their dāsas and āhitakas.⁵ Kautūliya further lays down that a woman who yields herself to a dāsa, a paricāraka (servant) or an āhitaka shall be put to death⁶ In all these cases Shama Sastry recognises that the āhitaka is different from a dāsa and describes him as a pledged labourer or a

¹. atha vaṛyaṃdaḥśaya kulabandhanatūryāṇāmāpadi niṣṭhramāṃ ca dāhigemya balaṃ sāhīyyadātāram va pūraṃ niṣkripāram. AŚ, III. 13.
². siddhamapadāraksasyābhātiprajātasya apakramavyam. AŚ, III. 13.
³. Tr., p. 206.
⁴. AŚ, III. 1.
⁵. Ibid., II. 1.
⁶. Ibid., IV. 13.
hireling. Since in the chapter on the dāsakarmakarakalpa the āhūtakas are confounded with the dāsas, the liberal rules applying to the former have been taken as applying to the dāsa, as well. But the above analysis would show that these rules of Kauṭilya apply to the pledged labourers, mostly women and presumably belonging to the āryan varṇas. The above rules also imply that the ordinary dāsas could be assaulted, abused and employed in impure work by the master.

Several provisions of Kauṭilya regarding the emancipation of slaves seem to apply exclusively to the āryas reduced to servile status. It is enacted that the child of one who sells himself should be considered as an ārya (free). A person can earn without prejudicing the work of his master, inherit his ancestral property and thus regain his āryahood (āryatvam) by paying his purchase value. An āryaprāna who has been captured in war can secure his emancipation through the payment of ransom. Failure to recognise a dāsa as an ārya on the receipt of proper ransom shall be punished with a fine of 12 paṇas. In all such instances the question of regaining āryahood can arise only in the case of those who had it before and not in the case of the śūdras. At best the above provisions can apply to the sons of the three higher varṇas born from śūdra mothers.

Kauṭilya uses two terms to indicate the emancipation of servile people. In the case of the āryas the term āryatvam is used. But when the non-āryan slaves are to be freed, the term adāsa is used. For instance, it is laid down that, if the master begets a child on his female slave, the mother along with the child should be regarded as free. If, for the sake of supporting her family, the mother decides to continue as a slave, her mother, brother and sister shall be liberated (adāsāḥ svabh). It seems that these dāsas ceased to be slaves, but they

1. Tr. of AS, III. 1 and II. 1.
5. Ibid.
6. Ibid.
8. AS, III. 13 after TGS.
could not become āryas. We may note that in the early Pāli texts the term used for the manumission of the slaves is bhujjissa, and it is expressly stated that only among the Yavanas can an ārya become a dāsa and vice versa.

It is difficult to say whether the rule providing for the emancipation through the payment of purchase value applied to the non-āryan slaves in the same way as it did to the āryan slaves. Perhaps even on payment the liberation of the śūdra slaves lay at the discretion of the master. But they were also sometimes emancipated, for it is laid down that selling or mortgaging the life of a male or female slave once liberated shall be punished with a fine of 12 pañcas, with the exception of those who enslave themselves. It appears that even an ordinary slave could keep property of which he could not be deprived by his master. This could naturally help him in securing his liberation.

Kauṭilya lays down some rules to regulate the treatment of slaves, which may have applied to the śūdra slaves as well as to those of higher varṇas. He directs that a slave who is less than eight years old and without relatives cannot be employed in mean avocations against his will, and cannot be sold or mortgaged in a foreign land. Similarly a pregnant female slave cannot be sold or pledged without any provision for her confinement. Again, the master cannot put his slave under confinement without any reason. In the chapter on the janapada-niveśa it is enjoined that the king should compel the people to pay attention to the claims of their dāsas and āhitakas. This sounds similar to the repeated instructions of Aśoka that slaves and servants should be treated kindly.

But the liberal laws of Kauṭilya mostly cover the āhitakas and the ex-āryan slaves whose numbers must have been small; only a few of these laws apply to the greater number of ordinary

1. s. v. bhujjissa, Pali-Eng. Dicit.
2. AŚ, III. 13.
3. Ibid.
4. Ibid.
5. Ibid.
6. Ibid.
7. AŚ, II. 1.
8. R.E. 9 (Gīnār), 1. 4; P.E. II (Gīnār), 1. 2.
slaves, who are evidently sūdras. Failure to see this point has led to the wrong inference that Kauṭilya’s laws indirectly abolish slavery or that he introduced a policy of making his countrymen a nation of freemen. His liberal laws mainly indicate his anxiety to protect the position of the ex-āryan slaves as distinguished from the non-āryan or sūdra slaves. This is natural, for Kauṭilya seems to draw a line between the sūdra and the members of the three upper varṇas in the laws relating to evidence, adultery and inheritance. Although Kauṭilya does not explicitly distinguish between an ārya and a sūdra as the Dharmasūtras do, he makes an unambiguous distinction between an ārya and an avara in matters of providing rations. And there is no doubt that avara stands for sūdra.

The comparatively detailed laws of Kauṭilya regarding slavery, not to be found in the Dharmasūtras, show that there was a considerable number of slaves in Mauryan India. Quoting from Megasthenes Arrian states that none of the Indians employ slaves. But this version is substantially modified by the account of Onesikritos, whom Strabo considers more reliable, for Strabo places Megasthenes among a set of liars. Onesikritos states that the custom of not keeping slaves was peculiar to the people in the country of Musikanos, which included a large part of modern Sindh. According to him instead of slaves they employed young men in the flower of their age, as the Cretans employed the aphamiotai, and the Lacedemonians the helots. This suggests that even the Musikanoi had a class of people who worked as the helots of society as a whole, not being owned individually. The practice bears out the brāhmanical theory that the sūdras are meant for serving the members of the three upper varṇas as slaves and hirelings.

5. Ibid., pp. 18-10.
7. Like helots, they were attached to the soil.
8. McCrindle, AICL, p. 41, Strabo, Frag. 34.
SŪDRAŚ

On the whole there is no indication of any fundamental change in the civic and political status of the śudras in the Mauryan period. The politico-legal disabilities imposed on them during the pre-Mauryan period continued in the main. In the fourth pillar Edict Asoka enjoins the rājuka to introduce vyavahāra-samātā and daṇḍa-samātā among the people of the janapada placed under his charge.¹ These two terms have been rendered as "impartiality in judicial proceedings" and "impartiality in punishments".² But, in the context of the old legal discriminations based on varṇa, the above terms perhaps indicate an attempt on the part of an idealist ruler to do away with such distinctions. In what ways and how far this policy actually operated is not known. Possibly in the face of the long standing prejudices such a measure was doomed to failure. Besides, since it was issued towards the end of his reign in 238 B.C.,³ it may hardly have been long carried into effect before his death. Therefore this decree may have only served to arouse the brāhmaṇical hostility without achieving anything for the members of the lower orders.

As a work mainly concerned with the questions of economics and politics, the Arthaśāstra naturally does not supply as much information about the social conditions of the śudras as the Dharmasūtras do. But it throws welcome light on the marriage practices of the śudras and the position of their women. It informs us that, among the three higher varṇas, rejection of the bride before the rite of hand-taking (pāṇigrahaṇa) is valid, but among the śudras this is valid before the time of cohabitation.⁴ Again, it is said that divorce is not permissible in the case of the first four approved forms of marriage,⁵ which implies that it is permissible in the case of the gāndharva, the āśura, the rākṣasa and

1. P.E. 4 (Delhi-Topra Inscription), l. 15.
2. CII, i, 125.
3. Ibid., Introd., p. XXXVI.
4. vyākhyānta trayāṇī pūrvam varṇānām pāṇigrahasiddhamupācārthām śūdraṁ ca prakṣaram. ASI, III. 15. TSS has prakṣaram (II, p. 92). He explains this as yonikpatinnavadhiktya, i.e. the loss of virginity of the girl. SS’s translation of this term as ‘nuptials’ does not make sense. Meyer translates it as ‘Beischlafung’ (p. 296).
5. ASI, III. 3.
the paiśāca forms of marriage. It has been shown earlier that the gāndharva and paiśāca forms of marriage prevailed among the vaiśyas and śūdras,¹ which would suggest that dissolution of the marriage tie was considered easier among them. Kauḍīlya also states that while the approved forms of marriage require the consent of the father, the unapproved forms require the consent of the mother as well.² This indirectly suggests that the continuity of matriarchal elements among the people of lower orders lent some importance to their women.

The above provisions of Kauḍīlya are not noticeable in the early Dharmasūtras. But Kauḍīlya fixes practically the same waiting periods for the wives of the absent husbands of the different varṇas as is done by Vasiṣṭha, the shortest period being prescribed in the case of the wife of a śūdra.³ All such injunctions show that the marriage tie was not considered so strong in the case of the śūdras as in the case of the members of the higher varṇas, among whom women were much more dependent upon man.

It has been suggested that Kauḍīlya’s provision fixing the age of sixteen for the bridegroom and twelve for the bride⁴ was meant for the non-brāhmaṇa castes, especially the working class who desired early progeny.⁵ Such an assumption is not at all warranted by the context in which the above provision occurs. On the other hand, in the absence of any references to the application of this measure to the lower varṇas, this provision may be taken to set the standard of conduct for the four varṇas in the order of their superiority.

Kauḍīlya informs us that actors, players, singers, fishermen, hunters, herdsmen, wine distillers and vendors, and similar persons usually travel with their women.⁶ This was not the case with the women of the higher varṇas, whose activities were limited to the sphere of home. The outside life of the women of the sūdra varṇa was due to the necessity of working in the fields and pastures for the subsistence of their family. For Kauṭīlya provides that wives of sharecroppers and herdsmen are responsible for the payment of debts incurred by their husbands.¹

---

2. AS, III. 2.

Normally the castes were endogamous during this period. Arrian informs us that the husbandman could not take a wife from the artisan class and vice versa.² But some marriages also took place between the members of the higher varṇas and the sūdras, as is evident from Kauṭīlya’s law of inheritance and his list of the mixed castes known as the antarālas. He repeats the brāhmaṇical theory of the origin of the niṣāda, the pāraśava, the caṇḍāla, the pulkasa, the svāpaka, the kṣattā, the āyogava, the kuṭaka (kukkuṭaka of the Dharmasūtras), the rathakāra, the vainya etc.³ Kauṭīlya states that the function of the vainya and the rathakāra are identical.⁴ He further declares that members of these mixed castes should marry within their own castes.⁵ The king should see to it that they follow their respective avocations.⁶ He enjoins the king to recognise these orders and guide his subjects accordingly.⁷ It is also laid down that among all the mixed castes there will be equal shares of inheritance.⁸ According to him the mixed castes (antarālas), with the exception of the caṇḍālas, can live by the occupations of the sūdras.⁹ Hence only the caṇḍālas are regarded as a despised caste, and the rathakāras, veṇas, pukkusas and nesādas of the Buddhist list are left out.

1. stri va pratidāgīṣi patikrtam tnam anyatra gopālakārدرس thes itkebhyaḥ. As III. 11.
2. IA, v, 92.
3. As, III. 7. Kauṭīlya introduces a new definition of the vrātyas, who, according to him, are sons begotten by impure men of any of the four castes on a woman of lower caste. Ibid.
4. karmanā vainyo rathakāraḥ. As, III. 7.
5. Ibid. This interpretation is on the basis of the construction of the passage according to TGS (ii, 44). SS gives a different construction, which suggests that marriage within the caste was confined only to the vainyas.
6. parasāvamātram svātāmanārtha ca svadharmān sthīpyet. As, III. 7.
7. As, III. 7.
8. Ibid.
9. As, III. 7 after TGS, ii, 44.
It has been shown earlier that Pāṇini seems to have included the caṇḍālas in the śudra varṇa. But Kauṭilya does not consider them as śudras. They have no place in the fourfold varṇa system. Thus, according to Kauṭilya, damage done to the animals and birds of the caṇḍālas and forest tribes should be punished with half the fine of that done to the similar possessions of the members of the four varṇas. In addition to the four varṇas Kauṭilya mentions the caste of the antāvāsāyins, who seem to be identical with the caṇḍālas, for the latter lived outside villages near the burial grounds. It is laid down that, if the caṇḍāla touches an ārya woman, a fine of a hundred paṇas shall be imposed on him. This may imply that no such fine will be imposed if he touches a śudra woman. Similarly the tank of water used by the caṇḍālas could not be used by anybody else. So there is no doubt that the caṇḍālas continued to be regarded as untouchables. But the same cannot be said of the other mixed castes such as the pāraśavas and the niṣādās.

For Kauṭilya provides for the share of the pāraśava son in the case of the brāhmaṇa father having no other issue. The Arthaśāstra introduces us to a new avocation of the caṇḍāla. He is to be engaged in whipping a transgressing woman in the centre of the village. He may be also asked to drag with a rope, along the public road, the bodies of such men and women as commit suicide by various methods.

Kauṭilya furnishes some information about the religious conditions of the śudras. He lays down that if a person entertains at a dinner dedicated to a god or ancestors such vṛsala ascetics as the Buddhists and the Ājīvikas, a fine of hundred paṇas shall

8. AŚ, III. 3. The caṇḍālas may have been specially chosen for the purpose because of the ferocity associated with these aboriginal peoples.
9. Read rajjumā. AŚ, IV. 7. SS translates ghātayāteyamālāmānam as "cause others to commit suicide", which does not seem to be correct.
be imposed on him.\(^1\) Shama Sastry renders \textit{uṛgala} as śūdra, but the passage does not actually refer to the śūdras but to the ascetics, who were branded indiscriminately as śūdras by brāhmaṇas. Nevertheless, the ascetics were respected by Aśoka without any consideration of caste. It is said that on one occasion when Aśoka was criticised for this by his minister, he replied that considerations of caste prevail in marriages and invitations and not in the observance of the dhamma.\(^2\)

A provision of Kauṭilya envisages the possibility of admitting some śūdras to religious and educational facilities. While prescribing certain methods to test the character of the amātyas, he recommends a particular measure through which their temptation to disobey his orders on account of religious conviction is put to trial. The king should dismiss a priest, who, when ordered, refuses to teach the Veda to an undeserving person or to officiate in a sacrificial performance undertaken by a person who does not enjoy the right to sacrifice (\textit{aṇājyāyaṇaṁdaṁṭpante}).\(^3\) The dismissed priest should try to mobilise the amātyas for the overthrow of the king on the ground of his being irreligious. If the amātyas do not succumb to this religious temptation, they should be considered pure.\(^4\) In this passage the \textit{aṇājyā} is described by the \textit{Jayamaṅgalā} as the son of a śūdra woman (śūdrāputra).\(^5\) Therefore the rule suggests the possibility of the śūdra sons of the higher varnas performing sacrifice and taking to study if the king so desires, thereby indicating the absolute power of the ruler during the Mauryan period. But perhaps the normal position in this respect is suggested by another statement of Kauṭilya, who declares that sacrificial virtues fall in value when performed in the company of the husband of a śūdra woman;\(^6\) so he instructs that such a priest should not be entertained.\(^7\)

4. \textit{Ibid.}
5. \textit{Jājī,} xxii, 32. TGS interprets \textit{aṇājyā} as \textit{uṛgalīpati}, i.e., husband of a śūdra woman (i, 4\(^{3}\)).
7. \textit{adaraḥ} tyaktumānyon am. \textit{Ibid.}
During the Mauryan period śūdras were employed by the state as slaves, labourers and artisans on a very large scale. In spite of the fixation of their wages the economic organization was showing signs of strain. Since sufficient dāsas and karmakaras were not forthcoming for agriculture carried on by the state, it was found necessary to adopt the practice of leasing royal lands to sharecroppers, who presumably belonged to the lower orders. Secondly, by drafting śūdras from overpopulated areas, the state seems to have adopted the policy of opening up new lands, thus providing the landless śūdras with land. Politically and socially the śūdras continued to be subject to the old discriminations, although Kautilya seems to have made a number of concessions in the case of the śūdra sons of the people of the higher varṇas. They could not be reduced to slavery, could have share in the paternal property, and under special circumstances could enjoy the right to Vedic sacrifice and education. But the larger body of the śūdras continued to suffer from the old disabilities.

The Arthaśāstra gives us some idea about the general conduct of the lower orders, which shows that they were not altogether happy about the conditions in which they lived. Kautilya’s list of offenders and suspects includes many of those whose castes and avocations were held low in society (hina-karma-jātim). They were suspected of being murderers, robbers or people guilty of misappropriation of treasures and deposits. Kautilya says that, in the case of thefts and burglaries, poor women and servants of condemnable nature should be also examined. He further provides that, if the master is murdered, his servants should be examined as to whether they had received any violent and cruel treatment at his hands. This shows that at times domestic servants might make fatal attempts at the life of their masters. Kautilya also ordains that when a śūdra calls himself a brāhmaṇa, steals the property of gods, or is hostile to the king, either his eyes shall be destroyed by the application of poisonous ointment or he shall have to pay a fine of 800 pañas. This indicates the hostility of some śūdras to the priestly and royal powers. There is also a reference to the seditious activities of the pāraśava. His anti-state activities are to be countered by the same measure as those used against a seditious minister. It is provided that the king should employ his spies in fomenting quarrels in the family of the suspect, leading to his ultimate execution by the government. The above references show that members of the śūdra varṇa were not happily disposed towards their masters. Since there were no peaceful channels into which their reaction could canalise itself, it occasionally found expression through criminal activities such as robberies, burglaries, theft of temple property, murder of the master, attack on the pretension of the brāhmaṇas and seditions against the head of the state. These actions seem to be symptomatic of the discontent that prevailed among them. But there is no evidence of any organised revolt on their part. In this respect conditions during the Mauryan period were probably somewhat better than they had been in the earlier period. The Arthaśāstra does not contain any special provision to meet organised revolts on the part of the śūdras, such as can be inferred from some passages of the Dharmasūtras. On the other hand Kauṭilya’s readiness to enrol śūdras in the army, though perhaps not put into practice, indicates a sense of confidence which was born of his twofold policy of conciliation and ruthless control.

1. This was limited to the ratha-kāra and the pāraśava.
3. Ibid.

1. śūdrasya brāhmaṇavādino devadrayamavastṛpato rājasudīṣaṁādiśato dvīnetra-bhedinaśca yogāṇijanauṇādhatamānasṭaṣaṁ vā dandaḥ. AŚ, IV. 10. There does not seem to be any justification for regarding the brāhmaṇavādī śūdra as distinct from the person who steals the property of god or is hostile to the king, as SS has done in the translation of this passage (Tr., p. 255).
2. AŚ, V. I based on the commentary of TGS.
CHAPTER VI

WEAKENING OF THE OLD ORDER

(circa 200 B.C. — circa A.D. 200)

Most of our direct information about the position of the śūdras during this period is derived from the law-book of Manu, which is generally ascribed to the period 200 B.C. — A. D. 200.1 Manu looks upon Brahmāvarta (the country between the Sarasvatī and the Drṣadvatī2 and Brahmarsidēsa (the plains of the Kurus, the Matsyas, the Pañcālas and the Śūrasenas) as sacred.3 On this basis it has been suggested that the law-book arose, and was first considered authoritative within this comparatively narrow province.4 Such a view, though possible, is by no means necessary, and the influence of the code of Manu may have extended over a much wider area.

The extreme form of brāhmanical fanaticism displayed by Manu makes it difficult to evaluate the evidence furnished by his work. But his passage bearing on the position of the śūdras can be scrutinised in the light of information gleaned from the Mahābhāṣya of Patañjali, the dramas of Bhāsa5 and the Buddhist works such as the Questions of Milinda, the Divyavadāna, the Mahāvastu and the Saddharmapuṇḍarīka.6 A Jain work known as the Pannavāṇā, which supplies valuable information

1. Bühler, SBE, xxv, Introd., pp. CXIV-CXVIII; cf. Jayaswal, Manu and Tājāvalīya, pp. 25-32; Kane, Hist. Dh.S., ii, p. XI. Ketkar’s argument that the work belongs to A. D. 272-320 (History of Caste, p. 66) does not seem to be convincing.
2. Manu, II. 17.
3. Ibid., II. 19.
4. Johaartgen quoted in Horace, Relations of Four Castes in Manu, pp. 4-5.
5. The extreme view assigning Bhāsa’s to the 5th or the 4th cen. B. C. is not generally accepted. Bhāsa’s date may be placed in the second or third cen. A. D. (The Age of Imperial Unity, p. 261).
6. Since the earliest Chinese translation of the Saddharmapuṇḍarīka took place in the 3rd cen. A.D. (SBE, xxxi, Introd., p. XXI), the original composition may be assigned to the 2nd or even the 1st cen. A. D. (N. Dutt, Saddharmapuṇḍarīka, Introd., p. XVII). about artisans, may be also ascribed to this period. Memorial and votive inscriptions of this period also throw welcome side lights on the position of the śūdra community.

The descriptions of the Kali age in several early Purāṇas perhaps allude to this age when the varṇa divided brāhmaṇical society was undermined by the activities of heretical sects and the incursions of foreign elements such as the Bactrian Greeks, Śakas, Parthians and Kuśāṇas. Partly as a reaction to the pro-Buddhist policy of Aśoka, and partly because of the advent of these new peoples, Manu desperately tries to preserve brāhmaṇical society, not only by ordaining rigorous measures against the śūdras, but also by inventing suitable genealogies for the incorporation of foreign elements into varṇa society. Moreover, his undue glorification of the power of the sword (daṇḍa) is also meant to serve that end.

Manu reaffirms the old theory that the śūdra is ordained by God to serve the higher castes. The king should order a vaiśya to trade, to lend money, to cultivate the land or to tend cattle, and a śūdra to serve the three upper varṇas. But in the chapter on times of distress (āpad-dharma) Manu declared that a śūdra should serve the brāhmaṇa, which would secure him all his ends; failing that, he may serve a kṣatriya, or may maintain himself by attending even on a wealthy vaiśya. In this connection the phrase api (even) should be particularly noted, since it seems to imply that the vaiśya was seldom the master of the śūdra. This further suggests that in times of distress the service of the śūdra was to be mainly reserved for the brāhmaṇas and kṣatriyas. At another place Manu ordains that the king should carefully compel the vaiśyas and the śūdras to perform the tasks assigned to them; since, if these two varṇas swerve from their duties, they will throw the whole world into confusion. This passage is of particular importance, for it is not to be found in any earlier text. Such a measure seems to reflect a period of socio-economic crisis, which is also evident from the Yuga Purāṇa, which informs us that during this period even women took to ploughing. That there seems to have been decaying farmers and traders, who were recruited as spies by the king, can be inferred from the comment of Kullūka to a passage of Manu. Another rule of Manu that the śūdras distressed for subsistence may settle down in any part of the country (i.e. even in the land of the Mlecchas) also points to some kind of crisis, which deeply affected the producing masses. Hence Manu’s measure for making the vaiśyas and śūdras work may have been necessitated by social convulsions made worse by foreign invasions. Perhaps, when the strong rule of the Mauryans broke down, it was found increasingly difficult to keep the vaiśyas and the śūdras within the bounds of their assigned duties.

1. Jain, Life aspictured in the Jain Canons, p. 38. The book mentions Śakas, Yavanas, Muruṇḍas, Pahlavas etc. (i. 58), which seems to make it a work of the post-Mauryan period.

The above references also show that distinctions between the functions of the vaiśyas and the śūdras were being gradually obliterated. Manu lays down that, if in times of distress the vaiśya finds it difficult to support himself by his own occupations, he should take to the occupations of the śūdras, i.e. live by serving the members of the twice-born caste. This is also supported by a passage of the Questions of Milinda, where cultivation, trade and tending of cattle are described as the functions of the ordinary folk such as the vaiśyas and the śūdras, there being no separate mention of the functions of these two classes.

1. Manu, VIII. 418.
3. Kullūka interprets the term pañcaśārgam in Manu, VII. 154 as five classes of spies, including kṣatriyakāḥ kṣipārtītiḥ and vānavijakāḥ kṣipārtītiḥ. Hopkins takes the word in the sense of minister, realm, city, wealth and army (op. cit., p. 69), but there does not seem to be any justification for taking the pañcaśārgam in the sense of the five elements of the state, which are generally enumerated as seven.
4. II. 24.
5. Manu, X. 98.
In spite of the tendency to approximate the vaśya to the śūdra, there is no evidence of the existence of independent śūdra peasants. Generally they continued to be employed as hired labourers and slaves, for Manu repeats the old rule that, instead of paying taxes, artisans, mechanics and śūdras who subsist by manual labour should work for one day per month for the king.\(^1\) He lays down a new provision that the vaśyas should meet times of emergency by paying $\frac{1}{8}$ of their corn as tax and the śūdras by their manual labour.\(^2\) In this connection Kullūka states emphatically that even in bad times taxes should not be imposed on the śūdras.\(^3\) Manu’s exemption of śūdras from taxes is corroborated by the Milinda-panha. It informs us that every village had its slaves, male and female, wage earners (bhatakas) and hired labourers (karmakaras), who were exempted from taxes.\(^4\) Therefore, unlike the vaśyas, the śūdras do not appear as peasants paying taxes to the state. While enumerating the eight-fold functions (āṣṭavidham karma) of the king Medhatithi mentions trade, agriculture, irrigation, digging mines, settling uninhabited districts, cutting forests, etc.\(^5\) But there is no evidence of dāsas and karmakaras being employed in agriculture by the state, as we find in the Mauryan period. The Mahāvastu describes a village headman as hurrying out of the village to inspect the work in the fields, but we do not know whether he did this on behalf of the king.\(^6\) It seems that śūdras were mostly employed as agricultural workers by individual proprietors. Patañjali refers to the landowner sitting in a corner and supervising the ploughing done by five hired labourers.\(^7\) Manu also speaks of the servants of the peasant proprietors.\(^8\) According to him the cultivator should form an item in the additional portion to

1. Manu, VII. 136.
2. Ibid., X. 120.
3. na tu tebhya āpokṣyapi karo grāhyah. Comm. to Manu, X. 120.
5. Comm. to Manu, VII. 154. Hopkins thinks that the āṣṭavidham karma reminds one of the seven elements of the state (op., cit., pp. 70-71), but there is no similarity between the āṣṭavidha karma and the saṅgāna.
6. i, 301.
7. Mahābhāṣya, ii, 33.
8. ...bhṛtyānāmejñānātkṣetrikasya tu. Manu, VIII. 243. be given to the brāhmaṇa son in the partition of family property.¹ This obviously refers to agricultural labourers owned by the brāhmaṇas.

Although the view recurs in Manu that śūdras should take to the occupations of artisans only if they fail to secure livelihood through direct service of the upper varṇas,² there seems to have been not only considerable increase in the number of artisans but some improvement in their conditions during this period. This is evident from a large number of recorded gifts of caves, pillars, tablets, cisterns etc. to the Buddhist monks by smiths, perfumers, weavers, goldsmiths and even leather workers.³ Besides these, dyers, workers in metal and ivory, jewellers, sculptors and fishermen figure as donors in the inscriptions.⁴ Perfumers, and to a lesser degree, smiths are repeatedly mentioned as liberal votaries, and therefore seem to have formed the well-to-do and perhaps numerous sections of artisans. Although weavers do not appear as donors as often as perfumers, the evidence from Manu suggests that they were an important class of artisans; for it is laid down that they should pay 11 palas, and in the case of failure 12 palas.⁵ These apparently were taxes in kind levied on the produce of the weavers, who probably owed their affluence to trade in textiles produced in Mathurā⁶ and other cities. Most of the artisans known from inscriptions were confined to the Mathurā region, and to the western Deccan where their prosperity was stimulated by the growing trade with Rome.

The epigraphic evidence shows that the artisans were organised under their headmen, who probably enjoyed the favour of the king. Thus we hear of the gift of Ānanda who was the foreman of the artisans of Śrī Śātakarni.⁷ But the literary evidence

1. Manu, IX. 150.
2. Ibid., X. 99 and 100.
3. Lüder's List, Nos. 53, 54, 68, 76, 95, 331, 345, 381, 495, 857, 966, 1006, 1032, 1051, 1061, 1177, 1203-4, 1210, 1230, 1273, 1298; cf. IC, xii, 83-85.
6. Mahābhārata, i, 19.
7. Lüder's List, No. 346.
suggests that guilds of artisans flourished on a far larger scale during this period than in earlier times. At one place the Mahāvastu mentions eleven kinds of artisans such as garland makers, potters, carpenters, washermen, dyers, makers of bowls, goldsmiths, jewellers, workers in conch shell, armourers and cooks, all working under their respective heads. The same source also refers to the eighteen guilds (aṣṭadaśa śrenīs) of Rājagaha including, goldsmiths, perfumers, gemcutters, oilmans, makers of flour, etc. The list also includes vendors of fruits, roots, flour, and sugar. Goldsmiths and workers in gems are common to both the lists; yet there seem to have existed about two dozen guilds of artisans during this period. It is to be also noted that the second list of guilds is quite different from that mentioned in the Jātakas. Although artisans were employed by the king, increase in the number of guilds may have weakened the direct control of the state over artisans. What is more significant, we do not come across so many kinds of artisans even in the Arthasastra, as we find during this period. The Mahāvastu gives a list of thirty-six kinds of workers living in the town of Rājagaha. The list does not seem to be exhaustive, for it is said at the end of it that there are others besides those mentioned. A still longer list is to be found in the Milinda-pañha, which enumerates as many as seventy-five occupations, mostly of artisans. Many artisans of the Buddhist lists also recur in a Jain work, which enumerates eighteen kinds of craftsmen and significantly describes even the tailors, weavers and silk weavers as āryans by craft, showing thereby that these crafts were not held in low esteem by the Jains.

An analysis of the lists of these artisans would show that there arose a number of new crafts during this period. As

1. ii, 453-78.
3. Computed on the basis of Mahāvastu, ii, 453-78 and iii, 442ff. Many of these artisans were also small traders.
4. IC, xiv, 31-32.
5. Pat. on Pā., II. 1. 1.
6. iii, 442-3.
7. Ibid.
against about two dozen trades in the Dīgha Nikāya we meet about five dozen trades in the Milinda-pañha. Of these eight crafts are associated with metal working, which shows considerable advance. Occupations connected with cloth making, silk weaving, making of arms and luxury articles, also seem to have made progress. All this shows that artisans of this period made a significant contribution to technological and economic developments.

These artisans were not attached to their clients in the same way as the dāsas and the karmakaras were attached to their masters. Thus Patañjali informs us that the weaver was an independent worker. While the dāsās and the karmakaras worked in the hope of getting clothes and food, the artisans worked in the hope of getting wages.

Manu lays down a number of laws which affect the economic position of the sūdras adversely. Thus he introduces rates of interest differing according to varṇa. The monthly interest charged should be two, three, four or five per cent according to the order of the varṇas. But probably this law did not work in practice. According to a Nāsik Inscription when money was deposited with a weavers' guild, the rate of interest paid by them amounted to from 1 to 3 percent per month. There is nothing to show that as sūdras they had to pay the highest rate of interest. A modern apologist has tried to justify this gradation of interest on the ground that it is in proportion to the social services of the borrowers, which implies that the

5. Pat. on Pā., I. 4-54.
7. A similar rule occurring in Vas. Dh. S., II. 48 seems to be an interpolation, for it is not found in the three other Dharmasūtras.
8. Manu, VIII. 142. According to Krṣṇapāṇḍita and the commentators on the parallel passage of Piṣuṇa (VI. 2), Manu and other Smṛtis, this rule applies only to loans for which no security is given. SBE, xiv, 15.
services rendered by the śūdras were negligible when in fact, along with the vaiśyas, they sustained the entire social fabric by their producing activities. Although Manu's law regarding interest may not have worked in practice, in the charging of interest probably the brāhmaṇas were shown some consideration while the śūdras were made to work off their debts.

Manu lays down that a śūdra should not be permitted to accumulate wealth, for he gives pain to the brāhmaṇas. It is suggested that this injunction is an exaggerated statement (artha-vāda) addressed to the śūdra himself, but the text does not provide any basis for such an interpretation. The injunction is also compared to an admonition in the English prayer-book advising a poor man "therewith to be contented". Since the passage in question occurs in the chapter on times of distress, it may have been directed against the Buddhist monks or foreign rulers who were looked upon as no better than śūdras. At any rate it is evident from the law of inheritance that the śūdra owned property. This can also be inferred from the old rule repeated by Manu that vaiśyas and śūdras should surmount their misfortunes through payment.

According to Manu, one of the qualifications of the person with whom money should be deposited is that he should be an ārya. This naturally excludes the śūdras. But in the second century A. D. in the Sātavāhana territory money was deposited with the potters, the oil millers and even the weavers. This practice prevailed among the lay devotees of Buddhism, who made such deposits for the purpose of providing robes and other necessities for the monks. But the orthodox also followed such practices, for we have a record which shows that during the reign of Huviska (circa A. D. 106—138) a sum of money was deposited by a chief with the guild of flour makers at Mathurā, out of the monthly interest of which a hundred brāhmaṇas were to be served daily.1 These practices provide further evidence of the independent functioning of craftsmen organised in guilds. Evidently they could purchase their raw materials and implements with money deposited with them, and could pay interest on it out of the proceeds from the sale of their commodities.

1. Manu, IX. 129.
2. K. V. Rangaswami Aiyangar, Dharmasāstra, p. 120.

Manu lays down that the brāhmaṇa can confidently seize the goods of his śūdra slave, for he is not allowed to own any property.2 Jayaswal thinks that this probably legalises seizure of property of the Buddhist Saṅgha which had become enormously rich.3 But perhaps the rule applies only to those śūdras who work as slaves. In Manu’s opinion, even when starving, a kṣatriya can never seize the possessions of a virtuous brāhmaṇa, but he can appropriate the possessions of a dasyu or of one who neglects his sacred duties.4 This suggests that the kṣatriyas and vaiśyas who neglected their essential rites could be subjected to such expropriation. In such a case the śūdras cannot be considered to be safe. For Manu provides that as the śūdra has nothing to do with the sacrifice, the sacrificer of the twice-born caste may take from him two or three articles required for it.5 All these rules show a definite attempt on the part of Manu to keep down the śūdras economically.

We can obtain some idea about the wages of the workers and the general living conditions of the lower orders during the post-Mauryan period. In one respect, Manu follows the principle of Kauṭilya and states that a hired herdsman may milk with the consent of the owner the best cow out of ten.6 In this case Manu seems to be more generous towards the hired labourer than Kauṭilya7, for he permits the labourer to milk the best cow. The responsibility of the herdsman for the cattle under their charge is emphasised also by Manu, who enumerates their functions under various circumstances. But in the case of loss of cattle he does not provide for the flogging of the herders, as is done by Āpastamba, or for his death, as is done by Kauṭiliya. Manu introduces a new provision, according to which an area of about 400 cubits in width round the villages, and thrice as much around the towns, are to be set apart as pasture ground. And if the cattle stray into the unfenced plots of anyone in this area and destroy his standing crops, the herdsman cannot be held answerable for this. Thus to some extent this lawgiver safeguards the interests of the herdsman.

7. Kauṭilya only specifies 1/10 of milk as the share of a herdsman, but does not state that he should milk the best cow.

While stating that the śūdras are meant for serving the brāhmaṇas, he lays down that in fixing maintenance for them regard should be paid to their ability, work, and the number of people they have to support. He repeats the instruction of Gautama that these servants should be given leavings from the table, old clothes and beds, but adds that they should also be given the refuge of grain. These rules obviously refer to the remuneration of those śūdras who served as domestic servants. Manu further states that the wages of those employed in the service of the king—maids and servants—should be fixed according to the considerations of time and place. These workers, high (utakṛṣṭa) and low (apakṛṣṭa), should get the daily wages varying from one paṇa to six paṇas. Besides, they should get provisions such as food, clothes etc. differing according to respective status. It is not clear whether the terms utakṛṣṭa and apakṛṣṭa refer to high and low varnas, as they are interpreted in another context. But we learn from Patañjali that there was a wide difference between the wages of the karmakaras and the bhṛtakas on the one hand and those of the priests on the other. Thus, while the latter received cows as their wages, the former received only

1. VIII. 229-44.
2. VIII.237-8.
3. X. 124.
4. X. 125.
5. VII.125.
6. VII. 126.
7. Ibid.
of a niṣka daily, i.e. 7½ niṣkas per month. It is suggested that the niṣka is identical with the kārṣāpaṇa. But if this proposition is accepted the daily wage of a worker will come to ¼ paṇa, while the nearly contemporary evidence of Manu indicates that the minimum wage of a labourer amounted to one paṇa, the maximum being six paṇas. In the Arthāśāstra the daily wage of a worker varies from ½ paṇa to 2½ paṇa, i.e. one to four times, but we have no means of estimating the relative purchasing power of the paṇa known from these sources.

Manu’s provisions regulating the working conditions of the labourers are not so detailed as those of Kauṭilya. But, like Kauṭilya, he is severe towards a negligent workman. A hired workman who fails to perform his work according to the agreement out of pride, without being ill, shall be fined eight kṛṣṇalas, and no wages shall be paid to him. Nevertheless, the worker who fails to do his work on account of illness but completes it on his recovery shall be paid his wages for the long period of absence. On the other hand, if he does not complete his work when he has recovered, he shall not be paid any wages even for the period he has worked. This would suggest that workers were not penalised if they had to abandon work on account of illness, provided they undertook to finish the work on their recuperation or arranged to get it done by others. Manu does not make any further corresponding provision protecting the interests of the labourer as against the employer, such as we find in the Arthāśāstra. From a simile used by him it appears that the servant had to wait patiently for the payment of his wages.

