The Madras University Historical Series III

HISTORY OF THE PALLAVAS OF KANCHI SIMHAVISHNU AND HIS QUEENS HISTORY OF THE PALLAVAS OF KANCHI

BY
R. GOPALAN, M.A.,
University Research Student, 1920-1924,
Sub-Librarian, Connemara Public Library, Madras

EDITED FOR THE UNIVERSITY WITH INTRODUCTION AND NOTES

BY
S. KRISHNASWAMY AIYANGAR, M.A., HONY. Ph.D.,
Professor of Indian History and Archaeology, Madras University, Honorary Correspondent of the Archaeological Survey of India

PUBLISHED BY THE UNIVERSITY OF MADRAS
1928
PRINTED IN INDIA
BY GEORGE KENNETH AT THE DIOCESAN PRESS, MADRAS—1928. C13638
CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chap.</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>I</td>
<td>Introductory. History of Previous Research and Sources of History for the Pallavas</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>II</td>
<td>Theories of the Origin of the Pallavas: Pre-Pallava History of Kanchipuram</td>
<td>15</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III</td>
<td>Early Pallavas of the Prakrit Records.</td>
<td>32</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV</td>
<td>Early Pallavas of the Sanskrit Records.</td>
<td>41</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V</td>
<td>Contemporary Political Powers. The Salankayanas, Kadambas, etc.</td>
<td>70</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VI</td>
<td>The Pallava Ascendancy—'The Dynasty of Simhavishnu' the reign of Simhavishnu and Mahendravarma I</td>
<td>79</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VII</td>
<td>Narasimhavarma I (Mahamalla) to Rajasimha</td>
<td>97</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VIII</td>
<td>Dynastic Revolution. Hiranyavarman and his Successor Nandivarman Pallavamalla</td>
<td>113</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IX</td>
<td>Successors of Pallavamalla</td>
<td>132</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X</td>
<td>General Considerations of Pallava Rule in South India</td>
<td>146</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

APPENDICES

- (A) A Chronological Index of Pallava Inscriptions ... 163
- (B) Extract from the Mahavamsa ... 215
- (C) Extract from the 'Avantisundarikathāsara' ... 221

Special Notes by Editor ... 229

Errata ... 233

Index ... 235
CONTENTS

ILLUSTRATIONS AND MAPS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Illustration</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Statue of Simhavishnu with his queens in the Adivaraha Temple at Mahabalipuram</td>
<td>Frontispiece</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Statue of Mahendravarmam I with his queens in the same temple</td>
<td>88</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Map of South India showing distribution of Pallava Rock-cut Temples bearing Inscriptions</td>
<td>At end</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
WORKS CONSULTED

Archæological Reports of Mysore.
Archæological Survey of India Annual Reports for 1906-7.
Beal: Buddhist Records of the Western World.
Bombay Gazetteer.
Carr (Capt.): Desc. and Historical Papers on the Seven Pagodas.
Crole: Chingleput Manual.
Epigraphia Indica.
Epigraphia Carnatica.
Fergusson (J.) and Burgess (J.): Cave Temples in India.
Fergusson: History of Indian and Eastern Architecture.
Fleet: Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts.
" : Gupta Inscriptions.
Indian Antiquary.
Indian Historical Quarterly.
Journal of Indian History.
Journal of the Mythic Society.
Jouveau-Dubreuil (G): Archæologie du Sud de l' Inde (1914).
" : Ancient History of Deccan (1921).
" : Dravidian Architecture.
" : Pallava Antiquities.
" : Pallavas (1917).
" : Pallava Painting.
Kanakasabhai (V.) : The Tamils Eighteen hundred Years Ago.
WORKS CONSULTED

Krishnaswami Aiyangar (S.): Ancient India (1911).
" " : The Beginnings of South Indian History (1917).
" " : Early History of Vaishnavism in South India.
" " : Some Contributions of South India to Indian Culture (1924).
" " : Origin and Early History of the Pallavas of Kāñchī.
" " : Manimekhalai in its Historical Setting.

South Indian Epigraphy—Annual Reports.

The Influences of Indian Art (1925). By Strzygowski (J.) and others.

The Madras Journal of Literature and Science.

The Mahavamsa.

Nalayira Prabandam.

Rice (L.): The Mysore Gazetteer. 2 Vols.
" " : Mysore and Coorg from Inscriptions.

Sentamil.

South Indian Inscriptions, Vols. I-V.

Srinivasa Aiyangar (P. T.): History of Pallavas. (Tamil.)

Srinivasa Aiyangar (M.): Tamil Studies.

Transactions of the Second and Third All-India Oriental Conference—1924.

Travancore Sanskrit Series LV. The Mattavilasaprahasana of Sri Mahendravikramavarman.

Vaidya (C. V.): A History of Medieval Hindu India.
INTRODUCTION

The following pages embody the work of Mr. R. Gopalan, M.A., a Research Student at the University, who took up for his subject the History of the Pallavas of Kanchi. He worked through his full term, and the thesis incorporates his work on the subject. The thesis of just a little over 160 pages constitutes a dissertation on the Pallavas, which takes us as far as we can proceed on the subject with the material at our disposal. Many of the difficulties in the subject have been brought nearer to solution by the work of a number of scholars, all of which is considered in the work. It does not pretend to have solved all questions connected with the history of the Pallavas finally, but it may be stated that Mr. Gopalan's work carries us as near to an up-to-date history of the Pallavas as, in the circumstances, is possible.

Our purpose in this introduction is to draw attention to the salient features of the thesis and indicate points where more light would be welcome. Such advance as was possible in the study of the subject within the last year or two is also incorporated with a view to completing the work of Mr. Gopalan and to invite examination and criticism by those interested in Indian Historical Research.

The name Pallavas has been a problem for scholars, and has received attention from time to time from several of them, offering explanations of various kinds; the doubt and the difficulty alike have arisen from the fact that a race of people called 'Pahlavas' were known and are referred to as such along with the Sakas and others, both in the North-west of India and nearer in the North-western coast of the Dakhan. This, in literary texts sometimes takes the alternative form 'Pallava', and thus two forms, 'Pahlava' and 'Pallava' occurring side by side, give colour to the assumption that the two words are identical. They are indeed identical in form, but do not preclude the possibility of another word assuming this identical form. The word 'Pallava' as it applies to the rulers of Kanchi is undoubtedly and invariably a later form. We do not meet with the form 'Paahlaiva' in connection with the Pallavas of Kanchi in any record of their time. The question therefore would naturally arise whether we need necessarily regard the name 'Pallavas' as applied to the rulers of Kanchi as at all equivalent to the other 'Pallavas' either as a word or in regard to what the word stands for. The word as applied to 'Pallavas' in the first instance seems to be a translation of the Tamil words 'Tondaiyar' and 'Tondamam, and this finds confirmation in some of the copper-plate charters, which do bring in tender twigs of some kind in connection with the eponymous name 'Pallava'. This undoubtedly is a later use of the term, but gives the indication that even at that comparatively late period, the traditional notion was that they were not foreigners, such as the Paahlaivas would have been. In all the material that has been examined, there is nothing to indicate either the migration of a people or even of a family that might have ultimately raised itself into a dynasty from the North-west, so that the assumption of a connection between the one set of people and the other rests upon the mere doubtful ground of a possibility, whereas the translation or adaptation of a Southern word into Sanskrit is very much more than a possibility, as indeed a word like 'Dravida' or 'Dramida' would clearly indicate. The distinction that Rajaśekhara makes between the Southern Pallava and the North-western Paahlaiva seems in the circumstances to be a crucial indication that in the estimation of scholarly folk of the ninth and tenth centuries, the two were to be regarded as distinct from each other. The foreign origin of the Pallavas therefore seems to have no ground to support it.

The Pallavas seem nevertheless to have been foreign to the locality as far as our evidence takes us at present. The rulers of Kanchi had continued to be known as Tondamans all through historical times. The people of the locality were similarly known as Tondayiar, the region occupied by the people consequently Tondamandalam. These names are all traceable in South Indian literature in the period of prominence of the Pallavas and even before. The name Pallava however is used generally in the charters ever since the Pallavas issued charters, so that historically speaking we would be justified if we took Pallava and Tondamān to be synonymous, and this receives support in the use of the compound expression in one of the poems of Tirumangai Ālvār, ‘the Pallava, who is the ruler of the Tondaiyar’ (Pallavan Tondaiyar Kōn). Therefore it is not as if literature did not know the term; much rather literary use regarded the two as synonymous, so that the Pallavas, whoever they were, were Tondamāns, rulers of Tondamanḍalam undoubtedly.

So far as the Pallavas of the charters are concerned, whether the charters be issued in Prakrit or in Sanskrit, they are termed, the Pallavas of Kanchi, though several of the charters happened to be issued from localities comparatively far to the north of Kanchi. Several of the places in which their inscriptions and copper-plate charters have been found, or from which these were issued, are capable of location from the Bellary District eastwards up to the River Krishna in the north. Even so they seem to exclude the region which might geographically be described as the region of the Nallā Malais and the Pacha-Malais extending southwards along the mountainous tracts of the Eastern Ghats till we come past Tirupati into Chittoor, and the Bay of Bengal. From the Sangam literature so-called of Tamil, we are enabled to make the following distribution of peoples, if not exactly of rulers and dynasties. The Pāṇḍya country was in the extreme south extending from coast to coast. The Chēra extended northwards from it along the coast stretching into the interior indefinitely, the actual eastern boundary varying from time to time almost up to the frontiers of Karur. Therefrom went northwards up to the borders of the great forest the territory known to Tamil literature as Konkānam (Konkan), over which ruled a particular chieftain known as Nannan till he was overthrown by the Chēras. The east coast region, however, beginning with the River Vellār flowing across the state of Pudukottah now and emptying itself into the Bay of Bengal which marked the orthodox southern boundary of the Cholas, constituted the Cholamaṇḍalam which actually extended northwards therefrom to as far as the River South Pennar where began the division known as Aruvāṇāḍu, which extended northwards along the coast almost as far as the Northern Pennar. This last division fell into two parts, Aruvāṇāḍu or Aruvā South and Aruvā Vaḍatalai or Aruvā North. The region set over this in the interior including perhaps even a considerable part of what is marked off as Aruvāṇāḍu constituted the Toṇḍamaṇḍalam, a division occupied by the Toṇḍayar and belonging to them. It is this Toṇḍamaṇḍalam that was dominated by Kanchi and extended vaguely northwards as far as Tirupati, which seems to have marked off the northern boundary, which sometimes extended farther northwards quite up to the northern borders of the Pulicat Lake, the region round Kāḷahasti on one side of it at any rate, being borne in the old accounts even now as Toṇḍamān Maṇai. We have evidence of an old chieftain by name Tiraiyan ruling over the territory dominated by Vēngaḍam or Tirupati whose capital was in a place called Pavattiri (Reddi-palem in the Gudur Taluk of the Nellore District). At one time this region was known as Kākandināḍu, 'submerged by the sea,' Kākandi being the name of the Chola capital, Puhār, because of the semi-historical ruler, Kakandan. It seems as though this territory was a new conquest to which was given the name from the capital of the conquering rulers. Whether the name was actually so given to it or no, it is evident that the region was ruled by a Tiraiyan chieftain who is referred to in the poems of the Aṭṭanāṭu as Tiraiyan merely without a qualifying adjunct. The Chola Karikāla is given credit in tradition which has come down to us for having cleared forests, constructed tanks and made other irrigation works, and thus introduced civilization in Toṇḍamaṇḍalam, which till then remained, from the point of view of the Chola country, uncivilized. Chola viceroys were thereafter appointed at Kanchi, and the territory ruled over by the Viceroy at Kanchi is generally referred to as Toṇḍamaṇḍalam. What is traditional in the story finds confirmation in the Śangam poem Paṭṭinaṟṟalai and in another poem by the same author Perumbayāṟṟupadai, which had for its hero the Toṇḍamān Iḷam-Tiraiyan as he is known to literature. He is described in the poem as of Chola birth and as a powerful ruler of Kanchi and is ascribed a descent from the Cholas, nay in fact the family of Rama, as in fact in the later Pauranic genealogy of these Cholas some of the Ikshvāku rulers are made to figure. This traditional connection is on a footing with that between the Ikshvākus and the Gurjara Pritiharas of Kanauj. During this period and almost contemporaneously with the Toṇḍamān-Iḷam-Tiraiyan, the territory of the elder Tiraiyan seems to have been held in power by a chieftain generally associated with Vēṅgaḍam and described ordinarily by the name Pulli, chief of the Kaḷvar or, as the correcter reading would warrant, Kaḷavar. The forest region therefore in the middle seems to have constituted a block inhabited by the people Kaḷavar who had their tribal ruler with headquarters at Vēṅgaḍam. That is the position that we derive from the Śangam literature of Tamil as such. Toṇḍamān-Iḷam-Tiraiyan passed away and with him Śangam literature as well perhaps, and we are left in the dark altogether as to what had befallen Kanchi or the territory dependent thereon. That is the Tamil side of the evidence from the Śangam literature leaving aside the question of the age of the Śangam for the present.

On the other side of it, the region round Adoni is described in early inscriptions as Sāṭāhany Āhāra, sometimes as Sāṭavāhāni Rāṣṭra perhaps giving us the indication that it was a settlement of Sāṭavāhanas, which may be recent or early. It probably indicates that the Sāṭavāhanas were perhaps not exactly native to the locality, but acquired the territory and gave it their name to mark a new acquisition unless it be that other people called it by that name as the homeland of the Sāṭavāhanas. In either case, we find the Sāṭavāhana rulers on this border of the Tamil country, and one of the inscriptions of Pulumāvi mentions a great Sāṭavāhana general, Mahā Sēnātipati Skandanāga, probably an earlier governor of a troublesome border country. The records of the Pallavas similarly have reference to this region, and are couched in a form like the Sātavāhana inscriptions in regard to language, the details of the definition of time, and even such details as do occur in regard to the very nature of the administration itself. The provenance of the ship-coins of lead or potin sometimes ascribed to the Pallavas, but more generally taken to be Sātavāhana coins, in the region extending from the Northern Pennar to the Southern gives an indication of an effort of the Sātavāhana to bring this region under their authority. The references to the successful struggle against the Āryans, which some of the Chola monarchs claim to themselves as well as the Malayamān ruler of Tirukovilūr perhaps is a reflex of this effort on the part of the Sātavāhanas. When the Pallavas therefore emerged from this region—and we are given the information in the earliest Pallava charter that the first great Pallava ruler of the locality referred to as Bappa Deva made a free distribution of a hundred thousand ox ploughs, etc., we seem to be introduced to an effort at civilizing the locality appearing very like an extension of the effort of Karikala to civilize Toṇḍamaṇḍalam itself. This will appear clearly from the sequel. The Pallava charters themselves seem to argue a connection with the Sātavāhanas of a more or less intimate character, political as well as institutional. This seems clear from the Prakrit charters much more pronouncedly than perhaps even the Sanskrit ones. The conclusion to which the epigraphists have arrived that the Pallavas of the Prakrit charters were earlier and ought so to be regarded seems well warranted by the circumstances of the case and the character of the documents as such. That these early rulers issued their charters in Sanskrit and Prakrit indifferently at the same time, and must be regarded as the same people is a conclusion which while it may cut the gordian knot seems to have little to justify it on the basis of the facts of the position. Superficial paleographical resemblances cannot be held to upset the more certain evidence of institutional continuity to which the Prakrit charters unmistakably point. Since the Pallavas issued their charters in Prakrit and of a style like that of the earlier Sātavāhana charters, does it not seem reasonable to argue that the early Pallavas of the Prakrit charters were officers of the Sātavāhanas, or at least officially connected with them and dependent upon their authority? It seems therefore reasonable to argue that the Sātavāhana governors of the south-eastern frontier gradually extended their territory, civilizing it as they conquered it, introducing the arts of agriculture and ultimately made themselves masters of the locality and extending southwards when the Tamil powers weakened to take into their territory Kanchi and Tondamanādalam. It was the conquest of this that gave them the standing to make themselves real rulers and whatever of title was wanting in it was made good ultimately by a marriage which brought along with it a further addition to the territory. This becomes clear both from the account that Mr. Gopalan has given of succeeding events as well as from the analysis of these inscriptions which he has provided in the appendix. The Pallavas of the Prakrit charters call themselves rulers of Kanchi. So do the Pallavas of the Sanskrit charters. But at the outset those Pallavas that issued these Sanskrit charters lay claim to having acquired their royal position by an influential marriage with a Nāga princess and by that means became 'possessed of a wife and a kingdom simultaneously'. This could only mean that the Nāga alliance brought in an accession of territory which put their claim to independent rule on a really more legitimate footing than that of mere conquest or occupation, which might have been regarded as a mere act of usurpation.

In the empire of the Sātavāhanas which began to break up early in the third century, the dismemberment seems to have been due somewhat earlier to the provincial governors setting themselves up in some kind of independence. The south-western block seems to have remained in its integrity the latest, while the aggressions of the Kshatrapas in the north and north-west to some extent, and the advance of the Vākātakas from the middle to a larger extent, deprived them of what was the headquarters block of the Sātavāhana empire. The eastern and south-eastern portion must similarly have separated themselves, and we find on the farther side of the Krishna river the Śālankāyana first and Vishnukunḍins later occupying the territory north of the Krishna. There was perhaps similar disintegration noticeable further south along the East coast, so that when (about a century after the passing away of Andhra rule completely), Samudragupta's invasion came south, there were many kingdoms in the region which submitted to his authority and accepted a feudatory position to his overlordship. A ruler of Kanchi by name Vishṇugopa figures in the list, and although he is not called a Pallava in the Samudragupta inscription—we have no right to expect this where every ruler is simply defined by references to his capital, not to his family or dynasty and Vishṇugopa was ruler of Kanchi—leaves but little doubt, and the occurrence of a number of Vishṇugopas in the list of Pallava rulers of Kanchi leaves us in no uncertainty that this Vishṇugopa was as well a Pallava ruler. It is this disturbing influence of Samudragupta's invasion that introduced a change, which necessitated the succeeding ruler of Kanchi to make an effort at legitimizing his own particular position as ruler of Kanchi. This was done, in all probability, by a marriage alliance with the heiress of the south-western block of the Sātavāhana territory, the territory dependent upon the viceroyalty of Banavasi. The rulers were known generally as Chūṭu Nāgas, and, if a princess of that family had been married to a Pallava, it would be a Nāga alliance that would give at the same time a sort of a claim to the territory of which she was heiress to the Pallavas. Otherwise the overlordship claimed by the Pallavas and acknowledged readily by the Gangas, and none the less acknowledged though less readily by the Kadambas, would be inexplicable. Mayūra-śarman almost shows himself rebel against Pallava authority. The Ganga rulers readily acknowledged it, two of their kings having been installed by their Pallava overlords Simhavarman and Skandavarman. This means that the Pallavas claimed authority over the whole of the territory of the Sātavāhanas in the south, and that is what really accounts for the implacable enmity between the Great Pallavas and the early Chāḷukyas, who became rulers of the territory in the immediate neighbourhood of the kingdom of Banavasi of the Kadambas. It seems, therefore, clear that the Pallavas began as officers of the Sātavāhanas and ultimately rose to undisputed possession of the territory of Kanchi, the right to which they strengthened by an alliance with the heiress of the southern block of the Sātavāhana territory, thus in a way becoming titular descendants of the Sātavāhanas over the whole of the southern region of Sātavāhana territory including in it their own new conquest, the territory of Toṇḍamaṇḍalam dependent upon Kanchi.

From what is stated in the foregoing pages, it would have become clear that the Pallavas of the charters starting from the south-eastern marches of the Sātavāhana territory gradually occupied the region of Kurnool, Nellore and part of the Cuddapah Districts, and extended southwards till they gradually appropriated the town of Kanchi itself and the territory dependent thereon, in other words, what is known to the Tamils as Toṇḍamaṇḍalam. In this process of gradual conquest and appropriation of the territory intervening the south-eastern frontier of the Andhra kingdom and the northern viceroyalty of the Cholas, they must have dislodged the people who were in occupation of the territory under the elder Tiraiyan of Pavattiri, and latterly the chiefs of Vēṅgaḷam, of whom Pulli’s name is familiar to the Śangam literature. It is this dislodgement of the tribe of people known hitherto as Kalvar, but more appropriately speaking, Kalavar, that brought about the disorder in the territory lying immediately to the south of the Nellore District extending southwards to the banks of the Kaveri. It is this region that gets involved in the Kalabhra^ trouble and the process of expansion of the Kalabhras is reflected in the disorder and unsettlement which is noticeable even in the kingdom of the Pallavas of the Sanskrit charters. The period beginning therefore with the middle of the third century and extending onwards is the period of these migrations of the Kaḷabhras from their original home in a general southward movement, which overturned the territory of Tondamanḍalam, created confusion and disorder and brought about even the ultimate extinction of the well-established monarchies of the Tamil land. It is a movement like what is actually under reference in the details that we get of a Kaḷabhra interregnum, as the epigraphists call it, from the Vēḷvikuṭi plates of the Pandyas of the latter half of the eighth century A.D.

^ For a detailed account of the Kalabhras see my paper ‘The Kalabhra interregnum and what it means in South Indian History’ presented to the International Congress of Orientalists held at Oxford, August 1928.

Any reasonable investigation of this particular question requires a general idea of the whole position. Without assuming too much, we may take it that these are known facts in regard to the Pallavas. The first, according to generally accepted opinion, is that the earliest of them issued charters in Prakrit much in the style of the Śātavāhana charters, of which we have knowledge of the localities concerned. Three or four generations of these Paliavas happen to be known. The Allahabad Prasasti of Samudragupta makes mention of a Vīṣṇugopa of Kanchi. Without pausing to enquire whether this Vīṣṇugopa was a Pallava or no—there is nothing in the context of the inscription to indicate that he was not a Pallava as no ruler is mentioned by his dynastic name, but all of them are associated with their capitals—Vīṣṇugopa must have been a ruler of Kanchi contemporary with Samudragupta. This may be taken to be the second established fact. Then it is that we come upon a confused dark period where more light would certainly be welcome. But soon after, for a couple of hundred years, we find a dynasty of rulers, the order of whose succession, we cannot as yet fix very definitely. These rulers for some reason or other issued their charters always in Sanskrit, and called themselves invariably rulers of Kanchi, although some of their charters were issued from various ‘victorious camps’ of which there are as many as three or four capable of location in the Nellore District, that is, the region north of Tondamanḍalam proper. With these few main facts, which may be taken as established, we have to build up the history of the period from such glimpses as we get of details by setting them in a reasonable order on the basis of what is generally known. One general fact of Pallava history of this period—the period of the Sanskrit charters—is that it was a period of some amount of confusion, in which the succession to the throne itself could not have been in any very regular established order. There had been wars to the north, and wars to the south, and confusion in the interior of the territory of the Pallavas themselves. That seems to have been a period in which the Kadambas rose to power and the Gangas came into historical view on the one side. The Cholas almost passed into oblivion and the Tamil country suffered some kind of a confusion, as to the nature of which we have been in the dark till the Vēḻvikuḍi plates threw some light upon it by stating categorically that a certain set of rulers, at the head of the people Kalabhrs, overthrew the Tamil rulers of the south, the famous three crowned kings of Śangam literature. What is the cause of all this confusion and what is it that could satisfactorily explain all the facts mentioned above categorically? We have a specific lead in the Vēḻvikuḍi plates for this, namely, that the Kaḷabhrs came into the Tamil country as far south as the territory of the Pandyas, and upset the settled order to the extent of destroying a Brahmadeya gift (a free gift of land to Brahmans) which in orthodox parlance implies the destruction of a settled order of rule by the creation of a very considerable amount of confusion in the administration. If we could know something of these Kaḷabhrs, we may possibly throw some light upon the causes of all the confusion in the history of the Pallavas during the period. For this again, there is a certain amount of light that we can derive from the Vēḻvikuḍi plates themselves. The plates were issued by an individual sovereign, who restored the grant to the living representative of its original donee on satisfactory proof that the village was originally granted in the manner claimed. His father, generally known to epigraphists by the titles Tērmāraṇ Rājasimha, we know, beyond doubt, was a contemporary of Nandivarman Pallavamalla (cir. A.D. 717 to cir. A.D. 782). Alloting him to somewhere about the middle of the long reign of Nandivarman, we may roughly place him in about A.D. 750 or A.D. 740. We want six generations to come to the period when the Pandya country emerged from out of the Kāḷabhra rule and got back into Pandya rule, and a certain ruler by name Kāḷūṇkōṇ is stated in the grant to have done this. Even allowing the moderate span of twenty-five years’ rule to each of these six generations, Kāḷūṇkōṇ’s rule would come to somewhere about A.D. 600 more or less, bringing him roughly into contemporaneity with the first great Pallava ruler, Simhavishṇu. The period of the Kāḷabhra interregnum, according to the Vēlvikuḍi plates thus coincides with the period of Pallava history under the rule of the Pallavas of the Sanskrit charters. If the Kāḷabhras created confusion in the Tamil country, they must have come from elsewhere into it. Wherefrom did they come? It is obvious that they did not come from the south. The Pandya country seems the southern limit of their reach. During the period, Chola rule seems to have gone into eclipse of a more or less thorough character. The natural inference therefore would be that they probably advanced southwards. If they were in the Chola country before coming to the Pandya, could we not reasonably infer that they had been in the Pallava country before coming into the Chola, or at least had something to do with the Pallava? If so, who could these Kāḷabhras be, why were they so-called, and what would be the cause of their southward migration?

We have stated above on the authority of the Prakrit charters that the so-called Pallavas were viceroys of the south-eastern marches of the Andhra country, and they gradually extended their territory so as to occupy the region dominated by the hill Vēngaḍam, and ruled over by tribal chieftains, the earlier one known to literature being Tiraiyan of Pavattiri and the later one Pulli of Vēngaḍam. The latter chief is generally spoken of as the chief of the Kāḷvar in the so-called Šangam literature. But the learned editor of these works has since discovered that the correcter reading, on manuscript authority, would be Kalavar and not Kālvār. In the region which they occupied in the period of the later Sātavāhanas, and therefore the period immediately preceding that of the Pallavas, they had been a set of frontier people, at least somewhat predatory in point of character, accustomed to lifting cattle from the northern frontier and thereby flourishing upon it as a profession, and that is how Pulli is described in the Śangam literature. The tightening of the hold of the Pallavas even as viceroyos of the Andhras by a pressure applied both from the north and west, must have dislodged these people from the locality of their denizenship, and set forward their migration which ultimately overturned the Tondamāṇḍalam first, Cholamāṇḍalam next, and a considerable part of the Pandyamāṇḍalam after that. Perhaps it is this disturbance, and possibly the confusion caused by the invasion of Samudragupta through some of these regions, that must have ultimately brought about the subversion of the settled order and the introduction of the confusion, from out of which emerged the Pallavas of Kanchi of the Sanskrit charters. That period, it will be found, is the period in which something of a radical change had been taking place in the south-western viceroyalty—the palatine viceroyalty of the Andhras—of Banavasi. We see in that region, a set of rulers who called themselves Chūṭu Nāgas, claim relationship with the ruling family of the Sātavāhanas and achieving political distinction by wars against the Sakas and the Kshatrapas, the enemies of the great Sātavāhana, Gautamiputra Satakarni. In the best days of their power, their territory seems to have extended as far north as the Godavari, but it began to shrink on the northern side, so that they became a purely southern power. The illuminating detail that the Vēlurpālayam plates give us of Virakārcha becoming, heir to a kingdom by a marriage with a wife, by which, as is stated in the quaint language of the charter, 'he simultaneously obtained a wife and a kingdom.' This seems to be no more than his marrying the heiress of the Chūṭu Nāgas and, by securing a wife of that distinction, he became also the heir to rising of the later Cholas to power in the latter half of the ninth century.

The narration of events above, it would have been noted, assumes the existence of a period of prosperity reflected in the Śangam literature anterior to the coming of the Pallavas of Kanchi into the region of Toṇḍamaṇḍalam. The assumption is based on evidence which an effort has been made to upset by another assumption without any valid evidence, we should say, of a Chola interregnum in the rule of the Pallavas of Kanchi on the basis of the statement that Kumāravishṇu II had to retake his capital from his enemies. The difficulties against accepting this assumption are many and fundamental; anything like a capture of Kanchi by the Cholas and even its retention in the hands of the Cholas for some little time till recapture by Kumāravishṇu, would hardly satisfy the conditions of the Chola Karikāla’s capture of Kanchi, because the Chola Karikāla is associated, in the Śangam literature so called, with a succession of rulers extending over three or four generations, during which since his conquest Kanchi remained a Chola viceroyalty. The provision of an interval of that length before Kumāravishṇu II retook Kanchi would be on the face of it impossible. Karikāla is supposed to have introduced the arts of agriculture and civilization into the bulk of the region constituting Toṇḍamaṇḍalam, and the viceroyalty was held with distinction by Chola princes immediately following him and subsequently by an illegitimate scion of the Chola family, Toṇḍamān-Iḷan-Tiraiyan, before it passed into the possession of the Pallavas of the inscriptions. There is not the slightest hint of all this in the various charters, of which we have information, and Bappa Dēva’s civilizing effort in the region farther north seems almost to indicate an extension of the effort of Karikāla. Looked at from any point of view therefore, it seems impossible to postulate a Chola interregnum in the middle of the succession of Pallava rulers of the Sanskrit charters and the effort seems to us futile. We have almost fifteen generations of rulers subsequent to the Samudragupta invasion. Although we cannot be very definite about the order of succession or of the detailed history of the period, the general trend seems clear enough to rule out the possibility of this interregnum. There is the evidence of the Śangam literature by itself and the evidence of the later Pandya charters leading thereto, and they seem alike to negative this possibility. Whether the Śangam actually existed or no, the existence of something like a Śangam and of a body of literature known as Śangam literature came to be an accepted article of faith among the Tamils at the commencement of the seventh century A.D., among the Tevāram hymners like Appar and Sambandar. For a tradition like that to grow and for a body of literature to get thus distinctly classified, we do require a certain efflux of time, and that could not be less than half a dozen generations or more, and thus the indication seems to be that the period of the Śangam literature will have to be referred to a time anterior to the advent of the Pallavas of the Sanskrit charters into the region of Kanchi. A Chola interregnum associated with the name of Karikāla in the generations immediately preceding Kumāravīṣṇu II seems impossible of justification. The period of the Pallavas of the Sanskrit charters marks the advent of a new dynasty, their long, but fairly successful, struggle against hostile occupation of the territory of Tonḍamandalam, probably by the Kaḷabhras, their assertion of their overlordship over the Gangas, and a similar recognition of their overlordship at any rate, by the Kadambas after a struggle ending in the final establishment of the Pallava authority there till Simhavarma, the father of Simhavīṣṇu the first Great Pallava, founded a dynasty of powerful rulers for the next two centuries and a half, all require the couple of centuries that are left between the invasion of Samudragupta and the accession of Simhavarma, the father of Simhavīṣṇu. The accession of these powerful rulers to authority in this region is almost coeval with the rise of the Chālukyaśas into view in the region north of their territory.
The origin of the Chālukyaśas and their accession to power in the period with which their name is associated is somewhat obscure. Their habitual hostility to the Pallavas and the constant warfare between the two that this hostility brought about are facts recognized all round, although the reason for this constant hostility has been far from clear. The one is perhaps to some extent associated with the other, and an explanation of the hostility does not seem altogether beyond recovery. In the traditional stories connected with their origin, the historians of the dynasty or the heraldic custodians of their traditional origin gave them credit for association with the Ikshvākus of Ayodhya. Whatever the reason the association with Ikshvākus seems to have been fashionable even in this distant south at this particular time. The Chālukyas connect themselves with the Ikshvākus and some well-known Ikshvāku rulers figure in Chola genealogies when they began to appear. Even before the days of genealogies, the Toṇḍaman ruler of Kanchi is associated with some of the Ikshvākus in one of the Śangam classics. So the Chālukya's claim to an association with the Ikshvākus, while historically possible because of the existence of Ikshvāku rulers in their neighbourhood in the Andhra country, still remains unproved in the face of the fact that they have to invent a kind of explanation, at the very best unsatisfactory, for the name Chālukya. This defect seems to make them an indigenous dynasty of feudatory rulers, who raised themselves to power gradually, and set themselves up independently. The fact of their obscure origin coupled with the boar ensign on the one hand, and the impossible derivation of the word from Sanskrit on the other, seem alike to indicate a southern origin for them on a reasonable basis. Feudatory dynasties placed in rule over the less hospitable regions of the Tamil country went by the name generally Vēḻpulā Arası or Saḻukku Vędar. They were given the flag of the boar indicative of the nature of the territory over which they ruled and of the character of that rule. It is a family of chieftains like this probably that ultimately raised themselves to a position of higher dignity that became the Chālukyas of a later period. That this is so is reflected in the term sometimes being used in the form Salki, used as a term of contempt with reference to Salki Bhima, who is spoken of as a disloyal person. These petty chieftains seem to have risen first to power in the northern region of the Vākāṭaka territory, perhaps in succession to the Naḷas, or, at any rate, as one of the tributaries along with them. They then gradually spread southwards, extending their territory, and under the sons of Pulikesan I, they conquered the Kadambas and the Gangas and so extended their operations gradually as to come into contact with the territory of the Pallavas with the set object of recovering the southern block of the territory under the Andhras included in the viceroyalty of Banavasi. It was stated already that the Pallavas probably laid claim to this very territory on the basis of a marriage, and naturally, therefore, the two powers had a reason for perpetual hostility on an important, and at the same time, a vulnerable frontier for both of them. Therefore it is that since the Chāḷukyas established their power by the conquest of the Naḷas, the Mauryas and the Kadambas, they are seen in the full tide of their hostility to the Pallavas and this hostility continued, now the one, now the other getting the better, till one of the dynasties, the Chāḷukyas vanished from Dakhan politics. That accounts for the Chāḷukya invasion in the reign of Mahēndravarman, who from his headquarters beat them back, and left it to his son to carry the war into the enemy's country, destroy their capital and bring about an interregnum, which lasted for thirteen years. This happened at the end of the reign of Pulikesan II, and his son Vikramāditya was able to turn the tables upon the Pallavas and carry the war into their territory by a flank movement, so as to fight on the banks of the Kaveri near Trichinopoly against the Pallavas supported by all the Tamil powers this time. One of his successors was able to carry the war into Kanchi itself, occupied the town in his turn, and, instead of destroying it, as the Pallava Narasimhavarman had done at Vāṭāpi, their capital, not merely restored, but even made a fresh donation to the temple, showing thus distinctly that he was more humane in warfare than perhaps the Southern power. It is in revenge for this insult that Nandivarman Pallavamalla took the tide on the turn when, on the occasion of a marriage alliance brought about diplomatically between the Ganga princess, the daughter of Śrī Purusha Muttarasa, and the Pandyan prince, Neḍum-Śaḍaiyan Parāntaka, the donor of the Velvikuḍi plates, the Pallavas led the combination of the southern powers, in which the Pandyan minister got distinction, and inflicted a crushing defeat upon the Chāḻukyas at the battle of Venbāi. Kirtivarman II was so thoroughly defeated that the Chāḻukya power found it impossible to recover from the defeat. It is this again that was taken advantage of by the feudatory Rāshṭrakūṭa Dantidurgā, himself, the son of a Chāḻukya princess to subvert the Chāḻukya power. He was able to do this by fortifying himself by an alliance with the great Pallava ruler Nandi to whom perhaps he gave his daughter in marriage and thus brought about his own elevation and the subversion of the dynasty of the early Chāḻukyas. The battle of Venbāi is graphically described in detailing the achievements of the āgnapati, Mārān-Kāri of Karavandapuram at whose instance the grant was made. Tirumangai Āḻvār’s reference to Rāshṭrakūṭa Dantidurgā, under his title Vairamēgha, and the deferential treatment which Nandivarman Pallavamalla is said to have accorded to him finds justification in this and the question how the early Chāḻukyas were ultimately overthrown and the Rāṣṭrakūṭas established themselves in their stead is now put on a clear footing.

The accession of Nandivarman Pallavamalla to the Pallava throne and how it actually happened have alike remained a problem in Pallava history till recently. The publication of some of the Vaikunṭha Perumāḷ temple epigraphs¹ clears the doubt completely, though it does not altogether dispel the darkness that surrounded the actual character of his accession to power. From these epigraphs, it is clear that, when Paramēśvara-varman died, for some reason or other, the great citizens of the land had to be on the look out for a suitable successor. The position of the Pallavas at the time was far from easy. After some futile efforts they ultimately made up their minds to offer it to Hiranyavarma the collateral cousin through the younger brother of Simhavishnu; but Hiranya shrank from the responsibility as an old man and offered the chance to each one of his four sons in turn. The three elder ones refused the responsibility and the youngest of them all, Pallavamalla by name, or Paramesvaravarman Pallavamalla, agreed to accept the responsibility with an alacrity which was disconcerting to the father’s paternal instincts. He was however allowed to succeed, and, when he reached Kanchi, he was duly installed under the title Nandivarman. Hence his full style Nandivarman Pallavamalla or Paramesvaran Pallavamalla alias Nandivarman. This gives colour to some of the hymns of Tirumangai Alvar which celebrate the temple as Paramesvara-Vinnagaram. It cannot now be taken that the Vishnu temple was founded by Paramesvaravarman II, nor even by Paramesvaravarman I. It now becomes quite clear that the founder of this temple is the Pallava prince to whom the Alvar makes so many direct references. All of them refer to Nandivarman Pallavamalla in his family name Paramesvaravarman. That apart, the accession, according to these records is a peaceful one by the choice of the people and therefore come to legitimately. But there are other charters which broadly state, as is recounted in the following pages, that he came to the throne as a result of fighting and by an act of usurpation. The two statements it is possible to reconcile, and it is hardly necessary to take them as irreconcilable alternatives. The facts seem to have been these. A Chalukya invasion seems to have been imminent, and the constant hostility of this power on the northern frontier together with the rising activity of the Pandyas in the south made the position of the Pallavas in the middle one of extreme anxiety. The maintenance of the Pallava power intact meant a Janus-faced fight, south against the Pandya and north against the Chalukyas. When Paramesvaravarman II died, if the responsible people of the kingdom felt that the ruler that succeeded him should be a man of ability and resource, and not a child succeeding a comparatively inefficient rule of a father, their offer of the throne to Hiranyavarman, possibly a veteran administrator at the time, would have valid justification on the basis of the fitness of the person. The legitimate successor, Chitramāya, or, whoever he was, may have been comparatively young and weak; and even later, the fight that could be put up in his favour does not appear to have been strong enough to make this assumption unwarranted. It was a useful change though the actual successor happened to be a young boy of twelve, supported as he must have been with all the resources of his father and brothers, and other officers of the kingdom. Those whose sympathies were on the legitimist side would naturally call such a succession an act of usurpation, while to those of the opposite faction Nandivarman's acceptance of the office was an honourable act of public beneficence for the well-being of the State. The thirteen or fourteen epigraphs that have been published throw very important light upon this position, and from these, what has hitherto been known regarding this succession receives fresh illumination. Nandivarman probably came to the throne and accepted the responsibility that it involved, by the invitation of those responsible for the welfare of the state, necessarily setting aside the legitimate claims of another prince of the family. The war which was a consequence necessarily, went against the legitimate prince, but the actual achievements of the general in behalf of Nandivarman seem fully to justify the anxiety of those who went out of their way to set aside the legitimate successor in favour of another. It need not therefore be the fault of Nandivarman Pallavamalla that he ascended the throne, not an act of his own, and merely for the sake of the position or the power that it carried with it. Though his earlier years were clouded by these wars, he managed to tide over these troubles both by successful war and by equally successful diplomacy, subverting the natural enemy, the Chālukyas in the north, and entering into a more or less permanent alliance with their successors, the Rāśṭrakūṭas; on the south, he got into perhaps a treaty of alliance with the Pāṇḍyas, after a good deal of fight with them on behalf of the rulers of Kongu, whose independence all his efforts could not sustain. When he died, his kingdom could pass down to his son without any difficulty and Pallava rule continued for another three or four generations, for almost a century, without distress.

