GOVERNMENT OF INDIA

DEPARTMENT OF ARCHAEOLOGY

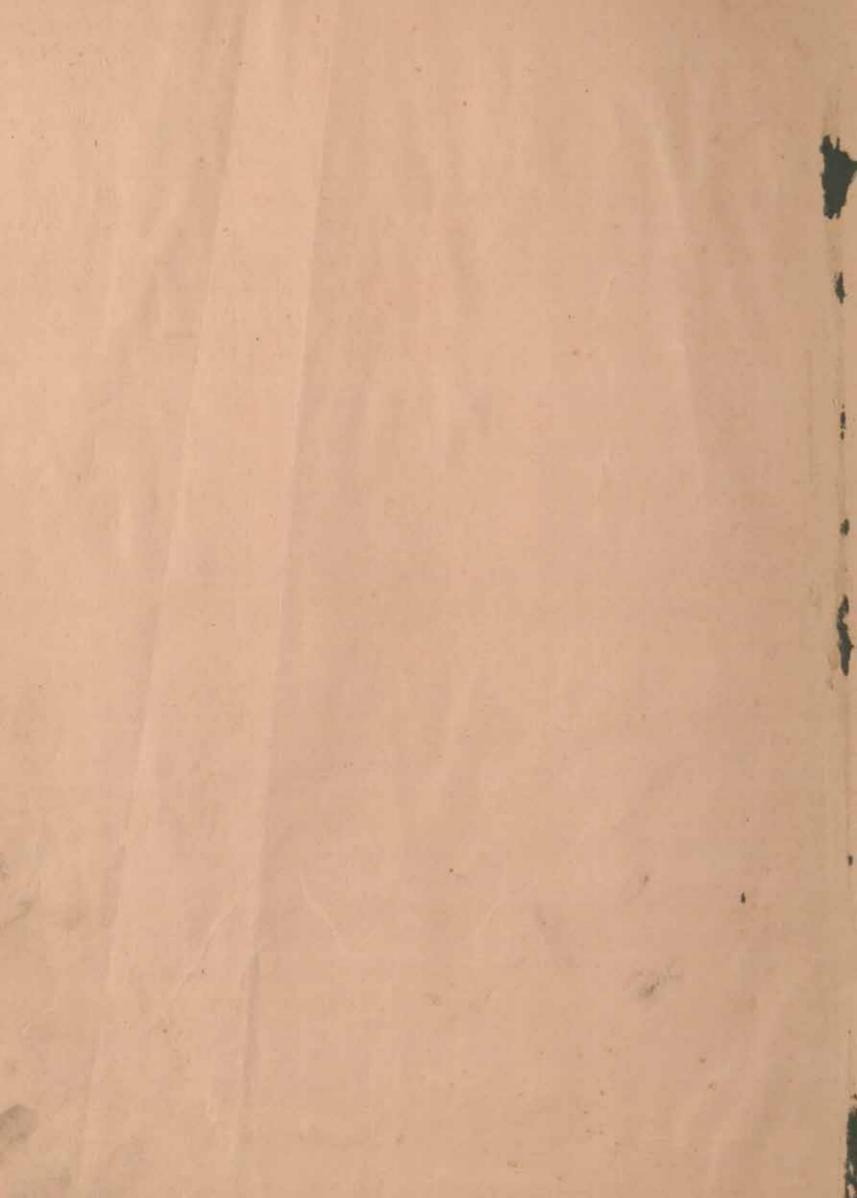

CENTRAL ARCHAEOLOGICAL LIBRARY

Acc No: 21941

CALL NO. R 913. 03 T. N.A/ Sas

D.G.A. 79.

MEMOIRS OF THE ARCHÆOLOGICAL SURVEY OF INDIA

No. 28

BHASA AND THE AUTHORSHIP OF THE THIRTEEN TRIVANDRUM PLAYS

HIRANANDA SASTRI, M.A., M.O.L.

21941

14012

213

R 913.03 I.D.A./Sas

CALCUTTA: GOVERNMENT OF INDIA CENTRAL PUBLICATION BRANCH 1926 Government of India Publications are obtainable from the Government of India Central Publication Branch, S. Hastings Street, Calcutta, and from the following Agents :-

EUROPE.

OFFICE OF THE HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR INDIA 42. GROSVENOR GARDENS, LONDON, S.W. 1.

And at all Booksellers.

INDIA AND CEYLON.

Provincial Book Depots

Madras: - Office of the Superintendent, Government Press, Mount Road, Madras. BOMBAY :- Superintendent, Government Book Depôt, Town Hall, Bombay.

SIND :- Library attached to the Office of the Commissioner in Sind, Karachi.

BENGAL :- Office of the Bengal Secretariat Book Depôt, Writers' Buildings, Room No. 1, Ground Floor, Calcutta. UNITED PROVINCES OF AGRA AND OUDH :- Office of the Superintendent of Government Press, United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, Allahabad.

PUNJAB :- Office of the Superintendent, Government Printing, Punjab, Lahore.

BURMA :- Office of the Superintendent, Government Printing. Burma, Rangoon, CENTRAL PROVINCES AND BERAR :- Office of the Central Provinces Secretariat, Nagpur.

Assam :- Office of the Superintendent, Assam Secretariat Press.

BIHAR AND ORISSA: Office of the Superintendent, Government Printing, Bihar and Orissa, P. O. Gulzarbagh.

COORD:—Office of the Chief Commissioner of Coorg, Bangalore.
NORTH-WEST FRONTER PROVINCE:—Office of the Manager, Government Printing and Stationery, Pashawar.

Thacker, Spink & Co., Calcutta and Simla-

Thacker, Spink & Co., Calcutta and Simia-W. Newman & Co., Ltd., Calcutta.
R. Cambray & Co., Calcutta.
S. K. Lahiri & Co., Calcutta.
The Indian School Supply Depôt, 309, Bow Barar Street Calcutta, and 226, Nawabpur, Daoca Butterworth & Co. (India), Ltd., Calcutta.
Rai M. C. Saroar Bahadur & Sons, 90-2A, Harrison Road, Calcutta.

Boad, Calcutta. The Weldon Library, 17, Fark Street, Calcutta. Standard Literature Company, Limited, Calcutta.

Association Frees, Calcutta.

Chukerverity, Chatterjes & Co., Ltd., 13, College Square, Calcutta.

The Book Company, Calcutta.

James Murray & Co., 12, Government Place, Calcutts.

(For Meteorological Publications only.)

(For Meteorological Publications only.)

Higginbotham & Co., Madras.

V. Kalyanarama Iyer & Co., Madras.

P. R. Rama Iyer & Co., Madras.

Rochouse & Sons, Madras.

G. A. Natesan & Co., Publishers, George Town, Madras.

The Modesa Store Co., Publishers, George Town,

The Modern Stores, Salem, Madras.

Bright & Co., Trivandrum. The Booklover's Resort, Taikad, Trivandrum, South

Indis. V. S. Swaminathan, Bookseller, West Tower Street, Madura.

Thacker & Co., Ltd., Bombay.

D. B. Taraporevals, cons & Co., Bombay.

Sunder Pandurang, Bombay.

Ram Chandra Govind & Sons, Kalbagevi, Bombay N. M. Tripathi & Co., Booksellers, Princess Street, Kalbadevi Road, Bombay.

R. B. Umadikar & Co., The Bharat Book Depôt, Dharwar.

Dharwar.

Proprietor, New Kitabkhana, Poona
Proprietor, New Kitabkhana, Poona
The Manager, Oriental Book Supplying Agency, 15, Shukrawar, Poona City.

R. S. Gondhalekar's Book Depôt, Publisher and Bookseller, Budhwar Chawk, Poona City.

Managing Director, Co-operative Bookstail, Booksellers and Publishers, Poona City.

The Standard Bookstall, Karachi, Quetta, Delhi, Murree and Rawalpindi.

Murree and Rawalpindi.
Ray & Sons. 43 K. & L. Edwardes Road, Rawalpindi and Murree. he Standard Book Depôt, Labore, Lucknow, Nainital, Muscoorie, Dalhousie and Ambala Canton-The Karsandas Narandas & Sons, Surat.

Mangaidas & Sons, Booksellers and Publishers, Bhaga Talso, Smat

Mrs. Radhabhai Atmarain Sagoer Kalbadevi Road, Bombay.

A.H. Wheeler & Co , Allahabad, Calcutta and Bombay.

N B. Mathur, Supdt., Nazir Kanun Hind Press. Allahahad

The North India Christian Tract and Book Society, 18, Clive Boad, Allahabad.

Ram Dayal Agarwala, 184, Katra, Allahabad.

Manager, Newal Kishore Press, Lucknow.

Park, Lucknow.

The Upper India Publishing House, Ltd., 41, Aminabad Park, Lucknow.

Munshi Seeta Ram, Managing Proprietor, Indian Army Book Depót, Juhi, Cawnpore.

Rai Pahib A. Gulab Singh & Sons, Mufid-i-Am Press, Labore and Allabahad.

Rame Krishus & Sons, Probabilists Appellation

Rama Krishns & Sons, Booksellers, Anarkall, Lahore. Puri Brothers, Booksellers and Publishers, Katchers

Road, Lahore. The Tilak School Bookshop, Lahore. The Standard Bookstall, Lahore.

The Standard Bookstall, Lahore.

Manager of the Imperial Book Depôt, 63, Chandney
Chowk Street, Delhi.
Oxford Book and Stationery Company, Delhi.
Supdt., American Baptist Mission Prees, Rangoon.
Proprietor, Rangoon Times Press, Rangoon.
The Modern Publishing Bouse, Ltd., 30, Phayre
Street, Rangoon.

The International Buddhist Book Depôt, Post Box

No. 971, Bangoon.

Turma Book Club, Ltd., Rangoon.

Manager, the "Hitavada," Nagpur.

S. C. Talukdar, Proprietor Students & Co., Couch Behar,

Times of Ceyion Co., Ltd.
The Manager, Ceyion Observer, Colombo.
The Manager, The Indian Book Shop, Benares City.
B. C. Basak, Esq., Proprietor, Albert Library, Dacca-

The Srivilliputtur Co-operative Trading Union, 1.td., Srivilliputtur (Satur S. L. R.).

Banwari Lal, Esq., Pakariya Street, Pilibhit, United Provinces.

Raghunath Prasad & Sons, Patna City. Manager, Educational Book Cepôt, Jubbulpore. The Standard Bookstall, Quetta.

Dandekar Brothers, Indore City.

CONTENTS.

Foreword			*			•				*	1		-	PAGE,
Introductory r	emarks	2 6	4				190							1
Summary of ar			orting	the I	Bhāsa	theory		٠	12		74		•	2
Examination o	fargun	ents in	n favou	r of t	he Bh	iāsa th	eory-	-
The question o												*		4
The argument	of confe	ormity	to the	cano	ns of	Bharat	ta		9	(0)				6
Bhagavadajjuk						(*);		,		-	2	92	721	6, 20
The question o						n .				- 2			1(4)	9
The argument													100	13
Examination of the Ascharyo	of simila	arity o	fstruc	ture :	and co		ison o	f son	e Tri	vandr	um p	lays v	vith	14
The question o						Prakri	t form	18	140	20	4			17
Is the Mrichch									361	198	*		245	21
The identity o								ım pl	аув			:4	100	25
The pratimage										45			*	26
The epithets o									(43)		3			27
The evidence			and th	e Bhi	isa th	eorv			343	2		300	*	27
Conclusion		8				(6)		1	145			100		28
Index .						•	2	12	Tar.	*	-	(6)	+0	31

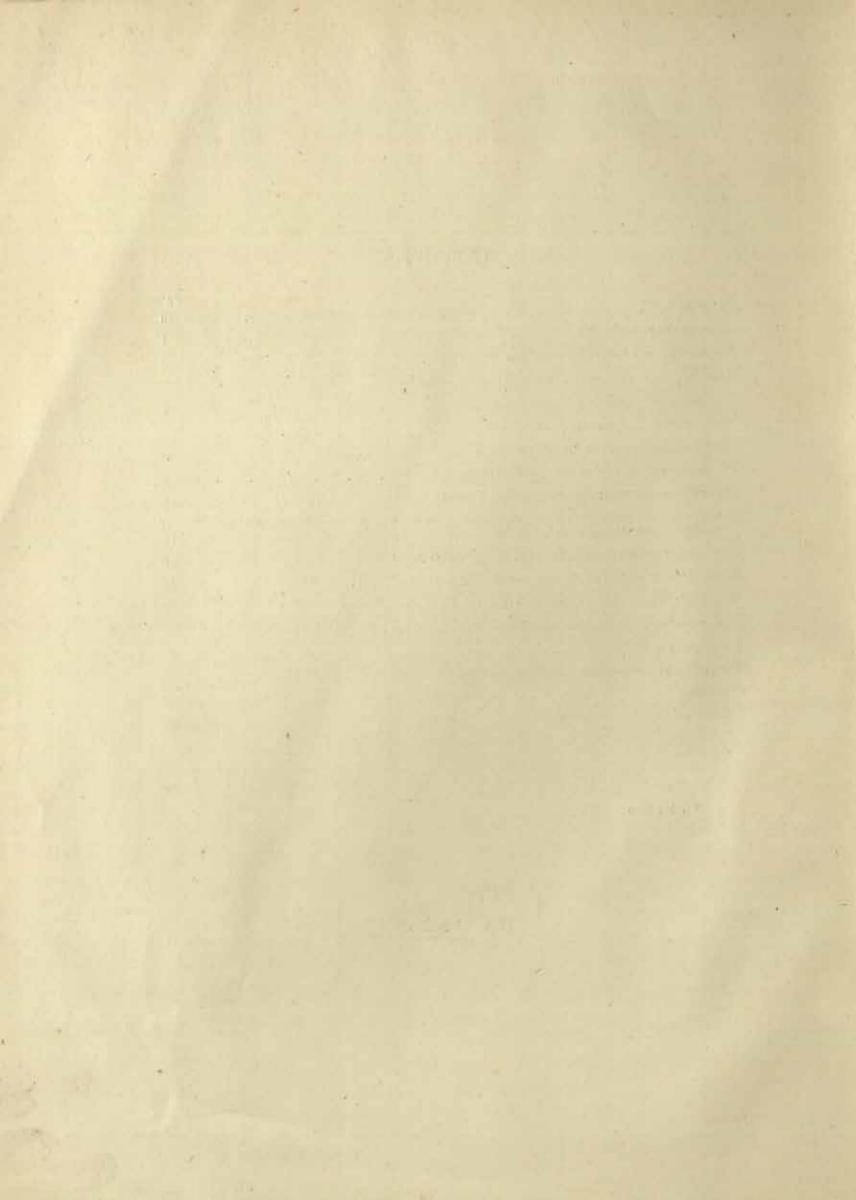

CENTRAL ARCHAEOLOGAL

LIBRARY, NEW DELIGAL

ACC. 21941.

Date 9. 12. 55.

Call No. 93. 03/1. D. A/3a.

FOREWORD.

The perusal of a drama named Aścharyachūdāmaņi by Saktibhadra, tent to me by Mr. K. V. Subrahmanya Aiyar, Assistant Superintendent for Epigraphy, and its similarity with the thirteen Trivandrum plays led me to study the authorship of the latter, which have been hitherto ascribed to Bhāsa, known as one of the oldest and most renowned playwrights of India. The present paper is the result of that study, which demolishes the structure fondly built by the distinguished discoverer and editor of these plays and his followers.

It is a painful task to destroy the cherished theory of another, but it appeared to me that the misleading arguments hitherto advanced in favour of Bhāsa's authorship required exposition, and I regret this could not be done without giving prominence to the destructive method, which is generally unpleasant. I admit the value of the contributions which various scholars have made towards the solution of this very difficult problem, and I do not claim that my thesis finally settles the question. I have merely hinted at the source of these plays with the hope that it will evoke a further analysis of the situation, leading to the discovery of the real author.