There seems to have been separate streets of the wage-earners in towns. A Buddhist source speaks of the bhṛtakavīthi, presumably in Rājagṛha, where the brāhmaṇas and householders (probably vaiśyas) went to hire labourers. Another source draws a contrast between the street of the poor (dariḍaṇḍu) and the luxurious house of a rich man in a town. Possibly this dariḍaṇḍu was identical with the bhṛtakauṭi and was inhabited by poor people who lived on wages. We also learn about three bhṛtakas, who cleared dirt near a rich man's house and lived in its vicinity in a hovel of straw. Patañjali repeatedly states that the house of a vṛṣala, i.e. a śūdra, is reduced merely to a wall (kuḍya).

This suggests that presumably it had an earthen or brick wall and the other three sides were enclosed by straw. It is also possible that the term kuḍya here indicates a hut.

The bhṛtaka was distinguished by his lacerated body, dishevelled hair and dirty clothes, for a well dressed person could not find employment in the bhṛtakauṭi, although he waited there for the whole day. Manu gives some idea of the food and dress of the śūdras who were employed as domestic servants. In this respect he merely repeats and to some extent elaborates the old provision of Gautama. A śūdra servant should be allotted by his master a suitable maintenance commensurate with his ability, industry and the size of his family. He should be given remnants of food, refuse of grain, worn out clothes and old beds.

In the Milinda-pañha tender wives of kṣatriyas, brahmanas and gahapatīs are described as eating tasteful cakes and meat, but there is no mention of the wives of śūdras in this connection.

During the post-Mauryan period the economic distinctions between the śūdras and the vaiśyas were tending to become blurred. But the śūdras chiefly continued as agricultural workers employed by individual landowners. Artisans seem... to have functioned more independently than in the earlier period. They increased not only in number and variety but also showed signs of prosperity. Manu’s laws imposing new economic disabilities on the śūdras were probably ineffective. But there is no indication of any change in the living conditions of the main body of the śūdras.

Manu supplies considerable information about the position of the śūdras in post-Mauryan polity. He lays down that a snātaka should not dwell in the country of a śūdra ruler. This apparently points to the existence of śūdra rulers during this period. But they do not seem to have arisen from the fourth varṇa, for contemporary political history does not know of such rulers. They probably refer to the Greek, Śaka, Parthian and Kuṣāṇa rulers, who were affiliated to Buddhism or Vaiṣṇavism, and whom Manu describes as degraded kṣatriyas reduced to to śūdrahood on account of their failure to consult brāhmanaṇas and to perform enjoined Vedic rites. The Purānic descriptions of the Kali age speak of the śūdra kings performing the aśvamedha sacrifice and employing brāhmanaṇa priests. While referring to the Kali rulers, the Viṣṇu Purāṇa states that the people of various countries will intermingle with them and follow their examples. This seems to refer to the rulers of foreign extraction. They were the followers of heretical sects, which further aroused Manu’s hostility towards them. It is in order to prevent contact between brāhmanaṇas and these rulers that Manu forbids the snātakas to dwell in their kingdoms. He further prescribes that brāhmanaṇas should not accept presents from a king who is not descended from the kṣatriya race. All these rules are obviously meant to prevent the recognition of foreign rulers by

1. na śūdrājye nirvāst. Manu, IV. 61.
2. viṣalatoṣam gata loka... Manu, X. 43-44.
4. Kūrma P., Ch. 30, p. 304.
7. Manu, V.84.
by the brāhmaṇas. But gradually this open hostility gave way to tolerance and ultimate recognition of the alien rulers as kṣatriyas, though of an inferior kind.

During this period some Buddhists also do not favour rulers from low castes. The Milinda-pañha states that a person who is low born and base in lineage is not fit for kingship.¹

Manu lays down that the king should appoint seven or eight ministers whose ancestors have been royal officers, who are skilled in the use of weapons, descended from noble families and are men of experience.² It is obvious that the sūdras could hardly expected to fulfil these qualifications.

Manu warns that the kingdom of that monarch who looks on, while a sūdra settles the law, will sink low like a cow in morass.³ Such a rule perhaps again refers to the kingdoms of the barbarian rulers, who may have appointed some sūdras to carry on the administration of justice or to perform other administrative functions. But Manu emphatically states that even a brāhmaṇa who subsists mainly by the name of his caste (i.e. merely by calling himself a brāhmaṇa) can interpret the law, but a sūdra can never be appointed as a judge (dharma-pravaktā).⁴ The commentators add that kṣatriyas might be employed in cases of necessity,⁵ but they do not mention vaiśyas. This fits in with the scheme of Manu, in which kṣatriyas cannot prosper without brāhmaṇas and vice-versa, but closely united they prosper in this world and in the next.⁶ Probably in brāhmaṇical kingdoms the first two varṇas monopolised all administrative and judicial posts.

Manu repeats the old principle that members of the four varṇas and the untouchables can act as witnesses in the transactions of their respective communities.⁷ But he adds that kṣatriyas, vaiśyas or sūdras, provided they are householders,

2. Manu, VII. 54.
3. Ibid., VII. 21.
6. Manu, IX. 322.
7. Ibid., VIII. 68.
have sons and are indigenous, are competent to give evidence when called by a suitor. In the opinion of Kullūka this applies to civil cases such as debts etc. This provision of Manu makes a definite advance on the provisions of earlier times which do not permit the śūdras to appear as witnesses in the cases of the members of the higher varṇas. As to cases such as defamation, assault, adultery and theft, anybody can be called as a witness irrespective of the qualifications required in civil cases. If qualified witnesses are not available, Manu permits even slaves and servants to act as witness. Manu does not introduce any varṇa distinctions in boundary disputes between villages; witnesses are to be examined in the presence of the crowd of villagers. Amongst those whom Manu does not permit to appear as witnesses (evidently in civil cases) are artisans, actors and dancers. Kullūka justifies this on the ground that these people are always occupied with their work and that they can be won over by bribery. Born slaves are also not permitted to act as witnesses.

Manu repeats the old rule of giving warning to the members of the various varṇas before making depositions. If a śūdra gives false evidence, he is held guilty of all sins, and is threatened with the most terrible spiritual consequences. But he adds that a judge should cause a brāhmaṇa to swear by his veracity, a kṣatriya by his chariot or the animal he rides on, a vaiśya by his kine, grain and gold, and a śūdra by imprecating on his head the guilt of all grievous sins. Significantly, however, Manu

4. Ibid., VIII. 70.
5. Ibid., VIII. 254.
6. Ibid., VIII. 65.
8. Manu, VIII. 66 with the comm. of Kull; adhyadhīna is explained as a garbhodāsa (Ibid.).
9. Ibid., VIII. 88.
10. Ibid.
11. Possibly a whole series of exhortations made by the judge in Manu, VIII. 89-101 are addressed to the śūdra witness.
does not ordain any special royal punishment for the śūdra witness. He states the general principle that, in the case of giving false evidence, the king should fine and banish men of the three lower castes, but should only banish a brāhmaṇa. Similarly, according to Manu, brāhmaṇas are not liable to corporal punishments, which can be inflicted only on the members of the three lower castes. Therefore in these respects the śūdra is placed on a footing of equality with the kṣatriya and the vaiśya.

It is laid down that the king should take up the cases of the litigants in the order of their varṇas. In settling the law he should take into account the customs of every caste. Conduct of good people is regarded as a source of law by Manu, and according to a commentator of the 17th cen. A.D., this includes the practice of the good śūdras as well.

Like the early lawgivers, Manu is guided by considerations of varṇa in the administration of justice, which affects the position of the śūdras adversely. If a kṣatriya defames a brāhmaṇa, he shall be fined a hundred paṇas, a vaiśya 150 or 200 paṇas, but a śūdra shall suffer corporal punishment. If a brāhmaṇa defames a kṣatriya, a vaiśya or a śūdra, he shall be fined respectively 50, 25 or 12 paṇas. The fact that a fine of 12 paṇas is prescribed in the case of a brāhmaṇa abusing a śūdra is significant, for in the Gautama Dharmasūtra no fine is provided in such a case.

Generally Manu lays down very severe punishments for śūdras offending against the members of the superior varṇas. Thus if a śūdra insults a twice-born with gross invective, he shall have his tongue cut out. The term twice-born (dvijāti) indicates only the brāhmaṇa and the kṣatriya, for this punishment is expressly forbidden in the case of a śūdra reviling a vaiśya. Manu further provides that, if a śūdra mentions the names and castes of the twice-born (dvijāti) with contumely, an iron nail, ten fingers long, shall be thrust red-hot into his mouth. If he arrogantly teaches brāhmaṇas their duties, the king shall cause hot oil to be put into his mouth and into his ears. Jayaswal suggests that these provisions are directed against the ‘dharma’-preaching learned śūdras, i.e. the Buddhist or Jain śūdras and śūdras who claim equality with the higher classes. Apparently these provisions are laws against the author’s political opponents, who flout the established order. It is difficult to say how far these laws were put into effect. Perhaps they may have been the suggestions of a fanatic and were rarely if ever put into practice.

In cases of assault and similar crimes the punishments prescribed for the śūdras are very harsh. It is provided that the very limb with which a man of low caste (antyajā) hurts a man of the highest caste (śreṣṭha) shall be cut off. Here Kullūka takes antyaja in the sense of śūdra, which agrees with a similar rule of earlier times. The term śreṣṭha refers to brāhmaṇas and not to the men of three higher castes, such as is sometimes understood. In a verse Manu states that he who raises his hand or a stick shall have his hand cut off; he who in anger kicks with his feet shall have his foot cut off. Probably this also refers to the offences of the śūdra against the brāhmaṇa. It is further laid down that if a man of the lowest birth (apakṛṣṭa) tries to place himself on the same seat with a person of high caste (ukṛṣṭa), he shall be branded on his hip and banished, or the king shall cause his buttock to be gashed.

1. Manu, VIII. 277.
2. Ibid., VIII. 271. The term dvijāti is explained by Kull. as ‘brāhmaṇas and others’, but probably it refers to brāhmaṇas alone.
4. Manu and Yājñavalkya, p. 150.
6. Basham, Wonder that was India, p. 80.
7. Manu, VIII. 279.
8. Kull. on Manu, VIII. 279.
9. Gaut. Dh. S., XII. 1; This rule also occurs in the AŚ.
11. Manu, VIII. 280.
12. Ibid., VIII. 281.
The apakṣṭa stands for the śūdra and the utkṛṣṭa for the brāhmaṇa. Similarly if out of arrogance the śūdra spits on a brāhmaṇa, the king shall cause both his lips to be cut off; if he urinates on him, the penis; if he breaks wind against him, the anus. Again, if the śūdra lays hold of the hair of a brāhmaṇa, the king should unhesitatingly amputate his hands, likewise if he takes him by the feet, the beard, the neck, or the scrotum. Perhaps to cover all such cases, Manu lays down a general rule that the king shall inflict on a base-born śūdra, who intentionally gives pain to brāhmaṇas, various corporal punishments which cause terror. Giving pain to the brāhmaṇas is interpreted as causing him physical pain or stealing his property.

Most of the provisions enumerated above are directed against the śūdras offending against the brāhmaṇas. Even the mere existence of these provisions in the law-book shows that relations between the highest and the lowest varṇas were very strained. We have hardly any evidence to determine whether such provisions were carried out. The Mahāvastu, however, informs us that sometimes severe bodily tortures were inflicted on the hired labourers in order to make them work. This text states that some people cause these workers to be shackled with fetters and chains, ordering the hands and feet of many to be pierced, and the nose, flesh, sinews, arms and back of many to be slit five or ten times. The Saddharma-puṇḍarika refers to a young man of good family bound in wooden manacles. Therefore it is small wonder if śūdra offenders were subjected to corporal punishments, but whether the penal laws of Manu were literally applied to them is open to doubt.

3. Ibid., VIII. 283.
4. Ibid., IX. 248.
5. Kull. on Manu, IX. 248.
6. Mahāvastu, i, 18. Senart has the term hastinigōdāikhī, but Bailey reads it as hadio, which also occurs in Dīṣā, pp. 365 and 435 in the sense of fetters (SBE, xvi, 15, fn. 2). The term karahigorahī is used in Maithili in the sense of wooden shackles.
7. p. 289.
Harsh punishments are, however, not prescribed in the case of people of equal castes assaulting each other. It is laid down that he who breaks the skin of an equal or draws blood from him shall be fined 100 pañas; he who cuts a muscle six niskas, and he who breaks a bone shall be banished.¹ According to Rāgavānanda this rule refers to sūdras assaulting sūdras.²

For the expiation of the sin of murder Manu prescribes the performance of the lunar penance, which varies in length according to the varṇa of the murdered person. A penance lasting for three years is prescribed in the case of the murder of a brāhmaṇa and a penance for 2½ months in the case of the murder of a sūdra.³ For killing a sūdra Manu prescribes a wergeld of ten cows and a bull,⁴ such as is found in the earlier law-books. But he adds that this fine is to be paid to a brāhmaṇa.⁵ Similarly, like the earlier lawgivers, he prescribes the same penance for killing a sūdra as for killing a number of small animals and birds.⁶ Such provisions leave no doubt that Manu attaches very little importance to the life of a sūdra. Curiously enough, in one provision of Manu's rules regarding murder there is no trace of varṇa distinctions. If the case involves the death of a member of any varṇa, a falsehood may be spoken and the sin arising therefrom may be expiated by making offering to the Sarasvati.⁷ Manu also declares that slaying women, sūdras, vaiśyas and kṣatriyas is a minor offence, causing loss of caste.⁸ But this rule is probably merely meant to emphasise the importance of the life of a brāhmaṇa.

Manu holds that the higher the varṇa, the greater is the crime in committing theft; the guilt of a sūdra is considered the smallest,⁹ for the habit of stealing is thought to be more usual with him.

1. Manu, VIII. 284.
2. SBE, xxv, 304.
4. Ibid., XI. 128-31.
5. Ibid., XI. 131.
6. Manu, XI. 132,141. This rule shows a discrepancy between the religious and 'secular' punishments of Manu and other lawgivers, for according to secular provisions a wergeld of ten cows and a bull is prescribed for killing a sūdra.
7. Manu, VIII. 104-5.
8. Ibid., XI. 67.
9. Ibid., VIII. 337-38.
In the law of inheritance Manu upholds the old rule of giving the tenth part of property to the śūdra son of a brāhmaṇa, even when the father has no son by wives of the higher castes. There also recurs the old idea that the śūdra son of a brāhmaṇa, a kṣatriya or a vaiśya is not entitled to any share; whatever is allotted to him by his father becomes his share; a śūdra can be regarded as a kinsman but not an heir. As regards inheritance among the śudras, even if there be a hundred sons, their shares shall be equal. Thus, only the śudra sons of the higher caste people were not always certain of receiving shares. Generally, members of the śudra varṇa enjoyed the right to property. This can be also inferred from another law, according to which property stolen by thieves must be restored by the king to the members of all the varṇas.

Manu’s laws of adultery do not discriminate so much against śudra women as against śudra men. If a brāhmaṇa approaches unguarded women of the three lower varṇas, he shall be fined 500 pañās; for a similar crime against an antyaja woman the fine shall be raised to a thousand pañās. The same fine shall be imposed on a kṣatriya or a vaiśya if he has intercourse with a guarded śudra woman. If a brāhmaṇa dallies with a vṛṣali for a night, he removes that sin in three years, by subsisting on alms and daily muttering sacred texts. While most of these laws are meant to preserve the purity of the brāhmaṇa by preventing moral lapses on his part, they make it clear that Manu also protects the purity of the śudra woman. This is in keeping with his principle that women of all the four varṇas should be protected.

But the rule of Manu that people should not converse with the wives of others does not apply to some sections of

1. Ibid., IX. 151-154.
2. Ibid., IX. 155.
3. Ibid., IX. 160.
4. Ibid., IX. 157.
5. Ibid., VIII. 40.
6. Ibid., VIII. 385.
7. Ibid., VIII. 383.
8. Ibid., XI. 179.
śūdras such as actors and singers, for they live on the intrigues of their wives.\textsuperscript{1} Nevertheless, those who converse with these and female slaves under the charge of a master are required to pay a small fine.\textsuperscript{2} Buddhist and Jain nuns are also included in this category,\textsuperscript{3} for they were probably recruited from the lower orders, and, like monks, were looked upon as śūdras.\textsuperscript{4} Manu prescribes the most severe punishment for a śūdra male adulterer. The śūdra who has intercourse with an unguarded woman of the twice-born caste shall lose the part offending and all his property; in the case of such an offence against a guarded woman he shall lose everything, even his life.\textsuperscript{5} Here the term twice-born (dvijāti) seems to refer to the brāhmaṇa, for the two following rules provide punishments for kṣatriya and vaśya offenders against a brāhmaṇa woman.\textsuperscript{6} But if these two offend against a guarded brāhmaṇi who is the wife of an eminent brāhmaṇa, they shall be also punished like a śūdra or be burnt in a fire of dry grass.\textsuperscript{7} It may be recalled that in this case Kauṭilya provides the punishment of death by burning only for the śūdra offender,\textsuperscript{8} although Vasiṣṭha provides similar punishments for kṣatriya and vaśya offenders as well.\textsuperscript{9} A passage of Manu is taken to mean that in such a case the śūdra shall be punished with death.\textsuperscript{10} Since the death penalty for the śūdra adulterer is generally corroborated by other sources, this provision of Manu may not have been ineffective.

Manu’s laws regarding slavery throw considerable light on the civic status of the śūdras. According to Kauṭilya the śūdra sons of āryan parents cannot be reduced to slavery. But although Manu allows shares in the inheritance of family property to śūdra sons, he does not refer to this practice.

\textsuperscript{1} Manu, VIII. 361-2.
\textsuperscript{2} Ibid., VIII. 363.
\textsuperscript{3} Ibid.
\textsuperscript{4} Jayaswal, Manu and Tājñavalkya, pp. 167-8.
\textsuperscript{5} Manu, VIII. 374.
\textsuperscript{6} Ibid., VIII. 375-6.
\textsuperscript{7} Ibid., VIII. 377.
\textsuperscript{8} AŚ, IV. 13.
\textsuperscript{9} Vas. Dh. Ś., XXI. 2-3.
\textsuperscript{10} Manu, VIII. 359 with the comm. of Kull. The terms used is abrah-

\textsuperscript{11} which is taken in the sense of śūdra by Kull.
He is the first to enunciate the principle that slavery is the eternal destiny of a śūdra. But this applies only to relations between the brāhmaṇas and the śūdras. Manu states that a śūdra, whether bought or unbought, should be reduced to slavery because he is created by God for the service of a brāhmaṇa. In the next verse he adds that a śūdra cannot be released from servitude because servitude is innate in him. As compared to the śūdras, the members of the twice-born castes cannot be reduced to slavery. If a brāhmaṇa compels men of the twice-born castes to work as slaves, he shall be fined 600 (paṇaṣ) by the king. In this connection Kautilya provides a graded scheme of fines; the highest fine of 48 paṇas is provided by him for enslaving a brāhmaṇa. Manu does not refer to such distinctions but provides a far heavier fine for enslaving the people of the three upper varṇas.

Even in the law-book of Manu, all the śūdras are not treated as slaves. The legal distinction between a śūdra and a slave is clearly recognised by Manu, who refers to the son of a śūdra by a dāśī (female slave of his slave). Thus, though the slave may have been generally recruited from the śūdra varṇa, sometimes the śūdras themselves owned slaves. But the distinction between the śūdra and his slave was not so wide as that between the twice-born and his slave. According to Manu, if permitted by the father, the son of a śūdra by a female slave could take a share of the inheritance. But this is not provided in the case of the similar sons of the twice-born. Incidentally, the above law of Manu shows that slaves enjoyed the right to property. According to the comment of Kullūka on a passage of Manu, when the master is abroad, for the sake of his family the slave

1. śūdrantu kārayedāśyam kṛitamakritamaeva cā; dasyayaiva hi sāśo'śau brāhmaṇasya svayamāhucā. Manu, VIII, 413.
2. na svāminā nisṛṣṭo'pi śūdro dasyādvimucyate; nisargajām hi tattasya kastas-māttadapahati. Manu, VIII, 414. This is treated by Meghadhūta as a glorified exaggeration (arthavāda), but probably it better indicates conditions in the time of the commentator than that of Manu.
6. dāṣyaṁ ca dāśaddāśyaṁ ca yāḥ śūdrasya suto bhac. Manu, IX, 179.
7. Ibid.
can represent him in business transactions, which the master cannot rescind. At another place, however, this is denied by Manu: sale made by one not the real owner is declared invalid. It has been pointed out earlier that on failure of competent witnesses even slaves and servants could give evidence. All this would show that even the slaves had some status in law.

In some sense domestic slaves were treated as members of the family. Manu enjoins the head of the household not to enter into discussions with his parents, sister, daughter-in-law, brother, wife, son, daughter and dāsa. Stating the reason for this he points out that wife and son are parts of the body of the householder, that the daughter deserves kindness, and that the class of slaves forms his own shadow. Hence Manu instructs that, even if these people insult the householder, he should calmly put up with them. Does this suggest that the old family solidarity suffered a temporary break-down? For it sounds curious that this lawgiver should ask the master to pocket the insults given by his slaves.

But the slaves and the hired labourers did not enjoy the same rights as the citizens. This can be inferred from the conditions obtaining in the republican states of the Mālavas and the Kṣudrakas. Commenting on a passage of Pāṇini Patañjali states that the sons of the Kṣudrakas and the Mālavas are respectively known as Kṣaudrakyas and Mālavas, but this does not apply to the sons of their slaves and labourers.

Manu’s provisions regarding the politico-legal position of the śūdras are mostly based on the similar rules of the older authorities. Of his new provisions some were directed against the foreign rulers and followers of heterodox sects who were

1. Here the term adhyadhina means a dāsa according to Kull. Manu, VIII. 167.
2. Manu, VIII. 199.
3. IV. 180.
4. IV. 184.
5. IV. 185.
condemned as śūdras, and others against the śūdras as such. The provisions of the later type mainly relate to śūdras offending against brāhmaṇas. But even in this respect Manu’s policy of gross discrimination against the śūdras could not make any appreciable headway. He not only retains the old provision of wergeld for the life of a śūdra but also prescribes a fine of 12 panas for the brāhmaṇa abusing a śūdra—a provision which is not to be found in the earlier law-books. It is significant that towards the end of this period the Sātavāhana ruler Gautamiputra Śātakarni (A. D. 106–130) claims to have restored order out of the confusion of the four varṇas by conciliating the brāhmaṇas and the śūdras (āvarṇas).¹ This alignment of the varṇas was directed by the brāhmaṇa ruler against the ksatriyas,² who perhaps belonged to the foreign ruling dynasties.

Manu’s provisions regarding the social position of the śūdras are largely the re-mastations of the views of the older authorities. But he introduces certain new discriminations against them. He recounts the old story of creation which gives the lowest place to the śūdras.³ He also repeats the old law prescribing different forms of greetings (presumably used by a brāhmaṇa) in relation to the members of the four varṇas.⁴ But he adds that a brāhmaṇa who does not know the form of returning salutation must not be saluted by a learned man because he is like a śūdra.⁵ We learn from Patañjali that in returning greetings śūdras were addressed differently from non-śūdras. Thus an elevated tone was not to be used in addressing śūdras. The term bho (a vocative particle) was to be used in addressing a rājanya or a vaiśya but not a śūdra. Hence varṇa distinctions were reflected even in the formation of grammatical rules. Manu provides that a śūdra can be respected if he has reached the tenth

¹. dijāvara kuṭāha visadhanasa...vinivatita cātuṣwāṇa sankarasa. Nāsik Cave Inscription of Vāsiṣṭhiputra Puḷumāvi, chs. 5–6 (D. C. Sircar, Select Inscriptions, i, 197).
². Ibid.
⁴. Ibid., II.127.
⁵. Ibid., II.126.
⁶. bho rājanyavilāṃ vā. Pat. on Pā., VIII. 2. 32–33.
decade of his life. But such a rule can have covered only a very limited number of sūdras.

Manu introduces varṇa distinctions even in the ceremony of (naming) of the child, which naturally emphasises the low position of the sūdra. According to him a brāhmaṇa’s name should denote something auspicious, a kṣatriya’s name power, a vaiśya’s name wealth and a sūdra’s name something contemptible. As a corollary to this he states that the titles of the members of the four varṇas should respectively imply happiness, protection, prosperity and service. We have no evidence that this practice was widely followed, but Manu’s provisions with regard to names show that the members of the lower orders were generally objects of contempt in brāhmaṇical society. Thus the word vrṣala used for the sūdra was a term of abuse and opprobrium. While illustrating a rule of Pāṇini regarding the formation of the samāsas Patañjali states that ‘like the female slave’ or ‘like the vrṣali’ are terms of abuse, suggesting thereby that sūdras and slaves were considered despicable elements in society. The vrṣala was placed in the category of the thief, and both aroused brāhmaṇical hostility. We also learn that the vrṣala, the dasyu and the thief were treated as contemptible people.

The company of the sūdra was considered contaminating for a brāhmaṇa. Manu states that a brāhmaṇa who lives in the company of the most excellent people and shuns all low people becomes most distinguished; by the opposite conduct he is degraded to the position of sūdra. He reproduces the provision that the snātaka should not travel with the sūdras. Manu recalls the old rule that if the vaiśyas and sūdras come to the house

1. Manu, II. 137. Cf. Gautama who declares that a sūdra is worthy of respect on reaching the age of eighty.

3. sarmavodbrāhmaṇasya svādrājño rakṣāsamanvitaṁ; vaiśyaspustiśaubhyaktoṁ śūḍrasya pṛṣṭhāṣaṁyutam. Manu, II. 32. Kull. comments that these titles should be respectively śarman, varman, bhūti and dāsa.

4. Pat. on Pā., VI. 2.11.

5. Pat. on Pā., II. 2.11 and III.2.127.

7. Manu, IV.245.

8. Ibid., IV.140 He, however, uses the word vrṣala in the place of sūdra. of a brāhmaṇa as guests, out of compassion they should be permitted to take their food along with the servants.\(^1\) Manu provides that the snātaka should not eat the food of a śūdra.\(^2\) In a long list of those whose food should not be taken by the snātaka are blacksmiths, niśādas, stage-players, goldsmiths, basket-makers, trainers of hunting dogs, distillers and vendors of spirituous liquors (śauṇḍikas), washermen and dyers.\(^3\) It is further stated that the food of a king impairs the vigour of the snātaka, the food of a śūdra his excellence in sacred learning, the food of a goldsmith his longevity and that of a leather-cutter (carmāvakartinaḥ) his fame.\(^4\) Curiously enough, along with the food of the various sections of the śūdra community, the food of the king is also considered as detrimental to the welfare of the snātaka. Manu further adds that the food of an artisan destroys the offspring of the snātaka, that of a washerman his physical strength and the food of the tribal groups and harlots excludes him from the higher worlds.\(^5\) If he takes the food of any of these people unintentionally, he must fast for three days; but if he has done so intentionally, he must perform a difficult penance known as the kṣecra.\(^6\) It seems that in all these references the snātaka probably means a Vedic student from the brāhmaṇa varṇa. The result of these restrictions, if enforced, would be to prevent all social contacts between the lower orders and the educated brāhmaṇas. Manu lays down that the learned brāhmaṇa must not take the cooked food of a śūdra who does not perform the rites of śrāddha, but on failure of all other means of subsistence he might accept raw grain sufficient to maintain him for one night.\(^7\) But such a rule is not valid in abnormal times. Manu cites several examples of the distinguished sages who took forbidden food in time of distress.\(^8\) Thus hungry Viśvāmitra, who could distin-

1. Manu, III.112.
2. Ibid., IV. 211.
4. Ibid., IV. 218.
5. kārūnānām praśām hanti balaṁ nirpejakaṁ ca; gaṇānāṁ ganīkānāṁ ca lakṣābhyaḥ ṣaṁkṣayati. Manu, IV. 219.
7. Ibid., IV. 223.
guish between right and wrong, was ready to eat the haunch of a dog, receiving it from the hands of a caṇḍāla. Generally the food of the śūdras was accepted in normal times. Manu lays down that, among śūdras, one may eat the food of his sharecropper, a friend of his family, his cow-herd, his slave and his barber. Patañjali informs us that the plates of carpenters, washermen, and blacksmiths could be used after proper cleaning. This would suggest that in matters of food there were relations of give and take between the members of the higher varnas and these sections of the śūdra community. To eat the leavings of the śūdras was considered a great sin. It is stated that he who has eaten the leavings of women and śūdras should remove the impurity by drinking barley gruel for seven days and nights. Perhaps this rule applies to the brāhmaṇa. Similarly a brāhmaṇa who drinks water left by a śūdra should expiate his sin by drinking water in which kuśa grass has been boiled for three days. Manu’s provisions throw some light on the dietary habits of the śūdras. The twice-born should perform the candrayāna penance if he eats dried meat, mushrooms growing on the earth and meat about the origin of which he has no knowledge, or which had been kept in a slaughter-house. Similarly if the twice-born takes the meat of carnivorous animals, boars, camels, cocks, crows, human beings and asses, he should perform a very difficult penance known as the taptakṣehra. If in these references the dvija is taken as a member of the first three varnas, it would imply that śūdras were free to take all varieties of meat. Commenting on a passage of Manu Kullūka states that, by eating garlic and other kinds of forbidden roots, the śūdra cannot commit an offence

2. The possessive pronoun does not occur in the text, but Kull. interprets the passage to apply only to a man’s own servants. This seems to be more in the spirit of Manu than if it were taken as referring to all sharecroppers etc. Manu IV. 253. The term ārdhikah has been wrongly translated as “labourer in tillage” in SBE, xxv. 168. The cow-herd is used in the sense of an ābhira in the Mahābhārata of Patañjali.

3. Pat. on Pā., II. 4. 10.
5. Ibid., XI. 149 with the comm. of Kull.
6. Ibid., XI. 156.
7. Ibid., X. 157.
leading to loss of caste. This would suggest that garlic, onion and various kinds of meat were regarded as the legitimate food of the members of the lower orders.

It seems that the vaiśyas and śūdras followed forms of marriage which were different from those of the higher varṇas. Manu quotes the opinions of authorities, according to whom the first four forms of marriage, i.e. the brāhma, the daiva, the ārṣa, and the prājāpatya are prescribed for the brāhmaṇa, the rakṣasa for the kṣatriya and the āsura for the vaiśya and the śūdra. He adds that the brāhmaṇa can also follow the āsura and the gāndharva, the kṣatriya can also practise the āsura, gāndharva and the pāiśāca and so also the vaiśya and the śūdra. Thus the kṣatriyas are distinguished from the vaiśyas and śūdras only by the provision that they can practise the rakṣasa form of marriage. But perhaps in this case the main object of Manu is to demarcate the brāhmaṇas from the three other varṇas. In regard to the two lower varṇas, the real position is reflected in the statement quoted by Manu and also occurring in the Ādi Parvan that the āsura (marriage by purchase) of the bride usually prevails among the vaiśyas and śūdras. Manu ordains that the āsura and pāiśāca forms of marriage must not be practised. Kullūka comments that this rule applies to the brāhmaṇas and the kṣatriyas, which suggests that these two forms of marriage were especially meant for the two lower varṇas.

Manu’s rules regarding the strīdhana differ according to the forms of marriage. It is said that, if the wife dies without leaving any issue in the āsura, rakṣasa and pāiśāca forms of marriage, the strīdhana belongs to her mother and father, i.e. to her parents’ family and not to her husband, as is the case in the first four and the gāndharva forms of marriage.

4. Ch. 67. 11.
6. Kull. also says that the rakṣasa form of marriage is prescribed for the vaiśyas and śūdras. Comm. to Manu, III. 25.
7. Manu, IX. 196-7 with the comm. of Kull.
would show that matrilineal elements had some importance in the forms of marriage practised by the vaiśyas and śūdras.

Manu avers that niyoga (levirate) cannot take place in marriages that are performed according to the Vedic mantras. Since these mantras are not permitted in the marriages of the śūdras, it is clear that niyoga was confined mainly to the śūdras. This can be inferred from a further statement of Manu, who asserts that widow remarriage and levirate are regarded as beastly practices by the twice-born people learned in the sāstras. Jolly thinks that Manu’s views on the questions of niyoga and widow remarriage are contradictory, for he approves of them in some passages and condemns them in others. But these passages can be easily reconciled if we bear in mind that Manu’s approval of niyoga and widow remarriage is meant for the śūdras and his condemnation of these is meant for the members of the three upper varṇas. The prevalence of the above mentioned practices among the śūdras would show that women were not so dependent in their community.

As regards the inter-varṇa marriage, Manu quotes the old dictum, which permits the members of a higher varṇa to marry the woman of a lower varṇa. But he adds that, if twice-born men wed women of their own and of the other lower varṇas, the seniority, status and habitation of these wives must be settled according to the order of the varṇas.

Manu, however, detests the idea that a śūdra woman should be the first wife of either a brāhmaṇa or a kṣatriya. According to him there is no precedent for this in any ancient story. Probably the śūdra wives of the people of the higher varṇas had a very low status. Patañjali informs us that the dāsī and the nīśali were meant for satisfying the pleasures of the people of higher classes. Manu declares that the twice-born men who wed

1. Manu, IX. 65.
3. ivaṁ dvijairihi vidvadbhiḥ pariśvāno eṣaṁ dharmo evaṁ dharmo. Manu, IX. 65.
6. Ibid., IX. 85.
7. Ibid., III. 14.
8. Pat. on Pa., II. 3. 69 and I. 2. 49.
śūdra wives soon degrade their families and children to the status of a śūdra.¹ According to Kullūka this rule applies to all the three upper varṇas.² In support of his statement Manu quotes the views of several authorities. According to Atri, if a brāhmaṇa marries a śūdra woman, he becomes an outcaste; according to Śaunaka a kṣatriya is reduced to this position on the birth of a son; and according to Bhṛgu a vaiśya becomes an outcaste if he has male offspring by a śūdra wife alone.³ But Manu very strongly disapproves of the idea of a brāhmaṇa having intercourse with a śūdra woman. Such a person, in his opinion, will sink into hell after his death. If he begets a child by her, he will lose the rank of a brāhmaṇa⁴ and, in absence of issue other than śūdras, his family will quickly perish.⁵ For the śūdra son of a brāhmaṇa, though alive, is a corpse, and hence he is called a pāraśava.⁶ There can be no expiation for the man who drinks the moisture of a śūdra’s (vṛṣali) lips, is tainted by her breath, and begets a son on her.⁷ The context shows that this prohibition was meant for the brāhmaṇas only.⁸

Manu mentions the old mixed castes such as the niśāda,⁹ the pāraśava, the ugra, the āyogava, the kṣatyr, the candāla, the pukkasa,¹⁰ the kukkutaka, the svapāka and the veṇa,¹¹ who are said to have originated from the intermixture of the varṇas. He ascribes a similar origin to a long list of new castes. A brāhmaṇa begets on the daughter of an ugra an āvṛta, on the daughter of an ambāṣṭha an ābhira, and on the woman of the āyogava.

¹. Manu, III. 15.
². Comm. to Manu, III. 15.
³. Manu, III. 16. with the comm. of Kull.
⁴. Manu, III. 17.
⁵. Ibid., III. 64.
⁶. Ibid., IX. 170.
⁷. Ibid., III. 19.
⁸. Ibid., III. 17-19.
⁹. Even during this period we hear of the castes of the Niśādas (Pat. on Pā., IV.2.104; Junagarh Rock Inscr. of Rudradāman I, 1.11 (Sircar, Select Inscr., i, 172)).
¹⁰. Manu (XII. 55) states that a slayer of a brāhmaṇa shall enter the womb of a candāla or a pukkasa.
¹¹. Manu, X, 8-9, 12, 16, 18, 19. By now some of the old castes had become hereditary, for we hear of the sons of the niśādas and candālas (Pat. on Pā., IV.1.97.)
caste a dhigvāṇa.\(^1\) Further, on an āyogava woman the dasyuv beget a sairandhra, the vaidehaka a maitreyaka, the niśāda a mārgaya or a dāsa who is also known as a kaivarta.\(^2\) On a vaidehaka woman the caṇḍāla beget a pāṇḍusopāka and the niśāda an āhinḍaka.\(^3\) On a woman of the vaidehaka caste the niśāda also begets a kārāvara; and a vaidehaka begets an andhra on a kārāvara woman and a meda on a niśāda woman.\(^4\) A niśāda woman bears to a caṇḍāla a son called the antyāvasāyin, who is despised even by those who are excluded from the fourfold varṇa system (bāhyas).\(^5\) Manu further states that the sūta, the vaidehaka, the caṇḍāla, the māgadha, the ksattṛ and the āyogava beget on women of similar castes issues who are more despicable, more sinful than their fathers, and are excluded from varṇa society.\(^6\) He adds that bāhyas and hīnas (low people) produce fifteen kinds of low castes\(^7\) on women of higher castes. Although Manu does not enumerate these castes by name, they seem to have been covered by the list that has been given above.