INTRODUCTION

There has been considerable discussion in regard to the successors of Nandivarman Pallavamalla and a controversy has raged over the fancied displacement of the dynasty and by the succession of a new dynasty called till recently by the epigraphists (Ganga-Pallavas.) Inscriptions published since this hypothesis was put forward seem entirely to negative the position taken and with the information at our disposal now, there is hardly any need to maintain the hypothesis, whatever justification it might have had in its origin. Nandivarman was succeeded by Dantivarman his son, Dantivarman by another Nandivarman, and then followed Nṛpatunga in a regular line of succession, all of them tracing their descent through Nandivarman Pallavamalla. Why a certain number of these should be distinctly marked off and given the name Ganga-Pallavas is far from clear. That there was some kind of a family connection between the Ganges and the Pallavas may be readily admitted. That is a connection which the Pallavas had with other royal families as well, namely, those of the Rāṣṭrakūṭas and the Kadambas, taking the dynasty of Nandivarman Pallavamalla alone. A marriage alliance of this sort need not give a new direction unless we can specifically prove that a scion of the Ganga family through a daughter even, or through a Pallava princess set up rule in the territory of the Pallavas. For this, we have absolutely no lead. Comparatively minor changes in the titles of rulers at a certain stage of their history, or of the existence of a number of rulers simultaneously in the same territory, are not reasons that would justify a hypothesis as grave as this. What seems actually to have taken place is this. The Pallava-Pandya struggle in the time of the great Pallavamalla seems to have been more or less for the overlordship of Kongu to begin with. At some period of his reign that overlordship, if it was at any time exercised by the Pallavamalla at all, passed over to the Pandyas. To fortify this position, they entered into a marriage alliance with the Gangas across the Kongo frontier and this brought down upon them a great Chālukya invasion, as the Gangas were perhaps regarded as Chālukya feudatories at the time. Feudatory or no, the Gangas in alliance with the Pandyas would be a real danger on the flank of the Chālukya, having regard to the fact that they regarded the Pallavas as their standing enemies. That brought on the battle of Vepbai which had for its ultimate result the subversion of the dynasty of the Chālukyas and the establishment, in their stead, of the rule of the Rāṣṭrakūtas who apparently fortified their position by an alliance with the Pallavas. This for the time settled the question of the political relationship between the Gangas, the Rāṣṭrakūtas and the Pallavas. Later on the wars continued between the Pandyas and the Pallavas on the one side, and hostility gradually developed between the Pallavas and the Rāṣṭrakūtas on the other. The Gangas in the middle now played the one part, now the other, till at last they were ultimately reduced to a position of subordination by the Rāṣṭrakūtas. This certainly was one element of weakness in the Pallavas. The Pandyas in consequence were slowly gaining the upper hand, and tightened their hold on the Pallavas, so that the Pallava territory which had at one time been so very extensive, was gradually shrinking to one of comparatively narrow dimensions. The final victory achieved by Varaguna II at Śripurambyam near Kumbakonam gave a crushing blow, if not the death blow, to the Pallava power, in which one section of the Gangas, the Gangas who held authority in the Bāna country, assisted the Pallavas. But the Pallavas still continued in a comparatively precarious position. This precarious condition of the Pallava power, as in the case of all other Indian imperial powers, brought about a dismemberment, which began usually with an independence of the provinces constituting the empire more or less definite, and this dismemberment is what is in evidence in our having a certain number of rulers in the Pallava territory, each issuing inscriptions, almost on his own authority simultaneously, when the power of the Cholas, newly come into existence under Vijayālaya, advanced northwards under his successor Āditya, and put an end to the crumbling empire of the Pallavas and annexed the whole of their territory to their own dominions, thus introducing a new overlordship, which was symbolized by the name Jayamkondacholamanḍalam given to the Pallava territory which till then was known Toṇḍamanḍalam. The existence therefore of several Pallava princes marks nothing more than a mere stage in the dismemberment of the kingdom or empire, and need not be regarded as the establishment of a separate dynasty of rulers distinct from the one who held rule from Kanchi. That seems the general trend of Pallava History, which Mr. Gopalan's work indicates. The purpose of this introduction is merely to supply a few gaps in the narrative, and thus to provide the few links required for the continuous story of the rise, growth, decay and the dissolution of the power of the Pallavas of Kanchi.

Mr. Gopalan has done the work with care and discrimination and has succeeded in providing a readable account of this interesting and extensive period of South Indian History, which, it is hoped, would be found useful by those interested in the subject.

S. KRISHNASWAMI AIYANGAR,

'Marine Villa', Professor of Indian History and Archaeology,

October 15, 1928. University of Madras,
THE HISTORY OF THE PALLAVAS OF SOUTH INDIA
A.D. 200 to 900

CHAPTER I
INTRODUCTORY,
HISTORY OF PREVIOUS RESEARCH AND SOURCES OF HISTORY FOR THE PALLAVAS

The materials for writing a history of the Pallava kings of South India were until almost recent times exceedingly scanty and otherwise inadequate. They are moreover distorted by erroneous traditions and misleading accounts of mythical ancestry. A hundred years ago hardly any of their inscriptions on stone or on copper-plates, of which we have such large numbers now, were known. This becomes evident on a perusal of the Mackenzie Collection of MSS. relating to South Indian history which, mentioning dozens of members of the Chōla, Pândya and other dynasties of early South India, do not mention a single name of any of the members of the Pallava dynasty which had remained the dominant South Indian power for about seven centuries. This is remarkable seeing that the Pallavas wielded sovereign authority for several centuries in the Tamil land. Literary tradition embodied in the hymns of the Ālvārs, and in the works Nandikkalamābakam, the Periyapurāṇam, Chintāmaṇi, Avantisundarikathāśāra, etc., are far too scanty for historical purposes though they give a glowing idea of the culture of the Pallava period.

History of Research on the Pallavas.—The late Sir Walter Elliot did remarkable service for the cause of South
Indian historical research by the publication of some early South Indian inscriptions in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic
History of the Pallavas of South India

Society and in the Madras Journal of Literature and Science as early as 1837. An important starting-point was made in his announcement in 1858 that in the sixth century, the Pallava kings were dominant in South India. Even earlier than this, in 1844, he had discovered that the monoliths in the Seven Pagodas were excavated by Pallava kings. At the same time Dr. Burnell succeeded in deciphering some of the inscriptions at this place belonging to Pallava kings. These inscriptions are included in Capt. Carr's well-known collection of papers on the Seven Pagodas. Another important contribution to Pallava history is the work of James Fergusson, History of Indian and Eastern Architecture, in which after a minute examination of the monuments at the Seven Pagodas he has attributed them to the sixth and seventh centuries A.D. But it was the second half of the last century that saw the discovery of numerous and important copper-plate charters and stone inscriptions belonging to this dynasty, which for the first time opened the eyes of scholars to the historical importance of this celebrated dynasty of kings, ruling in a part of the Tamil and Telugu country. This discovery has practically revolutionized the prevalent notions concerning Pallava history. The earliest of these records was edited by the late Dr. Fleet in the Indian Antiquary in its earlier numbers, with notes and translations. Towards the close of the last century stone inscriptions of this dynasty began to be discovered in various parts of the Tamil land along with a large number of Pallava monuments other than those found at Mahābalipuram. These records coupled with the inscriptions on the copper-plate charters form the most valuable raw material for the reconstruction of Pallava history. Many of the records have been edited, with great ability and learning, by Hultzsch, Venkayya, Fleet, Kielhorn, Krishna Sastri and others in the pages of the Indian Antiquary, South Indian Inscriptions and the Epigraphia Indica. The stone inscriptions and copper-plate records discovered year after year are noticed in the Annual Reports on South Indian Epigraphy with notes and comments.

1 vol. iv, pp. 1-11.

The first connected account of the Pallava kings was attempted more than forty years ago by the late Dr. Fleet in his Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts, which forms a part of the Bombay Gazetteer, where he has exploited for the first time all the records, inscriptions on stone and copper-plates, relating to the Pallavas which were accessible to him. The outline account of Dr. Fleet, though written so long ago, still remains in its main aspects authoritative and represents more or less the first attempt to write a scientific history of these kings. The next notable attempt to sketch the origin and history of the Pallavas was made by the late Mr. V. Venkayya in the *Archaeological Annual Survey Report for 1906-7.*¹ This is a scholarly piece of research work on the subject, and embodies the author's life-long labours in the field of epigraphy and literature. This work written in 1906 takes into consideration the inscriptions and copper-plates discovered since the days when Dr. Fleet wrote, and the author's researches in the field of Tamil literature are also fully utilized. In many respects this account still remains an authority on the subject.

The next important work on the Pallavas is that of Prof. G. Jouveau-Dubreuil published in 1917. In this work the author has embodied the results of his independent research, and has propounded several original and ingenious theories regarding the origin, chronology, genealogy, art and architecture of the Pallavas. The author has succeeded, to a large extent, in establishing a connection between the Pallava kings of the Prakrit charters and the members of the Sanskrit records, and has attacked the intricate problem of their chronology and genealogy with critical ability. Many of the conclusions are based on the author's personal investigation which have resulted in the discovery of several new inscriptions and monuments hitherto unknown. The other papers and monographs of the same author, such as those on ‘the Pallava Antiquities’, ‘Pallava-painting’, form important contributions to the subject and offer several new interpretations of parts of the subject. His latest work entitled the Ancient History of the Deccan embodies the author’s latest views on the Pallavas, their origin and chronology.

¹ pp. 217-43.

Among other writers on the subject Dr. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar has published a valuable account of ‘The Origin and Early History of the Pallavas’ in the Journal of Indian History, then published in Allahabad. This contribution represents the author’s latest investigations on this subject, and, having been published in 1923 is the most recent work on the subject of an authoritative character. A large number of papers on the inscriptions, monuments and literature of the period appeared in various journals, some of these being contributed by Mr. Gopinatha Rao on ‘the Ganga-Pallavas’, Mr. K. V. Subramanya Aiyar, on ‘the Ancient History of Conjeevaram’ published in the Madras Christian College Magazine, ‘the Literary History of the Pallava Age’ by Mr. Rangaswami Sarasvati in the Journal of the Mythic Society and the ‘Antiquities of Mahabalipuram’ by Dr. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar. Some of the historical portions of the district manuals contain accounts of varying value about the Pallavas, while more recently accounts have also been published in Tamil, the most notable of these being that of Mr. P. T. Srinivasa Aiyangar, entitled A History of the Pallavas.

Sources of History

Epigraphy.—Of the sources of information for writing the history of the Pallavas, epigraphy occupies a prominent place compared with the other sources. Dr. Fleet has pointed out, ‘We are ultimately dependent on the inscriptions in every line of Indian research.’ This is especially true of the history of the Pallavas, for without the inscriptions it is practically impossible to know anything about these kings and their times. We may ¹ vol. ii, pp. 20-66.

---

divide the Pallava inscriptions\(^1\) conveniently into three classes. To the first class belong records written entirely in Prakrit. The second class of records comprises Sanskrit inscriptions, while the third class consists of those in Sanskrit and Tamil. Of these, the records of the first class probably belong to the earliest period, as it is now recognized that Prakrit was superseded by Sanskrit about the fourth century A.D., while the earliest 'Grantua-Tamil' records of the Pallavas have been assigned to the seventh century. Most of these records are of a donative character. Their object was to record the gifts of lands or money to temples or Brahmans. The most important portion of the records was the specification of the details of the names of the donor, the donee and the donation of the particular gift. From very early times the records give a certain amount of genealogical information and a recital of events was introduced to magnify the glory and importance of the donors. Thus, for instance, the Prakrit charters such as those of Sivaskandavaramarman contained hardly any allusion to historical events connected with the donor. Gradually however we find a change. The Sanskrit charters beginning from about the fifth century not only enumerate the father and the grandfather of the donor, but some of them, such as the Kūram, Kasākkuṇḍi, the Vēḻurpālayam and the Bāhūr plates, give a long account of the names of previous kings and their achievements. 'Thus,' as Fleet says, 'not with the expressed object of preserving history, but in order to intensify the importance of everything connected with religion and to secure grantees in the possession of properties conveyed to them, there was gradually accumulated almost the whole mass of epigraphic records from which chiefly, the ancient history of India is now being put together.'\(^2\)

Stone Inscriptions.—Stone inscriptions beginning from the seventh century, so far as this dynasty is concerned, form a distinct class by themselves. These records which are fairly abundant for the later Pallava period are for the most part, donative in character, though one or two of them such as the Väyalur pillar inscription of Räjasimha, and the Panamalai inscription of the same king give a genealogical account. Some are short, and record gifts to religious or other institutions, and they are invariably dated in the regnal year of the contemporary king without reference to any era. They are mostly in prose, though a few of these are to be found also in verse such as the inscription at the Pallava rock-cut temple at Dalavänür ¹ of King Mahêndravarman I. The earliest of these are those written in some of the rock-cut temples believed to have been excavated by Mahêndravarman I, such as the one at Vallam.² Many of these rock-cut temples such as those at Pallävaram, Trichinopoly, Mandagappattu, Mâmançûr contain Grantha and Grantha-Tamil inscriptions some of which are contemporaneous with the caves and have for their object the simple recording of the excavation of these monuments. The copper-plate charters taken along with these stone inscriptions furnish valuable information as regards the history and chronology of the Pallava kings. In spite of the serious disadvantage that these records are not dated in any of the known eras but only in the regnal years of the king, a careful study of the palaeography of these inscriptions makes it possible to fix their age more or less accurately. The facts obtained from these records, coupled with those of the contemporary kings with whom the Pallavas came into contact enable us to reconstruct to a great extent the history of the age of the Pallavas. The most important of these contemporary records are those of the Western-Gangas, the Western Châlukyas, the Pândyas as well as the minor dynasties such as those of the Muttaraiyan and the Bäna subordinates of the later Pallava kings.

---

\(^1\) Vide Appendix (A).

Pallava Monuments.—Side by side with the inscriptions we have the Pallava monuments themselves. According to one set of scholars whose enthusiasm for their subject hampers them from taking a dispassionate view, the study of architecture constitutes an even more important instrument for fixing dates than the study of palæography and inscriptions. According to Mr. A. H. Longhurst for instance, ‘the present method of relying entirely on inscriptions for fixing the dates of ancient monuments adopted by Dr. Hultsch and others is open to objection because when this method of investigation is employed alone, serious mistakes may occur. It is possible that inscriptions on a monument may have been inscribed long after it was erected. In such cases the inscription would not only give no information about the original author of the monument but may even lead us into error. Then again if the study of architecture is neglected, how is the epigraphist going to determine the age of the monument that does not possess any inscription?’¹ This is a reply to the point of view of Prof. Hultsch who in his paper on the ‘Inscriptions of the Seven Pagodas’² wrote:—‘The important question of the authors and the dates of these excavations can be answered only by a careful study of their inscriptions engraved on them.’ Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil is inclined to agree with Mr. Longhurst, and attaches greater importance to the study of architecture for the determination of dates than to that of the inscriptions. In his work on the Pallava Antiquities the author enters into a minute examination of the evolution of the Pallava style in the course of the Pallava age, and distinguishes various styles even during comparatively short intervals of time.

During the last thirty years a large number of Pallava monuments have been discovered at Mahendravadi, Daḷavānūr-Śiyamangalam, Pallāvaram, Trichinopoly, Kīḷmāvilangai, Śingavaram, Tirukkalukkuṟṟam, Vallam, Māmanḍūr, Maṇḍagapattu, Mēlachēri, Sittannavāsal and Mahābalipuram. Some of these consist of rock-cut caves and bear Pallava inscriptions. Others consist of structural temples such as the Kailāsanātha temple at Kāñchīpuram and the Shore temple at the Seven

¹ M.A.R. for 1918-19, p. 20.
² Ep. Ind., vol. x, p. 2.
Pagodas. Many of these monuments were brought into existence by the Pallava kings and contain their inscriptions. The inscriptions on the Rathas of Mahābalipuram contain some specific references in the shape of the names and surnames of some of the kings. The most important of this class of epigraphs are those on the Dharmarājaratha and the Kailāsanātha temple at Mahābalipuram and Conjeevaram respectively. These temples are dedicated to the Hindu Triad; while the cave temples are dedicated to Śiva or Vishnū, the presence of representations of Brahma the other member of the Hindu Triad, forms a peculiar feature of these monuments which distinguishes them from later temples. The Ādivarāha temple at the Seven Pagodas contains statues of the celebrated kings Simhavishnu and Mahēndravarman I in bas-relief. Similarly the rock-cut temple at the top of the Trichinopoly rock appears to have originally contained a statue of Mahēndravarman I, a fact which seems to be alluded to in the inscription discovered there.¹ But the statue is not to be found there now, and may have been destroyed subsequently. Recently Mr. Longhurst has been fortunate in discovering at Bhairavakonda ² (Nellore District) a large group of temples attributable to the Pallava age, all of them cut out of rock and closely resembling the Mahēndra caves. There are also a large number of Pallava monuments in South India without bearing any inscription. Further study and research may help in establishing their actual age.

Literature

Next to inscriptions we might consider the testimony of literature and literary tradition. For the earliest period of the history of the Tamil land we are almost entirely dependent on a class of Tamil works known as the Śangam classics and attributable to the first and second centuries of the Christian era. The age of the Śangam has been the subject of keen discussion among scholars, and attempts have been made to bring it to the seventh and the eighth centuries. The late Mr. Swamikannu Pillai working from the astronomical details in the eleventh Paripadal arrived at the conclusion, in his Indian Ephemeris,\(^1\) that the author of the piece must have lived in the seventh century. But the generally accepted date, namely, first and the second centuries A.D., seems established on satisfactory grounds, and the new dates have so far not been proved to be beyond doubt correct. The orthodox estimate of the Śangam age expounded by the late Mr. Kanakasabhai Pillai and more fully by Dr. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar has been followed here.

The Śangam works although they mention several kings and chieftains in the Tamil land contain no mention of the Pallavas (even where they actually describe Kāñchi), or of any member of the various Pallava dynasties known to us from inscriptions. The inference seems, therefore, to be fully justified that the Pallava kings reigned after the age of these Śangam works. Otherwise it is difficult to understand the silence of these works about the dynasty of the Pallavas of Kāñchi especially as we learn from them that the region around Kāñchi was ruled over by Tondamān-Ilam-Tiraiyan, one of the Chōla viceroys. The Śangam works however mention a people known as the Tondaiyar among others who are sometimes considered to be the same as, or closely related to, the Pallavas.\(^2\) But the available evidence does not seem sufficient to warrant our identifying the Tondaiyar with the Pallavas as the former term appears to be a tribal name like the Aruvālar, Vaḍavar, etc., while Pallava looks more like a family name than that of a tribe. One Śangam work called Perumbanāṟṟupadai, written by Rudran-Kanmanār who has also celebrated the Chōla king Karikāla and his capital town Kavēripaṭṭinam, is mainly devoted to a description of the condition of Kāñchi during the rule of Tondamān-Ilam-Tiraiyan who appears to have preceded the \(^1\) vol. i, p. 108.

\(^2\) Ind. Ant., vol. iii, pp. 75-80.
Pallava kings at Kāñchi and who, according to certain scholars, was an early Pallava king. With the exception of this poem the other pieces in the Śangam works do not contain any reference either to Kāñchi during the age of the Pallavas or about the Pallavas themselves. Suggestions have been put forward that the Pallavas were foreigners to the south, that the Pallava power was superimposed upon the Tamil land, and that the Tamils therefore scrupulously omitted to mention them, and, even when they did so, mentioned them with contempt. As an illustration the definition in the Pingalandai which gives us the synonyms for the Pallavas, includes terms such as Kayavar, Patakar and Nīśar. But against this it must be said that this reference does not apply to the Pallava kings who are referred to in the Tēvāram hymns and in the works of some of the Vaishnava Ālvārs of the eighth century in terms of praise.\(^1\)

In addition to the references in the hymns of the Śaiva and Vaishnava saints about these kings new light is thrown on the age of Simhavishṇu in one of the recently-discovered Sanskrit works entitled the Avantisundarikathāsāra which, in its historical introduction, not only contains an important synchronism between Simhavishṇu of Kāñchi, Vishṇuvardhana, the early Chāḷukya, and Durvinita, the early Ganga.\(^2\) This work also gives valuable particulars relating to the literary history of the Pallava age and the patronage of the Pallava kings. The association of Danḍin as well as Bhāravi with the Pallava court at Kāñchi, which this work establishes, is very important for understanding the nature of Pallava culture during this period.\(^3\)

Of a similar nature is the discovery of the work Matta-vilāsa-Prahasana, a burlesque written by the Pallava king Mahēndravarman I, which depicts vividly the contemporary life of religious sects such as the Śākyabikshus and Kāpalikas

\(^{1}\) Periya-Tirumoli, ii, 9.
\(^{2}\) Special note by Editor.
in the city, and of which glimpses are obtainable in the hymns of the Ālvārs and the Nāyānārś in some of the Prabandha and the Tēvāram hymns. This work has recently been published by the Travancore Government.

There seems to be no doubt that the author of this play Śrī Mahēndravikramavarman is identical with the Pallava king Mahēndravarman known, from inscriptions and copper-plates, to have reigned in the first quarter of the seventh century. A recently-discovered panel in the Ādivarāha temple in the Seven Pagodas represents him with his two queens, their identity being placed beyond question by the inscriptions over the reliefs. Some of his titles such as Avanibhājana, Guna-bhara, Śatrumallā, Mattavilāsa, found in the various cave temples excavated by him, occur in the course of the play. Detailed reference will be made to the work in the section on the literature of the Pallava age.

Among literary works that throw light upon the Pallava age in Tamil, Nandikkalambakam deserves prominent mention. This work which consists of about a hundred and odd verses is devoted to a description of the exploits of Nandivarman III, whose death the author laments in the course of the work. A number of verses in the poem describe the martial exploits of this sovereign, his patronage of letters, his capital cities, the extent of territory, and other particulars which together give a detailed record of his reign. The author is regarded by tradition as one of the younger brothers of the king himself although this is considered doubtful. The work has been for a long time out of print and is noticed in some detail in the section dealing with literature of the Pallava age.

To these may be added the Digambara Jaina work called Lokavibhāga discovered and noticed by R. Narasimha-charya till recently Director of the Mysore Archaeological Department. It furnishes us with an important chronological datum from which the initial year of one of the early Pallava

1 Trivandrum Sanskrit Series, No. LV.
2 Special note by Editor.
kings Simhavarman may be fixed. The work consists of eleven prakaranas, the last being mokshabhâga. The opening verse is in praise of Jineśvara. The second verse gives, kshetra, kâla, tirtha, pramâna-purusha and their charita as the five divisions of a purâna; and in the third verse the author begins his subject, namely, the description of the world. All the MSS. of this work contain four stanzas which are important to Pallava chronology. The first stanza tells us that the science was first taught by Vardhamâna to Sudharma and others, that it was handed down in succession through a series of teachers, and that it was translated into Sanskrit by Rishi Simhasûri. The second stanza says that at a particular period, corresponding to certain planetary positions, Šarvanandi copied the work in the village named Pâtalika of the Pânarâshtra. The third stanza gives us Śaka 380, corresponding to the twenty-second regnal year of Simhavarman, king of Kâñchi, as the year in which the work was completed. The fourth stanza informs us that the work consists of 1536 anushtub slokas. Śaka 380 is apparently the year in which the copying work was completed by Šarvanandi, and the author of the work Simhasûri probably flourished at an earlier period. Calculation shows that there cannot be any doubt about the correctness of the date. Pâtalika, the village in which Šarvanandi copied the work, is identical with Pâtalipura in South Arcot District at which, according to the Periyapurânam, there was a large Jaina monastery in the seventh century A.D.

In addition to these sources we have the account given about the Tamil land, and the city of Kâñchi in particular, by the celebrated Chinese pilgrim and the Master of the Law, Hiuen Tsang, whose work has the advantage of being a contemporary account. The pilgrim appears to have visited Kâñchi about A.D. 640. The city having had the reputation of being a seat of Buddhistic learning and the city of birth of the celebrated Dharmapâla who preceded Śilabhadra at the Nalanda University, the pilgrim spent a considerable time in it. Although he does not mention anything about the contemporary king or court, he has given an account of his impressions relating to the character of the people, soil, climate, temples and the state of Buddhism in the city.

To these sources must be added the Mahāvamsa, the Ceylon Chronicle written in Pāli and giving the earliest known account of the kings of the island. This work is particularly useful for settling the chronology of early South Indian history as it describes the relations and the contact that existed between the kings of Ceylon and those who ruled in the Tamil land. So far as the Pallavas are concerned we find that in the days of Narasimhavarman I as well as in the closing days of the Pallava empire invasions of the island were undertaken by Pallava kings either on behalf of the ruling sovereign or actuated by love of conquest merely. Chapter 47 of this work is particularly interesting as it gives a glimpse into Pallava overseas enterprise in early times.

Next comes tradition, living tradition, about the Pallavas and their age. It is surprising that the memory of the Pallava kings, although perpetuated in the names given after them to dozens of temples such as Paramēśvaravinnagaram, Rajasimhēśvara, Kshatriyasimhapallavēśvara, Śatrumallēśvarālaya, Mahēndravishnungrha and to many places, has been forgotten and their good work lost sight of. Names of places such as Pallāvaram, Pallavanichharam, Nandipuravinnagaram, Paramēśvaramangalam, Mahēndramangalam, Mahēndravāḍi, Mahāmallaipuram clearly indicate that these were either founded or named after the kings bearing these names in the Pallava dynasty. In view of all this it is surprising that the memory of the dynasty has not survived to any appreciable extent in living tradition. The Mackenzie Manuscripts collected about a century ago by the indefatigable Surveyor-General, Col. Colin Mackenzie, although containing many accounts of the early history of the Pāṇḍyas, Chōḷas, Gangas, Mahrattas and others do not contain any account relating to the dynasty of the Pallavas. But some of the accounts professing to give the Ancient History of Tondamanāḍalam and the exploits of Ādonnaichakravarti seem to preserve a distant reminiscence of what the people of the early part of the nineteenth century believed to have been the ancient condition of Toṇḍamaṇḍalam, by which name the region immediately around Kāṇchipuram was known. This class of traditional accounts preserved in the Mackenzie collection appears to depict the condition of Toṇḍamaṇḍalam prior to the days of Pallava advent. Some of them, such as the account of Toṇḍamān-chakravarti, relate to the conquest of the region from a rude and uncivilized tribe known as the Kurumbas and to the introduction of civilization by Ādonaḍai-chōla. There seems to be warrant for presuming that this person was no other than Toṇḍamān-Īlam-Tiraiyan who is immortalized in the Perumbānāṟṟupadai by Rudraṇ-Kaṇṭhanār. If so the Mackenzie collections may be taken as lending support to the view that the region of the Pallavas was under Chōla occupation before the Pallavas came from the north. The circumstances under which the Pallava conquest of the Chōla region was brought about are not known.
CHAPTER II

THEORIES OF THE ORIGIN OF THE PALLAVAS: PRE-PALLAVA HISTORY OF KĀÑCHĪPURA

The age of the Pallavas in South India may be taken to extend roughly from the third century A.D. to the end of the ninth. Many facts connected with their origin and early history are, in the existing state of historical research, uncertain. Their chronology is yet in the process of construction, and the genealogical order of succession, in spite of the comparative abundance of copper-plate characters, cannot be regarded as having been finally settled. The question of their origin has baffled investigators, European and Indian alike. Ingenious suggestions and theories have been offered for the solution of this enigma by various scholars who occupied themselves with this work.

VARIOUS THEORIES

The theory that held the field until recently, almost undisputed, is known as the Persian or Parthian origin of the Pallavas, and was adopted by the late Vincent Smith in the first edition of his Early History of India.1 According to the late Mr. Venkayya, who developed this theory elaborately:—

1 The Pallavas . . . may, until their origin is satisfactorily established by indisputable evidence, be supposed to be identical with the Pahlavas, Palhavas, and the Pahnivas of the Purāṇas. This identification is based on etymological grounds and supported by the fact that the Palhavas formed a distinct element in the population of Western India early in the second century. Their movement from Western India to the East Coast is not only possible but rendered likely by known historical facts.\(^1\)

This theory, however fascinating to the imagination, rests altogether on the superficial verbal resemblance of the words Pahlava and Pallava.\(^2\) There is no evidence whatever, as Mr. Venkayya himself admits, that the Pahlavas of the west coast moved into the east anytime during the second century A.D. At any rate there is no reference or reminiscence whatever in the large numbers of Pallava copper-plate inscriptions of any such migration. Mr. Venkayya presumes that it was the war of the Western Satrap Rudradāman, A.D. 150, with the Andhra king Gautamiputra-Śatakarni and his successor, that probably brought about in some manner, now unknown, the eastward movement of the Pahlavas in his service. It is indeed true that the minister of Rudradāman is called Suviśāka and described in the Junagadh inscription as a Pahlava. But no evidence of a positive character is available to connect him or his descendants with the Pallava kings of Southern India. For one thing this Pahlava minister of Rudradāman was not a ruling king. He is not moreover mentioned in any of the ancestral genealogical lists of the Pallava kings. In the second edition of his Early History of India Vincent Smith gave up this theory of Pahlava origin which he had adopted in the earlier edition of Early History of India, with the remark that it is more likely that the Pallavas were a tribe, clan, or caste which was formed in the northern part of the Madras Presidency, possibly in the Vengi country.\(^3\) Mr. Venkayya's objection against this view of indigenous origin of Pallavas is the apparent improbability of two tribes, the Pahlava in Western India and the Pallava in the delta of the Godavari, bearing the same name. Some of his other arguments against the indigenous origin of the Pallavas are ingenious and may be stated here. One is that the Pallavas never refer to themselves in their records as belonging either to lunar or solar race like other dynasties of South India such as the Chōlas, Pāṇḍyas, Chāḷukyas, etc. Another is that none of the kings mentioned in the Purāṇas are to be found in the Pallava genealogy such as Manu, Śibi, Ikshvāku, etc. All these facts according to him, raise a presumption that the Pallavas of Southern India were not an indigenous tribe in the sense that the Chōlas, the Pāṇḍyas and the Cheras were.¹

---

\(^1\) A.S.R., 1906-7, p. 221.

\(^2\) It is to be noted however that in Sanskrit orthography Pahlava with a \(h\) can never be confounded with the word Pallava. In the Pūrāṇas, as well as in Persian and even in Prakrit the \(h\) is distinct. The two words appear to indicate two distinct people.

Views of L. Rice.—This view of foreign origin was also shared by L. Rice. In his Mysore and Coorg from Inscriptions he points out that the Pallava kings of South India were identical with the Pahlavas who, with the Yavanas and Śakas, were destroyed by Gautamiputra-Śatākarni and that the word Pahlava is a Prakṛt form of Parthava meaning Parthian, especially the Arsacidan Parthians.² As we have already pointed out this conjecture that the Pallavas of the south are identical with the Pahlavas of the west and ultimately with the Parthians and the Persians is based entirely on the similarity of the words Pahlava and Pallava, whereas everything known about the Pallava kings of the south, inscriptions, traditions and monuments indicate that they were a peninsular race; they are probably identical with the class of people described as Tondaiyar in Tamil literature and also familiar as Kādaivas or foresters. Vincent Smith totally rejected this theory of foreign origin in the third edition of his Early History of India, and has expressed his conclusion on the subject in the following terms:—

¹ The name Pallava resembles Pahlava so closely that most writers have been disposed to favour the hypothesis that the Pallavas and the Pahlavas were identical, and that consequently the southern Pallava dynasty of Kāñchi should be considered as ultimately of Persian origin. But recent research has failed to adduce any historical facts in support of that notion, and it seems more likely that the Pallavas were an indigenous tribe, clan, or caste.\textsuperscript{1}

² Mysore and Coorg from Inscriptions, p. 53.

One important piece of evidence among others\textsuperscript{2} which strongly militates against this theory of the foreign origin is that furnished by the poet Rājaśekhara, the great critic, in his account of the geographical division of the people of his times.

This is brought out in full relief by Dr. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar in his dissertation on the Pallavas, wherein discussing the origin of the Pallavas he observes as follows:—

\textit{Rājaśekhara on the Pallavas}.—"The words " Pahlava " and " Pallava " are philologically one, but we have good authority for taking it that the two terms refer historically to different peoples, thereby illustrating that the partition that separates philology from history is not always very thin. The poet Rājaśekhara lived in the courts of the Gūrjara sovereigns Māhendrapala and Mahipāla about the end of the ninth and the commencement of the tenth centuries a.d. just the period when the Pallavas were passing out of existence as the dominant South Indian power. He is the author of a geographical work named \textit{Bhuwanakośa} to which he actually refers for further information in ch. xvii of his \textit{Kāvyamānmaṇsa}. In this work he makes a division of India into five, and allots to each division, the peoples, towns and rivers that belonged to it. In that section he allots the Pallavas to the southern division, or Dakshināpatha, lying beyond Mahishmati, while the Pahlavas he allots to the division Uttarapātha lying beyond Prithūdaka.\textsuperscript{3} This last name the "great water" probably stands for the Indus, and the people Pahlava are found associated with the Huns, Kambhoja, Bahlika, etc. In the estimation, therefore, of Rājaśekhara who seems a much travelled man, and has really much interesting information to give of different parts of India in respect at any rate of the cultivation of Sanskrit learning, the Pahlavas and the Pallavas were distinct peoples, one of them belonging to the south and the other to the frontier on the other side of the Indus. Rājaśekhara, no doubt is a late authority, but undoubtedly \textsuperscript{1} \textit{E. H. I.} (third edition), p. 469.

\textsuperscript{2} Cf. C. V. Vaidya’s views, \textit{Medieval Hindu India}, vol. i, p. 280.

\textsuperscript{3} This has been since satisfactorily identified with Pehoa in the Panipet District, and this is in complete accord with the details given in Rājaśekhara.—\textit{Ed}.
Pre-Pallava History of Kāṇcīpura gives expression to the prevailing opinion of his time in regard to these two peoples.

Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil's Views.—The view held by Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil is only slightly different. Although he does not go the whole extent of advocating the theory of a Parthian origin of the Pallavas he is inclined to connect the early Pallava kings of Conjeevaram with the Pahlavas of Western India. We read for instance in his chapter on the Pallavas in his latest work, The Ancient History of the Deccan.

'Up to the present day we have not found any document which proves a Parthian invasion of Southern India. We may say that this theory makes the Pallava mystery still more mysterious.'

According to him the Pallavas were alien to South India and the early members of this dynasty were not kings. They were neighbours of the Nāgas and Chūtu-Nagas in the days of Rudradāman in the second century. The first Pallava king inherited the throne of Kāṇchi on marrying the daughter of a Nāga chief by name Śivaskanda-Nāga. On pages 55-56 he elaborates this view and establishes a connection between the Pahlavas of the west coast with the Pallavas of Kāṇchi. On page 55 of this work he says:

'. . . . . We learn from the Girnar inscription that Suviśāka who was the minister of Rudradāman in A.D. 150 was a Pahlava.'

Thus the word which was written Palhava in A.D. 78 was written Pahlava in A.D. 150 and we note when we see the Girnar inscription, that the compound letter 'hla', resembles the double 'll'. Besides in Mayidavolu plates written in Prakrit this question of letters has been solved in a very simple manner, they wrote Pālava. This can correspond to Pallava for in Prakrit the consonants are not doubled. In the Hīrāhada-gallī plates it is written as Pallava though they are also in Prakrit. Later on when the documents were written in Sanskrit the word Pallava would be understood to mean 'sprout'.

2 Ancient History of the Deccan, p. 47.
From all this the following conclusion is drawn:—

'The identity of names leads us to think that the ancient kings of Kāṇchī belonged to the same family as the minister of Rudradāman. He lived in A.D. 150 and we know Pallava kings of Kāṇchī reigning about A.D. 225.'

Objections to the Theory.—This theory which connects the Pallavas of Kāṇchī with the Pahlavas of the west coast presents difficulties, some of which have already been pointed out before. In the first place it was seen that there is no evidence whatsoever of an eastward movement of the Pahlavas. There is moreover no evidence of a Pahlava prince marrying the daughter of a Nāga chief on which Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil relies for his theory of the attainment of political sovereignty by the Pahlavas. The Vēlurpāḷayam plates which mention a Nāga alliance ¹ do not say that it was the first Pallava king who so attained power. In this record which belongs to the ninth century, he is called Vīra-kūrcha and not Śivaskāṇḍa. Then again this record mentions many earlier kings such as Aśokavarman who ruled before the days of Vīra-kūrcha a fact which militates strongly against the view of Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil. The theory does not explain why they came to be called Pallavas. It fails to take into consideration the existence of a people known as Topḍaiyar, synonymous with the Sanskrit Pallava. Moreover early Tamil literature does not support the view that the Pallavas originally emigrated from Surāṣṭra. Finally there is no mention in any of the numerous charters of the Pallava kings and other contemporary kings in South India of Suviśāka the supposed ancestor of the Pallava kings who lived in Rudradāman's court. If he was really connected with the Pallava family of Kāṇchī how is it that he does not figure even in one of the lists of their ancestors contained in the Pallava records? It is not again definitely known whether the authority of Śivaskāṇḍanāga extended as far south as Tonḍaimaṇḍalam. No inscription or copper-plate of this chief or others have been found proving that his authority extended in this region. These considerations make us hesitate to accept the theory of Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil that the kings of Conjeeveram were descended from the Pahlavas of Rudradāman’s time, and that the first Pallava king obtained the throne of Kāñchi by a marriage alliance with the Nāgas.

Yet another View.—Mr. Rasanayagam who does not agree with the views and conclusions arrived at by the Professor seeks to find the home of Pallavas in the south in the region known as Maṇipallavam to the early Tamils.¹ According to him Kīḷḷi’s son Iḷam Tiraiyan through the Nāga princess mentioned in the early Tamil work Maṇimekhalai was really the first Pallava king. In this work he is described as the son of Kīḷḷi by Pilivalai, a daughter of Valaiyaṇan, the Nāga king of Maṇipallavam. He was lost in a ship-wreck and was found washed ashore with a coil round his ankle of a twig of the Toṇḍai creeper (Caphallandra Indica). Hence his name Toṇḍamān-Iḷam-Tiraiyan. Iḷam-Tiraiyan was therefore the first to become an independent king and progenitor of the Pallava dynasty. His period is fixed as the third quarter of the second century A.D. The dynasty was called the Pallava designated after the mother’s native place Maṇipallavam. The titles, such as Ankura, and Pōttaraiyan which were assumed by Pallava kings are synonymous with the word Pallava and remind us of the origin of the name from Maṇipallavam.