I am extremely grateful to Sir John Marshall, Kt., C.I.E., M.A., Litt. D., F.S.A., Director General of Archæology in India, whose keen interest for augmenting the cause of Oriental learning and kind appreciation of my humble labours have induced him to publish this thesis as a memoir in the Archæological series. I am no less indebted to Dr. Sten Konow of Kristiania (OSLO) and to my life-long friend Rai Bahadur Hiralal of the Central Provinces, both of whom read over my paper and offered valuable criticism which enabled me to revise a part of it so as to strengthen the arguments put forward by me.

HIRANANDA SASTRI.

FRENHILL, THE NILGIRIS: The 8th November 1924.

XIIOWHIO!

THE WAR TOWN

BHASA AND THE AUTHORSHIP OF THE THIRTEEN TRIVANDRUM PLAYS.

IN 1912 Mr. Ganapati Sastri of Trivandrum announced the discovery of thirteen plays which were 'neither seen nor heard of before!' He edited them very carefully and published them in the Trivandrum Sanskrit Series, which called forth high commendation from Sanskrit scholars not only in India but in Europe and America as well. Although the Mss. mentioned no author, he ascribed them to Bhasa, the renowned ancient playwright of India and gave his reasons which satisfied many Sanskritists, who accepted his theory, except a few like Dr. Barnett in Europe and Mr. Bhattanātha Svāmī in India. The latter raised a discordant voice, but their opposition was lost in the whirlwind of approbation of a novelty, which at once struck the imagination rather than the discretion of the discoverer's followers. Dr. V. S. Sukthankar has very recently given an exhaustive bibliography in one of his articles entitled "Studies in Bhasa" in the Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society,1 where he has mentioned all that had so far appeared on the subject both in favour of and against the view first propounded by the editor and discoverer of the plays. All this time I was myself a believer in the Bhasa theory, and it was only this year that my faith was rudely shaken by the perusal of a drama named Aścharyachūdāmaņi, written by Saktibhadra (said to have been a contemporary of Sankarāchārya, the great philosopher of India). This drama, which was partly published some years ago at Calicut with a Sanskrit commentary and is fairly well known in the Kerala country, exhibited so marked a resemblance to some of the thirteen plays which have been attributed to Bhasa that I was led to examine the various points raised in support of the Bhasa theory. This investigation has convinced me that the theory is impregnated with a defect which Sanskritists call ativyāpti. It is, therefore, untenable. The question is not only important from a literary point of view, but it has a special bearing on archæological studies as well. I am, therefore, tempted to traverse what may be called a beaten track and place the result of my investigation before scholars with the hope that it will tend to remove the delusion that has been working upon us for the long period of twelve years.

At the outset I propose to give a summary of what has been adduced in favour of the Bhasa theory as the purva-paksha and thereafter to examine it in the light of my study of the whole problem. Mr. Ganapati Sāstrī's arguments form the basis and the mainstay of this view, the language question and sundry other points being adduced as additional supports. His chief reasons are the following:-

I. All the 13 plays show a close resemblance to one another in the language employed and the method of expressing the ideas.

नान्धन्ते ततः प्रविधति सुवधारः (a) They, as a rule, begin with the stage direction and then introduce the mangala-śloka or benedictory stanza.

(b) Instead of the word prastāvanā they use the term sthāpanā.

(c) The nāṭakas, written by Kālidāsa and other dramatists of a later date mention in the prologue, according to the canons of Bharata, the author of the play and some of his works in terms of praise. The Trivandrum plays do not exhibit this feature.

(d) The Bharatavākyam or closing sentence in these plays is written in a way which is different from that of similar stanzas found in other dramas.

These facts would show that the author of the Trivandrum plays was one and the same, and he lived prior to the writers like Kālidāsa, who had to follow certain canonical injunctions with regard to their compositions, which did not come into force during his time.

II. Vāmana, Daņdin, Bhāmaha and other rhetoricians have quoted these plays which, therefore, must have been written prior to the time when these authorities flourished.

III. Tradition ascribes the authorship of a play named Svapnavāsavadattā to Bhasa. One of these plays bears that appellation. Therefore, it must be the work of Bhāsa. Again, as all these plays closely resemble each other, in all probability, they were written by one and the same author, that is to say, because one of them, namely, Svapnavāsavadattā was composed by Bhāsa, the rest must have also been written by him.

IV. These plays are characterised by an intensity of rasa or sentiment, a marvellously exquisite flow of language and an all-round grace of poetical elegance such as is to be met with in the works of ancient rishis like Vālmīki and Vyāsa. Therefore, their author also was a similar rishi and an ancient writer, who lived long before Kāli-dāsa and other playwrights, when Sanskrit was a spoken language.

V. The author of these plays has used archaic forms of words which are not in accordance with the aphorisms of Pāṇini and are, therefore, apaprayogas or solecisms. Notwithstanding this fact, Kälidäsa and other standard writers imitated him, adapting his language and ideas, for they looked upon him as a rishi. Therefore, he preceded not only these writers but even Pāṇini, the great grammarian. Moreover, Kālidāsa speaks of Bhāsa as an ancient writer. Obviously, therefore, the Trivandrum plays, which were composed by Bhāsa, must have been written long before Kālidāsa.

VI. In the Arthaśāstra of Kautilya1 a verse is found which must be a quotation from the Pratijāānāţikā or Pratijāāyaugandharāyana, where it occurs in the fourth Therefore, the author of this play and, consequently, of the whole series must have lived before Kautilya, the great politician of ancient India.

Dr. F. W. Thomas in his note, which appeared in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society some two years ago, has supplemented these arguments to some extent. His arguments may be summed up like this :- (i) Bhasa is an ancient writer. As we learn from authorities like Bāṇa or Rājaśekhara, he composed several plays (nāṭakachakra). One of them was named Svapnavāsavadattā. If the Trivandrum play of this designation is not the work of Bhāsa, the author has "plagiarised" the title. The known facts, however, show that this is an impossibility in as much as Sanskrit nātakas have distinct titles even if they are plagiaristic, e.g., the Mahānāṭaka, the Chārudatta or the Mrichchhakațikā. So in all probability this is the very play which was composed by Bhasa himself. (ii) The Trivandrum Vāsavadattā was in the ninth century a famous play, which was quoted by Vāmana in the Kāvyālankārasūtravritti, A work of this name is mentioned by Abhinavagupta in his Bharatanātyavedavivriti and in the Dhvanyālokalochana. Yet we are never told that there were two famous dramas of this name. This circumstance also would point towards the same conclusion. (iii) The Trivandrum plays were famous in the seventh century A. D., perhaps even before, as Bhāmaha refers to the Pratijnayaugandharayana. Abhinavagupta names the Daridrachārudatta and Vāmana quotes not only the Svapnavāsavadattā, but the Pratijāāyaugandharāyana and the Chārudatta also. If the author of these works is not Bhasa, he is quite unknown. It is hardly likely that he suppressed his own name with a view to father his works upon Bhasa. (iv) All these plays are not only similar in structure, style and matter worthy of a master-mind, like that of Bhāsa, but impress us by their freshness and vigour evincing a direct derivation from the epics'. This fact combined with the circumstance that a good deal of borrowing from these plays is to be seen in the works of Kālidāsa would lead to the inference that their author lived long before the latter.

Besides these arguments, much has been made of the Prākṛit of these dramas to support the Bhāsa theory. Dr. Wilhelm Printz in his pamphlet, named Bhāsa's Prākṛit², has worked out this point in detail. So also Drs. Sukthankar and Banerji as well as other scholars in their respective contributions. Instances like those of the accusative plural masculine in āni found in the edicts of Aśoka and the plays of Aśvaghosha have been elicited from these dramas as unmistakable evidences of their high antiquity. Yet another argument is brought forward in favour of the theory. It is this, The first few acts of the famous play called Mṛichchhakaṭikā and one of the Trivandrum plays, namely Chārudatta, closely resemble each other and are almost identical. Dr. Georg Morgenstierne has very carefully worked out this point and brought out all the identical passages of these two plays in his Über das Verhāltnis zwischen Cārudatta und Mṛichakaṭikā. His comparison leads us to the conclusion, which is rather irresistible, that one must be the copy of the other. Those who are committed to the Bhāsa theory hold that the Mṛichchhakaṭikā is only an amplification or adaptation of the Chārudatta. According to these scholars Kālidāsa only borrowed ideas and Leipzig 1921.

^{1 1922;} pp. 79-83.

^{*} Frankfurt, A. M. 1921.

expressions from some of the Trivandrum plays, but the author of the Mrichchhakatikā incorporated entire acts of one of these dramas into his work and credited them to himself. The Mrichchhakatikā is a fairly old nāṭaka. The Chārudatu which forms the basis of it, must be considerably older and so it must be the work of Bhāsa. Further, some of the scholars holding this view quote from the Harshacharita¹ the following verse in support of the theory—

स्वधारकतारम्भैनीटकैवेंडुमृमिकैः। सपताकैर्यशो लेभे भाभो देवकुलैरिव॥

"Bhāsa gained as much splendour by his plays with introductions spoken by the manager, full of various characters, and furnished with startling episodes, as he would have done by the erection of temples, created by architects, adorned with several stories, and decorated with banners."²

They say that the epithets applied to Bhāsa here and in other Sanskrit works can be very fittingly used for the author of the Trivandrum plays. Jayadeva in the Prasannarāghava speaks of Bhāsa as the "laugh of poetry" (Bhāso hāsah). Vākpati in his Gaudavaho calls him "friend of fire" (Jalana-mitte), on which Dr. A. Berriedale Keith seems to lay great stress in his work "The Sanskrit Drama in its Origin, Development, Theory and Practice", which has very recently come out. In the Chapter which he has devoted to Bhāsa he seems to have merely repeated what has been adduced by other scholars in support of the hypothesis without adding anything new, except a few rather dogmatic assertions or sweeping remarks against the opponents. To him the arguments and evidence brought forward so far to disprove Bhāsa's authorship are all inconclusive and inadequate.

The above arguments have been very recently supplemented by Mr. Gaṇapati Sāstrī by a contribution to the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, where he claims a final triumph for his pet theory (see pp. 668-9 of the October No. for 1924). In that note, he extracts some passages from the Bhāvaprakāśa and the Śringāraprakāśa, which mention the Svapnavāsavadattā by name and one of them quotes a verse fatuur: etc. which is actually found in the Trivandrum Svapnanāṭaka. He is so elated with these discoveries that he exclaims:—"Had I obtained these before, there would not have been the slightest discussion over my view that Bhāsa was the author of this Svapnavāsavadattā (meaning the Trivandrum Svapnanāṭakam). Luckily my opinion has now been vindicated." This is, I believe, the sum total of what has been said and argued in favour of the Bhāsa theory.

Let us now see how far these arguments can hold good. The first point requir, ing consideration is the circumstance that the Trivandrum plays begin with the entry of a sūtradhāra and, therefore, on the authority of Bāṇa, should be attributed to Bhāsa. This argument will at once lose its force when we find that in Southern India, at least there are several nāṭakas which similarly begin with the entry of a sūtradhāra or stage-director but were certainly not written by Bhāsa. One of such works, as was pointed out by Dr. Barnett long ago⁴, is the Mattavilāsaprahasana, a highly interesting farce

¹ I. 15.

² Translation by Cowell & Thomas, p. 3.

² Oxford, Clarendon Press 1924.

^{*} J. R. A. S. 1919, pp. 233-4.

which was composed by the Pallava king Mahendravikrama, the son and successor of Simhavishnu, who flourished in the first quarter of the 7th century A. D. The second play showing the same characteristics is the Ascharyachūdāmani of Saktibhadra, which has been mentioned above. The third drama coming under this category is the Kalyāṇasaugandhika of Nīlakantha.1 Other dramas showing the same feature are the Tapatīsamvarana and the Subhadrādhanañjaya, both of which were written by Kulasekharavarmman, a Kerala king of about the 11th century A. D. We further notice that these dramas use the term sthapana instead of prastavana. Other instances will be supplied by the Padmaprābhritaka of Sūdraka, the Dhūrtavijasamvāda of Iśvaradatta, the Ubhayābhisārikā of Vararuchi, and the Pādatāditaka of Syāmilaka which have already been published. Moreover, we find that the Ascharyachūdāmani2 introduces itself with the words3 aye kinnu khalu mayi vijnāpanavyagre śabda iva śrūyate etc., just as some of the Trivandrum plays do.* These facts conclusively show that it is wrong to draw conclusions from the way in which the prologues of some of these plays were written. As some of the works I have mentioned were probably composed in the South, it would appear likely that this was only a śaili or habit of the dakshinatyas or southerners of the period. No stress could, therefore, be laid on it in the matter of ascribing certain works to a special author, in view of different writers having adopted the same mode of starting their plays with the words नान्यन्ते etc. The view held by Dr. Banerji that it was Bhāsa who introduced the change for the first time and, therefore, Bāṇa characterized his works as begun by a sūtradhāra can hardly commend itself, when we remember what Viśvanātha has stated about the point in the Sāhityadarpaņa. He says5 that in ancient manuscripts the nandī verses, like Vedānteshu6 etc., are found written after the words nandyante sutradharah. This clearly demonstrates that it was only a method of writing. Viśvanātha must have seen old manuscript copies of the Vikramorvasi and other plays where the benedictory verses were ¹ The weakness of the argument, I fancy, has been recognised by Dr. Keith who, while reviewing Dr. Morgenstierae's work entitled "Über das Verhältnis zwischen Cārudatta und Mrichchakatikā in the Indian Antiquary, (Vol. LII, 1923, page 60), says that it would certainly be a non sequitur to conclude that the Trivandrum plays are Bhāsa's, simply because they are begun by the sūtradhāra. Though he has modified this remark by saying thist owing to this decidedly noteworthy fact the plays are eligible to be considered as Bhāsa's, I think the ativyāpti which I have shown vitiates the argument.

² In the third session of the All India Oriental Conference held at Madras two more dramas were announced which display the same features, but were written by other authors. They are entitled Dāmaka and Traivikrama (see Summary of Papers, page III).

³ Mr. K. V. Subrahmanya Aiyar tells me that he noticed this similarity more than two years ago and worked it out in a paper that has not yet come out. Messrs. A. Krishna Pisharoti and K. Rama Pisharoti have also recently noted it in their article entitled "Bhāsa's works—are they genuine?" where they have printed the whole of the prologue and announced their intention of bringing out an edition of this interesting play very soon.

⁴ The Ubhayabhisarika of Vararuchi also gives them.

⁴ Ch. VI. pp. 279-80, Bombay N. S. 1922-

चत एवं प्राक्षनपुत्तकेषु 'नान्यन्ति स्वधारः' इत्यननारमेव 'वेदानेषु' इत्यादिशावित्यनं दृश्यते। यत्र प्रधात् 'नान्यन्ते । सूचधार इति चिख्तितं तस्यायमिम्पायः नान्यन्ते सूचधार इदं प्रयोजितवान इतः प्रचति सथा नाटकमुपादोयत इति व्यवेरमिन आयः सूचित इति ।

^{*}The first benedictory stanza of the Vikramoreasi.

placed after this phrase, or to use the expression of Bana, which began with the sūtradhāra. He further says that the insertion of these words after the nāndī means that the nataka proper would start thenceforth. Thus, according to Viśvanatha (who though not very old is yet considered to be an authority on sāhitya), the use of these words before or after the nandi becomes immaterial as indicating a peculiarity of any particular author. It is true that we are not in possession of the original manuscripts, but only of comparatively late copies of these plays, still Viśvanātha's evidence is thereand we have no reason to disbelieve it. In this connection it may be remarked that nāndī is not an absolutely necessary commencement, as some plays start without it. Sivarāma in his commentary1 on the Nāgānanda has expressly said so in the words केचित तामप्यतीत्व नान्यन्त इत्येवारभन्ते. That this is so is illustrated by the play called Pradyumnābhyudaya which was composed by King Ravivarman of Quilon, who, according to Mr. Ganapati Sāstrī,2 flourished about 1265 A. D. Another instance of this kind will be furnished by one of the Trivandrum plays itself, namely, the Chārudatta, which has no nandi at all. It would appear that the actors had some liberty in chanting benedictory verses and starting a play. This is, perhaps, what Viśvanātha meant when he remarked-

Sanityadarpana, p. 279.