The above-mentioned castes were to be distinguished by their occupations.\(^8\) The caṇḍālas, śvapākas and antyāvasāyins were engaged for executing criminals, and were given their clothes, beds and ornaments.\(^9\) The niśādas lived by fishing, and the medas, andhras, madgus and cūñcus were employed in hunting wild animals.\(^10\) Ksattṛs, ugras and pukkasas are described as engaged in the catching and killing of animals living in holes.\(^11\) Apparently all of these were backward aboriginal tribes, who retained their occupations even when they were absorbed in brāhmaṇical society. Manu informs us that some of the mixed

---

7. pratikulaṃ varmaṇā bāhyā bāhyatarāṇṇāṇah; hīnā hīnāgraśaśyante saṃgañca padaśaśāc ca. Manu., X. 31. In his comm. Kull. tries to show that the total of such castes was thirty. This may have been a later development.
castes pursued important crafts. The āyogava practised wood work,¹ and the dhigvaṇa and the kārāvara worked in leather;² and the pāṇḍusopāka dealt in canes.³ The mārgava or the dāsa subsisted by working as a boatman and was known as the kaivarta by the inhabitants of Āryāvarta.⁴ The venas played on drums,⁵ and the sairandhra was considered skilled in adorning and attending on his master. The latter, though not a slave, lived like a slave or subsisted by snaring animals.⁶ The maitreyaka is described as a sweet-tuned fellow, who rang a bell at the appearance of dawn and was constantly engaged in praising great men.⁷

Some low castes of the above type are also mentioned in a Buddhist source. It is stated that the followers of the Buddha or the Bodhisattva shall have nothing to do with the caṇḍālas, kaukkutikas (poulterers), saṅkarikas (pork butchers), śauṇḍikas (sellers and vendors of spirituous liquors),⁸ manisakas (butchers) mauṣṭikas (boxers), naṭa-nartakas (actors and dancers) jhallas and mallas (wrestlers).⁹ These people were despised by the Buddhists on account of their association with cruel and unpuriti-

Most of the mixed castes enumerated by Manu were untouchable. After stating the functions of the niśādas, āyogavas, medas, andhras, cuṇcus, madgus, kṣatrīs, pukkasas, dhigvaṇas and venas Manu ordains that they should live outside villages near famous trees and burial grounds on mountains and in groves.¹⁰ This shows that these tribal people lived outside brāhmaṇic

¹. Ibid., X. 48.
². Manu, X. 36, 49. Incidentally this shows that leather work had become an important craft, for three categories of workers, namely the carmakāra, the dhigvaṇa and the kārāvara, were engaged in it.
³. Ibid., X. 37.
⁴. Ibid., X. 34.
⁵. Ibid., X. 34.
⁶. Ibid., X. 49.
⁷. Ibid., X. 32.
⁸. Ibid., X. 33.
⁹. Tr. of this term as mutton butchers does not seem to be accurate. SBE, xxi, 438.
¹⁰. The list also includes the Ājīvikas, Nirgranthas and Lokāyatikas. Saddharmapuṇḍarīka, pp. 180-1, 311-2; cf. Bosc, op. cit., ii, 463-4. A cow butcher and his apprentice is mentioned in the Mahāvastu, ii, 125.
settlements. Certainly the caṇḍālas and śvapacas lived outside. Food vessels used by them were discarded for ever. Their śole property consisted of dogs and donkeys; they took their food in broken dishes, used ornaments of iron and clothes of dead people, and wandered from place to place. They were not permitted to appear in towns and villages at night, where they could work only during the day. Manu provides that the caṇḍālas and śvapacas should be distinguished by marks at the king’s command. Rāghavānanda’s explanation that the caṇḍālas should be branded on the forehead and other parts of the body is not corroborated by any contemporary evidence. Possibly the caṇḍāla and śvapacas were required to put on some kind of uniforms to distinguish them from the rest of the people. They could not enter into any transactions with others regarding marriage, debt, loan etc., which could take place only with the members of their own castes. Manu ordains that members of the higher varṇas should not give them even grain with their own hands.

But in particular Manu wants to avoid all contact between the brāhmaṇas and the untouchables. He lays down that a snātaka (generally a brāhmaṇa) should not stay with the caṇḍālas, pukkasas, antyas and antyāvasāyins among those who should not look at the brāhmaṇa at the śrāddha ceremony are the caṇḍālas, village pigs, cocks, dogs etc. Manu further declares that, if a brāhmaṇa either has intercourse with caṇḍāla or antya women or takes their food, he shall fall from his brāhmaṇahood. But if he does these things intentionally, he shall be reduced to their status. This would imply that such connections of non-brāhmaṇas with the caṇḍālas were not looked upon

3. ... cembudā rājaṭāśanaīḥ. Manu, X. 55.
4. Medhātithi takes these marks in the sense of “axes, adzes and so forth used for executing criminals and carried on the shoulder”. Govindarāja explains them as ‘sticks and so forth,’ and Sarvajñanārayana as ‘iron ornaments, peacock feathers and the like, SBE, xxv, 415, fn.55’. Cf. Bose, op.cit., ii, p.437.
5. Kull. says and this should be done through servants. Manu, X. 53-54.
7. Ibid., III. 239.
8. Ibid., II. 276.
Whether the untouchables and the mixed castes were regarded as śudras by Manu is not clear. Manu categorically states that there are only four varṇas,\(^1\) which may imply that the mixed castes were included in the śudra varṇa. The myths of their origin show that they were supposed to have śudra blood in their veins. At one place in Manu the antyaja is explained as a śudra by Kullūka.\(^2\) But the term antyaja is also used by Manu in the sense of a caṇḍāla.\(^3\) The mixed castes such as the sūta, the vaidehaka, the caṇḍāla, the māgadha, the kṣattr and the ṣāyāga are known as bāhyas, who are regarded by the commentators as people outside the fourfold varṇa system.\(^4\) Manu distinguishes an antyaja from a śudra in connection with his penalties for the crime of adultery,\(^5\) and an antyāvasāyin from a śudra in his law of evidence. But Patañjali defines niravasita śudras as caṇḍālas and mṛtāpas, whose food vessels could not be used by the people of the higher varṇas;\(^6\) this suggests that these untouchables were considered śudras. Manu also uses the term apapātra (i.e. those whose vessels could not be used) for such śudras.\(^7\) Thus it seems that the mixed castes and the untouchables were being absorbed as inferior śudras, who were distinguished from the ordinary śudras by their separate habitations, backward culture and primitive religious beliefs.

Manu’s provisions regarding the boycott of the food, company and women of śudras apply mainly to the brāhmaṇas.\(^8\) We observe a similar social distance between the brāhmaṇa and the vrṣala in the Mahābhāṣya of Patañjali. Thus while the

1. X.4.
2. Manu, VIII. 279.
5. Manu, VIII. 385.
6. yairbhukte pātvam saṃskāraṇaḥ na śudhyati te niravasitāḥ Pat. on Pā., II.4.10.
8. The terms brāhmaṇa and śudra are used to cover the whole population in the Mahāavastu, i, 188.
brāhmaṇa has white teeth, the vrṣala has black;¹ the brāhmaṇa gets a high seat but the vrṣala a low seat.² A person can indulge in illicit and disreputable dealings towards the vrṣali and dāsī, but he should behave with due respect towards a brāhmaṇi.³

It is argued by Bhandarkar that the vrṣalas formed a community consisting of people from all the four varṇas after the pattern of the āryan community.⁴ But generally the vrṣala was identical with the śūdra. Thus while the Dharmasūtras enjoin the snātaka not to travel with śūdras, Manu instructs him not to travel with vrṣalas.⁵ His denunciation of connections between a brāhmaṇa and a vrṣali occurs in the context in which he bans all connections between a brāhmaṇa and a śūdra.⁶ Although nowhere in the Mahābhārata the term vrṣala distinctly refers to a śūdra,⁷ the similar status of the vrṣali and dāsī⁸ and the proverbial poverty of the vrṣala⁹ show that the vrṣala was no better than a śūdra. Like the term śūdra, the term vrṣala was also used indiscriminately to cover barbarians and heretics. But commonly vrṣala signified a member of the fourth varṇa, and hence the contrast between the brāhmaṇa and the vrṣala in the Mahābhārata should be taken in the sense of that between the brāhmaṇa and the śūdra.

Manu reproduces the old injunction confining Vedic studies to the twice-born.¹⁰ In contrast to them the śūdras are called ekajāti, i.e. having one birth.¹¹ The first birth of the āryan is from his natural mother, but the second birth takes place on the tying of the girdle of munija grass.¹² Therefore a twice-born man who, not having studied the Veda, applies himself to other occupations is reduced to the condition of a śūdra, and his

1. Pat. on Pā., II.2.8, 11.
2. Pat. on Pā., II.2.11.
4. Some Aspects of Ancient Indian Culture, pp. 51 and 54.
5. IV. 140.
10. II.165.
12. Ibid., II.169-70.
descendants also meet the same fate.\textsuperscript{1} The presence of the śūdra is to be scrupulously avoided while the study of the Veda goes on.\textsuperscript{2}

Notwithstanding these provisions, we hear of some teachers instructing śūdras. Manu provides that he who instructs śūdra pupils or learns from a śūdra teacher should not be invited at the śādha.\textsuperscript{3} It is not clear whether the śūdra teacher or pupils refer to heretics. In a list of ten kinds of people who may receive education from the teacher occurs the name of the śrṣṭu, who is taken by Kullūka as a servant (paricāraka),\textsuperscript{4} and perhaps may refer to a śūdra.

But generally the śūdra seems to have been deprived of education. Like Vasiṣṭha, Manu ordains that nobody should give advice to a śūdra or should explain the law to him.\textsuperscript{5} He strengthens this provision by enacting that a person who acts to the contrary shall sink into the Asamogita hell together with the person whom he instructs.\textsuperscript{6}

In the religious sphere the śūdra continued to be deprived of the right to Vedic sacrifice.\textsuperscript{7} It is said that the śūdra cannot suffer loss of caste; he is not worthy to receive the sacraments and has no right to follow the dharma of the āryans.\textsuperscript{8} A twice-born should not associate his śūdra wife with the performance of rites.\textsuperscript{9} If he does this foolishly, he should be regarded despisable as a caṇḍāla.\textsuperscript{10} Perhaps this rule refers to the brāhmaṇas. It is also laid down that a brāhmaṇa should not beg from a śūdra anything required for the sacrifice; if he does so, he will be born as a caṇḍāla after death.\textsuperscript{11}

1. Manu, II. 163. Cf. II. 172, X. 110. It is suggested that the upanayana of girls and śūdras was done without a formal ceremony (Rangaswami Aiyangar, Political and Social Aspects of the System of Manu, p. 145), but there seems to be no evidence for this.
3. III. 156.
7. Pat. on Pā, IV. I. 93.
But there was a class of priests who ministered to the religious needs of the śūdras. Manu states that those who officiate as priests for a śūdra by obtaining wealth from him and offering an agnihotra are censored by the brahmavādins (reciters of the Veda) as śūdra ritiwha (priests), and considered ignorant. 1 Commenting on a passage of Manu Kullūka states that the śūdras can perform minor domestic sacrifices (pākayajñas). 2 We learn from Bhasa that śūdras worshipped the deities without mantras. 3 Manu avers that the virtuous śūdras obtain praise if they emulate the habits of the good, but they should do so without reciting the Vedic texts. 4 He further provides that the śūdras can offer water to their ancestors, like the members of the three upper varnas. In this connection he states that the Sukālins are the manes of the śūdras and Vasiṣṭha their progenitor. 5 All this would suggest that Manu invests the śūdras with some religious rights which they did not enjoy in the Mauryan or the pre-Mauryan period.

Manu lays down the same moral code for the members of all the four varnas. They should practise non-injury, truth, non-stealing, purity, sublimation of passions, and freedom from spite, and should beget children on their wives only. 6 But from the religious point of view he considers women and śūdras as the most impure sections of society. They are to be avoided by a sacrificer engaged in the cāndrayaṇa vow. 7 He prescribes less rigorous rites of purification for them. 8 A śūdra should keep himself pure by shaving once a month and, like the vaisyas, should observe rites of purification in cases of death and birth. 9 But he endorses the view of the old lawgivers that a vaisya's period of impurity lasts for 15 days and that of a śūdra for a

---

1. Ibid., XI.42-43.
2. Ibid., X.126.
5. Ibid., III.196-198. Vasiṣṭha appears as a lawgiver in Manu, VIII. 140 and as one of the ten Prajāpatis in Manu, I.35.
7. Ibid., XI.224
8. Ibid., V.139. Patañjali places dāsa and bhārīja in the same category (Pat. on Pa., II.1.1).
9. Manu, V.140.
month. He adds that at the end of the period of impurity a brāhmaṇa can become pure by touching water, a kṣatriya by touching the animal on which he rides and his weapons, a vaiśya by touching his goad or the nose-string of his oxen and a śūdra by touching his staff. Manu also provides that a dead brāhmaṇa should not be carried by a śūdra, because if he desiles the burnt offering by his touch the deceased does not reach heaven. Thus he maintains the distinction between a śūdra and a brāhmaṇa even after the latter's death.

If the descriptions of the Kali age in the Purāṇas are taken even as a faint indication of the conditions prevailing during the post-Mauryan period, it would appear that the śūdras openly defied the existing social system. The excesses committed by the śūdras are described in the Kūrma Purāṇa: "The foolish śūdra officials of the king force the brāhmaṇas to give up their seats and beat them. The king dishonours the brāhmaṇas in the Kali on account of the changing times, and the śūdras occupy high seats among the brāhmaṇas. The brāhmaṇas, who are less educated in the Vedas and are less fortunate and powerful, honour the śūdras with flowers, decorations and other auspicious things. Though thus honoured, the śūdras do not cast even a glance at the brāhmaṇas. The brāhmaṇas dare not enter the houses of the śūdras but stand at the gate for an opportunity to pay respect to them. The brāhmaṇas, who depend upon the śūdras for their livelihood, surround them, when they are seated in vehicles, in order to praise them and teach them the Vedas." A somewhat similar picture is presented in the Matsya Purāṇa, which prophesises that the dharma of the Śrutis and Smṛtis will become very lax and the varṇāśrama dharma will be destroyed. It deplores that the people will be of mixed origin, the śūdras will sit with the brāhmaṇas, eat and perform sacrifices with them, and pronounce mantras with them. The

1. Ibid., V. 83.
2. Ibid., V. 99.
3. V. 104.
5. Kūrma P., Ch. 30, pp. 304-5.
Vāyu Purāṇa and the Brāhmaṇḍa Purāṇa state that in the Kali age the śūdras act as brāhmaṇas and vice versa. They inform us that the śūdras are respected by everybody, and that, unprotected by the kings, the brāhmaṇas depend for their livelihood upon the śūdras.

Probably the above statements refer to conditions in the post-Mauryan period. They do not seem to apply to the times of Aśoka, who, with all his zeal for Buddhism, cannot be charged with such gross intolerance towards the brāhmaṇas, as is represented in the Purānic statements. Although the insertion of the description of the Kali age in the Kūrma Purāṇa is ascribed to the period A.D. 700-800, it looks back to post-Mauryan times. Some of the passages in this description are exactly the same as can be found in the earlier texts of the Vāyu and the Brāhmaṇḍa. In an inscription of the first half of the fifth century A.D. the Pallava ruler Śrīhavarman is described as ever ready to save the dharma from the sins of the Kali age. This may suggest that the conception of the Kali age was not very old. As pointed out earlier, the mention of the mlecchas and of the intermingling of various peoples in the description of the Kali age better suits conditions obtaining in the post-Mauryan period. The Purānic statements that the foreign rulers will kill the brāhmaṇas and seize the wives and wealth of others is generally applied to this period, and is in consonance with the spirit of similar allegations in the Yuga Purāṇa.

3. Portions dealing with the Kali age in these Purāṇas are ascribed to A. D. 200-275 by Hazra (op. cit., pp. 174-5).
5. Pargiter thinks that the Kali age begins from the time of the Bhārata battle, but the description of the sins of the Kali age at the end of an age (yugānta) seems to refer to the period of chaos between the fall of the Mauryan and the rise of the Gupta empires.
7. Ibid., p. 46. Yuga Purāṇa, 95 ff. Tarn doubts whether the picture in the Yuga P. is meant for the result of the Greek conquest. The Greeks in Bactria and India, p. 456.
The descriptions of the Kali age, which are in the form of complaints and prophetic assertions made by the brähmanas, cannot be brushed aside as figments of imagination. They depict the pitiable plight of the brähmanas on account of the activities of the Greeks, Sakas and Kuṣāṇas. It is likely that their invasions caused an upheaval among the śūdras, who were seething with discontent. Naturally they turned against the brähmanas, who were the authors of discriminatory provisions against them. How long and in which part of the country this social convulsion prevailed is difficult to determine for lack of data. But it seems that the intense hostility of the brähmanas towards the heretical ‘śūdra’ kings was on account of the latter’s fraternization with the śūdras. The servile position of the śūdras as slaves and hired labourers may have been undermined by the policy of the foreign rulers such as the Sakas and Kuṣāṇas, who were not committed to the ideology of varṇa divided society.

The condition of society during the post-Mauryan period was perhaps similar to that which followed the collapse of the Old Kingdom in Egypt, when for some time the masses fought against the priests and nobles, and played havoc with the established order. Therefore Manu’s provisions were meant to combat the forces of disintegration, which followed the break-up of the Mauryan empire, rather than to undo the measures of Aśoka. His strong emphasis on the servile nature of the śūdra was obviously necessitated by the latter’s refusal to work. He enjoin the king to compel the vaiśyas and śūdras to work, which shows that the masses did not feel any common interest with the members of the two higher varṇas. Manu ordains that the king should maintain the varṇa-dharma, for the state which is sullied by the intermixture of varṇas perishes together with its inhabitants, i.e. the established order is destroyed. Such measures are broadly analogous to the decrees issued by the Roman empire in the third century A. D., commanding people of various callings to stick to their trades. But Manu also applies some spiritual sanctions. If the śūdra fails in his duty, he is born as a cailāsaka (a kind of goblin feeding on moths); but if he performs it loyally, he gets a higher birth next time.

1. A similar literary style was adopted by the Hebrew prophets in describing the fall of Assyría.
2. Manu, VIII. 418.
3. Ibid., X. 61.

Manu provides a number of safeguards against the hostile activities of the śūdras. Unlike Kauṭilya, he lays down that the king should settle in a country chiefly peopled by the āryans, for the kingdom having majority of śūdras (śūdra-bhūyīṣṭha) soon perishes. Manu confines the protection of the state only to the people who live like āryans. He further states that those non-āryans (i.e. śūdras) who wear marks of āryans should be treated as thorns and removed without delay. In particular the mixed castes (mostly śūdras) were considered non-āryans who were cruel and violent. All these statements of Manu betray his complete distrust of the śūdras and his consequent anxiety to guard against their hostile activities, which were either apprehended or actually took place in times of foreign invasion. Manu probably has such situations in mind when he ordains that, if the members of the three upper varṇas are hindered in the performance of their duties on account of the outbreak of revolution, they should take up arms. In the context of the description of conditions at the end of the Kali age the Vāyu Purāṇa refers to the exploits of Pramiti (an incarnation of god Mādhava), who raised an army of armed brāhmaṇas and set out to annihilate the various peoples such as the mlecchas and the vṛṣalas. This may be taken as a faint echo of violent

3. Manu, VII.69. It is said that the country should be anāsilam, which is explained by commentators (Nār. and Nand.) as 'fr. e. from defilement such as a mixture of the castes'. (SBE, xxv. 227).
4. The commentators' interpretations that this refers to the predominance of śūdra judges or administrative officers seem to be gratuitous.
8. *Sastraḥ duṣṭāḥ bhirgāhāyaṁ dharmaṁ yatra paruḥyate duṣjātīnāṁ ca varṇānāṁ avplave kālakārite. Manu, VIII.348. This provision is also found in Vas. Dh. S., but not in such clear terms (III.24.25).
9. Quoted in Patil, Cultural Life from the Vāyu Purāṇa pp. 74-75. The author thinks that this description applies to the early centuries of the Christian era preceding the Gupta age (p. 128).
struggle between the brāhmaṇas on the one hand, and the śūdras and foreign rulers on the other. This was natural, for the vṛṣalas were regarded as the breakers of the established order and not its preservers. Manu’s elaborate provisions for punishing śūdras offending against brāhmaṇas are attributed to his hostility chiefly against the learned śūdra. But his measures as a whole show that he was not less hostile to the śūdra masses.

In the earlier periods the main distinction lay between the śūdras and three upper varṇas. Although this distinction is retained by Manu as a matter of form, his work shows a far stronger tendency towards the approximation of the vaiśyas and śūdras in matters of legal provisions, food and marriage. The development was probably due to the fact that large numbers of vaiśyas were being thrown into the ranks of the śūdras. The Viṣṇu Purāṇa states that in the Kali age the vaiśyas will give up agriculture and trade, and will take to servitude and mechanical arts, and the prevailing castes will be those of the śūdras. That the traditional vaiśya varṇa was gradually disappearing is evident from a passage of Manu. He attributes the quality of truth (sattva) to the brāhmaṇa and activity (rajas) to the kṣatriya; the śūdras and mlechchas are cast together as representatives of the dark quality (madhyamā tāmasī gati) produced by actions in a former life, but there is no mention of vaiśyas in this connection. This may suggest that the vaiśyas were being lost in the śūdra masses.

Hopkins states that some of the provisions of Manu imply antagonism between the two upper varṇas on the one hand, and the two lower varṇas on the other. In this conflict it seems that the upper varṇas were led by the brāhmaṇas, and the lower varṇas were led by the śūdras. There is indication of subdued

---

1. viṣo hi bhagavān dharmastāsyā yaḥ kurute halam : viṣalam taṁ viddurdevaś-tasmaddharmam na lopayet. Manu, VIII.16. This provision is also repeated in the Śanti P., but is not to be found in earlier brāhmaṇical texts.
3. Viṣṇu P., VI.1.36.
4. śūdraprāyasatathā varṇā bhavioranti kalau yuge. Ibid., VI.1.51.
6. Ibid., XII. 43.
7. Hopkins, Mutual Relations of the Four Castes in Manu, p. 78, cf. p. 82.
friction between the śūdras and the other varṇas even in the earlier periods. But in the post-Mauryan period it assumed acute and violent forms. In a recent study of Manu it has been claimed that economic inequality and friction could hardly arise in a society planned on Indian lines. But this is not borne out by the nature of relations subsisting between the varṇas on the basis of Manu. The latter clearly states that a śūdra should not be permitted to amass wealth, for he gives pain to the brāhmaṇas.

But it would not be fair to hold that Manu's diatribes against the śūdras mark the nadir of their fortunes during the post-Mauryan period. These should be taken in the nature of desperate measures, which were suggested to maintain the old form of society threatened by the appearance of new forces. Even the law-book of Manu could not ignore several changes in the position of the śūdras, which had appeared perhaps as a result of their struggle against the brāhmaṇas, the advent of new peoples and developments in arts and crafts.

Notwithstanding Manu's insistence on the servitude of the śūdras, they do not appear as slaves and labourers on the same scale as in the pre-Mauryan and Mauryan periods. We do not hear of big individual or state farms being worked with slave and hired labour. Presumably slaves and hired labourers working on the Mauryan state farms were now in the process of being transformed into tax-paying agriculturists. Manu is the first writer explicitly to describe the śūdra as a sharecropper, a fact which can be only deduced from the Arthaśāstra of Kautilya. While the sharecropper (ardhasitika) retains only \( \frac{1}{3} \)th or \( \frac{1}{4} \)th portion of the produce in the Arthaśāstra, in Manu he seems to retain half of the produce (ārdhikah). There seems to have been an increase not only in the share of the sharecroppers, but also in their numbers. Instead of the paid officials of the

1. K. V. Rangaswami Aiyangar, Aspects of the Social and Pol. System of Manu, pp. 151-2. He admits that the nītilāstras occasionally "have a fling at millionaires" (p. 159).
3. IV. 253.
4. AS, II.23; Manu, IV. 253. While the sharecropper in the AS receives land from the state, in Manu he receives it from the individual.
Arthaśāstra Manu gives a list of graded officers who are to be remunerated by grants of land. In the absence of references to slaves employed in agriculture, we may presume that these plots of land were cultivated by sharecroppers and hired labourers. Perhaps in no other period was there such a great accession to the numerical strength of the śūdras. In order to assimilate numerous aboriginal tribes and foreign elements Manu made a far greater use of the fiction of varṇa-sanātaka (intermixture of varṇas) than was done by his predecessors. In the majority of instances the mixed castes were lumped with the śūdras in respect of their hereditary duties. But the new śūdras do not seem to have been recruited as slaves and hired labourers like their old counterparts. They pursued their old occupations and were possibly taught new methods of agriculture, which gradually turned them into tax-paying peasants. Thus while the aborigines benefited from the knowledge of civilised life imparted to them by brāhmanical society, the latter could overcome its internal weaknesses by the addition of new producing masses.

The formation of new guilds of artisans and the rise of new crafts betoken changes of considerable importance, not only in the economic life of the period, but in the position of the śūdras. With the disappearance of the all-powerful Mauryan state they helped to secure the comparative independence of artisans, therefore leading to some improvement in their status, which is evident from epigraphic records of numerous donations made by them to the Buddhists. The economic policy of some rulers also indirectly helped to improve the position of the śūdras. The Śaka ruler Rudradāman, a supporter of varṇa society, claims to have made the repair of the Sudarśana lake without imposing any forced labour upon his subjects. This must have

1. Manu, VII. 119. Here we have an important germ of feudalism.
4. Existence of independent handicrafts is generally regarded as an important feature of feudal society in medieval Europe.
6. Ibid., I. 16.
meant a great boon to śūdra slaves and labourers who were usually subjected to corvée.

The literary evidence for the rise of new crafts and guilds can be linked up with the numismatic evidence and the testimony of foreign writers regarding trade between Rome and India, which was at its height during the first two centuries of the Christian era, especially in the Sātavāhana territory. This remarkable increase in the volume of trade must have softened the rigours of the caste system at least in the trading-ports and some other inland towns, and thus may have improved the social position of the lower orders.

The advent of foreign peoples in this period served to loosen the shackles of the varṇa system. The number of the Greeks Sakas and Parthians may not have been great, but numerous finds of the Kuśāṇas, such as coins, terracottas and sculptures scattered over the whole of Northern India, suggest that they came in considerable numbers. This naturally caused displacement of existing populations and led to the foundation of new settlements, thereby promoting mobility during the first century of the Christian era. Since the caste system basically rests on a static way of life, these racial upheavals may have undermined the privileges of the higher varṇas and thus favourably affected the position of the śūdras.

Similarly we notice some improvement in the śūdra’s legal and political status. Manu’s punishment of a brāhmaṇa abusing a śūdra is significant, for in the Dharmasūtras the brāhmaṇa goes scot-free. Again, the fact that the brāhmaṇa ruler Gautamiputra Sātakarni felt it necessary to court the support of the avaras shows the importance that was being accorded to them in the second century A.D.

1. The problem has been discussed in Warmington, The Commerce between the Roman Empire and India. For recent archaeological evidence see Wheeler, Rome beyond the Imperial Frontiers, Chs. 12-13.

2. Sixteen of the coastal towns are singled by Ptolemy as emporia, Wheeler, op.cit., p. 151.

3. VIII.268.

4. Nāsik Cave Inscr. of Vāsiṣṭhīputra Puḷumāvi, ll.5-6 (D. C. Sirca, Select Insers., i, 197).
Lastly, Manu’s mention of Vasiṣṭha as the progenitor of the śūdras points to their better social and religious position. The fact that the śūdras could perform the nāmadheya (naming) ceremony shows that they gained in religious status. This may have also improved on account of the liberal religious outlook of the Kuśāṇa rulers. Being mainly Śaivites and Buddhists rather than supporters of the orthodox brāhmaṇism, they were probably better disposed towards the lower classes. Similar results may have been produced in the Sātavāhana dominions, where Buddhism undoubtedly enjoyed an important influence during the first and second centuries A.D.

These signs of change in the position of the śūdra permit us to conjecture that the old society which treated him as a helot saddled with numerous disabilities had begun to decline and was being partly replaced by a new society which gave him a better position—a process that was carried further in the Gupta period. The repeated mention of the end of an age (yugānta) suggests the destruction of values on which the old society was based. Thus for some time the idea of birth, which was seen as the basis of varṇa society, was completely undermined. While describing the conduct of the foreign invaders the Vīṣṇu Purāṇa prophesises that during their rule property alone will confer rank, wealth alone will be the source of dharma, and liberality will constitute dharma.

1. III.196-198.
CHAPTER VII

THE PHASE OF TRANSFORMATION

(circa A. D. 200—500)

The Smṛtis of Viṣṇu, Yājñavalkya, Nārada, Brhaspati and Kātyāyana1 constitute the main source for the study of the position of the śudras in this period. Of these the Yājñavalkya seems to have been the most important because of the authority it came to enjoy in Northern India in subsequent times. Perhaps its provisions reflect more faithfully than do the other Smṛtis the developments in society during the Gupta period. This law-book either undoes or ignores the extremist measures of Manu against the śudras, and provides the punishment of branding and banishing even for the brāhmaṇas.2

We can only guess the regions to which the lawgivers belonged. Yājñavalkya probably flourished in Mithilā,3 and Nārada seems to have been from Nepāl.4 Other lawgivers also may have lived in the north, and hence their works reflect the conditions obtaining mainly in Northern India.

These Smṛtis expand the texts of the Dharmasūtras, and in many cases reproduce the verses of Manu.5 New information can be obtained only from the variants, which do not always have direct bearing on the subject of our study.

The information gleaned from the Smṛtis is sometimes corroborated and supplemented by the Smṛti sections of the 1. Kane gives the following dates for these Smṛtis;—Viṣṇu A.D. 1000-300, Yājñavalkya A.D. 100-300, Nārada A. D. 100-400, Brhaspati A. D. 300-500, Kātyāyana A.D. 400-600. Hist. Dh. S., ii, pt, I. p.XI. Although Viṣṇu and Yājñavalkya seem to be earlier, roughly all these law-books can be treated as authorities for the Gupta period.

2. Yājñavalkya, II. 270; Viṣṇu, V. 3. Hopkins thinks that this is scarcely possible to be true of Yājñavalkya. (Mutual Relations of the Four Castes in Manu, p. 31), but this is consistent with Yājñavalkya's popular attitude in several matters.

3. Hopkins, CHI, i, 279.

4. Ibid., 280.

5. In its original form the Brhaspati Smṛti may have been read as a running commentary on Manu's Code. GOS. No LXXV, Introd., p. 118.
Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas. Hopkins holds that masses of didactic matter were intruded into the epic between 200 B.C. and A.D. 200. This seems to be true of several verses of the Śānti Parvan, which are exactly similar to those in Manu. But variants in the Śānti Parvan and the Anuśāsana Parvan seem to be more in line with the Smṛti sections of the Purāṇas, which belong to a later period. Hopkins himself thinks that the swollen Anuśāsana Parvan was separated from the Śānti and recognised as a separate book in the period A.D. 200-400. There is no reference to the Smṛti contents of the Purāṇas in the pre-Christian era. The chapters dealing with the duties of the varṇas in the Viṣṇu, the Mārkaṇḍeya, the Bhavisya, and the Bhāgavata Purāṇas may be roughly assigned to the Gupta period.

A characteristic feature of the Smṛti writings of this period is their Vaiṣṇavite leanings. This is noticeable particularly in the Viṣṇu Smṛti, the Brahma Smṛti, the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, and the Mātṛya Purāṇa. Probably the worship of Kṛṣṇa and the influence of Vaiṣṇavism account for the more liberal views that are so largely represented in the great epic. As will be shown later, the Vaiṣṇavite tendencies liberalised the brāhmaṇical attitude towards the śūdras, who were granted narrow but definite rights in the sphere of religion.

Information supplied by the works of Kālidāsa and Śūdraka is also in the spirit of the Smṛtis. Kālidāsa is a portrayer of varāśrama ideals, and the same seems to be true of Śūdraka.

2. Ibid., Cf. CHI, i, 258.
3. Hazra, Purānic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs, p. 5.
4. Ibid., p. 175.
5. Ibid., p. 174.
6. Ibid., p. 188.
7. Probably the first half of the sixth century A.D. Ibid., p. 177.
10. Ibid., p. 51. In the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa there are a few chapters which indicate the influence of Vaiṣṇavism (Ibid., p. 18).
12. Dasgupta, Hist. of Sansk. Lit., Introd., p. XXX.
13. It is said that Śūdraka was a great brāhmaṇa minister. J. Charpentier, JRAS, 1923, pp. 596-7.
The Buddhist works Laṅkāvatāra Sūtra and Vajrasūci also supply some information about the position of the śūdras. The former was compiled before A.D. 443, but the date of the latter is not so certain. It does not seem to be the work of Aśvaghoṣa, who flourished in the post-Mauryan period, for it does not find place in the list of his works mentioned by the Chinese pilgrim I-tsing. The Chinese translation, done between A.D. 973-981, ascribes it to the Buddhist logician Dharmakirti, who in all probability flourished in the fifth century A.D. Quotations from the Manu Smṛti in the Vajrasūci show that the latter belonged to a later period. The major Buddhist and Jain commentaries, which probably belong to this period, also give some incidental references about the subject of our study.

Technical works such as the Nīśāra of Kāmandaka, the Nāṭyasūtra of Bharata, the Kāmasūtra of Vātsyāyana, the Amarakośa of Amarasimha and the Brhat Saṃhitā of Varāhamihira throw welcome light on the conditions of the śūdras during this period.

Some information can also be gleaned from those portions of the Hayaśirṣa Pañcarātra and the Viṣṇudharmottara Purāṇa which deal with iconography. Although the former seems to have been a work of the Gupta period, the latter seems to have been a compilation of post-Guptaimes, and hence can be used only as a secondary piece of evidence.

4. Motichandra has used them for describing the dress and costumes in the Gupta period (Bhāratīya Veda-bhūgō, Ch. ix).
7. Varāhamihira is ascribed to the period A. D. 505-587, and all his works are placed in the middle of the sixth cen. A. D.
Inscriptions do not mention the śūdras as a varṇa, but they repeatedly refer to the tax-paying peasants and artisans, and also speak of the latter's guilds. This helps us to determine the nature of changes in the economic conditions of the śūdras.

During this period also we come across the familiar maxim that the duty of the śūdra is to serve the three other varṇas. Just as in Manu, it is claimed that he should particularly serve the brāhmaṇas. In the Śānti Parvan a ruler boasts that in his kingdom the śūdras duly serve and wait upon the other three orders without any malice.

The Anuśāsana Parvan holds that the śūdras are workers (karmakaras), and states that there would be no workers if there were no śūdras. There is no doubt that a considerable section of the śūdras continued to be employed as wage earners, for all the eleven synonyms for wages occur in the śūdra-varga of the Amarakośa. Similarly names of various types of hired labourers and servants are also listed in the same section. There are four names for wage earners, two for carriers, two for porters and eleven for domestic servants (bhṛtyas).

The bhṛtyakas (wage earners) were divided into three categories by Nārada and Bṛhaspati, i.e. those who served in the army, those who were engaged in agriculture and those who carried loads from place to place. The first were considered the best, the second the middle, and the third the lowest type of workers.

Although the porters and carriers were considered the lowest type of workers, they seem to have been the none the less important sections of labourers, for provisions relating to the conditions of their work occupy some space in the law-books of the period.

1. Kāmandaka Nitiśāra, II. 21; SP, 60, 26; 52, 2; Anu. P. (SE), 9, 18; Bhāṣ. P., XI. 17, 19; Bhav. P., i. 44-27; Mark. P., 28, 3-8; Viśnu P. III. 8, 32 & 33.
2. Āśamedhika P. (SE), 97, 29.
3. Ch. 78, 17.
5. Ibid., 268, 33.
7. AK, II. 10, 15-18.
9. Ibid.
These carriers were mostly employed by the merchants and were held responsible for the ware placed under their charge, except in the case of losses caused by fate or the state. The porters could be variously punished for giving up their work at various stages. Nàrada lays down that one who abandons merchandise, which he had agreed to convey to its destination, shall give a sixth part of his wages; he shall be compelled to pay twice the amount of his wages, if he raises difficulty at the time of starting—a rule which is also supported by Yàjñavalkya. But according to the other provisions of the latter lawgiver if the porter gives up his work after having started it, he shall pay \( \frac{1}{7} \), if on the way and \( \frac{1}{5} \) in the midway the whole of it. The corresponding obligation on the hirer to pay wages to the porter does not seem to have been so effective. Nàrada ordains that a merchant who does not take a conveyance or beasts for draught or burden, after having hired them, shall be made to pay \( \frac{1}{4} \) of the hire; and the whole if he leaves them half-way. This provision applies only to the owners of conveyances or animals most probably to the cart-owners cum drivers, and not to the human beings who acted as beasts of burden. Nevertheless, the parallel Nepalese version, which is considered as true reading, states that, if the porter strikes work through the fault of his employer, he shall be rewarded for as much as has been finished by him.