Consideration of the Theory.—According to this theory the Pallavas were of Chōla-Nāga origin and were indigenous to the southern part of the peninsula and Ceylon. They had nothing to do with Western India, Persia, the Chātu-Nāgas, Suviśāka and others. But there are certain difficulties in accepting this view as correct. The earliest members of the Pallava family that we know from copper-plate inscriptions do not include either Toṇḍamān-Iḷam-Tiraiyan or any member of the Chōla-Nāga dynasty. On the other hand, they describe themselves as members of the Bhāradvāja-gotra and as the performers of Aśvamēdha, Vājapēya and other sacrifices.

¹ Ind. Ant., vol. iii, pp. 75-80.
Moreover they addressed their charters invariably in Prakrit and Sanskrit, and never in the Tamil language. Such of the charters that contain any allusion to the Nāga marriage mention neither a Chōla ancestry nor Manipallavam their alleged original home. Their records on the contrary show that they are different from the southern Tamil rulers, and hailed from the north as representatives of Aryan or Sanskrit culture. The hostile relationship of the early Pallavas with the early Tamil rulers, one of the Pallava kings being called the 'submarine-fire to the oceanlike army of the Chōlas,' seems to be opposed to this Chōla-Nāga origin of the Pallava dynasty. For these reasons it looks as if that Tondamān-Ilam-Tiraiyan had no connection with the Pallava family of Kāñchipura known to us from charters, and probably was a Tiraiyar-chief who preceded the Pallavas and was a subordinate of the contemporary Chōla ruler in the second century A.D.

Other Views.—A more or less similar view is expressed by Mr. M. S. Ramaswami Aiyangar in his recent work Studies in South Indian Jainism. According to him the early Pallavas, especially those kings in the fourth century A.D., were called Tiraiyar only and not as Pallavas. In support of this view he mentions the reference to Vishṇugōpa in Samudragupta's

2 He is actually described as given the name of Tiraiyan because he was brought over by the waves of the sea. This seems but a learned attempt at explaining an obscure folk-name Tiraiyar.—Ed.
3 Studies in South Indian Jainism, p. 143.
4 The Allahabad pillar inscription of Samudragupta merely speaks of Vishṇugōpa as the ruler of Kāñchi. The name Pallava does not occur there. From this it is evident that in the fourth century A.D. the word Pallava was little used by them. . . . In Sangam literature the rulers of Kāñchi are spoken of as Tiraiyan and Tondaimān. . . . Vishṇugōpa, who was ruling Kāñchi at the time of Samudragupta's invasion must therefore be a Tiraiyan.

The Tondamandalapattiyam gives an account of the various branches of the Tiraiyar. This has been noted by Kanakasabhai Pillai in his book, Tamils 1800 Years Ago. As one of the main branches of Tiraiyar we have Pallava Tiraiyar showing thereby the connection between Pallavar with Tiraiyar. It is therefore natural to suppose that the Pallavas were known to the early Sangam literature by their group name of Tiraiyar but as their power and influence increased in the land Allahabad pillar inscription as king of Kāñchī only (Kāñcheyaka Vishnugopa) and not as the king of the Pallavas.

This explains according to him that in the fourth century A.D. the word Pallava was little used by them. Another ingenious suggestion made on similar lines is that of Mr. Swaminatha Aiyar, based upon the apparent similarity of the words Tiraiya, Draya and Darya in Persian. ‘Draya’ and ‘Darya’ according to this writer mean the sea in Persian, and Tiraiyar is apparently a Persian-derived name meaning seamen. He would thus ascribe to the Tiraiyar a Persian or Pahlava origin. As the fact seems to accord with the Persian origin of the Pallavas held by certain scholars it was thought by the author as giving the most satisfactory solution of the question. But as was already stated, the Persian origin of the Pallavas rests on the doubtful philological resemblance of words to which the addition of Tiraiya and Draya are now sought to be added. Apart from the resemblance of the words, is there anything positive which supports the identification of these different people Tiraiyar and the Pallavas? The evidence at our disposal on the other hand is wholly against it, and in the existing state of research it is not possible to regard the identification as established. The Pallava kings of the copper-plate charters must therefore be looked upon as different from the Tiraiyar, and the early members of the family such as Śivaskandavarman, Budhavarman, etc., have very little to do with the kings and chiefs known as Tiraiyan and Ijam-Tiraiyan figuring in early Tamil literature. Another consideration which militates strongly their branch name Pallava-Tiraiyar assumed greater importance. Hence the absence of the word Pallava in the fourth and the fifth century literature and the greater frequency with which this name occurs in such works as Nandikkalamabakam.

There is no evidence to prove that the Tiraiyar of the early Tamil literature were the same as the Pallavas, and the testimony of Tondamandalapattayam is invalidated as the work is only a work of comparatively modern times. It is not correct to say that in the fourth century the word Pallava was little used by them. In the copper-plate charters of the fourth century as well as the following centuries they are called only as Pallavas and never as Tiraiyan. If Vishnugopa was a Tiraiyan it is strange that he is not mentioned as such in the Allahabad pillar inscription.
against the identification of the Tiraiyar chiefs and the Pallava kings is the attitude of these kings towards Tamil literature and poets. While we find, that the chiefs of the Tiraiyar like Tondamān-Ilaṁ-Tiraiyan not only encouraged and fostered Tamil poets but are actually reputed to have been poets themselves. We do not find that any of the early Pallavas were similarly devoted to the encouragement of Tamil. That Tondamān-Ilaṁ-Tiraiyan was himself a poet is evident from Puranānāru 185, and verses 94, 96 and 106 of Naṟṟinai. The explanation is that the Pallavas were essentially a northern rather than a Tamilian race, steeped in Aryan or Brahmanic culture which through their encouragement took the leading place in the Tamil country. They were aliens to the Tamil land in this sense that their culture and outlook were totally different from those of the Tamils, and hence did not give themselves to actively patronizing Tamil literature like the Tamil kings of the south. Throughout their history we find them almost exclusively encouraging Sanskrit culture and literature. With the exception of the Ālvārs and Adivārs and the author of Nandikkalambakam, no Tamil poet appears to have enjoyed the patronage of the Pallavas. On the other hand, Sanskrit was actively fostered at the Pallava court, and a number of Sanskrit poets found hospitable reception in the Pallava court such as Bhāravi, Dandin, etc., and some of the kings themselves were noteworthy writers in Sanskrit.¹ When all these considerations are taken into account it becomes difficult to sustain the identity of the Tiraiyar chiefs with the Pallava kings.

Kurumba-Pallava identification.—Certain writers are inclined to consider that the Pallavas were the same as the people described as Kurtumbar figuring in some of the accounts of the Mackenzie manuscripts. As regards these people there is a great deal of vague and misleading ideas in the minds of most writers. Who are the Kurumbas? According to one of the Tamil Nigantus¹ certain hill chiefs known as Kurunilamannar were known as the Kurumbas. But in the Mackenzie accounts these people are described as the earliest inhabitants of Toṇḍamaṇḍalam and said to have been given the name for their cruel ways. They are also in some of the accounts believed to have been responsible for the division of the region into twenty-four kottams, most of which figure in Pallava and Chōla inscriptions. The story of the conquest of the region by Ādonnaichōla, which will be described later on, is believed by Sir Walter Elliot, Sewell and others to have been accomplished in the eleventh century in the days of Kulōttunga Chōla, a supposition for which there is no evidence. It is believed by some that these Kurumbas were the same as the Pallavas. But there seems to be absolutely nothing which supports such a notion. There is no reference in the numerous inscriptions of the Tamil land that there was at any time a dynasty of the Kurumbas, or that the Pallava kings are identical with the Kurumbas. Hence it appears to be preposterous to accept the identification.

¹ It has to be noted in this context that Kāñchī was famous as a centre of Sanskrit learning and was noted as 'a Ghaṭikā of the Brahmans' in the Velūrpālayam Plates. It was a notable centre of Sanskrit learning when the Kadambas were coming into the view of history as in the story of Mayūra Śarman.—Ed.

Still another View.—According to Alexander Rea the references making the Pallavas ‘hold the sprout’ are pedantic Pandit’s puns, or a play upon the double meaning of the word ‘Pallava’. ‘I would suggest,’ he says, ‘that it might be derived by somewhat free translation from the two Tamil words Pāl and Avil (to pull) referring to their being agriculturists or milk-drawers like the Gopala of the northern Dekkan.’² He also throws out another suggestion: ‘the masculine singular termination in Tamil is avam, and the plural avar; now prefixing the word Pāl (milk), would give Pālavan; or Pālavar as the honorific plural. Pālavan in that case would mean milkman.’ Both these suggestions, however appear more fanciful than possible as the derivations have not even grammatical justification in their favour.

¹ Divākaraṃ...
In the present state of research definite conclusions on the question seem unattainable. It is, however, quite plain that the theory of foreign origin of the Pallavas, especially that which gives them a Parthian or Persian home, is without foundation. The theory that contents itself with connecting the Pahlava minister with the Pallavas of Kâñchi although having an air of plausibility is hardly acceptable as no evidence is forthcoming of the eastward migration of the Pahlavas in the second century. The next alternative is to regard them as indigenous to the country. In doing so we have to establish first whether the Pallavas should be regarded as a family or a tribe. Those who contend that the modern Kallar and the Pallis are descended from the Pallavas are labouring under the impression that the Pallavas constituted a big tribe; there seems to be little evidence for the assumption. In the Pallava inscriptions themselves we scarcely come across with the word Kurumba as a dynastic surname of any of the Pallava kings. It is therefore improbable that the identification of the Kurumbas with the Pallavas postulated by certain scholars rests on sound foundation.

That the rule of the Pallavas of Kâñchi was preceded by that of the Chôlas is made clear not only by the evidence of Tamil literature, but also from the testimony of the Mackenzie manuscript accounts to which reference had been made already. These accounts although belonging to the early part of the nineteenth century, being the traditional account furnished by the village elders in the days of Col. Colin Mackenzie, profess to relate the early history of the region known as Tondamandalam which corresponded to the region ruled over by the Pallava kings. According to the Ancient History of Tondamandalam, one of the accounts in the Mackenzie collection, the region was occupied by the Kurumbas who are said to have been responsible for the erection of the twenty-four forts, and the division of the region into twenty-four districts. These are also said to have carried on a sea-trade with the merchants of Kâveripattinam. It is from these Kurumbas that one Adondachakravarti, said to be an illegitimate son of the contemporary Chōla king, is described as having conquered the region and acquired it for the Chōlas setting up his own rule at Kāñchī after uprooting the Kurumbas. The region which was till then known as Kurumbabhūmi is said to have been renamed Tondamandalam after the name of the conquering Chōla prince. If we properly interpret the traditional account in the light of the facts regarding the occupation of the region around Kāñchipuram by Ilam-Tiraiyan, it is easy to understand that in this account we find preserved the earliest reminiscence of the conquest of the region around Conjeevaram by the Chōlas. When did this happen? Early scholars who noticed the account have been misled into thinking that this conquest was made in the eleventh century. They have been led to think so by the reference that the contemporary Chōla king in these accounts was Kulottunga, and there was a Kulottunga ruling in the eleventh century. But all the other details in the account are against this date. The conditions of the territory and the state of civilization at the time of Adondaichōla, the first Chōla representative, are too primitive to apply to a period like the eleventh century by which time the region had become fully civilized under the Pallavas who are known to have beautified Tondamandalam, and whose sway over the region had already lasted for eight centuries. It looks therefore probable that the traditional account has mistaken the actual name of the contemporary Chōla king at the time of the subjugation of the Kurumbas which must have been made by some member of the family of the early Chōla Karikāla in the second century A.D.

Pre-Pallava History of Kāñchī.—Kāñchī which is one of the seven great holy cities of India is believed to have had a history much anterior to the beginning of the Christian era. From the Chinese pilgrim Hiuen Tsang we learn that in the days of Buddha in the fifth century B.C. he frequented the region around Kāñchipuram and made conversions. From the same source we learn also that Aśokarāja built several stupas none of which has survived to the present day. It would be remembered that Dharmapāla, the celebrated Buddhist savant and scholar at Nalanda, hailed from Kāñchipuram. Whether Buddhism made any progress at Kāñchi at the time of Buddha is doubtful as there is not much evidence that Buddhism had advanced into the heart of the Tamil land in this period. Whether Aśoka ordered stupas to be built at the city of Kāñchipura or not, it is not possible to say. The presumption that he might have done so gains strength in view of the discovery of Aśoka’s inscriptions as far south as Siddāpura in the region of Mysore, and from the fact that his inscriptions mention the Chōlas, the Pāṇḍyas and the Kēralaputras. At any rate Huien Tsang says that he noticed a stupa about 100 feet high built by Aśokarāja.¹

During the reign of Karikāla who has been assigned, with acceptable authority by several scholars to the age of the Tamil Śangam in the beginning of the Christian era, Kāñchipuram appears to have been one of the northern outposts of the kingdom. At any rate it is probable that one of Karikāla’s exploits, or those of his generals, must have been the transfer of power from the Āndhra-Śātavāhanas, whose ascendancy in this region is indicated by the discovery of ship-coins in profusion in the region between the Pennar and Pālar into the hands of the Chōlas. At any rate in the period immediately following the city of Kāñchi is found in the possession of Toṇḍamān-Ilam-Tiraiyan as stated in the Perumbānāṟṟuppadai of Rudran Kaṇṇanār. According to the Mackenzie MSS. one of the achievements of Āḍoṇḍachōla, by whom probably we are to understand Toṇḍamān-Ilam-Tiraiyan, is the uprooting of the the Kūrumbas by which term the sturdy chiefs of the region were probably known. Under the rule of Toṇḍamān-Ilam-Tiraiyan of Kāñchi, presumably as the Chōla viceroy, the city appears to have been in a flourishing condition. The Perumbānāṟṟuppadai of Rudran Kaṇṇanār, the contemporary of Toṇḍamāṇ-İlām-Tiraiyan gives some idea of the city as it was in those days:—‘In the heart of the town were the Brahman quarters, where neither dog nor the fowl could be seen. They were flanked on the one side by the fishermen’s streets, and on the other by those of the traders, and these were surrounded by the Cheris of the Mallas and the toddy-drawers. Then far removed from them were situated at one extremity of the city the palls of the Iḍaiyans, and beyond these lay the isolated paraichēris of the Eyinas. Next to the Malla streets were the temple of Tiruveṅkā and the palace of King İlām-Tiraiyan.’

The history of Kāṇchipuram is lost in obscurity almost from the days of Karikāla to its occupation by the Pallava kings under Śivaskandavarman. It is probable that during this period it was in the hands of the Chōla princes some of whom are mentioned in the Maṇimēkhalai to have built Buddhist temples. It is here mentioned that there were Buddhist chaityas in Kāṇchi constructed by Kaḷarkiḷḷi and İlām-Kiḷḷi whose actual position in the Chōla family of this period is not known. It would be an interesting study to examine the evidence contained in the Tamil works regarding the connection of the early Chōla princes with Kāṇchipuram. There are several members of the Chōla family bearing the name of Kiḷḷi mentioned in early Tamil literature. One of these is Kuḷamūṟṟattu-tunjina Kiḷḷiāvalavan, Kiḷḷi who died at Kuḷamūṟram, of whom many poets have sung. Then again Kovūr-Kiḷār mentions in Puṟam 44 and 45 a certain Kāriyaṟṟutunjina (who fell or died at Kāri River) Neṟumkiḷḷi of Uraiyur and of his friend İlām-Tattan. Elsewhere we find the poet singing of Kurāpaḷḷi-tunjina (who died at Kurāpaḷḷi) Kiḷḷi-vaḷavan, one of whose exploits was the destruction of Karuvūr. His Pāṇḍyan contemporary was apparently the Ugrapperuvaḷudi who died at Veḷḷiyambalam. Other pieces

---

1 Tam. Stud., p. 76.
2 See chap. 28. Account of Maṇimēkhalai’s visit to Kāṇchi.
3 Puṟam 373.
in the same collection speak of Solan Ilavandigaippani-Tunjina Nalangilli Setchenni, Enadi (General) Tirukkkilli, etc.

According to the account of Manimekhalai, the Chola King Velvikki, who is probably one of the Killis enumerated above, married a Naga princess called Pilivailai, the daughter of Valai-Vanjan, and became the father of the prince known afterwards as Tonadam-Ilam-Tiraiyan whom certain scholars look upon as the ancestor of the Pallavas of Kanchi. This account although it seems to set up a connection between the Cholas and the Pallavas has not been corroborated by the evidence of the Pallava charters.

Senganan.—Among the successors of the Chola king Karikala, one of the most important was Ko-Senganan who is mentioned not only in the early, Tamil classics1 but also in the Tevaram hymns of the Saiva saints Appar and Sambandar.2

We learn from Tamil literature that he defeated his Chera enemy at a place called Kalumalam, took his enemy prisoner and confined him at a place called Kudavayil-koottam variously identified with Kodavasal and places in the Cochin State. Senganan’s sway must have extended throughout Tonadamondalam. The Kalavali-Narpadi, a poem celebrating the powers of this king as a warrior, gives a picturesque account of the battle of Kalumalam and early Tamil modes of warfare. The age of Senganan may be ascertained if we know the correct date of Poygaiyar who was his contemporary. According to certain scholars Poygaiyar is identical with Poygai-Alvir the Vaishnava saint whose age is that of the third Sangam or somewhere near it. According to others Poygaiyar is assignable to the sixth or the seventh centuries A.D. This latter date is impossible if we bear in mind that Senganan is mentioned already in the seventh century A.D.

1 Ovattai Oovaththuchedutan Koodaviriyam

2 Stanza from ‘Kalavali.’

3 Appar, Tev. Tirukkurukkai Patikam; Sambandar, Tiruvanaikkaaval Patikam.
by Appar as a well-known Śaiva saint. He is said to have worshipped at Tirunaraiyūr near Kumbhakonam by Tirumangai Āḻvār, the Vaishnava saint who also notes that he built as many as seventy temples dedicated to Śiva. If Ko-Śengamnan could become so popular as early as the seventh century to be mentioned by the Śaiva saints of the period in their hymns a considerable time must have elapsed between his period and the period of the Śaiva saints. It would not be wrong to assign him to the period succeeding the age of Karikāla (third century A.D.) and immediately preceding the advent of the Pallavas of Kāñchipuram.
CHAPTER III

EARLY PALLAVAS OF THE PRAKRIT RECORDS

The materials for the reconstruction of the early history of the Pallavas are far from adequate. We are entirely dependent upon the few copper-plate charters in Prakrit and Sanskrit for our knowledge of the political history of the Pallava kings of Conjeevaram until about the seventh century when we are on more certain ground. As more than one scholar has remarked the copper plate charters of the early period are more useful for constructing a genealogical list than for writing the political history of the period. The facts contained in the records enumerate the names of the great-grandfather, the grandfather and the father of the donor of the grant and the details of the object of the grant. They do not furnish many particulars on the political condition of the period. It is too much to expect much information concerning the period from these charters as their professed object was merely to record donations to certain individuals. As we have already pointed out, it is only from the seventh century that the habit of recording the exploits of the ancestors of the king who made the grant came to be popular in South India.

The Pallava inscriptions and copper charters are divisible as already indicated into three sections. To the first group belongs the Prakrit charters which though bearing no date in any known era have been on palaeographical grounds assigned to the third and the fourth centuries of the Christian era. It is well known from the history of the Andhras that they continued to be powerful in the southern region almost till the first quarter of the third century A.D. We know from the Allahabad pillar inscription of Samudragupta that about the middle of the fourth century A.D. there reigned in the region extending to the banks of the Krishna, a Pallava king named Vishnugopa. The contemporaneity of Samudragupta with Vishṇugopa of Kāñchī, who was undoubtedly one of the early kings of the Pallava dynasty of Conjeevaram, leads to the conclusion that Vishṇugopa must have reigned some time about A.D. 340 to 350. But a recent attempt has been made to fix the initial date of the Gupta era at A.D. 200–201 which would put back Samudragupta's period to the middle of the third instead of the fourth century. But this theory rests at present on Jain tradition merely and has serious objections against it. If this date be accepted, Vishṇugopa of Kāñchī would have to be placed in the middle of the third century, the period of the Pallava kings of the Prakrit charters, and this would necessitate the putting back of the kings of the Prakrit charters to the second century—a position which would be difficult to accept in the present scheme of Ándhra chronology. Without taking up this matter we may proceed to put together the order of succession for the earliest period, which may be styled the age of the kings, of the Prakrit charters, circa A.D. 200–350. The three important Prakrit charters which are the earliest of the Pallava charters—the Mayidavōlu plates, the Hirahadagalli plates and the British Museum plates have been published in the Epigraphia Indica with text, translation and valuable notes by Bühler, Hultzsch, Leumann and others.

The actual order of succession of the Pallava kings of the Prakrit charters is uncertain, but the following represents the most probable one so far as we could make out from the Prakrit copper-plates that are available:

- Bappa Dēva
- Śivaskandavarman
- Buddhy (ankura)
- Viravarman
- Vishṇugopa (A.D. 340).

The earliest of the Prakrit charters that we have is dated from the capital city of Kāñchipuram issued by Śivaskandavarman while he was yet a crown-prince and dated in the tenth year of his father. Sivakāṇḍavarman is described as a Yuvamahārāja and affiliated to the Bhāradvāja-gotra of the Pallava family. The grant is addressed to the Viceroy at Dhāṇyakaṭa (Dharaniṅkoṭṭa near Amarāvati) in the Andhrapatḥā. It is thus plain that the kingdom of Sivakāṇḍavarman’s father, who is called Bappa Dēva merely, included Andhrapatḥā and Toṇḍamaṇḍalam. The capital of Andhrapatḥā the Telugu region, appears to have been Dhāṇyakaṭaka, while Conjeevaram was the Imperial as well as the local capital of Toṇḍamaṇḍalam, their Tamil dominion. The next in point of time is the grant recorded in the Hirahadagalli plates found in Hirahadagalli in the Bellary District. The king who issued this grant is regarded by all scholars as the same as the Prince who issued the Mayidavolu grant. This is also issued from the city of Kaṅchipuram, and is dated in the eighth year of the king and refers to a grant of the village of Chillerēkakoḍumka in the Sāṭāhaniraṭṭa probably identical with the Satahani-Āhāra of the Myakadoni record dated in the eighth year of king Puḷumāvi. The plates, besides recording the details connected with the gift, mention the fact that Sivakāṇḍavarman performed the Aśvamedha, Agnishtoma and Vaijayēya sacrifices. Of these, if there is any truth in the claim of the first we may reasonably presume that Sivakāṇḍavarman made extensive conquests and that he had some subordinate kings under his rule. There is no means by which we could at present check the accuracy or otherwise of this claim.

Next in order of time comes the Guṇapadeya or the British Museum plates of Chārudēvi. This record gives in genealogical order the names of Vijayakāṇḍavarman, his son Yuvamahārāja Buddhavaraman and his son Buddhyankura. This record is dated in some unknown year of Vijayakāṇḍavarman’s reign and records an order of the Queen of the heir-apparent consisting of the gift of land to the temple of Nārāyaṇa at Dālūra. At present it is difficult to say what relation the Vijayaskandavarman of this record bore to Śivaskandavarman of the first two Prakrit charters. It has been attempted by certain scholars to identify the Śivaskandavarman of the Prakrit charters with the Vijayaskandavarman of the British Museum record as the prefixes Vijaya or Śiva are too insignificant to matter much. But as this relationship is not given in any of the numerous genealogical lists of later times we cannot be sure whether the members of the Prakrit charters and the members of the Sanskrit charters were connected with one another in this manner. One striking fact which is a decisive consideration in this identification is the close similarity of the palæography of the Hirahadagalli and the British Museum copper-plates. As regards the period of these kings we have already indicated that it is the age which followed the decadence of the Andhra power, that is, the period from about the middle of the third century to the middle of the fourth century. If we calculate back from the known date of Vīṣṇu-gopa the contemporary of Samudragupta, allowing about 25 years for each generation we arrive at A.D. 215 for the reign of Bappa the earliest known Pallava sovereign of Kāṇchi. This calculation is only approximate as it is unlikely that the reign-period of all the kings was the same and is based upon the supposed contemporaneity of Samudragupta and Vīṣṇu-gopa, and the probability that Vīṣṇu-gopa of the Samudragupta pillar inscription was a Pallava king.

1 Ep. Ind., vol. vi, p. 84ff. and plates.
3 Ibid., vol. viii, p. 143.

The History of the Period.—As we have already pointed out it is not apparent who was the first member of the Pallavas who established the Pallava power in Conjeevaram. So far as we know Tōṇḍamāṇ-Iḷam-Tiraiyān and Bappa are the earliest known names associated with the rule of the ancient city of Conjeevaram. The relation of the former with the latter is not known although certain scholars have advocated the view that he was the first member of the Pallava family. The entire absence of his name, and the name Tiraiyān itself or its equivalent in the Prakrit and Sanskrit records of the Pallavas lead us to reject this view. Our knowledge of this ruler is derived from Tamil literature and from tradition embodied in the Mackenzie MSS. The state of the city of Kāṇchīpuram during the reign of this ruler is fully described in the early Tamil work, the Perumnbanāṟṟupadai, by the Śangam poet Rudran-Kaṇjanār. How the region passed from the hands of Ilaṁ-Tiraiyan into the hands of the Pallavas remains unknown. It is presumable that about the middle of the first quarter of the third century A.D. there was an invasion of the region from the north led by the Āndhra-Satavāhana rulers or generals in the wake of which the first member of the Pallava family must have acquired sovereignty over the region. A faint recollection of this invasion is recorded in the Mackenzie MSS. accounts concerning Toṇḍaman Chakravarti and Visvāvasūrāja. Whether this was brought about by an immediate ancestor of Bappa or Bappa himself is not known. We may roughly fix the period of the passing of Toṇḍamanḍalam from the Chōla feudatories into the hands of the Pallavas about the closing years of the third century A.D.

Mahārāja Bappa.—It is not clear whether the immediate ancestor of Śivaskaṇḍavarman of the Prakrit charters, who is called Bappa in the record found at Mayidavolu, was the actual founder of the rule of the Pallavas at Kāṇchīpuram. In all probability he was not. Because, if this had been so we may reasonably expect the mention of such an achievement in the record issued by his son and heir-apparent, and dated in his own reign. The kingdom over which Bappa ruled included in addition to the districts around Kāṇchīpuram known as Toṇḍamanḍalam or Tuṇḍakarāśtra, the Telugu country on both banks of the Krishna which had Dharanikoṭa or Dhānynakaṭaka for its capital. It may be presumed that during this age the Pallava kingdom was divided into two parts, the northern part comprising the Telugu districts with Amarāvati as capital, and the Tamil districts around Kāṇchī with Kāṇchipuram for its capital. Thus the region bounded by the Pāḷār on the south and the Krishna on the north formed the kingdom of the Pallavas during this period. The close resemblance of the Mayidavolu plates with the Kondamudi plates of Jayavarman which again resembles the Karle inscription of Gautamiputra Śatakarni and the Nasik inscription of Vasishtiputra-Pulumāvi, fixes the period of Bappa and Śivaskandavarman approximately as the early part of the third century A.D.¹—Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil supposed, in his Pallavas, that Yuvamahārāja Śivaskandavarman of the Mayidavolu record was the grandson of the Andhra king Śivaskandavarman.² But as he himself admits, this is based entirely on similarity of names such as those of Yuvamahārāja Śivaskandavarman and Śivaskanda Śatakarni.³ Apart from this there is no positive evidence to prove that the Pallavas were directly connected with the ruling Satavāhana royal family or descended from them.

Bappa is said to have given away as free gift numerous gold coins as well as a hundred thousand ox-ploughs to increase the prosperity of the Pallava family. This was presumably intended to bring under cultivation vast areas of uncultivated forest tracts in the Telugu country.

Śivaskandavarman.—The Mayidavolu grant was issued while this sovereign was yet the heir-apparent. From the Hirahadagalli grant dated in the 8th year of his reign we learn that he had the title of Dharmamahārāja. This was evidently assumed after extensive conquests. We do not know with any definiteness what were the regions which he brought under the sway of Pallava rule. But from the fact that this record says that Śivaskandavarman was a performer of the Aṣvamēdha, Vājapēya and Agnishūma we may reasonably infer that his suzerainty must have been recognized by several kings. Otherwise the performance of Aṣvamēdha would lose any significance attaching to it unless it is regarded as a false boast. It is not apparent which was the southernmost limit of the Tamil part of his kingdom, but it is presumable that his sway extended as far as the South Pennar while in the north his kingdom included the Telugu districts between the Godavari and Krishna. His capital was Kāṇchīpuram while Amarāvati in the north appears to have continued as a flourishing seat of the Buddhists and their monasteries. The records of Śivaskandavarman give us a glimpse into the Asokan nature of the organization of government during this period. The kingdom was divided into divisions known as Vishaya, Raṭṭha and Grāma. The officers entrusted to rule these areas were known as Vishayikas, Raṭṭhika (Rashtrikas), and Dēṣadikata (Dēsadhikṛtas). These officers were chiefly recruited from the members of the royal family and the commanders of armies. The persons who were consulted by the king on administrative matters were the prime-minister and the private secretary (Amatya and the Rahasyāṭikata). It is significant that the names of the various heads of departments are all in Prakrit. It is probable that the Pallava kings continued the administrative system of Asoka on the lines of the Dharmashastras and Arthashastras. The taxes collected by these kings from their subjects are in accordance with the Sanskrit Dharmashastra rules. The taxes and other dues that these kings were entitled to are known as the eighteen kinds of taxes (Aṭṭarasajati-Parihāra). Some of these included the taking of milk and curd from the subjects, the supply of cattle to the officers touring in the villages on royal duty, the supplying of lodging facilities and utensils, fire-wood, vegetables, flowers, menial servants, etc. A complete list of these is furnished in the later charters enumerating the exemptions secured by certain donees to whom free gifts of land were made. During this period the manufacture of salt and jaggery were royal monopolies, and special license had to be obtained for private manufacture.

Inland and foreign commerce must have been in a flourishing condition during this period if we may judge from the writings of the classical writers which mention several seaport towns such as Kamara, Poduka, Sopatma, Melanga, Kodura, etc. Of these Kodura has been identified with Kudur and Melangus was obviously Malanka or Mavilangai probably Mahābalipuram or Seven Pagodas.\textsuperscript{1} Sea-borne trade must have been flourishing at these various ports, and the presence of large numbers of ship-coins and Roman coins of an early period fully lend support to this view. So far as the port of Mahābalipuram is concerned it is clear, from the evidence of Tirumangai-Āḻvār, that in the early part of the eighth century the place was a busy harbour. This probably was the case in the days of Śivaskāndavaraman also. The ship-coins discovered extensively between Cuddalore and Madras have been attributed by some to Pallava kings although it looks probable that they were issued under the auspices of the Śatavāhana kings of the Dakhan.

\textit{Vijayaskandavarman, circa A.D. 280.}—The order of succession of the Prakrit plates is not known. But we may presume from palæographical indications that Vijayaskandavarman of the British Museum copper-plates succeeded Śivaskandavarman in the interval between A.D. 275 and 340. All that we know about this sovereign and his times is the information given in this record.\textsuperscript{2} From this we learn that his queen was called Chārūdēvi, and that the heir-apparent to the throne was called Buddhyanakura, and that the father of Vijaya-Buddhavarman was called Vijayaskandavarman who is presumably identical with Śivaskandavarman of the earlier charters. The record registers a grant of land to the temple of Nārāyaṇa at the village of Dalūra in the division called Kūlimaharaṭha. This is, so far as we know, the earliest Pallava record mentioning a royal gift to the temples. We do not know anything about the political events during the reign of Buddhyanakura who flourished in the years immediately following the death of Vijaya-Buddhavarman. The next member of the Pallava family is Vishnugopa well known as the Pallava contemporary of Samudragupta.

The connection of the Pallava kings of the Prakrit charters and those of the Sanskrit charters is not clear. According to \textsuperscript{1} \textit{Ind. Ant.}, vol. xlvi, p. 72.

\textsuperscript{2} \textit{Ep. Ind.}, vol. vi, p. 88 and vol. viii, p. 143.
some scholars the dynasties of the Prakrit charters and the Sanskrit charters are distinctly different, and not directly connected. According to others¹ all the members of the copper-plates and the stone inscriptions whether they are written in Prakrit, Sanskrit or Tamil are to be connected with one dynasty only the most ancient member of which was Bappa. Future research and the discovery of fresh copper-plate charters or other records alone can solve this question finally.

Jouveau-Dubreuil, Pallavas, pp. 72-3, Genealogical Table.
CHAPTER IV

EARLY PALLAVAS OF THE SANSKRIT RECORDS

Sources of Information and Their Nature.—We may now proceed to construct the order of succession of the Pallava kings mentioned in the various copper-plate charters inscribed in Sanskrit in their genealogical order. This is the period ranging from about A.D. 350 to 600. The most important copper-plate records of this period are those addressed from Tamilāpa, Palakkada, Mēnmātūra, Daśanapura, Pikira, Ōngōdu (I and II), Darśi, Rāyakota, Chandalūr, Udayēndiram, Uruvapallī, and the stone inscriptions of Vāyalūr and Amarāvati. These charters have for their object the recording of gifts of land to learned Brahmins or temples, and only incidentally mention the ancestral history of the ruling sovereign who issued the grant. Like the earlier charters they are not dated in any known era such as the Śaka which might enable us to fix their date with precision; but they are merely dated in the regnal year of the ruling sovereign. These records are almost all of them written in the Sanskrit language in the early Grantha-Pallava script peculiar to the Pallava records, and have been assigned on purely palæographical grounds to the fifth and sixth centuries A.D. The practice of inscribing a part of the record in Tamil was adopted only from the seventh century onward, the Kūram plates of Paramēśvararavārman being the earliest known Pallava Sanskrit-Tamil charter. To these we may also add the four or five important copper-plate charters of this variety belonging to the seventh, eighth and ninth centuries A.D. which also furnish, in the donative part of the gift, a long genealogy of the earlier sovereigns in the Pallava dynasty. These are the Kaśākkuḍi, Vēḻūrpalayam, Kōṟṟānguḍi, Taṉḍantōṭṭam, and the Udayēndiram plates. These records enable us to check the accuracy of the information contained in the earlier grants.
The Nature of these Records and some Important Synchronisms.
—The actual chronological position and the genealogical order of the Pallava kings of this period are, in the present state of knowledge, bound to be tentative and far from strictly accurate. Fortunately an element of certainty in the case of certain of the sovereigns of this period has become possible by two or three important synchronisms. The most valuable of these is contained in the Penugonda plates of the Western Ganga king Mādhava II, which, unlike most other early Ganga plates, has been accepted to be a genuine record.\(^1\) By stating that Arivarman (equivalent of Harivarman or Āryavarman) and Simhavaran and Skandavarman were installed on the Ganga throne by Simhavaran and Skandavarman of the Pallava family this record gives the valuable information that Āryavarman and Simhavaran of the Western Ganga dynasty were contemporaries of the Pallava kings Simhavaran and Skandavarman, and in all probability their feudatories as well. Dr. Fleet, who has made a special study of these plates, has given it as his opinion that the period when these kings flourished must have been about the last quarter of the fifth century A.D., and that A.D. 475 is a very good date for the record.

The ‘Lokavibhāga’ Datum.—The next important work which introduces some certainty in the early Pallava chronology is the Digambara Jain work known as Lokavibhāga which is dated in Śaka 380, i.e. A.D. 458.\(^2\) This date, we understand from the work, corresponds to the twenty-second year of Simhavaran, the king of Kāñchi. Dr. Fleet, who was generally suspicious of early Śaka dates, examined this date carefully, and making a few corrections, arrived at the conclusion that it was equivalent to A.D. 458. As this year corresponded to the twenty-second year of Simhavaran the initial year of his reign may be calculated back as the year A.D. 436. This datum, which was first brought to the notice of scholars by Mr. R. Narasimhacharyar of the Mysore Archaeological Department, helps us to fix the period of two of the Pallava kings Simhavarman and his son Skandavarman in the second and third quarters of the fifth century. Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil however underrates the value of this testimony and regards it as rather suspicious especially as it does not say which Simhavarman it was and to what branch of the Pallava family he belonged.

Early Pallavas of the Sanskrit Records

Avantisundarikathāsāra.—Another valuable synchronism which has been discovered recently, is obtained from the Sanskrit manuscript known as Avantisundarikathāsāra the historical introduction of which gives an account of Bhāravi and Daṇḍin. We learn from this that Bhāravi visited the courts of Vishnuvardhana, Durvinita, and Simhavishnu. From the fact that the poet is described to have visited these three kings we may infer that these kings were contemporaries. As it is known that Durvinita belonged to the later part of the sixth century, and as we also know that Vishnuvardhana is assignable to the same period, we may feel certain that the members of the Pallava kings of the Sanskrit charters belong to a period anterior to the seventh century. From the seventh century onward there is not much uncertainty either in the actual order of succession of the Pallava kings or their dates. The light thrown by the Avantisundarikathā upon the political history of South India and chronology is discussed both in the Proceedings of the Oriental Conference Second Session (1922) and in the Mythic Society’s Journal, by Messrs. M. Ramakrishnakavi and A. Rangaswami Sarasvati.

We have already pointed out that the connection of the Pallava kings referred to in the Prakrit charters such as

1 The Pallavas, p. 18.
2 Another MS. of the original prose Avantisundarikathā by Acharya Daṇḍin has been discovered by Pundit G. Haribara Sastri at Trivandrum. This confirms the contemporaneity of Bhāravi, Vishnuvardhana, Durvinita and Simhavishnu. It makes however Daṇḍin the great grandson of Damodhara, a friend of Bhāravi, and not Bhāravi himself, the modification being due to a slight error in reading. Summary of papers, Fourth Oriental Conference, pp. 44-7. Ed.
Sivaskandavarman, Vijaya-Buddhavarman, etc., with those of the Sanskrit charters such as Skandavarman, Simhavarman, Simhavishnum, etc., is not definitely known. But the fact that in both the sets of copper-plates the kings are spoken of as belonging to the Bhāradvāja-gotra, and the general resemblance of the names in both lead us to conclude that these kings were members of one family.

