Evolved the Battle Drill System (in 1917), the "expanding torrent" method of attack, and other modern military developments since. In 1920 wrote the post-war official manual Infantry Training; edited Small Arms Training. An early advocate of air-power, and an exponent of the theory of mechanised warfare from 1910 onward (it was more fully adopted abroad; Gen. Guiderian, the creator of the German armoured forces, who led the Army break-through, described himself as "Liddell Hart's disciple and pupil in tank tactics and strategy"). In 1937 became personal adviser to the new War Minister, Mr. Hore-Belisha, when a belated effort was made to mechanise the Army; drafted a programme; as official progress was slow compared with the imminent risk of war, gave up this advisory work in 1938-39. In 1939-40 made the needs publicly (over sixty of the proposed reforms were achieved, but opposition had delayed the development of the tank and A.A. forces). After the Fall of France; wrote the Daily Telegraph, 1925-35; of The Times, 1935-39, also its adviser on defence as a whole. The page consists of a list of names and a small biographical note about a family member. The text is fragmented and appears to be a mix of names and possible dates or titles. There is no clearly identifiable section of a document that can be read as a coherent whole. The content includes names such as Mackenzie, Amurrius, and Cramarizze, along with references to various places and professions. There are mentions of dates, possibly indicating years of birth or death, and some references to positions such as 'Principal' and 'Chairman'. The text does not appear to be a continuous narrative or a coherent piece of writing, making it difficult to derive a clear context or purpose from the information provided.

Educ.: London University. Devoted his life to the framing of a new organ of biological science—‘Biodynamics’—and to the reversal of Darwinism, considers Selection far-fetched and little use; stresses instead mutual relations; here the master word is Co-operation, or Synbiosis, comprising ecological, psychical and general factors. Synbiosis has marshaled a vast array of facts in support of Evolution by Synbiosis; Synbiosis, on the new interpretation, constitutes, not only the cardinal principle of progressive evolution and of organization, but also that majestic principle of which disease, and especially cancer, are the infraction; it is shown that progress is a necessity not an accident, and that accidents which regard evolution or diseases as chapters of accident are founded upon error; Founder of Holopathy, Publications: Nutrition and Evolution, 1908; Evolution by Co-operation, 1926; Man, The Sin, 1914; A Bio-physico-physi.