We have some idea of the wages of the workers who were employed as agricultural labourers and cowherds. Yàjñavalkya, Nàrada and Kàtyàyana repeat the rates of payment as prescribed in the Arthadàstra of Kautilya. According to this a cultivator should get \( \frac{1}{10} \) of the crop, a herdsman \( \frac{1}{10} \) of the butter and a pedlar \( \frac{1}{10} \) of the sale proceeds as his wages. Such a statement seems to be conventional in nature, and does not take into account the

1. Vïṣṇu, V. 155-6; Tàj., II. 197; Nàr., VI. 9.
2. VI. 6-7.
3. VI. 3.
4. Tàj., II. 198.
5. Ibid.
6. VI. 7.
7. SBE, xxxiii, 140-1.
8. Ibid., fn. on VI. 6.
9. AS, III. 13; Tàj., II. 194; Nàr., VI. 2-3; Kàtyà., verse 656.
changes in wages during the Gupta period. These can be deduced from variant passages found in the Śānti Parvan and the law-books of Nārada and Bṛhaspati. As regards the wages of a herdsman the Śānti Parvan states that, if he keeps six kine for others, he should get the milk of one cow.\(^1\) It adds that for keeping a hundred cows a pair of animals will be given to the herdsman.\(^2\) Nārada gives a lower rate of remuneration. For tending a hundred cows a heifer shall be given as wages every year, for tending 200 cows a milk cow shall be given, and in both cases the cowherd shall be allowed to milk all the cows every eighth day.\(^3\) This provision of Nārada considerably modifies his statement in which he lays down the conventional rate of \(\frac{1}{10}\) of butter as wages for a herdsman. Contemporary Jain sources show that these provisions were often approximately followed in practice. Thus we hear of a herdsman who was given the whole milk of a cow or a buffalo on the eighth day.\(^4\) In another case the remuneration is much higher; a cowherd received \(\frac{1}{4}\) th of the milk produced as his wages.\(^5\) Thus there was a definite advance in the wages of herdsmen. Moreover, provisions for the possession of animals indicate the relatively independent status of the herdsman, who was supposed to own his own house and patch of land for fodder.

The Śānti Parvan and the Bṛhaspati Smṛti lay down higher rates of wages for agricultural labourers than the other texts of around this period. Thus, according to the former, if a cultivator is supplied with seeds etc., he may take a seventh part of the yield.\(^6\) Bṛhaspati is more liberal. According to him the workers engaged in cultivation (ṣīra-vāhakas) should be given \(\frac{1}{4}\) of the produce if they are provided with food and clothing.\(^7\) If they work without being given food and clothing by their employer, they should be given \(\frac{1}{3}\) of the produce.\(^8\) Obviously

1. Ch. 60. 24.
2. Ibid.
3. Nār., VI. 10. This works out at the rate of the milk of one cow for tending eight cows.
5. Bṛhatkālaṇṭa Bhāṣya, 2. 358.
6. SP, 60. 25. The Śānti Parvan provisions refer to the vaiśya herdsmen and agricultural labourers, but they may have applied to the śūdras as well.
8. Ibid.
these provisions apply to the agricultural labourers and not to the sharecroppers who supplied their own seeds, oxen and implements. There is no justification for the view that the sīra land was identical with the sīdā land of Kautilya. While the sīdā was crown land, the sīra was in the possession of individuals, who employed labourers for its cultivation.

The rates of payment prescribed by Brhaspati suggest that towards the end of the Gupta period wages of agricultural labourers were doubled. Further, the fact that they worked without the provision of food and clothes indicates the rise of a new stratum of labourers, who possessed resources to meet their requirements and were consequently less dependent on their employers. Thus it is clear that during this period there was a definite increase in the wages of herdsmen and agricultural labourers, which meant consequent improvement in the economic position of a considerable number of sūdras.

There is also some information about the condition of domestic servants. The Kāmasūtra informs us that, in addition to food and drink, servants (bhṛtyas) should receive their wages monthly or annually. The Śānti Parvan emphasises that the sūdra servant must be maintained by masters of the three higher varnas. But it repeats the old rule that he should be given worn out umbrellas, turbans, beds and seats, shoes and fans, and torn clothes by the twice-born.

The Śānti Parvan upholds the theory that the sūdra was created by Prajāpati as the dāsa of the three other varṇas. And hence he is required to practise the dāsa-dharma. But this does not mean that all the sūdras were slaves. On account of the prevalence of slavery some of the sūdras may have been slaves.

1. Pran Nath, Eco. Cond. in Anc. India, p. 158.
3. Kāma. S., IV, 1. 33 & 42 with comm.
4. ... anavī bharatiyo hi varṇagām sūdra ucyate. Śānti P., 60. 31.
5. Ibid., 60. 32-33.
6. Ibid., 60. 27.
7. Anu. P., (SE) 208. 34.
8. There is a simile of sale and purchase of slaves in a Gupta inscr. (CH, iii, No. 6, l. 2.). The Br. refers to the dāsa-lekhyam, a deed for the sale of slaves (VI. 7). In the Mṛchakaṭika slavery was in vogue as an institution permitted by the state (IHQ, v, 307).
But they were not slaves employed in producing activities. Although Nārada mentions fifteen kinds of slaves, both he and Bhāspati make it clear that they are employed only in impure work. This consists in sweeping the gateway, the privy, the road, removing the leavings of food, ordure, wine etc., and rubbing the master’s limbs or shampooing the secret parts of his body. On the other hand those engaged in producing activities, namely agricultural labourers or porters, are looked upon as doing pure work. Therefore there is hardly any evidence of slaves being employed in production, either by individuals or by the state, such as we find in the pre-Mauryan and Mauryan periods.

The period shows a number of other signs which indicate the general weakening of the institution of slavery and the increasing freedom of the śūdras from the obligation to serve as slaves. As it is shown earlier, Kauṭilya’s laws of manumission of slaves generally apply to those who are born of āryan parents or are āryans themselves. But Yājñavalkya introduces a very important principle when he asserts that nobody can be reduced to slavery without his consent; such a person has to be emancipated. According to the commentary of Jagannātha Tarkapañcānana this means that a śūdra, a kṣatriya or a vāśya employed in servile work without his own consent shall be released by the king. Thus the above provision completely reverses Manu’s precept, which provides for the forcible enslavement of a śūdra.

In the earlier texts members of the three upper varṇas or their sons born of śūdra wives cannot be reduced to slavery. But there is no indication of such a special privilege for the twice-born in the Smṛtis of the Gupta period. Yājñavalkya, Nārada and Kātyāyana state that slavery should take place in

1. Nār., V. s.6-28. Of these slaves some are slaves improperly called according to the citation in the Vicārdhārana-sūtu, where it is attributed to Bhāspati (H. T. Colebrooke, A Digest of Hindu Law, ii, 12). Six classes of slaves seem to have been mentioned in contemporary Jain works (Jain, Life as Depicted in Jain Canons, p. 107.)

2. Nār., V. 5 ; Br., XV. 15-16.

5. Budhadīśktaksacauvairācikritaścīti maṅgata. Yāj., II. 182.

7. This theory is, however, repeated by Kātyāya, verse 722.
the natural (anuloma) order of the varṇas and not in the reverse (pratiloma) order, that is to say, a slave should be of lower varṇa than his master.\(^1\) Kātyāyana, however, makes the claim that slavery is provided for the three lower varṇas and not for the brāhmaṇas.\(^2\) Nevertheless, these provisions imply that the śūdras were no longer singled out for enslavement.

Nārada and Bṛhaspati strongly deprecate the attitude of the wretch who, being independent, sells himself.\(^3\) The Anulāsaṇa Parvan states that a person should not sell others; how much more one’s own children.\(^4\) Although rules for manumission of slaves (especially āryan) are found in Kauṭilya, the ceremony for their emancipation is first laid down by Nārada.\(^5\) All this may have undermined the slave system.

Nārada states that in local disputes a class of people known as the varūnās may be called as witnesses in cases concerning their respective classes.\(^6\) According to Kātyāyana, among those to whom the term varūn presents are the leaders (nāyakās) of dāsas.\(^7\) Thus the prevalence of organisation among slaves may have further weakened the institution of slavery.

There seems to be, however, sufficient evidence of the existence of female slaves, who served as maid-servants in the houses of the wealthy. The word dāśisabham (multitude of female slaves) is used in the Amarakośa as an illustration of words showing multitude.\(^8\) Jain works of the period show that numerous female slaves and maid-servants were recruited from tribal peoples.\(^9\)

For the rest, the general condition of the slaves remained unchanged in the Gupta period. They could be beaten, put in

---

1. Yāj., II. 112-3; Nār., V. 39; Kātyā., verse 716.
3. vikrīnte svatatnātro 'ah samātmānaṁ narādhamāṁ; sa jaśanvijataṁ tu eṣāṁ so śāyānaṁ muṣyate. Nār., V. 37; Er., XV. 243.
5. Nār., V. 42-43. Cf. rules of manumission in Kātyā., verse 715. Nārada, however, adds that certain classes of slaves cannot be manumitted (V. 29) except by the favour of the owner.
6. Quoted in Dharmakośa, i, pt I, p. 299.
8. Añ, III. 5. 27.
fetters,\textsuperscript{1} and were considered unreliable.\textsuperscript{2} They had no status in law,\textsuperscript{3} and were treated as an item of property either to be owned in common\textsuperscript{4} or to be divided among the coparceners.\textsuperscript{5} Nārada and Kātyāyana repeat the dictum of Manu that the dāsa has no right to property,\textsuperscript{6} but Kātyāyana also states that the master is not entitled to that money which the slave gets by selling himself openly.\textsuperscript{7}

In spite of all this the general weakening of slavery during the Gupta period seems to be evident. A significant factor which contributed to this development was the fragmentation of land through the processes of partitions and gifts. The laws of inheritance as laid down in the Dharmaśāstra, the Arthaśātra of Kaútiya, and the law-books of Manu and even of Yājñavalkya never refer to the partition of landed property, which is mentioned for the first time in the codes of Nārada\textsuperscript{8} and Bṛhaspati.\textsuperscript{9} This may suggest that in the middle or towards the end of the Gupta period big joint families, owning large stretches of land, began to break into smaller units. Once the principle of the partition of land was recognised, the increasing density of population in the fertile river valleys of Northern India, after the earlier phases of settlements, was bound to accelerate the pace of the fragmentation of arable plots of land. The pressure of population on land is indicated by an epigraphic record of the 5th cen. A.D., which shows that it was not possible to obtain $1\frac{1}{2}$ kulyavāpa of land at one place in northern Bengal; it had to be purchased in smaller plots at four different places.\textsuperscript{10} The purchase was made for the purpose of making gifts, of which we have numerous examples \textsuperscript{1} Ghoshal, \textit{The Classical Age}, p. 558., Kātyā., verses 962-3., \textit{Mrčhakaśika}, VIII. 25.

\textsuperscript{2} \textit{Mrčhakaśika} (Karmarkar’s edn.), p. 309.

\textsuperscript{3} Kātyā., verse 92.

\textsuperscript{4} \textit{Viśu}, XVIII. 44.

\textsuperscript{5} Kātyā., verse 882; Br. (SBE), XXV. 82-83.

\textsuperscript{6} Nār., V. 41 ; Kātyā., verse 724.

\textsuperscript{7} Verse 724. This could not have been possible without the consent of the master. Kane prefers the reading of the \textit{Vivādacintāmaṇi}, Kātyā., p. 267, fn. on verse 724.

\textsuperscript{8} Nār., XIII. 38.

\textsuperscript{9} Br., XXVI. 10, 28, 43, 53 & 64.

\textsuperscript{10} \textit{EI}, xx, Inscr. No. 5, ll. 5-11 ; S. K. Maity, \textit{The Economic Life of Northern India in the Gupta Period}, pp. 50-51.
during this period. Land grants, made to the brahmanaśas and temples, further helped the process of fragmentation. We no longer hear of large plots of 500 karisas or of the state farms of the Mauryan period. Epigraphic references to arable units of one kulyavāpa or of 4, 2 and 1 dromavāpas do not suggest big plots. According to Pargiter a kulyavāpa was a little larger than an acre. But if the kulyavāpa measure of land prevalent in the Cachār district of Assam be considered identical with the kulyavāpa, the area of the latter would be about 13 acres. Since one kulya is equal to 8 dromaśas, it would appear that the average plots of land in north Bengal varied from seven acres to three acres. During the same period a survey of the land grants made by the Maitraka rulers of Valabhi in Gujrāt shows that the average plot of land did not exceed two or three acres in size. Naturally smaller holdings made it uneconomical to employ a large number of śūdra slaves and labourers. While some may have been employed in twos or threes, others may have been dispensed with.

It has been suggested that during the Gupta period land grants to brahmanaśa served to promote village settlements by private enterprise. This may have been the case in the undeveloped areas in Central and South India but not in northern Bengal, where it was difficult to obtain land at one place, or in Gujrāt. Possibly either the waste and undeveloped land was settled with surplus śūdra population, for the old peasants would not like to shift from settled areas, or aboriginal cultivators were enrolled as śūdras in the brahmanical social organisation. The gradual disappearance of slaves and hired labourers, engaged in agricultural production, not only secured them freedom but helped to prepare the ground for their eventual transformation into sharecroppers and peasants.

The traditional view that vaisyas were peasants recurs in the literature of this period. In the Amarakośa words for closers are listed in the vaiśya-varga (section). But there are reasons to think that śūdras were also becoming peasants. Like Manu, Viṣṇu and Yājñavalkya show that land was rented out to the śūdra for half the crop. This would suggest that the practice of leasing land to śūdra sharecroppers was growing stronger. Gradually they established permanent possession over the land. A Pallava land grant of this period (A.D. 250-350) informs us that four sharecroppers (ārdhikāḥ) remained attached to the land even when it was gifted away to brāhmaṇas. The grant also mentions the transfer of two kolikas, who may have been peasants or agricultural labourers of the Kol tribe. Another Pallava land grant of the same period speaks of the transfer of a plot of four nivartanas cultivated by a person called Atuka, who may also have been a sharecropper. This would suggest that at least in some cases the śūdra sharecroppers of the state could not be dispossessed of the land even when it was transferred to others.

6. *SP, 60. 24-26, 92. 2.

Nārada includes the kīnāśa (peasant) among those who are not fit to be examined as witnesses. Asahāya, a commentator of the 7th cen. A.D., explains the term kīnāśa as a śūdra. This interpretation seems to be correct, for next to the kīnāśa the son of a śūdra wife is also declared by Nārada to be an incompetent witness. This shows that śūdras were probably considered as peasants. This is also corroborated by Bṛhaspati, who provides a very severe corporal punishment for the śūdra, acting as a leader in boundary disputes relating to fields. It is obvious that they

1. AK, II. 9. 6.
2. Manu, IV. 233 and Viṣṇu, LVII. 16 use the term ārdhikāḥ, but Tāj., I. 166 uses the term ārdhisirikāḥ.
3. El, i, Inscr. No. 1, i. 39. The term ārdhikāḥ has been wrongly rendered by Bühler as a labourer (Ibid., p. 9).
4. The kolikas are mentioned as a people in Br. (Saṃskāra, 404). They also appear in a list of peoples in a Pāla inscription of the 11th cen. A. D. El, xxix, Inscr. No. 1, i. 39.
5. The Kols are an important group of aboriginal people of the Mundā stock in Chotanāgpur.
8. The Age of Imperial Unity, p. 299.
11. yadi śūdro netā syāt... Br., XIX. 6.
could lead these disputes only as owners of fields. The Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa defines the village as a settlement where śūdras are numerous and cultivators thrive. Some of these cultivators may have been śūdras. Kātyāyana lays down that, if a person cannot pay his debt, he should be made to work it off; if he is unable to work, he should be sent to jail. But this law applies only to the members of the three lower varṇas who are cultivators, and not to the brāhmaṇas. The Bṛhat Saṃhitā states that the outbreak of fire in the south would cause pain to the ugras and vaiśyas, and its outbreak in the west to the śūdras and cultivators. This may suggest that śūdras and cultivators were regarded as closely connected with one another. Thus the above references indicate that śūdras were gradually becoming peasants.

The land grants of this period, made in Central India, repeatedly refer to the tax-paying kṛṣṇbīns and kārus (artisans). It is beyond doubt that the kārus were śūdras, but this cannot be said of the kṛṣṇbīns with the same certainty. The latter have been taken as cultivators or houseslaves. It is also suggested that the kṛṣṇbīns belonged to the professional artisan classes who cultivated land as subsidiary means of livelihood. But it seems that, in contrast to the kārus, the kṛṣṇbīns were cultivating householders. In the early Pāli texts they appear as householders of substance, and may have been vaiśyas. In the Arthaśāstra of Kauṭilya the share-cropping kṛṣṇbīns have been taken as śūdras by T. Gaṇapati Śāstri. It is not unlikely that

2. ...karaśkān kṣatrasīsūdraṁ samahināmuṁtstu dāpayet. Kātyā., verses 479-80. The context here shows that the term karaśkān qualifies the phrase kṣatrasīsūdrān. In his translation Kane treats the term karaśkān as an independent noun (Tr., verses 479-80), but this does not seem to fit in with the tenor of the passage, which introduces karaśkān between the terms brāhmaṇa and kṣatrasīsūdrān. Cf. Kātyā., verse 586.
4. CII, iii, Inscr. No. 60, l. 12; No. 27, l. 6; No. 26, l. 6,
5. Fleet, CII, iii, p. 123.
9. AS, i, 190.
the text-paying cultivator families of the Gupta period included śūdras as well.

Again, if the interpretation of the term uparikara as a tax levied on temporary peasants is accepted, it would appear that the dāsas and karmakaras, who worked in the fields of the state or of the individual proprietors in the early period, were now being temporarily provided with lands.

Perhaps it was on account of the rise in the number of cultivators, pressure of the increasing population on land, and the inability of the new peasants to pay higher taxes, that the burden of land revenues was reduced from $\frac{1}{4}$th to $\frac{1}{6}$th of the produce. Bṛhaspati lays down that the king should take $\frac{1}{6}$, $\frac{1}{8}$, or $\frac{1}{15}$th of the produce according to the nature and yield of cultivation.

In the first half of the 7th cen. A.D. Hsüan Tsang describes śūdras as a class of agriculturists, a description which is confirmed by the Narasimha Purāṇa, where agriculture is laid down as the duty of the śūdras. But it seems that this significant development took place during Gupta times. The view that the farmer population was largely composed of śūdras seem to be more true of the Gupta period than of earlier times.

It may be suggested, very tentatively, that this transition was facilitated by the use of iron on an extensive scale. The Amarakośa gives seven names for iron and two names for iron rust, and a Buddhist commentary of the period makes a detailed classification of metals. The Amarakośa also gives five names

1. Fleet, CH, iii, p. 98; Ghoshal, Hindu Revenue System, pp. 191, 210. For other views see Barnett, JRAS, 1931; p. 165; Sircar, Select Insers., i, p. 266, fn. 5.

2. Raghunāma, XVII. 65; Nār., XVIII. 48; Bṛ., Āpaddharma, 7.

3. Bṛ., I. 43-44. In the text the term kinkāla is used, which, according to the comment of Asahāya on Nar. I. 181, means a śūdra.

4. “The fourth class is that of the śūdras or agriculturists; these toil at cultivating the soil and are industrious at sowing and reaping”. Watters, On Yuan Chwang’s Travels in India i, 168.

5. Narasimha Purāṇa, 58, 10-15. This Purāṇa was known to Al-Bīrūnī (Sachau, i, 130), and hence its latest compilation may be placed in the 10th cen. A.D.

6. Hopkins presumably uses the word ‘slaves’ in place of śūdras. GHI, i, p. 268.

7. AK, II. 9. 98 and 99.

8. Vīhaṅga Alāhakathā. p. 63 quoted in s. v. loha in Pali-Eng. Dict. As is evident from the Mehrauli Iron Pillar of Candra, the technical knowledge in iron-working reached its high watermark during this period.
for ploughshare,\textsuperscript{1} which may indicate ready supply of this most important agricultural implement and intensive cultivation of land. Without a plentiful supply of such implements former dāsas, karmakaras, aboriginal peoples and the growing number of new families among the higher varṇas could not have carried on agriculture. Unfortunately no attention has been paid to the excavation of various phases of village settlements in Northern India, which might throw light on the extent of the use of iron agricultural implements during earlier times. For the lawgivers inform us that hired labourers were supplied with implements, which had to be returned to the masters at the end of the work.\textsuperscript{2} But these labourers could not become agriculturists without their own implements, which were probably provided for them by the growing iron industry of the period.

During this period sūdra artisans gained further importance. The earlier lawgivers permit arts and crafts to the sūdras only when they fail to earn their livelihood through the service of the three higher varṇas, but this condition is now waived,\textsuperscript{3} and handicrafts are included in the normal occupations of the sūdras.\textsuperscript{4} These crafts are defined by Brhaspati as working in gold, base metals, wood, thread, stone and leather.\textsuperscript{5} The Amarakośa list of craftsmen, which occurs in the sūdra-varga, gives two names each for general artisans, heads of their guilds, garland makers, washermen, potters, bricklayers, weavers, tailors, painters, armourers, leather workers, blacksmiths, shell-cutters and workers in copper.\textsuperscript{6} The list gives four names for goldsmiths and five names for carpenters.\textsuperscript{7} Amara also includes players on drums, water, flute and vīnā,\textsuperscript{8} actors, dancers and tumblers in the sūdra-varga.\textsuperscript{9} Thus the list would suggest

1. AK, II. 9. 13.
2. Yaj., II. 193; Nār., V. 4.
3. This view, however, is repeated in the Bhāg. P., XI. 18. 49.
4. Kam. N. S., II. 21; cf. IV. 54-56; Mārk. P., 28. 3-8; Vīṇu P., III. 8. 32-33; Yaj., I. 120; Vīṇu, III. 5; śūdrasya...saṃvālāni, Br., Saṃskāra, verse 150.
5. Br., XIII. 33.
6. AK, II. 10. 5-10.
7. Ibid., II. 10. 8 and 9.
8. Ibid., II. 10. 13.
9. Ibid., II. 10. 12.
that all varieties of arts and crafts were practised by śūdras.¹

The old provision that artisans should work for a day in a month for the king is repeated by Viśṇu.² This rule continued to work in practice, for an inscription of the sixth century A.D. in Western India states that forced labour (viṣṭī) should be imposed on smiths, chariot-makers (rathakāras) barbers and potters by the elders (vārīkena).³ Vasiṣṭha states that no taxes should be imposed on the earnings of craftsmanship.⁴ In post-Mauryan times, however, taxes seem to have been confined to weavers only,⁵ but during this period there began the practice of levying taxes on the artisans. The Śānti Parvan lays down that artisans and traders should be taxed after taking into account conditions of production and the nature of their crafts. Assessment may be made on the basis of the number of commodities produced, and taxes may be collected in kind.⁶ It is beyond doubt that artisans paid taxes to the state, for this fact is repeatedly mentioned in the inscriptions of this period. A Pallava inscription of A.D. 446 from Southern India informs us that blacksmiths, leather workers, weavers and even barbers paid taxes to the king.⁷ All this testifies to the material progress and growing importance of śūdra artisans in society. The commentary on a passage of the Kāmasūtra suggests that a śūdra could accumulate earnings through the occupations of craftsmen, actors, etc. and could thus become a nāgaraka, i.e. a respectable and dignified citizen.⁸

Provisions for the payment of taxes show that artisans were no longer employed and controlled by the state in the same

¹ Some of these people such as garland makers, goldsmiths, washermen, actors, dancers etc. are also mentioned in the Kāmasūtra (I. 4. 28, V. 2. 12, VI. 1. 9), probably providing for the luxuries of the nāgaraka.
² Gaut. Dh. S., X. 31-33; Vat. Dh. S., XIX. 28; Manu, VII, 138; Viśṇu III. 32.
³ It is not clear whether this was done for the sake of the king or the village elders. JRASt, series III, xvi, p. 121, Law No. 72.
⁴ XIX. 37.
⁵ Supra, ch. VI.
⁷ EI, xxiv, Inscr. No. 43 ll. 18-19. The inscr. also refers to the imposition of the marriage tax, a custom which prevailed till recent time in Northern India.
⁸ I. 4. 1.
manner as they were in the Mauryan period. Probably artisans living in the capital were attached to the king. But the frequent mention of artisans in villages shows that they were far more numerous in the rural areas, where they lived and worked more or less independently.

The strengthening of the guilds contributed to the growing importance of artisans. Guilds (śrenis) came to be regarded as the constituent elements in the organisation of capitals or towns. Evidently these were the associations of artisans and traders. While the earlier law-books and the Arthaśāstra of Kauṭilya enjoin the king to pay respect to the customs of the guilds (śrenidha-ma), those of the Gupta period instruct the king to enforce the usages prevalent in the guilds. Brhadapati lays down that whatever is done by the heads of guilds towards other people, in accordance with prescribed regulations, must be approved by the king, for they are declared to be the appointed managers of affairs. He also warns that, if the usages of localities, castes and kulas are not maintained, the people will get discontented and wealth will suffer thereby. Thus it seems that the guilds were free to act in whatever way they liked, and the king was bound to accept their decision. In other words they seem to have been more or less independent units of production, practically free from the control of the state. They continued their old functions of receiving money as deposits, paying interest on them and obviously investing them in their trades, as would appear from an inscription of the guild of oil-pressers of Indore in the fifth century. A.D. Such activities naturally promoted their material prosperity, which is evident from the

1. Br. I. 34. This is also provided in the Arthaśāstra of Kauṭilya.
2. AK, II. 8. 18.
3. There are references to the guild of artisans (śilpisamgha) in the Raghuvamśa XVI. 38 and to masons under the master-builder in the Patīkatāntara, pp. 4-5.
7. Ibid., I. 126.
8. Majumdar, Corporate Life in Ancient India, p. 62.
9. CII, iii, Indore Copper-plate Inscr. of Skanda Gupta (A.D. 465). construction and the repair of the temple of the Sun by the silkweavers of Mandasor in the fifth century A.D. It would be wrong to think that when the power of the brāhmaṇical priesthood began to predominate guilds began to decline. Not only the increasing power of the guild was recognised by brāhmaṇical lawgivers, but the two guilds mentioned in the inscriptions of the Gupta period were either patronised by the brāhmaṇas or had brāhmaṇical associations.

The rules governing the relations between the employer and the employees indicate some improvement in the position of various categories of workers, who were recruited from the śūdra community. We have seen that in the case of non-performance of work Kauṭiliya prescribes a fine of 12 paṇas, which comes to from five to twenty times the amount of wages prescribed by him. But most lawgivers of the Gupta period provide a fine of double the amount of wages, in case the worker does not perform his work after having taken his wages. Bṛhaspatī, however, prescribes an additional fine according to the ability of the worker. Viśṇu ordains that, if a worker does not complete his work, he should pay all his wages to the employer and a fine of 100 paṇas to the king. But this provision of his is counterbalanced by another, which lays down similar punishment for the employer if he dismisses the worker when the work is incomplete. In this connection Bṛhaspati introduces certain provisions which are not found in the other law-books of the period. In one of them he just uncritically takes over the rule of Manu that, if the worker does not carry out his stipulated work out of pride although he is physically fit, he shall forfeit his wages and be subjected to a fine of eight kṛṣṇalas. But this

1. CII, iii, Inser. No. 18, pp. 80-85.
3. In the tailaka śreni of Indore money was deposited by a brāhmaṇa, and the silk-weavers erected temple to the Sun, a brāhmaṇical deity.
4. AS. III, 14; Sefra, p. 155.
5. Vāj., II. 193; Nār., VI. 5; Br., XVI. 5-6.
8. Ibid., V. 157-8.
9. Manu, VIII. 215; Br. XVI. 4 and 8. In another version of Br. we have two hundred paṇas instead of eight kṛṣṇalas (SBE, xxxiii, 345, fn. on Br. XVI. 15).
lawgiver adds that, in case the worker does not complete his work, he shall be deprived of his wages and proceeded against in a court of law.\textsuperscript{1} Like Viśṇu Bṛhaspati safeguards the interests of the workers by stating that, if the employer does not pay wages to a worker who has completed his work, he shall be awarded proper punishment by the king.\textsuperscript{2} Nārada adds that in such a case the employer shall be compelled to pay the wages with interest.\textsuperscript{3} This was obviously meant to enforce his general rule, which makes it obligatory on the master to pay regular wages, as agreed upon, to the servant hired by him.\textsuperscript{4} Reference has already been made to another provision of his, which states that, if the porter strikes work through the fault of the employer, he shall be rewarded for as much as has been done by him.\textsuperscript{5} It is likely that this rule may have been extended to other calluses of workers.

The provisions regarding herdsmen stress their duty of protecting the cattle under their charge,\textsuperscript{6} but in the case of loss of animals they are not to be punished with death, as is provided by Kautilya. Bṛhaspati, however, states that, if the cattle under the charge of herdsmen cause damage to standing crops, they shall be beaten.\textsuperscript{7}

Thus, on the whole, the punishments for non-performance of work in the Gupta period are not so sever as in the Mauryan period; and there are some provisions which safeguard the interests of the workers in case the employer does not pay wages or is unfair towards them. Further, a law-book of this period prescribes incentive rewards for workers. Kautilya recommends rewards only for weavers,\textsuperscript{8} but Yājñavalkya lays down that the employer should pay more if the worker turns out more work than what is expected of him.\textsuperscript{9} Therefore the provisions dealing with the relations between the employers and employees in the Gupta

\begin{thebibliography}{9}
\bibitem{1} XVI. 3.
\bibitem{2} XVI. 11.
\bibitem{3} Nepalese version, \textit{SBE}, xxxiii, 140-1, fn. on VI. 7.
\bibitem{4} VI. 2.
\bibitem{5} Nepalese version, \textit{SBE}, xxxiii, 140-1, fn. on VI. 7.
\bibitem{6} \textit{Naṅr.}, VI. 11-17; \textit{Br.}, XVI. 10, 12-17.
\bibitem{7} XVI. 17.
\bibitem{8} \textit{As}, II. 23.
\bibitem{9} II. 195.
\end{thebibliography}
period leave the impression that, compared to the state of affairs in earlier times, such relations were humane and liberal and consequently were expected to improve the material condition of those members of the śūdra community who lived on wages.

A remarkable development of the Gupta period is the provision of trade as one of the functions of the śūdras. Yājñavalkya states that, if the śūdra cannot maintain himself by the service of the twice-born, he can become a trader.1 Brhaspati allows him to trade in all articles as one of his normal occupations.2 The Purāṇas also state that a śūdra can carry on buying and selling3 and can subsist on the profits of trade.4 Brhaspati lays down that a śūdra partner in business should pay $\frac{1}{6}$ of the profits to the king, a vaisya $\frac{1}{6}$, a kṣatriya $\frac{1}{10}$ and a brāhmaṇa $\frac{1}{20}$.5 This would show that conditions for the śūdra traders were not so favourable as in the case of the members of the higher varṇas. Moreover, good śūdras were not expected to deal in some commodities such as wine.6 But it is certain that śūdras could carry on trade, and in this respect the brāhmaṇical lawgivers obliterated the distinctions not only between them and the vaisyas, but in some cases between them and the first two varṇas. Generally the śūdra traders may have served as pedlars. The lawgivers of the period repeat the Arthaśāstra rule that a pedlar should get $\frac{1}{15}$ of the sale proceeds,7 but the Śānti Parvan raises this to $\frac{1}{7}$.8 Perhaps this change indicates the position in the Gupta period.

As artisans and traders the śūdras played an important part in promoting trade and industry, which seem to have made

1. Yaj., I. 120.
2. ...vikrayah sarvakampanāṁ sūdradharma udāśītaḥ. Br., Saṃskāra, verse 530.
5. Br., XIII. 16.
6. Bhavisyot P., I. 44. 32.
7. AŚ., III. 13; Yaj., II. 191; Nār., VI. 2-3.; Kāvyā, verse 656.
8. SP, 60. 25. Although in the SP wage is provided for the vaisya pedlar, it may have applied to the śūdras as well.
great strides during this period.\footnote{1} Probably the Gupta period also witnessed the rise of śūdra peasants who, sustained the agrarian economy of the country.

But in comparison to the members of the higher varṇas the śūdras continued to have a lower standard of living. The housing rules laid down by Varāhamihira provide that a brāhmaṇa should have a house of five rooms, a kṣatriya of four, a vaiśya of three and a śūdra of two. In every case the length and breadth of the main room should vary in the order of the superiority of the four varṇas.\footnote{2} Such a rule may have been observed only by orthodox brāhmaṇas; but it shows that members of the lower varṇas were not expected to enjoy better housing conditions.

During this period also we hear of śūdra rulers such as those in Saurāṣṭra, Avanti, Arbuda and Malwa. Along with them are mentioned the traditional Śūdra, Ābhīra\footnote{3} and Mleccha rulers, who all are described as reigning in the regions of Sindhu and Kashmir, and are assigned by Pargiter to the fourth century A.D.\footnote{4} But they were labelled śūdras not because they arose from the fourth varṇa, but because these tribal and foreign rulers did not patronize the brāhmaṇas and did not follow the brāhmaṇical dharma.\footnote{5} In a drama, however, there is the example of a cowherd who became a king.\footnote{6} When Yājñavalkya

---

\footnote{1}{This is evident from detailed rules about partnership which appear for the first time in the Tājī. It is significant that, unlike Kautṣiyā and Mānu (VIII: 205-210), Tājī (II. 265) states the law of partnership for merchants and foreign traders first, and adds that the same principles shall apply to priestly partnerships and to that of agriculturists and artisans. Similarly the increasing foreign trade of the period made it necessary for Nārada to say that contracts of loans entered into in foreign countries were to be governed by the laws of the place of contract (Nār., I. 105-106). Cf. Jayaswal, Manu and Tājīavalkya, pp. 198 and 211. The Brhatkathā of Guṇāḍhya, a work of about A.D. 500 (Keith, Hist. of Sansk. Lit., p. 260), deals not so much with kings as with merchants, traders, seafarers and handicraftsmen (Ibid.).}

\footnote{2}{Brhat Sanshitā, 52. 12-13.}

\footnote{3}{The Amarakāsa distinguishes between śūdrī who is the wife of a śūdra, and śūdrā who is a woman of the śūdra tribe. The woman of the Ābhīra tribe is called mahāśūdrī. AK, II. 6. 13.}

\footnote{4}{Pargiter, DKA, p. 55.}

\footnote{5}{Ibid.}

\footnote{6}{Case of Āryaka who was a gopaḷadāraka (Myotchakajīka, VI. 11). This is doubtful, for Gopaḷa may also be taken as a proper name.}
repeats the old injunction that a śnātaka should not accept presents from a king who is not a kṣatriya he has probably such rulers (either tribal or śūdra) in mind. But in course of time these rulers received brāhmaṇical recognition and were turned into respectable kṣatriyas.

As regards the appointment of ministers, Yājñavalkya and Kāmandaka repeat the old view that they should possess noble birth (kudinaḥ) and knowledge of the Vedas, which rules out the possibility of śūdras being selected as ministers. But the Śānti Parvan breaks new ground when it provides for a body of eight mantriṇīs of whom four should be brāhmaṇas, three loyal, disciplined and obedient śūdras, and one a sūta. We do not know whether such a precept was followed, but it shows a significant change in the brāhmaṇical attitude towards the śūdras.

There is no sign of such a liberal attitude in the appointment of judges and councillors (sabhyaḥ). Yājñavalkya lays down that the king should administer justice with the assistance of learned brāhmaṇas who can act as judges in the case of the inability of the king to do so. Kātyāyana adds that, if a brāhmaṇa is wanting either a kṣatriya or a vaiśya should be appointed as a judge, but a śūdra should be carefully avoided, a view which is also upheld by Brhaspati in regard to the appointment of the sabhyas. The latter also repeats the warning of Manu that the kingdom, strength and treasury of the ruler who carries on his work with the assistance of the śūdras (vṛṣalas) suffer destruction.

At the district level, however, the head of the artisans, who was a śūdra, had some share in the work of administration.

1. Yaj., I. 141.
3. ĀP, 85. 7-10. The passage, which provides for a body of 37 amāyas of whom four should be brāhmaṇas, eight kṣatriyas, twenty-one vaiśyas, three śūdras and one sūta (ĀP. (Cal.), 85-7-11), does not occur in the Critical Edn. of the ĀP.
5. Verse 67.
6. I. 79.
The two Dāmodarpur copper-plate inscriptions dated A.D. 433 and 438 represent the prathamakulika Dhṛtimitra as a member of the district council of Koṭivarṣa (in north Bengal), which was in charge of a kumārāmātya.¹ The term kulika has been interpreted variously as a senior town judge² or a merchant.³ But such interpretations are not supported by early texts. The term kulika is probably identical with the kulaka of the Amarakośa, which means the head of the artisans and occurs in the śūdra-varga of that work.⁴ The term also seems to have been used in the sense of an artisan by the Nārada Smṛti, which includes the kulika in the list of false witnesses.⁵ Therefore the prathamakulika was the first among the kulikas,⁶ i.e. the head of the guilds of artisans, and as such had a place in the advisory council of the district of Koṭivarśa in north Bengal. Probably the same practice was followed at the district headquarters of Vaiśāli, where we find individual seals of two prathamakulikas.⁷

The association of the head of the guilds of artisans with the administration of the district was in keeping with their growing importance, which is also reflected in a Jain work of the period, which describes the vaṭṭhāi or an architect as one of the fourteen jewels.⁸ All this suggests some improvement in the civic status of the śūdra artisans.