Vishnugopa. Circa 340.—The next point concerns Vishnugopa, the contemporary of Samudragupta. A perusal of the genealogical portion of the early Pallava charters shows that there were several members bearing this name such as Yuvarahāraja Vishnugopa, Vishnugopavarman of the Uruvalampalli and the Pikira plates, besides a Mahārāja-Vishnugopa who figures twice in the Chura plates. Then again we have, in the Vāyalūr pillar inscription, the name of Vishnugopa repeated thrice and also the name of Vishnudāsa. The earliest of these is probably to be identified with the adversary described in the Allahabad pillar inscription of Samudragupta. It has been suggested recently that the orthodox estimate of Samudragupta’s southern expedition has been considerably exaggerated and that the Allahabad inscription has been misinterpreted. Thus for instance Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil in his Ancient History of Deccan says:—

‘After all these rectifications that we have just made the expedition of Samudragupta presents itself before our eyes in quite another form. It is no more a new Alexander marching victoriously through South India; it was simply the unfortunate attempt of a king from the north who wanted to annex the coast of Orissa but completely failed. About A.D. 340, Samudragupta left his capital Pāṭaliputra and marched directly towards the south. First he conquered Southern Kosala where the king Mahēndra was reigning in the vicinity of Sirpur and Sambalpur. He then crossed the forests that are to the south of Sonpur and found there the small kingdom of Mahākāntāra which means the “great forest” and where Vyāgrarāja the "Tiger-king" was reigning.\(^1\) Then he reached the coast of Orissa. Manṭarāja, king of Koṣala, Mahēndra of Pishṭāpura, Svāmidatta of Koṭṭura, a citadel on the top of a hill and Damana of Erāṇḍapalle tried to stop him but were captured. Samudragupta now prepared to make new conquests when he was opposed by a confederacy of all the kings that reigned near the mouth of the rivers Godavari and the Krishna, the most powerful of them being Vishṇugopa the Pallava king of Kāṇchi. The other kings were Nilarāja of Avamukta, Hastivarman of Vendi, Ugraśena of Pālakka, Kubēra who reigned in Dēvarāṣṭra and Dhananjaya whose capital was at Kusṭhalapura. Samudragupta being repulsed by the kings of the Eastern Deccan abandoned the conquests he had made in the coast of Orissa and returned home.\(^1\)

Thus according to this view the Allahabad pillar does not speak of Pollachi, Palghat, Mahēndragiri, Cōlair lake, Ērandoḷ and Mahārāṣṭra. The identification of Ārāṇḍapalla with Ērandoḷ appears in the light of the facts known from the Siddhāntam plates of Dēvēndravarman to be near Chicaco.\(^2\) Similarly Dēvāraṣṭra which has been hitherto identified with Mahārāṣṭra, thus misleading scholars into the impression that Samudragupta went to Mahārāṣṭra, figures in an Eastern Chālukya grant.\(^3\) discovered in the Vizagapatam District. All the kingdoms mentioned in the inscription are situated in the east coast of the Dakhan. Again according to the same authority Samudragupta did not advance as far south as Kāṇchi to defeat Vishṇugopa, but was effectively subjugated by him on the banks of the Godavari or the Krishna. This is merely a hypothesis which has not been proved; there is no evidence against the orthodox view that Samudragupta did advance against Kāṇchīpuram and most scholars are inclined to accept

\(^{1}\) About the identification of this Vyāgra see Ind. Ant., vol. iv, pp. 103ff and 223ff. Ed.

\(^{2}\) Ep. Ind., vol. xii, p. 212.

this view. There is nothing to sustain the view that the defeat inflicted upon Vishṇugopa and his colleagues have been exaggerated as presumed by Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil in his Ancient History of the Deccan.¹ The distinction made in the Allahabad pillar inscription in regard to the various groups of states Samudragupta came into contact with, is clear evidence of an actual invasion and conquest in regard to these trans-Vindhyan states.

A doubt has been raised² whether the Vishṇugopa mentioned in the Allahabad pillar inscription is to be regarded as a member of the Pallava dynasty or otherwise. The Vishṇugopa, described as belonging to Kāṇchi, could be no other than a member of the Pallava dynasty although he is not described as a Pallava affiliated to the Bhāradvāja-gotra as the kings of the copper-plate charters are. The consideration which makes the surmise almost certain is that the name is a characteristic Pallava name in the same manner as Nandivarman may be regarded as peculiar to the Pallava dynasty. The name does not occur in any other royal dynasty so far known to us.
There is moreover no probability of any other royal dynasty having ruled at Kāṇchipuram just at the period of Samudra-gupta's raid, other than the Pallava. All these considerations taken along with the fact that the chieftains mentioned in the Allahabad pillar inscription are associated only with the capital city of their kingdoms and not with their dynastic or family names, lead to the conclusion that Vishṇugopa of Kāṇchi, the adversary of Samudragupta, was a member of the Prakrit or early Sanskrit charters. We are not at present in a position to know anything more about him except his encounter with Samudragupta, and the probability of his being devoted to Vishṇu as is apparent by the name. No copperplate, which may be expected to throw light on his reign, has been brought to light yet. But the passage in the Allahabad inscription makes it plain that in the middle of the fourth century A.D., there reigned on the banks of the Godavari and

¹ Ch. iii, pp. 58-61.
² South Ind. Jainism, p. 143.
the Krishna and in their vicinity a number of powerful chieftains such as Hastivarman of Vengi, presumably identical with the Sālankāyana king of that name, Nilarāja of Avamukta, Ugrasena of Palakka and others.

VishnuGopa to Simhavishnu. A.D. 340 to 550.—This period covers roughly 200 years and is commonly spoken of as the age of the Pallava kings of the Sanskrit charters, as the records of this period are invariably in Sanskrit and not in Prakrit as hitherto. The effects of the invasion of Samudragupta on the Pallava dynasty must have been far-reaching. One of these was probably to weaken the authority of VishnuGopa, and, after his death, to promote dynastic quarrels among his successors. It is very difficult to establish the exact order of succession of kings enumerated in the historical portion of the copper-plates of this period. Nor is it possible to say definitely whether all the kings, whose names figure in these records, actually ruled or occupied the Pallava throne. The extent of the territory over which their rule probably extended is also uncertain. We have already pointed out that it is possible to establish some connection, at present unknown, between the Pallava kings of the Sanskrit charters and those of the Prakrit records. (A.D. 215–350). We do not know who the first member of the Pallava dynasty of the Sanskrit charters was. In this respect the Vēlūrpālayam copper-plate charter ascribed to the later Pallava king Nandinivarman III of the ninth century and the Kaśākkudi plates of Nandinivarman Pallavamalla throw some light on the manner in which the first member of the Pallava dynasty acquired sovereignty.¹

The historical portion of the Vēlūrpālayam grant which supplies a detailed genealogy of the Pallava kings after giving the legendary origin of the Pallavas from Vishnu to Pallava, through Brahma, Angirasa, Brahhaspati, Šamyu, Bhāradvāja, Drōṇa, Aśvatthāman, etc., proceeds to enumerate certain quasi-historical names such as those of Aśokavarman, Kalabharti and Chüta-Pallava. The break after the king Ašokavarman indicated in the record (verse 5) suggests that the Pallava kings of the Prakrit charters—Śivaskandaivarman, Vijayakṣandaivarman, Buddhavarman have to be included here. The omission of these names is probably attributable to the fact that the writer of the document had only a foggy notion of the kings of the early period, living as he did several generations after these kings, when their memory had almost faded away. The historicity of Kalabhארṭr, Chüta-Pallava and Virakūrcha is confirmed by the mention of these names in the Vāyalūr pillar inscription of Rājasimha apparently in the order of succession. This latter contains many repetitions and should be used with much care. For example, although it is one of the earliest known list of Pallava kings and belongs to the seventh century, it is impossible to regard that all the kings mentioned in it were ruling kings. On the other hand it appears to have been a list made up in the reign of Rājasimha by a writer, who was obviously labouring under the difficulty of accommodating a number of real and quasi-real kings that tradition and copper-plates had preserved, and who, in doing so, was unable to allow for similarity of names. Being in these difficulties he put together all the names he got at, in an order of his own. This seems to be the only explanation for the repetitions that one notices in the list on the Vāyalūr pillar when compared with other genealogies. Prof. G. Jouveau-Dubreuil in his Pallavas expresses the opinion that the Vāyalūr inscription gives a complete list of the Pallava kings in the order of their succession. In the portion earlier than Mahēndravarman I, the Vāyalūr record includes names like Vimala, Konkanika, which occur exclusively in Western Ganga lists of kings. Vishṇugopa is mentioned three times, Kumāra-vishṇu twice, which is just possible. However Skandaivarman is mentioned five times and Simhavarman four times which appears less probable. But the record is doubtless of great value to us as establishing a connection between the members of the Prakrit, Sanskrit, and Simhavishnu dynasties which have been hitherto looked upon as different dynasties. As we have seen it is impossible to agree with those who hold that the Vāyalūr list gives a complete list of forty-two names of the Pallava kings in their order of succession.

2 p. 18 ff.

The Vāyalūr Pillar Genealogy

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Brahma</th>
<th>Skanda varman</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Angirasa</td>
<td>Simhavarman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brahaspati</td>
<td>Viravarman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Samyū</td>
<td>Skanda varman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bhāradvāja</td>
<td>Simhavarman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Drōna</td>
<td>Skanda varman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aśvatthāman</td>
<td>Nandivarman I</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pallava</td>
<td>Simhavarman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aśoka</td>
<td>Simhavarman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harigupta</td>
<td>Vishnugopa</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aryavarman</td>
<td>Simhavarman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vimala</td>
<td>Simhavishnu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kōnkanika</td>
<td>Mahendravarman I</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kālabhartri</td>
<td>Narasimhavarman I</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chūta-pallava</td>
<td>Mahendravarman II</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vīrakūrcha</td>
<td>Paramēsvaravarman I</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chandravarman</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Karāla</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vishnugopa</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Skanda mūla</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kumāravishnu</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Buddhavarman</td>
<td>Rājasimha</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Skanda varman</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vishnugopa</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vishnudāsa</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

A careful study of the Vēlūrpālayam plates shows that the members represented in this record from Kālabhartri, who is called Kāṇagopa in the Kāśakudi plates, belonged to what we have called the period of Sanskrit charters. As it is clear from this record the members mentioned in verses 5 to 8 as Aśokavarman and others in whose family Kālabhărtr is said to have been born, included the members of the Prakrit charters such as Bappa, Śivaskaṇḍavarman, etc. We cannot rely very strictly upon the order of succession in this record as there are several breaks and gaps in it. We may therefore proceed to make one or two observations regarding the kings of this period.

---

1 Cf. list of fifty-four names given in Ep. Ind., vol. xvi, p. 151 and the whole epigraph as edited in pp. 145-152, ibid.—Ed.

Vīrakūrcha and His Period.—Of Kālabhărtr and Chūta-pallava very little is known excepting their names. Of these the first appears to have been the first member of the Sanskrit dynasty. Of Vīrakūrcha, however, the grandson of Kālabhărtr, we learn from the Vēḻūṟpāḷayam plates (verse 6) that ‘simultaneously with the hand of the daughter of the chief of serpents he also grasped the complete insignia of royalty and became famous.’ This means in plain language that Vīrakūrcha varman became king on marrying the daughter of a Nāga chief. As to the actual period of this marriage there is some amount of disagreement among scholars. The marriage of Vīrakūrcha which, according to the Vēḻūṟpāḷayam plates, gave him a kingdom, according to certain authors, has reference to the first member of the dynasty of the Sanskrit Pallavas. According to Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil the Nāga marriage of Vīrakūrcha has reference to the first king of the Prakrit charters Śivaskaṇḍavarman’s father.¹ Verse 6 of these plates therefore has reference clearly to the first member of the Pallava dynasty Vīrakūrcha.

Was Vīrakūrcha the First Pallava king?—This conclusion of Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil does not appear to be quite correct. In the first place it is possible that the names of Aśokavarman, etc., as we have already pointed out, and others referred to in verse 5 of the Vēḻūṟpāḷayam record, stand for the names of the members of the Prakrit dynasty. If so, it is difficult to accept the view that Virakürcha was the first Pallava king. In the second place it is possible that Viravarman’s immediate ancestor, presumably his father or grandfather, might have lost hold of the sovereignty of the Pallava kingdom owing to some unknown cause, one of which might have been the invasion of Samudragupta. If this were so, his date would have to be sought somewhere after Vishnugopa. Again, in the Vēlūrpālayam plates it is not stated that Virakürcha who married the Nāga princess, was the first member in the family of the Pallavas or the first to acquire a kingdom and a kingly position in that family. This view is also in agreement with that of Dr. S. K. Aiyangar who in his account of the Pallavas ascribes the marriage of Virakürcha to the period immediately following the invasion of Samudragupta into the south and the consequent disruption. According to his interpretation, ‘Put in plain language this (the Nāga marriage) would mean that he married a Nāga princess and thereby acquired the title of sovereignty of the region over which he ruled. This obviously has no connection with the birth of Tonḍamān-Iḷam-Tiraiyan, who, according to tradition embodied in the classical poem Perumbānaṭṭupadai, was the son of a Chōla king through a Nāga princess . . . . Neither the detail of the marriage nor the acquisition will agree with the story of Iḷam-Tiraiyan. . . .’

¹ Pallavas, p. 29.

What were the circumstances, political and otherwise, which brought about the matrimonial alliance of Virakürcha, a member of the Pallava family with the daughter of a Nāga king which gave him virtually a wife and a kingdom? To this question no definite answer is possible in the present state of our knowledge relating to the political condition of the Dakhan in the fourth century A.D. Dr. S. K. Aiyangar has however attempted to solve the problem. In the course of his valuable contribution on the Pallavas he identifies the Nāga family with which Virakürcha became connected with the family of Skandaṅaṅga, the Śatavahana viceroy of the region round Adoni and who probably belonged to a clan of the family of Śatavahanas other than that which ruled in the Dakhan but connected by blood, and perhaps even by alliance, with that clan. 'At one time under the rule of the later Śatavāhanas these Nāgas appear to have extended their territory and even acquired a considerable portion of the kingdom of the Śatavāhanas themselves. If the Pallava chieftain in the neighbourhood made himself sufficiently distinguished, a marriage alliance with these Nāgas, from whom came the early Śatavāhana queen Nāganīka, would have been possible for him. The hint, vague as it is, in the inscription seems to let us into the secret of the rise of the dynasty of the Pallavas to power.'

1 Origin and Early History of the Pallavas, p. 43. 2 Ibid., p. 44.

As regards the probable period when this happened, he indicates that this must have happened at a time when the Śatavāhanas as a ruling dynasty had passed away, and the attempt at the assertion of the Gupta power over this region under Samudragupta had in a way shaken the authority of the older dynasties to allow of a new dynasty to spring into prominence. The character of the invasion of Samudragupta itself makes it clear that the whole of the western portion or the empire of Āndhras was in the hands of a power whom for some good reason Samudragupta did not attack. One such reason might have been that they held possession of the territory with some power, such as the Vākāṭakas in Berār and Central India. It is likely that their authority was not readily acquiesced in by the smaller chieftains, feudatories of the Śatavāhanas, along the east coast. If this surmise should turn out correct it is possible to conceive that the southwestern portion was held by a powerful family of the Nāgas, relatives of the Śatavāhanas, and the Pallavas were among the feudatories who showed a ready inclination to throw off the Śatavāhana yoke. When Samudragupta had come and gone, the western power, whatever that was, might have entered into a marriage alliance with the Pallavas and recognized them in the position to which they had already risen by their own efforts.

*Skandasisiya (Skandavarman).—From the Vēlūrpaḷayam plates again (verse 7) we learn that the son of Virakūṛcha, who is probably identical with Virakūrçhavarman of the Darśi copper-plate fragment, was Skandaśishya. He is described in this record as the 'moon in the sky of this family' and is said to have seized the ghatika of the twice-born from King Satyasēna. This achievement of his enables us to fix his period more or less definitely, although the identity of Satyasēna has not been completely worked out. The reference to a ghatika at this early period is interesting. There is also a reference, in the Tālagunḍa inscription of Kakutsthaavarnman, ascribed to the first half of the sixth century, to Kānchi being called a ghatika. But no one has attempted to identify the King Satyasēna mentioned in the Vēlurpālayam plates. In his introductions to these plates published in the South Indian Inscriptions, Mr. H. Krishna Sastri says that he remains unidentified.¹ Dr. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar suggests the possibility that the Satyasēna here referred to may be Mahākṣhatrapa Svāmi Satyasēna of the coins whose time would be the ninth decade of the fourth century A.D.² It is uncertain whether the power of the Kṣhatrapas extended sufficiently southward so as to make them come into hostile contact with the Pallava kings. The probability is that the Pallavas co-operated with the dynasty of Western Dakhan, the Vākāṭakas, in inflicting a defeat on the Kṣhatrapas and this interpretation of the situation, therefore, seems to be in accordance with the general trend of Vākāṭaka history as this is the period to which the conquest of Kuntala by the Vākāṭaka-Prithvisēna I is ascribable. 'Such an advance,' as has been pointed out, 'is possible only by the overthrow of the Kṣhatrapas, and other successors of the Āndhras in this region.'
Early Pallavas of the Sanskrit Records

The Probable Period of Skandaśishya (Skandavarman).—This identification of Satyasēna with Svāmi Satyasimha, father of Mahākṣhatrapa, Svāmi Rudrasimha III, whose date according to Prof. Rapson, is somewhat anterior to A.D. 388, enables us to fix the dates of Skandaśishya as well as his father Virakūrcha of the Vēḻūṟpāḷayam record. Allowing a period of about thirty years for these two kings we arrive at about A.D. 358 for the date of the accession of Virakūrcha. According to Mr. Krishna Sastri, this Skandaśishya is perhaps identical with the Skandaśishya of the Tirukkāḷukkuṉṟam inscription,¹ who made a grant to the Mūlathāna temple at the above-mentioned village and spoken of as a former king. The late Mr. Venkayya in his article on this inscription suggested that Skandaśishya is identical with Skandaṉvarman; but as there are several Skandaṉvarmans in the Pallava record it is difficult to identify the exact individual mentioned in the Tirukkāḷukkuṉṟam inscription.

The Sanskrit Charters.—We may now proceed to examine in detail the genealogical portion of other copper-plate charters of this period. We have already pointed out that these charters have been assigned on palæographical grounds to the fifth and the sixth centuries of the Christian era. One peculiarity of the charters of this period is that they do not furnish any genealogical list prior to the great grandfather of the ruling sovereign who is the donor. The habit of including a mythical and quasi-historical pedigree, along with the immediate ancestral line, appears to have originated only in and after the seventh century in the Pallava family. About six of these Sanskrit charters have been discovered mostly in the northern districts, and have been edited with text and translations in the Epigraphia Indica. Four of these refer to royal camps from which the respective grants were issued, viz. Palakkada,² Daśanapura, Mēnmatūra, and Tāmrāpa. Almost all these grants furnish four generations of kings including the donor. There is considerable difference of opinion as to the order in which these kings are to be chronologically represented. In other words the relative position of the kings mentioned in these records and the chronology to be adopted for them are uncertain and far from settled. There exists also considerable difference of opinion among scholars as regards the identification of the various royal camps from which these charters were issued. None of these places Tamrāpa, Palakkada, Daśanapura, or Mēnmatūra has been identified definitely although a suggestion had been made by the late Mr. Venkayya¹ that they are to be looked for in the vicinity of the region comprised by the modern Nellore District. According to certain scholars the fact that the charters of these Pallava kings are addressed from these camps, and not from the capital city of Kāṇchipuram, indicates that the Pallava kings who issued these charters had lost hold of Kāṇchipuram through some cause now unknown, and retired to the Telugu districts bordering on Nellore where they continued their rule. This line of argument was adopted by the late Mr. Venkayya,² and is still maintained by some of the officers of the Epigraphy Department.³ They advocate what has been called the theory of a Chōla interregnum during the Pallava rule according to which the Pallava kings soon after the period of the members of the Prakrit charters were driven away from Kāṇchi by the Chōla king Karikāla. According to the exponents of this view the Pallavas would appear to have taken possession of the city only in the days of Kumāravishṇu who is described in the Vēḻürpālayam plates to have captured Kāṇchi. We shall revert to this theory of a Chōla interregnum a little later.

² An unsuccessful attempt is made to identify Pālakka and Palakkada with Nellore in the Madras Christian College Magazine for January 1927, p. 42.

Various Orders of Succession.—According to Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil the series of kings Skandavarman—Kumāravishṇu—Buddhavarman I—Kumāravishṇu (donor) of the Chandalūr plates, ruled in Kāṇchi before the series, Simhavarman (mentioned in the Uruvappalli plates) Skandavarman and Nandivarman, and that, owing to the resemblance of the Chandalūr plates and the Uruvappalli plates, Kumāravishṇu I would have been the immediate predecessor of Simhavarman of Kāṇchi. But a close examination of the copper-plates of this period shows that the Chandalūr plates are by no means the most ancient of these, as in the opinion of M. Jouveau-Dubreuil. The style and the language employed, from the use of numerical symbols and the citation of date after the manner of the earlier Prakrit charters and the spaces marked between words, almost clearly suggest proximity to the Āndhra period.¹ If such be the case the Ōmgōdu grant (No. 1) is the most ancient of the Sanskrit charters that we have.

We have already seen that the Vēlūrpaḷayam plates supply the following names among the early members of the Sanskrit period:—

Kālabhārtṛ
Chūta-pallava
Virakūrcha
Skandaśishya
Kumāravishṇu, etc.

The Ōmgōdu (No. 1) charter gives the following order:—

Kumāravishṇu
Skandaivarman
Viravarman
Vijayaskandaivarman

Mr. Krishna Sastri identifies Vīravarman of this charter with the Viravarman of the published copper-plate charters and with the Virakūrchavarman of the Darśi record. ¹ If Viravarman’s identity is thus established, it must be easy to see that his father Skandaivarman would be the first king of that name mentioned in the published copper-plate grant and that Vijayaskandaivarman, his son, would be identical with Skandaivarman II. Kumāravishṇu, the first king mentioned, and the father of Skandaivarman I, is probably to be identified with Kālabhartṛ of the Vēḻūṟpālayam plates\(^1\) though there may be very little in common between the two names.\(^2\) Thus Mr. Krishna Sastri would identify the first four kings mentioned in the Vēḻūṟpālayam plates with those mentioned in the Ömgōdu (I) copper-plates which may be represented as follows:—

Early Pallavas of the Sanskrit Records 57

- Kālabhartṛ ... Kumāravishṇu
- Chūta-pallava ... Skandavarman
- Virakūrcha ... Viravarman
- Skandāsishya ... Vijayaskandavarman
- Kumāravishṇu ... Kumāravishṇu.

Before examining the view of Mr. Krishna Sastri let us state the genealogical information from the other charters for his period. The Uruvappalli plates,\(^2\) dated in the eleventh year of Simhavarman, although the donor was Yuvamahārāja-Vishnugopavarman, give the following genealogy:—

\[
\begin{align*}
\text{Skandavarman} \\
\text{Viravarman} \\
\text{Skandavarman} \\
\text{Y. M. Vishnugopa (donor)} \end{align*}
\]

From the fact that the Uruvappalli plates are dated in the eleventh year of Simhavarman it was held by the late Dr. Fleet that Y. M. Vishnugopa was a younger brother of Simhavarman, and that he probably never reigned at all.

The Māṇḍāṭur grant\(^3\) gives the succession in the following order:—

\[
\begin{align*} \text{Viravarman} \\
\text{Skandavarman} \\
\text{Y. M. Vishnugopavarman} \\ \text{Dharmamahārāja Simhavarman} \end{align*}
\]

\(^1\) S.I.I., vol. ii, p. 503.
\(^2\) Ind. Ant., vol. v, p. 51.
\(^3\) Ibid., vol. vi, p. 155.
The Pikîra plates furnish us with the accompanying order which is almost similar to the previous one:

Viravarman
  | Skandavarman
  | Vishñugopavarman
  | Simhavarman (donor)

Thus these three plates together supply five generations of kings; the Chandalîr plates, which, as we already mentioned, appear to be posterior to these records in point of antiquity give three further generations of kings from Skandavarman, who, we might regard, was identical with Skandavarman II. The Chandalîr plates, we saw, supplies the following names in the order noted below:

Skandavarman
  | Kumāravishnū I
  | Buddhavarman
  | Kumāravishnū II (donor)

The Udayēndiram plates supply the series:

Skandavarman
  | Simhavarman
  | Skandavarman
  | Nandivarman (donor).

The Vāyalîr pillar inscription becomes acceptable from No. 29, and agrees with the Vēlūrālayam grant thus continuing the succession to the time of Simhavishṇu as will be seen by the following:

Simhavarman (Vāyalūr list 29)

Vishṇugopa

Simhavarman

Simhavishṇu

Mahēndravarman I

The whole series of Pallava kings from the beginning to the days of Simhavishṇu may be represented by the following table:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Bappa</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Śivaskanda (Circa. A.D. 220)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Buddhavarman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vishṇugopa (A.D. 340)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kālabhartṛ (Ōmgōḍu-Uruvapalli plates)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(Kumāravishṇu)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chūta-pallava</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(Skandavarman) (Ōmgōḍu-Uruvapalli plates)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(Married Nāga princess)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Virakūrcha (Virakūrcha-varman)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Skandaśishya (Donor, Ōmgōḍu Plates)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

Simhavarman Y. M. Vishṇugopa or Kumāravishṇu I

Skandavarman Vishṇugopavarman Buddhavarman

Nandivarman I Simhavarman II Kumāravishṇu II.

(Udayēndiram) Vishṇugopavarman

Simhavarman III

Simhavishṇu

Mahēndravarman, etc.
The above table is only tentative and subject to alteration if necessary on other more satisfactory interpretation of the charters, or when the discovery of new inscriptions, or copper charters should call for such. It is just possible that there might not be any direct connection between the members of the Prakrit charters, those of the Sanskrit charters and the members of the Simhavishnu dynasty, as is assumed here. But this arrangement is based on the evidence of the Vayalur pillar record and that of Velurpalyam plates strengthened by the consideration that the Pallava kings of these charters style themselves in these records as members of the Bharadvajagotra. The position of Vishnugopa, the adversary of Samudragupta in the table, is uncertain. We have already hinted the possibility of his being identical with the first of the Vishnugopas mentioned in the Vayalur pillar record of Rajasimha's reign. We have also alluded to the date suggested by Mr. Shama Sastri in his new light on the Gupta era which at the present state of discussion need not be regarded as having been established beyond doubt.

The earliest member of the Sanskrit charters figures as Kalabhart in the Velurpalyam plates, a name which along with his son's name Chuta-pallava, sounds more eponymous than real. Kalabhart is presumably identical with Kanhagopa of the Kasakku plates. In the above arrangement we have indicated the possibility of Kalabhart being identical with the Kumaraishnu I of Omgod No. 1 and Chuta-pallava with Kandaivarman I. Mr. Krishna Sastri who also makes this identification says that there is nothing in common between Kalabhart and Kumaraishnu. The description of Kalabhart as the 'head-jewel of the family' and as Vishnu the husband of Indira (Lakshmi) in verse 6 of the Velurpalyam plates lends support to the identification of this king with 2 Ep. Ind., vol. xv, p. 251. Also vol. xviii, p. 149, where he definitely gives up the identification. This is hardly justified as the writer of the Vayalur pillar inscription has merely put the lists one after the other without attempting to find out actual relationship between the different succession lists. Ed.

Kumāravishṇu of the Ōmōgu grant which suggests that his other name was a synonym of Vishṇu. It is even possible that this Kumāravishṇu whom we identified with Kālabharti was the same person as Vishnugopa, the adversary of Samudragupta. This identification has not been made hitherto, although there is nothing unreasonable in this view.

As was already indicated, the actual dates and the duration of the individual reigns of the Pallava kings of this period are approximate so far. Obviously it is not possible for all the sixteen kings and more to have been on the Pallava throne within the short period of about 200 years (A.D. 350 to 550). It is evident from the charters themselves that certain members of the dynasty referable to this period were simply Yuvamahārājas or princes only, as in the case of Vishnugopa—the prince of the Uruvapalli plates. We have already indicated the facts known regarding Kālabharti (Kumāravishṇu) and Čhūta-pallava (Skandaavarman) from the copperplates of this period. We have shown that Čhūta-pallava alias Skandaavarman might have been the chief who married the Nāga princess and acquired simultaneously a wife and a kingdom. His son was Virakūrcha, identical probably with Virakūrchaivarman of the Darśi fragment.1 His son was Skandaavarman (II) the donor of Ōmōgu plates who is described in this record as one who was true to his word, who day by day increased religious merit by gift of cows, gold and land, and who always desired to serve Gods and Brahmans, and ably understood the purport of all Śastras. From the date of the engraving of the grant which is mentioned as the Vijayasamvatsarē-trayatrimsē (that is in the victorious year thirty-three which was the third fortnight of the winter and the thirteenth day) we may conclude that Skandaavarman's reign lasted at least for thirty-three years.

Simhavarman.—The next Pallava king was Simhavarman in whose eleventh year the Uruvapalli plates of Y. M. Vishnugopa is dated. It is not apparent why Y. M. Vishnugopa should have addressed the grant in the reign of Simhavarmar. The probability is that he did not reign and therefore dated the record in the reign of his elder brother, or possibly in that of his. In the latter case this Simhavarmar becomes identical with the donor of the four grants, the Ömgödü plates dated in the fourth year of his reign in the month of Vaisāka Šuklapakshapanchami addressed from Tāmrapā, the Pīkira grant dated in fifth year and issued from Mēnmātura, the Uruvappalli plates dated in the eleventh year of his reign, and issued from Palakkada, and the Mangalūr grant issued from Vijaya-Daśanapura and dated in the eighth year of Simhavarmar II. Thus we have for this king at least four different copper-plate charters dated in the different years of the reign and issued in different places which were obviously the places where the king happened to be in camp just when the grants were issued. It has been already pointed out that these places Vijaya Tāmrapasthāna, Mēnmātura, Daśanapura and Palakkada have not been identified though the suggestion has been made that they should be looked for in the Nellore District. The late Mr. Venkayya writes in his Ancient History of the Nellore District,¹⁴ that it is not impossible that Daśanapura was the ancient name of the modern village of Durshi. It is called Durshi and Dariši in inscriptions of the fourteenth century found as the place.¹⁵ He also thinks that the place might have been the capital at the time that the Mangalūr grant was issued in the eighth year of Simhavarmar. If this is so why is it not possible to hold Palakkada, Tāmrapā, and Mēnmātura also at the capital of Simhavarmar? But such an assumption does not seem to be justified unless we have good reason for regarding that this period was one of constant warfare, and that the kingdom of Simhavarmar was frequently threatened, with the result that he had to be continuously changing his capital from one seat to another. But there is no definite evidence to prove that this was a fact. It is assumed by certain scholars that the Pallava kings of this period had lost their possession of Kāñchi and retired to the Telugu districts in and around Nellore, wherefrom they continued to rule and issue their copper-plates. This explains according to them the charters of Simhavarman and others during this period being addressed not from Kāñchipuram as in the case of earlier copper-plates but from places in the Telugu districts. For instance Mr. Krishna Sastri says:— . . . 'About A.D. 350 the Pallavas,—perhaps on account of the disturbances caused by the victorious campaign of Samudragupta from the north or owing to the rise of the Kadambas mentioned in the Tālgunda inscription¹ were dispossessed of their territory round Kāñchi and pushed back further into the interior.' Again the same authority says²:—

1 Ep. Ind., vol. i, p. 397.

¹ Ind. Ant., 1908, p. 283.

'Thus we get from several copper-plates published so far, six generations of Pallavas, with names of nine Pallava kings who called themselves Pallava-Mahārājas and Pallava-Dharmamahārājas, of the Bhāradvāja-gotra until one of them, Kumāravishṇu I (II?) reconquered Kāñchipuram, evidently from the Chōlas, who had taken possession of it sometime subsequent to Viṣṇugopa the contemporary of Samudragupta and had established themselves in the Toṇḍa-country.' Thus according to this view there was a Chōla interregnum at Kāñchi and a break in the line of Pallava kings during the period of the Sanskrit charters.

Is the Chōla Interregnum Possible?—This interregnum according to which a number of Pallava kings in the fourth and the fifth century are supposed to have lost possession of Kāñchi some time in the fourth century has become a favourite notion among the epigraphists which however does not appear to be supported by the historical facts of the period known to us. Even the late Mr. Venkayya has expressed himself in favour of the theory of a Chōla interlude in the midst of the Pallava rule. In his 'Ancient History of the Nellore District'³ for instance, dealing with the Pallava kings of this period he says, 'The extent of Pallava dominions during this period from the fourth century to the end of the sixth century A.D. cannot be ascertained. At any rate they appear to have been in possession of the modern Nellore District or at least a portion of it. In fact four of the above-mentioned grants are from that district. Kāñchi which was the capital during the reign of Śivaskandavarman and Vishnugopa, figures as such only in the last two of the above-mentioned grants which are evidently later than the rest.' 'If this is not due to a mere accident it may be that the Pallavas had to retreat from Conjeevaram owing, perhaps to a coalition among the Chōla, Pāṇḍya and the Chera kings, or to the domination of one of them. In this case, the Pallavas, had probably to confine themselves to the Nellore District or to a portion of it, where the villages granted in two of the copper-plate inscriptions may be traced.'

¹ Ep. Ind., vol. viii, p. 28.
² Ibid., vol. xv, No. 11, p. 249.
³ Ind. Ant., 1908, p. 284.

Some Objections.—But as against this mere supposition, there are serious difficulties in the way of our accepting the assumption of any break in the main line of Pallava kings from the earliest times. At any rate the mere fact of certain copper-plates being addressed from places situated in the Telugu districts far away from the capital city cannot be held to support the view that the king or kings who issued them should necessarily have lost possession of Kāñchi. Such at any rate is not the indication that we get from the large numbers of copper-plates and stone records of the Pallava kings obtained in various parts of the country. In these records there is not the remotest suggestion that the Pallava kings at any period in their rule lost possession of the city of Conjeevaram for any appreciable length of time. A reference in the Vēlūrpālayam plates² of Nandivarman III to the capture of Kāñchi has curiously been interpreted as meaning that Kumāravishṇu for the first time after the capture of the city by the Chōlas in the days of Karikāla, re-captured it. Such an assumption appears however to be unwarranted. In the first place it is just possible that the capture of Kāñchi alluded to in the Vēḷūṟpāḷyam plates is a reference to his having obtained possession of the city from a collateral cousin, or some other foreign power, such as the Kadambas, which had obtained possession of the city for a short period. In the second place if the fact of the capture of Kāñchi from the Chōḷas is at all true, it is strange that the Vēḷūṟpāḷyam plates should not have made mention of the fact in recording such a distinguished achievement, more especially as Buddhavarma another king is mentioned as the 'submarine-fire to the ocean-like army of the Chōḷas' Chōḷa-sainyārṇava-vādabhāgni (verse 8). But the insuperable difficulty in postulating a Chōḷa occupation in the interval between the Pallava kings of the Prakrit charters and those of Simhavishṇu, based merely upon the stray reference to the recapture of Kāñchipuram by Kumāravishṇu and on the fact of the charters of the Pallavas for some period being dated from places outside the capital at Kāñchi, lies in the impossibility of accommodating the reign of Karikāla and all the events connected with the history of his reign to this period. According to any rational scheme of chronology it is very difficult to find a place for Karikāla and his successors midway between the Pallava kings of the Prakrit charters and those of the Sanskrit charters as suggested by the epigraphists. The facts relied upon by them as evidence for this position for Karikāla are derived from late Eastern Chāḷukya copper-plates some of the facts being incredible in themselves. 1 Altogether the data for the Chōḷa occupation of Kāñchi during the Pallava rule are too meagre and unsatisfactory to be seriously considered as justifying the assumption of a Chōḷa interregnum.

¹ Chandalār and Udayēndiram records.

We have already referred the four Sanskrit charters issued respectively from Ōmgōḍu, Pikira, Daśanapura and Palakkada between the fourth and the eleventh years of Simhavarman to this reign. The probable date of this king is derivable from purely epigraphic and palaeographic evidence as the middle of the fifth century. But the discovery of the Lokavibhāga, a Jain manuscript, has gone a great way towards fixing the actual period of rule of this king.

---

The 'Lokavibhāga' Datum.—This leads to the initial date of the Pallava king Simhavarma as A.D. 436. According to the Digambara, Jain manuscript, Lokavibhāga, Śaka 380 corresponded to the twenty-second regnal year of Simhavarma, king of Kāñchi, the year in which the work was completed. The reference makes it clear that the first year of this king must have been A.D. 436, and that this king continued to rule for at least a period of twenty-two years.

Śaka 380 is apparently the year in which the copying work was finished by Sarvanandi and the author of the work Simhasūri, probably flourished at an earlier period. The twenty-second stanza was sent to Mahamahopādyāya Sudhākara Dvivedi, Benares, for favour of calculation. There is no question about the correctness of the date. Pāṭalika, the village in which Sarvanandi copied the work, is perhaps identical with Pāṭalipura in South Arcot District, at which according to Periyapurāṇam there was a big Jaina monastery in the seventh century A.D. . . . Pāṇarāṣṭra may be identified with Perumbāṇapādi (the Brhad Bāṇas laid under tribute by Mayūra Śarman, Kadamba) the province over which the Bāṇas ruled.

As regards the actual period of Simhavarma (II) we have already pointed out that being probably identical with the king of the name referred to in the Penugonda plates of the Western Ganga king Mādhavavarma II, his reign must have been at the same period as that of Harivarman the Ganga prince whom he is said to have installed on the throne. Judged palæographically the characters of the Penugonda plates point to their having been inscribed in the fifth century A.D. Dr. Fleet was also of opinion¹ that 'A.D. 475 seems a very good date for it.' If the plates which are dated in the reign of Mādhava II, are dated about the year A.D. 475, Simhavarma the contemporary of Ayyavarmman whom he installed on the Ganga throne must have flourished immediately before. Hence it is not improbable that Simhavarmman II began his rule sometime about the third decade of the fifth century which is also the date that we arrive at by the Lokavibhâga datum, equating the twenty-second year of Simhavarmman with the Śaka year 380. This yields for Simhavarmman, as we saw, the year A.D. 436 as the initial year, which tallies both with the palaeographical indications of Penukonda and the Ōmgōḍu plates as well as the other considerations relating to the date of the Pallava kings who followed him. A calculation backward from the known date of Simhavishnu also leads us to the same period.

An attempt made to belittle the value of this datum furnished by the Lokavibhâga for the initial date of Simhavarmman II requires careful consideration. Mr. H. Krishna Sastri, relying upon what he interprets as a reference to an eclipse in the Ōmgōḍu plates, lines 31–32, dated in the fourth year of his reign, considers the datum of the Lokavibhâga invalidated. The fourth year of Simhavarmman II, according to the Lokavibhâga, corresponds to the year A.D. 440 in which year there happens to be no solar eclipse during the month of Chaitra. But this objection of Mr. Sastri is based upon a wrong interpretation of the object of the grant of the Ōmgōḍu plates and of the expression grahananimittam in line 31. In the first place the plates are dated in the fifth day of the bright fortnight, of Vaiśāka, whereas if the occasion of the grant had been the solar eclipse the record would have been dated on the new moon day. This difficulty Mr. Krishna Sastri gets over by supposing that the grant which was actually made on the new moon day of Chaitra, a possible day for the nearest solar eclipse, was actually engraved 'on the plates five days later.' The explanation does not appear to be at all satisfactory. The expression 'grahananimittam', appears to convey, as has been pointed out, the meaning of 'for the sake of acceptance' rather than 'on account of the eclipse'.

1 Ep. Ind. vol. xv pp. 252-55.
as it looks strange that the copper-plate record should not mention the character of the eclipse and other circumstances connected with it. 'It is very unusual,' says Prof. Krishnaswami Aiyangar to indicate an eclipse in this manner, without saying what eclipse it is, and otherwise defining the Punyaakāla. What is worse in the interpretation of the epigraphist is that the date of the grant is actually specified in the concluding portion. "Sa vijayarājya-Samvatsare-Chaturthi-Vaiśāka-Śuklapaksha-Panchamīyam dattam." This is quite unequivocal. In the face of this it would be difficult to prove that the grant was made on an eclipse day from the document. The difficulty and inconsistency are the results of the interpretation, and neither the author nor the scribe could be held responsible for the blunder which is not theirs.\(^1\)

Successors of Simhavarman II.—Very little is known about the successors of Simhavarman II till we come to the accession of Simhavishnu. The Vāyalūr pillar inscription which is relied upon by Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil for this period gives the names of the following kings in the order of succession mentioned below:

Simhavarman II (A.D. c. 436–460).
Vishṇugopavaranman II.
Simhavarman III.
Simhavishnu (A.D. c. 575–600).