उत्तप्रकारायास नान्या रङ्गहाराव्ययमं नटैरेव कर्त्तव्यतया न महर्षिणा निर्देशः कतः।

The question of conformity to the Bharata-vākyam I would similarly attribute to practice or śailī only. The Trivandrum plays themselves are not uniform in structure with regard to the canons laid down in the Bharatanāṭyaśāstra. I doubt if the author of these dramas was totally unware³ of this śāstra, judging from the words of the vidūshaka addressed to the cheṭi in one of these plays called Avimāraka, though Bharata is not named there.

Nor will the other points raised in this connection such as the omission of the author's name, the description of certain scenes not allowed by Bharata and the absence of the Bharata-vākyam help us in upholding the theory. The mention of the author or his praise in the introduction is what is called prarochanā which is meant to attract the audience. If an author has to make his reputation, he may not mention his name till his fame has been established, or he may be taking some liberty with regard to these points in not following Bharata for some local reasons, such as the taste of the time, etc. In any case these are not the only plays which possess these characteristics. There are others which have now been published and display similar features. Of the four Bhanas mentioned above only the Padataditaka gives the name of the author in the sthapana, not the rest. I am further supported by another old work that has recently been brought to our notice. It is a Prahasana entitled Bhagavadajjuka which has lately been published in the pages of the Journal of the Bihar and Orissa Research Society by Professor A. P. Banerji. We are not quite sure of its authorship or time. According to a stanza found on one of the manuscripts of this work in the Madras Oriental Manuscripts Library, it is an old composition by a poet called

¹ T. S. S. No. LIX, p. 2.

^{*} Introduction to the Pradyumnābhyudaya, p. viii, T. S. S. No. VIII.

² Dr. Sten Konow thinks that there cannot be any doubt that the author of the Acimaraka knew Bharata, a clear reference to his work being found on p. 16 of that play.

⁴ Vol. X (1924), Parts I and II, pp. i-xxiii.

Bodhāyana.¹ The Māmandur inscription of Mahendravarman I, a good edition of which has recently come out in one of the publications² of the Indian Archæological Department, mentions it, though unfortunately the line where the name occurs is very badly mutilated. The name of Vyāsa comes before and that of the Mattavilāsa shortly after it, the intervening aksharas having been obliterated. The Mattavilāsa prahasana, as already stated, is the work of the accomplished Pallava ruler Mahendravarman. Why both these farces should be named rather one after the other, we have now no means to ascertain. But it appears to me that the Bhagavadajjuka was an earlier composition and the Mattavilāsa was modelled after it. The former exposes the preceptors of the yoga practices, ridicules the followers of the Sānkhya system, the physicians and the grammarians of the time as well as the followers of the Buddha. Still, its author does not appear to be very severe in his sarcasms, and the persons he has introduced are not so degenerate as they are shown in the latter work, namely, the Mattavilāsa. At any rate the Buddhist monk is not so low as he is in the latter. Sānḍilya of the Bhagavadajjuka praises Buddha specially for his punctilious care of food—

'बाहारपमादी सव्यपमादीति चिन्तबन्तस गमी भववदी वृहसा' and his behaviour towards the lifeless body of the courtesan, or the words3-

. . . एदाणि तालफलपोणाणि काले अचन्द्रणाण्नित्तानि अणधोसुन्नाणि तत्तहोदोए यणाणि, अधसस्य सम जीवन्तिए ण आसादिदाणि। cannot reflect creditably on his personal conduct or the followers of the great Tathā-gata of that period. But compare him with the Sākyabhikshu of the Mattavilāsa, who, while extolling the "great teacher" of the age for allowing the bhikshu-sangha or community of friars to indulge in various comforts or luxurious ways of life wants full liberty with women and wine as well. The former exhibits a little restraint, but the latter does not. This contrast is marked and would show how low the followers of the Buddha must have fallen, when the Pallava king wrote his farce. The piece itself does not name its author. Nor does it mention the time when it was written. The Bodhāyana of the manuscripts spoken of above is, for the present, an unknown writer. Therefore, to draw any inference regarding his time we have to depend on the internal evidence only. The fact that the farce is mentioned in the Māmandur inscription would show that it cannot be later than the end of the 6th or the commencement of the 7th century of the Christian era, or the time of Mahendravikrama who flourished about

² Mr. Sarasvati of the Madras Epigraphical office was good enough to send me the following two verses one of which he found written on a manuscript of the Bhagavadajjuka and the other on that of its commentary in the Oriental Manuscripts Library at Madras. Both would show that the farce was composed by a Kavi called Bodhāyana. In one of these verses it is called pratma or old. They respectively run as follows:—

⁽¹⁾ वीधायनकविरचितं वीधायतमं विसृत्तिशास्ताणाम् । प्रदसनरवं प्रवं सवतु सुदे सगवदच्युकीयं वः ।

⁽²⁾ बोधायनकविरचिते विख्याते भगवद्यक्षकाभिदिते । अभिनेटेऽतिवभीरे विश्रदानधुना करीमि यन्यायीन् ॥

The name of the commentator, too, seems to be unknown.

² Vol. XLIV I. S., South Indian Inscriptions (Texts), Vol. IV, No. 136, plate III, line 6. In the transcript given here m has been put in place of bh evidently by an oversight.

Page XVI.

⁴ Mr. A. P. Banerji would take it to the 2nd century A. D. (J. B. O. R. S., Vol. X, p. 90) but remembering the time when the Mattavilāsa was written, I doubt if we can take it back so far on the evidence of "religious animosity" or even archaic forms.

600 to 625 A. D. Further, it would appear that it was in all probability written after the Mrichchhakaţikā. The latter drama like this farce shows no disrespect towards Buddhism, although it is clearly a Brahmanical composition. The names of some of the dramatis personæ in this farce appear to have been taken from the Mrichchhakaţikā. The ajjukā or courtesan in it, for instance, is called Vasantasenā after the heroine of this drama, so also her servants.

That the Mattavilāsaprahasana was written by Mahendravarman is too well known to be proved. In any case the Bhagavadajjuka can very well be relegated to a period prior to that of Bāṇa. It begins with the sūtradhāra and does not mention the author either in the introduction or elsewhere. Its introduction is called sthāpanā and not prastāvanā, and it has no general prayer or the Bharata-vākyam, such as we see in later dramas. It uses old Prakrit forms as is shown below. In addition to all this it has introduced a scene which is not permitted to be staged—I mean the death of the Ajjukā—by Bharata or the rhetoricians who followed his canons. Besides this, the ten species of plays enunciated in this piece are, to some extent, different from those mentioned by these rhetoricians. The Vārehāmriga and also the Utsrishtikā, as Prof. Banerji has already noticed, do not appear to be known to them. Viśvanātha gives Ullāpya as one of the eighteen uparūpakas or minor dramas counting the Nataka and the Prakarana among the ten varieties of a rupaka or drama. The Bhagavadajjuka names Sallāpa along with the Prahasana among the ten species which it considers to have come out of the Nataka and the Prakarana form of the drama. This would show that the author of the farce followed the laws of dramaturgy, which were somewhat different from those laid down in the current Nātyašāstra of Bharata. In other words he followed a different school or system current in his time. That he could not have lived before Bharata is clear from the play itself, as I have remarked already. Besides, the non-observance of Bharata's rules does not necessarily indicate that the writer was older than one who observed those rules.

As to the argument based on the Bharata-vākyam, I might add that the Trivan-drum plays are not uniform in this respect. Some of them have colophons or closing stanzas which are different from those in the rest. The so-called Svapnanāṭaka and the Bālacharita have imām sāgaraparyantām, etc., the Pratijñāyaugandharāyaṇa, the Avimāraka and the Abhishekanāṭaka have bhavantvarajaso gāvaḥ, etc., with imām-api mahīm, etc., at the end. Three of these plays, namely, the Karnabhāra, the Chārudatta and the play of the "unknown" name have no Bharata-vākyam at all. Besides, it is to be observed that the customary or usual phrase with which a Sanskrit nāṭaka would close is to be seen in some of these plays. The Bālacharita, for instance, has

हासीदर: - देवर्षे ! परितृष्टीसि । किते भूय: प्रियसुपहरासि ।

भरतवाकां etc.

The Avimāraka has-

नारदः — कुन्तिभोज ! किमन्यत् ते प्रियमुपहरामि ।
कुन्तिभोजः — भगवान् यदि मे प्रसन्तः किमतः परमहामच्छामि ।
भरतवाकां — भवन्त्वरजसी गावः etc.

and so on, showing that some of these plays have got a Bharata-vākya. Here it would be interesting to point out that the four Bhānas (Chaturbhānī) spoken of above, exhibit practically the same feature. The Padmaprābhritaka of Šūdraka and the Pādatā-ditaka of Šyāmilaka have no Bharatavākyam. The Dhūrtaviṭasamvāda of Iśvara-datta and the Ubhayābhisārikā of Vararuchi end in stanzas which are not dissimilar to some of the concluding verses of the Trivandrum nāṭakas, for the former has इमामपि महों पातृ राजा सागरमेखलाम्॥ and the latter प्रोतिं प्राप्नोतु सर्वी चितिमधिकगुणां पालयको नरेन्द्रः॥

Therefore, the arguments adduced to prove that these plays were written before the Bharatanāṭyaśāstra¹ was composed fall flat on the ground having no force in them.

The second argument, which is, apparently, the mainstay of the Bhasa theory seems to be the title of one of these plays. Although some of the manuscripts consulted by Mr. Gaṇapati Śāstrī gave the name of Svapnanāṭakam to the drama, yet it was rather presumed that the real designation was Svapnavāsavadattā. It has now been clearly shown that it is so because Bhojadeva in the 11th century and Sāradātanaya in the 12th century knew this naţaka by that name. Mr. Gaṇapati Sāstrī in his note which he has contributed to the last October number of the Royal Asiatic Society's Journal2 (pp. 668-869) feels so jubilant over this discovery of his that he would now dispense with all the arguments as unnecessary and consider the question as finally settled. Dr. Thomas too has placed much reliance on this designation as noticed before. The futility of such a reasoning would be clear, if we remember what Professor Sylvain Lévi has stated in his highly interesting article which appeared last year in the Journal Asiatique and to which attention has now been drawn by Dr. Barnett in his note in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society.3 Ramachandra and Gunachandra in their Nātyadarpaņa quote a verse from a Svapnavāsavadattā ascribed by them to Bhāsa, and describe the situation in which it occurs, "but neither of these can be traced in the Trivandrum play. Sagaranandin in his Naţakalakshanaratnakośa quotes a passage from a Svapnavāsavadattā, which does not agree with the Trivandrum text." Further, as I have shown below and as is recognised by Mr. Ganapati Sästrī himself, Abhinavagupta quotes a verse in his commentary on the Dhvanyāloka, namely, Dhvanyālokalochana from a Svapnavāsavadattā, which is not to be found in the Trivandrum nātaka of that name. It will be too much to expect from imagination that all these ancient authors were "grievously mistaken" in attributing their quotations to Bhāsa or the Svapnavāsavadattā. Obviously therefore, the Trivandrum play cannot be the Svapnavāsavadattā of Bhāsa and there must have been at least two dramas of that name. That one and the same name was given by Sanskrit authors to different works is demonstrated by the fact that there were at least two Kalyanasaugandhikas3

¹ Some, however (see above, p. 13, foot note), hold that Bharata is older and the writer of the Trivandrum plays knew his istra*. If it is so, the arguments based on the prologues or the concluding stanzas of these plays would be self-contradictory, and the circumstance that these dramas introduce scenes which are not allowed by Bharata will only support my view that their writer followed a different school or canon.

^{* 1924,} p. 656

Barnett, ibid, p. 656. While correcting the proois I found that this interesting point has been further investigated by Drs. V. S. Sukthankar (J. B. B. R. A. S., 1925, pp. 126 ff) and L. D. Barnett (J. R. A. S., 1925, p. 99), and Mr. C. R. Devadhar (Annals of the Bhandarkar Institute, 1924-25, part I, pp. 55 ff.). Dr. F.W. Thomas (J. R. A. S., 1925, pp. 100-4) has endeavoured to meet the argument of Prof. Lévi but I do not think has succeeded in doing it.

and two Bālacharitas.¹ In this connection it looks interesting to observe that Sakti-bhadra, who according to tradition was a contemporary of Śańkarāchārya the Great, composed a "kāvya" which was called Unmādavāsavadattā and has not yet been found out. The term unmāda and svapna are almost synonymous. The name "Kāvya" is applied to both the driśya and śravya compositions. On this consideration one is tempted to think of the probable identity of the Trivandrum play with the work of Saktibhadra, especially when he remembers that some of these nāṭakas admittedly bear more than one appellation and the fact that the manuscripts of the Āścharyachūḍāmaṇi are found along with those of some of the Trivandrum nāṭakas, as a reference to the catalogue of manuscripts in the Madras Library would show.²

To give some details in regard to what I have stated above, I may refer to Sarvānanda, an author of about the 12th century A. D., who in his commentary on the Nāmalingānuśāsana of Amarasinha gives clear evidence of Bhāsa's Svapnavāsavadattā being different from the Trivandrum play. This has already been noticed by Bhattanātha Svāmī, who has given a very interesting quotation from a work called Tāpasavatsarāja in support of this inference. Mr. Gaṇapati Sāstrī, too, has recognised this evidence. He has, however, tried to explain it away by proposing another reading. Sarvānanda says:—

विविधः गृङ्गारो धर्मार्थकामभितः। तत्राद्यो यथा नन्दयन्त्यां ब्राह्मणभोजनम्। हितोयः स्वदिशमात्ममात्कर्त्तुमुदयनस्य पद्मावतीपरिणयोऽर्थगृङ्गारः। तृतीयः स्वप्नवासवदत्ते तस्यैव वासव-दत्तापरिणयः कामगृङ्गारः।

'The marriage of Padmāvatī is an instance of arthaśringāra or selfish love, but that of Vāsavadattā as described in the Svapnavāsavadattā is a case of kāmaśringāra.' Now, the Svapnavāsavadattā of the Trivandrum series does not give an account of Vatsarāja's marriage with Vāsavadattā. Surely, then, the Svapnavāsavadattā referred to by Sarvananda must have been a different work altogether. Here it might be said that Abhinavagupta's mention of the play in the words कचित क्रोडा यथा खप्रवासवदत्तायां will favour the identification of the Trivandrum drama with the ancient Svapnavāsavadattā for, in the Trivandrum nāṭaka we do find Padmāvatī sporting with a ball although there is not much of krīdā in it. But this fact has to be considered along with others. The Trivandrum drama could have been written after the real Svapnavāsavadattā of Bhāsa, which is still to be found out. The story being the same there could be several versions of it, and an incident might have been described in some or all of them. On the other hand, it seems to be pretty certain that according to Abhinavagupta himself the Trivandrum play cannot be the Svapnavāsavadattā5 to which he has referred, for it does not contain the quotation which he expressly states as taken from the latter. To illustrate the remark made by Anandavardhana in the Dhvanyāloka that authors sometimes pay more attention to figures than to rasa or the sentiment in the composition—हम्बन्ते च कवयोऽलङ्गरनिवन्धनेकरमा

¹ Mr. Ganapati Šāstrī, Introduction to the Svāpnavāsavadallā p. xxiv.