Generally the śūstras continued to perform minor administrative tasks. Kāmandaṅkaka repeats the view of Kauṭiliya that domestic servants should act as spies in reporting the activities

1. EI, xy, p. 130.
5. Nār., I. 187. It seems that old prejudices against śūdra witnesses continued during this period.
6. Eighteen seals of kulikas (head of companies of artisans) have been discovered at Basārh (Vaiśāli). ASR, 1903-4, pp. 114-16.
7. ASR, 1903-4, p. 117. In the 10-11th cens. A. D. the kulika appears as a minor officer in the Chambā state along with the saulekika, gaulmiṅka and others (Vogel, Antiquities of Chamba State, Pt. I, Inscr. No. 15, II. 8-9). The mahāpandhākulika is also mentioned with the saulekika, gaulmiṅka and others in an inscription of A. D. 1031 from Gorakhpur in Uttar Pradesh (EI, vii, Inscr. No. 9, l. 34). Possibly kulikas and mahāpandhākulikas were officers collecting taxes from guilds of artisans.
and ordeal by sacred libation for the śūdra, according to the value of deposit denied, or of the theft or robbery. If the value exceeds half a suvarṇa, the judge may administer to the śūdra any of the four ordeals, namely balance, fire, water or poison. But although Viśnū gives detailed rules about the application of these four ordeals, he does not prescribe them for different varṇas as other lawgivers do. Perhaps some consideration was shown to the brāhmaṇas to whom poison could not be administered, otherwise varṇa distinctions in matters of ordeal did not prevail. The practice of ordeal by water obtained in Western India, probably in the kingdom of the Sātavāhanas, in the third century A.D., but there is nothing to show that it was confined to the members of any particular varṇa. It seems, however, that special types of ordeals prevailed among the tribal peoples and foreigners, who were being absorbed in the lower ranks of brāhmaṇical society. Therefore Kātyāyana lays down that the king should observe the ordeals peculiar to the untouchables (āsṛṣyas), low people (adhamas), slaves and mlecchas.

Manu provides that petitions should be entertained by the court in the order of the varṇas, but this rule does not seem to have been mentioned by the lawgivers of this period. Nevertheless, varṇa distinctions are maintained in civil laws. Thus in the lawsuits requiring deposit of sureties Kātyāyana makes a distinction between the twice-born and the śūdras. On failure to provide surety, a twice-born person should be merely guarded by the warders, but the śūdras and others should be kept confined and fettered. But irrespective of varṇa considerations, he provides the same fine of eight paṇas for all those who break the restraint and run away. He also adds that while in restraint

1. IX. 3-10.
2. Viśnū, IX. 11.
3. Ibid., IX, X, XI and XII.
5. Verse 433.
6. VIII. 24.
7. dujñātha pratibhāhino rakṣyāḥ sād bāhyacāribhīḥ; śūdrādina pratibhāhīnāṁ bandhayan naśatva tu. Kātyā., verse 118.
8. Verse 119.
there should be no obstruction to the performance of daily obligatory rites in the case of the members of all the four varnas.\(^1\)

The laws of inheritance continue to have the provision of giving the smallest share to the śūdra son\(^2\) of a higher caste person. Viṣṇu fixes the share of the śūdra son of a brāhmaṇa in various circumstances,\(^3\) and lays down the liberal rule that, if the twice-born father has a śūdra son, he can inherit one half of his property.\(^4\) But Brhaspati repeats the old view that even an excellent and obedient śūdra son of a man having no other male issue shall receive only a maintenance.\(^5\) It is said that the son of the twice-born from a śūdra woman is not entitled to a share in landed property.\(^6\) But at one place the Anuśāsana Parvan emphasises that the śūdra son must receive property,\(^7\) a provision which is generally corroborated by the law-books of this period.

It is provided that the property of the śūdra shall be equally divided among his sons.\(^8\) Yājñavalkya states that the son of a śūdra from a slave shall receive a share in property if the father desires so.\(^9\) The Anuśāsana Parvan adds that this share should be the tenth part of the property.\(^10\)

The old provision making for different rates of interest for the four different varnas recurs in the two law-books of this period.\(^11\) But Yājñavalkya modifies this by stating that whatever is agreed upon may be paid as interest.\(^12\)

The law of treasure-trove is based on considerations of varna. According to the lawgivers, if the brāhmaṇa finds treasure, he may take the whole of it.\(^13\) Viṣṇu adds that in such a case the kṣatriya should make over \(\frac{1}{4}\) to the king and the brāhmaṇa each.

1. Ibid.
2. Yāj., II. 125; Br., XXVI. 41-42; Anu. P., (SE) 82. 18 & 21, (NE) 47. 18 & 21.
4. Viṣṇu, XVIII. 32.
8. Ibid., (SE) 82-57, (NE) 47-56.
9. Yāj., II. 133.
10. Anu. P., (SE) 84. 18.
11. Yāj., II. 37; Viṣṇu, VI. 15.
12. II. 38.
13. Viṣṇu, II. 58; Yāj., II. 34-35; Nār., VII. 6-7.
and retain the remaining half; a vaiśya should give \( \frac{1}{4} \) to the king, \( \frac{1}{2} \) to the brāhmaṇa and should retain \( \frac{1}{4} \) for himself; a südra should divide the find into twelve parts, give five parts each to the king and the brāhmaṇa, and should retain \( \frac{1}{6} \) for himself. Although the südra’s share in the treasure trove is the smallest, it is double the share of the labourer as provided by Kauṭilya. How far the laws regarding treasure trove worked is difficult to say. A later text refers to a king who confiscated the treasure trove discovered by a merchant but honoured a brāhmaṇa who discovered a similar treasure trove.

Generally Nārada, and in some cases Brhaspati, repeat the cruel corporal punishments against südras offending against brāhmaṇas. Brhaspati states that a südra should not be subjected to pecuniary punishments but to beating, chaining and ridicule. Brhaspati is particularly harsh on the pratilomas (i.e., those born of higher caste mothers and lower caste fathers) and the antyas (untouchables), whom he considers the dregs of society. If they offend against brāhmaṇas, they should be beaten and never a merced in a fine. The same provision occurs in Nārada in regard to the śvapacas, medas, caṇḍālas, elephant-drivers, dāsas etc. Nārada adds that in these cases the offended parties should punish the offenders themselves, for the king has nothing to do with the penalty to be inflicted on the guilty. This is an important indication of the weakening of state power. The rule that if a brāhmaṇa abuses a südra he must pay 12\( \frac{1}{2} \) paṇas as a fine is repeated in the law-books of this time. But Brhaspati adds that this applies only to the case of virtuous südras; no offence is imputable to a brāhmaṇa for abusing a südra devoid of virtue. Probably this refers to the untouchable sections of southern India and to theマークテスト the sūdras, who in such cases had no redress in law. But in this respect other sections of the sūdras enjoyed legal protection against offences committed by the members of the three higher varṇas.1

Although it is stated that the sūdras should be subjected to corporal punishments, the scale of punishments, which is provided by Brhaspati for sūdras abusing vaiśyas, kṣatriyas and brāhmaṇas,2 does not give any indication of this. Fa-hsien informs us that in the Middle Kingdom the king governed without decapitation or other corporal punishments.3 This may be an exaggeration but suggests that corporal punishment was used less frequently than before, a factor which worked in favour of the sūdras. Although Yājñavalkya accepts the principle of varṇa legislation,4 he does not repeat the Draconian measures of Manu against offending sūdras. In one of his provisions regarding assault there is no trace of varṇa distinctions. He states that, if both parties threaten with arms, the punishment shall be the same to all.5 But if a non-brāhmaṇa causes pain to a brāhmaṇa, he shall be deprived of his limb.6 It is not clear whether this law applies to sūdras assaulting brāhmaṇas.

Viśṇu provides the highest amercement for connection with a woman of one’s own caste, and the second amercement for adultery with a woman of the lower caste.7 Curiously enough he lays down the punishment of death (unless the term vadhyā be taken in the sense of beating) for adultery with a woman of one of the lowest castes.8 But this is in conflict with another provision of his, according to which a brāhmaṇa guilty of intercourse with a canḍāla woman for a night can remove his guilt by subsisting upon alms and constantly repeating the gāyatrī for three years.9 It is to be noted, however, that the severe punishment prescribed by Manu against a sūdra committing

2. Ibid., XX. 16.
3. J. Legge, A Record of Buddhistic Kingdoms, p. 43.
4. II. 206.
5. parasparam tu sarvaçām lastre madhyamāsāhasaḥ. Yājñ., II. 216.
6. Yājñ., II. 215. In the text the term pīdanam is explained by Viññāṇesivarāja as beating etc.
7. V. 40-41.
8. avyāgamane vadhyāḥ. Viṣṇu, V. 41.
adultery with a twice-born woman is not mentioned in any law-book of this period.

The law-books of this period do not provide for the discriminatory scale of compensation for the murder of the members of the four varṇas. Viṣṇu, however, introduces such a scale of penances for the expiation of the sin of murder. Thus a person guilty of killing a brāhmaṇa, a kṣatriya, a vaisya or a śūdra should perform the mahāvratas penance respectively for 12, 9, 6 and 3 years. There is nothing to show that such penances were enforced, but they reflect the relative importance of the life of the members of the four varṇas. Nevertheless, Viṣṇu and Yājñavalkya regard the murder of a kṣatriya, a vaisya, or a śūdra as a crime of the fourth degree (upapātaka), and according to the former the guilty are required to perform the cāndrāyaṇa or parāka penances, or to sacrifice a cow. Such a provision places the śūdra on a footing of equality with the vaisya and the kṣatriya, and emphasises the special position of the brāhmaṇa. A passage in one of the manuscripts of the Śānti Parvan also betrays this tendency. It states that, if a kṣatriya, a vaisya, or a śūdra kills a brāhmaṇa, either his eyes should be taken out or he should be killed; but if the offender is a brāhmaṇa, he should be banished. Another passage from the same manuscript states that the brāhmaṇa who is guilty of sinful actions and is a murderer or a thief among the vipras, and a kṣatriya, a vaisya or a śūdra guilty of killing the brahmaṇas, should be deprived of their eyes. Thus there is no mention of varṇa distinctions in this case.

It seems that varṇa distinctions in the administration of the criminal law were undermined in the Gupta period. An inscription of the 6th century A.D. in Western India does not

1. Ibid, L. 6 & 12-14.
2. Viṣṇu, XXXVII. 13, 34; Yāj., II. 296.
3. Viṣṇu, XXXVII. 35. The provision for sacrificing a cow is evidently very ancient, and we cannot believe that it was followed in Gupta times. No doubt Viṣṇu took it over uncritically from a much earlier source.
4. Ms. D7r (acc. to Cr. Edn. classification), verse 45. In the Mṛchakāśika (IX. 39) the presiding judge recommends the exemption of the brahmaṇa Cārūdattā from the death penalty. For such immunity also see Kātyā, verse 483.
5. Ms. D7r (acc. to Cr. Edn. classification), verse 55.
mention varṇa punishments for defamation, assault and injury.¹ Fu-hsien informs us that in Mid-India every criminal was fined according to the gravity of his offence,⁸ which suggests that the offender was not punished according to his varṇa. It is likely that in the administration of the criminal law the brāhmaṇa was shown some favour, but the śūdra was not singled out for harsh punishments in the same manner as we find in earlier times.

Nārada upholds the old view that, in cases of theft, the brāhmaṇa’s guilt is the highest and that of the śūdra the lowest.³ This was perhaps based on the principle that a brāhmaṇa should acquire and practise the full measure of dharma, a rājanya ⅔ dharma, a vaisya ⅓ dharma and a śūdra ⅕ dharma. The heaviness or lightness of sins for purposes of expiation of each of the four varṇas should be determined upon this principle.⁴ Kātyāyana also seems to think of theft when he provides that a kṣatriya or a brāhmaṇa should be awarded double the punishment which is provided for a śūdra.⁵ The fact that the vaisyas are not mentioned in this connection shows that they were becoming merged with the śūdras. But all this would suggest that śūdras were considered habitual thieves, an inference which is also corroborated by the Amaṇakośa, in which words for thieves and dasyus are listed in the śūdra-varga.⁶

The dasyus are repeatedly mentioned in the Śānti Parvan as enemies of the king, always threatening the peace and tranquility of the realm.⁷ Probably this refers to enemies outside the state and not to the śūdras. For it is provided that, if the trouble created by the dasyus cause the intermixture of varṇas, brāhmaṇas, vaisyas, and śūdras—all can take up arms.⁸ It is argued

¹ JRAES, Series III, xvi, p. 118.
² S. Beal, Travels of Fu-hsien, pp. 54-55. Giles also gives a similar translation (Travels of Fu-hsien, p. 21.), but Legge translates that “criminals are fined according to the circumstances (of each case)” (A Record of Buddhistic Kingdoms, p. 43.), which may suggest varna distinctions.
³ Manu, VIII, 337 & 8; Nārada, Appendix (Theft), Parisṛta, 51 & 52.
⁴ ŚP, 36, 28-29.
⁵ Verse 485.
⁷ ŚP, 12, 27, 25, 11, 67, 2, 76, 5, 88, 26, 60, 8, 68, 8, 101, 3.
⁸ ŚP, 79, 17-18, abhyyuthite dasyubale kṣatārthe varṇasamkare; . . . brāhmaṇa yadi vā vaisyaḥ śātro vā rājasattama; dasyubhyyo’tha prajā raśdaddādhaṃ dharmena dhārojan...Ibid., 79, 34-36.
that, be he a śūdra or be he a member of any other order, he who becomes a raft on a raftless current, a means of crossing where means there are none, certainly deserves respect in every way.\(^1\) The person who protects helpless men against the dasyus deserves to be worshipped by all as if he were a kinsman.\(^2\) The Dhanurveda Samhitā\(^3\) lays down that, while the members of the three upper varṇas can ordinarily take up arms, the śūdra can do so only in times of danger.\(^4\) But it adds that a brāhmaṇa should use a bow, a kṣatriya a sword, a vaiśya a lance and a śūdra a mace.\(^5\) Thus the above references clearly show that śūdras were conceded the right to bear arms. This indicates a very significant change in their civic status, for the early lawgivers do not permit them to bear arms. The new development links up with the transformation of śūdras into peasants, and shows that the old apprehension of their getting completely out of hand no longer exercised the minds of the upholders of the varṇa system. It seems that śūdras were actually enrolled in the army. In a drama of this period two army officers are represented as belonging respectively to the castes of barbers and leather workers.\(^6\)

But concessions made to śūdras did not bring about the complete cessation of internal conflict between the varṇas. There are at least nine verses in the Śānti Parvan stressing the necessity of combination and harmony between the first two varṇas,\(^7\) which probably indicate some combined opposition on the part of the vaiśyas and śūdras. It is complained that at one stage the śūdras and vaiśyas, acting most wilfully, began to unite themselves with the wives of brāhmaṇas.\(^8\) There are several references which suggest that the śūdras were especially antagonistic to the existing order. The Anuśāsana Parvan avers

1. ŚP, 78. 37.
2. Ibid., 78. 38.
3. Although this work is ascribed to Vasiṣṭha, its style is not similar to that of the law-book of Vasiṣṭha. But the importance which it attaches to archery may suggest that the work was compiled not later than the Gupta period.
4. Dhanurveda Samhitā, verse 3.
5. Ibid., verse 8.
7. ŚP, 73. 9, 74. 4, 5, 8, 10, 28, 32, 75. 13, 22.
8. ŚP, 49. 60-61.
that südras are destroyers of the king, and hence a wise ruler should not be complacent towards this danger.\(^1\) A long passage of the Āśvamedhika Parvan, which partly reproduces a similar passage from the Vasiṣṭha Dharmaśāstra, characterises the südras as hostile, violent, boastful, short-tempered, untruthful, extremely greedy, ungrateful, heterodox, lazy and impure.\(^2\) Similarly, like Manu, the Śānti Parvan defines a vṛśala (i.e. a südra) as one who defies the established order (dharma).\(^3\) The hostile attitude of the südra can be also inferred from a passage of the Nārada Smṛti. It declares that, if the king does not exercise the power of the sword (danda), brāhmaṇas, kṣatriyas and vaśyas will abandon their work, but the südras will surpass all the rest.\(^4\) Yājñavalkya repeats the provision of Kauṭilya that the südra who pierces the eyes of others,\(^5\) pretends to be a brāhmaṇa, and acts against the king should be fined a sum of 800 paṇas.\(^6\) Certain sections of südras such as actors, gamblers, keepers of gaming houses and other persons of this kind are considered sources of disorder to the state, for they cause harm to the better classes of subjects (bhadrīkāḥ prajāḥ).\(^7\) A passage from a manuscript of the Śānti Parvan ordains that dāsas and mlecchas should be dealt with through the same agencies, and that force should be used against the candālas and mlecchas.\(^8\) All this suggests that, the old friction between südras and the ruling classes continued in some form or other, but it probably lost in intensity thanks to the provisions for südra ministers, the association of the head of the guilds of artisans with the work of the district administration, the lessening of varṇa distinctions in the administration

5. Acc. to Vīrāmṛtirodāya.
6. Yāj., II. 304. Manu (IX. 224) provides the punishment of death for a dojajingin südra (who pretends to be a brāhmaṇa), but he does not refer to his opposition to the king in this connection.
7. ŠP, 89. 13-14. Kauṭilya does not permit such people to enter new settlements. AŚ, II. 1. of law, and finally the recognition of the śūdras' right to bear arms in times of emergency.

The old fiction about the origin of the four varṇas\(^1\) continues to be repeated, but the Vāyu and Brahmanāda Purāṇas affirm the statement of Manu that Vasiṣṭha was the progenitor of the śūdras,\(^2\) which means continued recognition of their improved social status.

The association of the four colours white, red, yellow and black respectively with the four varṇas shows their relative social status.\(^3\) In representing the actors, the Nātyaśāstra prescribes red for the brāhmaṇa and the kṣatriya,\(^4\) and dark or deep blue for the vaiśyas and śūdras.\(^5\) This work also lays down that in the auditorium a white pillar should be erected for marking seats for the brāhmaṇas, a red pillar for the kṣatriyas, a yellow pillar for the vaiśyas and a blue-black pillar for the śūdras.\(^6\) Gold and ear ornaments should be thrown at the foot of the brāhmaṇa pillar, copper at the foot of the kṣatriya pillar, silver at the foot of the vaiśya pillar and iron at the foot of the śūdra pillar.\(^7\) Such provisions are similar to the fiction invented by Plato that philosophers were made of gold, warriors of silver, and agriculturists and artisans of brass and iron.\(^8\)

The rule that only the śūdra should bear the title of dāsa\(^9\) does not seem to have been followed. Thus the name of an ancestor of Rāvikiṛṭti, a brāhmaṇa, was Varāhadāsa;\(^10\) and the name of a ruling chief of the Sanakāṅkas, who was a feudatory of Candra Gupta II, was Mahārāja Viṣṇudāsa.\(^11\) The Nātyaśāstra ordains that in a drama the names of the brāhmaṇas

1. Taij, III. 126.
2. Vā. P., ii. 11. 90; Brahmanāda P., iii. 10. 96.
4. In another manuscript the gauda (fair) colour is prescribed.
5. Nātyaśāstra, XXI. 113. Black is also recommended for the Pañcāḷas, Śūrasenas, Māgadhas, Aṅgas, Vaṅgas and Kalingas (Ibid., XXI. 112).
6. Ibid., II. 49-52.
7. Ibid., II. 55.
10. CII, iii, No. 35 (dated A.D. 533-4) ll. 9-12.
11. Ibid., No. 3 (dated A.D. 401-2), II. 1-2; cf. Fleet, op. cit., p. 11, fn. 1.
and kṣatriyas should indicate their gotra and functions, those of traders their generosity, and those of servants different kinds of flowers. It is not clear why the śūdras were to be named after flowers.

The rule that different terms should be used in enquiring about the health of different varṇas does not seem to have been emphasised during this period. But the Nāṭyaśāstra provides that in the drama a mode of address indicating command should be used in conversing with servants of both sexes, artisans and mechanics. This shows that low caste people were addressed contemptuously. In the Mṛchakatika abusive expressions such as "sons of slave women", "sons of concubines" and "bastards" are used in addressing low class people.

The Nāṭyaśāstra also prescribes a different kind of gait and movement for the portrayal of menial servants on the stage; according to this text one of their sides or the head or a hand or a foot should be lowered, and their eyes should move to different objects. Such behaviour suggests lack of confidence and shows that members of the lower orders were not encouraged to hold their heads high in the company of their masters.

Yājñavalkya states that an elderly śūdra deserves respect. Unlike the early lawgivers, he does not insist that vaiśya and śūdra guests should be made to work and then fed with the servants. He provides, however, that guests should be received and fed in the order of their varṇas. But his provision that a guest should not be turned away in the evening and should be offered whatever is available is not confined to the members of any particular varṇa. The Dharmasūtra rule of providing food to caṇḍālas at the end of the Vaiśvadeva ceremony is repeated

1. XVII. 95-99.
2. XVII. 73.
3. Mṛchakaṭika, Act I, p. 5. Act II, pp. 63-64. Some of these terms such as chiṇḍāḷā putta are still used in Bibir.
4. ...nicētā caṭādinām. XII. 146-8.
5. Yājñavalkya, I. 116. Unlike Gautama, he does not fix the age limit of eighty years.
6. Ibid., I. 107.
7. Ibid.
during this period, and slaves, śvapacās and beggars are added to this list.

The texts of the period repeatedly state that a brāhmaṇa should not accept the food of a śūdra, for it reduces his spiritual strength. The Śānti Parvan does not allow the brāhmaṇa to take the food of carpenters, leather workers, washermen and dyers. According to Yājñavalkya the food of the śūdras and outcastes (pañitās) is not permitted to a snātaka. He further specifies that a snātaka should not take the food of a stage-player, a bamboo worker, a goldsmith, a weapon seller, an artisan, a tailor, a dyer, one whose living is by dogs, a butcher, a washerman or an oil-maker. There also begins the tendency to ban the food of some śūdras for the kṣatriyas. It is said that a kṣatriya must eschew food given by those śūdras who are addicted to evil ways and who partake of all manner of food without any scruple. The Anuṣṭāna Parvan declares that the man who takes food from a śūdra swallows the very abomination of the earth, drinks the excretions of the human body, and partakes of the filth of all the world. Perhaps this is meant to deter the brāhmaṇas from adopting such a course. Penances are provided for the purification of the brāhmaṇa who accepts the food of śūdras or eats in the company of vaiśyas and kṣatriyas.

The rules for the boycott of the śūdra’s food have a very limited application. They mostly apply either to the brāhmaṇas or to the snātakas, who may have been chiefly brāhmaṇas. Even the brāhmaṇa is permitted to take milk and curd at the house of a śūdra.

Further, if the brāhmaṇa is unable to procure

1. Āp. Dh. S., II. 4. 9. 5; Bau. Dh. S., II. 3. 5. 11.
2. Tāj., I. 103; Amu. P., (SE) 154.22, 250.15.
3. Āsvamedhika Parvan, (SE) 110.17-20, 61.44-45; Bhāṣpati, Śrāddha Khaṇḍa, verse 43.
4. ŚP, 37. 22-23. The term raṅgajīvinaḥ may indicate either a dyer or an actor.
5. I. 160.
6. Tāj., I. 161-5. The term cākrika may mean an oilmaker, a potter, or a coachman.
8. Ibid., (NE) 135.5, (SE) 198.5.
food from the twice-born for his livelihood, he may accept it from a śūdra.\footnote{1} Yājñavalkya repeats Manu’s rule that, among the śūdras, a snātaka can take food from his herdsman, a friend of the family, his slave, his barber, his sharecropper and one who surrenders himself to him for the sake of maintenance.\footnote{2} Bṛhaspati also provides that food can be accepted from slaves and domestic servants.\footnote{3}

The idea that a twice-born should eat or touch the leavings of the śūdra’s food was considered horrible, and appropriate penances were provided for the expiation of the sin.\footnote{4}

There is no evidence of forbidding the practice of accepting water from certain śūdra castes, except in the case of the caṇḍālas and other untouchables. The Mṛchakatika informs us that the same well was open to the śūdras and brāhmaṇas.\footnote{5}

Yājñavalkya prohibits certain kinds of food for the twice-born. The twice-born is not permitted to take wine. Penances are provided for the brāhmaṇa wife if she violates this rule,\footnote{6} but according to Vijnāneśvara these are not necessary if a śūdra wife drinks wine.\footnote{7} Drinking seems to have been a vice specially associated with the śūdras, for the list of words for spiritual liquor and various processes of its preparation and for intoxication are enumerated by Amara in the śūdra-varga;\footnote{8} words for gambling are also listed in the same section.\footnote{9} In the Pāñcatantra a drunken weaver is represented as beating his wife.\footnote{10} Yājñavalkya also forbids the use of the milk of a cow in heat, within ten days of the birth of her calf, and of one without a calf; as also of a camel, a single-hoofed animal, a woman, a wild animal, or a sheep.\footnote{11} An oblation intended for gods, sacrificial viands, śīrṣa (a kind of horseradish), unhallowed meat, fungi, carnivorous animals,

\footnotesize{1. \textit{Ibid.}, 110. 32.}
\footnotesize{2. I. 166.}
\footnotesize{3. XV. 19.}
\footnotesize{4. Bṛhaspati, Prāyaścitta, verses 34, 86-88, Ācāra, verse 87.}
\footnotesize{5. I. 32.}
\footnotesize{6. \textit{Ṭaṭi}, III. 255-6.}
\footnotesize{7. Comm. to \textit{Ṭaṭi}, III. 255-6.}
\footnotesize{8. \textit{AK}, II. 10. 39-43.}
\footnotesize{9. \textit{Ibid.}, II. 10. 44-46.}
\footnotesize{10. \textit{Pāñcatantra}, p. 15.}
\footnotesize{11. \textit{Ṭaṭi}, I. 170.}
and a number of birds such as the parrot, the swan, the \textit{vaka}, the \textit{cakravāka} etc. are declared uneatable for the twice-born,\textsuperscript{1} and penances are provided for the expiation of the sin arising out of the violation of the rule in some cases.\textsuperscript{2} Yājñavalkya further states that, among the five-clawed animals, the twice-born should not take the porcupine, alligator, tortoise, hedgehog and the hare; he also specifies the four varieties of fish which a twice-born should take.\textsuperscript{3} He prohibits the eating of roots, onion, garlic, village pig, mushroom and leek; those who violate this rule should perform the \textit{cāndrayāna} penance.\textsuperscript{4} Fa-hsien informs us that onion and garlic were taken only by the caṇḍālas.\textsuperscript{5} Yājñavalkya lays down that the person who compels a śūdra to partake of the prohibited food shall be subjected to half the punishment involved in the first amercement, which shall increase if the offence is committed against the members of the higher varṇas.\textsuperscript{6} This would suggest that certain items of food were tabooed even for the śūdras, but these are not specified by Yājñavalkya. On the other hand the list of food items prohibited for the twice-born clearly implies that they could be taken by the śūdras. The \textit{Brhaspati Smṛti} states that in the Middle Kingdom labourers and artisans eat the meat of cows,\textsuperscript{7} which shows that even the strong brāhmanical propaganda against cow slaughter did not always succeed in stopping this old practice among the masses of the people. This can also be inferred from a didactic anecdote, probably inserted in the \textit{Vṛgya Purāṇa} during this period. It relates that Prśadhra, son of Manu Vaivasvata, ate the flesh of his preceptor's cow, upon which the sage Cāyana cursed him to become a śūdra.\textsuperscript{8}

\textsuperscript{1} \textit{Ibid.}, I. 171-173.
\textsuperscript{2} \textit{Ibid.}, I. 175-6.
\textsuperscript{3} \textit{Ibid.}, I. 177-8.
\textsuperscript{4} \textit{Ibid.}, I. 176.
\textsuperscript{5} Legge, \textit{A Record of Buddhistic Kingdoms}, P. 43.
\textsuperscript{6} II. 296.
\textsuperscript{7} \textit{madhyadeśe karmakarāḥ śilpinaś ca gaviaśinaḥ}. \textit{Br.}, p. 21, verse 128. Ambedkar argues that beef-eating was one of the root causes of the origin of untouchability (\textit{The Untouchables}, Ch. IX), but there is nothing to show that these artisans and labourers were regarded as untouchables.
\textsuperscript{8} Quoted from \textit{Vś. P.} in Patil, \textit{op. cit.}, p. 38.
the food habits of śudras were somewhat different from those of the members of the twice-born varṇas.

Family life is enojoined on a śūdra in the same manner as for a member of any other varṇa. But the śudras continue to have their own marriage practices. The Anuśāsana Parvan avers that the marriage of the three higher varṇas has to be accomplished through the joining of hands with the mantras, but the marriage of the śudras is accomplished through sexual intercourse. A Jain source refers to a svayānvara hall at Tosali, where a slave girl selected her husband from an assembly of slave boys. Several references suggest that in the śūdra community women continued to be comparatively freer than in the higher classes. Commenting on a passage of Yājñavalkya, Viśvarūpa is of the opinion that the Smṛti texts about niyoga refer to śudras, and supports his view by quoting two verses of Vṛddha Manu and a gāthā of the Vāyu Purāṇa. In the case of the absence of the husband it was far easier for a śūḍrā wife to secure dissolution of the marriage tie and take another husband than in the case of the wives of the other three varṇas. In such a case the Anuśāsana Parvan prescribes a waiting period of only one year for the śūdra wife. But Nārada, who specifies the waiting periods for vaiśya, kṣatriya and brāhmaṇa wives, declares that no such definite period is prescribed for a śudra woman whose husband is gone on a journey. Again the repetition of the provision that wives of herders, oilmakers, distillers etc. are responsible for the payment of debts incurred by their husbands shows that these śudra women did not always depend for their livelihood on their menfolk.

2. The Anuśāsana Parvan (NE 44.9, SE 79.9) repeats the old rule that the āśura and paśīda forms of marriage should not be performed, presumably by the twice-born.
4. Bhātakalpa Bhāṣya, 2. 344; quoted in Jain, op. cit., p. 159.
8. XII. 100.
Viṣṇu states that, if a girl is not married after she has attained maturity, she should be considered as a degraded woman.¹ The commentator Nandarāja observes that this rule applies to young women of the lower castes only,² but there is nothing in the text to warrant such an assumption.

The view that members of the higher varṇas can take wives from the members of the lower varṇas is expressed in the texts of this period also.³ But there also recurs the idea that wives from the lowest order, i.e. śūdras, are to be espoused for the sake of pleasure.⁴ The Kāmasūtra does not differentiate the maid servants, kumbhadāsīs (maid servants employed in carrying water or harlots?) and wives of washermen and weavers from the prostitutes.⁵ According to this work intercourse with a śūdra woman is neither prohibited nor considered wise.⁶ Vātsyāyana commends marriage within one’s own varṇa.⁷ In particular, the idea that the brāhmaṇa should wed a śūdrā, or have intercourse with her or beget sons on her, is strongly discounted in the texts of the period.⁸ But there are cases of deviations from this rule. In the Mṛcchakaṇḍa the brāhmaṇa Cārudatta marries the prostitute Vasantasena, although this is done with the special permission of the king.⁹ The same drama represents the brāhmaṇa Śarvilaka as marrying his slave Madanikā.¹⁰ The literature of the period also supplies instances of kṣatriyas marrying śūdra women.¹¹

That marriages between the members of the higher varṇas were not altogether absent is also suggested by the repetition of 1. Viṣṇu, XXIV. 41.

2. SBE, vii, 109, fn. 41.
3. Nār., XII. 4-6; Anu. P. (NE) 44. 11, (SE) 79. 11
5. VI. 6. 54, with comm.
7. Ibid., III. 1-1.
8. Yaj., I. 56-7; Br., Āpaddharma, verse 47, Samskāra, verses 375-7; Anu. P., (NE) 44. 13, 47. 8-9; Āśvamedhika Parvan, (SE) 117. 10. If a person has intercourse with a pākṣa, he is purified by performing the pārāśa penance. Br., Prāyascitā, verse 70.
10. An epigraphic record of the 8th cen. A. D. informs us that the maternal ancestor of the ruler Lokanāthā, who was a brāhmaṇa, begot a son (pāralava) on a śūdra wife. EI, xv, p. 301.
the theory of the origin of the mixed castes. The Ariśāsanu Parvaṇ enumerates fifteen old mixed castes, and introduces four new castes of māṃsas, svādūkaras, kṣaudras, saugandhas, who are represented to have been born from māgadhī mothers through wicked men of the four varṇas. There is also mention of the madranābhas, who are supposed to have been derived from the niṣādas and described as riding on cars drawn by asses.

The vrātya is defined not as one who has fallen from the duties of the twice-born, but as one who is begotten upon a kṣatriya woman by a sūdra, and is placed in the category of the caṇḍāla.

It is also stated that a vaidya is begotten by a sūdra on a vaisya woman. This is typical of the low esteem in which physicians were held in early times. The Amarakosā introduces a new caste māhiṣas, who are described as the issues of kṣatriyas from vaisya (aryā) women. Probably they were identical with the Māhiṣakas, who appear as degraded sūdras along with the Dravīḍas, Kaliṅgas, Pulindas, Uśīnaras, Koliśarpas, Śakas, Yavanas and Kāmbojas. Though the theory of the origins of new castes through the intermixture of varṇas was fanciful, by this time it may have influenced the course of social developments; for even in our times such cases are noticeable in Eastern Nepal.

The law-books of the period retain the distinction between the sūdras and untouchables. Thus Yājñavalkya lays down that a sūdra who has intercourse with a caṇḍāla woman is reduced to her position. Sūdras and śvapakas are mentioned separately in several texts. But in the Amarakosā mixed castes and untouchables are looked upon as part of the sūdra community. Ten mixed castes, the karaṇa, the ambāṣṭha, the udgra (probably ugra), the māgadhā, the māhiṣa, the kṣattr, the sūta, the vaidehaka, the rathakāra and the caṇḍāla are included in the sūdra-varga of that work. The vaiḍehaka (trader) is, however, listed in the vaiśya-varga also.

Amara gives ten names for caṇḍālas, some of which such as plava, divakīriti, janaṅgama are rarely mentioned in the earlier texts, which may suggest an increase in the number of this untouchable caste. This can be also inferred from the fact that while the caṇḍālas are not mentioned by the Greek writers of the earlier period, they attracted the special attention of Fa-hsien. The ḍombas, who came to form a numerous section of the untouchables in Northern India in subsequent times, seem to have appeared as a caste in the Gupta period. The Jain sources describe them as a despised class. They were probably one of the aboriginal tribes, who were assimilated to the lower orders of brāhmaṇical society. Wild tribes such as the Kirātas, Śabaras, and Pulindas, along with the Mlecchas, are included in the śūdra-varga of the Amarakośa, which shows that large masses of tribal population were being absorbed in the śūdra community. During this period there seems to have been not only an increase in the number of the untouchables but also some intensification in the practice of untouchability. The Brāhmapati Smṛti provides a penance for removing the sin arising out of touching a caṇḍāla. Fa-hsien informs us that, when the caṇḍālas enter the gate of a city or a market-place, they strike a piece of wood to give prior notice of their arrival so that men may know and avoid them. The Mārkanda Purāṇa provides a purificatory rite for the person who looks at an antyaja or an antyāvasāyin. But the practice of untouchability was observed mainly in respect of the caṇḍālas. There is no direct evidence that the ḍombas were regarded as untouchables. Similarly there is nothing to

1. AK, II. 10. 1-4.
2. Ibid., II. 9. 78.
3. Ibid., II. 10. 20.
4. Legge, A Record of the Buddhistic Kingdoms, p. 43.
6. AK, II. 10. 21.
7. Br., Prāyaścitta, verses 49-50. A penance is also provided for a rajasaśāla, if she is touched by a śvapāka (Ibid., Prāyaścitta, verse 87).
8. Legge, op. cit., p. 43.
9. 25. 34-36.
show that the carmakāras, who came to be looked upon as untouchables in later times, were regarded as such during this period. There is not much new information about the occupations of the mixed castes and untouchables. Manu’s rule that these castes are to be recognised by their occupations recurs in the Anuśāsana Parvan.¹ The canḍālas continued to be employed in the work of cleaning streets, working in the cremation grounds, executing criminals and tracking down thieves at night.² Hunting constituted an important occupation of the lower sections of the sūdras. Curiously enough, the Amarakoṣa catalogues not only fowlers and hunters in the sūdra-varga,³ but also ordinary dogs, dogs trained for chase, village hogs, and deer wounded on the right side;⁴ so also are mentioned snare, net, rope and cage for trapping birds in the same section.⁵ Fa-hsien informs us that the canḍālas are fishermen and hunters, and sell flesh and meat.⁶ But the canḍālas are mentioned by Kālidāsa as separate from the fowlers and fishermen although they all belong to the same class.⁷ Thus in this period the canḍālas do not seem to have been primarily hunters though hunting may have been one of their subsidiary occupations. A Jain source states that the medas used to hunt animals day and night with bow and arrow.⁸ We also learn that the śapākās cooked the flesh of dogs and sold bow strings.⁹

There is some information about the manners, customs and religious beliefs of the mixed castes, especially of the canḍālas. Iron objects were the chief ornaments of the mixed castes,¹⁰ who lived outside village settlements. A canḍāla is represented as besmeared with the dust raised by dogs and asses.¹¹ Fa-hsien

5. Ibid., II. 10. 26-27.
11. Ibid., (NE) 101. 3, (SE) 158. 4.
informs us that only the caṇḍālas drink intoxicating liquor and eat onions or garlic,\(^1\) which shows that they were particularly addicted to these practices. Being hunters and fowlers, they were naturally habitual meat-eaters.\(^2\) A Buddhist source declares that those who eat meat are born again and again in the families of the caṇḍālas, pukkasas and ḍombas.\(^3\) It adds that, when a dog sees even from a distance the persons who desire to take meat, he is terrified with fear, thinking “they are death-dealers, they will even kill me”.\(^4\)

Singing, presumably for the entertainment of the people, seems to have been an important occupation of the ḍombas.\(^5\) They lived on singing and selling winnowing baskets and similar articles.\(^6\) The Amarakośa includes caṇḍālikā, a kind of vulgar lute, in the śudra-varga,\(^7\) which may suggest that the caṇḍālas also had some share in providing popular entertainment.