The Vēḻurpālayam plates give the following names for this period. After a host of kings passed away with Vishṇugopa, came Nandivarman who is reported in this record to have caused a 'powerful snake' to dance. Then followed Simhavarman who is said to have wiped off the pride of his enemies. After him' came Simhavishnu. As we already saw there is a slight discrepancy in the order of succession herein stated and those given in other plates. The probability seems to be that soon after the reigns of Simhavarman II and Skandavarman II the contemporaries of the Western Ganga kings Ayyavarman and Madhavavarman II about the close of the fifth century A.D., the Pallava kings Kumāravishṇu II who captured Kāñchi, Nandivarman I, Simhavarman III, occupied the Pallava throne before Simhavishṇu, about the last quarter of the sixth century, commenced to rule at Kāñchipuram. Practically nothing is known of the reign of these kings from the copper-plates and inscriptions of this period until we arrive at the reign of Simhavishṇuvarman, or Mahēndravarman I, his son and successor, whose accession marks the commencement of the age of the Great Pallavas which lasted for two centuries and a half from about A.D. 600 to 850.

\(^1\) J. I. H., vol. ii, p. 56.
Early Pallavas of the Sanskrit Records 69

CHAPTER V

CONTEMPORARY POLITICAL POWERS. THE SALANKAYANAS, KADAMBAS, ETC.

The most important among the contemporary royal dynasties that ruled in the Dakhan during this period, contemporaneous with the Pallava kings of the Sanskrit charters, were the Kadambas, the Vākāṭakas, the Sālankāyanas, the Western Gangas, the Vishṇukundins, and the chieftains of various places in the region around the mouth of the Krishna and the Godavari figuring in the Allahabad pillar inscription already noticed, one of whom was probably a Sālankāyan-a-Hastivarman of Vengi. It is unnecessary to give here an account of all these powers from the available records. A short account of the Sālankāyanas, the Kadambas and the Vishṇukundins who appear to have come into close contact with the Pallavas are given here as far as the information from the records permits.

The chronology of the Kadambas cannot be regarded as having been definitely fixed. The period of the earliest of the Kadamba kings Mayūraśarman who is described as a Brahman in the Tālguṇḍa pillar inscription has been fixed by scholars from internal evidence and palæographical indications as the middle of the fourth century, though Mr. Shama Sastriar in his Mysore Archaeological Reports is inclined to carry back his period considerably earlier.¹

The Tālguṇḍa pillar inscription of Kakutsthavarman gives a glimpse into the circumstances leading to the establishment of the political power of this Brahmaṇ dynasty in the Dakkan. This record in graphic language describes how the first member of this dynasty Mayūraśarman, a Brahman belonging to the Mānavyasa-gotra, and a native of Sthāṇukundūr came to the city of Kāñchipuram for completing his Vedic studies, how he had a quarrel with a Pallava horseman, and how not bearing to be told that the Brahman caste was inferior to that of the Kshatriyas he put himself at the head of a band of adventurers and attacked the Pallava sovereigns in the inaccessible forests of Śrī-Parvata. Then with the aid of the Brihat-Bāṇas and others he founded the Kadamba kingdom of which Banavasi was the capital. The Pallava kings had to admit his claims as a ruling power and had to effect a temporary compromise. Now we must try to find out what was the probable period of Mayūraśarman and who his Pallava contemporary was. As we have already suggested, this dismemberment of the Pallava kingdom must have followed the confusion which resulted from the invasion of Samudragupta about A.D. 340. The Kadamba Prakrit inscription of Malavallī \(^1\) written as it is in Prakrit, though it does not mention the name of the king, may be taken to refer to the most ancient king of the Kadambas presumably Mayūraśarman. In regard to his Pallava contemporary only the vaguest guess can be made. As we have assigned Mayūraśarman to about A.D. 350 his Pallava contemporary must have been either Vishnugopa or his immediate successors Virakūrcha or Skandavarman I.

¹ See the Mys. Arch. Report 1923.

Of the successors of Mayūraśarman, Kangavarman and Bhagiratha attributable to the second half of the fifth century A.D., probably carried on hostile operations against the Pallava kings of the period. Of the others it appears that Raghu, Kakutsthavarman, Śāntivarman and his two sons Mrigēśavarman and Mandhātrivarman ruled during the sixth century A.D. and were evidently contemporaneous with Viravarman, Skandavarman II, Simhavarman, and Skandavarman III of the Pallavas. The southern conquest of Prithvisena, the Vākāṭaka king, who, according to the Ajanta inscription\(^2\) is described as having defeated the

\(^{1}\) Ind. Ant., vol. xlvi, p. 154.
\(^{2}\) Cave No. 16, Arch. Surv. W. Ind., vol. 4, p. 53 ff.
Kuntalas, i.e. the Kadamba king, probably took place about the period, A.D. 350-360 and the Kadamba king must have been Kangavarman who is described in inscriptions as having been engaged in 'lofty exploits and in terrible wars.' Of the others we know that Kakutstha, who is ascribable to the first quarter of the fifth century, was the donor of the Tālgunda inscription. The marriage of Narēndrasēna, the grandson of Prabhāvati Gupta with the daughter of the king of Kuntalā named Ajjhitabhaṭṭārika is probably to be attributed as Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil suggests to Kakutstha's reign. Thus it turns out that Kakutsthavarman's boast, in the Tālgunda inscription, that he gave his daughter to Guptas and other kings would be correct if the Gupta-Vākātaka king, Narēndrasēna, was the son-in-law of this king. According to our arrangement of Pallava chronology he must have been a contemporary of Simhavarman II and it was probably during this period that the installation of the Western Ganga kings Ayyavarman and Mādhavavarman must have taken place. Of Śāntivarman who succeeded Kakutsthavarman on the Kadamba throne very little is known. Of his sons Mṛigēśavarman and Mandhātrivarman who together ruled for the rest of the fifth century we have some records. According to the Halsi plates dated in the eighth year of his reign Mṛigēśa uprooted the Gangas and was a very fire of destruction to the Pallavas.¹ We learn from another record² that his queen was called Prabhāvati who was born in the Kaikeya family. Almost contemporaneous with the reigns of Śāntivarman, Mṛigēśavarman and Mandhātrivarman, A.D. 450-500, the younger branch of the Kadamba family Krishṇavarman I, the son of Kakutstha and the elder brother of Śāntivarman with Prince Dēvavarman as Yuvamahārāja ruled at Triparvata. Soon after the death of Mandhātrivarman the throne of the Kadambas passed to Ravivarman who, according to the Halsi plates, is said to have acquired regal power by the strength and prowess of his own arm which means that there was some trouble in his succession and that he had to fight for the throne. According to another record,¹ he is said to have slain Vishṇuvarman, presumably a collateral cousin and descendant of Krishṇavarman, and uprooted Chaṇḍadanda of Kaṅchi. Records dated in the fifth year of Ravivarman, and the thirty-fifth year have been discovered. He was followed by Harivarman at Vaijayanți till about A.D. 550 when the rise of Pulakēśin I probably put an end to, or obscured, his power. The subsequent history of the Kadambas does not concern us here. Krishṇavarman, his son Ajavarman, Bhogivarman and Vishṇuvarman are known to have ruled as kings from recent records. That the Kadambas continued to be powerful as late as the end of the eighth century is seen from the mention in the Vēḻūṟpāḷayam plates² that the Pallava king Dantivarman married Aggalanimmati, 'the daughter of the celebrated king and a crest-jewel of the Kadamba family.'³

Sālankāyanas, circa A.D. 350 to 500.—Almost contemporaneously with the Pallava kings of the Sanskrit charters, may be placed the Sālankāyanas dynasty. The word Sālankāyana appears originally to have been the name of a Vedic Rishi. There are nearly five grants for this dynasty that are available to us. If Hastivarman of Vengi, who figures among the adversaries of Samudragupta in the Allahabad inscription, was a Sālankāyana (identified by Vincent Smith as a Pallava) he may be regarded as the earliest member of this family known hitherto. The Ellore Prakrit⁴ plate the alphabets of which closely resemble the Pikira, Mangalūr and Uruvapalli plates, are dated in the thirteenth year of Māhāraja-Vijayadevavaran, and were issued from Vengipuram. These plates describe Vijayadevavaran as the performer of the Aṣvamēdha the fervent Māheśvara and the devotee at the feet of the Holy Chitrarathasvāmi. The grant is addressed to the villagers of Ellora which may be identified with the modern town of Ellora.

Another grant\(^1\) of the Sālankāyanas written in Sanskrit and therefore considered to be posterior to the Prakrit charter already mentioned, records that Vijayanandivarman son of Chandavarman issued it in the eighth year of his reign from the city of Vengipura. As regards the popular identification of Vengi with the Pedda Vengi\(^2\) it must be pointed out that, as there are no less than four places bearing the name of Vengi in the Northern Circars alone, it is possible that the usual identification should not be regarded as final on the matter.

Recently two more copper-plates \(^3\) have been discovered by the late Mr. K. V. Lakshmana Rao which, along with the other records, give nearly six generations of the dynasty:—

The following is the order of succession adopted by Mr. Lakshmana Rao:—

\[
\begin{align*}
\text{C. 350.} & \quad \text{Hastivarman of Vengi} \\
375. & \quad \text{Vijayadēvavarman} \\
400. & \quad \text{Vijayanandivarman} \\
425. & \quad \text{Buddhavarma} \\
450. & \quad \text{Chandavarma} \\
475. & \quad \text{Vijayanandivarman} \\
500. & \quad \text{Vijayaskandavarman} \end{align*}
\]

The first of the newly-discovered Kāntēru plates records a grant of Vijayaskandavarman, who is there described as meditating on the feet of the holy Chitrarathasvāmi and as belonging to the family of Sālankāyanas, to one Śivarāya in a village called Chinnapura in the Kudrahāravishaya in the fifth year of the king’s reign on the full moon day in the month of Vaiśāka.

The second registers a gift to one Svāmichandra a piece of land in the village of Kuruvaḍa by Mahārāja Śrī Nandivarman.

---

\(^1\) Ind. Ant., vol. v, p. 175 and plate.

\(^3\) Viz. Col. Mag., October, 1922.
A word may be said about the religious leaning of these kings and their relation with the Pallava kings. As regards the first we can only say that the peculiar cult of the Sālankāyanas who called themselves Bhagavat-Chitrarathasvāmi-Padānudyata may have reference to their tutelary deity, the God of Chitraratha. This term probably refers to the worship by the Sālankāyanas of the Sun-god, and the representation of the figure of the sun in some of the charters issued by these sovereigns, lends some support to this view.

As regards the other point, namely, the relation of the Sālankāyanas with the Pallavas the following points may be noted. To begin with, there is a close resemblance between the names of the members of the two dynasties such as Skandavarma, Buddhavarma and Nandivarma which also occur in the Pallava copper-plates. The figure of the seated bull which frequently finds a place in the seals of the Pallava charters also figures in the Sālankāyana charters. Finally the fact that for more than six generations the Pallavas and the Sālankāyanas are never known to have come into conflict even once is a significant one, and probably indicates that the Sālankāyanas were on friendly terms with the Pallavas and continued to rule independently along with them in amity. This probably indicates that the two families were in some manner, hitherto unknown, related to one another. It is just possible that the Pallavas and the Sālankāyanas had a common ancestry as Sālankāyana is a Gotra belonging to the Bhāradvāja-clan. The Sālankāyanas appear to have exercised political power from about A.D. 340 to about A.D. 480, when the rise of Vishnukundins, and the ascendancy of the Vākātakas put an end to the political power of these people who are no more heard of in South Indian history.

The Vishnukundins, circa A.D. 450 to 550.—The origin and significance of the term Vishnukundin like that of other dynastic names is buried in obscurity. The conjecture has been put forward that their name is connected with Viṣṇukonda in the Krishna District, which appears to have been the cradle of their power. The first Vishṇukundin king Mādhavarman I appears to have owed his throne to his marriage with a princess of the Vākaṭakas, though the Chikkula plates ¹ which mention the fact do not specify whose daughter the princess was.

The only class of evidence available to us to write an account of the Vishṇukundins is the inscriptional one. About four records have been discovered. These include the Rāmatirtham, Chikkula and Pulimboru grants all of which were discovered only in comparatively recent years. The first two of these have been critically edited in the volumes of Epigraphia Indica. According to these records, Mādhava I was succeeded on the throne by his son Vikramēndravarman I, then by Indrabhaṭṭārakavarman and Vikramēndravarman II. The last mentioned record takes the line still further and mentions the names of Vikramēndra, Govindavarman, and Madhavavarman II. Practically nothing is known of the first two sovereigns—Mādhava I and Vikramēndravarman I. The Rāmatirtham plates ² help us to know that Indrabhaṭṭārakavarman must have ruled at least for a period of thirty-seven years as these plates were recorded in that year. This document consists of three copper-plates from Rāmatirtham written in Sanskrit prose, and record the fact that Indravarman granted to a certain Brahman the village of Peruvāḍaka in Plaki-Rāshṭra (l. 6). The record also mentions that Mādhavavarman performed eleven horse-sacrifices, and hundreds of other sacrifices. Then after mentioning that Vikramēndra was an ornament of both the families, the Vākaṭakas and the Vishṇukundins, the record states the important fact that Indravarman encountered ‘in hundred-thousands of battles numerous four-tusked elephants’ (l. 5) a probable allusion to the fact that this king spent the major part of his reign in fighting with his enemies.³

The last of the Vishṇukundins, known as Mādhava II, is credited with the achievement of having crossed the Godavari evidently with a view to extend his dominions. Unfortunately the Western Chālukyas under Pulakēsin had grown powerful in this reign, and the advance of the Vishňukundin power was not only stopped but their dominion appears to have been annexed to that of the Chālukyas.

¹ Ep. Ind., vol. iv, p. 193 ff. ² Ibid.
³ According to Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil there was a coalition of kings who attacked this sovereign which probably included Harisēna, the Vākaṭaka. Cf. Ancient History of Deccan, p. 91.

According to M. Jouveau-Dubreuil the rock-cut monuments of Undavalli, Sittanagaram, Bezwada, and Mogulrazapuram were the work of the Vishňukundins.¹ There is, however, considerable difference of opinion on this matter.

Before concluding the account of the Vishňukundins, their relationship with the Pallava dynasty may be alluded to. At present this theory of the Pallava-Vishňukundin relationship rests almost entirely on the mere resemblance of names of the two dynasties and is open to suspicion. Dr. Jouveau-Dubreuil noticing for the first time the resemblance of the names of the Vishňukundin king Vikramēndra and Mahēndravikrama, the Pallava king, was led to postulate an unrecorded marriage relation between the daughter of Vikramēndra I and Simha-vishnuvarman whose son through this Vishňukundin alliance was named according to the usual Hindu custom after the name of the grandfather on the mother’s side as Mahēndravikrama.² According to the same authority the rock-cut temples excavated by Mahēndravarnman I, in the various parts of the Tamil country, coupled with the mention of the name of the king Mahēndravikrama in the Trichinopoly cave inscription lend considerable support to this relationship of Vishňukundins and the Pallavas. But at present this theory rests purely on the resemblance of names and is unsupported by any piece of positive evidence, literary or other, discovered so far. In none of the published inscriptions is it so much as alluded to that Simhavishṇu, the father of Mahēndravarman and the founder of the line of the great Pallavas of Kāṇchi, entered into a matrimonial alliance with the Vishṇukundīns; nor is the mere resemblance of the names\textsuperscript{1} alone sufficient for postulating such a relationship as this. Nor is the resemblance between Vikramēndra and Mahēndravigrama quite so close. Finally there is no clear evidence that the style of Mahēndravarman cave temples were borrowed from Vishṇukundin examples on the banks of the Krishna. The origin of the Undavalli caves and the actual kings who excavated them cannot be considered as finally settled, and not until this is done is it possible to assert that the art of Mahēndravarman was derived from it. Mr. Sewell thought that these caves were the work of the Chālukyas.\textsuperscript{2} Mr. Krishna Sastriyar was struck with their resemblance with the caves of Orissa and would take them to the Andhra period.\textsuperscript{3} The genealogy of the Vishṇukundīns so far known may be represented as follows:

¹ Pallavas, p. 33.
² This is far too fanciful to build such a theory on. Mahēndravikrama means possessed of the valour of Mahēndra. Vikramēndra means an Indra in valour. They may amount to the same in point of sense ultimately; but they are different names and differently formed. The two terms are not without substantial difference of meaning to the Sanskritist. Ed.

Combined genealogy obtained from the Rāmatīrtham, Chikkula and Pulimboru grants:

| Circa 475. |
|---|---|
| Mādhavavarman I |
| Vikramēndravarman I |
| Indrabhāṭṭārakavarman |
| Vikramēndravarman II |
| Vikramahēndra |
| Govindavarman |
| Mādhavavarman II |

\textsuperscript{1} The similarity does not take us far. They are hardly names but mere descriptive titles. See note on previous page. \textit{Ed.}

\textsuperscript{2} \textit{List of Ant.}, vol. i, p. 77.

\textsuperscript{3} \textit{Eρ. Rep.}, Madras for 1909, part ii, p. 75.
CHAPTER VI

THE PALLAVA ASCENDENCY—THE DYNASTY OF SIMHAVISHNU, A.D. 575-900

INTRODUCTORY

FROM the beginning of the reign of Simhavishnu, also known as Simhavishnupottarayan and Avanisimha, about the last quarter of the sixth century, a new epoch begins in the history of the Pallava power. From this period onward the Pallava authority begins to penetrate much farther into the Tamil country than before. Again during this period flourished the greatest of the Šaiva and Vaishnava saints, the majority of the Ālvārs and the Nāyanmārs who by their memorable religious propagandic work handed down in their hymns, were destined to revolutionise South Indian religious thought and outlook. In another respect also, this period of Pallava history is of special importance in South Indian history. It was during this period that a beginning is believed to have been made in the Tamil land to build temples and other monuments in stone instead of in perishable material such as wood and brick. This important change in the building material was destined in the course of a few centuries to cover the whole of the Southern India with a network of temples dedicated to Śiva, Vishnu and Brahma. Above all, the active spread of Sanskrit culture and learning in the Tamil country was systematically and sedulously encouraged by the Pallava kings of this period, and recent research seems to support the view that some of the greatest poets and rhetoricians including Bhāravi and Dandin the authors of Kiratarjuna and Kavyadarsa, flourished in this age at the Pallava court at Kañchipuram.

Sources of Information for this Period.—For the earlier we had to depend almost wholly on copper-plate charters. But during this period (A.D. 575 to 900) inscriptions on stone appear to have become very popular in the Tamil country. We have therefore in addition to copper-plate grants large numbers of these stone inscriptions scattered throughout the Pallava dominions. Though some of these have been critically edited by Messrs. Hultzsch, Venkayya and others, the larger part of these still remain unedited and even unpublished. Of the stone inscriptions so far discovered nearly a hundred records are connected with the members of the Simhavishnu dynasty and bear the regnal years of these kings. They have for their object the registering of gifts of gold or land for temple services, or endowments for religious and secular learning by the kings, or other persons of distinction. These inscriptions which are for the most part very short, unlike the copper-plate records, do not furnish a genealogy. They mention usually the year of the ruling king when the inscription was put up and the gifts made. They consequently furnish little information either as regards the ancestry of the ruling sovereign or of any of his political achievements. But they give details as regards how the various gifts should be appropriated and furnish valuable glimpses into the social, economic and administrative arrangements of the times.

Apart from the inscriptions and copper-plate records dated directly in the years of the Pallava kings and discovered in the various parts of the Pallava kingdom, we have also records from the other contemporary dynasties such as those of Western Chālukyas, the early Pāndyas, the Rāṣṭrakūṭas, the Gangas, Kadambas, the Bānas and the Muttaraiyans. The records of this period also mention the Pallavas coming into contact with the Mālavas, Kalabhras, Chōlas, Kēralas, Śinhalas, Tulus and the Konkanas; but we do not know much about the political condition of these people during this period.

Many of the inscriptions of the Pallava kings appear in temples and other monuments that they constructed during this age at Kāṇchipuram, and other places. The earliest of these are found in the cave-temples of the South Arcot, Trichinopoly and Chingleput Districts, and are dated in the reign of Mahēndra-varman I. The others are found in the structural temples at the Seven Pagodas and at Kāñchipuram, such as the Kailāsa-nātha temple. The rest are distributed in various villages.

Literature.—We turn from the inscriptions and monuments to the evidence furnished by literature, both religious and secular. The bulk of the religious literature embodied in the Tevāram of Appar, Sambandar, and Sundarar and the Vaishnava Nalayiraprabandha belong to this period as also the Sanskrit works Mattavilāsa and perhaps Kiratārjuniya, etc. These, however, do not compare favourably with the inscriptional records as historical documents. For one thing the hymns of the saints hardly mention contemporary political or other events with exceptions such as those in the poems of Tirumangai-Ājvār. In the next place there is no secular work in Tamil belonging to this period with the exception of Nandikkalambakam. The recently-discovered Sanskrit work entitled Mattavilāsa-Prahasana, though mainly devoted to the description of the drunken revelry of a Kāpālikā, incidentally throws much light upon the contemporary religious atmosphere in the city of Kāñchipuram. Moreover the work having been composed by one of the Pallava kings Mahēndravikrama, has a special interest to the student of Pallava history. Of greater importance, as throwing light on the encouragement of Sanskrit learning under the Pallava kings of this period may be mentioned the recent discovery of Danḍin’s Avantisundarikathāsāra by the officers of the Madras Oriental MSS. Library. This work mentions the Chāluṅka Vishnubadrana and the Western Ganga Durvinita as having been contemporaries of Simhamishnū, and thus establishes a valuable synchronism in South Indian history hitherto unknown. By mentioning Bhāravi and Danḍin as living in the Pallava court, it puts beyond all doubt that Kāñchipuram the capital of the Pallavas was during this age a very important centre in the south for Sanskrit learning and culture. This is independently corroborated by the inscriptional evidence furnished by the Sanskrit charters.
Among Tamil works of the later Pallava period we may mention Perundēvanār’s Bhāratavenbā believed to be composed in the ninth century. It is believed originally to have consisted of 12,000 stanzas though only about 800 so far have come down to us. The author of this work is supposed to have lived during the reign of Nandivarman III, the victor in the battle at Tellāru and is also taken to be the one who edited the classical anthologies. In the invocatory verses prefixed to the Udyōga-Parva of the Bhāratavenbā the author mentions the victory of this king at Tellāru, and we may therefore infer that he was a contemporary of this king and composed his Bhāratavenbā in the reign of Nandivarman III. As to his having edited the classical anthologies the identification presents great difficulties.

The only Tamil historical piece, as distinguished from religious works of which as we said, there is a large quantity that has come down to us from Pallava times, is the poetical work entitled Nandikkalambakam, which in a hundred and ten stanzas commemorates the martial exploits of a certain Pallava king Nandi, probably Nandivarman III. This king, as we shall see, lived in the second quarter of the ninth century. The meagerness of purely Tamil literary enterprise, if we except the Tevāram and Vaishnava Prabandham, probably indicate that the Pallava kings were essentially patrons of Sanskrit learning and Brahmanic culture. The bulk of Tamil literature known as the Śangam works preceded, as we stated above, the advent of the Pallava kings of Kāñchipuram.

Along with these we have the impressions of the Chinese pilgrim and Master of Law—Hiuen-Tsang—regarding the city of Kāñchi about the year A.D. 640. His notes furnish a description of contemporary religious and secular life. We have already noticed the historical value of Mahāvamsa for this period of Pallava history.

The Great Pallavas, Simhavishṇu Dynasty. Simhavishṇu-varman, A.D. 575 to 600.—The Kaśakkuḍi plates \(^1\) taken along with the Kūram, \(^2\) and the Vēḻūṟpāḷayam \(^3\) give us the following genealogy of the Pallavas of this period:

```
Nandivarman

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Simhavishṇu</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Mahēndrávarman I</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Narasimhavarman I</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Mahēndrávarman Paramēśvaravarman I

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Narasimhavarman II</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>

Paramēśvaravarman Mahēndrávarman II

| Mahēndrávarman III |

Bhīmavarman

| Buddhavarman |

| Ādityavarman |

| Govindavarman |

| Hiranyavarman |

| Nandivarman II |

| Dantivarman |

| Nandivarman III |

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Nripatungavarman</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>

| Aparājita |
```

The genealogy for this period is full, and there is not the uncertainty of the early Pallava history either about the reigns of this period, or about the order in which the kings succeeded one another as most of the documents give the above order without substantial change. It would be noticed that from the days of Simhavishṇu in the third quarter of the sixth century for a period of 125 years the throne remained in the hands of the direct successors of this king. We do not know what position the members of the collateral line, of whom the Kaśakkuḍi plates mention Bhīmavarman, Buddhavarman, Ādityavarman, Govindavarman and Hiranyavarman, occupied. They evidently occupied a subordinate position as the viceroy under these kings. Not until we come to the days of Paramēśvara II in the beginning of the eighth century do we find that a descendent of Bhīma, the younger brother of Simhavishnu, effecting a change of dynasty by succeeding to the Pallava throne.

---

No inscription or copper-plate ascribable to this king Simhavishnu has yet been discovered. But his name is perpetuated in the historical introduction to the work already referred to wherein the author says that Bhāravi, one of his predecessors, went to his court by invitation. In the Mattavilāsa-Prahāsana, written by his son Mahēndravarman I, he is referred to in the prologue in terms of praise.¹

As regards his achievements we read in verse 10 of the Vēlurpālayam grant that his prowess was widely known on earth, that he quickly seized the country of the Cholas, embellished by the daughter of Kavēra, whose ornaments are the forests of paddy-fields, and where are found brilliant groves of areca.² From this we may infer that this king who is called Avanisimha for the first time extended the Pallava territory as far as the delta of the Kaveri. In doing so he had to encounter the individual and united opposition of the southern powers who are referred in the Kaśākkudī plates,³ among the vanquished: the Kaḷabhra, Mālava, Chola, Pāṇḍya and the Simhala proud of the strength of their arms.

That this conquest of the Tamil regions was no mere formal praise drawn from the imagination of the writer of the document is seen in the absence of reference to any similar achievement in the records of his son Mahēndravarman I, and suggest clearly that he must have inherited the region around the Kaveri as part of the ancestral dominions which his father had left him. Of the earlier Pallava kings we know of only one king Buddhavarman who is said to have encountered the Cholas, and who is described in the Vēḷūrpālayam plates as being the submarine fire to the ocean-like army of the Cholas. Whether he conquered the region watered by the Kaveri is, however, not known. We may, therefore, take it that the region was for the first time brought under the Pallavas under Simhavishnu.

¹ पल्लवकुलधरणमण्डलकुलवर्ततेन सर्वनान्तरतितसमस्मतसामान्तमण्डल-रक्ष्य आखण्डसंप्रवाक्षमण्यः स्रोमहिमानुष्पदानविभुति परिभूत राज-राजस्य श्रीविजयविष्णुवर्ष: पुल: श्रद्धा त्वाग्निविश्वासपर: परहित परतन्त्र-तय: महामूल संधमां महाराजो: श्रीमहेन्द्र विक्रमनार्य नाम।

³ Ibid.

Our knowledge of the Cholas, the Pāṇḍyas, the Kaḷabhras and the Māḷavas ¹ whom Simhavishnū is said to have defeated is very limited, in the present state of our knowledge.

¹ We do not know who these Māḷavas were and whether they are identical with the Māḷavas of the north. They are probably to be associated with the people of Maḷanādu who figure in early Tamil literature.

As regards the Kaḷabhras we find that their history is equally obscure. These people figure also among the kings conquered by the Chāḻukya king Vikramādiyā and Vinayādiyā. They seem to have invaded the Pāṇḍyān capital and having routed the ruling king established their rule. According to the Vēḷvikudi plates the Adhirāja was ousted from Power and the country occupied by the Kaḷabhras. (Tiruvilaiyadai Purāṇam). Mr. Venkayya relying on the evidence of Periyapurāṇam where the Kāṟṇaṭakas are said to have invaded and occupied Madura, proposed to identify the Kaḷabhras with the Kāṟṇaṭakas (Ep. Rep. for 1908, paras 25–26). Mr. T. A. Gopinatha Rao deriving the word Kaḷabhra from Kaḷavara tries to identify the Kaḷabhras with the Muttaraiyar mentioned in the Seṉ-talai Pillar inscription. (Ep. Ind., 15).

Kaḷabhras cannot be Kāṟṇaṭakas obviously, as the Chāḻukyas themselves must have ruled over Kāṟṇaṭaka and therefore over the Kāṟṇaṭakas. Kaḷabhras must, therefore, be people different from the groups known to us otherwise. There was a people occupying the Pallava territory—the northern part in particular—whose name has hitherto been read as Kaḻvar in the Sangam works. They had a chief by name Pulli with headquarters at Vēṅgadām (Tirupati). It is these people that are called Kaḷabhras in a Sanskritized form. Kaḻvar later Kaḻar in Tamil are called Kaḻamāṭ in Sanskrit. This seems to indicate a form Kaḻavar in Tamil which would become Kaḻabharu in Kannāda, Sanskritized into Kaḷabhra. I am assured by Pandit Mahamahopadyaya Svāmīnātha Aiyar that the reading of the MSS. is Kaḻavar and not Kaḻvar. It is the irruption of these people into the south through the advance of the Pallava dynasty that brought about a great revolution in the Tamil country. The Māḷavas are a similar ethnic group with almost similar habits. They also occupied the territory on the northern and western border of the Tamil land. Their chiefs took the Tamil title Malavaraiyan which has become Māḷavaraiyan which is still a common name in the Tamil country of Kaḻar families.
Simhavishnu's religious leanings were towards Vaishnavism which his very name suggests. It should, however, be remembered that the Pallava kings of Kāṇchipuram were some of them devoted to Śiva and some to Vishnu as the names of the Pallava kings indicate. Thus for instance, while there are names like Vishnugopa and Kumāravishnu which suggest that the kings who bore such names were devoted to Vishnu, it is a fact that their sons and grandsons bear names like Skandavarman and Paramēśvaravarman which indicate their devotion to Śiva while names like Buddhavarman possibly indicate the Buddhistic leanings of this Pallava sovereign. But in the case of Simhavishnu the Udayēndiram plates \(^1\) of Nandivarman II clearly call him Bhaktyārādita-Vishnu-Simha-Vishnu in terms which leave no possibility of escape from regarding him as a Vaishnava. \(^2\) None of the temples that this sovereign might have constructed for Hindu gods has been discovered as yet, though Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil puts forward the suggestion that the Śiyāyamangalam cave temple which contains an inscription of Avanibhājana, identified by Hultzsch with Mahēndravarman I, might have been excavated by Simhavishnu. 'It may not be impossible,' says he, 'that the Śiyāyamangalam temple which contains the images of the lion and the inscription of King Avanibhājana belongs to the days of king Simhavishnu (called Avanisimha in the Kaṣākkuḍī plates). It is not impossible, in fact, that the birudas such as Śatrumalla, Lalitāṅkura, Avanibhājana were borne also by Mahēndra and by his father Simhavishnu.' \(^3\)

It is a remarkable fact that no inscription dated in the reign of this sovereign has come down to us although from the later copper-plates and stone inscriptions as well as the recently discovered manuscript Avantisundarikathāsāra we may be sure that Simhavishnu actually ruled as a king for a

---

\(^1\) S.I.J., vol. ii, p. 74, ll. 11-12.
\(^2\) Early History of Vaishnavism in South India, p. 95.
\(^3\) Pall. Ant., vol. i, p. 40.
period of time. His name moreover figures in the two records which indicate that his kingdom comprised at least the regions where these records are found. Maṇali, a village near Tiruvorriyūr (not far from Madras), was called in ancient times Simhavishṇu-Chaturvēdimangalam. Similarly, No. 265 of 1907 calls Kanjanūr in Kumbha konam Taluk, Simhavishṇu-Chaturvēdimangalam which shows that it must have been so named during the reign of this king. The region from Maṇali to Kanjanūr where this sovereign should have reigned probably constituted the kingdom. It is possible that the discovery of fresh inscriptions will throw new light on the matter.

A Relief of Simhavishṇu.—One of the most interesting discoveries of the Epigraphy Department in recent years has been the identification of royal sculptures at the Ādivarāhavāmi temple at Mahābalipuram.¹ These reliefs relate to two kings cut in bas-relief in the Varāha cave in the village of Mahābalipuram and were noticed as early as 1913,² by Mr. Krishna Sastri in his report although no identification had been then attempted by him. This was due to the failure to notice the inscriptionsal label that is put over the bas-reliefs which have now been copied and read. From these it is now clear that the representations are those of Simhavishṇupātāraya and Mahēndravarman I. These kings are here represented with their queens in an attitude of adoration. The Archaeological Superintendent’s Report for 1922–23 says on page 94, No. 661 of 1922, is engraved on the portal of the north niche in the Varāha cave, and consists of the name Śri Simmavipṇu-Potādhirājan in the Pallava-Grantha characters. The niche below this inscription contains the seated figure of a king with a high crown (kīrīṭa), and chest and ear ornaments flanked on either side by a standing female figure representing, by their crowns, his queens . . . No. 662 of 1922 cut on the top of the corresponding niche on the south side of the main cave, and opposite to the image of Simhavishnu referred to above, consists only of the name Śri-Mahendra-potādhiraṇāja. The niche contains the standing image of a king distinguished by his crown and ornaments. His half-raised hand points towards the shrine of the God evidently—whether he appears to be leading the nearer queen by her right hand. The above two inscriptions serve as labels to show whom the images represent . . . .

¹ These reliefs and the inscriptions at the Ādivarāha temple have been studied by Rao Bahadur H. Krishna Sastri in a recent Memoir issued by the Archaeological Survey of India.
² The figures in the interior of this temple are first mentioned in one of the Mackenzie MSS. accounts and in The Cave Temples of India by Fergusson and Burgess (1890) although no identification is attempted.

One explanation of the presence of the image of Simhavishnuvarman in the Ādhisvarāha temple at Mahābalipuram may be that the monolith was excavated by him. If this is so it shows that some of the monuments of the Seven-Pagodas are as old as the days of Simhavishnu. This would throw new light on the real age of the monuments of the Seven-Pagodas.\footnote{Hultzsch Insc. of Seven-Pagodas, Ep. Ind., vol. x, p. 1.}

Mahendra-varman I. A.D. 600 to 630.—Mahendra-varman, known also as Mahendra-vikrama, and by surnames such as Mattavilāsa, Guṇabhara, etc., came to the throne after Simhavishnu about the beginning of the seventh century. His reign is memorable in many respects. In the first place he is believed to have given for the first time a real start to excavating temples out of solid stone. In the second place his reign synchronized with the religious activity of Appar, and the literary efforts of Bhāravi in the field of Sanskrit letters. From a purely administrative point of view his government provided the quiet atmosphere for the peaceful pursuit of avocations to his subjects hitherto tormented by wars. From a military point of view his rule witnessed the beginnings of the Pallava-Chāḷukya and Pallava-Pāṇḍya conflicts which were destined to be continued by his successors for over a century and a half. Considerable impetus was given to productions in the fields of drama, music, painting and other arts.
The most powerful contemporary of Mahêndravarman I and his son Narasimhavarman I was Pulakēśin II. The actual causes of the conflict between the Chālukyas and the Pallava kings lie buried in obscurity. Among the wild guesses made in this direction the most ingenious is that of Mr. Rice who considers that their (Chālukya) name bears a suggestive resemblance to Seleukia, and that they should be probably associated with Seleucidae\(^1\) in which case the Pallava-Chālukya conflict would only be a natural sequel to their original warfare on the banks of the Tigris.

It was about the beginning of the seventh century that Pulakēśin II made himself Master of Vengi which till then was under the Pallavas, and established his brother Kubja-Vishnupardhana as his viceroy. His descendants afterwards became independent making him founder of the Eastern Chālukya dynasty. It was in the course of his southern wars that Pulakēśin came into conflict with the Pallavas at Kāńchipuram. The Aihole inscription\(^2\) which enumerates his exploits says of his encounter with the Pallavas that ‘he caused the splendour of the Lord of the Pallavas who had opposed the rise of his power to be obscured by the dust of his army and to vanish behind the walls of Kāńchipuram.’ This important reference would suggest a defeat and retreat on the part of Mahêndravarman I before his Chālukyan adversary, but we learn however from the Kasākkuḍī plates\(^3\) that Mahêndravarman I gained a victory at Pullalūr which has been identified by Dr. Hultsch with Pullalūr (Polilore in early British period of Indian history and now Pallūr) in the Conjeevaram taluk in the Chingleput District. This was the scene of two other battles between the English and the French in the British period. It is not stated who the enemies of the Pallavas in this victory were. But it is extremely likely that they were no other than the Chālukyas who in a later record described the Pallavas as their ‘natural enemies.’

\(^{1}\) Mys. Gaz., vol. i; also Mys. and Coorg from Ins., p. 62.
Religion.—According to tradition Mahēndravarman I was originally a Jain and was given to persecuting the votaries of other religious denominations. In the Periyapurāṇam account his conversion to Śaivism was brought about by Appar otherwise known as Tirunāvukkarasu. Appar was one of those who is believed to have been thus persecuted, but his wonderfully miraculous powers, especially the manner in which he escaped the tortures to which he was subjected by the Jains, moved the Pallava king to embrace the Śaivism of Appar.

This event which may have taken place in the middle of his reign marks an important epoch in the history of Śaivism. There is probably an allusion to this event in the king’s life in the Trichinopoly rock inscription ¹ which refers to him as having turned back from hostile conduct to the worship of the linga (emblem of Śiva). We have at present no means of ascertaining the exact circumstances connected with this event. It happened presumably sufficiently early in his reign as the number of Śiva rock-cut temples excavated by him are numerous and must have taken many years to come into existence. All these cave-temples as they are styled have a peculiarity in shape and have been discovered at Vallam (Chingleput), Mahēndravēdi (North Arcot District), Dalavānūr (South Arcot District), Śiyyamangalam and Pallavaram. He probably originated the habit of inscribing the surnames of the reigning monarchs in the pillars and walls of the various temples that he built. Among the surnames that this king assumed may be mentioned those of Guṇabhara, Purushottama, Satyasanda, Avanibhājana, Sankirnajati, Vichitra-chitta, Narēndra, Chetṭhakāri, Aluptakāma, Kalahapriyah, Lalitānkura, Satrumalla, etc. Of these the biruda Chetṭhakāri, if it is really an equivalent with Chaitya-kāri, would indicate the temple-building propensities of the king. This probably has reference to the rock-cut temples of Mahēndravarman I, all over the Tamil country. The Telugu birudas such as ¹ S.I.I., vol. i, No. 33, p. 29.