¹ See Nos. 12492-12493.

^{*} Ind. Ant. 1916, pp. 189-195.

⁴ T. S. S. No. XXXVIII, p. 1. 147.

⁵ In the same way the Daridracharudatta alluded to by Abhinavagupta may not necessarily be the Charadatta of the Trivandrum series.

अनपेचितरमा: प्रवःधेषु — he in his Dhvanyālokalochana¹ quotes the Svapnavāsavadattā as यथा स्वप्रवासवदत्ताच्ये नाटके

But this verse, as has already been recognised by the editor and other scholars, does not occur in the Trivandrum play at all. One would make bold to say that it could not have occurred there, as it suits neither the Vāsavadattā nor the Padmāvatī of that drama. Apparently, as Bhaṭṭanātha Svāmī has already remarked, it speaks of love which sprang up all at once at the first sight of a lady. Vāsavadattā as introduced in the Trivandrum play was wedded long before and Padmāvatī was only offered to Vatsarāja, who did not woo her at all. This is shown by the answer which the nurse gave to Vāsavadattā²—

वासव — घट्ये ! सर्च एव्य तेण विरदा । धाची — गहि गहि ! अगणप्योधणेण इह यायदस्य यभिजणविज्ञाणवधीरूवं पेक्लिय सर्च एव्य महाराएण दिग्ला ।

This negative evidence is too strong to be lightly passed over and would go a long way to contradict the Bhāsa theory. Dr. Thomas in his note, alluded to above, says that the verse is found in the Kāvyānuśāsana of Hemachandra, with obviously correct opening svañchita. But even in this form it is not to be met with in the play. Were it actually found there, I am afraid, that alone would not suffice for proving its authorship by Bhāsa. It could have stood there as a mere quotation from the ancient Bhāsa and as such it would merely show the Trivandrum drama as a later production.

I may note here that in summarising the pūrva-paksha I have referred to Mr. Ganapati Sāstrī's new discoveries under No. 6 or miscellaneous arguments, because they came to my notice at a late stage. They really form part of the second argument and I ought to have dealt with them there. Keeping in view what has already been stated by Professor Sylvain Lévi in his learned article " Deux Nouveax Traites de Dramaturgie Indienne" in the Journal Asiatique 3 referred to above, I really wonder why so much importance has been given to the references found in the Bhāvaprakāśa and the Sringaraprakāśa. After all what do these references show? I doubt if they prove anything beyond this, that to the authors of the above-mentioned works, viz., Saradātanaya and Bhojadeva, who according to Mr. Gaņapati Sāstrī, flourished in the 12th and 11th centuries A. D. respectively, the Trivandrum play was known, as it is now, under the name of Svapnavāsavadattā. But how would it follow that the play was written by Bhasa or that Bhasa was the author of all the thirteen Trivandrum plays? I am glad that Dr. Barnett has already drawn the attention of scholars to Professor Lévi's article in his note which appears simultaneously with that of Mr. Ganapati Sastri and I need not dilate on it here. I repeat what I have said above that the Nātyadarpana of Rāmachandra and Gunachandra and the Nāṭakalakshaṇaratnakośa of Sagaranandin make it quite clear that there must have been at least two plays of the name of Svapnavāsavadattā. Thus, the one by Bhāsa was different from the Trivandrum play. To me the 'adamantine' rock of Mr. Ganapati Sāstrī appears to ^{*} Oct.-Decr. 1912-3, pp. 193 ff. I am indebted to Dr. Sten Konow for his kindly drawing my attention to this important article.

¹ P. 152, 3rd Udyota.

² P. 23

^{*} P. 656.

disintegrate faster than his old stones. Even without attributing plagiarism to the author of the Trivandrum plays one can easily explain the occurrence of identical ślokas in the works of two different authors. Pithy and telling utterances often assume the form of subhāshitas whose frequent use tends to cause an oblivion of their authors, rendering them a common property, which anybody might use as he liked. If the renowned Bhāsa's sporadic pieces acquired that merit, it would be no wonder to find them repeated in later works. In the matter of characters, too, it is an easy thing for a later writer to borrow from an earlier one. Thus the mere coincidence of a few characters would not warrant the conclusion that of such works the author was one and the same.

Daridrachārudatta is no doubt mentioned by Abhinavagupta, but how are we to assume the identity of it with the Chārudatta of the Trivandrum series, when none of the known manuscripts of the play give that name to it? That Vāmana quoted the verse Šarachchhaśānka-gaurena, etc., which occurs in the fourth act of the Trivandrum play, or the passage yo bhartripindasya krite na yudhyet, which is the fourth pāda of a certain śloka in the Pratijñāyaugandharāyaṇa, or the verse yāsām balir-bhavati, etc., which is to be found in the piece called Chārudatta and that a part of the stanza limpatīva tamongāni, etc., occurring in the Bālacharita and the Chārudatta of the Trivandrum series, is to be found in the Kāvyādarša of Daṇḍin, can only show the priority of these works to Vāmana or Daṇḍin, of course taking it for granted that these quotations are from these very works. They cannot demonstrate the authorship of the works, as these authorities do not ascribe them to Bhāsa Most of these quotations are proverbial in nature, and it goes without saying that in ancient India there was a large stock of current sentences and stanzas on which different authors could draw without incurring the charge of plagiarism.

In the same way I doubt if any special importance can be given to what Mr. Gaṇapati Sāstrī calls Bhāmaha's review in the Kāvyālankāra or Bhamahālankāra. The story of Vatsarāja has been a very popular theme and several ancient Sanskrit writers have written it in their own ways. Bhāmaha makes no mention of Bhāsa or any other kavi, while illustrating the rhetorical blemish called Nyāya-virodha. Why to think of a particular poet then? The verse—no doubt has the same meaning, which a sentence in the play named Pratijāāyau-gandharāyana has, at least partly,² but on what grounds are we to suppose that Bhāmaha was rendering the Prākrit speech into Sanskrit? Why not think of another work which gave it in Sanskrit? Or let us take it for granted that he had the Trivandrum play or its author in view when he said—नमोऽस्तु तेभ्यो विद्वदृश्यो येऽभिप्रायं कवेरिमम्। श्रास्त्रलोकावपास्त्रव नयन्ति नयवेदिनः॥ IV. 46.

हतीऽनेन सम भाता सम पुत्र: पिता सम । सातुलो भागिनेयस क्षा संस्थितेतस: ॥ Bhāmahālankāra, IV, 44-

¹ We should remember that this stanza is ascribed either to Vikramāditya or to both Mentha and Vikramāditya but not to Bhāsa in any of the known anthologies.

^{*} Hamsaka's speech, p. 13, rather differs, for it has—

चर्चेश्व सम भादा श्रदी, घर्षेश्व सम पिदा, चर्चेश्व सम सुदी सम वशक्त चि ।

The inference which can be safely drawn under these circumstances is that he must be posterior to, if not a contemporary of that author, for contemporary writers are often found criticising each other. Bhāmaha cannot be so old as some scholars believe him to be. I doubt if he can be far removed from Dandin. He might have been his contemporary or lived shortly before him. The Kāvyādarša itself would lead us to such an inference for, while enunciating the doshas in a composition, it mentions only ten out of the eleven named by Bhāmaha¹ and does not consider the eleventh to be a dosha necessarily, remarking² that it is difficult to see if it is a blemish at all. There can be no doubt that Dandin is criticising Bhāmaha unless, of course, both of these rhetoricians took the two verses apārtham etc., from some older work. Both the works, namely, the Kāvyālankāra and the Kāvyādarša, are inter-connected and must have been composed probably about the same time or in the 6th if not the 7th century A.D.

Mr. Gaṇapati Śāstrī has endeavoured to carry the Trivandrum plays to about the 4th century B.C. on the supposition that one of them, namely, the Pratijñāyaugandha-rāyaṇa, has been quoted by Chāṇakya in his now well-known work, the Arthaśāstra. The stanza navaṁ śarāvaṁ, like the other one, i.e., yān yajña-saṅghais-tapasā etc., has apparently, a proverbial or sententious tenor, and must be regarded as a subhāshita Chāṇakya quoted it along with a Vedic sentence showing thereby that he regarded it as equally authoritative. There is nothing to show that it is not a quotation in the Trivandrum play even³ if it is taken to be Bhāsa's. Let us suppose for the sake of argument that all these sayings were composed by Bhāsa himself. Can their occurrence in these works prove that they were written by Bhāsa ? 1 doubt if it can. Take the case of a work whose author is known to us without any doubt. I mean the farce called Mattavilāsaprahasana. This contains the verse (with a slight change)— which, on the authority of Somadeva's Yaśastilaka, was composed by Bhasa. Will this fact ascribe the authorship of the farce to Bhasa? Fortunately, we know its author! Let us take another instance. The sūtras of Chāṇakya contain two aphorisms—

पेया सुरा प्रियतमामुखमोचणीयं ग्राह्यः स्वभावनानितो विकटस वेषः । येनेदमीदशमदृश्यत मोचवत्मं दीर्घायुरस्तु भगवान्म पिनाकपाणिः ॥

न समाधि: स्त्रोषु लोकज्ञता च। and दारिद्रां खलु पुरुषस्य जीवितं सरणम्।

¹ IV, 1.2.

^{*} III, 125-127.

^{*} Here it will be interesting to make mention of the important pronouncement made by Mr. Famakrishna Kavi in the third session of the All-India Oriental Conference at Madras, 1924 (see Summary of papers, page iv), that this verse has been identified as a quotation from the Manusiti.

[.] P. 7, V. 7

⁵ P. Peterson's 2nd report, p. 46, referred to in the introduction of the Subhāshitāvali of Vallabhadeva Bombay, E. S. P., p. 82.

⁸ R. Shāma Śāstri's revised (1919) edition of the Kautiliyam Arthaéaetram, p. 433, nos. 361 and 257.

One of these is found in the Āścharyachūḍāmani of Śaktibhadra and the other in the Chārudatta of the Trivandrum series. Possibly they may be quotations from the Arthaśāstra and analogy would lead us to surmise that the stanza navam śarāvam, etc., was similarly quoted from the same work. Slight discrepancies in these quotations when compared with the published texts are immaterial for, as a rule, such proverbial sayings are usually quoted from memory.

The question of similarity in structure may further be examined here to see how tar the identity of expressions or words can be relied upon in settling the authorship of a work. First, I shall compare the Aścharyachūḍāmaṇi with some of the Trivandrum plays. How it resembles the latter so far as its prelude is concerned I have shown ahove.

Abhishekanāṭaka.

Pages 20-21.

नेपश्चे,

जयतु देव:। जयतु लक्केश्वर:। जयतु स्वामी जयतु महाराज:। दमनाडिका:पूर्णा:। स्रति-कामति स्नानवेला। इत इतो महाराज:।

निष्कानाः मपरिवारः

(Page 20)

रावण: -- ननु देवि । इ इ इ, सहो पति-वतायास्तेज:।

(Page 15)

ततः प्रविश्वति चनुमान् चङ्कोयकच्छाः

हनू - यही रावणभवनस्य विन्धासः।

Aścharyachūdāmaņi.

Act V under identical circums tances has-

नेपश्ये,

जयतु स्वामो, जयतु लक्केश्वरः, जयतु भद्रमुखः, जयतु, दश्नाडिकाः पूर्णाः। श्रतिक्रामित स्नानवेला—इत इतो मद्याराजः। निष्कान्तो रावणसापरिवारः।

Act V.

गवण: — ननु देवि । चारिचं तव किमिदं पतिव्रताया: । Act VI.

ततः प्रविश्रति चनुमान् श्रङ्गलीयकच्छः

हन् - अहो रावणनगरस्य परा लच्छोः।

(Page 18)

Rāvaṇa while thinking of Sītā talks of the moon in both the plays.
(Page 22)

Sītā feels abashed (vrīditā) as she does in the Āścharyachūdāmaņi.

(Page 23)

मोता—भइ कहं तुम्हेहि अव्यउत्तस्य सङ्ग्रमा जादो।

हन् - भवति खयतां

सोता-बहो बबरुणा का इसारा etc.

सोता—कदमेण उपायेण श्रयाउत्तेण संसमो जाटी।

चनू • - मृगोतु खामिनो।

सोता-चड़ो चघरणा का इसारा etc.

^{&#}x27;The estra न समाधि: etc., as published by Mr. Shāma Šāstrī, has लीकचता च but Saktibhadra gives सीकच:.
The other sentence in the published text reads दारिदा खलु पुनयस्य जीनित नर्थ but in the Chārudatta it stands as दारिदा खल नाम मनस्तिन: पुनयस्य मीच्छासं मरणम।

In this connection it will not be out of place to say that the stanza wrend farmers of etc., is to be found in the Mudrārākshasa, but in the Datarāpāralošu it has been ascribed to Bhartrinari. Could we, then, ascribe the Mudrārākshasa to Bhartrinari?

BHASA AND THE AUTHORSHIP OF THE THIRTEEN TRIVANDRUM PLAYS. (Page 24) Act VI. मीता- ... ब्रयाउनी जह भोषपरवसी ग सोता - चय्यउत्तो जह सोचपरवसो होई, तह में उत्तन्तं भगिहि। होई, तद में पव्तं तह भगेहि। Act V. (Page 54) सोता-सब्बटा इस्परा सन्ति करन्तु। सोता-- ... सव्वदा इसारा सन्ति जरन्तु। (Page 69) राम:- इत्वा बालिनमाहवे etc. राम: - इत्वा रावणमाहवे etc. Act VII. (Page 70) नचाग:- आययंमाययंम। तकाण:-बाययंभाययंभा अस्याः पतिव्रतायाश्चन्द-राम:-लचाण! यस्याः पतित्रतायाःकन्द-राम:-लक्क्षण ! मनुतिष्ठ । मन्तिष्ठ । नक्षण:-यदाज्ञापयत्याये:। लच्मण: -यदाचापयत्यायः। (Page 72) नेपरये दिव्यगन्धर्वा गायन्ति। नेपध्ये दिव्यगन्धर्वा गायन्ति The gana is identical in ideas in both. (Page 72) वाढं प्रथम: कल्प: and चडी तु खलु are very common words. राम:-जानतापि च वैदेशा: etc., etc. TH: - The verse-शक्तिताम मया देवि ! धर्मशीलापि जानको । विश्वस्तन्ते कयं श्रेषा योषितः प्रोषिताः प्रियै: ॥ is not dissimilar in idea. Act VII. (Page 75) ग्राम्न:-भद्रमुख। कि ते भूय: प्रियमुपहरामि। किं ते भयः प्रियम्प-नारद:-भद्रमुख। चरामि। राम:- जिसतः परमहिमच्छासि-

भरतवाक्यम्

राम:- किमत: परमहिमच्छामि-भरतवाकाम्

Pratijāāyaugandharāyana and Āscharyachūdāmani Pratijnā°.

(Page 18)

Aścharya°.

प्रतीहारी-वत्तिसं

Act II.

मोता-प्रतिसं

(M. M. Ganapati Sastri renders it1 by पड़ी खामि and the meaning fits in the speech of Sitā as well.)

(Page 62) भतिपिखस्य क्रते न युध्येत् Act III.

यहो बलवान भर्तिपण्डः

¹ The root seems to be the same which we find in the Western Panjabi as in the verse ch jadade ghatta ke karāti kamali pai gird mere ghatte pheriāni ni of the Hir of Wāreshāh, p. 213 (Lahore ed.).