The ḍombas and the mātaṅgas had their own deities known as the Yakṣas (Jakkhas).\(^8\) A Jain source informs us that the shrine of the Jakkhas of the mātaṅgas was built on the bones of human beings who had died recently.\(^9\) This practice was probably the result of the caṇḍāla’s association with the cremation grounds.

The untouchables, and the caṇḍālas in particular, are portrayed in very disparaging terms. It is stated that the antyāvasāyins are characterised by impurity, untruth, theft, heterodoxy, useless quarrels, passions, wrath and greed.\(^10\) Ferocity appears as a special trait of the caṇḍāla’s character. In the Mṛchakaṭika the caṇḍālas argue that they are not caṇḍālas, though born in their family, but caṇḍālas and sinners are those who

1. Legge, op. cit., p. 43.
2. Cf. Mṛchakaṭika, X.
3. Laṅkāvatārasātra, p. 258.
4. Ibid., p. 246.
5. They were a caste of degraded musicians, representing early inhabitants of Northern India. Jain, op. cit., p. 360.
7. II. 10. 31-32.
persecute a virtuous man. A Buddhist text contends that, if a brāhmaṇa does not cultivate truth, asceticism, sublimation of passions and compensation for all beings, he is like a caṇḍāla. In the same spirit it is provided that by serving kine and brāhmaṇas, practising the virtues of abstention from cruelty, compassion, truthfulness of speech and forgiveness, and, if need be, by saving others by laying down their very lives, persons of the mixed castes can achieve success.

For the first time the Śānti Parvan declares that all the four varṇas ought to hear the Veda, and that a person ought to acquire knowledge even from a śūdra. Such injunctions are in sharp contrast to those of Manu, which provide very severe punishments in such cases. The precepts of the Śānti Parvan may have been thwarted by the deep-rooted prejudice against allowing Vedic education to the śūdras, but the recitation of the epics and Purāṇas was certainly open to the śūdras. The Bhāgavata Purāṇa states that instead of the Veda the Mahābhārata is provided for women and śūdras. It is not clear whether the Mahābhārata was to be read or only to be heard by the śūdras. In the case of the Purāṇas, however, the Bhavishyat Purāṇa states that they should never be studied by the śūdras, but should be heard by them. Possibly the religious practice of narrating stories from the Purāṇas and epics to all sections of the people for their edification and salvation originated in the Gupta period.

Nāṭyaśāstra or dramatics was another branch of learning which was brought within the reach of the śūdras. This is declared to be the fifth Veda, which was composed out of the

1. X. 22.
2. Vajrasūci, (S), verse 16, p. 5.
5. prāpya jhānam...śūradhipi. Mbh., XII.319.87ff. quoted Ibid.
7. strīśūdradriṣṭābhādhūnām trasya na śrutigocarāḥ ; karma śreyasi mūḍhānām śreya evam bhavedāḥ ; iti bhāratavāmāhāyanām kṛpayā muninā kṛtam. Bhag. P., I. 4.45 ; I. 4.29.
8. ...śrotasvameva śūḍreṇa nāḥhyetavyam kadačana. Bhav. P., i, I. 72.
elements of the four Vedas and which men of all castes should enjoy. Moreover, the two philosophical systems of Yoga and Sāṃkhya, which probably took their final form during the Gupta period, were also open to the ūdras. The fact that the Veda formed one of the sources of proof according to the Sāṃkhya system was not inconsistent with that system being made available to all; similarly the epic, which contains Vedic quotations, was equally open to ūdras to hear.

The Gupta period also provides instances of educated ūdras. A passage of Yājñavalkya suggests the existence of the teachers of servants. In the Mrčhakatika the judge reprimands Śakāra: "A low caste fellow, you are talking of the sense of the Vedas, yet your tongue has not fallen off." The existence of such ūdras is also attested by the Vajrasūci, which speaks of the ūdras who are learned in the vedas, grammar, mimāṃsā, sāṃkhya, vaiśeṣika, lagna etc. This statement does not refer to the Buddhists but to the ūdras proper, for the Buddhists were condemned as ūdras in the brāhmaṇical idiom but not in that of the Buddhists. Jayaswal argues that learned ūdras and the ūdras talking Sanskrit, referred to in Buddhist texts, were sons of the brāhmaṇas through ūdra women. This is probable, but some advanced sections of the ūdras, who tried to uplift their brethren, may have been educated.

There is no doubt, however, that, compared to the members of the upper varṇas, the ūdras functioned at a low cultural level. Thus in the dramas, women and low caste people always speak Prākrit, the tongue of the vulgar, in contrast to the refined tongue of the higher class characters who speak Sanskrit.

2. The Yoga-sūtra of Patañjali is probably not older than the 3rd cen. A.D. Keith, The Sāṃkhya System, p. 57.
3. Iṣvarakṛṣṇa, the author of the Sāṃkhya-kārikā, was an earlier contemporary, according to Chinese evidence, of Vasubandhu, who lived in all probability about A. D. 300. Ibid., p. 57.
4. Ibid., p. 100.
7. vedārtha prākrtastram vadasi na ca te jihvā nīkatītā. IX. 21.
The Nātyaśāstra provides, however, that queens, courtesans and female artistes may use Sanskrit according to circumstances.1 Sometime distinction was made even in the use of the dialects of Prākrit; Śaurasenī was used for persons of good position in the drama while Māgadhi was reserved for those of low rank.2 The Nātyaśāstra assigns local dialects (vibhāsās) to various tribes and occupations such as those of the caṇḍālas, pulkasas etc.3 All this would suggest that members of the lower orders did not receive literate education, which would enable them to speak the refined tongue Sanskrit.

It is contended that as a student of military science the śūdra passed through the ceremony of the upanayana, which was accompanied by the recital of Vedic mantras,4 but there is no reference to such a rite in the Dhanurveda Samhitā. Probably as artisans the śūstras continued to have vocational or technical training in their family or under outside experts, but this remained divorced from literate learning. Nevertheless, it is clear that the texts of the Gupta period not only take a liberal view of the education of the śūstras but also testify to the existence of some educated śūstras.

The old maxim that the śūstras have no religious rights is repeated in this period.5 It is argued that their sacrifice consists in performing the service of the three higher varṇas.6 In keeping with this attitude Nārada states that consecrated water should not be given to atheists, vrātyas and slaves.7 But Viṣṇu provides that under certain circumstances a śūdra has to undergo the ordeal by sacred libation (kosa).8 There also appear other indications of changes in the religious position of the śūstras. The Mārkandeya Purāṇa assigns the duties of making gifts (dāna) and performing sacrifices (yajña) to the śūdra.9

1. Ibid., XVII. 39.
2. Keith, HSL, p. 31.
3. XVII, 54-56.
5. Tāj, III, 262 ; Anu. P., (SE) 149, 13 ; cf. SP. 70, 5.
7. I. 332.
8. IX. 10.
9. 28. 7-8.
There is no doubt that the sūdras were conceded the right to perform the five great sacrifices (pañcamahāyajñas). Manu does not clearly state this, but Yājñavalkya makes it explicit that a sūdra can perform five sacrifices with the namaskāra mantra. Hopkins is not correct when he says that this statement does not appertain to the sūdras, for it is corroborated by other sources. While Manu regards initiation into sacrifice (yajñadikṣā) as one of the births of the twice-born, this special privilege is not mentioned in the corresponding passage of Yājñavalkya. This is in consonance with the latter's liberal attitude, which allows sacrifice to the sūdras. The Śānti Parvan unequivocally declares that the trayī (three Vedas) allows the sūdra the use of svāhākāra, namaskāra and mantra, and adds that with the help of the first two he can perform the pākayajñas, after being formally consecrated. In justification of this reform the precedent of the sūdra Pañjavana is cited. It is said that in ancient times he performed one of the pākayajñas, and according to the rules of the aindrāgni (a one-day sacrifice) he made the gift of a hundred thousand vessels full of rice (pūrṇapātras). This reminds us of similar practices of modern social reformers who hunt out old precedents in favour of widow marriage, divorce etc. While allowing domestic sacrifices to the sūdras the Śānti Parvan makes the important assertion that all the varṇas enjoy the right to perform sacrifices provided they possess faith.

1. Brahmanda P., III. 12. 19. These five devotional acts were brahma-yajña, pitàyajña, dāsya, bāli, and mātyajña. Manu, III. 69-70.
2. Yaj., I. 121.
3. Hopkins, Mutual Relations of Four Castes in Manu, p. 86, fn. 1.
5. Manu, II. 169.
7. svāhākāra, namaskāra, mantraḥ śūdre vidhihyate; tābhāyāṁ śūdra pākayajñānāryaṇaḥ eravatāvaṁyayam. ŚP, 60. 36. The central group of MSS distinguishes between yajña allowed to the sūdra and that to the twice-born. It denies the use of svāhākāra, namaskāra and mantra to the sūdra, but permits him to perform the pākayajñas without a dīkṣā erata. Critical Notes on ŚP, 60. Rājadharma, Pt.II, Fascicule 19, pp. 660-661. The pākayajñas are also recommended for all the dayus (ŚP, 65. 21-22), which shows that these were being extended to the people outside brāhmanical fold. Cf. Bṛhaspati, Śamkāra, verse 529.
8. ŚP., 60. 37-38.
9. ... yajña māṁśyaṁ tāta sarvavarṇaṁ bhūrata; ...tasmāt sarvavarṇaṁ vṛṇṇaṁ śraddhāyājñāḥ vidhihyate... ŚP, 60. 39-43, cf. 51-52. The term sarvavarṇa is glossed as traivarṇaḥ by the comm. Cn (according to the classification of the Critical Edn.). Fascicule, 19, pp. 660-661.
As an important corollary to the śūdra’s right to sacrifice follows his right of performing penances. Yājñavalkya lays down the cāndrāyana penance for the śūdras, who are obviously covered by the use of the term awakṣīta by him. This provision is considered to be an interpolation, but it is in keeping with the liberal attitude of Yājñavalkya and a similar provision in the Brhaspati Smṛti, which prescribes the prājāpatya penance for the śūdra in the case of his snapping the thread of a brāhmaṇa.

The Brhaspati Smṛti provides the sacraments of karnavedhana (ear-boring) and cūḍākaraṇa (tonsure) for the śūdras. The first ceremony is not mentioned in the Gṛhyasūtras, but the second, which is prescribed by them and is confined by Manu to the twice-born, is now extended to the śūdras.

Several texts of the period deny ascetic life to the śūdra. Kālidāsa deliberately repeats the Rāmāyaṇa’s condemnation of the śūdra ascetic Śambūka who, in his opinion, threatened the security of the established order by trying to acquire merit through asceticism. He commends the punishment of death inflicted on Śambūka by Rāma; and he argues that as a result of this the śūdra obtained the position of the virtuous which he could not secure even by his severe austerity, for this was being done in violation of the rules of his class. But on the question of the relation between the varṇas and the āśramas the Śānti Parva adopts a different attitude. It insists that a brāhmaṇa should go through the four āśramas, but does not make this obligatory on the three other varṇas who, however, cannot adopt the life of an ascetic. This implies that a śūdra, if he so

1. Tājī, III. 262.
2. Gampert, Die Sühnzeremonien in der Altindischen Rechtsliteratur, p. 94.
4. Br., Śamskāra, verse 101. But the metal of the needle for piercing ears differs according to the varṇa of the child (Ibid.).
5. Ibid., Śamskāra, verse 154 (a).
7. cūḍākarma dojāśītan āṃśeṣāṃvā rāsamuṣṭā eṣaṁ dharmaṁ. Manu, II. 35.
8. Probably the story of the death of Sambūka at the hands of Rāma, which reflects the attitude of Manu, was inserted in the Rāmāyaṇa (Uttarakṣaṇa, Chs. 74-76) in the post-Mauryan period.
10. ṢP, 63-9-11; Cr. note on 63. 9. Fasc. 19, p. 662.
11. ṢP, 63. 12-14.
desires can enter the first three āśramas, the fourth being closed not only to him but also to the vaiśya and the kṣatriya. But Kātyāyana refers to the śūdra ascetic who is to be punished by the king if he forsakes the order of the sannyāsins. Yājñavalkya provides that śūdra ascetics should not be fed in the worship of the gods and the ancestors. This may refer either to Jain and Buddhist monks or to ascetics from the śūdra varṇa.

An important indication of improvement in the religious status of the śūdra is to be found in some provisions regarding the making of images. While enumerating the constituents suitable for preparing clay for this purpose, a Vaiṣṇavite text lays down that men of all castes can make images. This shows that the śūdras could make and worship images, made of the same material as the members of other varṇas. Another text of the period, however, prescribes varṇa distinctions in the selection of wood to be used for making images, and accordingly four varieties of wood are provided for the four varṇas respectively. A similar rule occurring in a post-Gupta Vaiṣṇavite Upapurāṇa ordains that in making temples and images white wood is auspicious for the brāhmaṇas, red for the kṣatriyas, yellow for the vaiśyas, and black for the śūdras. In making images, the same text recommends stones of these four colours for the four varṇas respectively. In spite of these varṇa distinctions in regard to the selection of wood and stone, the texts dealing with iconography leave no doubt that the śūdras could make and worship images.

It is laid down that a brāhmaṇa should not accompany the corpse of a śūdra to the pyre; if he does so, he is purified by

1. Kātyā., verse 486. The Mārk. P. also mentions śūdra ascetics (22. 19), but we have no idea of the time to which they belong.
2. Yāj., II. 235.
3. Passage quoted by Gopaḷabhaṭṭa from the Ḥayaśīṭa Pāñcarātra in the 18th vilāsa of the Hariḥkāṭikīlāsa, and reproduced in Banerjea, Development of Hindu Iconography, p. 227, fn. 1.
4. Brhat Saṅkhītā (Sudhākara Dīvīdē's edn.), 58. 5-6.
5. Viśudharmottara Mahāpurāṇa, iii. 89. 12.
6. śaktā lastā duṣjjānānām kṣatriyānām ca ēhītā, viśam pita hitā kṛṣṇā śūdrāṇām ca hitapradā. Ibid., iii. 90. 2.
bathing, touching fire and eating ghee. The old rule providing for the highest period of impurity in the case of death in a śūdra’s family is maintained by several texts of the period. But in such a case Yājñavalkya prescribes one month for an ordinary śūdra and fifteen days for a pious (nyāyavartin) śūdra, thus placing the latter in the rank of the vaiśya. Vaiśyas and śūdras are also placed in the same category in connection with the observance of fasts. It is provided that the vaiśyas and śūdras should observe fast for only one night. If from folly they observe fasts for two or three nights, these do not lead to their advancement. On special occasions, however, they can perform fasts for two nights. But sometimes it is also asserted that only the brāhmaṇas and kṣatriyas can observe the vow of fasts.

Brhaspati lays down that in the case of still birth (janmahānī) a brāhmaṇa is purified in 10 days, a kṣatriya in 7 days, a vaiśya in 5 days and a śūdra in 3 days.

The impurity of women and śūdras in relation to ceremonial occasions is also maintained by the texts of this period. In some cases penances are provided for seeing śūdras and outcastes (patitas), who are considered to be as impure as dogs. Penances are also provided for the kṣatriya student who comes into contact with a vaiśya or a śūdra, and for the vaiśya student who comes into contact with a śūdra.

The śrāddha rites, as laid down in the Gṛhyasūtras, are not prescribed for a śūdra, but the texts of this period clearly allow these rites to a śūdra. He can perform not only the ordinary

3. III. 23.
5. Ibid.
7. Ibid., (NE) 106. 2. (SE) 163. 2.
8. Br., Aśauca, verses 34-35. Certain sections of people such as artisans, cultivators, physicians, slaves of both sexes, barbers, kings, and brāhmaṇas learned in the śrutis were always considered pure. Tāj., III. 28-29; Br., Aśauca, verse 9.
9. SP. 35. 35.
13. Tāj., I. 121; Viṣṇu P., ii. 13. 49.
(sādhāraṇa) śrāddha but also the extraordinary (vṛddhi) śrāddha, in which offerings are made to dead ancestors on special occasions such as the birth of a son. We further learn that after death Pracāpatya is the heaven assigned to the brāhmaṇas who perform the ceremonies, Aindra to the kṣatriyas who do not flee in battle, Māruta to the vaiśyas who carry out their duties, and Gāndharva to the śudras who are engaged in menial service.

The śudras could make offerings of water and other things to their pitaras, who are referred to by the epithet Sukālin in the Purāṇas and are described as dark in colour. But, unlike the members of the three higher varṇas, who are described as sons of the rṣis, the śudras are not supposed to have any pravaras.

An important religious development of this period is the emphasis on the śudra’s right of making gifts. Charity is declared to be the best course for a śudra, by performing which he gains all his ends. A śudra who practises truth and sincerity, honours mantra and brāhmaṇas, and makes gifts attains heaven and even brāhmaṇahood in the next birth. In a special vow known as the anāṅgadāna-vrata, prescribed for prostitutes, it is provided that a brāhmaṇa should recite the Vedic mantras while accepting the cow of a prostitute, who was normally thought of as a śudra.

We are further told that a Śaivite prostitute named Lilāvati and a śudra goldsmith made gifts, as a result of which the former attained the region of Śiva (śivamandiram) after death and the latter became a paramount sovereign named Dharmamūrti. A Buddhist commentary of the 1. Matya P., 17. 63-64.

2. Ibid., 17. 70.
5. Märk. P., 96. 36.
10. ... ka idaṁ kasmādāditi vaidikam mantramāryayat. Mat. P., 69. 51-54. Chs. 69-72 on vows corresponding to 70-71 of Jivānanda’s edn. have been assigned by Hazra to A. D. c. 550-650 (op. cit., p. 176).
5th century A.D. provides instances of at least a dozen persons of the lower orders who enjoyed the pleasures of heaven and the joys and comforts of the Buddhist vihānas as a result of their gifts to the Buddha, the Bhikṣus or the Saṅgha.\(^1\) Thus the doctrine of gift was common to both the Buddhist and brahmanical systems.

There is no evidence to show that any vigorous propaganda was made by the brahmanas to popularise the piety of making gifts earlier than the time of the Vājñāvalkya Smṛti.\(^2\) With the law-book of Bṛhaspati the doctrine of salvation through gifts reached its high watermark.\(^3\) The fact that this doctrine was repeatedly emphasised in connection with the sūdras may suggest that they were in a position to make gifts which was in accord with the change in their economic position.

The provisions for the performance of sacrifices, penances, śrāddhas and various other rites by the sūdras presuppose the employment of brahmanas, who were the recipients of the gifts made on these occasions. Even a sūdra is allowed to accept gifts, but the merit of the donor increases according to the varṇa of the person accepting gifts.\(^4\) The repeated condemnation of the priests who officiate at the rites performed by the sūdras\(^5\) not only betrays old prejudices against these priests, but also suggests that the practice of engaging them was becoming more frequent. Unlike Manu,\(^6\) Vājñāvalkya does not condemn sūdra priests (tvajja). The Vajrasūci avers that brahmanas are to be found even in the families of the kaivartas, rajakas (washermen) and caṇḍālas, among whom the rites of cūḍākaraṇa, muṇja, daṇḍa (staff) and kāṣṭha (wood) etc. are performed.\(^7\) This suggests that the brahmanas officiated as priests even for the lowest sections of the sūdras. The Vajrasūci also states that kṣatriyas, vaiśyas and sūdras are seen sacrificing

\(^1\) Calculated on the basis of B. C. Law's summary of the Vīmāṇavatthu comm. in Heaven and Hell, pp. 36-45.
\(^2\) Hazra, op. cit., p. 247.
\(^3\) K. V. Rangaswami Aiyangar, Bṛhaspati, Introd., p. 162.
\(^4\) Br., Saṃskāra, verse 288.
\(^5\) Vīraṇa, LXXXII. 14 & 22; ŚP, Ms. Ds 5; Brahmāṇḍa P., III. 15. 44.
\(^6\) Manu, XI. 42.
\(^7\) Vajrasūci, (BB), p. 7.
and officiating at sacrifices, studying and teaching, and accepting gifts. This development, if true, may indicate a spirit of revolt in certain sections of the people against the brāhmaṇical monopoly of priestly functions. Several movements of such a type have taken place in more recent times.

While the champions of Buddhism continued to argue against birth as the basis of varṇa, the growth of certain reforming ideologies, especially the creed of Vaiśṇavism, secured a large measure of religious equality for the śūdras. Vaiśṇavism reached its high watermark in the Gupta period, when we find numerous epigraphic, numismatic and sculptural records testifying to its unparalleled influence not only in Northern India but even in parts of Southern and Western India. The doctrines of this sect, as propounded in the didactic sections of the Mahābhārata and Purāṇas, show that, unlike the old orthodox form of brāhmaṇism, Vaiśṇavism did not keep the śūdras and untouchables at a distance, but extended to them the privilege of knowing God and attaining liberation. The Vaiśṇava texts never fail to emphasise that women and śūdras can attain emancipation through their devotion to Kṛṣṇa, Nārāyaṇa or Vāsudeva. Bhagavān is represented as claiming that the whole world, from the brāhmaṇa to the śvapāka is purified if devoted to Him. A śvapāka possessed of sincere faith and devotion is considered dearer to God than a brāhmaṇa endowed with other qualities but lacking in faith. If the person of low birth utters the name of God only once, he is liberated from bondage. It is asserted that “brāhmaṇas learned in the Vedas regard a virtuous śūdra as the effulgent Viṣṇu of the universe, the foremost one in all the worlds”. Those who disregard the śūdra devotees of Viṣṇu

1. Ibid., (O), p. 4.
2. Ibid., (EE) and (GI), pp. 8 & 9.
5. Bhagavat Cīśa, IX. 32; Bhāg. P., VII. 7. 54-55; XI. 5. 4.
7. Ibid., III. 33. 7.
8. Ibid., V. 1. 35. Cf., Āśvamedhika P., (SE) 117. 2.
9. vaisaṭhekāṁ śūdrāmudāharanti dvijā mahārāja śruto-paṇḍitāḥ; ahaṁ hi paśuṁ narendra devaman vitavasya viṣṇuṁ jagataḥ pradhanam. SP (Cal.), 296. 28. The use of the term vaisaṭha as an adjective of śūdra seems to be curious.
are condemned to hell for ten million (koṭi) years. Hence a wise person should not disregard even a caṇḍāla devotee of Viṣṇu. Through devotion to Viṣṇu a rājanya obtains victory, a brāhmaṇa learning, a vaiśya wealth and a śūdra happiness.

A similar assertion is made with regard to all the four varṇas if they recite the hymn dedicated to Mahādeva. If vaiśyas, women and śūdras listen to the story of the Dakṣa-Śiva conflict from the brāhmaṇas, they receive a place in the Rudra-loka. Like the members of the three higher varṇas, a śūdra devotee of Śiva is also promised the status of Gaṇapati provided he is not a drunkard. Thus it would appear that Śaivism also kept its doors equally open to the śūdras.

Tantricism, which was connected with both Vaiṣṇavism and Śaivism, also did not recognise varṇa distinctions in matters of religion. The Jayākhyya-samhitā, a Tantra work of the fifth century A.D., permits members of all the four varṇas to be initiated into Tantricism, preferably by a brāhmaṇa; if a brāhmaṇa is not available, worthy members of the kṣatriya, vaiśya and śūdra varṇas can act as initiators for their respective classes, or for people of lower classes.

Vaiṣṇavism, and to some extent Śaivism, counted many followers among the members of the ruling class in the Gupta period, but we have hardly any means of ascertaining the extent of the influence of these sects among the lower orders. It is suggested that in Vaiśālī the artisan class was considerably influenced by Vaiṣṇavism, for two craftsmen (kulikas) bear the name of Hari. This may have been the case at other places also.

1. Āśvamedhika P., (SE) 116. 21.
2. Ibid., 116. 22.
3. Ibid., 116 31.
5. Vāyu P., i, 30. 18.
6. Ibid., ii, 39. 352-4. In the Appendix to the Vāyu Purāṇa, in a story a barber named Maṅkha installs an image of Gaṇeśa Kṣemaka at Vārānasi. Patil, ep. cit., p.38. 7. On paleographical grounds this work has been placed about A. D. 450. B. Bhattacharya, Jayākhyya-samhitā, Foreword, p. 34.
8. Jayākhyya-samhitā, 18. 3-5.
9. su (sa?) jātiyena śūdrena tādṛśena mahādhiyāḥ; anugrahābhīṣekau ca kāryu. śūdrasya sarvadā. Ibid., 6-9.
10. K. G. Goswami, IHQ, xxxi, 125.
Under the influence of the reforming creeds the religious texts of the period shift the emphasis from the observance of rites and sacraments to that of good conduct, which determines the social status of a person. It is stated that neither the performance of the agnihotra nor the knowledge of the Veda is of any avail, for the gods are satisfied through good conduct which is fostered by the Śrutis; brāhmaṇas who do not maintain good conduct (śīla) should be regarded as śūdras. A person bereft of good conduct (śīla) should not be honoured; on the other hand even a religious śūdra should be honoured. A śūdra not only may become a non-regenerate (asamskṛta) dvija, but he should be revered like a regenerate person, if he is “pure of heart, and of subdued senses”, since “not birth, nor sacrament, nor learning, nor stock (santatiḥ) make one regenerate, but only conduct”. The argument that even a śūdra of good conduct can attain brāhmaṇahood in the next birth is repeatedly advanced in the didactic sections of the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas, and is also reproduced in the Vajrasūci.

Appropriate anecdotes are cited to support the above theory. In the Vana Parvan occurs the legend of the brāhmaṇa rṣi Kauśika who was taught the duties of the varṇas and code of moral conduct to be followed by them by a dharma-knowing

1. Several provisions, however, emphasise the necessity of observing the rites, especially on the part of the brāhmaṇa. If he does not say his prayers, or perform the agnihotra, and takes to the duties of a trader or a cultivator, he is reduced to the position of a śūdra or a vṛṣala. Anu. P., (NE) 104. 19-20, (SE) 161. 20, (SE) 217. 10-12; Āśvamedhika Parvan, (SE) 116. 11-12; cf. ŚP, XII. 63. 3-5; Non-observance of the religious rites and sanskāras such as keeping fire, upanayana, vows etc., and officiating for non-sacrificing people as well as serving the śūdras are regarded as many upapākas for a brāhmaṇa. Tāj., III. 234-242.

2. Āśvamedhika Parvan, (SE) 116. 5-6.

3. Anu., P., (NE) 48. 48, (SE) 83. 47.

5. ... na yonirnāpisāṃskāro na śrutam na ca santatiḥ...Anu. P. (Cal.), 143. 46-50. Cf. Vana Parvan (Cal.), 181. 42-43.

6. Anu. P. (Cal), 143. 51; ŚP (Cal.), 189. 8; Vana P. (Cal), 180. 25-26, cf. 35-36; Bhāṣyija P., I. 44. 37; cf. Bhāg. P., VII. 11. 35.

It is claimed by this dharmavyādha of Mithilā that he served elders and superiors, always spoke the truth, never envied anybody, used to make gifts according to his means, and lived upon what was left after the service of the gods, the guests and his dependents. He never spoke ill of any one and he hated none. It is argued that this anecdote is Buddhistic, but the tenor of the fowler's statement is quite in keeping with Vaiśṇavite doctrines, and does not necessarily presuppose Buddhistic influences. Even the Buddhistic argument in the Vajrasūci that Vyāsa, Kauśika, Viśvāmitra and Vasiṣṭha all were lowborn but came to be regarded as brāhmaṇas on account of their conduct in this world is apparently derived from the old tradition embodied in the Purāṇas.

But the influence of the reforming sects should not be exaggerated. Vaiśṇavism was utilised by the ruling classes to maintain the bases of the varṇa divided society. Vaiśyas, women and śūdras are condemned as people of low origin. It is asserted that nothing offers salvation to the śūdra excepting the service of the twice-born and devotion to Viṣṇu. This is more or less a corollary of the theory of karma, and of the general belief in the imperative necessity of performing the duties of the order in which a person is born. It seems that members of the lower orders were made to believe in this doctrine by the brāhmanical ideologies. In the Mṛchakatika a bullock-cart driver refuses to carry out his master's orders to kill Vasantasena on the ground that: “Destiny and sins made me a slave at birth; I do not wish to fall again into the same misfortune, and therefore I shall refuse to commit a crime”. Such a belief naturally

1. Vana Parvan (Cal.), 205. 44; 206. 10-25.
5. Gītā, IX. 32. Even the dharmavyādha believes that service is prescribed for the śūdras (karma śūtre...).
8. ṣeṇa hmi gabbhādēte vinimmiṃde bhūtādheṣeḥim. ahiṃ ca na kaiṣṣaḥ teṇa akaiṣṣaḥ palīvalāṁ _Mṛchakatika_, VIII. 25, Karmarkar's Tr., p. 232.
prevented the masses of the people from looking for the causes of their miseries in the actions of human agencies.

But there is no doubt that during the Gupta period the religious rights of the śūdras were enlarged, and in respect of several ceremonies they were placed on a level with the members of the three higher var. as. It is argued that the spiritual betterment of the śūdras was motivated by the selfish interests of the brāhmaṇas, who naturally wanted that a large section of people should observe brāhmaṇical rites. But the same selfish interest of the brāhmaṇas may equally well have existed in earlier periods, when there is not much evidence for such a development. Perhaps the reasons for the broadening of the religious rights of the śūdras lay in the improvement of their material conditions, which enabled them to perform sacraments and sacrifices by paying for priests. For the ability to sacrifice was rightly believed to be intimately connected with the ability to pay. Roughly speaking, the developments in the religious position of the śūdras during the Gupta period may be compared to what happened in Egypt at the beginning of the Middle Kingdom, when certain funerary rites, hitherto confined to the Pharaohs and nobles, were extended to the masses of the people. But this was accompanied by improvements in their economic conditions, a fact which seems to be also true of the position of the śūdras in the Gupta period.

The Gupta period witnessed momentous changes in the status of the śūdras. Not only was there an increase in the rates of wages paid to hired labourers, artisans and pedlars, but slaves and hired labourers were gradually becoming sharecroppers and peasants. This change is broadly reflected in the politico-legal position of the śūdras. The admonitions of the Śanti Parvan advocating the appointment of śūdra ministers may not be taken seriously, but certainly the heads of the guilds of artisans were associated with the work of the district government, and

1. Ghurye, Caste and Class, p. 95.
3. Murray, The Splendour that was Egypt, p. 185.
4. Moret and Davy, From Tribe to Empire, p. 222.
5. SP, 85: 7-10.
in times of emergency the śūdras were conceded the right to bear arms. The rigours of the varūa legislation were softened, and probably some of the harsh measures against the śūdras were annulled. The religious rights of the śūdras were considerably enlarged. Social degradation undoubtedly took place in the case of the untouchables, who were regarded as śūdras only theoretically, but for all practical purposes were marked out as a separate community. But it would be wrong to think that other sections of the śūdras were socially degraded in the Gupta period. There is no evidence for this in regard to food and marriage practices. As regards education, the śūdras were definitely conceded the right of hearing the epics and the Purāṇas, and sometimes even the Veda. Considered as a whole, the economic, político-legal, social and religious changes in the position of the śūdras during the Gupta period may be regarded as marking a transformation in the status of that community.

1. As does Ghurye, who is of the opinion that in the period A.D. 300 to A.D. 1000 the śūdra became socially more degraded (Caste and Class, p. 94).
CHAPTER VIII

RECAPITULATION AND CONCLUSION

The main phases in the development of the position of the śudras, from their earliest appearance to cir. A.D. 500, may be roughly indicated. It seems that the defeated and dispossessed sections of the Āryan and non-Āryan tribes were reduced to the position of śudras, who came to be regarded as the collective property of the conquerors. Since originally a considerable number of śudras formed part of the Āryan community, they retained several of their tribal rights, especially religious, in later Vedic society. But when varṇa society was completely established in the pre-Mauryan period (cir. 600 B.C.-cir. 300 B.C.), they were deprived of these rights and saddled with economic, politico-legal, social and religious disabilities, 1. The śudra was considered identical with the slave, although only a section of śudras may have been legally slaves. Therefore it is wrong to render the word “śudra” by “slave”, as has been done by Hopkins. 1 Similarly, it is not correct to characterise the śudra as a serf, as has been done in the Vedic Index, for a serf means a person whose service is attached to the soil and is transferred with it. We can roughly say that for a long time the term śudra was a collective name given to the heterogeneous working class, which stood in a relation of servitude to the members of the three upper varṇas; and in this respect they may be very roughly compared to the helots of Sparta. The śudras’ servitude assumed different forms, for they served as domestic servants and slaves, agricultural slaves, hired labourers and artisans. A recent writer condemns them as incapable of constructive efforts, but it has to be emphasised that the śudra labour and skill, together with the surplus produced by the vaiśya peasants, provided the material basis for the development of ancient Indian society.

1. Hopkins, CHI, i, 268.
2. VI, ii, 389.
In the Mauryan period, the tendency to employ śūdra labour in agriculture reached its climax, and never before or after did the state exercise so much control over the slaves, hired labourers and artisans. The view that, in the Arthaśāstra of Kauṭilya, the śūdras were regarded as āryas and as such could not be reduced to slavery is not sustained by a close examination of the passages in question. And Aśoka’s attempt to abolish varṇa distinctions in the administration of justice probably irritated the brāhmaṇas, but did not benefit the lower varṇas.

The post-Mauryan period (cir. 200 B.C. —cir. A.D. 200) marks a critical stage in the position of the śūdras. Manu’s fanatical anti-śūdra measures and the Purānic denunciations of the śūdras for their anti-brāhmaṇical activities indicate a phase of bitter varṇa struggle, which was perhaps aggravated by the intervention of the foreign elements in favour of the śūdras. Probably as a result of this conflict, the disappearance of the strong state power of the Mauryas, and the rise of new arts and crafts there began signs of change in the position of the śūdras, which became more clearly visible in the Gupta period (cir. A.D. 200—cir. 500).

During this period the śūdras gained some religious and civic rights and in many respects were placed on a par with the vaiśyas. The bracketing of the vaiśyas and śūdras is not unknown in the earlier texts, but it becomes more frequent in the texts of the post-Mauryan and Gupta periods, and in the light of other developments it carries a new significance during the Gupta period. Apparently the status of the vaiśya was degraded towards servitude, that of the śūdra levelled upward towards freedom. The former process can be inferred from numerous land grants made to the brāhmaṇas in the developed areas, which tended to depress the position of the old peasants by creating a class of intermediaries between them and the king. The imposition of forced labour (viśṭi), which seems to have been confined to the dāsas and karmakaras in the Mauryan period, was now extended to the peasants, and this further diminished the gap between the vaiśyas and śūdras. The śūdras' climb to the position of the vaiśyas is evident from their transformation into peasants and from their growing importance as artisans and traders. Land grants to brāhmaṇas in the undeveloped areas seem to have added to the number of śūdra peasants, who were recruited into the brāhmaṇical social organisation from the aboriginal population. While in the earlier periods the service of the śūdras consisted in supplying labour to the higher vārṇas, from the Gupta period onwards this consisted in supplying part of their produce as artisans, traders, and especially as peasants. Their old forms of servitude still continued, but perhaps the śūdras in this condition were less numerous than the new type of śūdra who appeared at this time.

1. AŚ, III. 13.
2. The earliest epigraphic evidence for land grants can be traced back to the first century B.C. (Sircar, Select Inscriptions, i, p. 168, Inscr. no. 8a, l. 11), but such grants become more frequent in the Gupta period.

In spite of the servile status and miserable conditions of the śūdra masses, particularly in pre-Gupta times, there is hardly any evidence of śūdra revolts, excepting the references to their violent anti-brāhmaṇical activities during the post-Mauryan period. In comparison with the slave revolts in Rome, occasional and sporadic anti-state activities of the śūdras are insignificant. In a study of the social and rural economy of Northern India (600 B.C. to A.D. 200) it has been suggested that the lower vaiśyas constituted the middle class (petty bourgeoisie),\(^1\) which held the balance between the śūdra and dvīja classes.\(^2\) The use of the term dvīja classes is inaccurate, for the vaiśyas were also regarded as such. But even the fact of the vaiśyas acting as a stabilising sector between the first two vārṇas on the one hand and the śūdras on the other can be true only of the period before the beginning of the Christian era, since roughly from that time the two lower vārṇas began to approximate to one another till in the Gupta period they practically lost their independent identities.

We may, however, suggest some other reasons to explain the comparative calmness of the śūdras in ancient Indian society.

---

1. Technically this term stands for the members of the shopkeeping middle class, but the vaiśyas were mainly peasants in this period.
It seems that money economy had not developed in India to the extent to which it had in Greece and Rome, and hence, notwithstanding the theoretical servitude of the śudras, very few of them could be reduced to slavery through failure to pay debts, which was a major source of slavery in Greece. Except in the pre-Mauryan and Mauryan periods, there is very little evidence of the employment of agricultural slaves. Slavery was mostly domestic, under which there subsisted intimate relations with the master, and the slaves formed not a sharply marked class, but merely the lowest rung of the household ladder.