Nilvilonayambu, Pasarambu, Ventulavittu, etc., occurring in these inscriptions have been taken to indicate the Telugu origin of Mahendravarman's style. It must not be imagined that this sovereign's zeal for Saivism blunted his sympathy for other religions, a feature of his character in pre-Saiva days. Though he may have professed his devotion to Siva he caused to be cut out in rock a Vishnu temple called Mahendravishnugṛha on the banks of Mahendra-Taṭāka in Mahendrapāḍi. This inscription records in Pallava-Grantha that Guṇabhara caused to be cut out of rock the temple of Mahendravishnugṛha in Mahendrapura. This place has been identified by Dr. Hultsch with Mahendrapāḍi, near Arkonam. This catholicity was due to the general tendency of the age when Vishnu and Śiva had not begun to have their separate followers and were placed in the same temple without distinction as we find in the monuments of the Pallavas at the Seven-Pagodas and elsewhere. The Manda-gappattu inscription of this king for instance records the fact King Vichitrachitta caused to be constructed a temple to Brahma, Īśvara and Vishnu without the use bricks, timber, metal and mortar. In other words it was a monolithic rock-temple that was excavated.

The Mahendra Style.—The principles of the style of architecture adopted and popularized by Mahendravarman I have been studied in full by Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil in his Pallava Antiquities and by Mr. A. H. Longhurst of the Archaeological Department. According to the former scholar the monuments of Mahendravarman's period discovered hitherto are caves excavated in rocks. The pillars are formed of two cubical parts separated by a prismatic part. . . . These caves are all of them situated in Tondamāndalam and Tamil land, and are distinguished by (1) Sanctuaries destitute of Śomaskanda image, (2) Circular lingams, (3) Dvārapālas of a peculiar posture, (4) Double-arched Tiruvātchi (prabhā torasās), (5) Cubical pillars. All of them are, besides subterranean mandapas. The Archæological Report for 1918–19, Section 26, says: 'A very characteristic feature about the temples in this style is the type of pillar found in them. These are about two feet square in section and seven feet in height. The upper and lower portions are cubical while the middle portion of shaft has the angles levelled off which makes the middle third octagonal in section. Sometimes the cubical portions are decorated with a conventional lotus flower design similar to the lotus medallions appearing on the stone rails of the Amarāvati stūpa. The capitals of the pillars are simple corbels or brackets supporting the architrave above. . . . Each pillar has a corresponding side pilaster.'

---

1 Ep. Ind., vol iv, p. 152f.
2 T. A. G. Rao. Ibid., vol. xvii, p. 14. This short record is of importance inasmuch as it records that before the time of Vichitrachitta bricks, timber, metal and mortar were the common temple-building materials. This falsifies the notion that structural temples were non-existent before the seventh century A.D. in South India, a view based on the absence of the remains of any previous to this period. This statement in the Manda-gappattu inscription warrants the conclusion that such temples were in existence before.

Pallava Painting.—A vestige of Pallava painting has also been discovered in recent times in the Pudukkotta State, at Śittannavāsal. The style of the rock-cut temple at Śittannavāsal is identical with that of Māmanḍūr cave built by Mahēndravarman I. This cave temple seems to have been at one time fully painted but the painting on the upper part of the edifice is alone visible now, namely, the painting on the ceiling, the capitals and the upper parts of the pillars. 'The principal subject that is preserved is a grand fresco which adorns the whole extent of the ceiling and the verandah. This fresco represents a tank covered with lotuses. In the midst of the flowers are found fishes, geese, buffaloes, elephants and three men who surely are Jains holding lotuses in their hands. Their pose, their colouring and the sweetness of their countenance are indeed charming. . . . Therefore the decoration of the capitals of the pillars in the facade is well preserved. It consists of lotuses whose blooming stems intertwine with elegance. The two pillars in the passage are adorned with the figures of dancing girls. It is presumably, as Jouveau-Dubreuil suggests that the art of dancing was encouraged by Mahëndravarman I who probably wrote a treatise on the subject. The Mämanḍür inscription of this king alludes to the work Dakshinachitra probably a treatise on painting and other works on music composed by him.

The Musical Inscription at Pudukkota.—To this period is also ascribed the musical inscription at Kuḍumiyāmalai in the State of Pudukkotta. The Epigraphy Report for 1906 says that the inscription was engraved at the instance of an unnamed king who was a disciple of a certain Rudrāchārya who composed the svaras for the benefit of the pupils. Relying on the panegyric given in the Mämanḍür record, and the reference to Vālmiki of the svaras and varṇas of music therein detailed, and to the Mattavilāsa-Prahasana, as also the close resemblance between the Kuḍumiyāmalai inscription and the Mahëndravarman inscription at Trichinopoly, scholars have concluded that Mahëndravarman I was an accomplished musician and that the Kuḍumiyāmalai musical inscription was engraved at his order.

Mahëndravarman I as an author.—In the previous paragraphs it was mentioned that the Pallava court in the days of Simhavishńu was a centre of Sanskrit culture. The occurrence of the name of the work Mattavilāsa-Prahasana in the Mämanḍür inscription indicates that there was in existence at the time, a work bearing that name. No one knew of this work until the Oriental MSS. Department of the Travancore State discovered this work some years ago. It has now been published as one of the Travancore Sanskrit Series by 1 This subject is treated by N. C. Mehta in his ‘Studies in Indian Painting’ where four of the fresco paintings of this temple have been reproduced. Mr. Mehta, however, doubts that the temple is a Jain one. Studies in Indian Painting, pp. 11-12.

---

3 No. 354 of 1904.
4 G. Jouveau-Dubreuil, Pallavas, p. 23.
5 The work was probably modelled on another early Prahasana Bhaga-vadajukam recently published and which is attributed to Bodhayana. The name of this prahasana also occurs in the Mämanḍür inscription of Mahëndravarman I in the line preceding the one where Mattavilāsa is mentioned. (See I.H.Q., vol. i, p. 263, Note 3.)
Mahamahopadyaya Pandit T. Ganapati Sastri. This work is of great value in enabling us to know the nature of religious and secular life led by people during the days of Mahendravarman I, in the first quarter of the seventh century.

The Contents of this Work.—The work describes the drunken revelry of a Kāpālīka with a female-companion, his falling out with a hypocritical Śākyabikshu, believing him to have stolen his Kāpāla (alms-bowl) which had been carried away by a dog, his having recourse to a degenerate Pāśupata for the settlement of the dispute and finally the recovery of the Kāpāla from a mad man. We have already seen that the titles Mattavilāsa, Avanibhājana, Šatrumalla and Guṇabhara were borne by Mahendravarman I and occur in various inscriptions. Of these the title Šatrumalla is mentioned in the concluding lines of the play; and that of Avanibhājana is referred to in the fourth pāda of the mangala śloka... and Guṇabhara and Mattavilāsa are also found in the words of Nāṭṭī in the sthāpana. The virtues of the king are eulogized in the opening portion of this work.¹

Light thrown on Contemporary Life by the Work.—This little play is full of interest to the student of religious history as it affords valuable material regarding the extinct Kāpālīka faith, and the vices of the Śākyabikshus and the views regarding the teachings of the Buddha held by the followers of other religions, such as the Kāpālikas. ¹ From the Mattavilāsa-Prahasana it becomes clear that to a Kāpālīka, the Kāpāla is as essential as is a sacred thread to a Brahmana. If he loses it he should provide himself with another in a stated time. He should cover his body with ashes and make himself hideous, and drink liquor from skull of a human being. . . . One of his articles of

¹ Prabhādanadānabhāvyatātā: kānti: kātakāśālān
satyam śīryāsmaṇātā vinay evamprakāramanā: ¹ Aparamākhyatā: sameti shrang yanātā yāmekān kālo kāpālāte jagadāchārādīpūrṇaṃ sargprabheda śv ॥

Mattavilāsa, p. 3. T. Sans. Ser., No. LV.
faith is that the effect always resembles, to a certain extent, the cause; therefore, from the practice of austerities in this life one cannot obtain bliss in another life since austerities and bliss are of opposite nature. The Kāpālikas carried in addition to the Kapāla, a cow’s horn both for blowing during their worship and drinking from. The people of this faith associated freely with women-Kāpālikas. . . . The opinions held by the particular Kāpālika, Bhatya-Soma of our play, regarding the Śākyabhikshus are that the Śākyabhikshus indulged freely in animal food and fattened themselves pecuniarily by being the managers of several vihāras, and led a comfortable life, against all the rules of their order: they covered themselves only to conceal their foibles. Their teacher Buddha, did nothing more than steal his doctrines from the Vedanta and the Mahābhārata of the Brahmans, and compiled therefrom his doctrines.¹ The mention of Buddhias, Bikshus, Kāpālikas and Pāśupatas, in his burlesque by Mahēndravarman I as among the inhabitants of Kāñchipuram bear out the surmise that Buddhism flourished there till at least the seventh century A.D., and that the statement of Hiuen-Tsang regarding the existence in Kāñchipura of a large number of vihāras² finds support in this work of Mahēndravarman.

The reign of Mahēndravarman I synchronized with the period of decay of Buddhist and Jain religions at Kāñchipuram and the Tamil land. The Śaiva saints Appar, and Tirugñāna-Sambandar were actually engaged in propagating the Śaiva faith. According to the testimony of these saints, as represented in their references to the Śākyas, we have to infer that the Buddhists and Jains of this period were in a degenerate position then. They are mentioned in the same strain also in several verses in the Vaishnava work Nalāyiraprabhandam.³

¹ M.C.C. Mag., vol. 34, p. 413. ² Beal’s Rec., vol. ii, p. 229.
The reign of Mahēndravarman I is believed to have been the period of the Vaishnava saint Tirumalaiśai and therefore also that of the first three Ālvārs by certain scholars. Mr. M. Srinivasa Aiyangar in his Tamil Studies expresses the view that the Gunabhara mentioned in the Nāmugan-Tiruvandādi is a reference to Mahēndravarman I, and concludes, on this basis alone, that he was his contemporary. But a careful examination of the context and meaning of this stanza shows that the Gunabhara of the Ālvār cannot be interpreted as alluding to any mortal man.

1 Tamil Studies, pp. 305-6.
2 See also Early Hist. of Vaishnavism in South India, p. 54.
CHAPTER VII

NARASIMHAVARMAN I (MAHAMALLA) A.D. 630-660

NARASIMHAVARMAN I succeeded Mahëndravarman I on the Pallava throne about A.D. 630. He is called in some of his inscriptions, Vätäpi-Konđa-Narasimhavarman and this alludes to his supreme achievement, namely, the capture and destruction of Vätäpi (Badami in the Bijapur District). He is one of the most remarkable sovereigns of the line of Simhavishnu, and the Pallava empire must have been considerably enlarged during his reign. His reign is well-known for the following:—(1) Invasion and capture of Vätäpi; (2) Invasion of Ceylon; (3) The excavation works at Mämallapuram; (4) The visit of the Chinese pilgrim to Kâñchipuram.

The Châlukya-Pallava Relations.—It has already been seen that in about the middle and closing years of his father, Pulakësin II advanced as far as the city of Kâñchî, forcing 'the lord of the Pallavas to retreat behind the walls of Kâñchipuram.' The Kùram plates belonging to the reign of Paramëśvaravarman I mention the important fact that Narasimhavarman I inflicted a crushing defeat on Pulakësin, in the battles of Pariyâla, Manimangala and Sûramâra. The exact locality corresponding to these places cannot, at this distance of time, be made out except in the case of Manimangala which may be safely identified with the modern village of Manimangalam, situated at a distance of only twenty miles from Kâñchî. This reference in the Kùram plates indicates another Châlukya invasion early in Narasimhavarman's reign on which occasion the Châlukya army would appear to have advanced very near the Pallava capital itself before it sustained the defeat mentioned in the record.

Raid on Vātāpi.—Shortly after the repulse of the Chālukya armies from the neighbourhood of Kāñchipuram, Narasimhavarman I made serious preparations for a counter-invasion into the Chālukya territory. This expedition was entrusted to the command of Śīru-Toṇḍa who was known otherwise as Paranjōti. That this aggressive expedition under the command of Śīru-Toṇḍa marched against the Chālukya capital, captured it and returned with great spoils to Kāñchi is learnt from the life of Paranjōti, otherwise Śīru-Toṇḍar in the Periyapurāṇam. The Vēlūrpalayam plates refer to this exploit:—"From his son Mahēndra was born Narasimhavarman I famous like Upēndra (Vishṇu) who, defeating the host of his enemies took from them the pillar of victory standing in the centre of Vātāpi." This is also referred to in a mutilated inscription found at Vātāpi and written in characters of this period, probably put up by Narasimha to commemorate his capture of the city. This record, although mutilated, contains the surname Mahāmalla, and the words Kṣitibhujām-agrēsara Pāllava and (Nara) simha-vishnu. From these it is clear that Narasimhavarman I captured the city of Vātāpi; and probably set up a pillar of victory at this place recording this achievement. There can, therefore, be no doubt regarding the capture of the city by the Pallava king.

Ceylon Invasion.—The circumstances that led to the intervention of Narasimhavarman I in the affairs of Ceylon are gathered chiefly from the Mahāvamsa. It appears from this account that Mānavamma, a Ceylon prince, having become an exile fled to India, and, arriving at the city of Kāñchipuram, managed to enter service under Narasimhavarman I with a view to secure his aid and ultimately to gain the Ceylon throne.
Here he is described as having constantly engaged himself in service of the king and proved his trustworthiness by many an act of bravery and loyalty. The Mahāvamsa mentions in great detail the various acts of Manavamma, particularly his services to Narasimhavarman I in his wars against the Vallabha, the Chāḷukya king: how once king Vallabha came to make war against Nārasimha and how the Pallava king with a view to test Manavamma left him at his capital city and proceeded to the battle-field alone, and how Manavamma’s affection caused him to leave the safety of the fortified capital and join his king in the field of battle in victory, defeat, or death. Such action was bound to increase Nārasimha’s esteem for him, and it is therefore not surprising that when the Ceylon prince prepared to go back to his country Nārasimhavarman I gave him a strong escort and an army with which he was able to secure the Ceylon throne. But this success did not last long. Soon after, his army deserted him and the Prince of Ceylon came back once more to seek the help of Nārasimhavarman I. Again Nārasimhavarman I gave him an army much bigger than before, and this time the Pallava king himself accompanied his troops as far as the harbour where his men went on board on their voyage to the shores of Ceylon. It is noteworthy that this naval expedition of Nārasimhavarman I set sail from the ancient Pallava port, Mahābalipuram, which, according to contemporary account was a harbour at this time. It is worthy of note that Hiuen-Tsang¹ who stayed in the city for a considerable time (circa 642) recorded the fact that ships go to Ceylon from Kāñchi, and that it extended by twenty miles to the coast.² Tirumāṅgai Āḻvār also records that Mahābalipuram was a busy port in his hymns on this place and particularly notes that in its harbour ride at anchor *vessels bent to the point of breaking laden as they are with wealth, big truncked elephants and nine gems in heaps.'

---
¹ Beal, Records, vol. ii, p. 228.
² Peria Tirumoli, Kaṭāyanmallai Hymns, 6.

This second naval expedition was a complete success and must have made a profound impression on the contemporary powers of South India. The Kaśākkudi plates which confirm the conquest of Ceylon justly compare this achievement of Narasimhavarman I with that of Rama's conquest of Lanka. Prince Mānnavamma was firmly placed on the throne, and not until Narasimhavarman I's death did trouble overtake him again.

Monuments of Narasimhavarman I. Improvement of Mahābalipuram.—Like his father, Narasimhavarman I was a lover of building temples all over his kingdom. Some of his earlier monuments such as the cave temples at Trichinopoly district and Pudukotta were excavated from out of rocks as those of Mahēndravarman I. The peculiar features of the monuments of Narasimhavarman have been described by A. H. Longhurst as follows:—1 The cave temples are excavated in the face of the rock in the same manner as those belonging to the earlier period, but their facades are usually more ornamental and contain pillars of a different variety. On plan the interiors are much the same as those of the cave temples of the Mahēndra style, with similar small square shrine chambers cut in the back wall which are usually free from ornament within. The pillared-hall in front of the shrine often contains large panels cut in the side walls filled with sculptural figures in high relief. These are usually of great beauty and executed with remarkable skill. The interior too of the more ornamental cave temples is provided with cornice and plinth mouldings.

---

1 'It is certainly astonishing that in the inscriptions of the Pallavas and other Southern dynasties no reference whatever is made to the relations which in those days must have existed between Coromandel and the Far East. The explanation probably is that those relations, of which the accounts of the Chinese pilgrims have left us such a valuable record were of a perfectly peaceful nature. Suppose the powerful Pallava princes of Kāṇchipuram had equipped armadas and carried their arms to the remote shores of Campā and Java, may we not assume that their conquests on the far side of the ocean would have been extolled in their praśastis no less effusively than we find lavish in their victories over the Chalukyas? ’—J. Ph. Vogel—The Yupa Inscriptions of King Mulavarman.

'The most striking feature about the Māmalla style is the curious shape of the pillars.' The square heavy pillars with corbel-capitals of the earlier period are replaced by pillars of a more elegant shape and better proportion. The base of the pillar is carved in the shape of a conventional lion sitting very erect and carrying the shaft of the column on the top of its head. This shaft is still octagonal in section but of better proportion and crowned with a bulbous capital having a flat abacus. Between the capital and the architrave is usually a double-bracket supporting the cornice. This latter feature is obviously a stone copy of a wooden-model.'

According to Mr. Longhurst examples of Māmalla style are only found at the Seven Pagodas. 'It will be remembered,' says he, 'that it was Māmalla who founded Māmallapuram naming the town after himself.' Although most of the monuments there may be said to be in the Māmalla style it is quite certain that all of them could not possibly have been excavated during his life time, as the work must have taken over a century and even then was never finished. Therefore we may presume that Māmalla's son and successor Mahēndravarman II and also the latter's son Paramēśvaravarman I, carried on the work begun by Māmalla keeping more or less to the original style. . . .'

Dr. Hultzsch on the age of the Seven Pagodas.—About the exact age of the monuments of the Seven Pagodas the views of scholars differ considerably. According to Venkayya

---

1 Note by Editor.
3 In the opinion of the late James Fergusson derived from a study of the sculptures and the architecture the date of the Seven Pagodas is somewhat earlier than 700, but their execution may have been spread over half a century or even more and that A.D. 650 or 700 may be safely relied upon as the date at which the rocks were carved into the wondrous forms which excite our admiration. Cave Temples of India, p. 110.
Mahābalipuram was founded by Narasimhavarman I, surnamed Mahāmalla,1 after his own surname and that the earliest of them cut out by him.

The place is ordinarily supposed by most official Epigraphists and Western archaeologists to have had no previous history2 or existence although the mention of this place by the earliest Ālvārs and the recent discovery of inscribed statues of Śimha-vishnu and his son Mahendravarman I clearly goes against such a presumption. According to Dr. Hultzsch the majority of short epigraphs on the monolith now styled Dharmarāja Ratha resemble those of the Mahēndravāḍi and Śiyamangalam cave inscriptions of the Pallava king Mahēndravarman. Among the names and surnames of the king who excavated the Dharmarāja Ratha, we find twice the name of Narasimha which seems to have been his actual name while the remaining designations look like mere surnames. Among the successors of Mahēndravarman I there are two kings named Narasimhavarman. As the type of the alphabet is more archaic than that of the second of the inscriptions which probably belongs to Paramēśvaravarman I, father of Rājasimha, Narasimhavarman of Dharmarāja Ratha inscriptions may be identified with Narasimhavarman I, the son of Mahēndravarman I. This identification is rendered almost certain by a reference to the published facsimile.3

About the year A.D. 642, the celebrated Chinese pilgrim and Master of Law, Hiuēn-Tsang, visited the Pallava capital and appears to have stayed there a considerable time. He described the country round the capital by the name of Drāvida, and extending about 6000 li in extent. The soil was fertile and produced abundance of crops. He found the climate of the 1Note by Editor on the age of Mahabalipur.

---

2 According to Jouveau-Dubreuil the monuments at the Seven Pagodas do not go back prior to the seventh century, A.D. see his Archæologie du sud de L'Inde, tome i, pp. 74-102. His theories on the age and the evolution of Pallava monuments are generally followed by A. H. Longhurst, V. A. Smith and Ananda C. Coomaraswamy in his recent work on the History of Indian and Indonesian Art. (pp. 102-104.)
region hot, and the character of the people courageous. The people were deeply attached to the principles of truth and highly esteemed for their learning\(^1\) a fact which is also noted by one of the Tēvāram hymnists.\(^2\)

As regards Buddhism the pilgrim found some hundred Sanghārāmas, and 10,000 priests all of whom studied the teaching of the Sthāvira school of Mahāyāna Buddhism. The Hindu, including the Jaina temples numbered about eighty and in other parts around he found that the sect of the Digambaras had many adherents. Hiuen-Tsang also refers to the tradition current then that the Tathāgatha in olden times when he lived in this world frequented this part very much and converted many men. Therefore Asoka the Buddhist emperor is believed to have built a large number of stūpas here traces of which the pilgrim was able to notice in many places around Kāñchi. The Chinese pilgrim also refers to the tradition that Kāñchipuram was the birth place of Dharmapāla, the well-known metaphysician who preceded Silabhadra as head of the great University of Nalanda. The pilgrim also visited Molo-kiu-chi (the Pāṇḍya country) where he found some of the inhabitants following the true doctrine, but others impetuous and wholly given to commercial gain. The Buddhist pilgrim also found that in the Pāṇḍya country his religion was in a state of decay though traces of monasteries were found everywhere.\(^3\)

Mahēndravarman II.—About A.D. 655, Narasimhavarman I, the Mahāmalla, died having raised the Pallava power to a glory unprecedented in Pallava history. The exact period of the duration of Narasimha’s reign is not known, but from the evidence of the Mahāvamsa, and the prolonged stay of Mānavamma at the court of this king as well as the military and naval enterprises associated with his reign, his reign must have lasted a fairly long time. He was succeeded by Mahēndravarman II about whom practically nothing is known, except the reference in the Kūram plates that he ‘thoroughly enforced the sacred law of the castes and the orders.’ This probably indicates a peaceful reign free from disturbances of hostile invasions from outside. According to Mr. M. S. Ramaswami Aiyangar, Mahēndravarman II was the contemporary of Appar. But there is no evidence to show that Mahēndravarman II was a Jain in the earlier part of his reign and that his conversion to Śaivism was brought about by Appar. On the other hand, as we saw already, Appar was a contemporary of Mahēndravarman I, the son and successor of Simhavishnū (A.D. 600-630).

\(^{1}\) Beal, Records, vol. ii, p. 228.
\(^{2}\) Appar, Tēvāram, Tirukachchimēṟṟali Patikam, verse 8.

Paramēśvaravarman I (circa 600 to 680).—With the accession of Paramēśvaravarman I we once again find ourselves in very stirring times. Invasions and counter-invasions of the Pallavas and the Chāluṅkayas become once more the order of the day. His great Chāluṅkyan contemporary was Vikramāditya I who, according to the Gadval plates, conquered Kāṇchi, defeated Īśvarapūtarāja and destroyed the Mahāmalla family. This grant also gives the very important particular that at the time of the southern invasion, Vikramāditya I was encamped at Uragapurā on the southern bank of the Kavēri. These plates furnish the details of date, i.e. the year both of

---

1 The Vēlūrpālayam plates omit his name altogether from the genealogical list. Ibid., S.I.J., vol. ii.
2 Studies in South Indian Jainism, p. 66.
4 As regards the identification of Uragapurā the statement in the plates that it was on the southern bank of the Kaverī makes it clear that it must have been the ancient Chōla capital Uraliyur near Trichinopoly. Dr. Hultzsch was inclined to identify it with Nagapattīnām taking Uragapurā to be a literal translation in Sanskrit of the Tamil word Nāга- Paṭṭīnām. (Ep. Ind., vol. x, p. 102.) Attempts have been made to identify it with Pāmbūr. But the fact that Peruvaḷanallūr, where a battle was fought between the Pallavas and the Chāluṅkayas, lies about twelve miles from Trichinopoly (north-west) shows the camp where Vikramāditya stayed and made this grant could not have been very much farther. According to Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil (Pallavas, p. 43) Uragapurām is the ‘City of Raṅgarasika,’ of the Kaḷḷasanaṭṭha temple inscription (S.I.J., vol. i, p. 13). But it seems more sound to regard that Paramēśvaravarman I led another invasion against Badami, and that the Kallassanāṭṭha temple inscription has reference to this achievement.
the reign and of the Śaka era. The actual date of the grant as given in the record is the full-moon tithi of Vaisākha in the twentieth year of the reign, which was current after 596 Śaka years had passed. According to Dr. Fleet the equivalent may be taken as Tuesday, 25th April, A.D. 674, which fully confirms the correctness of other dates obtained for the reign by Prof. Kielhorn.

The details of the Pallava-Chālukya campaign are not clearly known from any records, but it is certain that success did not uniformly attend on the Chālukya invader. The Kūram record already referred to, which belongs to this period, after giving an elaborate account of the martial exploits of Paramēśvaravarman I mentions in particular the fact that he made Vikramāditya ṇ whose army consisted of several lakṣhas take to flight covered only by a rag.¹ Similarly the Vēlūrpāḷayam record² makes pointed reference to Paramēśvaravarman having crushed the conceit of his enemies like the sun destroying the mists. Neither of these grants furnishes any detail which might help us to locate the exact place where the Pallava and the Chālukyan forces met in battle. This very important detail is obtained from the Udayēndiram plates³ which mention the name of the site of battle as Peruvāḷanaillūr which we may correctly identify with the village of Peruvāḷanaillūr in the Lalgudi taluk of the Trichinopoly District. As we know that the Gadval plates mention the important detail that the Chālukya emperor was encamped in Uragapuram, this identification receives added confirmation, especially as this place lies a few miles from this village. The campaign between the Pallavas and the Chōlas must have been therefore conducted in and around the town of Trichinopoly. A glowing description of the battle is given in the Kūram plates from which we learn that Paramēśvaravarman’s war-elephant was called Arivāraṇa and that his horse was known as Atiśaya.⁴

¹ S. J. I., vol. i, p. 144.
² v. 11, Vēlūrpāḷayam plates, ibid., vol. ii, p. 508.
⁴ At the head of a battle,—in which the disk of the sun was caused to assume the likeness of the circle of the moon through the mist of the dust, there was produced by the marching of the countless troops of men, horses and elephants, which was terrible through the thunderlike sound of drums, which teemed with unsheathed swords that resembled flashes of lightning, in which elephants were moving like clouds, and which therefore resembled an unseasonable appearance of the rainy season; in which tall horses looked like billows, in which elephants caused distress on their path, just as sea-monsters produce whirlpools, in which coaches were incessantly blown and which therefore resembled the gaping ocean; which was full of swords and shields, just as of rhinoceroses, creepers and vāranas trees, which was crowded with heroes who possessed bows and mighty elephants, as if it were crowded with Sara (grass) and which was agitated by a violent wind in which the path of the wind was obstructed by arrows, that flew past each other on the bows, while these were bent by the warriors; in which javelins, pikes, darts, clubs, lances, spears, and discuses were flying about; in which troops of furious elephants firmly impaled each other's faces with the piercing thunderbolts of their tusks; in which squadrons of horsemen were connected by their swords, that had struck each other's heads, in which there were soldiers who were noted for their dexterity in fighting with sword against sword, pulling of hair against hair and club against club; in which the ground was thickly smeared with saffron as the blood was mixed with copious rutting juice of the elephants that issued in consequence of their considering each other as equals, or despising each other; in which both large armies had lost and dropped arms, necks, shanks, thigh bones and teeth; in which, owing to the encounter of the armies, both sides were broken, urged on, put to flight and prostrated on the ground; which was attended by the goddess of fortune sitting on the swing of the doubt about mutual victory or defeat; in which brave warriors were marching on the back of lines of fallen elephants, that formed a bridge over the flood of blood, in which soldiers stood motionless, if their blows did not hit each other's weak parts; which was covered here and there with shattered banners and parasols with fallen elephants and with dead and half dead soldiers who had done their duty whose strong arms still raised the weapon whose lips were bitten and whose eyes were deep red with fury; in which a multitude of white chāmaras was waving; in which tiaras, armlets, necklaces, bracelets and ear-rings were broken, crushed and pulverised, in which the kūshmāṇḍas, rākshasas and pīśāchas were singing, intoxicated with drinking the liquor of the blood; and which contains hundreds of headless trunks, that were vehemently dancing together in a fearful manner according to the beaten time he, unaided, made Vikramāditya, whose army consisted of several lakṣhas take to flight, covered only by a rag.' (Kūram plates; Dr. Hultsch's Translation, S.J.I., vol. i, p. 153 ff.)
This king appears to have been a great devotee of Śiva and pleased that God by constructing large numbers of Śiva temples all over the kingdom. From the inscription on the Gaṇeśa temple at Māmallapuram,¹ Dr. Hultsch has concluded that Atyantakāma after whom the temple is named must have been a surname of Paramēśvaravarman I himself.

¹ Ep. Ind., vol. x, p. 8.
The second and very florid alphabet found in the inscriptions of the Pallava king Atyantakâma on the monolith now styled Ganeśa temple (No. 20), in the two caves called Dharmarâjamaṇḍapa and Râmânujamaṇḍapa. The same alphabet is employed in the Kâñchi inscriptions of Râjasimha and his son Mahendravarman III. The Kâñchipuram inscriptions state that Râjasimha was the son of Ugradaṇḍa the destroyer of Raṇarasika’s city and that the epithet Raṇarâśika refers to the Western Châlukya king Vikramâditya I (A.D. 655–680). The alphabet of the Atyantakâma’s inscription at the Seven Pagodas resembles so closely that of Kâllasânâtha temple epigraphs that both must be assigned to the same period. That Atyantakâma’s actual name was Paramâsvara is seen from verse 2 of No. 20. I propose to identify this Atyantakâma with either Paramâsvaravarman I, the father of Râjasimha or Paramâsvaravarman II, the son of Râjasimha preferably with the former.

It thus appears that the rock-cut monument known as the Ganeśa temple as well as the Râmânujamaṇḍapa were probably excavated at the orders of Paramâsvaravarman and that the former one was a Śiva temple. From the eleven slokas in the Ganeśa temple inscription we learn that Paramâsvaravarman I had Chitramâya, Gunabhâjana, Śrîbharâ and Raṇajaya as surnames. Vidyâvinîta Pallava was another title of Paramâsvaravarman I. In the village of Kûram Paramâsvaravarman appears to have built a structural temple to Śiva, called in the plates Vidyâvinîta-Pallava-Paramâsvaragṛha. The object of the Kûram grant is a gift of the village of Paramâsvaramaṇgaḷam (evidently named after the king) made to the temple of Śiva which had been built at Kûram by Vidyâvinîta Pallava. The village was probably named after the king himself and divided into twenty-five parts of which three were to be enjoyed by two Brahmans Anantaśivâchârya and Pullâsårman who looked after the divine service of the temple. The fourth part was set aside for the providing of water and fire for the temple maṇḍapa, the fifth for the reading of the Bhârata at this place while the remaining twenty parts were given to twenty Chaturvēdins. Kūram is described here as belonging to Mānya-vantrarāṣṭra of Nirvēḷur, a division of Urṇukaṭṭukottam.

Narasimhavarman II—Rājasimha, circa 680–700.—Narasimhavarman II succeeded his father towards the close of the seventh century. His reign appears to have been completely peaceful and free from foreign invasions. Among the temples built by his king may be mentioned the Kailāsanātha temple, called the Rājasimhasvēvara after his surname Rājasimha, the Airavatēsvēvara temple at Kāṇchi, the Shore-temple near the sea at Mahābalipuram, and the Panamalai temple all of which contain his inscriptions. The habit of registering the surnames of the ruling king begun by Mahēndravarman I appears to have become exceedingly popular now and was extensively put into practice by Rājasimha more than 250 of his birudas being found in the walls of the Kailāsanātha temple alone.¹

Some of these are:—‘Rishabalānchana’, ‘Śrī-Śankarabhaka’, ‘Śrivēḷayāvidyādhara’, ‘Śrī-Āgamanapiya’, ‘Śrī-Pratimalla’, ‘Śiva-Chūḍāmani’, etc. These titles are suggestive of his personal tastes, his accomplishments and religious inclinations. The inscriptions of the Kailāsanātha temple besides the birudas of this king, include those of his son Mahēndravarman III and his queen Rangapatāka whose names are associated with the erection of a part of the temple.² This Rangapatāka appears to have been one of Rājasimha’s queens and her record consists of three Sanskrit verses in characters similar to Rājasimha’s inscription. This inscription registers the fact that the small Śiva shrine was constructed by Rangapātāka³ the Queen of Narasimhavishṇu, or Kālakāla whose sign was the bull.

¹ S.I.I., vol. i, Nos. 25 and 26, pp. 14–18.
The Monuments of Rajasimha.—The most important among the temples now existing, built by Rājasimha is that at Kāṇchipuram known as the Kailāsanātha temple. One of the inscriptions in this temple records the construction of this temple by Rājasimha. There is a story in the Periyapurāṇam account of Pūsalār Nāyanār which mentions that a Kādava king built a temple to Śiva and heard a celestial voice directing the postponement of the consecration by a day as on the day appointed he had to be present at the temple of the devotee Pūsalār for a similar function. This presumably has a reference to that erected by Rājasimha as it is mentioned that Rājasimha heard a celestial voice in one of the inscriptions the Kailāsanātha temple in itself. The construction of this temple is also referred to in the Vēlūṟpālayam plates in the following terms:—Verse 13 'His (Paramēśvaravarman's) son's son was Narasimhavarman II who equal to Mahēndra once again organized the ghatika of the twice-born and built of stone a house for the moon-crested Śiva which was comparable to the Mountain Kailāsa. Among the other temples built during this period we may mention the Śiva temple at Panamalai, the Shore-temple at Seven Pagodas and the Airavatēśvara temple at Kāṇchipuram. It has been doubted in some quarters whether or not the Shore-temple at Mahābalipuram is a Pallava structure. Recently about six Sanskrit verses in Pallava script have been discovered round the plinths of the two balipithas here. The record is not complete but contains an eulogy of a Pallava king whose surnames were Atyantakāma, Aparājita, Śivachūḍāmaṇī, etc., attributes that we now know belonged to Rājasimha. Another verse refers to him as Rājasimha, Raṇajaya, Śribhara and Chitrakārmukha and is identical with verse 12 of the Kāṇchipuram inscription of Rājasimha. The mention in the record of the king as the ruling sovereign makes it almost certain that he was Rājasimha, son of Paramēśvaravarman I, who bore the surnames Kshatriyasimha and Rājasimha. The two Śiva temples of the Shore-temple Kshatriyasimha. Pallavēśvaram and Rājasimhapallavēśvaram were apparently contemporary with Rājasimhapallavēśvaram of Kāṇchipuram, and have been named after Rājasimha I.¹

Literature and Literary Patronage.—The age of Narasimhavarman II was one of intense literary activity. It has been already pointed out that Sanskrit poets and Sanskrit culture were specially patronized by Pallava kings.² It is suggested that Danḍin, the well-known Sanskrit writer, probably flourished for some time in the Pallava court at Kāṇchipuram, and references to Kāṇchipura and its rules have been discovered in his works. In his Kavyādarśa³ Danḍin mentions a Śaiva king Raṇavarma who judging from the way in which he is spoken of must be regarded as his contemporary and probably was Rājasimha Pallava who according to his inscriptions is known to have been a very devout Śaiva.⁴ Prof. M. Rangachariar has also quoted a tradition with reference to chapter v of Kavyādarśa⁵ that it was composed by Danḍin for giving lessons in rhetoric to a royal prince at Kāṇchipuram who in all probability was

¹ Mad. Ep. Coll., 566 of 1912. Also see Antiquities of Mahābalipuram, Ind. Ant. for 1917, p. 49 ff.
² In the Vēlurpālayam plates Rājasimha is recorded to have revived the ghaṭika of the twice-born. The nature of learning acquired at the Brahminical ghaṭika is described in the Kaśākkudi plates ii. 71 ff (S.I.I., vol. ii, p. 358).
³ Ch ii, p. 279.
⁴ Tēshāṁvaṁśeprāsūtāt-Ranarasikapūrōn-mardhanāt Ugradandat Subramanvakumāro Guha iva Paramādīśvarādātajannā.
Saktiśuṇānirvārggyotitabahunayaś Śaivasiddhāntamārggū.
Śrīmānandayalakāmaka kṣaṭa Sakalamatō dhārdharaḥ Pallavānām.
⁶ Ind. Ant., 1912, p. 90 ff.
Rājasimha’s son. All these references, taken along with the passage in Kāvyādarśa where Dandin illustrates a particular form of composition by a couplet which refers to the city of Kāñchi and its rulers the Pallavas and the evidence furnished by the recently-discovered Avantisundarikathā, make it clear that Dandin lived for a considerable period at the Pallava court in Kāñchipuram.

Whether the series of dramas published at Trivandrum as Bhaṣa’s, were really composed during the reign of Rājasimha it is not possible to say. But certain scholars hold that Svapnavāsavadatta and other works of the series were abridged editions of the works of Bhaṣa prepared for the staging of them before the court of a Pallava king, presumably Rājasimha from the colophons of these plays. These plays bear a close resemblance to Mattaviḷaśaprāhasana of Mahēndravarman I. The evidence available seems to favour the view that the Pallava rather than the Pāṇḍya court was responsible for the production of these plays, if these are not Bhaṣa’s own.

Paramēśvaravarman II, A.D. 700–710.—About the close of the first decade of the eighth century Rājasimha was succeeded on the Pallava throne by Paramēśvaravarman II. The reign of this sovereign appears to have been shortlived. The Vireṭṭāñēsvara temple inscription of this king is dated in the third year of his reign. The Kaśākkuḍī plates record of him that he ‘conquered the coquetish ways of the Kali age, that he led the way of policy, which had been prescribed by Dhishaṇa (Bṛhaspati) and that he protected the worlds.’

1 It is Rājasimha himself that appears to have been Ācharya Dandin’s pupil from the ślokas under reference if the altered reading proves to be correct. Ed.
3 ‘Nāsikyamadyāparītāḥ chaturvarṇavibhūṣhitā.
Āstikāchitpuriṣāyām-ashvatvaryāhavāyāntītāḥ.
Kav., iii, 144.

In commenting on this well-known enigma in Dandin’s work Tarupāvāchaspatsi explains it as meaning Kāñchi ruled over by Pallava kings. (Age of Dandin, Ind. Ant. for 1912, p. 91).

In the Vēḷūrpalayam plates he is described as the chastiser of the Kāli and that he governed according to the laws of Manu.\textsuperscript{1} As we have no inscription dated in the years subsequent to his third regnal year we may presume that his reign was very short.