(Pages 63, 65)

Act VII

उभी-उसारह उसारह यथा! उसारह

उसारइ उसारइ यथा उसारह।

Closing sentences भद्रमुख etc., are similar in both.

Avimāraka

Ā scharyach ūdāmaņi

(Page 13)

जयतु खामो, जयतु महाराजः । दश्(ना)किकाः जयतु खामी, जयतु लक्षेश्वरः दश-पूर्णाः । ... श्रतिकामिति खानवेला । नाडिकाः पूर्णाः । श्रतिकामिति खानवेला ।

Pratimānāļaka and Āścharņachūḍāmaņi

(Page 85)

सीता- बयाउन परिताबाहि परिताबाहि।

मोता-ब्रखंडत परिताबाहि परिताबाहि

(Page 86)

सोता-सत्तीसि

मोता-मत्तोमि

(Page 87)

Compare the description of Jațăyu's beak in both and तिष्ठदानीम् (Page 86)

रावणः - इइइ। अही पतिव्रतायास्तेजः।

रावण:-चारिचं तव किं पतिव्रताया: etc.

(Page 99)

Defence of Kaikeyi is similar in both—(Act I in the Ascharyachūdāmaņi)

The Trivandrum Svapnavāsavadattā and the Aścharyachūdāmaņi

i. The speech of the sūtradhāra in both is rather identical.

ii. The use of the word nu in the first stanza of the Trivandrum play and not far from about the commencement of the Ascharyachūdāmani.

iii. The Svapnavāsavadattā (pp. 1-2) and the Āścharyachūḍāmaṇi (Act VII) give उद्याह उद्याह प्रया उद्याह ।

iv. On page 10 of the former and in Act III of the latter we have-

व्रह्मचारी - यथ कस्मिन् प्रदेशे विश्वमियिथे। यभितस्त्रपोवनेन भवितव्यं तथाहि। कार्ते स्विकुमार: - क नु खलु तोर्थयाचात्रमं विगमयासि - यचासन्नेन यात्रमेण भवितव्यं तथाहि। respectively.

v. Similarly, वासवदत्ता-श्रष्टो अकरणा खुइसारा in the one (pp. 27 and 62) and सीता—श्रष्टो सबरणा खुइसारा etc. (Act IV) in the other.

vi. बाडम । प्रथम: कला: is very common.

These are a few instances which I have picked up from the play of Saktibhadra and some Trivandrum nāṭakas. I am sure more will be found out. Arguing like Mr. Gaṇapati Sāstri, can we not ascribe the Trivandrum plays to Saktibhadra, ignoring for argument's sake the mention of his name in the prologue? The argument based on the merits or the intensity of rasa and the exquisite flow of language in these plays cannot prove the authorship of Bhāsa, though it can show that their writer was a dramatist of a high order. At the same time one has to remember that the question of the merit of a work is sometimes a matter of opinion as is so very nicely shown in the case of Milton, who preferred his Paradise Regained to the Paradise Lost, although the latter is usually considered to be far superior to the former. Had it not been so, could the immortal Sākuntala or the Uttararāmacharita be considered inferior to these plays? The merits for which the Trivandrum dramas are considered as older than Kālidāsa have not been pointed out to us. What is stated on the other hand is that the author of the Trivandrum dramas has drawn his material directly from the epics and there are expressions in those plays which are found in the works of Kālidāsa, who must have taken them from those plays. It appears that while bringing in such an argument the supporters of the Bhasa theory are to a large extent influenced by the supposition that these works are Bhasa's and that an ancient work must be of great merit. Comparatively modern writers have also drawn their material directly from the epics. Indian writers who select mythical or say divine subjects have to draw the material from these sources, and for the matter of that we cannot say that Kālidāsa did not do so. Writers like Kshemendra did the same thing. The author of the Ascharyachūdāmani, alluded to above, must have done so. Why to talk of these old writers? If I write a piece now and get my material from the Vedas, my composition cannot be relegated to the hoary past on that account. This sort of reasoning does not carry conviction home. Similarity of ideas or expressions does not necessarily indicate indebtedness of one author to another. There is no reason why a person cannot argue as does another quite independently. Similar ideas and expressions are no doubt found in the works of Kālidāsa and these plays, still, it does not stand to reason to say that Kālidāsa derived them from these works or any other author either out of respect or otherwise. It is said that Kälidäsa has himself praised Bhasa and might have used his works as a grateful tribute to his genius. I doubt if it can be considered to be a tribute at all, when we remember how Indian poets compare "borrowing" to eating vantam. To mention the name of a predecessor in respectful terms does not necessarily imply borrowing. An original writer will shun such a course and a poet of the type of Kālidāsa whether he hailed from India, Europe or elsewhere could not have had recourse to such a practice. We should not forget at the same time that the priority of the Trivandrum pieces to Kālidāsa is yet to be established, and one can very well argue in the opposite way, viz., that the author of these works was indebted to Kālidāsa. For my own part I will not attach any great weight to the similarity of this kind in such cases. Identical expressions or similar ideas are to be met with in the Vedas and the Bible leaving aside the Rāmāyaṇa and the Iliad, but I doubt if we could go so far as to consider the latter to be indebted to the former or vice versa in any way. While human heart remains unaltered it is the brain that develops. This is, I think, the reason why a poet who writes from the core of his heart remains ever fresh and up-to-date, whatever be his age. The outpourings of a true heart will not much differ whoever the writer may be. Accordingly, we have to consider the question of the age of a work irrespective of such resemblances.

Much capital has been made out of the so-called archaisms or solecisms (drshaprayogas), noticed in the Trivandrum nāṭakas. It is said that many archaic forms, which are found in these plays and are mostly tabulated in the form of an appendix attached to the Pratimānāṭaka, violate the rules of Pāṇini, and, therefore these natakas must have come into existence before the great grammarian lived. Likewise, it is affirmed that the Prakrit of these plays is archaic and, consequently, they must have been composed during a very remote antiquity. Some of the defenders of the Bhāsa theory place these works before, while others after Aśvaghosha. Let us now examine how far this argument holds good. The occurrence of irregular or apaniniya forms can afford no proof of the age of a work. Students of Indian epigraphy are aware of numerous documents which contain such forms but undoubtedly belong to a very late period. Arsha forms are found not only in the Rāmāyana or the Mahābhārata, but in the epics which are certainly not so old; nay, we find them in the works1 of Kālidāsa as well as other Sanskrit writers. Such forms, we know, have mostly been explained by Saranadeva in his very learned work entitled Durghatavritti.2 Mallinatha has also endeavoured to justify such formations by bringing them under Pāṇini's rules. Even Mr. Gaṇapati Śāstrī himself has done so at least in one instance, I mean in the use of lyap in grihya chāpam karena.3 We know of cases where writers have deliberately flouted Pāṇini. For instance, the locative plural of pumān is pumsu according to Pāṇini, but Anubhūtisvarūpāchārya in his grammar named Sārasvatam makes it punkshu. The same is the case with the word viśrāma which is not unoften used for viśrama. I need not multiply examples here, when they are so well collected in the Durghatavritti. Some of the manuscripts are less scrupulously preserved than others and we are not in possession of the original manuscripts of the plays. At times wrong forms are used by ignorant copyists and sometimes more familiar forms are substituted in place of old and unfamiliar ones. We have also to remember that the extant books on Prākrit grammar are comparatively late works, and the rules laid down in them can only be used with the utmost caution for determining the age of any work with their aid. Grammar can very well be considered to be a good criterion for judging the age of a composition, but wrong or ungrammatical formations cannot. Poetic license is no criterion of age. Nor does it reflect well on the writer. Unless these archaic formations noticed in the Trivandrum plays are proved to be in agreement with the rules of grammar written before Pāṇini, their occurrence will form no ground for testifying to their antiquity, nor will they suffice to prove the authorship of Bhāsa. This is how the first part of the argument stands.

Now let us examine the second on the use of old Prākrit forms. I agree with Dr. Barnett in thinking that the Southern tradition presents nāṭakas in a condition showing Prākrit forms which are more archaic than those found in the Northern tradition. Let us work out this assertion in detail here.

Scholars like Printz, V. Lesny, V. S. Sukthankar and others opine that the Prākrit used in these plays exhibits old forms which are met with in ancient works both inscriptional and literary; but not in comparatively late compositions like the works

For example, in Raghuramia, XIX-23, and Kumarasambhava, 1. 35.

^{*} T. S. S. No. VI.

Dūtaghafotkacha, T. S. S. No. XXII, p. 59.

^{*} W. Printz: Bhāsa's Prākrit (Frankfurt A. M., 1921).

^{*} Die Entwicklungsstufe des Präkrits in Bhäsa's Dramen und das Zeitalter Bhäsa's in the Zeitschrift der eutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, 72 Band. Leipzig, 1918, pp. 203 ff.

American Or. Jour., 40, 1920, pp. 248 ff.

of Kālidāsa and others. Therefore, it must be older and, consequently, these plays which are partly couched in it must be assigned to a great age, at any rate to the early centuries of the Christian era, if not to a still earlier epoch. These are some of the archaisms in the Prākrit of these plays as noticed by them.

i. Amhāam (asmākam); ii. dissa (drišya); iii. vaam(vayam); iv. use of the root arh without the svarabhakti or epenthetic vowel; v. ahaka (aham, later hake, hage and aham); vi. āma as affirmative particle; vii. karia (kritvā, later kadua); viii. kissa, kišša (kasya but used in ablative sense for kasmāt); ix. khu (khalu); x. tava (tava, later tuha, etc.); xi. tuvam (tvam, later tuvam).

It will look rather strange in the eyes of those scholars if I said that almost all these old forms are to be seen in the Ascharyachūdāmani of Saktibhadra. I am sorry the book has not yet been fully published.1 I can, therefore, only refer to the pages of the copy which I had an occasion to examine. But that will hardly be more useful than my assertion that these forms are to be seen in this play as well.2 Should we, then, on the strength of this fact, assign the play to the same period to which the Trivandrum nāţakas have been ascribed? Though the date of Saktibhadra is not definitely known. still I doubt if any scholar would think of placing him in that period or some centuries before the Christian era! Let us leave him alone for the present till his date is determined and see the Prākrit in the works whose authorship and time are known without any doubt. I take up the plays which have been published in the very Trivandrum series and under the editorship of Mr. Gaṇapati Śāstrī himself. In addition to those I have just now noted, the chief peculiarities of the Trivandrum plays as far as their Prākrit is concerned are3 perhaps these: (1) usual dropping of k, g, ch, j, t, d, p, b, v, and y between vowels and occasional retention; (2) occasional change of y into j but usual retention of it; (3) shortening of the vowel and doubling of the consonant in evam, etc.; (4) change of ry into yy in contrast with Kālidāsa's changing it intoji, and so on. If we examine the Prakrit of these plays with that of the Pradyumnabhyudaya,4 the Subhadrādhanañjaya,5 the Tapatīsamvaraņa,6 the Nāgānanda7 or the Mattavilāsaprahasana as published in the south we shall find Prākrit forms in them which display the same features. The Pradyumnābhyudaya supplies several instances of (1), as do the other plays which I have just named, and I need not refer to them-For (2), see Pradyumnābhyudaya, p. 2, Subhadrādhanañjaya, pp. 60, 70, Tapatīsamvarana, pp. 36, 14, 33, 67, Nāgānanda, p. 13, Mattavilāsa°, pp. 1, 3, etc. For (3) com-

¹ For manuscripts of this play see the Descriptive Catalogue of the Sanskrit Manuscripts in the Govt. Oriental Manuscripts Library, Madras, pp. 8380-82. It is particularly noteworthy that the manuscripts of this play are found along with some of those of the 13 Trivandrum plays as has been noted above.

² Archaic forms are used especially in the speech of Sūrpaṇakhā and also Sītā. In addition to amhām we have tumhāṇam and tumhchi. The play gives arhadi and uses aham itself several times in the speech of Sūrpaṇakhā and Sītā. One of the supporters of the Bhāsa theory, namely, M. M. Harapṛaṣād Shāstrī (see Introduction to the Pratimāṇāfaka), says that this word āma is never used by later poets but is found only in old Pāli. This affirmative particle not only occurs in the Ascharyachāḍāmani, but other plays as well, as I have shown below. Besides, is it not the very particle which we hear in Tamil every day? The play gives twom and also tumam. The two forms vaam and karia I have not seen in the Ascharyachāḍāmani, but similar forms occur in the Subhadrādhanaājaya and the Tapafīsamvarana etc. as shown in the sequel.

A. Banerji Sästri, J. R. A. S., 1921, p. 372.

⁴ T. S. S. No. VIII.

^{*} T. S. S. No. XI.

⁴ T. S. S. No. XIII

⁷ T. S. S. No. LIX

pare Pradyumnā°, pp. 10 and 33, Subhadrā°, pp. 15; 145, Tapatī°, pp. 14, 61, Nāgā°, pp. 24, 24, 28, 71, etc., and Mattavio, p. 2. For (4) see Pradyumnão, p. 13, Subhadrão, p. 70, Tapatī°, p. 3, Nāgā°, p. 13, and Matta°, pp. 1, 3.

Some other old forms in these plays may also be mentioned here. For khu see Pradyumnā°, pp. 10, 11, 24, Subhadrā°, pp. 63, 170, etc., Tapatī°, pp. 8, 33, 39, etc., Nāgā°, pp. 24, 34, etc., and Matta°, pp. 2, 6, 9, etc. For forms like kissa see Subhadrā°, pp. 17, 63, 83, 97, 131, 135, Tapatī°, pp. 9, 47, 74, etc., Nāgā°, pp. 66, 71, 88, and Matta°, p. 27. For āma see Pradyumnā°, p. 33, Subhadrā°, p. 57, Tapatī°, p. 104, etc. For amhāam see Subhadrā°, pp. 33, 34, Matta°, pp. 9, 19, 24. For forms like karia see Tapatī°, pp. 42, Subhadrā°, p. 168, Nāgā°, pp. 88, 124. For mhi see Subhadrā°, p. 34; Nāgā°. p. 80, Matta°, p. 28. For aham and ahake see Pradyumnā°, p. 3, Tapatī°, pp. 8, 55, 143, Nāgā°, p. 71.

I may go on multiplying instances, but the result will be the same. The occurrence of these forms will not prove that these works, too, should be relegated to such a high antiquity1. They were all written after Kālidāsa, whatever be their exact date.

Yet another work may be put up to show the hollowness of this argument. It is the Bhagavadajjuka which has been referred to above. Here, too, we observe similar old Prakrit forms. To mention a few of the typical ones as selected by some of the supporters of the Bhasa theory. This piece uses both amhaam and amhanam. The former form occurs in the speech of the Vaidya who went to treat the courtesan (page xxii) and the latter in that of Sandilya (p. iiii). So also tuvam (p. viii) and tumam (p. xvi) and kissa used in the sense of kasmāt (p. iv). Khu is usually put for khalu without reduplication. The play gives tava and tuvam for the later forms tujjha or tumha and tuman as at pages v, and viii, and employs both evam (p. v) and evvam (p. viii). Likewise we have aham for ahakam and ahake, and so on. Both old and later forms are used in this work, still it cannot be relegated to the epoch to which the Trivandrum plays are ascribed by most of the adherents of the Bhasa theory.