In the case of oppression the śudra labourers may have taken refuge among the free tribal population, or have migrated from one state to another. Further, in contrast to the brāhmaṇas and kṣatriyas, the śudras were not a well-organised, closed community, capable of making any combined efforts against their masters. As time passed, they fragmented into numerous subcastes of unequal social status, which went on multiplying through the accession of numerous tribes. It is suggested that in the Amarakosa, craftsmen such as garland-makers, potters, masons, weavers, tailors, painters etc. are noted in an approximately descending order. There is no doubt that among the śudras domestic servants, sharecroppers, herdsmen and barbers were regarded as higher in the social scale than most other types of śudra, for their food could be taken even by the brāhmaṇa master. Greater weakness of the lower orders lay in their division into śudras and untouchables, which appeared in the time of Pāṇini, was perpetuated in later times and accentuated in the Gupta period. The śudras gained in status not only through their levelling up with the higher varnas but also through their exaltation above the untouchables, so that, with a class of people lower than they, they might satisfy their sense of vanity in the brāhmaṇical hierarchy.

2. Cf. Solon's Debt Laws towards the beginning of the sixth century B. C.
3. A case of the desertion of the Pāṇcāla Kingdom by the oppressed subjects is reported in a Jātaka.
5. Tāj, I. 166.

And, lest perchance the discontented śūdras resorted to arms, the lawgivers prescribed a consistent policy of keeping them disarmed, which was possibly modified in the Gupta period.

A powerful factor which helped to preserve the essentials of the varṇa system and thus to keep the śūdras down was the indoctrination of the masses in the theory of the karma and of the bad consequences following the non-performance of the varṇa or jāti duties ordained by gods. It is argued that since the masses were widely educated and endowed with critical acumen, they could not believe in the natural superiority of the higher varṇas,1 but there is no basis for such a wild claim. On the contrary, the minds of the labouring masses were so strongly enchained by the brāhmaṇical ideology that there was very little scope either for direct coercion against the śūdras or for violent revolts on their part.

But the brāhmaṇical ideologues were not always the slaves of their theories. Considerations of birth did not prevent them from inventing suitable kṣatriya genealogies for aboriginal and foreign chiefs.2 Probably the few adventurous śūdras, who may have risen to influential status from time to time, were neatly fitted into the brāhmaṇical system as kṣatriyas, so that they could defend the dominance of the higher varṇas with the usual enthusiasm of new converts. The traditional account of the brāhmaṇa Kauṭilya’s support to the śūdra-born Candragupta shows that such developments were not impossible.

The reforming religious movements of Buddhism, Jainism, Śaivism and Vaiṣṇavism did not question the fundamental theory of karma, which provided the doctrinal basis of the brāhmaṇical social order. By promising religious equality in place of other forms of equality they helped to reconcile the lower orders to the existing social system. The spirit of protest against social inequities, which characterised these movements in their earlier stages, withered away in course of time, and they identified themselves with the essentials of the varṇa organisation. Thus the complex of all these factors helped to maintain the comparative calmness of the śūdras and to secure their permanent servitude.

2. This process has continued even to recent times. Census of India, 1891, 13 (Madras), p. 213. Quoted in ZDMG, 1, 510.
with the exception of the case of a molecule. And the complex of the substances and to account for the existing equilibria and the whole system and to account for the phenomena existing.

the substances and to account for the existing equilibria and the whole system and to account for the phenomena existing.
BIBLIOGRAPHY

Sources consulted for more than one chapter.

A. ORIGINAL

Epics

Mahābhārata,

(Critical Edn.) Ed. Various hands, Poona, 1927- (in progress). Unless otherwise stated the references are to this edition.

Rāmāyana of Vālmiki,

Purāṇas

Agni Purāṇa,

Bhāgavata Purāṇa,
Bombay, 1905.

Bhavisya Purāṇa,
Bombay, 1910.

Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa,
Bombay, 1913.

Mārkandeya Purāṇa.

Matsya Purāṇa,
Ed. Jivananda Vidyasagar, Calcutta, 1876.

Inscriptions

D. C. Sircar, Select Inscriptions Bearing on Indian History and Civilization, i, Calcutta, 1942.

B. DICTIONARIES AND REFERENCE BOOKS

J. Muir, Original Sanskrit Texts, i, London 1872.
H. H. Wilson, A Glossary of Judicial and Revenue Terms etc., London 1885.

C. HISTORIES OF INDIAN LITERATURE

Albrecht Weber, The History of Indian Literature, Tr. from 2nd German Edn. by J. Mann and T. Zachariac, London, 1876.
M. Winternitz, A History of Indian Literature, Vol. i, Tr. from German by Mrs. Ketkar, Calcutta.
BIBLIOGRAPHY

CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTION

V. S. Bhattacharya, "The Status of the Šûdras in Ancient India", Vishwa Bharati Quarterly, 1924.
J. C. Ghosh, Brahmanism and the Sudra, Calcutta, 1902.
William Jones, Institutes of Hindu Law or the Ordinances of Menu (Tr.), Calcutta, 1794.

CHAPTER II

ORIGIN

ORIGINAL SOURCES

Athrava Veda (of the Paippalādas), Ed. Raghu Vira, Lahore, 1936-41.
With the comm. of Sāyana, Ed. S. Pāṇḍurang, Pāṇḍit, 4
Banaras, 1916-17. Unless otherwise stated the references are to the Śaunaka recension.

_Bhāvishyottakahā_ by Dhanapāla, Ed. C. D. Dalal and P. D. Gune, _GOS_, xx, Baroda, 1923.

J. W. McCrindle, _Ancient India as Described by Ptolemy_, Calcutta, 1885.

" " _The Invasion of India by Alexander the Great, Westminster, 1893._

Ṛg _Veda Samhitā_ with the comm. of Sāyana, 5 vols., Vaidika Samshodhan Man dal, Poona, 1933-51. Tr. of the first six Maṇḍalas, H. H. Wilson, London, 1850-7. K. F. Geldner, Cambridge, Massachusetts, 1951.

_Vedaśāstra_ of Bādarāyaṇa with the comm. of Śaṅkarācārya, 2 vols., _BI_, Calcutta, 1863. Tr. George Thibaut, _SBE, xxxiv_, Oxford, 1890.

SECONDARY WORKS

Jarl Charpentier, _Brahman_, Uppsala, 1932.

" " _New Light on the Most Ancient East, London, 1954._

" " "La Préhistoire Indo-Iranienne des

R. Ghirshman, _Iran_ (Pelican Series), 1954.

N. N. Ghosh, "The Origin and Development of Caste System in India", _IC_, xii, 177-191.

Hermann Grassmann, _Wörterbuch zum Rig-veda_, Leipzig, 1873.

Robert Heine-Geldern, "Archeological Traces of the Vedic Aryans", _Journal of the Indian Society of Oriental Art_ (Calcutta), iv, 87-115.

G. J. Held, _The Mahābhārata: An Ethnological Study_, London and Amsterdam, 1935.

P. V. Kane, "The Word Vrata in the _Rgveda_", _JBBRAS_, NS
xxix, 1-28.
J. D. Kosambi, "Early Brahmins and Brahminism", JBBRAS, NS, xxiii 39-46.

"Early Stages of the Caste System in Northern India", JBBRAS, NS, xii, 32-48.

B. B. Lal, "Protohistoric Investigation" AI, No. 9.

R. Roth, "Brahma und die Brahmanen", ZDMG, i, 66-86.

CHAPTER III

AMBIGUOUS POSITION (c. 1000—c. 600 B.C.)

ORIGINAL SOURCES

Bṛhadāranyaka Upaniṣad with the comm. of Śaṅkarācārya, Tr. Swami Madhavananda, Almora, 1950.

1. Books assigned to a period do not necessarily belong to it or deal only with it.
Chāndogya Upaniṣad, Text, Tr. and Annotation, Emile Senart, Paris, 1930.
Das Jaininiya Brāhmaṇa in Auswahl, Ed. and Tr. into German, W. Caland, Amsterdam, 1919.
Jaininiya Śrāutasūtra, Ed. and Tr. into German, D. Gaastra, Leiden, 1906.
Jaininiya or Talavakāra Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa, Ed. Rama Deva, Lahore, 1921.
Kātyāyana Śrāutasūtra with the comm. of Karkācārya, Ed. Madanmohan Pathak, Banaras, 1904.
Śaṅkhāyana Brāhmaṇa, ASS, No. 35, 1911.
Śūtapaṭha Brāhmaṇa (Mādhyaandina recension), Ed. V. Sharma Gaugā and C. D. Sharma, Kasi, Sāṃvat, 1994-7.
Satyāsādha (Hiranyakeśin) Śrāutasūtra with the comm. of Mahādeva, ASS, 1907.
Taittiriya Brāhmaṇa of the Black Tajur Veda, with the comm. of Sāyaṇa, Ed. R. L. Mitra, 3 vols., Calcutta, 1859-70.
BIBLIOGRAPHY

The Thirteen Principal Upaniṣads, Tr. R. E. Hume, Oxford, 1931.

Vājasaneyi Sāmkhitā (Mādhyandina recension) with the comps. of Uvāta and Mahīdhara, Ed. Wāsudev Laxman Shāstri Paṇḍikar, Bombay, 1912.

Vārāha Śrāvasūtra, Ed. W. Caland and Raghu Vira, Lahore, 1933.

SECONDARY WORKS

M. Bloomfield, The Atharvaveda, Strassburg, 1899.

H. M. Chadwick, The Heroic Age, Cambridge, 1912.

J. Muir, "Relation of the Priests to the other classes of Indian Society in the Vedic Age" JRAS, NS, ii (1866), 257-302.

"Der erste Adhyāya des ersten Buches des Satapatha-Brāhmaṇa", ZDMG, iv, 289-304.

CHAPTER IV

IMPOSITION OF DISABILITIES (c. 600—c. 300 B.C.)

ORIGINAL SOURCES

A. Brāhmaṇical

Āpastamba Dharmasūtra, Ed. G. Bühler, Bombay, 1932.
Śūdras

"Āśvalāyana Gṛhyaśūtra with the comm. of Haradattācārya, Ed. T. Gaṅapatī Śāstri, Trivandrum, 1923."

Baudhāyana Gṛhyaśūtra, Ed. R. Shama Sastry, Mysore, 1927.

Pāṇini-Sūtra-Pāṭha and Pariśiṣṭas with Word Index, compiled by S. Pathak and S. Chitrao, Poona, 1935.

Pāraskara Gṛhyaśūtra, Bombay, 1917.

Śāṅkhaśāyana Gṛhyaśūtra, Ed. H. Oldenberg in Indische Studien xv, pp. 13f.

Trs. of the Dharmasūtras of Āpastamba, Gautama, Vasiṣṭha and Baudhāyana by G. Bühler in SBE, ii and xiv, Oxford 1879-82.

B. Buddhist

C. Jain.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Ovāya (or Aupaṭṭikasūtra) with Abhayadeva’s comm., Ed. Muni Hemaśāgara, Āgamodaya Samiti publication.
Uvāsagadāsānā, Ed. A. F. Rudolf Hoernle, Calcutta, 1890.
SECONDARY WORKS
V. S. Agrawala, India as known to Pāṇini, Lucknow, 1953.
Ivor Fis’er, “The Problem of the Seṭṭhi in Buddhist Jātakas”, AO, xxii, 238-265.
F. Max Müller, The Hibbert Lectures 1878, London, 1880
B. C. Iaw, India as Described in Early Texts of Buddhism and Jainism, London, 1941.
R. N. Mehta, Pre-Buddhist India, Bombay, 1939.
CHAPTER V

THE MAURYAN STATE CONTROL
(c. 300—c. 200 B.C.)

ORIGINAL SOURCES

Texts

Commentaries

JayaMAgala (runs up to the end of the BK. I of the AS with gaps), Ed. G. Harihara Sastry, JOR, xx-xxiii.

Pratipada - pañcikā by Bhaṭṭasvāmin (on BK. II from sec. 8), Ed. K. P. Jayaswal and A. Banerji-Sastry, JBORS, xi-xii.

Nīpa Candrika by Mādhava Yajva (on BKs. VII-XII), Ed. Udayavira Śāstri, Lahore, 1924.

Inscriptions

Inscriptions of Aioka, Ed. E. Hultsch, Cll, i, Oxford, 1925.

Foreign Accounts:

J. W. McCrindle, Ancient India as Described in Classical Literature, Westminster, 1901.

Ancient India as Described by Megasthenes and Arrian, Calcutta, 1926.

Ancient India as Described by Ktesias the Knidian, London, 1882.

SECONDARY WORKS

N. C. Bandyopadhyaya, Kautilya or an Exposition of his Social and Political Theory, Calcutta, 1927.

Bernhard Breloer, Kautiliya-Studien, 3 vols., Bonn, 1927-34.

CHAPTER VI

WEAKENING OF THE OLD ORDER
(c. 200 B.C.—c. A. D. 200)

ORIGINAL SOURCES

Texts
Pāñcavānī Sūtra (with the comm. of Malayagiri), 2 vols., Banaras, 1884.
Saddharmapuṇḍarikasūtra with N. D. Mironov's readings from
H. Kern, SBE, xxi, Oxford, 1884.

Inscriptions
Lüder's List of Inscriptions, EI, x.

SECONDARY WORKS

K. V. Ringaswami Aiyanger, Aspects of the Social and Political Rājadharm, Madras, 1941.
E. W. Hopkins, The Mutual Relations of the Four Castes according to the Mānavadharmāśtram, Leipzig, 1881.
G. F. Ilyin, "Sūdras und Sklaven in den altindischen Gesetzbüch-ern", Scewjetwissenschaf (Berlin), 1952, No. 2., pp. 94-107.
K. P. Jayaswal, History of India 150 A.D.to 350 A.D., Lahore 1933"
B. N. Puri, "Some Aspects of Economic Life in the Kuśāṇa Period", _IC_, xii.
A. D. Pusalker, _Bhāṣa-A Study_, Lahore, 1940.
D. A. Suleykin, "Fundamental Problems of the Periodisation of Ancient India", _Medieval India Quarterly_ (Aligarh), i, No. 53-4, 46-58.
E. H. Warmington, _The Commerce between the Roman Empire and India_, Cambridge, 1928.

CHAPTER VII

THE PHASE OF TRANSFORMATIONS
(c. A.D. 200—c. 500)

ORIGINAL SOURCES

Texts
_Amarakośa_ or _Nāmaśūrānuśāna_ of Amara with the comm. of Bhaṭṭakṣirasvāmin, Ed. A. D. Sharma and N. G. Sardesai, Poona, 1941.
_Bḥaspati Smṛti_ (this text has been followed), Ed. K. V. Rangaswami Aiyangar, _GOS_, lxxxv, Baroda, 1941.
_Bḥat Kalpasūtra_ and _Original Niryukti_ of Sthavira Ārya Bhadrabāhu Svāmin and a Bhāṣya by Śaṃghadāsa Gaṇi Kṣamaśramaṇa with a commentary begun by Malayagiri and completed by Kṣemakīrti, 6 vols., Bhavnagar, 1933-42.
_Bḥat Samhitā_ of Varāhamihira with Hindi Tr., Durga Prasad, Lucknow, 1884.
_Bṛhat Samhitā_ by Varāhamihira with the comm. of Bhaṭṭotpala, 2 parts, Ed. Sudhākara Dvivedi, Banaras, 1895-7.
_Jamābūdīputraṇaṇaptih_ with the comm. of Śānticandra, Bombay, 1920.
_Jayākhyā Samhitā_, Ed. Embar Krishnacharya, _GOS_, liv, Baroda, 1931.
BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kāmandakiya Nitisāra, Ed. R. L. Mitra, Bi, Calcutta, 1884. Tr.
M. N. Dutt, Calcutta, 1896.

Kāmasūtra of Vātsyāyana with the comm. Jayamaṅgalā of Kāṭyāyana Smṛti on Vyavahāra, Law and Procedure, Ed. with reconstituted text, tr., notes and introduction by P. V. Kane, Bombay, 1933.

Mālavikāgnimitra of Kālidāsa, Ed. P. S. Sane, G. H. Godbole and Mṛchakārīka of Śūdraka, Ed. and Tr. R. D. Karmarkar, Poona, Nārada Smṛti with extracts from the comm. of Asahāya, Ed. J.

Narasiṃha Purāṇa, 2nd Edn., Bombay, 1911.

Nāṭyaśāstra of Bharata Muni with the comm. of Abhinavagupta,
Ed. Manavalli Ramakrishna Kavi, 3 vols., GOS, Baroda, Pañcatantra in its oldest recension, the Kashmirian, entitled

The text in its oldest form, Ed. F. Edgerton, Poona, 1930
(References are made to this text).

Pindaniryuktī of Bhadrabāhu Svāmī, Bombay, 1918.

Raghuvaṃśa of Kālidāsa, Ed. Raghu Natha Nandargikar, Bombay, 1891.

Theragāthā Ṭṭṭhakathā (Paramattha Diṭṭanī), the comm. of Dham-Ṭajñavalkya Smṛti with Viramitrodaya and Mitākṣarā, Chau-

Vajrasūci of Āsvaghosa, Ed. and Tr. Sujitkumar Mukhopadhyaya, Santiniketan, 1950.

Vimāna-Vatthu Ṭṭṭhakathā, (pt. IV of the Paramattha Diṭṭanī

Visṇudharmottara Mahāpurāṇa, Bombay, Vikrama Saṃvat, 1969.

Viṣṇu Smṛti or Vaiṣṇava Dharmaśāstra (with extracts from the comm.

Chinese Sources
Samuel Beal, Travels of Fah-hian and Sung-Yun (Tr.), London, 1869.
H. A. Giles, The Travels of Fa-hsien or Record of Buddhistic Kingdoms (Tr.), Cambridge, 1923.
James Legge, A Record of Buddhistic Kingdoms (being an account of the Chinese monk Fa-hien’s Travels) Tr., Oxford, 1886.

Muslim Sources
Edward C. Sachau, Alberuni’s India (Tr. & Ed.), London, 1888.

Inscriptions

SECONDARY WORKS
H. C. Chakladar, Social Life in Ancient India, Calcutta, 1929.

“ ”, The Great Ethic of India, New Haven, 1901.
B. C. Law, Heaven and Hell in Buddhist Perspective, Calcutta and Simla, 1925.
D. GENERAL WORKS

E. SECONDARY WORKS MAINLY ON SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC LIFE IN ANCIENT INDIA

B. R. Ambedkar, Who were the Shudras? (How they came to be the Fourth Varna in the Indo-Aryan Society), Bombay, 1946.

""The Untouchables (Who were they? And why they became Untouchables?), New Delhi, 1948.

S. A. Dange, India from Primitive Communism to Slavery, Bombay 1949.
R. C. Majumdar, Corporate Life in Ancient India, Calcuta, 1922.

E. P. O. Murray, “’The Ancient Workers of Western Dhalbhum’”, JRSA, III Series, vi, 79-104.

INDEX
(Sanskrit, Pāli and Prākrit Words)

abhujana, 153 adaksa, 165 adevitha siva, 12 adhamas, 246 adhocosa, 66
adhoaryu, 52,56
adhava, 66 agahi, 66
agnisayana, 76
agnihotra, 77-8, 82, 211, 276 ahataka, 97 ahitakas, 164-6
Aindra, 272
Aindragni, 268
Ajaya, 268
akrti, 10
anala, 158, 172 anamya, 113
anagadana-rrata, 272 anasa, 13 antaradita, 50 antaralas, 170 antas, 65
anis, 130, 207, 246
anijah, 191, 208, 262 anijasayins, 130, 161, 171, 205-6, 208, 262, 264 antyasayinis, 130 anula, 239
amushubh, 55, 64, 74 anyasayapasya, 59 anyayatra, 11,23
apad-dharma, 176 apasthita, 184 apakrta, 191-2 apapada, 113, 208 aparata, 11,23 aphantam, 16 aphnatah, 16 aradhasam, 16
ardhikah, 217, 232 ardhasatika, 217 aressa, 113
astra (marriage), 202 artha, 144
artha, 182
arya, 73 aryati, 261 aryad, 107
arya-artha, 104 aryasapra, 163, 185
aryasapta, 165
arsamkrti, 276
Asamurti, 210
asiras, 246 asimvisah, 12 ashradhah, 10
asrama, 66, 122, 269-72 as tadasa sreni, 180 asavadham karma, 178 asura, 36 asura (marriage), 168, 202 ava, 44, 46, 54-5, 61, 187 attano puras, 98 atakra, 269
avara, 157, 167, 198, 219
avarampraya, 148
avara, 11
avasa, 137
ayajhan, 10 ayajja, 172
ayajja (marriage), 172

B
bahu-palaub, 43
bahu, 130, 205, 206 bali, 26
balish, 47 bejana, 17
bhadrakah prajah, 253 bhagdahagha, 26, 74
bhagilla-bhagi, 108 bhagadgha, 104
bhaga (bird), 110 bhagemay, 160 bhaktas (bhatakas) 98, 101, 178 bhati, 98 bhoj, 148
bhrtaka, 98, 184, 186, 224 bhrtakavitahi, 185-6 bhi, 98
bhujitva, 224, 227 bhujissa, 166
bhurisnavarjyam, 46 bhuriisudvarjyam, 46
brahma (marriage), 202 brahmacarin, 66-7 brahmacarya atra, 66
brahmavadin, 63, 211
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>G</th>
<th>SūDRAS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>cakrawa/k,</td>
<td>258 gāma-bhojakas,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cāmmakāra (carmakāra),</td>
<td>124, 129, 263 gopa,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cāndālikā,</td>
<td>264 gāndharva (marriage),</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cāndrāyana (penance),</td>
<td>201, 211, 250 Gāndharva (heaven),</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>258, 269 ganiča,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cārmaṇḍa,</td>
<td>28 garbhadāsa,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cārmaṇḍesakatinaḥ,</td>
<td>200 gāthās,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>coragāhātaka,</td>
<td>127 gāyatri,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>cūṣākaraṇa,</td>
<td>269, 273 gopa,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>D</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dāipa (marriage),</td>
<td>202 goroṣakas,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dāśśīnā,</td>
<td>17 gota,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dāna,</td>
<td>207 govikārana,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>danda,</td>
<td>176, 253, 273 grāma-bhṛtaka,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>danda-samata,</td>
<td>188 grāma,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>darbha,</td>
<td>221 grāma-sūtra,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>daridraśiṣṭiḥ,</td>
<td>186 grāma-śilṣins,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>daripūraṃmāsa,</td>
<td>57 grāma-takṣa,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dāśi,</td>
<td>21 grāma-yuddha,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dāśa-bhoga,</td>
<td>227 grāma-yuddha-sūtra,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dāśa-dharma,</td>
<td>137 grāmyakāla,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dāśa-hatya,</td>
<td>9, 23 grāmyakāla,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dāśa-kammakara,</td>
<td>98 gṛha-dāsa,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dāśa-kammakararaṭa-śrisa,</td>
<td>95 HAVITI,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dāśa-paribhoga,</td>
<td>25 HAVIṣKYṬ,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dāśa-pravarga,</td>
<td>15 HIŅIṢJĀTI,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dāśaśaśa,</td>
<td>23 HIŅUKARMAJĀTIS,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dāśa-viśās,</td>
<td>23 HINASĪṢPĀNI,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dāśi, 22, 32, 45, 63, 138, 196, 203, 209</td>
<td>124 Ilassesa,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dāśi-patra,</td>
<td>72 IṣUKESSA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dāśisabham,</td>
<td>229 JAGATI,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dāṣya-bhūtaha,</td>
<td>63 JANA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dāṣya-patraḥ,</td>
<td>23 JANAŚČA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dāṣya-patraḥ,</td>
<td>23 JANAŚČA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dāṣya-patraḥ,</td>
<td>63 JANAPĀDA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dēva-viṣṇuṣṭa,</td>
<td>10 JANAPĀDAŚČEŚA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dhanināḥ,</td>
<td>75 JANAŚČAṆAṬIṢA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dhanukāra,</td>
<td>188 JANAVĀHANA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dharma-pravaktā,</td>
<td>33 JAYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>digeśiyāya,</td>
<td>262 JAYA-MITRA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dīvanākārītī,</td>
<td>98 JĀTIS,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>divasahayaga,</td>
<td>38 JATABHAYAGA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dūra,</td>
<td>231 JETAYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dūraṇāpa,</td>
<td>38 KABĀLLABHAYAGA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dūra,</td>
<td>150 KABĀLLABHAYAGA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>durgamīśa,</td>
<td>147 KAVARTAS,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>doṇḍa,</td>
<td>102, 276, 282 KALPA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>doṇḍa,</td>
<td>190-91, 195 KALYANĪṬAṬ,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>E</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>edhamandovṛî,</td>
<td>16 KAMMAKĀRI,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ehi,</td>
<td>66 KĀMPAṬHĀṆṬA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ekāha,</td>
<td>46 KĀNTASC,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ekajāti,</td>
<td>209 KARSA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>F</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>gāma-bhojakas,</td>
<td>92 KARMA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>gopa,</td>
<td>10 KARMA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>gāndharva (marriage),</td>
<td>168, 69, 202 KĀNTASC,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>G</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>gāndharva (heaven),</td>
<td>272 KĀNTASC,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ganiča,</td>
<td>63 KĀNTASC,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>garbhadāsa,</td>
<td>47 KĀNTASC,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>gāthās,</td>
<td>259 KĀNTASC,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>gāyatri,</td>
<td>55 KĀNTASC,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>gopa,</td>
<td>151 KĀNTASC,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>gorukṣakas,</td>
<td>140, 255 KĀNTASC,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>gotra,</td>
<td>76 KĀNTASC,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>govikārana,</td>
<td>148, 155 KĀNTASC,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>grāma-bhṛtaka,</td>
<td>90 KĀNTASC,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>grāma,</td>
<td>90 KĀNTASC,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>grāma-śilṣins,</td>
<td>90 KĀNTASC,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>grāma-takṣa,</td>
<td>90 KĀNTASC,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>grāmyakāla,</td>
<td>150 KĀNTASC,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>H</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>haviṣ,</td>
<td>72 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>haviṣkyṭ,</td>
<td>66 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>hiṇiṣjāti,</td>
<td>50, 125 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>hiṇakarmajātim,</td>
<td>173 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>hiṇasiṣpāni,</td>
<td>124 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>iṣukāra,</td>
<td>75 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>itubhāsa,</td>
<td>68 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>J</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>jagati,</td>
<td>55 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>jana,</td>
<td>18 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>janaśČa,</td>
<td>262 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>janaśČa,</td>
<td>262 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>janaśČa,</td>
<td>148, 168 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>janaśČa,</td>
<td>147, 149, 166 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>JantaśČ Chaṭṭa,</td>
<td>158 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>janaśČa,</td>
<td>271 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>janaśČa,</td>
<td>56 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>janaśČa,</td>
<td>56 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>janaśČa,</td>
<td>125, 284 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>jātis,</td>
<td>98 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>jītaḥ,</td>
<td>98 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>jītaḥ,</td>
<td>89 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>K</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kabālābhayaga,</td>
<td>98 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kavartas,</td>
<td>244 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kalpa,</td>
<td>65-6 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kalpāṇiṇāk,</td>
<td>138 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kammakāri,</td>
<td>59 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kāmottāḥpattāḥ,</td>
<td>64 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kāpāya,</td>
<td>93, 231 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>karṣa,</td>
<td>297 KĀSYA,</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
INDEX

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Term</th>
<th>Page(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>karma (doctrine)</td>
<td>284</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>karmakārī,</td>
<td>44</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>karmāra,</td>
<td>27-8, 49, 51, 75-6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>karpavadekhana</td>
<td>269</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kasyaka,</td>
<td>147, 151, 157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kāśāpada</td>
<td>185</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kāśāvāsana,</td>
<td>151, 233</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kāśāvāsana,</td>
<td>273</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kātakata,</td>
<td>90</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kātijiva,</td>
<td>101, 113</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kināśa,</td>
<td>232, 244</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>koṣa,</td>
<td>207</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kośi,</td>
<td>275</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kročha,</td>
<td>200</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kṣṇa (black)</td>
<td>12-3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kṣṇa (black)</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kṣṇa arbhāh,</td>
<td>185, 298</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kṣṇa,</td>
<td>21</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kṣṇa ṛṣi,</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kṣṇa ṛṣi,</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kṣṇayoniḥ dasīḥ,</td>
<td>162</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kṣapā,</td>
<td>39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kṣudra</td>
<td>186</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kula,</td>
<td>32, 237</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kula,</td>
<td>275</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kulāla</td>
<td>75</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kulika</td>
<td>243</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kulīna</td>
<td>242</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kulīvakāra,</td>
<td>230-31</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kumbhakāra,</td>
<td>260</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kumbhakāra,</td>
<td>124</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>kuṣumbina,</td>
<td>150-51, 233</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>L</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>lokāpata</td>
<td>144</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>luddācarā khuddācarāti</td>
<td>39, 125</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>N</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nadhuparka</td>
<td>69, 121</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nadhuyamā tānasī gati</td>
<td>216</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dhyālā,</td>
<td>101</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dhīrata</td>
<td>73-4, 250</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dhīmāpaśpadā,</td>
<td>144</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dūsi prajā,</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dūra</td>
<td>268, 272</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dūtra</td>
<td>158, 242</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dūtra (heaven)</td>
<td>272</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dūsaka</td>
<td>95-5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dūsaka</td>
<td>126, 134</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dūsaka</td>
<td>13</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dūsaka</td>
<td>13</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dūsaka</td>
<td>75</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dūsaka</td>
<td>125, 208</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dūsaka</td>
<td>63</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dūsaka</td>
<td>273</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>N</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dāgaraka</td>
<td>245</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dāgārika,</td>
<td>124</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>N</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nālakāra</td>
<td>124</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nāmadhyāya</td>
<td>220</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>namāḥ</td>
<td>122</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>namaskāra mantra</td>
<td>268</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nāyaka</td>
<td>125</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nākula</td>
<td>125</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nītrajaśāṭh...āsuriḥ senāḥ</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nīvāpa</td>
<td>133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nīvāpa</td>
<td>60</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nīśādābhipati</td>
<td>71</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nīśāda-sthapati</td>
<td>71</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nīśa,</td>
<td>185, 193</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nīśkāsana</td>
<td>60</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nīsanta</td>
<td>232</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nīyoga</td>
<td>203, 259</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nīyavatimā</td>
<td>271</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

O

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Term</th>
<th>Page(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>odanasava</td>
<td>73</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

P

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Term</th>
<th>Page(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>pāḍāvaṇekkā</td>
<td>91</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pātākā (marriage)</td>
<td>169, 202</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pāṭaka-yajña</td>
<td>122, 211, 268</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pala</td>
<td>179</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pālāgala</td>
<td>49-50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pālāgali</td>
<td>50, 64</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pāpa, 95, 171, 174, 184-5, 190, 193-4</td>
<td>196, 238, 253</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pāncajanāḥ</td>
<td>71-2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pāṇcajārāhiṣṭa,</td>
<td>268</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pāṇigrāhāna</td>
<td>169</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pāpiṣṭhāh</td>
<td>136</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pāriyākha</td>
<td>256</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pāriyākha</td>
<td>164</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pāriyākha</td>
<td>45</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pārṇa-maṇi</td>
<td>27</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pāṭita, 111, 113, 118, 160, 244, 256, 271</td>
<td>105</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pāvara</td>
<td>124, 133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pāvata</td>
<td>96, 101, 108</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>phala</td>
<td>52-3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pīṭara</td>
<td>272</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pīṭa,</td>
<td>262</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pīyāsavaḥ</td>
<td>44</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pravacāka</td>
<td>110</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>prajāpataya,</td>
<td>202, 269, 272</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>prāva,</td>
<td>68</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>prāšyāna</td>
<td>115</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pratamaṇikula</td>
<td>243</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pratiloma (marriage)</td>
<td>229, 248</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pravara</td>
<td>272</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pravarga</td>
<td>78</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pratyāya</td>
<td>108</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pūrva,</td>
<td>98, 101</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pūrvasa</td>
<td>268</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pūrvasamādha</td>
<td>44, 45, 64</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pūṣtam</td>
<td>52-3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Word/Phrase</td>
<td>Page</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-------------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ādhasa</td>
<td>244</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vādha,</td>
<td>249</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vāra,</td>
<td>60</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vārādeya,</td>
<td>112</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vārahātyā,</td>
<td>115</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vāsāvadeva (ceremony),</td>
<td>112, 115</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vājāpeya,</td>
<td>47</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vājā,</td>
<td>55</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vālakhiya,</td>
<td>2258</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vārca,</td>
<td>22</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vārdhaki,</td>
<td>52</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vārga,</td>
<td>37</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vārīkaṇa,</td>
<td>236</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vāra (ārya and dāsa),</td>
<td>18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vārjasamkarā,</td>
<td>118, 228</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vāmautārayā,</td>
<td>150</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vāsārākārā,</td>
<td>56</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vāya,</td>
<td>68</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vāyu,</td>
<td>73</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vēni,</td>
<td>128</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>veṅkāra (velukāra),</td>
<td>128</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vīśhāśīs,</td>
<td>267</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vīśāthā,</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vimāna</td>
<td>273</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Word/Phrase</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>viṣā,</td>
<td>235</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>viṣāra,</td>
<td>250</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>viṣ,</td>
<td>8, 12, 14, 18-9, 22, 27-8, 36, 45, 48, 51-3, 57, 75, 77, 129</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>viṣājī,</td>
<td>71</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>viṣī,</td>
<td>151, 236, 281</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>viṣī bandhakas,</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vṛata (Āryan),</td>
<td>11, 16</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vṛata,</td>
<td>11</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vṛddhi,</td>
<td>272</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vṛṣala,</td>
<td>78, 125, 171-2, 186, 199, 208-9, 215-6, 242, 253</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vṛṣā,</td>
<td>13</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vṛṣā,</td>
<td>13</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vṛṣāsātra,</td>
<td>144</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vṛṣākara,</td>
<td>168</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vṛṣāvahāra-samata,</td>
<td>168</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Word/Phrase</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>yajña,</td>
<td>267</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>yajñādikṣā,</td>
<td>268</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>yathākāmaprayāpyaḥ,</td>
<td>59</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>yathākāmapadidyah,</td>
<td>59-99</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>yugānta,</td>
<td>229</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
GENERAL INDEX

(It also includes Sanskrit and Pāli words, especially names of castes, peoples and books, which are in general use.)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
| A | Abastanoi, a people, 31
|  | Ābhira (people and rulers), 32-4, 204,
|  | 241
|  | Ābhīrī, an Āryan dialect, 34
|  | aborigines, 29, 64, 202
|  | A Code of Gentoos Laws, 1
|  | Adi Parvan (of the Mahābhārata), 202
|  | Africa, 8
|  | Age of Consent Bill (1891), 3
|  | Agni, 13-4, 16, 54, 56, 77
|  | Agni Vaisvānara, 12
|  | āhīnḍaka, 205
|  | Ahura, 35
|  | Ahura Mazda, 67
|  | Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, 31, 42, 45, 47,
|  | 54, 58, 60, 61, 63
|  | Aitareya (author), 63
|  | Ajātaśatru of Magadha, 135, 167
|  | Ajigarta, of the Āṅgiras clan, 65
|  | Bājīvika sect, 138, 171
|  | Alexander, 39, 145
|  | Alina, a people, 15
|  | Amarakoala, 223, 229, 231, 234-5,
|  | 243, 251, 261-4, 283
|  | Amaraszima, 223, 235, 257, 272
|  | Ambaṣṭha king, 31
|  | Ambaṣṭhas, 31, 38, 204, 261
|  | Anāsāmati (the Yamunā river), 12
|  | Ānanda, 179
|  | Andhras (tribe), 65, 205-6
|  | Āgra (king), 45
|  | Āṅgiras (clan), 21, 65
|  | Āṅgulimāla (robber), 133
|  | Aṅguttara Nikāya, 84
|  | Anus, a people, 15
|  | Anulāśana Parvan (of the Mahābhārata),
|  | 222, 224, 229, 247, 252, 256,
|  | 259, 261, 263
|  | Āpastamba, 84, 91, 94, 99, 103, 106-7,
|  | 110, 112-3, 117-8, 120, 126, 131, 184
|  | Āpastamba Dharmasūtra, 68, 94, 114,
|  | 119, 130, 144
|  | Āpastamba Śrautasūtra, 45, 71, 78
|  | Ārahamnīsta, 167
|  | Arbuda, 241
|  | Aristotle, 138
|  | Arrian, 31, 149, 160, 167, 170
|  | Arthaśāstra of Kauṭilya, 6, 143-46,
|  | 151-53, 155, 158-59, 161, 163-68,
|  | 171, 173-74, 180, 185, 217-18,
|  | 225, 230, 233, 237, 240, 281
|  | artisans, in the Rg Vedic period, 27-8
|  | in the later Vedic period, 45, 48-50,
|  | 75, 81
|  | in the pre-Mauryan period, 88-90, 98-9, 101, 106,
|  | 109, 123, 138-9, 141
|  | in the Mauryan period, 146, 149, 151,
|  | 152, 153-4, 155, 157; in the post-Mauryan period, 179-181,
|  | 218; in the Gupta period, 233,
|  | 235-38, 258
|  | Āruni, 45, 66, 69
|  | Ārya-deśa, 34
|  | Āryan commoners, 22
|  | Āryan community, 16, 27-8, 72,
|  | 209, 280
|  | Āryan freeman, 80
|  | Āryan languages, 25-34
|  | Āryans, 9-20, 22-6, 28-9, 31-4, 36-8,
|  | 40, 62, 66, 73, 75, 81-2, 84,
|  | 180, 210, 215, 228, 280
|  | Āryas, 15, 20, 30-2, 53, 62, 73, 77, 97, 102-4,
|  | 112, 116, 123, 131, 157, 165-7, 281
|  | Ārya Samāj, 2
|  | Ārya śūdras, 29
|  | Āryavarta, 84, 206
|  | Asahāya (commentator), 232
|  | Asia, 8
|  | Aṣoka, 138, 145, 166, 168, 172,
|  | 176, 213-4, 281
|  | Aṣokan inscriptions, 160
|  | Assam, 231
|  | Asuras, 10, 12, 68
|  | Aśvaghoṣa, 223
|  | Aśvalayana Gṛhyasūtra
|  | Aśvalayana Śrautasūtra, 42, 46, 70
|  | Aśvamedhika Parvan (of the Mahābhārata), 253
|  | Aśvapati Kākeya, 36
|  | Aśvins, 21, 74-5
|  | Atharvan priest, 16, 20
|  | Atharva Veda, 8, 11, 22, 26-33, 38
|  | 40, 43, 49, 51, 66, 68, 80, 120
|  | Athravans of Iran, 20
|  | Ātreya, 45
|  | Atri, 204
|  | Attica, 93
INDEX