\textsuperscript{1} \textit{Verse 14, S.I.I.,} vol. ii, part v, p. 511.
CHAPTER VIII

DYNASTIC REVOLUTION. HIRANYAVARMAN AND HIS SUCCESSOR PALLAVAMALLA
HIRANYAVARMAN I

THE Kaśākkūḍi plates of Nandivarman Pallavamalla pass on from Paramēśvaravarman II to Nandivarman, the descendant of Bhīmavarman, thereby suggesting that the Pallava throne passed into the hands of Nandivarman II immediately after Paramēśvaravarman II. The circumstances that led to a change in the family are not stated. According to the Udayēndiram plates it appears that Paramēśvaravarman II left a young prince called Chitramāya whose cause was espoused by the Dramila princes. The recently-discovered Kūṟangūḍi plates dated in the sixty-first year of Nandivarman II Pallavamalla, mention after Virakūrcha and others one Hiraṇyaavarman who is said to have ruled as king. The Vēḻurpālayam plates do not mention this fact. But the Tanḍantōṭṭam plates¹ record of him that he was born for the good of the world and that he made his enemies settle in forests and was the asylum of those who eagerly desired protection. His place in the Pallava family may be indicated in the following table:

Simhavarman

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Simhavarman</th>
<th>Bhīmavarman</th>
<th>Buddhavarman</th>
<th>Ādityavarman</th>
<th>Govindavarman</th>
<th>Hiraṇya I</th>
<th>Nandivarman II</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Mahēndravarman</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Paramēśvara II

| Chitramāya |

15
Sculptures in the Vaikunṭhapurumāḷ Temple at Kāṇchi.—The sculptures inside the Vaikunṭhapurumāḷ temple at Kāṇchi puram throw some light upon the history of this period. The original sculptures were considerably mutilated, but the temple authorities have tried to repair them with brick and mortar. The explanatory notes have not been filled in completely but are found on a small portion of the south verandah and explain thirteen compartments of the upper row of sculptures. The first of these notes refers to the death of Paramēśvararvarman of the Pallava family which was descended from the God Brahma and mentions the ministers, the Ghaṭikaiyār, the Mūlaprakṛti and Hiranyavarman Mahārāja. It is partially damaged but ends with the word 'place'. The second compartment ends with the words enru sonna idam, 'the place where he said that'. The fourth mentions Śrīmallā, Raṇamallā, Sangrāmamallā, and Pāllavamallā as Hiranyavarman's four sons and ends with the words 'Paramēśvaran nand pōven enru toluduniṇa idam', 'the place where Paramēśvara stood in a worshipping posture saying he would go'. Then Hiranyavarma Mahārāja and Dharanikondaposar are mentioned; also the Nagarattār i.e., the citizens of Kāṇchi puram, the Mūlaprakṛti and the Kāṭaka-Muttarayar. Mention is also made of the coronation (Abhishēka) of young Pāllavamallā under the style Nandivarman.

The Probable Interpretation of the Sculptures.—The sculptural representations in these panels taken along with the information contained in the Kaśākkuḍi plates help us to establish that there was a change of dynasty on the death of Paramēśvaravarman, and that Nandivarman II, till then named Paramēśvaran Pāllavamallā was chosen to occupy the Pallava throne by the people. In this enterprise Nandivarman II appears to have received considerable help from Hiranyavarman I, and his trustworthy general Udayachandra whose exploits for the cause of his master are described in detail in the Udayēndiram plates. The Kaśākkuḍi plates dated in the twenty-second year of this king records the important fact that 'he was chosen by his subjects'. The sculptures at the Vaikunṭhaparamāḷ temple have been interpreted as indicating a general election to the Pallava throne on the death of Paramēśvaravarman II. 'The Kaśākkuḍī plates' of Pallava king Nandivarman Pallavamalla tell us, that, after the death of Paramēśvaravarman II, Nandivarman, son of Hiraṇyavarman, was chosen by his subjects. It may therefore be concluded that this part of the sculptures were intended to represent the various events connected with the succession of Nandivarman who might be the prince referred to in the notes as Pallavamalla. As the Vaikunṭhaparamāḷ temple was called Paramēśvaraviṇṇagaram, very probably after the Pallava king Nandivarman Pallavamalla called also Paramēśvaravarman it may be supposed that both the sculptures and the explanatory notes accompanying them were cut out soon after the temple itself was built.'

1 The actual text has been published in S.I.I., vol. iv, pp. 10-12.
2 Ibid.

It would be more accurate to consider that the sculptures at the Vaikunṭhaparamāḷ temple at Kāṉchipuram taken as a whole represent the whole history of the Pallava family rather than the immediate events connected with the accession of Nandivarman Pallavamalla about the beginning of the eighth century. It is well known that the explanatory notes have not been filled in completely for all the long series of bas-reliefs of which only a small number could be interpreted with the help of inscriptions. It is therefore incorrect to regard all these sculptures as being connected with only the immediate events relating to the accession of Nandivarman II. If we examine the sculptures from the commencement, almost from the first panel which presents Vishnu, to the following which represent Brahma, Angirasa, Bṛhaspati, Bhāradvāja, Drōṇa and Aśvatthāman, the birth of Pallava, is found to be graphically represented while the rest illustrate and continue the family history.

2 Paramēśvaran Pallavamalla was the name and Nandivarman was the title of Nandivarman Pallavamalla. See S.I.I., vol. iv, No. 135, p. 11
3 Para 2 of M.E.R. for 1906.
Then again it is not necessary to infer that Paramēśvaravarman II should have been either deposed or forced to retire from the throne. The inscription here requires to be thoroughly re-interpreted. The correct explanation of the scene is the selection of Nandivarman Pallavamalla, then called Paramēśvaravarman Pallavamalla, to the throne from among the four sons of Hiranyavarman. The details (See footnote below) furnished in the descriptive labels fully confirm the statement in the Kaśakkuḍi plates that he was raised to the throne by the general approval of the citizens and thoroughly falsify the usurpation theory put forward by some writers.

The Position of Hiranyavarman.—The only difficulty still facing us is with reference to Hiranyavarman who is described in the newly-discovered copper-plates from Koppungudi as having actually ruled as king. The Tanḍantōṭṭam plates make a glowing reference to him and describe his stirring prowess in the field of battle, giving the impression that he was a ruling sovereign of Kāṇchi. The Vēlürpālayam plates and the

---

1 It has been generally supposed that Nandivarman Pallavamalla usurped the Pallava throne soon after Paramēśvaravarman II. This is not at all supported by the evidence furnished by the Vaikunṭhaparumāl temple sculptures which represent the events that took place immediately after the death of Paramēśvaravarman II leading to the accession of Pallavamalla. The inscriptive evidence has been translated thus in the Epig. Indica: After the death of Paramēśvaravarman II, a deputation consisting of the Matras, the Malapraṇitis and the Ghalakayar waited on Hiranyavarman-Maharaja and represented the fact that the country was without a ruler and requested him to grant them a sovereign. Thereupon king Hiranyavarman sent for the chief potentates (Kūlamullar) and enquired which among them would accept the sovereignty. All of them refusing, he asked his sons Srimalla, Ranamalla, Sāngrāmamalla and Pallavamalla. Pallavamalla humbly offered to go, but king Hiranyavarman was at first unwilling to risk his son, who was then only twelve years of age, in such a perilous undertaking. But Hiranyavarman was soon persuaded by Daraṇikondapōsar to give his consent. Receiving the weapons presented to him both by his father and Daraṇikondapōsār, Pallavamalla proceeded to Kāṇchipuram, crossing on his way several hills, rivers and forests. Hearing of his approach a certain Pallavād-Aralyar came with a large force, and placed him on an elephant’s back and returned to the city where he was received by the feudatory chiefs, the members of the merchants’ guild, the mulapraṇītis, and Kadakkamuttārāiyar. He was then crowned king under the name Nandivarman and with the insignia of Videlvedugu, Samudrargbhōsha, Khatavāngadaveya and Vṛishabhā lanchhana by the ministers’ feudatories, the ghalakayar and the ubbhaya-gāna. Epig. Ind., vol. xviii, p. 117.

Bähūr plates omit his name altogether. There cannot be any doubt that Hiranyavarman mentioned in the Kaśākkudī \(^1\) plates as the immediate ancestor of Nandivarman II and the sixth descendant of Bhīmavarman, the brother of Simhavishṇu, is the same as the Hiranyavarman figuring in the Tanḍantōṭṭam plates\(^2\) as well as the bas-reliefs in the Vaikunṭhaparamāl temple just mentioned. According to Mr. Krishna Sastri, this Hiranyavarman was really Dantivarman, the son of Nandivarman II and the Tanḍantōṭṭam plates belonging to Nandivarman III, the son of Dantivarman, the donor of the Vēlūrpālayam plates. He observes \(^3\):

'The first plate of the preserved portion begins by referring to a king who conquered the south and states that a certain Hiranyavarman was born again "for the welfare of the world" . . . . The father of Vijayanandivikramavarman is here stated to have been Hiranyavarman; while the father of Vijayanandivikramavarman is here stated to have been Hiranyavarman; while the father of Vijayanandivikramavarman according to the Vēlūrpālayam plates was Dantivarman. If the proposed identity of Vijayanandivikramavarman with Vijayanandivarman is accepted, the apparent discrepancy in the name of the father could be explained. The statement that Hiranyavarman was born again, evidently indicates a second king of that name and we may suppose that Dantivarman, the father of Vijayanandivikramavarman, was also called Hiranyavarman like his grandfather Hiranyavarman I, the father of Nandivarman Pallavamalla. If the foregoing surmises are confirmed by future researches the Tanḍantōṭṭam grant would be fifty-two years later than the Vēlūrpālayam grants of the same king.'

There arise, however, many difficulties in accepting this view and regarding that the Hiranyavarman of the Tanḍantōṭṭam plates is the same as Dantivarman, the son of Nandivarman Pallavamalla. For one thing there is no evidence that Dantivarman had the surname Hiranyaavarman as is supposed by Mr. Krishna Sastri. In the second place \textit{Ekadhira}, a surname that occurs in the Tandantottam plates for Nandivarman II, also occurs in the Kasakkuudi plates of the same king thus proving that the donor of this grant was the same as the grant of Kasakkuudi. The palaeography of these plates (Tandantottam) is according to scholars much too archaic to be assigned to the middle of the ninth century A.D. and really belongs to the middle of the eighth century,\footnote{Jouveau-Dubreuil, \textit{Pallavas}, p. 61.} and are akin to the Kasakkuudi plates. The objection to the high regnal year usually given for Nandivarman II by the epigraphists cannot be considered valid any longer as he is known to have succeeded to the throne in his twelfth year\footnote{\textit{S.I.I.}, vol. iv, No. 135.} and as we have inscriptions and copper-plates of this sovereign dated in the forty-seventh, fiftieth, fifty-second, sixty-first, sixty-second and sixty-fifth years of his reign. Again the Tandantottam plates describe Nandivarman II as a devout worshipper of Vishnu, and this is in perfect accordance with all facts known about him and we cannot therefore imagine that he was also a devout worshipper of Siva as the donor of the Velupalayam plates is said to have been. It is therefore very probable that Hiranyaavarman mentioned in the Tandantottam as well as in the Korragudi plates, dated in the sixty-first regnal year of Nandivarman II is identical with Hiranyaavarman I, the father of Nandivarman II. Whether Hiranyaarma Maharaaja was an independent ruler of Kaanchi as hinted in the Korragudi plates and whether he ruled for a long time, cannot be ascertained in the present state of our knowledge. It looks very probable that during Paramesvaravarman II's reign he wielded considerable power and was possibly placed in charge of a part of the Pallava dominions. The death of this ruler gave him an opportunity to install his son who was very young at the time of his accession as a ruler of Conjeevaram, and who reigned for an exceptionally long period as seen from inscriptions dated in the sixty-fifth year of his reign.\footnote{\textit{Ep. Coll.}, No. 666 of 1922.} Reign of Nandivarman II Pallavamalla, circa A.D. 710 to 775.—Let us first take up the duration of the reign. There is considerable difference of opinion as to the exact period of his reign. Certain scholars, including the officers of the Epigraphical Department¹ do not believe that Nandivarman Pallavamalla had anything like a length of reign indicated by the Tandantottam and Korarangudi plates, and the inscriptions of Tiruvallam and Seven Pagodas all of which they wrongly assigned to Nandivarman III. It will be recollected that the Tiruvallam record is dated is the sixty-second year and that the inscription discovered at the Seven Pagodas² is dated in the sixty-fifth year of Nandivarman. So far as we know this is the longest reign in the Pallava family and this is all the more remarkable because it was followed by another long reign namely that of Dantivarman, one of whose inscriptions is dated in the fifty-first year of his reign,³ the two reigns together covering 116⁴ years. The officers of the Epigraphical Department however have been continuously attributing the high regnal years to Nandivarman III⁵ son of Dantivarman for reasons not altogether convincing or clear. Even in the Epigraphy Report for 1922-23 we come across with the following remarks:—

\(^{1}\) Vide ante S.I.I., vol. ii, p. 520.
\(^{2}\) Ibid.

‘From the high regnal years given in the lithic regards⁶ of Mahabalipuram and in this copper-plate (Korarangudi plates) grant, the kings Nandipotavarman and Ko-Vijaya Nandi-

¹ It is very unlikely, observes H. Krishna Sastri in Mad. Epig. Rep. for 1912 ‘that a usurper like Pallavamalla with so many enemies to oppose and disturb his peaceful rule, could have continued to occupy the Pallava throne for so long a period as 50 years. His latest sure date, however, must be the 22nd year in which the Kasakkudi plates were issued.’ This is generally based on the assumption that no stone inscriptions hitherto discovered should be attributed to Nandivarman Pallavamalla. Mr. K. V. Subramanya Aiyar definitely opposed this view as early as 1917 in his Historical Sketches of Ancient Dekhan (p. 49) and the discoveries of subsequent records as well as the fresh interpretation of the Vaikuntha-perumal inscriptions above referred to have amply proved the correctness of his inference. He has discussed the matter in detail in the Epig. Ind., vol. xviii, pp. 116-117, while editing the Patastatamangalam grant of Nandivarman.
⁵ No. 666 of App. B.
vikramavarman mentioned in them respectively must be identical with Kovijaya Nandivikramavarman (Nandivarman III) of the Tanantottam plates and the Tiruvallam rock inscription.\textsuperscript{11} But some of the exploits recorded of this king in this record, conquest over the Vallabha, Kalabhra, Kærala, Pændya, Chóla, Tuluva and Konkaña as well as the invocation to Vishnu in the commencement of the record militates strongly against the view which attributes this record to Nandivarman III whose sole achievements that we know of were the series of victories ending with that at Tellâru mentioned frequently in his inscriptions. It is therefore probable more especially as Nandivarman II is described to have followed Hiranyakavarman that this record belongs to Nandivarman II.\textsuperscript{2} The duration of his reign may therefore be definitely taken as not less than sixty-five years so far as present epigraphic evidence goes and that Nandivarman Pallavamalla lived at least to the age of seventy-seven.

\textit{Events of His Reign.}—The most important events of his reign may be ascertained from his own copper-plates of which we have no less than four (viz.) the Kaäkkkudi plates dated in the twenty-second year of his reign, the Udayenârâm plates dated in the twenty-first year of his reign, the Tanantottam and the Kórranguđi plates dated in the fifty-eighth and the sixty-first years of his reign. Of these the Udayenârâm record gives valuable information regarding the military achievements of this period while the Kaäkkkudi and the Kórranguđi plates furnish details of his personal accomplishments and the culture of the period. The contemporary records such as the Kailasanâtha temple inscription of Vikramâditya II, at Kâñchipuram the Vakkalëri plates of Kirtivarman, the Këndür plates, as well as the Pændya records from Velvikkudi and Sinnamanûr throw some light on the relations that subsisted between these powers and the Pallava king. The Vakkalëri plates\textsuperscript{3} in particular furnish detailed information relating to the invasion of Kāñchi by the Chālukyan emperor Vikramāditya II and his exploits there.

\textsuperscript{1}M.E.R., 1902-3, p. 95. \textsuperscript{2} Note by Editor. \textsuperscript{3} Ind. Ant., vol. viii, p. 23.

The Chālukyan Invasion of Kāñchi.—The Pallava-Chālukya wars which had been lost sight of since the days of Narasimhabarman I, the Mahāmalla, appear to have been once more renewed. The Kēndūr plates of Vikramāditya II describe an actual invasion into the Pallava dominions (Tundākarāṣṭra) and the capture of the city in somewhat graphic terms:—Being resolved to uproot completely his natural enemy (prakṛti-āmitra) Vikramāditya II (A.D. 733 to 746) reached Tunḍāka-Vishaya, 'beat and put to flight, at the opening of the campaign, the opposing Pallava king named Nandipōta-varman, took possession of particular musical instruments called Kaṭumukhavāditra,1 the Samudraghosa, the khatvāṅkhadvaja, many excellent and well-known intoxicated elephants and a heap of rubies which dispelled darkness by the brilliancy of the multitude of their rays... entered without destroying the city of Kāñchi, which was as it were a girdle adorning yonder lady, the region of the south... rejoiced the Brāhmaṇas, and poor and helpless people by his uninterrupted liberality... acquired high merit by restoring heaps of gold to the stone temple of Rājasimhēśvara, and other gods which have been caused to be built by Narasimhapotavarman... distressed by the Pāṇḍya, Chōla, Kēraḷa, Kaḷabhra and other kings... 12

The above extract from the Kēndūr plates distinctly makes it clear that Vikramāditya II actually captured the city of Kāñchi from the Pallava king Nandipotavarman, that is, Nandivarman Pallavamalla, and occupied it for a period of time during which he endowed some of its temples with grants. This occupation of the Pallava capital by Vikramāditya is further confirmed by the discovery of a Kanarese inscription of Vikramāditya engraved on one of the pillars of 1 These are alluded to in the hymns of Tirumāṅgai Āḻvār in the Paramēśvaravainupagaram verses in expressions which are literal translations in Tamil of the Sanskrit names of the war instruments. They also figure in the mutilated inscriptions at the Vaikunṭhaparamāḻ temple, Kāñchipuram.

---

2 Eph. Ind., vol. ix, p. 205.
the mandapa in front of the Rājasimhēśvara shrine. This inscription which has been published\(^1\) by Dr. Hultsch records the fact that Vikramāditya Satyāśraya, after his conquest of Kāñchi, did not confiscate the property of Rājasimhēśvara temple, but granted large sums to the same, and ends with an imprecation. The Chālukyan attack on Kāñchi was therefore apparently different in character from the raid of the Pallava king Narasimhavarman I on Vātāpi which involved much destruction if the Periyapurānam account\(^2\) is to be believed.

When did this expedition on Kāñchi start? Though no definite answer is possible it is presumable that this took place in the earlier half of Nandivarman's reign, in all probability between A.D. 733 to 746, when the Pallava king was preoccupied with wars against the southern powers.\(^3\) In any case the occupation of the city by the Chālukyan army does not appear to have lasted for any considerable period. Nandivarman II was not slow in summoning his forces, to drive out the foreign invader from Kāñchipuram. How this was brought about and when it was brought about are not clearly known. Whether the achievement was effected by the single-handed efforts of his own generals unaided by a coalition of other powers of the Tamil land, it is not also possible to say. It is however clear that Nandivarman Pallavamalla recaptured Kāñchi, and continued to carry on the administration undismayed by the Chālukya invasion that took place. It is a mistake to suppose that the Chālukyan invasions in the reign of Pallavamalla either exhausted the resources, or cut short his reign. On the other hand in spite of the rude shocks that the raids of Vikramāditya and Kirtivarman must have caused, Nandivarman II continued in power as ruler of Kāñchi for the unusually long period of \(^1\) Ep. Ind., vol. iii, p. 359. Vide App. A.

\(^2\) Periyapurānam, Siruttōnādayar Purānam, v. 6.
\(^3\) This is confirmed by the presence of an inscription of Vikramāditya (II) in the Kailasanātha temple which records that Vikramāditya after his conquest of Kāñchi did not confiscate the property of the Rājasimhēśvara temple but enriched it by granting large sums of gold. (Ep. Ind., vol. iii, p. 359). Similarly the Vakkalēri plates also make reference to this event (Ind. Ant., vol. viii, p. 23).
sixty-five years as we may safely ascribe the inscription recently discovered at the Seven Pagodas to him.

Other Campaigns of Pallavamalla.—The reign of Nandivarman II appears to have been almost literally crowded with military engagements, sieges, invasions, and counter invasions. It has already been noticed that the Western Chalukya invasion of Kāñchi which probably took place early in his reign resulted in the capture of the city by the enemies. The southern campaigns may now be noticed. Although the causes that brought about the conflict with the powers of the south especially the Pāṇḍyas of this period are by no means clear it may be surmised that the southern powers who were somehow dissatisfied with the accession of Pallavamalla to the throne of Kāñchi, in supersession of the regular family, now espoused the cause of Chitramāya a young prince who presumably had some claims by descent from Paramēśvaravarman II. This involved Nandivarman II in a long and deadly campaign against the Dramila (Tamil) powers. In this campaign he seems to have received valuable help from his trusted general Udayachandra, the lord of Villivala, whose services are enumerated in the Udayēndiram plates dated in the twenty-first year of his reign. The victories enumerated in the Vēļvikkuḍi and Sinnamanūr plates for Arikēsari-Parānkūsa-Māravarman at Neḍuvaval, Kurumadai, Maṇṅikurichchi, Koḍumbalūr, Pūvalūr, Tirumangai, Kuluniūr, and Šankaramangai probably form part of the campaign of Pallavamalla and assigned to this period. Some of these battles such as those of Maṇṅai, Neḍuvaval, Nenmali, etc., are referred to in the Paramēśvaravinīgaram hymns of Tirumaṅgai Āḻvār. Many of these places also occur among the examples quoted in the commentary upon the Tamil work

1 Ins. No. 666 of 1922. This inscription is wrongly ascribed to Nandivarman III in M. R. 1923. The reference in (verse 7) the Patattamangalam grant of Nandivarman II that he ruled as king while yet very young and the statement in the Vaikurṭhaiperunāḷ temple inscriptions that the prince was twelve years old at the time of coronation confirm the longevity of this reign.

2 Raid on the south by Vinayāditya, son of Vikramāditya.

3 Per. Tir. ii, 9.
Iraiyanar-Ahapporu which also mentions many other places not mentioned in the inscriptive records Koṭṭāru, Nāraiyāru, Viḷiṇam, etc.

Siege of Nandipura.—One of the most important of the achievements of Udayachandra whose exploits are enumerated in the Udayēndiram plates was the release of Nandivarman II from the fortified town of Nandipura which was besieged by his enemies the Tamil kings. Nandipura which is identical with Nandipuravinnagaram of Tirumaṅgai Ālvār is situated not far from the modern town of Kumbhakonam, and is now-a-days known as Nāthan-Kovil. During the later Pallava age especially in the eighth century, this place appears to have served as the seat of Pallava power in the southern districts, and was presumably fortified. It is noteworthy that the hymns to this shrine of Tirumaṅgai Ālvār, who was a contemporary of Pallavamalla, have a clear reference to Nandivarman. The circumstances that led to the siege of this place by the southern powers are not clear. But it has been presumed that the Tamil powers joined together in a great coalition espousing the cause of Chitramāya, the Pallava prince, and attacked Pallavamalla at a time when he had been staying at Nandipura. The circumstances relating to the release, and list of the other battles are described in the Udayēndiram plates.

Udayachandra’s Exploits.—Udayachandra is described in the record as the lord of the River Vēgavati, and of the city Viḷvala, the ornament of the whole world. Born of the race of Pūchan, which had been in the uninterrupted hereditary service of the Pallava race . . . ‘when he perceived that Pallavamalla was besieged in Nandipura by the Dramila

1 ll. 37 to 62.

2 See Nandipuravinnagaratikam, Per. Tiru., v. 10.
3 Identified with Viḷvalanagara-viḷivalam in the Chingleput District.
princes, unable to bear this, like the visible death of the crowd of enemies of Pallavamalla, (he) slew with (his) sharp sword which glittered like a petal of water-lily, the Pallava king Chitramāya and others; he defeated the hostile army on the battle-fields of Nimbavana Chūtavana, Śankaragrāma, Nellūr, Nelvēli, Sūravalundur, and so forth, and thus bestowed the whole kingdom many times on the Pallava. . . . He split the opposing Śabar king called Udayana, in the terrible battle of Nelvēli, which could hardly be entered by a common man, and seized his mirror banner made of a peacock’s tail; who in the northern region also, pursued the Nishada chief, called Prithivi-Vyāgra who desiring to become very powerful was running after the horse of the Asvameśha, defeated him and ordered him out of the district of Vishnurāja, which he subjected to the Pallava, and seized faultless pearl necklaces of excellent lustre, an immesurable heap of gold, and elephants; and he destroyed the fort of Kālidurga, which was protected by the Goddess Kāli, and defeated the Pāṇḍya army at the village of Maṇṇaikudī. 1

Among the localities mentioned wherein Udayachandra achieved victories for his master occurs, Nellore which is identical with the headquarter station of the modern Nellore District. Nelvēli is probably identical with Nenmali mentioned by Tirumangai Āḻvār in his Periya-Tirumoli. 2 It is identified by Dr. Hultzsch with modern Tinnevelly. If the Śabarās are identical with the modern Sauras of the Ganjam and Vizagapatam District it would not be correct to identify Nelvēli where the Śabar king is said to have been killed (I. 52) with Tinnevelly. It is therefore to be identified with some other place on the border of the Telugu districts. We may identify the Vishnurāja with the Eastern Chāḷukya king Vishnuvardhana III who was a contemporary Vikramāditya II. The Śankaragrāma mentioned in the Udayēndiram plates has been identified with Sankaramangai mentioned in the larger 2 Sankaramangai or Sankaramangal, Rājaviṃśātā-viśwāntara—ii, 9, 8.

Śinmananūr plates, while Maṇṇaikuḍi is identical probably with the Maṇṇikurichi of the Velvikuḍi plates where Kō-Śadaiyan claims a victory over the Pallavas. Maṇṇaikuḍi may be identified with the village of Maṇṇakuḍi in the Arantangi Taluk of the Tanjore District. The battle-fields of Nimbavana, Chūtavana and Śankarāgrāma may be similarly identified with Veppangādu, Kovilūr (Tiruvuṭṭāram of the Tēvaram) and Sankaranārkudikādu.¹ The region in and around these places in the Tanjore District appears to have figured largely in the campaigns of the Pallavas against the Pāṇḍyas, and are evidently alluded to in the hymns of Tirumāṅgai Āḻvār, in the Paramēśvaravinnagarapattikam.

One of the references in the Udayēndiram plates, namely, the Aśvamedha horse which was detained by Prithivi-Vyāgra has been interpreted as containing a reference that Nandivarman Pallavamalla performed an Aśvamedha sacrifice² to celebrate his supremacy.

Rāṣṭrakūṭa Invasions on Kāṇchi.—The Rāṣṭrakūṭa kings who were contemporary with Nandivarman Pallavamalla claim victories over the Pallavas and their city. The Kaḍaba plates³ distinctly mention Vayiramēga as a surname of Dantidurga Rāṣṭrakūṭa. Now, Vayiramēga is mentioned in Tirumāṅgai Āḻvār’s hymns on the deity of Ashtabhuja in Kāṇchipuram along with the local ruler of Kāṇchi.⁴ The verse under consideration has reference to two rulers, the local Pallava ruler of Kāṇchi and the foreign Rāṣṭrakūṭa ruler Vayiramēga in occupation of Kāṇchi just then. The conquest of Kāñchi is also alluded to in the Ellora inscription as well as in the Bagumra plates\(^1\) of Govinda III from which we learn that Dantidurga first reduced the lowermost (southern) country, then turned his enemies to Madhyadēśa and finally conquered the city of Kāñchi.\(^2\) From the Vēlūr-pālāyaṃ plates we learn that Nandivarman Pallavamalla’s queen was called Rēva and that his son was called Dantivarman. From this it has been conjectured that there was soon after the invasions of Kāñchi by Dantidurga a marriage alliance\(^3\) between the Pallava king and the daughter of Dantidurga, and the son born to the Rāṣṭrakūṭa princess was called Dantivarman after the maternal grandfather. This Rāṣṭrakūṭa-Pallava pact does not appear to have prevented Govinda III from leading another invasion on the Pallava capital and levying tribute from Dantiga of Kāñchi.\(^4\)

¹ Sen-Tam., vol. xxii, pp. 10, 11.
² 1. 56, Udayēndiram plates. P. T. Srinivasa Aiyangar’s Pallavas. There are no independent references in the published records to prove that Pallavamalla performed an Aśvamedha sacrifice. The reference to this sacrifice in the Udayēndiram plates does not specify that it was performed by this Pallava King.

Expedition against the Gangas.—The military exploits of Nandivarman II thus appear to have filled every part of his reign and almost all contemporary dynasties of the day seem to have come into hostile contact with him. To these powers, the Pāṇḍyas, the Rāṣṭrakūṭas, the eastern Chālukyas, the western Chālukyas, may be added the Gangas. What led to the conflict with the Gangas is not clearly stated, but verse 6 of the Tanḍantōṭṭam plates make a specific reference to the fact that Nandivarman took away a neck ornament from which contained in it the gem called Ugrōdaya.\(^5\) Although the name of the Ganga king is not mentioned, it may be presumed that he must have been either Śivamara or Śripurusha. As the earlier plates dated in the twenty-first and twenty-second years of his reign do not specify this detail this achievement probably took place in the later half of his reign.

Religious Leanings.—The religious leanings of Nandivarman Pallavamalla were towards Vaishṇavism. His celebrated

---

3. Vēlūrpālāyam plates, verse 18.
contemporary seems to allude to his worshipful attitude in the present tense in his hymn on the God of Ashtabhuja at Kāṇchī. His copper-plates describe him as never accustomed to bowing 'excepting to the pair of worshipful feet of Mukunda' (Vishnu)¹ as worshipping the feet of Hari.² The newly-found plates of Koṟṟanguḍi devote several invocatory verses to Vishnu (verses 1 and 2). The unnamed Pallava king who is mentioned by Tirumaṅgai Ąlvar as having worshipped at Śrīrangam is presumably Nandivarman Pallavamalla³ as also the king called Nandi in the Nandipuravinnaga-rapatikam.

State of Learning during Nandivarman's Reign.—The copper-plates of this and following period give excellent glimpses into the nature of learning during this period as well as of government, etc. The donees enumerated in the Kaṣākkudi plates and the Taṇḍantōṭtam plates numbering several

¹ Verse 12, Taṇḍantōṭtam plates. Ibid.
² Verse 30, Kaṣākkudi plates. Ibid.
³ Other details of the king in somewhat exaggerated terms are also available from this copper-plate grants. Some interesting personal accomplishments and qualities are furnished in the praśasti portion of the Kaṣākkudi grant composed by Trivikrama. In verse 29 we read:—'This Śrīdharā (Pallavamalla) resembles Vijaya in battle, Karṇiṣuta, in acquaintance with the arts, Ṛāma in archery, the king of Vatsa with reference to the science of elephants and to music, Kāma in the opinion of women, the first poet (Vālmiki) in the composition of poetry, the master of policy (Brhaspati) himself in suggesting expedients, and (Dharma) Yudhishṭhira in delighting the subjects.' Verse 2 of the Taṇḍantōṭtam plates say of him:—'From him (Hiranyavarman) was born the wise and the prosperous king called Nandivarman who was the home of prowess and conqueror of the hoards of his enemies, whose victorious elephant reached almost the shores of the four oceans, whose fame extended to the four quarters and who was praised in battle for his knowledge in the use of all weapons. Verse 3 of the same record says, 'The only one of name Raja that did not bow to him was the dead-rayed moon and the only country in this world that did not pay tribute to him was that where no men exist. And while this king comparable to Indra was ruling the earth, there was nothing unapproachable by the people except perhaps the way leading to hell.'

'He is the lord of the circle of good people as Hari is the possessor of the powerful weapon Chakra, him the wise cling to as Gods to Sakra (Indra).

'He wore on his breast, as it were the lord of serpents, the bed of Achyuta dwelling near his heart a necklace, which he had snatched away from the Ganga king and in which was the gem called Ugrōdaya like the Kaustuba (verse 6).'} hundreds are many of them, if we may judge from their titles, masters of three and four Vedas of the six angas, etc. Of the 244 and odd names that are mentioned in the Tanḍantōṭṭam plates no less than a hundred were Chaturvēdis, 18 were Shaḍangavids, while there are several Kramavids, Bhaṭṭas and Trivēdis. The accomplishments of an average South Indian Brahman scholar in the field of Sanskrit learning during the eighth century may be gathered from the following description of the donee of the Kaśākkuḍi charter dated in the twenty-second year of Nandivarman II's reign the object of which was to register a gift of village to a Brahman scholar whose name was Jyeṣṭhopada Somayāji. The extract gives some idea of what the average Brahmanical educational curriculum consisted in those times:—

'While the twenty-second year of his reign was current, this Rājādhirāja-paramēśvara, the Mahārāja called Nandivarman, who is engaged in ruling the kingdom of Paramēśvarapōtārāja, . . . was himself pleased to give as a Brahmadēya, as requested by Brahmaśrīrāja . . . who just as Bṛhaspati is minister of Indra, the lord of heaven, is the chief minister of the handsome Nandin, the lord of the earth and the chief of the Pallavas, to Jyeṣṭhopada Somayājin, who has mastered the ocean-like Vedas, who chants the Śāman hymns which are pleasant on account of their melody (rasa); who has completed the rehearsal and the study of the six auxiliary works, namely, the ritual of the Veda, grammar, astronomy, etymology, phonetics and metrics; who knows the properties of words, sentences and subjects; who has drunk the elixir of the śrutī and smṛti; who is learned in the portion referring to rites (Karmakānda) and the portion referring to knowledge (Jñānakānda); who is skilled in the ways of the world and in the knowledge of the arts; who is versed in the poems, dramas, stories, epics and legends; in short who is skilled in all branches of (holy and profane) knowledge; who is expert in the performance of all rites; who is of good conduct; (who illumines) the world as a lamp does a house; who is courteous (in spite of) the honour paid to him and of noble birth; who is the only sun of the middle world, namely earth, because he has dispelled all ignorance or darkness; who is considered the best of fathers and grandfathers who ranks first among the twice born; who knows the Vedas; who conforms to the precepts of the Vedas; who follows the Chandogya-sūtra, who has performed Vājapēya and other sacrifices; who belongs to the Bhāradvāja-Gōtra; who resides at Puniya, an excellent settlement of Brāhmaṇas, in the Tunḍakarāśṭra; who is poor in sins, who is distinguished by his dress, who is a unique person; who cares for both worlds; who accomplishes the three objects of human life, who knows the four Vedas; whose chief objects are the five primary elements (Panchamahābhūta), who knows the six auxiliary works, who resembles the sun, who possesses good qualities and who is an excellent Brahman,—a whole village, the original name of which was Koḍukolli which on becoming a Brahmādēya received the new name of Ekadhiramangalam, in Undivanakōśṭhaka in the same rāṣṭra. . . .

Some Celebrities of the Period.—It has already been pointed out that the king himself like other royal members of the family was a scholar of considerable reputation and is compared to Kārṇīsuta for his acquaintance with arts and to Valmiki the first poet in the composition of poems (v. 28) while verse 4 of the Tandantōṭṭam plates record the fact that the learned people cling to him as the gods to Śakra. Among the Sanskrit poets of this period mentioned in the royal charters may be mentioned Paramēśvara, Uttara Karanika, and Trivikrama the composers of the prasasti in the Udayēndiram. Tandantōṭṭam and Kaśākkudi plates. The celebrated scholar and saint Tirumangai Āḻvār was his contemporary and is another product of the times reputed for his skill in dialectics and known as the master of four kinds of poetical compositions. (Chatushkavi, Nālukaviperumāl). His work in the Nalayiraprabhandam exceeds those of any other Vaishnava saint excepting that of Nammāḷvār and forms one of the most precious collections that have come down to us. His great regard for the Pallava family and individual Pallava kings and their services finds continuous mention in his hymns to an extent far greater than in the Tēvāram hymns, or other works by the Vaishnava Āḻvārś themselves. He was for some time a petty chieftain of Ālināṭu in the Chōlamandala before he became a devout Vaishnava saint. His contributions in the Nālāyiraprabhāndam are Periya-Tirumoṭi, Tirukurundandakam, Tirunedundandakam, Śiriyā-Tirumāḍal, Periya-Tirumāḍal, Tiruvelukkūṟirukkai.

Among the temples attributable to Nandivarman II may be mentioned the Kēsavaperumal temple at Kūram, the Muktēśvara temple at Kānchipuram, Viratījānēśvara at Tiruvadi and the Kunrānḍarkōvil at Pudukotta. The Vaikuntaperumal temple at Kānchī, the Paramēśvaravīṇnagaram of Tirumangai Āḻvār probably owes its origin to this king and named after his personal name which was Paramēśvaran. Extensive renovation works must have taken place in a large number of other temples, if we could judge from grants recorded to many of these.

The reign of Nandivarman Pallavamalla lasted for sixty-five years according to the inscription discovered recently at Mahabalipuram and covered the greater part of the eighth century. He was succeeded on his death by his son called Dantivarman through the Rāshtrakūṭa princess Rēva about A.D. 775. The notion that his reign was short having been distracted by continuous wars as a result of which his kingdom was much reduced now appears to be incorrect. The inscriptions so far discovered of his reign and that of his son have been found in regions as distant as Trichinopoly to Tirupati which probably comprised the extent of his dominions.

1 Ep. Coll. 666 of 1922.
CHAPTER IX

SUCCESSORS OF PALLAVAMALLA

It has already been pointed out that the newly discovered Inscription of Nandivarman at the Ādivarāha temple at Mahabalipuram dated in the sixty-fifth year probably represents the last year of Nandivarman Pallavamalla. If this is a genuine record the reign of this king must have come to a close about the year A.D. 775. For the succeeding period of a century and a quarter during which the Pallava power continued before the region comprised in their kingdom was annexed by the Chōlas, we come across with the names of a number of kings who, to judge from their names, must have been members of the Pallava family. Of these it is a little difficult to separate the lineal descendants of Nandivarman Pallavamalla from the rest. We have for instance stone inscriptions or copper-plate records for Dantivarman, Nandivarman, Nripatungavarman, Kampavarman, Īśvaravarman, Narasimhavarman, Vayiramēgavarman and Chandrāditya, all of whom are ascribable to this period (circa A.D. 800–900). The task of distinguishing these kings and assigning them to particular periods on the evidence of inscriptions has been rendered not a little difficult by the use of certain prefixes and affixes to names which have bewildered some scholars and led them to postulate strange theories. The most important of these is what is known as the ‘Ganga-Pallava theory’ which was adopted by the official epigraphists1 almost until recently. This may be illustrated by a specific example. The Pallava king Dantivarman who is known to have ruled for over fifty years and succeeded Nandivarman Pallavamalla figures in inscriptions as Dantivarma-Mahārāja, Dantivikramavarman, Dantipōṭtarasāra, Dantivarman of the Pallavatilakakula, and Ko-Vijaya-Dantivikramavarman. Similarly in the case of Nandivarman it is equally difficult as this name occurs in the inscriptions and copper-plate records in the following varieties:—Nandipōṭtarasāra, Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman, Nandivarman of the Bhāradvāja Gotra, the victorious Nandipōṭtararayar of Teḷḷāru and Danti-Nandivarman. The difficulty is also intensified as the inscriptions of these kings have been found not indistinctly separate localities but indiscriminately throughout the region of the Pallava kingdom. As none of these records is dated in the Śaka or any known era their date has to be determined independently by means of palaeography and other details noted in inscriptions.

The untenability of this theory is discussed by the late T. A. Gopinatha Rao in the Madras Christian College Magazine, vol. xxiv, pp. 530–9 and by Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil in his Pallavas, pp. 47–58.