A special notice appears to be called for regarding the use of some accusative plurals in ani belonging to a-stems on which Dr. Thomas2 has laid so much stress. I need only refer to the note of Dr. L. D. Barnett in the October (1924) issue of the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society3 without recapitulating what he has stated there. Forms like kusumāni or devāņi occurring in certain compositions cannot prove that the latter were written before or about the time of Aśoka, for they are to be met with in the works which were decidedly written later. I have already shown in connection with the use of other forms how unsafe it is to adduce them as evidences of great age. All these nātakas, leaving aside, for the present, the Bhagavadajjuka, were written after Kālidāsa, whatever their exact date may be. Their Prākrit also contains earlier or archaic forms but they are comparatively late compositions. Therefore, to assign the Trivandrum nāţakas to such a high antiquity as the 3rd or 4th century B.C. to 3rd or 4th century A. D. on the evidence of some old Prakrit4 formations would be unreasonable. Thus, the argument based on the archaic forms of Sanskrit as well as Prākrit also falls to the ground.

¹ Cf. Barnett, J. R. A. S., 1921, pp. 587-9.

^{*} Ibid. 1924, p. 449 L.

^{*} Dr. Sukthankar in his very informing notes which he has recently conscibuted to the Journal of the Bomban Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society (1925, April issue), has, I now find, thoroughly examined the whole of the Prakrit question and appears to have admitted (page 132), quite in a genuine scholarly spirit, I would say, that in this respect, at least, his expectations have not been realized.

After examining these main points so often adduced in favour of the Bhāsa theory, let us now consider another important assertion in this connection. The defenders of this theory hold that the Mrichchhakatikā depends on the Trivandrum play named Chārudatta and is only an amplification of it. They seem to have taken it for granted that it is so. One would wonder if they are led to this belief by the consideration of the small size of the Charudatta as compared with that of the Mrichchhakatikā. That both these plays are connected with each other cannot be denied. The four acts of which the Trivandrum play consists are practically identical with the first few acts of the Mrichchhakatika. There can be no doubt that the author of the one has copied or taken them from the other. The Charudatta is believed to be the source, and to make the author of the Mrichchhakațikā the borrower, it is affirmed that the Trivandrum edition of the Charudatta presents only an incomplete text of the play, the continuation1 of which still lies hidden somewhere, possibly in the south. It is further declared that some of the incidents mentioned in the Mrichchhakațikā are not connected with the real plot and are to be treated as mere cumbersome narratives. This practically means that the author of the Mrichchhakațikā quietly incorporated the whole of the play or the four acts of it ascribing the same to himself. The first question which a curious mind would ask in such a case would be how is it that a poet who was capable of composing six more acts failed to re-write in his own words the first four acts of the play. One would further ask if there is a parallel case in the world showing a plagiarism of this sort.2 We know of sayings like Kavir-vantam samasnute, but cannot forget what Bhāmaha has said3-

मुख्यस्तावदयं न्यायी यत्स्वशक्त्या प्रवर्तते । श्रन्थे सारखता नाम सन्त्यन्योक्तानुवादिनः॥

Poets or poetasters may borrow consciously or unconsciously from other writers, but they would hesitate to insert bodily the work of another in their own compositions, if they are worth the name, for they can express the story or the ideas in their own words as far as possible. In the Mrichchhakatikā, however, there is no anyoktānuvāda or translation, but wholesale incorporation. The prologue of this play speaks of the author in terms of high praise for, it says that he was the foremost of Vedic scholars and a pious man. Could tapas allow of such acts? Well, it may be said that he did not plagiarise, but, as Dr. Charpentier has stated in his note on the Hindu drama, only added the last five ankas, or at least the greater part of them "exhibiting the efficacy of righteous conduct, villainy of law, the temperament of the wicked and the inevitable-

⁴ Dr. Sukthankar in his article in the Journal of the Mythic Society of Bangalore, Vol. IX, 1919, pp. 188 ff., has worked out this point at some length and tried to show that the Charudatta is an incomplete play, and so it is!

Here I am reminded of Washington Irving's reverie given in his Sketch Book regarding the art of book-making. Are we to think that, as Bhāsa's works were unknown at the time, the writer of the Mrichchhakatika appropriated his work to himself with no fear of detection?

³ See Introduction to Pratimanataka. p. xvi.

⁴ J. R. A. S. 1923, 99, 602, 6.

ness of fate." In support of guesses like these it is added that a courteous poet, who would not accuse king Sūdraka of plagiarism-a thing scarcely consistent with the high praise bestowed upon him-could, perhaps, not tell us in a clearer way what did, in reality, belong to him and what did not. If it were a fact, the case would be an unique one! Authors, as far as I am aware, have continued the works of other writers, but have not appropriated them to themselves. The Kādambarī and the Dašakumāracharita were in all probability continued only in the name of the original authors. That the Chārudatta is only a part of a "fuller" work from which it has been culled out will become clear if we examine it closely and compare it with the Mrichchhakatikā. It has no nāndī nor a Bharatavākyam. Besides, we do not find in it the words like ayi kinnu khalu, etc., which form the chief characteristics of the Trivandrum plays. In construction it does not seem to be identical with the rest. On what grounds then has it been ascribed to Bhasa? The circumstance that a manuscript of the piece was found along with the other plays cannot prove it, though, apparently, it has gone a long way to influence the view. In my opinion the Charudatta and the Mrichchhakaţikā are not different works, and the former is only a part of the latter just as the Mantrānka-nāţaka1 is a part of the Pratijnayaugandharayana of this very series although the Chākyars consider it to be a distinct drama. Differences to be noticed in it are rather immaterial, and are attributable to local causes. I would call the Chārudatta a different recension of the first few acts of the Mrichchhakaţikā. To write down the name of the hero and the heroine or call them nayaka and ganika matters little, as far as the actual representation on the stage is concerned. Sometimes, as in the case of Jīmūtavāhana in the Nāgānanda, only Nāyaka is put down in place of the name of the hero. The difference in the names of Sarvilaka and Sajjalaka does not count for much. It is not impossible that the change is due to an error on the part of some copyist. The omission of the servants' names (Karnapūraka and Radanikā) makes no difference at all. Šūdraka as a playwright or rather kavi must have been very popular in the south. In the sthapana of the Tapatisamvarana of Kulasekharavarman he is named first of all the mahākavīs as ayyaSuddaa-Kālidāsa-Harisa-Dandi-ppamuhānam mahākaīnam annadamasya, etc. The Mrichchhakatikā is undoubtedly one of the best natakas we know of. Naturally it must have been selected for the stage. The whole being a long piece, only a part of it was selected for occasional performances. That the Mrichchhakaţikā was tampered with we are quite certain. On the authority of an ancient commentary, Wilson pointed out long ago that from the words esā ajja Chāludattassa to the remark dishṭyā jīvita-suhridvarga āryah of Sarvilaka in the last act of this drama the whole text was incorporated by Nilakantha.2 That this is to is borne out by the verse-

यसूर्योदयभयतः कविनोचितपाचमेलनं न कतम्। सन्दरयुक्तिभिरचयदाचन्दनोक्ति नोलकण्डस्य तत्॥ which, as interpreted by Professor Sylvain Lévi, would account for the interpolation also. The original author was anxious to see his drama staged fully before the sun had risen,

¹ Cf. M. M. Ganapati S-str. Pratimo" Introduction, p. Xi.

This was noted by me long agoin my notes on the Mrichchhakafikā (N. S. Press, Bombay, 1902, pages 119-120). Dr. Morgenstierne has also noticed it recently in his work referred to above.

but Nilakantha was anxious to bring about a happy union of all the dramatis persona. Likewise, the person who culled the Chārudatta from the Mrichchhakatikā had to see that it would be acted at such and such time and during such an interval. Therefore, he selected that part alone which to all purposes was complete in itself.. The heroine starts to meet her lover and with this act the first part of the story would terminate. Both the lovers felt diffident, one because of his poverty and the other on account of her low status. Despite all this, their desire is accomplished; one goes to meet the other who has got the news and is ready to receive her. Even in the Mrichchhakatikā what follows Vasantasenā's starting is the tediously interrupting conversation she had with the vita and an ordinary exchange of a few sentences after which the lovers retired. That the Mrichchhakatikā has undergone a change we have just now seen. The probability, then, would be that it has got scenes which were added afterwards "to secure1 to the play a greater popularity with the public." Perhaps, the whole of the gamblers' scene in the second act and certainly the scene showing Dhūtā insisting on self-immolation in the tenth act are instances of such interpolations. The Chārudatta was in all probability taken out when the play was perhaps free from such interpolations. This is, possibly, the reason why we notice some difference in the quotations by Vāmana in the Kāvyālankārasūtravritti. One of these quotations is found in both the Chārudatta and the Mrichchhakaţikā, though it agrees rather with the version of the former. The other quotation is found in the Mrichchhakațikā only, for the Chārudatta does not contain the gamblers' scene at all. In the same way if a quotation is taken from the episode of Dhūtā in the last act of the Mrichchhakaţikā, we will not find it in any of the copies of the drama written before Nilakantha, who was responsible for the above noted interpolation. All the same the Mrichchhakatikā will be there.

Here we should remember that Vāmana has referred to Šūdraka as the author of the Mrichchhakatikā2 and has quoted from his work. While saying-

गुद्रकादिरचितेष् प्रवस्येष्वस्य भूयान् प्रपञ्चो दश्यते।

he does not refer to Bhāsa. Had a work of Bhāsa, as the Chārudatta is supposed to be, existed in his time, in all probability he would have referred to it in preference to that of Sūdraka, for it was original. But he has not. This fact will indicate that, at the time Vāmana lived, the writer of the Mrichchhakatikā was regarded to be an original writer and not a plagiarist. I am not here concerned with the question of the authorship3 of this prakarana. What I say in this connection is that the piece called Charudatta need not be the work of a writer who is different from that of the Mrichchhakatikā on the reasons so far advanced, nor can Bhasa be its author. That the story did not end with the fourth act of the Charudatta

¹ Dr. Charpentier, J. R. A. S., 1923, p. 602.

² Bhattanātha Svāmī; Indian Antiquary 1916, pp. 189 ff.

I believe in the South Indian origin of the Mrichchhalatika and that Sudraka was possibly a southerner. Still, I do not think that he could be a Raja Komați. The tradition connecting him with the Kamați caste does not appear to be very trustworthy. The Kanyakapurana where it is recorded and which is considered to be the chief work of the Komatis is not an ancient work. It probably belongs to the 10th or the 11th century A.D. and the Vishaucardhana connected with it was, apparently, the Chola king Rajendra, the patron of Nannayabhatta. the author of the Telugu Badratam who flourished about the 11th century A. D. In this connection see Dr. Charpentier's note "The author and date of the Mrichchhakatiki", in J. R. A. S. 1923, pp. 593 ff. E 2 seems to be certain. It is equally so, that it continued in the Mrichchhakaţikā. To think of the existence of a continuation of the Charudatta in some manuscript which is lying hidden somewhere, as some of these scholars do, seems to be unnecessary and futile.

Dr. Keith in his review of Dr. Morgenstierne's work, referred to above, seems to favour the view that the Mrichchhakațikā represents a working over of the Chārudattal and that the Charudatta is not a shortened version of it. He goes a step further and says that Bhasa probably left his work, namely Charudatta, incomplete, and some unknown author who worked it up in the form of the Mrichchhakatikā found out a device of ascribing the work to Sudraka to secure for it a measure of attention which would not have been accorded to it, had it appeared under his true name. Does not the learned Doctor while making this conjecture "demand too much from probability"? Apparently, this speculation is based on the belief that Sudraka as the author of the play had no historical reality. It is true that the figure of Śūdraka in Sanskrit literature has a legendary character, but does it follow that the Sudraka of the Mrichchhakāţikā must also be a mythical person? On the other hand, the way in which he is described would show that he must have been an historical character of flesh and bones, "who suffered from diseases like catarrh and was cured by the mercy of Siva." His identity, however, has not yet been established.

To think of some unknown writer who "worked up" the Chārudatta and ascribed the whole piece to a mythical ruler is to demand too much from imagination. It does not carry conviction home. There is hardly any necessity of creating further myths to show the high standard of self-abnegation. That the author of the Myichchhakatikā was a writer of a very high order is proved by the play itself. In fact, it is the latter portion where the author is found in his full vigour and which makes him a dramatist of an uncommon genius. It is there that the master-piece of the play, namely, Samsthanaka is fully delineated and the action fully developed. If comparison is to be drawn, this portion, it seems to me, is far superior to the first four acts which make up the Chārudatta, even if we take it for granted that they were composed by the ancient Bhāsa himself. Why would such a writer think of merging his personality into that of a fabulous or semi-mythical individual as Śūdraka? Why did he not, if he was a selfless writer, ascribe the work to Bhāsa himself? The name of Bhāsa would have secured greater fame and more attention than that of Sūdraka if that alone was the object. There is no reason why we should disbelieve the statement made in the prologue as to its authorship. While putting forth such assumptions, we take it for granted that the Chārudatta was written by the ancient Bhāsa and that as the Mrichchhakatikā came afterwards, it must have been based on it. We are influenced, I am afraid, by this supposition. If we consider the Trivandrum plays irrespective of the Bhāsa theory, it will, I make bold to say, at once appear to be a part of the fuller play, i.e., the Mrichchhakatikā and neither a shortened version nor a basis of it. This view will obviate the vain hope expressed by some of the supporters of the Bhasa theory, that the continuation of the Trivandrum play will2 come out some day and support their hypothesis.

1 Ind. Ant., 1923, pp. 59-60.

³ There is no need of testing the points brought forward to show that the Charudatta is an incomplete play for I admit that it is so as compared with the Mrichchhabatika of which it is only a part.

As to the question who patronised the author of the Trivandrum plays, I doubt if it can be finally solved under the existing circumstances. That there was some royal patron of the poet cannot be denied. Had there been none the use of the word Rajasimha in the concluding stanza would become useless. Rājasimha seems to be the surname or an epithet of the king who patronised the author. The term is 1 such as can be very appropriately used for any ruler. The same is the case with the word Rājā of the Dhūrtaviṭasamvāda of Iśvaradatta and Narendra of the Ubhayābhisārikā of Vararuchi, alluded to above. Scholars differ as to the identity of the Rājasimha whom the author of the plays had in mind. Dr. Barnett finds the Pandya Ter-maran Rājasimha I, while Dr. Sten Konow recognises the Western Kshatrapa named Rudrasimha (Cir. 181-196 A.D.) in him. Possibly, there were two patrons. One was called Rājasimha and the other Upendra, for both these terms occur in the concluding verses. It is not impossible that these epithets are meant for the two Pallava chiefs, namely, Simhavishņu (Cir. 590 A. D.) and Narasimhavarman Rājasimha I (Cir. 646 A. D.). The Mattavilāsaprahasana was composed by a Pallava king and closely resembles these plays. It does not appear to be unreasonable to assume that these plays, too, were written under similar conditions. The stanza-

इमामुदीर्गार्गवनीलवस्त्रां नरेश्वरो नः प्रथिवीं प्रशास्तु। would rather countenance such a hypothesis. But, as Dr. Keith has already remarked, such identifications ought to be treated as mere guesses, and nothing more. The identity will remain obscure, for the author himself wanted to keep it so, otherwise he would have given us the proper name of the patron. Here, I think, it will not be out of place to consider what Mr. K. P. Jayaswal has thought of this patron and the age of the plays. His opinion is based on the idea of "one umbrella empire extending from the Himālayas to the Vindhyas and up to the ocean " found in these plays in verses like imām sāgara-paryantām,3 etc. He thinks that such ideas cannot go back further than the days of Chandragupta Maurya and could not be remembered later than the rise of the Andhrabhrityas or the Kushāṇas. Such a conception, he opines, must refer to a period somewhere between 325 B. C. and the end of the 1st century B. C. In support of this opinion, he adduces the words "our sovereign", "sovereign lion" and the terms Upendra and Nărāyaṇa used in these plays. In the latter name he recognises the Kāṇva-Nārāyaṇa.* A glance at the passage in the Dūtavākyam, on which so much reliance is placed, will show that there is no mention of the "Barhadrathas" at all, the person intended being Jarasandha, the son of Brihadratha. If Nārāyaṇa or Upendra were the patron, the vilification by Duryodhana will be out of place, for no patron will tolerate his being rebuked in any garb. The words Upendra and Nārāyaṇa do ¹ Avimāraka.