Atuka (a sharecropper?), 232
Avanti, 241
ayogavas, a mixed caste, 54-5, 162, 170, 204-5, 208

B
Babylonia, 24
Bactrian Greeks, 176
Bādarāyana, 38
Bādi, an old teacher, 121
Baima, a people, 44
Bālibītha, 21
Balhikas, 32
Bali, 63
Banaras, 126
Battle of Ten Kings, 15
Baudhāyana, 84, 100, 105, 109-12, 115-6, 118, 120, 122-3, 128-9, 131
Baudhāyana Dharmasūtra, 118, 131
Baudhāyana Srautasūtra, 118
Bengal, 1, 230-31, 243
Bhagavān, 274
Bhāgavata Purāṇa, 222, 265
Bhalānas, a tribe, 15
Bhandarkar, D. R., 209
Bhandarkar, Sir R. G., 3
Bharata, 223
Bhārata, 15-6, 37
Bhārata War, 33
Bhārhot, 85
Bhāsa, 175, 211
Bhaḍṭavāmin, a commentator, 150-51
Bhaviyī Purāṇa, 63, 222, 265
bhikṣus, 275
Bhrigu, 204
Bihār, 25, 84
Bimbisāra, 135
‘blacks’ (aborigines), 21
Bodhisatta, 88, 96, 133, 138
brahma, 52, 57, 58
Brahmā, 25
Brahmadatta, 113
brahmānas, (priests), work on, 4; in the early Vedic period, 16, 20, 28, 30-1, 36, 40; in the later Vedic period, 52, 55, 58-9, 64, 66-7, 73, 75, 77, 80-1; in the pre-Mauryan period, 87, 90-1, 93, 99, 100-2, 104-7, 110-19, 122-134, 136-142; in the Mauryan period, 159, 161-3, 168-9, 172-174; in the post-Mauryan period, 175, 179, 182-4, 186-190, 191-2, 193-5, 198, 199-202, 204, 207-8, 209-10, 212-217, 219; in the Gupta period, 221, 224, 229, 231-3 238, 240-2, 245-54, 256-7, 259-60, 265, 269-276, 278, 282; contrast with the śūdras, 283

Brāhmaṇas, literature, 42-64
Brāhmaṇḍa Purāṇa, 213, 254
Brāhmaṇism, 20, 220
Brahmarshiśeṣa, 175
Brahmāvara, 173
brahmicide, 26
Brhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad, 24, 79, 82
Brhaddevatā, 63
Bṛhaspati, the Smrti of, 12, 221-2, 224, 226-30, 232, 234-5, 273-40, 242, 244-5, 247-9, 257-8, 262, 269, 271, 273
Bṛhat Sāṃhitā, 223, 233
Britain, 1
Buddhism, its attitude towards the lower orders, 133-8
Buddhist lexicon, 39
Buddhist Sāṃgha, 183, 273
Buddhist śūdras, 191
Bührler, G., 115
Burnell, A. C., 110

C
Cachar district, 231 cailāśaka (a kind of goblin), 215
Cambridge History of India, 1, 86 caṇḍālas, in later Vedic society, 64-5, 81-2, 85, 112-3, 119, 121; their position in pre-Mauryan society, 124-5; origin, 126; their absorption in brāhmaṇical society, 127; their material conditions and occupations 127-8; comparison with the niśadas, 130, 132-33; their place in Jain texts, 134; in Kauṭilya, 138, 160, 162, 170-71; in the post-Mauryan period, 201, 204-5, 210; in the Gupta period, 244, 249, 253, 255, 257-60, 261-65, 267, 275
Candra Gupta II, 254
Candragupta Maurya, 143, 158, 284
Cārudatta, 269
Celts, 49
Central India, 231, 233
Chinas (people), 33
Childers, 25
Chāndogya Upaniṣad, 47, 66, 68-9, 82
Christian era, 33, 219, 222, 228
Colebrooke, 1
Copper Hoard people, 19
Council of Twelve, 49
corées, 90, 157, 216
Croats, 167
creducs (mixed caste), 206
Cūnda, the śūdra artisan, 88
Cyavana (ṛṣi), 258

D
Dabhitī, a royal sage, 116
SūDRAS

Dahae, "a great group of Scythian tribes of horsemen and warriors."
17, 23, 4, 34

Dakṣa-Śiva, 275

Dambodbhava (king), 54

Dāmodar pur copper-plate inscriptions, 243

Dāradas (people), 33

Darbha Śātanikī, 55, 74
dārakarmakarakaśāla, a section in the AŠ, 165

Ḍāsas (people), 8-16.Ḍāsas and the Ḍāsyus, 13, 21; Ḍāsas in the Ṛg Veda, 23, 30-2, 34, 40 Ḍāsas (slaves), in the Ṛg Veda, 22-23, 41; in the later Vedic period, 45; in the pre-Mauryan period, 91-3, 95-7, 101, 104, 108, 132, 138-9; in the Mauryan period, 149, 152, 156; distinction between the Ḍāsas and the āhitakas (mortgaged people), 164-65, manumission of, 165-66; in the post-Mauryan period, 181, 197, 205-6; in the Gupta period, 27-35, 253-54

Ḍāsya (people) 8-16, 19-20, 23-4, 31, 65, 205, 251-52

Deccan, 179

Dhanurveda Samhitā, 252, 257

Dharmakirti (Buddhist logician), 223

Dharmamūrti, (king), 272

Dharmāśastras, 2, 5, 6, 28, 32, 56, 83, 86, 99, 109, 113, 230

Dharmāśastras, 5, 55, 60, 61, 71, 82, 83, 4, 86-8, 91, 93, 4, 99, 100, 105, 110, 119, 114, 118, 121, 125, 131, 137, 149, 142-4, 146, 149, 157, 159, 161, 163, 167-70, 174, 209, 219, 221, 255

Dhīvāṇa (mixed caste), 205-6

Dhūrtimitra (prathamakulika), 243

Dīgha Nikāya, 84, 125, 135, 138, 181

Diodorus, 30-1

Dirghatamas, 21, 23, 53

Divodāsa (Aryan chief), 24

Divodāsas (priests), 21

Divyāvadāna, 175

Dombas, 262, 264

Draconian measures (of Manu), 249

Drāhyāyaṇa Śrautasūtra, 43

Dravīdas, 34, 126, 131, 261

Drgadvaitī, 34, 175

Drhyus (people), 15

Dutt, N. K., 4

Eastern Nepāl, 261

East India Company, 1

Egypt, 146, 214, 278

Elphinston M., 2

England, epics, 28, 37, 265, 270

Europe, 86

Europeans, 3, 8, 39

Fa-hsien, 249, 251, 258, 262-3

Fick, R., 4, 128, 134

flōmen (Latin preists), 20

Frisians (people), 49

Gabapati, 4, 88-9, 93, 101, 2, 104-5, 139, 141, 152, 186

Ganapātha, of Pāṇini, 130

Ganapati, 275

Ganapati Śāstri, T., 150-51

Gāndhāras (tribe), 128

Gandharvas, 68

Gangā, 141

Gāṇgāmāla Jātaka, 96

Gāṇgāmāla, the barber, 113

Gangā Valley, 19

Gangetic settlements, 29

Gaṇḍas (tribe), 126

Gautama Buddha, 65, 67, 79, 87-8, 91, 94, 125, 133, 135-49, 144, 206, 273

Gautama Dharmasūtra, see Gautama, the law-book of, 273

Gautama, the law-book of, 83, 88, 94, 97, 99, 105-7, 110-12, 114, 118, 120, 122-3, 126, 130, 131, 140, 144, 184, 186, 190

Gautamiputra Śātakarni, 198, 219

Geiger, W., 67

Geldner, K. F., 13, 15

Ghaggar Valley, 25

Ghoshal, U. N., 5, 53, 58, 149

Ghurye, G. S., 4

Gopātha Brāhmaṇa, 45

Greece, 35, 48, 90, 102-4, 106, 109, 111, 150, 283

Greek City-States, 102

Greek rulers, 187

Greeks, 219

Grypastras, 82, 87, 119, 129, 269, 271

Gujarat, 231

Hammurabi, code of, 110

Haradatta (commentator), 111, 113, 122, 124

Harappā (culture), 9, 18-9
INDEX

Hari (name of craftsmen), 275
Hariensa (a śvapāka), 134
Hauk, M., 59, 60
Hayaśirya Pañcarātra, 223
Hellenistic monarchies, 145
helots, 48
Hesiod, 48
Hillebrandt, A., 3, 17
Himalayas, 84
Hiranyakeshin Gṛhyaśūtra, 94
History of India (by J. Mill), 1
Hittites, 24
Homer, 35
Homeric Greece, 35
Hopkins, E. W., 3, 4, 72, 216, 222, 268, 280
Horse Sacrifice, 44
Huān Tsang, 274
Húiti class (in Iran), 69
Hūnas, 33
Huvikša, 182

I

Ilyin, G. F., 5
India, 1, 5, 19, 24-6, 33, 35, 69, 83-5, 87, 93, 138, 146, 219, 283
Indian society, 4
Indo-Aryan peoples, 24
Indo-Aryan polety, 49
Indo-Aryan, 24, 35, 41, 42
Indo-Aryan stock, 35
Indo-European dāsas (people), 24
Indo-European institutions, 20
Indo-European Kudra tribe, 35
Indo-European origins (of some words) 27
Indo-European peoples, 49
Indo-Europeans, 27, 116
Indore, 287
Indra, 8, 9, 12-4, 17, 19, 20, 22, 74
Indus political system, 19
Iran, 35, 69
Iranians, 67
iron, 85, 234-5, 263
Iswarchandra Viṣṇyasarāg, 2
Isidāśi (daughter of a cart driver), 92
Itarā (mother of Aitarcya), 63
I-tsing, 223

J

Jagannātha Tarkapaṇcānana, 228
Jaiminīya Brāhmaṇa, 42-4, 55
Jaimini, 121
Jaina saddhas, 191
Jākkhas, see Yakṣas
Jānakas, 36
Jānasārūti (king), 38, 47, 68
Jātakas, 84-5, 89, 92, 94-6, 116, 121

126-9, 133, 137-8, 140-2, 180
Jayākṣaya Samhitā, 275
Jayaswal, K. P., 51-2, 56, 105, 183, 191, 266
Jhallas, a despised caste, 206
Jolly, J., 203

K

kaivarta (boatman), 205-6, 273
Kaksāvante, 21
Kaksāvant, 63
Kali, 176, 187, 212-6
Kālidāsa, 222, 263, 269
Kalikās, 126, 261
Kali rulers, 187
Kāmandaka, 223, 242-3
Kāmasūtra, 223, 227, 236, 266
Kāmbojas, 104, 261
Kane, P. V., 16, 83
Kanya (poet), 21
Kapānālāde (rī), 63
Kapilavastu, 141-2
Kāśyapha Samhitā, 78
karanas (mixed caste), 119, 261 kārvāra (despised caste), 205-6 kārukara rakṣam, a section in the Aṣ, 154
Kashmir, 241
Kāśi, 93, 95
Kassites, 24
Kāthaka Samhitā, 72, 78
Kāṭhaka school, 73
A Śānyana Śramāśutra, 43, 45
Kātavyaṇa, the Smṛti of, 221, 225, 226-30, 232, 242, 244-5, 251, 270
Kauṣikā (rī), 276-7
Kauṭṭakā B. Bīṛmaṇa, 42
Kavaṇa Ailūṣa (priest), 63, 72
Keith, A. B., 18, 20, 45, 50, 59, 60, 81
Ketkar, S. V., 4
Kikat, 16
King, 26-7, 30, 47-57, 61, 63-4, 79, 89-90, 96, 99, 103-5, 109, 123, 129, 133-8, 145, 149-50, 153, 157-8
Kūraṭas, 44, 282
Kol (tribe), 232
Kolikas (tribe), 232
Kolisarpas (people), 261
Kośala, 101
Kośivarā, 243
Kṣapa (Asura), 12, 222, 274
kṣatriya (warriors), work on, 4; in the early Vedic period, 18, 28, 30, 37; in the later Vedic period, 39-7, 47, 54-5, 57-8, 64, 68, 70, 77, 81; in the pre-Mauryan period, 87, 91, 99-102, 105-7, 109-119, 122-3, 139-40; in the Mauryan period, 158-63; in the post-Mauryan period, 176, 183, 186-90, 193-5, 198-9, 205-4, 212-216; in the Gupta period, 228, 240-2, 245, 249, 250-4, 256, 259, 261, 270-3, 275
kṣattā (kṣatrī), 50, 170, 204-6, 208, 261 kṣaudra (mixed caste), 261
Kṣudrakas (tribe), 197
Kūdrōi (Gk.), 35
Kūdrōś (Gk.), 35
kukkutaka (kūṭaka, kaukkuṭikā), 119, 170, 204, 206
Kullūka, 177, 178, 183, 191, 196, 201-2, 204, 208, 210-12 kumārāmāyā (district officer), 243
Kurmāli (language), 25
Kūrma Parāṇa, 212-9
Kuru Pañcālas, 42, 171
Kurus, 175
Kuṣāṇas, 176, 187, 214, 219, 220

L
laborers (workers), 5; in the later  Vedic period, 80; in the pre-Mauryan period, 91, 93, 95-9, 101, 114, 116, 139, 141; in the Mauryan period, 147, 149-52, 154-6, 157, 160; in the post-Mauryan period, 183-6; agricultural labourers in the Gupta period, 223-7, 238-40
Lacedemonians, 167
Lāśāvatāra Sūtra, 223 later Vedic literature, 42-43
Lāṭjyāna Śrautasūtra, 43
Lilāvatī (prostitute), 272

M
Madanapāla, 63
Madanikā (slave girl), 260 madgus (mixed caste), 205-6
Mādhava (divinity), 215
Mādhyāndina (recension), 79
Mādhyānta-Vibhāṅga, 144
madranābhās (despised caste), 261
Magadhā, 93, 101, 135
māgadhā (mixed caste), 118, 162, 205, 208, 261
Māgadhī (Prākrit dialect), 267
Mahābhārata, 25, 32, 36, 38, 43, 54, 63, 71, 72, 74-79, 222, 225, 247, 296
Mahābhāṣya (of Patañjali), 175, 208-9
Mahādeva, 275
Mahārāja Viṣṇudāsa, 254
Mahāvātu, 175, 178, 180, 192
Mahāvīra, 86, 133
Mahāvṛṣas (people), 32, 38, 68
Mahīḍhāsa (author), 63
Mahīḍhara (commentator), 53
Mahīṣakas (people), 261
Maitrakas rulers (of Valabhi), 231
Maitreyāyi Samudita, 78
maitreyaka (despised caste), 205-6
Majhiṃa Nikāya, 84, 91, 107
Makkhali Gosāla, 142
Mālava (Mālavyas), 197 mallas, 206
Māli, 84, 241
Māmata, 21
māṃsas (mixed caste), 261
Mandaros, 238
manisakas, 206
Manu, 85, 120, 161, 175-9, 181-212, 214-22, 224, 228, 230, 232, 236, 242, 244-5, 249, 253-4, 257, 263, 265, 268-9, 273, 281
Manu Śrīm, 100, 223
Manu Vaivasvata, 258
Manyu (God of Wrath), 14
mārgava (despised caste), 205-6
Mārkandeya Purāṇa, 222, 233, 262, 263
Maruts, 12, 44, 54, 74
Marutā Ṇivakṣita (ayogavā king), 54-5
Maskar (commentator), 105, 120
Mātanga (the son of a caṇḍāla), 134 mātangas (untouchables), 264
Mathurā, 179, 182
Matsya Purāṇa, 212, 222
Matsyas (people), 175
Māyuras, 281
mauṣṭikās (despised caste), 206
medas (despised caste), 205-6
Medhātithi (commentator), 62, 178
Megaestheses, 143, 145-6, 149, 151, 158, 160-61, 167
Mesopotamian, 18
Middle Kingdom (of Egypt), 249, 258, 278
Mid-India, 251
Milinda-qaṭha, see Questions of Milinda
Mīl, 1
Mitanni (people), 24
Mithilā, 36, 221, 277
mleccha rulers, 213, 215-6, 241, 245, 253, 262
Moriya clan, 158
Mousikano (Mousikanoi), 167
Mrīchakati, 255, 257, 260, 264
INDEX

Muir, J., 2, 4, 16, 17
Mujavants, 32
Mutibas (people), 65
N Nakula, 33
Nandaraja, the commentator, 260
Nandas, 104, 143
Narada, the Smriti of, 221, 224-6, 228-30, 232, 239, 243-5, 248
251, 253, 259, 267
Narasimha Pura$a, 234
Narayana, 274
Nasik Inscription, 181
na$a-nartakas, 206
Natyasastra, 223, 254-5, 265, 267
Nayacakrida, 148
Negroes, 4
Nepal, 221, 225
Nighantu, 45
Nirukta, 60, 71, 144
nisadas (ne$sadas), as people and caste, 44, 68, 71-2, 75-6, 79, 100, 119, 121, 129; their position in society, 129-30; the Nisada gotra, 130, 132-3; their status in Kautilya, 162; comparison with other castes, 170, 204-5, 261
Nitisaba of Kamandaka, 223
northeastern India, 32, 36, 87, 89
Northern India, 15, 87, 127, 145, 219, 221, 230, 234, 262, 274, 282 northwestern India, 32, 35, 38
P Pahlavas, 33
Paijavana, 5, 36-8, 268
Painted Grey Ware, 25
Paippalada (recension of the AV), 32
Pakhas (people), 15
Pali-English Dictionary, 97
Pali texts, 28, 87-8, 91-2, 95-6, 101, 113, 116, 126-7, 130, 149, 166, 233
Pallava land grant, 232, 236
Pa$kala, 55, 74, 175
Pa$kasthana, 257
Pa$kavijn$a Brahmana, 42, 63 pa$godospaka (despised caste), 205-6
Pannini, the grammar of, 39, 53, 83-8, 99, 94, 104, 125, 130, 171, 197, 199, 283
Panis, 17
Pawasa$a (Jain work), 175
Par$a$a, 63, 162, 204 para$aavas (despised caste), 119, 170, 174
Parasurama, 36
Pargiter, F. E., 241
Par$a$a (people), 44
Parthiana, 176, 187, 219
Parasjali, 125, 175, 178, 181, 184, 186, 197-99, 201, 203, 208
Paulkasas (pulakasas, pulakasas, pakkusas, pukkasas), 44, 65, 82, 119, 125, 128-9, 132-3, 162, 170, 204-7, 264, 267
Persia, 24
Pharaohs, 278
Pillar Edict IV, 168
Prajapati, 43, 67, 73, 74, 227
Prakrit, 266-7
Pramati (incarnation), 215
Pratardana Daividasa, 22
Pravahana Jaivali, 36
pre-Aryan peoples, 33-4 pre-Buddhist period, 43
Prasadshana, 258
Pulindas (tribe), 34, 65, 160, 261-2
Punjbras (people), 65
Punjabs, 33, 84
Punjijhas (people), 275
Puranas, 28, 39, 63, 176, 212, 222, 240, 265, 274, 276-7, 279, 281 purohita, 158
Purukutsa (Vedic chief), 13, 22
Purus, 15
Purusa-sukta (of the Rg Veda), 22, 28-9, 61
Pusan (divinity), 44, 53, 74-5
Q
Questions of Milinda (Milindaepatika), 175, 177, 178, 180, 181, 186, 188
R
Raghavananda (commentator), 193
Raikva, 38, 47
Rajagaha, see Rajagriha
Rajagriha, 78, 180, 185
rajakas (washermen), 273 ranyana, 30-1, 44, 47-8, 51-3, 55, 72, 75, 77, 198, 251, 275 see also ksatriya ranyanbandhu, 66
rauka, 168
Ra$kasa, 12, 14, 24
Rama, 269
Rama Marga$vya (priest), 59
Rama$ya, 269
Rammohan Roy, 2
rathakaras, 27, 49, 51, 55, 69, 70, 72, 75, 77, 79, 81, 119; their position in society, 129, 132, 162; comparison with other castes, 170
236, 261
SūDRAS

Ṛg Veda, 8, 10, 13, 15-6, 21-4, 26-31, 35, 40, 45, 68, 71, 75, 80

Ṛg Vedic Arya society, 26
Ṛg Vedic tribes, 71
Ṛga Davids, (Mrs.), 141
Ṛga Davids, T. W., 87, 129
Romakas (people), 85
Roman empire, 214
Roman kings, 20
Rom, 90, 102, 104, 150, 179, 219, 282-3
Roth, R., 8
Ṛudra, 75-6
Ṛudradāman, 218
Ṛudraloka, 275
Ṛudra-Paśupati, 71, 75-6

S

Śabaras (people), 34, 65, 126, 160, 262
Sādānā (dialectic), 25
Saddālaputra, the potter, 88
Saddharmatungarihka, 175, 192 saṅrandhra (mixed caste), 205-6
Śāvisma, 275, 284
Śaṅkara, a character in the Mṛcchakārtā, 266
Śakas, 33, 176, 187, 214, 219, 261
Śākyas, 141
Śamaṇṇaphala Sutta, 135
Śāma Veda, 68
Śāmaśīvadūna Brāhmaṇa, 110
Sambastai (people), 31
Śambūka (śūdra ascetic), 269
Śaṃhitā (Ṛg Vedic collection), 17, 43, 47
Śaṁhitās, the Black School of the Yatujī of, 42, 58, 68, 97
Śamvyutta Nīkāya, 84
Śanakānīkas (people), 254
Śanči, 85
Śāṅkara, 38, 79
śaṅkārikas (despised caste), 206
Śākāhyāna Brāhmaṇa, 42
Śākāhyāna Śrautastra, 43, 45, 74
Śanskrīt, 30, 266-67
Śānti Parvan, 5, 36, 37, 222, 224
226-7, 236, 240, 242, 250-53
256, 265, 268-9, 278
Śarasvati (river), 25, 34, 175, 193
Śavīlaka (brāhmaṇa), 260
Śāstri, V. S., 5
Śatāpatha Brāhmaṇa, 42, 49, 50, 54
57, 58, 62, 66, 68, 78, 79
Śatāvahanas, 85, 182, 198, 219, 246 sati, 2
Sātītāra Prakāśa, 2
Sātāpatha Śrāutastra, 43
saṅgandhas (mixed caste), 261
Śaṅnaka (lawgiver), 204

śaundika (despised caste), 206
Śaurāsenī (dialectic), 267
Śaurāstra, 241
Śavatī (Śrāvastī), 84
Śāyaṇa (commentator), 12, 13, 31-2, 50, 60, 63, 65, 79
Ścythian tribes, 17, 24
Śeṣagā (people), 68
Śeṁat, E., 3, 18, 76
Sethū, 4, 89, 92-3, 102, 104, 126
Śhīma Sāstry, 150, 164, 170
Śhīs (people), 38
Śīhavarmaṇa, 273
Śīnd (Śīndh), 39, 167, 241
Śīva, 272, 275
Śīva (tribe), 15
ślaves, 2, 3, 5, 7, 18, 21; in the Ṛg Vedic Period, 22-4, 29-30, 41 in the later Vedic period, 45-46, 47, 48, 80; in the pre-Mauryan period, 91-3, 94-103, 109, 117, 116, 135-9, 147-2; in the Mauryan period, 149, 151, 153, 156-7, 160, 163-7; in the post-Mauryan period, 183, 195-7; in the Gupta period, 227-230

Socrates, 48
Śodrai (tribe), 30
Soma, 12, 13, 47, 72, 77, 78
South India, 231, 236, 274
Śpata, 49, 280
Śpataṇs, 67
Śravaṇasūtras, 42, 46-8, 69, 79
Śrī Śātakarṇi, 179
Śrābha, 145, 149, 160, 167
Śudā (Ṛg Vedic hero), 14-6, 37
Śūdakṣiṇa Kṣāiṇa, 63
Śūdaraṇa lake, 218
śuddas, 39
Śūdra, 222
Śūdra rulers, 241
śūdras, 1, 8, 20, 25, 28 Śūdra tribe, 29-37; military functions of the Śūdra tribe, 36; ambiguous position of the śūdras, 42-8, 50-66, 68-84, 87-8; their population, 90-4, 96-7, 99 non-serving śūdras, and the distinction between the śūdra son and others, 91-101; their different roles, 101-2; their political-legal status in pre-Mauryan times, 103-9; their social disabilities, 111; their food and occupations, 113-6; marriage rules, 116-9; rite of initiation, 119-20; types of their education, 120-22, offering of funeral oblations, 123; five low occupations, 124; five despised-castes, 125; śūdras and antyonyas, 130; their admission into Buddhist Order, 133-6; Jaina attitude towards, there, 136-38; tendencies to equate vaisyas and sudras, 140-41; protest of the lower orders, 141-42; run-away slaves, 141-42; Kautilya's definition of the sudra varga, 146; sudra cultivators, 147-8; Kautilya's measures regarding them, 150-4, 161-2; main changes in their position in the Mauryan period, 157-60;
INDEX 315

sudras vir-a-vir the slaves, 163-8, their position in post-Mauryan times, 175-8, 181-4, 186-204, 208-20; their position in Gupta times, 221-4, 227-8, 251-93, 255-79 sudra-varga (of the Amarakosa), 224, 235, 243, 251, 257, 261-2
Sukalina (pitara), 211
Sumer, 19
Sunaśeṣa, 65
Sūrāsenas, 38, 175
Sūrya, 53
sūtas, 27, 75, 162, 205, 208, 242, 261
Sutlej, 23
Śāṅkara, 108
śāṅkara (mixed caste), 261 śāṃpacas (despised caste), 207, 256 śāṃpakas, 63, 161-2, 170, 204-5, 261, 263, 274
Śvetaketu, 45, 66
Śwami Dayanand, 2
Śyāparnas (priestly clan), 59

T
Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, 42, 57, 68, 74, 78
Taittirīya Samhitā, 55, 75, 77
Tāntricism, 275
Tarukṣa (Dasa chief), 21, 24
Taxila, 121
T. Gaṇapati Śāstri, 233
The Age of Imperial Unity, 86
Therigāthā, 134
Tilak, B. G., 3
Tosali, 259 traders, 85, 93, 151, 240-1
Trasadasyu, 13, 22
Tretā age, 27
Tukhāras, 33
Turvāsas (tribe), 15

U Udaya (king), 113

udgras, see ugras ugras, 119, 120, 204-5, 261 untouchables, 7, 65; in the pre-Mauryan period, 119, 125-7, 126-7;
in the Mauryan period, 159, 171; in the post-Mauryan period, 204-8; in the Gupta period, 265-7
Upāli (monk), 154
Upāniṣads, 43-4, 47, 82
Upapūrāṇas, 270
Upper Gāndhāra, 25
Uṣij, 21, 63
Uṣinara, 267
Uttarādhyayana (Jain text), 134
Uvāca (commentator), 58

V
vāgārikas (tribal people), 160
vaidehaka (mixed caste), 205, 208, 261-2
vaidya (mixed caste), 261
Vaiśāli, 243, 275
Vaiṣṇavism, 187, 274-5, 277, 284
Vaisākha ceremony, 255, 255
vaiśāya, in the early Vedic period, 27
39, 40; in the later Vedic period,
43, 44, 47, 51-8, 59, 61-2, 64,
66, 68-70, 72-5, 77, 79-80;
in the pre-Mauryan period, 87,
91, 99, 100-104, 106, 109, 113,
115-9, 123, 128, 139-40; in the
Mauryan period, 159, 161-3,
169; in the post-Mauryan period,
176-8, 182-3, 185, 188-91,
193-5, 198-9, 202-4, 211-2,
214, 216; in the Gupta period,
228, 231, 233, 240-42, 245, 248-56, 259, 261, 270-73, 275, 277
vaiṣṇava-sūtra (of the Amarakosa), 232, 262
Vaiṣṇavism, 56, 65, 73, 77
Vajrajñi, 223, 266, 273, 276-7
Valabhi, 231
Vana Parvan, 276
Varāhādāsa (brāhmaṇa), 254
Varāhamihira, 223, 241
Vardhamāna Mahāvīra, 36-7
varṇa (division and system), 27, 29, 73, 87
varṇāśrama ideals, 222
Varuṇa, 14, 16, 31, 65
Vasantaśāstra, 260, 277
Vasiṣṭha, 15, 63, 84, 100, 105-110, 114
117-8, 120, 123, 130, 140-42,
169-70, 195, 210-11, 220, 236,
254, 277
Vasiṣṭha Dharmasastra, 253
Vasiṣṭha Dharmasūtra, 144
Vāsudeva, 274
Vatsa (ṛī), 62
Vātasyāyana, 223, 260
Vīṣṇu Purāṇa, 213, 215, 254, 258-9
Vedānti Sūtra, 38
Vedas, 25, 66, 69, 70, 114, 119, 120, 130, 172, 209-12, 243, 244, 255-6, 6, 268, 274, 276, 279
Vedic Āryans, 35
Vedic gods, 75
Vedic Index, 17, 45, 62, 81, 280
Vedic Indians, 18, 20, 64, 67
Vedic pantheon, 20
Vedic texts, 31, 117, 120
Venās (mixed caste), 192, 170, 204, 206
Venā, the tyrannical king, 129
Vijñānēśvara (commentator), 257
Vinaya Piṭaka, 84, 94, 97, 124, 141, 194
Vīṣṇu (people), 75
Viṣṇudarmottara Purāṇa, 223
Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 72, 187, 216, 220, 222
Viṣṇu, the God, 274-5, 277
Viṣṇu, the Śrīmaṇḍir of, 221-22, 232, 236
238-9, 245-7, 249-50, 260, 267
Viśvedevas (All-Gods  ), 55, 74
Viśvāmitra, 15, 96, 65, 200, 277
Viśvantara Sausāṅdana, 59
Viśvārūpa (commentary or ), 259
Vṛṣṭyas, as unbrāhmaṇised Āryans, 67, 76; as a mixed caste, 162, 261, 267
Vṛṣṇḍha Manu (lawgiver), 24
Vṛśtra (enemy of Indra), 20
Vṛśā, 63, 277
Weber, A., 3, 25, 75
wergeld, 26, 60, 193, 198
Western Asia, 24
Western India, 236, 246, 250, 274
Wheeler, R. E. M., 18
Whitney, W. D., 30, 31
William Jones, Sir
Wilson, H. H., 13-4
Yādava (tribe), 12
Yadus, 15
Yājñavalkya, the Śāmī of, 221, 225, 228, 230, 232, 239-42, 244-5, 247, 249-50, 253, 255-9, 261, 266, 268-71, 273
Yajur Veda, 68
Yajus texts (Black and White), 51-3, 56, 61, 73, 75-77
Yakṣas (people), 264
Yamunā (river), 12
Yaska (commentator), 71-2
Yavanas, 83, 104, 119, 166, 261
Yudhisthira, 33, 45, 53, 79
Tūga Purāṇa, 177, 213
ERRATA

Wherever the word Āp. and the letter .fits occur, they should be read as Āp. and fits respectively.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>For</th>
<th>Read</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>14 fn. 3</td>
<td>trāyā</td>
<td>tāyā</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16 &quot; 2</td>
<td>m ālo</td>
<td>me dālo</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21 &quot; 4</td>
<td>śūdras</td>
<td>Shūdras</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>23 line 2</td>
<td>in</td>
<td>In</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24 fn. 1</td>
<td>Heredotus</td>
<td>Herodotus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>25 line 13</td>
<td>Cn</td>
<td>On</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>27 fn. 5</td>
<td>trāṃ</td>
<td>trāṃ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>30 line 25</td>
<td>Śūdra</td>
<td>Śūdra</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>31 last line</td>
<td>there</td>
<td>three</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>39 fn. 4</td>
<td>akkharam</td>
<td>akkharam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>40 &quot; 5</td>
<td>Śūdras</td>
<td>Śūdras</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>42 line 23</td>
<td>Svātā</td>
<td>Śvātā</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>44 &quot; 20</td>
<td>tāpase</td>
<td>tāpase</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>46 &quot; 12</td>
<td>bhūmiṃpurusa</td>
<td>bhūmiṃpurusa</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>46 fn. 3</td>
<td>Āśva</td>
<td>Āśva</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>50 &quot; 9</td>
<td>kṣāriya</td>
<td>kṣatriya</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>53 line 13</td>
<td>rajasūya</td>
<td>rajasūya</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>55 &quot; 30</td>
<td>though</td>
<td>through</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>60 &quot; 1</td>
<td>thown</td>
<td>thrown</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>64 fn. 1</td>
<td>Sr.</td>
<td>Sr.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>65 line 31</td>
<td>kalyaničāk</td>
<td>kalyaničāk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>65 fn. 2</td>
<td>Ś.</td>
<td>Ś.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>65 &quot; 6</td>
<td>vāryāya</td>
<td>vāryāya</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>66 &quot; 6</td>
<td>Atelkar</td>
<td>Atelkar</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>67 line 10</td>
<td>connot</td>
<td>connot</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>69 fn. 7</td>
<td>Gr.</td>
<td>Gr.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>71 &quot; 8</td>
<td>nisāda</td>
<td>nisāda</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>72 &quot; 5</td>
<td>Sat.</td>
<td>Sat.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>75 line 3</td>
<td>resistence</td>
<td>resistance</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>76 &quot; 15</td>
<td>it</td>
<td>it</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>76 fn. 6</td>
<td>Sat.</td>
<td>Sat.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>76 &quot; 7</td>
<td>Āśva.</td>
<td>Āśva.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>80 line 4</td>
<td>undersirable</td>
<td>undersirable</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>80 last line</td>
<td>vaiśya</td>
<td>vaiśyas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Page</td>
<td>For</td>
<td>Read</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>------</td>
<td>--------------</td>
<td>---------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>chapter heading</td>
<td>IMPOSITION</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>line 9</td>
<td>and</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>28</td>
<td>&quot; 24</td>
<td>Bodhisatta</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>96</td>
<td>&quot; 10</td>
<td>Bodhisatta</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>98</td>
<td>&quot; 20</td>
<td>kābālabhāyaga</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>103</td>
<td>fn. 2</td>
<td>kṣatriya</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>112</td>
<td>&quot; 4</td>
<td>sahāxāsūrātham</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>114</td>
<td>&quot; 5</td>
<td>vyātiścenaṃareṇa</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>148</td>
<td>line 21</td>
<td>jñāpada</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>150</td>
<td>fns.</td>
<td>missing numbers</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>156</td>
<td>line 27</td>
<td>anāvāra</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>161</td>
<td>lines 7, 9, 12</td>
<td>3, 4, 3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>165</td>
<td>line 20</td>
<td>cse</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>172</td>
<td>fn. 7</td>
<td>anyon am</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>175</td>
<td>&quot; 5</td>
<td>Bhāṣa's</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>184</td>
<td>line 21</td>
<td>adhyāṭa</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>197</td>
<td>&quot; 1</td>
<td>adhyādhina</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>205</td>
<td>line 9</td>
<td>excluded</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>207</td>
<td>fn. 5</td>
<td>and</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>207</td>
<td>&quot; 5</td>
<td>Māṇi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>221</td>
<td>line 1</td>
<td>1000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>221</td>
<td>&quot; 2</td>
<td>consistant</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>233</td>
<td>&quot; 1</td>
<td>sūdrajalaprayāḥ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>234</td>
<td>&quot; 1</td>
<td>text-paying</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>236</td>
<td>fn. 7</td>
<td>time</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>238</td>
<td>&quot; 2</td>
<td>Essential</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>239</td>
<td>line 23</td>
<td>sever</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>241</td>
<td>&quot; 2</td>
<td>who,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>266</td>
<td>&quot; 1</td>
<td>shoud</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>279</td>
<td>&quot; 2</td>
<td>varūta</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Correction and Addition:

On P. 207 add after the last line, "with strong disapproval, since Manu does not specifically condemn them."
Sudras => India
Central Archaeological Library,
NEW DELHI 16085

Call No. 177.509 54/Sha

Author— Sharmma, R.S.

Title— Sudras in Ancient India.

“ A book that is shut is but a block”

CENTRAL ARCHAEOLOGICAL LIBRARY
GOVT. OF INDIA
Department of Archaeology
NEW DELHI.

Please help us to keep the book clean and moving.