^{*} See footnote above where we have Sagaramekhalām instead.

^{*} T. S. S. No. XXII, p. 30.

Lot refer to any mortal, but the chief god of the Hindu triad, as the benedictory stanzas in some of these plays, e.g., the Urubhanga or the Madhyamavyayoga will clearly show. No reliance can be placed on ideas like "one umbrella rule", for they are little less than poetic embellishments. Students of Indian epigraphy and numismatics know that even ordinary petty chieftains are very often described as overlords and emperors of in charters as well as coins. Such من شاه عالم از دهلي تايالم the world expressions need not be taken in a literal sense. In the same way, it seems to me, the mention, in these plays, of an empire bounded by the Himavat and the Vindhya need not necessarily show a political orientation. To reason from the known to the unknown we may take a few of the South Indian kings. Venkata I is described as ruling over the whole earth from the Setu to the Himavat. Some of the Pandya kings are2 said to have engraved the pair of fish on the topmost rock of the lord of mountains or the Himālaya. Sundara-Pāṇḍya is said to have conquered Konkaṇa, Kośala, Magadha, Kalinga and above all China3 also. Why multiply instances. These expressions are not to be taken very seriously. Even if we do, the case of Rajendra Chola would show that such expressions could well be applied to a southerner also, after keeping a margin for a poet's hyperboles. Besides, we have to remember that if an author from the south wants to describe an ancient event which took place in the north or has to praise his patron in the north, he will naturally keep himself within the limits of the north. A good geographer from the south, who is conversant with the past history of India, or who is well versed in the epics and other literature of the country, can very well describe events which took place long before he was born. Bearing all this in mind, I do not consider it necessary to think of any special empire of the Mauryas, the Kushāṇas, the Guptas, or others. Nor does it appear to be necessary to think of the royal statues discovered at Mathura, while reading of the Pratimagriha or Valhalla in the Pratimānāṭaka for, in the south itself there must have been such grihas in olden days. This may very reasonably be surmised from the portrait statues, which are still to be seen at Mahābalipuram or the Seven Pagodas. The Varāha cave there has got a seated figure of Simhavishnu flanked by his queens on one side and the standing figure of his son Mahendravarman and his queens on the other. That they are the portrait figures (pratimās) of the Pallava kings of these names is indubitably proved by the labels so clearly written above them in the old Pallava-grantha characters which read Srī-Simhavinnu-Pottādhirājan and Srī-Mahēndra-Pottādhirājan, respectively. A writer from the south, who knows of such pratimās, or one might say-pratimāgrihas-in his own province, need not think of the portrait statues of the Kushānas, the Śaiśunāgas or other dynasties. Thus, we see that the argument of the pratimāgrihas cannot counteract the proposition that the Pratimanataka was written in or after the sixth century of the Christian era by a South Indian writer. That he was acquainted with the Mathura country will not make the author a mathura or for the mavter of that, a northerner. That the Pratimānātaka cannot be such an old work as the followers of the Bhasa theory take it to be, we shall see presently.

¹ See Padmaneri or Vellangudi grants, Ep. Ind. Vol. XVI, pp. 291 ff.

^{*} See Velvikudi grant of Nedunjadaiyan, Ep. Ind, Vol. XVII, pp. 291 ff.

³ South Indian Inscriptions, Vol. IV. p. 108, No. 372.

⁴ Annual Report on South Indian Epigraphy, Madras (1922-23), s. 94.

There are some other minor arguments raised in support of the Bhasa theory which may be examined here briefly. Some scholars are of opinion that the Trivandrum plays make mention of an observatory at Ujjain, the Venuvana, the Nagavana, the old Rājagriha and Pātaliputra when it was just founded and, therefore, must be very old. I doubt if any importance can be attached to such an argument. One may write a book to-day mentioning all these places in a similar manner, yet, I wonder if we will ascribe such a work to a heary antiquity on that account. The traditional epithetal of Bhāsa like Jalaņa-mitte, "friend of fire" Bhāso hāsaḥ "laugh of poetry" and purāṇa "the ancient", cannot prove that Bhasa was the author of the Trivandrum plays. These can be applied to other writers as well. Bhāsa alone is not the friend of fire. Śaktibhadra has introduced fire into his play. So also Sriharsha. The tradition making Bhāsa the friend of fire is preserved in the Prithvīrājavijaya.2 In that case Bhāsa would become the writer of the Svapnavāsavadattā as well as the Vishnudharmottara,3 in that both these works were regarded to be of exceptional merit and believed to have withstood the ordeal of fire.4 I have already given my view regarding the Svapnavāsavadattā of the Trivandrum series. It cannot be the Svapnavāsavadattā of Bhāsa, which is still an untraced work. As to the other book, I am inclined to identify it with the Vishnudharmottariya which is so well known in Kashmir and has been published at the Venkatesvara Press of Bombay. As the question of its identity is not connected with the present paper there is no need of my discussing it here.

I doubt if due importance has been attached to the evidence of the anthologies against the Bhāsa theory. Some twelve stanzas are ascribed to Bhāsa in these collections, and it is very remarkable that none of these is to be found in any of the thirteen plays which have been attributed to this ancient writer. These anthologies may not always be accurate in their ascriptions, but it is not insignificant that not even one stanza out of these twelve should be found there, if they were written by Bhāsa at all. Leaving aside the anthologies, we find that even the verse peyā surā,6 etc., which Soma deva in his Yaśastilaka ascribes to Bhāsa, does not occur in any of these thirteen nātakas. On the other hand, it is found in the Mattavilāsaprahasana, as stated above, where, apparently, it occurs as a subhāshita.7 This negative evidence, I think, also goes against the Bhāsa theory.

भासनाटकचलेपिक्के: चित्रं परीचित्रः।

सम्बासनदक्तभा दाइकोऽस्त पावकः॥

Prithvirājavijaya.

भागस कार्य सल विश्वधर्मीन्

सीऽधाननात् पारदवनसभीच ।

¹ Dr. Banerji, J. R. A. S. 1921, p. 379.

¹ Ind. Ant. 1913, pp. 52-53.

[&]quot; Rājašekhara's Sūktīmuktāvali-

^{*} There is no necessity of believing in the transference of tradition suggested by Mr. D. R. Bhandarkar in Ind. Ant. 1913, p. 53.

⁵ Bühler in his exhaustive article on it (Ind. Ast., Vol. xix, pp. 382 ff.) has shown that it is an old work which was extant about 500 A. D.

^{*} See above, page 13.

⁷ Dr. Thomas (J. R. A. S. 1922, p. 82) says that one of these verses ascribed to Bhāsa was identified by Ganapati Sästri in his edition of the Mattavillasa, which is similar in structure to Bhasa's works though I have not been able to find out that verse.

As to the Pratimānāṭaka, the mention of Medhātithi throws a doubt on its antiquity. It is said that this Medhātithi was some Vedic rishi, and to support the assumption it is stated that mention is made of the Barhaspatyam, but the name of Kautilya's Arthaśāstra is not to be seen in this play. I think the futility of this point will become clear, if the speech of Ravana, where these names occur, is carefully analysed. Rāvaņa is represented to be a braggart. He forgets the very Sastras of which he pretends to be the master, while praising himself. Further, while recommending some objects to Rāma for the performance of the Śrāddha rites he does not follow the Dharma-śāstra. Fearing that Rāma may find him out, he mixes un the authorities, and to confuse Rama brings in cows, Vardhranas, and "golden" deer somehow. The existing law books do not support him. The Vishnusmriti recommends a cow for only a partial satisfaction, but the Manusmriti does not. Vardhranas is a cattle not a bird,2 as recommended for the Srāddha rites. The bird of this name may do for a bali-dāna3 only. What Rāvaṇa says is not supported by the śāstra he brags to be conversant with. The author makes him say so to show how hypocritical he is, and brings in Mārīcha in the form of a deer quite ingeniously to make Rāma leave the cottage and pursue the false deer. The talk of antique sastras is to impress his importance upon Rāma. Kautilya, as a reference to Chapter II of the Arthaśāstra will show, knew of the arthaśāstras, viz., the Mānava, the Bārhaspatya and the Auśanasa Rāvana had already talked of the first, so he named the second and omitted the third purposely to hide his real character, as the School of Uśanas is meant for the Rākshasas. He did not mention Kautilya for his "crooked policy" as he was a Brahmana of a high character! Besides, there is no reason to assume that all the works he talked of really existed. At least, all are not known to us. I doubt if we know of the Nyāya-śāstra of Medhātithi, for instance. This argument is further vitiated by the verse-which is found in the Hitopadeśa. There is no mention here of Kautilya. Does it follow that the Hitopadeśa was written before Kautilya? Certainly not. I doubt if any importance could be attached to argumentum ex silentio or to the mention of more ancient names in such cases. As Medhātithi is spoken of in the Pratimā°, so are the śramaṇas in some of these nāṭakas, for instance, in the Pratijiña°, the Avimāraka or the Chārudatta. They appear certainly as Buddhist monks, and to explain away their mention in these plays by saying that Brahmanic treatises like the *Vaikhānasa-dharmapraśna*¹ also talk of them, cannot hold good, for the latter speak of them as ascetics practising penance and not as the followers of Buddha. This and other similar arguments, occasionally advanced in support of the Bhāsa theory, do not require serious consideration and may be passed over.

उज्ञना वेद यच्छास्तं यच वेद वृहस्पतिः। स्वभावादेव तत्संवै स्रोवृहौ संप्रतिष्ठितम्॥

Conclusion.—Thus, I think, I have examined here all the main arguments which have been brought forward in support of the Bhāsa theory and shown how hollow they

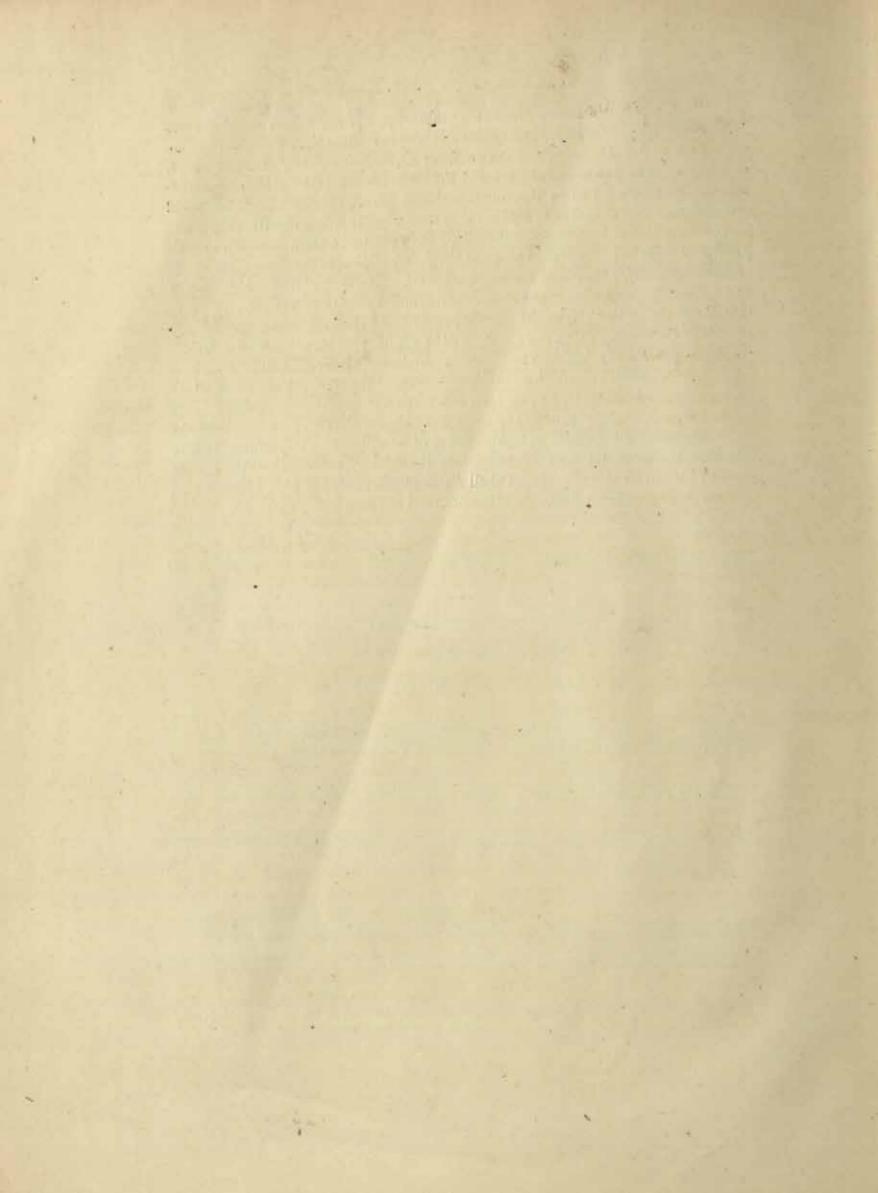

¹ S. B. E. LXXX, p. 249.

Kullūka on Manu, III, 271.

² See Kālikāpurāņa quoted in the Subdakalpadruma under the word.

^{*} Introduction to Pratima-, p. XXXI.

are. They can by no means prove that Bhasa was the real author of the thirteen Trivandrum plays. Arguing like the adherents of the Bhasa theory one can ascribe these plays to Saktibhadra, whose work entitled Aścharyachūdāmani, as shown above, not only exhibits a close resemblance with them, but possesses most of the characteristies which are believed to be their distinguishing features, besides being a fairly old composition. I do not mean to say that they were actually written by Saktibhadra or any of the authors of the works with which I have compared them in regard to their Prakrit or other points. What I hold and have tried to demonstrate here is that none of the arguments, adduced so far whether by the originator of the Bhasa theory or by his supporters in India and abroad, will suffice, singly or collectively, to prove that Bhasa, the ancient playwright, was their author. All these arguments are ativyapta or wide of the mark, for they can equally well be applied to other plays, whose authors are known without any doubt. Their examination shows that we are still far from having solved the question about Bhasa or the authorship of the Trivandrum plays, which must consequently be treated as an open one. The Trivandrum plays cannot be the work of Bhasa. We must still hope for some lucky chance that may bring to light the real "nāṭakachakra" of Bhāsa so highly spoken of by writers like Rājasimha, Bāṇa or Kālidāsa, the immortal poet of India. So the Bhāsa theory has been a very -pleasant illusion all this time, and I shall feel amply rewarded if what I have stated in these pages goes to disillusion its adherents, as it has done in my own case.

INDEX.

A

Abhinavagupta, 28, 3, 9, 10, 12, Abhishekanātaka, 28, 8, 14. Amarsimha, 28, 10. Anandavardhana, 28, 10. Anubhūtisvarūpāchārya, 28, 18. Arthasāstra, 28, 13, 14, 28. Ascharyachūdāmani, 28, 1, 5, 10, 14, 17, 19, 29. Aśöka, 28, 3. Aśvaghōsha, 28, 3, 18. Avimāraka, 28, 6, 8, 28.

B

Bālacharita, 28, 8, 9, 12. Bana, 28, 3, 4, 5, 6, 29. Banerji, Dr. A. P., 28, 3, 5, 6, 7n. Bārhaspatya, 28, 28. Barnett, Dr. L. D., 28, 1, 4, 9, 11, 18, 20, 25. Bhagavadajjuka, 28, 6, 7, 8, 20. Bhāmaha, 28, 2, 3, 12, 13. Bhāmahālankāra, 28, 12. Bhandarkar, Mr. D. R., 28, 27n. Bharata, 28, 6, 8, 9n. Bharata's Nātyašāstra, 28, 6, 8, 9. Bharatanātyavedavivriti, 28, 3. Bhartrihari, 28, 14n. Bhāsa's Prākrit, 28, 3, 18n. Bhāvaprakāša, 28, 4, 11. Bhojadeva, 28, 8, 11, 25n. Bodhāyana, 28, 6, 7. Brihadratha, 28, 25. Bühler, 28, 27n.

C

Chanakya, 28, 13. Chandragupta, 28, 25. Charpentier, Dr., 28, 21. Chārudatta, 28, 3, 4, 6, 8, 10n, 12, 14, 21, 22, 23, 24, 28. Chaturbhani, 28, 25n. Chola, Rajendra-, 28, 23n, 26.

31

D

Dāmaka, 28, 5n.

Dandin, 28, 2, 12, 13.

Daridrachārudatta, 28, 3, 10n., 12.

Daṣakumāracharita, 28, 22.

Devadhar, Mr. C. R., 28, 9n.

Dharmasāstra, 28, 28.

Dhūrtavitasamvāda, 28, 5, 9, 25.

Dhvanyālokalochana, 28, 3, 9, 10, 11.

Drama, The Sanskrit, in its Origin, Development, Theory and Practice, 28, 4.

Dramaturgie Indienne, Deux Nouveax Traites de, 28, 11.

Durghalavritti, 28, 18.

Duryodhana, 28, 25.

Dūtaghalotkacha, 28, 18n.

Dūtavākya, 28, 25.

G

Gaudavaho, 28, 4.
Guṇachandra, 28, 9, 11.
Grant of Neduñjadaiyan, 28, 26n.
Grants, Padmaner or Vellangudi, 28, 26n.

H

Harshacharita, 28, 4. Hemachandra, 28, 11.

1

Iliad, 28, 17. Irving, Washington, 28, 21n. Iśvaradatta, 28, 5, 9, 25.

J

Jarásandha, 28, 25.Jayadeva, 28, 4.Jayaswal, Mr. K. P., 28, 25.

K

Kādambarī, 28, 22. Kālidāsa, 28, 2, 3, 17, 18, 19, 20, 29. Kalyānasaugandhika, 28, 5, 9. Kāṇya-Nārāyaṇa, 28, 25. Kanyakā purāņa, 28, 23n.

Karnabhāra, 28, 8.

Kautilya, 28, 3, 28.

Do., Arthaśāstra of, 28, 2, 13n.

Kāvyādarśa, 28, 12, 13.

Kāvyālankāra, 28, 12, 13.

Kāvyālankārasūtravritti, 28, 3, 23.

Kāvyānuśāsana. 28, 11.

Keith, Dr. A. Berriedale, 28, 4, 24, 25.

Konow, Dr. Sten, 28, 6n, 10n, 25.

Kshemendra, 28, 17.

Kulaśekharavarmman, 28, 5, 22.

Kullūka, 28, 28n.

Kumārasambhava, 28, 18n.

L

Lesny, Dr. V., 28, 18. Lévi, Prof. Sylvain, 28, 9, 11, 22.

M

Madhyamavyāyoga, 28, 26.

Mahābhārata, 28, 18.

Mahānātaka, 28. 3.

Mahendravarmman I, Mamandur Inscription of, 28, 7, 8, 26.

Mahendravikrama, 28, 5, 7.

Mallinatha, 28, 18.

Mantrānkanātaka, 28, 22.

Manuniti, 28, 13n.

Manusmriti, 28, 28.

Mārīcha, 28, 28.

Mathura, 28, 26.

Mattavilāsaprahasana, 28, 4, 7, 8, 13, 19, 20, 25, 27.

Medhātithi, 28, 28.

Do. Nyāyašāstra of, 28, 28,

Mencha, 28, 12n.

Milton, 28, 17.

Morgenstierne, Dr. Georg, 28, 3, 22n, 24.

Mrichchhakatikā, 28, 3, 4, 8, 14n, 21, 22, 23, 24.

Mudrārākshasa, 28, 14n.

N

Nāgānanda, 28, 6, 19, 20, 22. Nāgavana, 28, 27. 34 INDEX.

Nāmalingānuśāsana, 28, 10, 23n.
Nannayabhatta, 28, 23n.
Narasimhavarman, 28, 25.
Nātakalakshanaratnakośa, 28, 9, 11.
Nātyadarpana, 28, 9, 11.
Nīlakantha, 28, 5, 22, 23.

P

Pādatāditaka, 28, 5, 6, 9.

Padmaprābhritaka, 28, 5, 9.

Padmāvati, 28, 10, 11.

Pāṇini, 28, 2, 17, 18.

Paradise Lost, 28, 17.

Paradise Regained, 28, 17.

Pradyumnābhyudaya, 28, 6, 19.

Prasannarāghava, 28, 4.

Pratijāānāṭikā, 28, 2, 28.

Pratijāāyaugandharāyana, 28, 2, 3, 8, 12, 13, 22.

Pratimānāṭaka, 28, 17, 26, 28.

Printz, Dr. Wilhelm, 28, 3, 18.

I'rithvīrājavijaya, 28, 27.

R

Raghuvamsa, 28, 18n.
Rājasekhara, 28, 3.
Rājasimha, 28, 25, 29.
Rājendra, king, 28, 23n.
Rāma, 28, 28.
Rāmachandra, 28, 9, 11.
Rāmakrishna, Mr., 28, 13n, 25n.
Rāmāyana, 28, 17.
Rāvana, 28, 28.
Ravivarmman, king, 28, 6.

S

Sāgaranandin, 28, 9, 11.

Sāhityadarpaṇa, 28, 5.

Saktibhadra, 28, 1, 5, 9, 10, 14, 16, 19, 27, 29.

Sākuntala, 28, 17.

Sāṇdilya, 28, 7, 20.

Sāradātanaya, 28, 9, 11.

Śaranadeva, 28, 18.

Sārasvatam, 28, 18.

Sarasvati, Mr., 28, 7u.

Sarvānanda, 28, 10.

Šāstrī, Mr. Gaṇapati, 28, 1, 2, 4, 6, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 16, 18, 19.

Šāstrī, Shāma, R., 28, 13n.

35

Simhavishnu, 28, 5, 25, 26.
Sivarāma, 28, 6.
Somadeva, 28, 13, 27.
Śriharsha, 28, 27.
Śriharsha, 28, 27.
Śringāraprakāša, 28, 4, 11, 25n.
Subhadrādhananjaya, 28, 5, 19.
Sūdraka, 28, 5, 9, 22, 23, 24.
Sukthankar, Dr. V. S., 28, 1, 3, 9n, 18, 20n, 21n.
Sundara-Pāṇdya, 28, 26.
Svāmī, Mr. Bhaṭṭanātha, 28, 1, 10, 11.
Svapnanāṭaka, 28, 4, 8, 9.
Svapnavāsavadattā, 28, 2, 3, 4, 9, 10, 11, 12, 27.
Šyāmilaka, 28, 5, 9.

T

Tāpasavatsarāja, 28, 10.
Tapatīsamvaraņa, 28, 5, 19, 22.
Tathāgata, 28, 7.
Thomas, Dr. F. W., 28, 3, 9, 11, 20, 27n.
Traivikrama, 28, 5n.

U

Über das Verhältnis zwischen Cärudatta und Mrichchakaţikā, 28, 3, 5n.
Ubhayābhisārikā, 28, 5, 9, 25.
Unmādavāsavadattā, 28, 9.
Upendra, 28, 26.
Ürubhanga, 28, 26.
Uttararāmacharita, 28, 17.

V

Vaikhānasadharmaprašna, 28, 28.

Vākpati, 28, 4.

Vālmīki, 28, 2.

Vāmana, 28, 2, 3, 12, 23.

Vararuchi, 28, 5, 9, 25.

Vārdhrānas, 28, 28.

Vāsavadattā, 28, 3, 10, 11.

Vatsarāja, 28, 10, 11, 12.

Venkata I, 28, 26.

Venuvana, 28, 27.

Vikramāditya, 28, 12n.

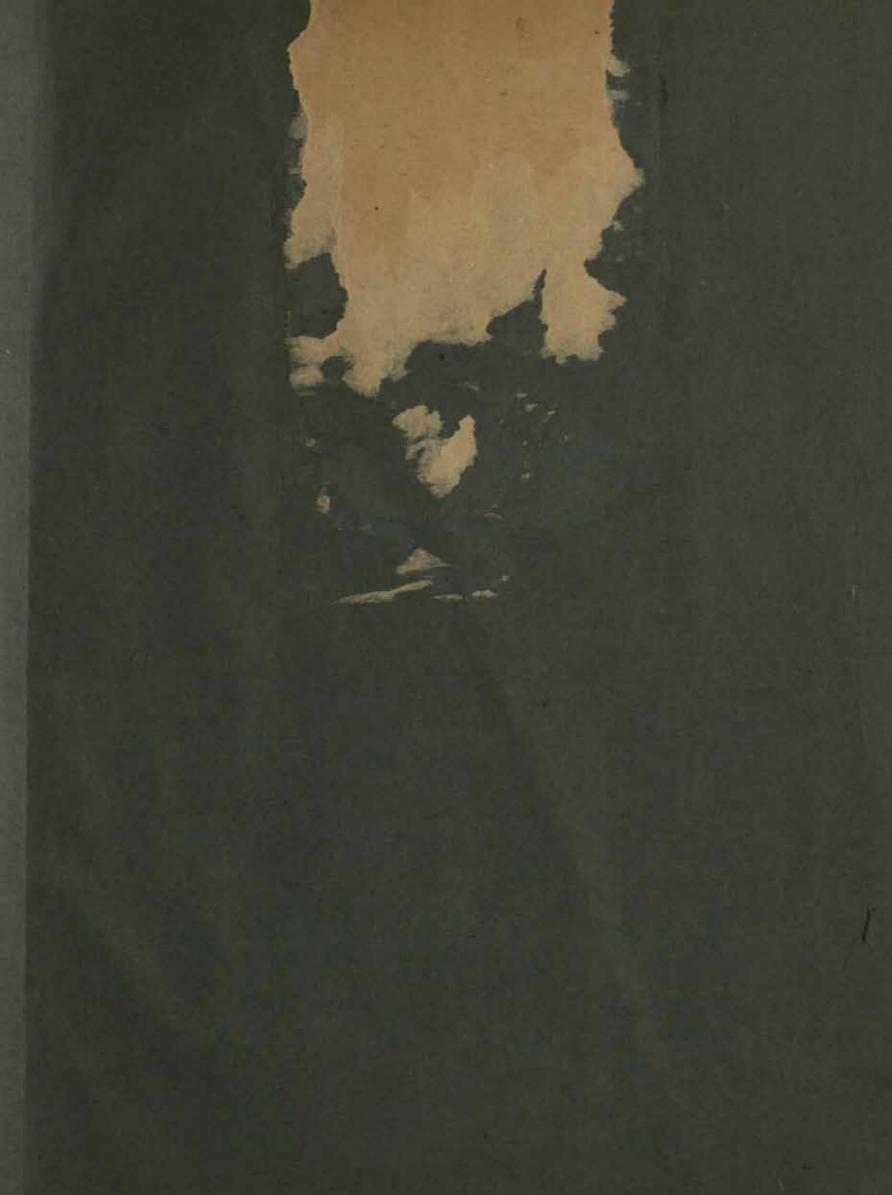

Vikramorvašī, 28, 5. Vishnudharmottara or rīya, 28, 27. Vishnusmriti, 28, 28. Visvanātha, 28, 5, 6, 8. Vyāsa, 28, 2, 7.

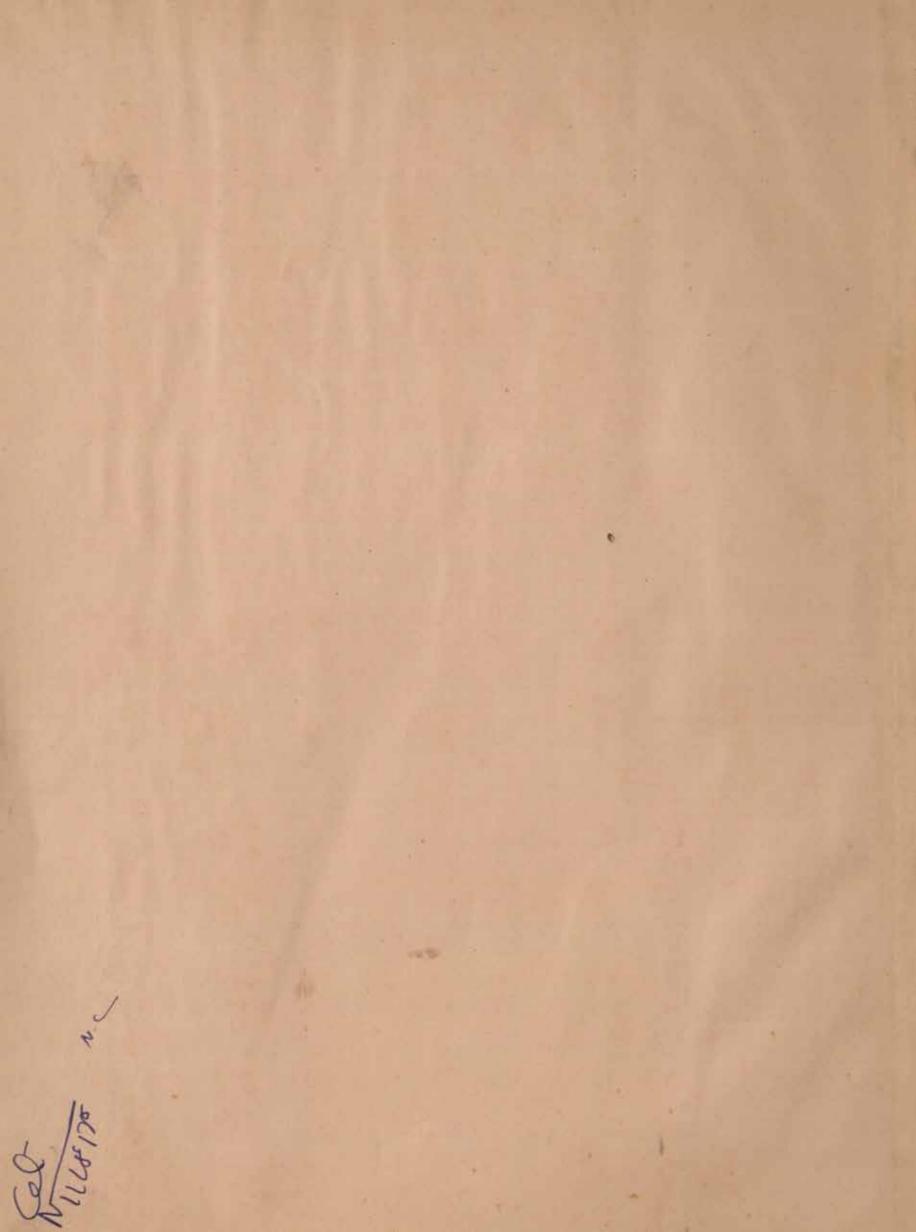

W

Wilson, 28, 22,

Y

Yasastilaka, 28, 13, 27.

Memoir No: 28. Central Archaeological Library, Call No R 913.03/IDA/805 Author-Sasti MiaNaude Title while of the History

"A book that is shut is but a block"

ARCHAEOLOGICAL

GOVT. OF INDIA

of Archaeology

HI.

Please help us to keep the book clean and moving.

5. E., 148. N. GELHI.