The Probable Order of Succession.—It is well known that Tōṇḍamāṇḍalam was conquered by Āditya before the twenty-first year of his reign. It is also clear that Parāntaka I ascended the Chōla throne in the year A.D. 907.1 As the Brahmadeśam and Tirukalukkuṟṟam inscriptions are dated in the twenty-seventh year of Rājakēsariavarman, who is identical with Āditya I, it may be presumed that the first year of his reign was A.D. 880. One of his inscriptions in the North Arcot District in the twenty-first year of his reign which records a donation near Kālahasti shows that by A.D. 900 his empire had extended as far as Kālahasti thus covering the Pallava empire.2 The reigns of Dantivarman, Nandivarman, Nripatungavarman, Aparājita, Kampavarman and the other miscellaneous kings of the Pallava family whose inscriptions have been discovered in these regions have to be assigned to the period between about A.D. 900 and the last quarter of the eighth century when Pallavamalla ceased to rule. Omitting the reigns of the miscellaneous rulers like Kampavarman, Vayiramēghavaran, Kāṭṭirai, etc., we find that the total reigns of the others so far known comprise a period of roughly 118 years.\footnote{1}

1 Ins. 735 of 1905.

If the conquest of the Tonḍamaṇḍalam and the victory over Aparājīta recorded in the Tiruvālāṅgaḍu plates,\footnote{2} may be assigned to the year A.D. 893, we may, by calculating backwards, assign the above-mentioned kings to the following periods which is in complete accordance with the evidence obtainable from contemporary Pallava inscriptions and copper-plates.\footnote{3} The reigns of the Pallava kings named Vijaya Kampavarman, Narasimhavarman, etc., most probably overlapped those of the last two members above mentioned. The probabilities seem to be that towards the last quarter of the ninth century several members of the family began to rule their own small territories styling themselves kings, and these chiefs largely figure in the inscriptions that have come down to us along with the others.

\textit{Dantivarman (circa 775 to 826).—}We have ascertained the exact period of his accession to the throne of Kāṇchipuram by calculating back from the conquest of Tonḍamaṇḍalam by Āditya. We possess inscriptions for Dantivarman dated from the second year of his reign (No. 256 of 1922) to fifty-first year (No. 262 of 1904). His records have been found from Trichinopoly District in the south to Tiruchchānūr in the north. According to the Vēḻūṟpāḷayam plates (\textit{verse} 16) issued during the reign of his son Nandivarman III he was descended from Nandivarman Pallavamalla through Rēvā the Rāṣṭrākūṭa princess.\footnote{4} Rēvā is here described as the chief queen who

\begin{verbatim}
\begin{tabular}{lrr}
Dantivarman & ... & ... & 51 years. \\
Nandivarman (of Teḷḷar) & ... & ... & 23 \\
Nripatunga & ... & ... & 26 \\
Aparājīta & ... & ... & 18 \\ \hline
Total & ... & ... & 118 \\ \end{tabular} \end{verbatim}

\begin{verbatim}
\footnote{1} S.I.I., vol. iii, p. 396, verse 49. \\
\footnote{2} Dantivarman & ... & ... & 775-826 \\
Nandivarman III & ... & ... & 826-849 \\
Nripatungavarman & ... & ... & 849-875 \\
Aparājītavarman & ... & ... & 875-893 \\
\footnote{4} S.I.I., vol. ii, part 5, p. 501.} \end{verbatim}
'like the river Rēvā had her birth from a great king (from a high mountain).’\textsuperscript{1} Dantivarman is stated to be ‘a manifestation of the lotus-eyed Vishnu himself, who was the delight of the earth whose object was the protection of the three worlds and in whom the group of pure qualities such as prowess, charity, and gratitude, attained eminence, as it were, after a long time enjoying the pleasures of each other’s company.’\textsuperscript{2} From verse 18 we learn that Dantivarman married a Kadamba princess called Aggaḷanimmati described as the daughter of a Kadamba king—the crest-jewel of the Kadamba family. The name of this Kadamba king is not known. About the year A.D. 804 Govinda III, the Rāṣṭrakūṭa king, appears to have invaded Kāṇchi. A Rāṣṭrakūṭa grant, dated Thursday the fifth tiṣṭhi of the dark fortnight of the month of Vaiśāka of the year Subhānu, Śaka 726, expired, corresponding to Thursday, 4th April, A.D. 804, claims that Govinda III had conquered Dantiga, the ruler of Kāṇchi and levied tribute from him.\textsuperscript{3} The reasons prompting this Rāṣṭrakūṭa attack on Kāṇchi especially as Dantivarman the Pallava king was presumably a grandson of Dantidurga are not clear.

One of his Tamil inscriptions dated in the twelfth year of his reign has been discovered at the Pārthasarathi temple at Triplicane (Madras).\textsuperscript{4} This inscription consists of nineteen lines of Tamil prose and is on a stone close to the entrance of the garbhagṛha of the temple. Dantivarman is here described as ‘the ornament of the Pallava family’ and as belonging to the Bhāradvāja Gotra. The object of the inscription is to record a gift of land. It is clear from this record that the Triplicane temple which is mentioned also in the hymns of the first Āḻvārs, continued to flourish during this period. Tirumangai Āḻvār, one of the Vaishnava Āḻvārs, refers to this temple and the locality, and has recorded the important fact that a Pallava king constructed the temple.\textsuperscript{5}

\textsuperscript{1} \textit{Ibid.}, p. 508, vv. 16, 17. \textsuperscript{2} \textit{Ibid.}, p. 508, vv. 16, 17. \\
\textsuperscript{3} \textit{Ind. Ant.}, vol. xi, p. 127. \textsuperscript{4} \textit{Ep. Ind.}, vol. viii, p. 291. \\
\textsuperscript{5} This Pallava king referred to by Tirumangai Āḻvār was presumably an earlier king of Kāṇchi who preceded Dantivarman.
Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil argues,¹ from the fact that the inscription of Dantivarman ranging from the sixteenth year of his reign to the fifty-first year does not occur in any of the monuments found on the banks of the Kaveri while a dozen inscriptions of the Pândyan king Māran Śaḍaiyan are found in the same region, that Dantivarman temporarily lost a part of his dominions in the south owing to the incursions of the Pândyas. According to him Varaguṇa-Mahārāja led an invasion into the Pallava territory in the reign of Dantivarman. The Ambāsamudram inscription of the sixteenth year of this king is dated when this king was encamped in Araiṣūr on the banks of the Pennar. In the north, the Guḍimallam inscription shows that the Bāna king Vijayādityamāvalivānarāyar was a feudatory of Dantivarman. This record is dated in the forty-ninth year of Dantivarman.²

Nandivarman III (circa A. D. 826 to 849).—Dantivarman was succeeded on his death by his son Nandivarman III known in his inscriptions as Tēḷḷāṛrerinda Nandivarman, i.e. Nandivarman who defeated his enemies at Tēḷḷāru. According to the Vēḷūr-pālayam plates issued by this sovereign in his sixth year he is said to have, on the eve of his acquiring sovereignty, killed his enemies on the field of battle.³ In the picturesque words of this record 'Nandivarman puffed up with the prowess of his arms acquired the prosperity of Pallava kingdom not easy for others to obtain by killing his enemies on the battle-field which was laughing as it were with the pearls dropping from the frontal globes of elephants slain by his unsheathed sword.' A contemporary Tamil work is Nandikkaḷambakam. A short account of this work appeared in the Indian Antiquary (vol. 37, pp. 170–173). The text of the poem which has long been out of print was published in

¹ Pallavas, p. 77.
³ उपातिक्त्र निहत्तद्विपक्षमुक्तमुक्तकामप्रहसिते सुमनर्गणे यः। शब्दनिहि रुसयस्वदन्यथायं राज्यश्रियं सम्बन्धविक्रमदपरमान्तः।

v. 20.
1926 by Pandit V. Gopala Aiyar states that Nandivarman won a great victory against his enemies at the battle of Tellāru. In the light of the information obtained from his other stone inscriptions it becomes clear that this must be the battle referred to in the Vēlūrpāḷayam plates quoted above. It has already been mentioned that towards the close of Dantivarman’s reign the Pāñḍyan forces under Varaguna made considerable inroads into the Pallava empire and had reached as far north¹ into Tōṇḍamāṇḍalam as Araiśūr on the banks of the Pennar. By the time that Nandivarman III ascended the throne the forces of the opposing Pāñḍyan king must have reached near Tellāru not very distant from the Pallava capital when the forces of Nandivarman III inflicted a crushing defeat on them. Tellāru the site of the battle may be correctly identified with the village of Tellāru in the Wandiwash Taluk of North Arcot District.

Other Battles.—This victory against the Pāñḍyans gave him the title by which his inscriptions thereafter mention him, namely, Tellāṛrerinda Nandipōtarayar. The Tamil panegyric in addition to the battle of Tellāru² also refers to the other victories of Nandivarman such as those of Paḷayāru,³ Vellāru,⁴ Nallāru,⁵ and Kurugōḍu.⁶ This series of further campaigns were evidently directed against the Pāñḍyas themselves whom the Pallava king apparently pursued as they were retreating and inflicted defeats at Veḷḷāru, Paḷayāru, etc. One of the stanzas in the poem says that the Pallava army advanced as far as the banks of the Vaigai.⁷ If this is correct we may presume that Nandivarman III marched as far as the Pāñḍyan capital and defeated the Pāñḍyas thoroughly.

Light thrown by ‘Nandikkalambakam’.—This work makes it clear beyond doubt, that Nandivarman was a member of the ² Verses 28, 33, 38, 49, 52, 53, 71, 75, 79, 80, 85, 86 and 96. The numbers refer to those of a MS. Edn., the work with the author.

³ Verse 31.
⁴ Verses 23.
⁵ Verse 61.
⁶ Verses 2, 35 and 84.
⁷ St. 4 and 81.
Pallava family as it calls him Pallavarkon several times. The poem throws some light on the race of the Pallava family. Verse 39 refers to Nandivarman as 'Chandrakula-Prakasan' thus indicating that the Pallava family claimed their descent from the lunar race, a fact which is not however mentioned in any of the inscriptions. It is also clear from this work that Kanchipuram, Mallai (Mahabalipuram) and Mayilai (Mylapur) were the chief Pallava cities during this period. The sway over these places is associated with the name of Nandivarman III by such references as 'Mallai-Vendan', 'Mayilai-Kavalan'. In this work his rule is also associated with the region of the Kaveri (Kavirivallanadhan), the Kongu country, the Chera land, the western regions as well as the northern. Inscriptions found in the northern regions of Pallava kingdom such as those of the Bana king Vikramaditya clearly prove that his sway over the Banas was not merely a poetic boast but real.¹ This king appears to have indulged his fancy in the assumption of a large number of surnames. This Tamil work enumerates the following surnames of this sovereign 'Avani-Naranan', 'Videlvidugu', 'Ugrakopan', 'Kuvalaya-Martandhan', 'Manodaya', 'Varatungan', etc. Nandivarman III appears to have patronized the Tamil poets very largely as is evident from allusion to this in verses 104 and 107 of the work. The author of the Bhavata-Venba, Perundevanan, is taken to have flourished during his reign. The invocatory verses attached to the Udyogaparva of this work, which alone has come down to us, mentions the defeat inflicted by Nandivarman III on his enemies at Tellaruru.²

Some interesting details may be gathered from the copper-plates of this period regarding the king and his rule. Verse 14 of the Bahun plates says that Nandivarman III had for his queen a Rashtrakuta princess called Sankha 'who was kind to the people like a mother, was resplendent as Lakshmi incarnate.'

² Note by Editor.

Verse 21 of the Vēlūrpālayam plates says of his rule:
'Never shone so (thoroughly a garden with the advent of) spring, nor men of high birth with (good) qualities, nor women with morality, nor a millionaire with charity, nor humility with knowledge, nor a lotus tank with the sun, nor the expanse of the sky with the moon at the end of the rainy season, as the people of this earth shone with the king.'

From the same record we learn that Nandivarman III was a devout worshipper of Śiva¹ and this is corroborated by verse 97 of Nandikkalambakam.

Nripatungavarman (circa 849 to 875).—Nripatungavarman known also as Nripatungavikramavarman and Nripatungapōtarayar succeeded his father Nandivarman about A.D. 850. The resemblance of his name to the Rāṣṭrakūṭa Amogavarsha Nripatunga as well as the fact that his mother, the queen of Nandivarman III, is stated to be a Rāṣṭrakūṭa princess in the Bāhūr plates² would indicate that this king was a grandson on the mother's side from Amogavarsha. Nripatunga appears to have continued the campaigns against the Pāṇdyas who made inroads into the Pallava territory. The Bāhūr plates mention one of his victories on the banks of the Arichit (apparently a Sanskritized form of Ariśil) which has been identified with River Araśalār which flows near

¹ सुकुतमिदमज्ञःरक्षातेति व्यतिशास्त्रकल्पपतिकतेषुसोयमागे-

मिनो व: ||

हरचरणसौरोचरविछिद्रन मूष्ठ्रिमुकुठित करपश्रो वन्तो नन्दे-

² Ibid., vol. v, p. 515.
Kumbhakonam by the late Mr. T. A. Gopinatha Rao. His adversary at this battle was probably Varaguṇa’s son Śri-Māra Parachakra-Kolāhala who according to the Tamil portion of the Sinnamanur plates is described as having repulsed the Gangas, the Pallavas, the Chōlas, the Kalingas, and the Māgadhas who attacked him at Kuṭamukku, the name by which the modern town of Kumbhakonam was known in the period before the tenth century.

Extent of Empire.—The inscriptions of Nripatungavarman have been discovered all over the region from Pudukkota in the south to Guḍimallam in the north. From an inscription of the Bāna king at the latter place—Vidyādharā—we learn that Nripatunga’s sway was acknowledged by this Bāna chief. The Narthāmalai inscription of the Muṭṭaraiyan chief Śattan-Palīyili in the south who was one of Nripatunga’s vassals shows that the authority of this king extended to the region of Pudukkota. From the description contained in the Bāhūr plates that the glory of Nripatunga extended to other worlds as that of Rama, we may presume that here is an

यन्त्रादावित्स जीता पाण्ड्वों समरे पुरा।
पारेरविचित्रमाश्राद्दर रिपुसहितियम। || V. 29.

The translation of the late T. A. Gopinatha Rao which Prof. Jouveaudubreil follows requires to be reconsidered in view of an altered reading of the verse given in Dr. Hultsch’s of verse 16 (p. 50, Pallavas) text (Ep. Ind., vol. xvii, p. 10) in which the sixteenth verse reads as follows:—
Yatprasādā(r)jjitāsēnā PāṇḍyēnaSamarēpurā]
Pārērīchitsarājāgnīrddāhā ripusamhatim

We have here no reference to the defeat sustained (by the Pallavas) at the hands of the Pāṇḍyas referred to in Gopinatha Rao’s translation. Dr. Hultsch translates the verse thus:—Resembling fire, this king (Nripatunga) by whose favour the Pāṇḍya had obtained an army formerly burnt a confederation of enemies on the further bank of the Arichit river. The supply of an army by Nripatunga to the Pāṇḍyan king, if the reading is correct, will necessitate a revision of our present views of the relationship of the Pallavas and Pāṇḍyas during this period.

3 M.E.R., 1907, pp. 63 ff.
3 Inscription No. 13 of 1908 dated in the reign of Mārau-Śadaiyan calls the place Tirukudamukku. The Tevaram hymnors also call the town Tirukudamukku.
4 No. 228 of 1903.
5 No. 365 of 1904.
allusion perhaps to an unrecorded invasion of Ceylon during his reign.¹

Educational Facilities.—A glimpse into the educational grants of the period is obtained from the Bāhūr plates² which were issued in the eighth year of this king. This record has for its object the registering of the gift of three villages—Chēṭṭupāk-kam, Iraipuṇaichēri and Vilāṅgāṭṭangaduvanūr to the Vedic college at the village of Bāhūr³ near Pondicheri in Aruvānāḍu. The grant was made by a member of the Pūsāli family and a descendant of the Kuru race (verse 18). This chief was the minister of Tungavarman, that is, Nripatunga who issued the necessary order for the grant of the villages (verse 21). The college at Bāhūr consisted of fourteen ganas, and was controlled by the learned men of the village, being organized and maintained by them. The fourteen ganas⁴ are presumably the fourteen divisions of learning and consisted of—the Vedas (4), the Angas (6), Mīmāṃsā (1), Nyāya (1), Purāṇa (1) and the Dharma-Sāstra (1).

Aparājitavarman (circa A.D. 875 to 883).—The order of succession after Nripatungavarman is not quite clear. According to the late Mr. Venkayya, Aparājita is the name of the son Nripatungavarman while T. A. Gopinatha Rao pro pounded the theory that the name Aparājita is merely another name for Nripatunga. In the inscriptions of this period we come across with several names such as Vijaya-Kampavarman, Vayiramēghavarman, Aparājitavarman and others. Of these we have inscriptions for Aparājitavarman ranging from the third to the eleventh years of his reign in the region around Madras mostly from Tiruvorriyūr and Satyavēdu. It is presumed that Kampavarman and Īśvaravarman as well as the other chiefs such as Vaiyiramēghan, whose inscriptions have been discovered at Kaveripäkkam, Uttaramallūr, Olakkur and other parts of Chengleput District enjoyed the rule of a part of the Pallava dominions along with Vaiyiramēghavvarman.

² This record which is now preserved in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris, has been recently re-edited with English translation and notes by the late Dr. E. Hultsch who also furnishes two diagrams indicating the position of the villages granted in the charter which are reproduced elsewhere in this work. A palm-leaf MS. of this copper-plate containing different readings is now with Dr. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar. Ep. Ind., vol. xviii, p. 5.
³ Vāhūr and some of the village names mentioned in the detailed description of the boundaries in the grant survive to the present day.

Two important events are known regarding Aparājīta. The first of these is the campaign against the Pāṇḍyas in which the Pallava king was allied with the Ganga king Prithivipathī. According to the Udayēndiram plates¹ which enumerate the military exploits of the West Ganga Prithivipathī I, he is described as 'having defeated by force the Pāṇḍya lord Varaguṇa at the head of a great battle of Śripurambiyā and having thus made his friend's title Aparājīta (the unconquered) significant, this hero entered heaven by sacrificing his own life.' We may identify Varaguṇa with the Pāṇḍya king of that name, Varaguṇa II, for whom we have a date for accession to the throne, namely, A.D. 862–863. The place of the battle Śripurambiyā has been identified by Dr. Hultsch² with Tirupurambiyām near Kumbhakonam. 'How the Western Ganga king Prithivipathī I whose dominions lay at least partly in the Mysore State and whose capital was Kolar, came to fight against the Pāṇḍya king Varaguṇa at Tirupurambiyām was hitherto inexplicable. From the two Ambur inscriptions³ of the Ganga-Pallava king Nripatungavikramavarman we know that Prithivipathī was his feudatory. It may, therefore, be presumed that Aparājīta for whom the Western Ganga king fought was a Ganga-Pallava. If this be true Aparājīta was perhaps the successor and presumably his son.'⁴ The battle of Śripurambiyām may be dated with approximate accuracy about the year A.D. 880.

The Chōla Conquest of Tōṇḍamaṇḍalam.—It has already been indicated that the Chōla king Āditya I who was making considerable inroads into the Pallava country brought about the defeat and ultimate conquest of the Tōṇḍamaṇḍalam about the close of the ninth century. This corresponded to the period before twenty-first year of Āditya. The latest of the Tirukalukkuṇram inscriptions\(^1\) is dated in the twenty-first year of Rājakēsarivarman. ‘Taking this provisionally as the last year of Āditya’s reign and deducting it from A.D. 907, the date of accession of his son Parāntaka I we get roughly to about A.D. 886 for the commencement of Āditya’s reign.’ It is presumable that the conquest of Tondamāṇḍalam was effected considerably late in his reign and may be dated towards the end of the ninth century. The Tiruvāḷangāḍu plates say of the Chōla king Āditya I, son of Vijayālaya,\(^2\) that ‘having conquered in battle the Pallava with his brilliant army, though (he was) Aparājita (the unconquered) of his queen (viz.) and accomplished his object in this direction too.’ In other words, the Chōla king Āditya I defeated the Pallava king Aparājīta varman and added the Tondamāṇḍalam to his dominions. Thus the kingdom of Pallavas passed into the hands of the Chōlas with the death of Aparājīta.

The monuments belonging to this period are in the Aparājīta style and, in the opinion of Jouveau-Dubreuil, very rare. The Viraṭāṇēśvara temple at Tiruttani, which contains inscriptions dated in the eighteenth year of Aparājīta varman is attributable to this king the Tamil verse\(^3\) which is inscribed in this temple being supposed to have been composed by the king.

Other Miscellaneous Kings.—Some observations may be made on Kampavarman and Vayiramēghavarman before closing the survey. Over twenty inscriptions have been discovered dated in the regnal years ranging from the sixth to the twenty-fifth years\(^4\) of Kampavarman who according to Hultsch

---

\(^1\) Ep. Ind., vol. iii, p. 379.
\(^2\) v. 49.
\(^3\) Ins. No. 433 of 1905.
\(^4\) His inscriptions have been found at the following:—
Sixth year ... ... ... Uttaramallūr
Eighth year ... ... ... do.
Tenth year ... ... ... Ukkal.
Fifteenth year ... ... ... Uttaramallūr
Seventeenth year ... ... ... Kaveripākkam.
Twenty-third year ... ... ... Uttaramallūr. was a brother of Nripatungavarman. Whether this king succeeded Nandivarman III as king, or whether in the confusion that followed the death of Nripatunga he made himself an independent ruler in the North Arcot District and the region round about Kāñchi it is not clear from present evidence.

The inscriptions of this king are for the most part donative and do not furnish any historical details other than one record which refers to the destruction of Olakkur and the death of a hero. This record is on a slab set up near the village-munsiff’s śāvādi at Olakkur and is a Vīragal of the period of Kampaperumāl who may be identified with Kampavarman. It records the death of a hero on the occasion of the destruction of the place in the later part of the ninth century.

Vayiramēghavarman.—Two stone records have been discovered at the Agastyēśvara temple at Poyyanūr in the Arkonam Taluk which mentions the name of a new king apparently belonging to the Pallava family dated in the second year. According to the late V. Venkayya, the name Vayiramēgha was a biruda assumed by Dantivarman, and is the same name occurring in the expressions Vayiramēgataṭāka, Vayiramēghavāykkāl, etc., mentioned in the inscriptions. It has to be presumed that the name is more like Pallava than other dynastic names.

Chandrāditya (No. 284 of 1916).—This is a record written in the Pallava-Grantha on a pillar in the rock-cut temple at Mēlaichēri in the Gingee Taluk of the South Arcot District. It states that the Śiva temple called Śri-Śikhari-Pallavēśvaram was excavated by Chandrāditya at Śimhapura (Śingavaram). Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil who discovered this inscription considers it probable that Chandrāditya was one of the names of Narasimhavarman I or Paramēśvaravarman I. This is, however, uncertain. There are in addition to these a few inscriptions of this period belonging to Kāṭṭirai, Vijaya-Narasimhavarman and Vijaya-Īśvaravarman which need not be examined here as their position in the Pallava family is not clear.

---

1 No. 357 of 1909.
2 Nos. 3 of 1899, 119 of 1897, also Ep. Ind., vol. vii, p. 24, and vol. iv, p. 177.

With Nripatunga or Aparājita, the main line of the Pallava kings appears to have come to an end. But, however, a branch of them known as the Noḻambas claiming descent from Trnayana-Pallava continued to exercise sovereignty at Noḻambavādi—thirty-two thousand. This region comprised the modern Bellary District and portions of Mysore. Here, as the records show, the Noḻamba chiefs continued in power as late as the thirteenth century A.D. The Hēmāvati Pillar inscription, which gives a genealogy of the Noḻambas, mentions that they belonged to the Īśvaravamsa and enumerates the names of several kings of this line. These include Mangala, Simhapota, Charuponnēra, Nanniga, Anniga, and Dilipa. Brief accounts of these are given in L. Rice’s Mysore and Coorg from Inscriptions.¹

¹ L. Rice, Mysore and Coorg from Inscriptions, pp. 55-59.
CHAPTER X

GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS OF PALLAVA RULE IN SOUTH INDIA

The rule of the Pallava kings in the Tamil land for an unbroken period of nearly eight centuries resulted in stamping the administration of the country with a particular type of culture some of the aspects of which may now be briefly indicated. This is visible not only in the administration of government by the central and local authorities of the Pallava times (A.D. 260 to 900), but in practically every aspect of life, in religion, literature, art, etc. In studying the Pallava administration, literary history, art and religious movements, we are unfortunately not in the possession of all the materials that would help us to reconstruct the history of the culture and civilization of the times. We are dependent for the most part on the inscriptions and copper-plate grants of this period as well as the few monuments that have survived. It is, therefore, not strange that the picture obtained by us has many gaps that have to be filled up by future discoveries.

Administration.—In the numerous copper-plate charters that have been discovered from time to time by the officers of the Government Epigraphy Department and by the labours of private scholars we obtain excellent glimpses of certain aspects of Pallava polity. From the earliest of these, namely, the Hirahadagalli copper-plates issued from the capital Kāṇchīpuram we learn that already in the middle of the third century there prevailed a system of administration with the king at the top and the provincial governors and several departmental ministers in charge of parks, public baths, forests, reminding us in several details of the Mauryan and in some respects the Gupta administration. From the grant of the king made at his palace office in the head-quarters in Kāṇchīpura addressed to the provincial Viceroy at Amarāvati and several others which were issued in the following periods it is evident that during the early Pallava days the empire of the Pallavas was not unlike those of modern times divided into bigger and smaller divisions for the government of which officers of the state were appointed. The heads of departments were selected from among the members of the royal family such as the younger sons and distinguished members of the army. In Tondamāṇḍalam the distinct division into twenty-four kottams appears to have been introduced

"From Kāṇchipura the righteous supreme king (Dharmamahārāja) of the great king of the Pallavas, Śivaskandavarman, a Bharadvāja and an officer of Agnīṣṭōma, Vājapēya and Āśvamedha sacrifices issues the following orders:—

We send greetings to the princes (Rajakumara), rulers of districts (Raṭhika), chiefs of Madambas (customs officers), local prefects (Dēṣādhikata) the free-holders of the various villages (Gāma-gāmahōjaka) ministers (Amachcha), guards (Arakhadikata), captains (Gumikas), Dūtikas (Messengers ?), spies (Sanjarantakas) and warriors (Bhādamanuṣas).

These are enumerated in the Mackenzie MSS. as well as the Chingleput District Manual App. H. p. 438 and in The Tamils 1800 years ago and are as follows:

(1) Pulal-Kōṭṭam, (2) Íkkīṭṭu-Kōṭṭam, (3) Maṇavir-Kōṭṭam, (4) Śengāṭṭu-Kōṭṭam, (5) Paiyūr-Kōṭṭam, (6) Eyi-Kōṭṭam of which the principal town was Kāṇchimpuram, (7) Dāmal-Kōṭṭam, (8) Urṣukatṭu-Kōṭṭam, (9) Kalattūr-Kōṭṭam, (10) Śembūr-Kōṭṭam, (11) Āmbur-Kōṭṭam, (12) Venkuṇakōṭṭam, (13) Palakuṇa-Kōṭṭam, (14) Ilangatūr-Kōṭṭam, (15) Kaliyūr-Kōṭṭam, (16) Śengarai-Kōṭṭam, (17) Paṇuvūr-Kōṭṭam, (18) Kadikūr-Kōṭṭam, (19) Śendirukkai-Kōṭṭam, (20) Kuṇraṉai-Kōṭṭam, (21) Vēngāḍa-Kōṭṭam, (22) Veḷūr-Kōṭṭam, (23) Āṭṭur-Kōṭṭam and (24) Puliyūr-Kōṭṭam. This division of Tondamāṇḍalam, the Tūndaka Rāṣṭra of the copper-plates, seems to have come into existence prior to the period of the Pallava kings known to us from epigraphy, probably in the period of Chōla viceroyalty of Tondaman Ilam-Tirayanat Kāṇchi. Although these districts do not figure in the early copper-plates of the Pallavas they are rather frequent in the later stone inscriptions datable from the eighth and the ninth centuries. Pulal-Kōṭṭam with its subdivision figures in the Velurpalayam plates of the sixth year of Nandivarman III (S.I.I., vol. II, p. 509) while Kalaṭṭūr-Kōṭṭam, Ikkīṭṭu-Kōṭṭam, and Paṇuvūr-Kōṭṭam are mentioned in inscriptions dated in the fourteenth year of Nandivarman III, and the eleventh and the twenty-sixth years of Nripatunga varman, (Ep. Col. 349 of 1911, and 460 of 1905). Eyi-Kōṭṭam the division around Kāṇchipura also figures in the inscription dated in the fifteenth year of Nripatungavarman (Ep. Col. 461 of 1905). For the study of the ancient historical geography the references in the later Pallava inscriptions to these are very helpful. Some of the places such as Kalaṭṭūr, Dāmal, and Urṣukkāṇu which originally must have been important places after which the divisions were named have survived to the present day.
in an earlier period retained unaltered during the age of the Pallavas as we find them commonly figure in their inscriptions. The Rāshtras which appear to be the equivalent of the mandala were thus parcelled out into the hands of the viceroy called Vishayikas while the smaller divisions such as the Koshṭakas (koṭṭam) and Grāmas, were placed in charge of dēśatikadas and vapittas. The ministers and rahasyādikadas (privy councillors) were examined and consulted on state matters by the sovereign. Royal orders such as the one embodied in the Hirahadagalli plates were drawn by the king's private secretary. It is also learned from the early documents that there were officers in charge of the customs and the places or offices where they were collected were called mandapa and the officers who were entrusted with the collection of the customs were known as mandapis. There were also during this period special officers posted at bathing pools and tanks whose chief duties consisted in looking after the convenience of the bathers and their safety. They are called in this record as Tirthikas (Superintendents of bathing places). The persons mentioned by the name of the Gumikas who are taken by some scholars as captains appear to have been officers in charge of forests, a fact which shows that there was something like a forest department. The term neyka which resembles the Sanskrit name Nāyaka probably stands for the military officer whose status was next to those of Smāpatīs or Commanders of the army. All these clearly indicate an elaborate system of governmental organization which as already indicated above resemble the North Indian ¹ rather than any southern system of administration that we know of.

The nature of village government at this period.—Whether or not the self-governing village corporation which, from the early Chōla times as we are familiar with, prevailed in the early Pallava days we have not the material to judge from the ascertained facts at our disposal. But it appears that this later village organization with the characteristic features of committees, managing general village administration economic, financial, and judicial, existed in the later Pallava days for which we possess good evidence. That the system of government and administration was highly systematic, and even bureaucratic, we learn with the help of certain of the early Sanskrit charters mentioning the minute details of the boundaries of gifted lands and defining its situation—a fact which shows the efficiency of the land survey departments of the Pallavas. The Uruvapalli plates give a typical example of such detailed-land survey. This is by no means the only instance of the elaborate arrangements and precautions taken in marking the village boundaries in the inscriptions. The Bāhūr plates belonging to the ninth century in recording a gift of the three villages near Pondicherry give similar details. 1 According to the report submitted by the headman of the nādu the boundaries of the land granted (to the Bahur College) were as follows: Of the two villages of Vilāṅgāṭṭanaguduvanūr and Šēṭuppākkam, the eastern boundary is to the west of the boundary of a forest and of the boundary of Nēṟmalippākkam; the southern boundary is to the north of the boundary of Nēṟmalippākkam, of the boundary of Nelvāyippakkām, and of the boundary of Urattūr; the western boundary is to the east of the boundary of Māmbakkam and of sixty rice-fields which form a Brahmadēya

¹ The administration of Government in North India was conducted in accordance with a series of books some of which were pre-christian and others post-christian. The chief works in this series were Kautilya's Arthasastra, Kamandakā's Niṭīśāstra and Sukraṇti.

1 Ind. Ant., vol. v, 1876, p. 50.

. . . In this village there are 200 entire nivartanas. The limit of these nivartanas are :—On the west the boundary of the Kēndūkūra village, are the limit; on the south River Suprayōga is the limit; on the east same is the limit; to the north by the south there is a rock on the side of the great road proceeding thence to the north, there is a tamarind tree, proceeding thence to where there is a rock on the road to the village of Kurupura, and to the village of Kundukūra; proceeding thence to the north there is a heap of rocks; proceeding thence to the north there is rock on the limit of the cultivated field of the Brahman as in the village and proceeding to the west, the limit is the edge of the boundaries of the village of Kondamuruviḍur.
near Vilāṅgaṭtangaduvaṇūr; and the northern boundary is to the south of Vagūr.\textsuperscript{1} It will be gathered from these records that the village and the central government of this period took the greatest pains in maintaining a detailed record of all the arable and waste lands, lakes, tanks, wells and rivers, rocks and even trees, for purposes of not only grants of land to temples and Brahmans, but also for revenue purposes.

\textit{Taxation and revenue.}—From these we shall now proceed to the sources of taxation in the Pallava age that are mentioned in the records of the Pallava kings. We have no direct evidence of central or local finance during the early Chōla or Pallava times

\textsuperscript{1} Dr. Hultzsch furnishes the following interesting plan indicating the relative position of the villages and boundaries referred to in the Tamil

!Diagram

Of these villages, Vahūr survives as Bāhur, while Vilangāṭtangaduvaṇūr and Kirmanpatti are identical with Kaduvanūr and Kilmām-bākkam situate to the west and north-east of Bahur, an important locality south of Pondicherry.
as none of the large number of records that have come down to us were intended to set forth exhaustively the financial machinery for the enlightenment of the modern scholar; we can however infer from the list of exemptions stated in the various records of lands and other grants at our disposal what taxes and dues a village was ordinarily subjected to if it was other than a land gifted to Brahmans or a temple in which case the exemptions were secured to the donee. First may be noted some of the seignorial rights mentioned in the earliest Pallava copper-plate charters. The Hirahadagalli plates already mentioned are very interesting in this respect. This record states that the garden Chillerakoḍumkā the object of the grant is to be free from the taking of sweet and sour milk and sugar ... from taxes ... forced labour free from the payment of the oxen in succession, free from the taking of grass and the wood ... from the taking of vegetables and flowers. ... It also mentions the important particular towards the close of the grant where it says that with these and other immunities of the eighteen kinds it must be exempted. It is thus clear from this early Pallava record that about the first quarter of the third century Pallava kings had laid claim to not less than eighteen¹ kinds of dues from the villagers (Ashṭadasapariṇāras) which they ordinarily could claim except in cases of gifted lands. The Mayidavolu plates of the Pallava king Śivaskandavarmā ² mentions among the immuni-ties secured for the village of Viripara which was the object of the grant, freedom for the diggings of salt which shows that salt-manufacture was a royal monopoly, from the supply of bullocks in succession, the entrance of soldiers, the supply of boiled rice, etc. As we do not come across with some of

¹ It is important to note that these were not at all in the nature of taxes but more of free-will offerings of first fruits by gardeners to kings and of supplies of means of transport to royal officers while on tour. Mr.
Lönhurst is therefore wrong when he remarks on this that 'it is thus obvious that the people were liable to all these taxes and imposts on the ordinary necessaries of life,' and that it clearly shows that in the fourth century at any rate there was no ‘Golden Age’ in Southern India. (An.
Rep. of the Arch. Dep. of Southern Circle 1918-1919, Part II, p. 21.)
these rights in the later records of the Pallavas it is probable that some of these rights fell out of use.

Passing on from the days of the early Pallavas to that of the later Pallavas, we notice in the Sanskrit charters of Paramēśvaravarman I, Nandivarman Pallavamalla and that of his grandson Nandivarman III more details regarding the rights of the Pallava kings of the period to other items of taxes and duties, are available. From a study of the Tamil portions of the Kašākkudi, Kūram, the Tanḍantōttam, Vēlūrpālayam and the Bāhūr plates we learn that during this period there were, what have been called profession-taxes but are really excise on local products, on oil mill-owners, potters, goldsmiths, toddy-drawers, as well as duties on areca-nuts exposed for sale and sold in the markets, duty on looms, presents on the occasion of new marriages and royalty on the manufacture of salt. Some of these such as the Īḷampūṭchi¹ and Puthāli are inexplicable. Good specimens of this royal exemption order are contained in the Tamil portion of the Tanḍantōttam plates dated in the fifty-eighth year of Nandivarman II, Pallavamalla: the immunities evidently indicate some of the taxes which were customary:—

¹ No tax of any kind such as duty on oil-press and looms, Ulaviyakkūli, the fee on marriages, ṛettu fee on potters, taṭṭukayam, duty on toddy-drawers and shepherds, fee on stalls, brokerage fee, tirumugakkānam, royalty paid for the manufacture of salt, the good cow, the good bull, vattināli, fee on basket of grain exposed for sale in the market, areca-nuts exposed for sale in the shops, Budanāli, and others which the king could take and enjoy. Damānagam may be planted; mansions and large edifices may be built of burnt bricks; reservoirs and wells may be sunk; cocoanut trees may be planted in groves; and large oil-presses may be used. . . .

¹ Of these terms some are obscure. Pūṭchi seems to mean a kind of due and Īḷampūṭchi might mean a duty on Ḫavar or toddy drawers. Tirumugakkānam apparently means a fee for the messenger bringing royal messages or orders. Ulaviyakkūli has been taken to mean the hire for well-diggers. The terms putali kannittukanam, arikoši, nedum parai and ṛettu are not clear.

The emperor in these records is called Mahārāja and Dharmamahārāja. In the Gupta inscriptions of North India also, the emperor is called Mahārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara. In the Gupta Government the emperor is the centre of a group of subordinate kings. The territory of the empire was called a Rājya in the Gupta inscriptions as well as Rāṣṭra, and Dēta and Maṇḍala which occur also in the Pallava inscriptions. The territories in the Pallava Empire are divided in the records into Koṭṭams and Nādus on the lines of the Gupta administration where they are similarly divided into Bhukti, Vishaya, and Grāma. There is a close resemblance between the sources of taxation and revenue between the early Pallava records and Gupta inscriptions. These may be gathered from the inscriptions recording various grants. These include several items such as Uparikara, Vāta Bhūta, Hīranyā, Ādēya, etc. Several of the Gupta inscriptions as well as Pallava inscriptions indicate negatively the obligations imposed by the state. Several of the Guptā Inscriptions, may be compared with portions of the Pallava records dealing with exemption from taxes.2

About the beginning of the ninth century stone inscriptions of the Pallavas become abundant and in these we find interesting particulars of the activity of the village Sabhas all over the empire particularly in the Chingleput District. A perusal of the stone records of this period relating to these dated in the years of the later Pallava kings, Nandivarman II, Dantivarman, Nandivarman III and Aparājīta shows that the following figure among the large numbers of places that enjoyed self-governing village Sabhas: Āḍambākkam,

2 It (the village rendered free) is not to pay taxes; it is not to be entered by the regular troops or by the umbrella bearers; it does not carry with it the right to cows and bulls in succession of production, or to the abundance of flowers and milk, or to the pasturage, hides, and charcoal, or to the mines for the purchase of salt in a moist state . . .

(F. G. I., p. 242.)
Avaninārāyaṇachaturvēdimangalam (Kaveripakkam), Maṇali, Tiruvorriyūr, Kūram, Perumunaiyūr, Tiruvirambēdu, Anbil Veṅkuṭrām, Uttaramallūr, Perungūli, Tirukoilūr, and Ukkal. An account of the activities of these village assemblies in repairing tanks, accepting deposits for charitable purposes and other works has come down to us.

The Assemblies.—Though we know the existence of the village assemblies in the various parts of the Pallava empire we do not know the nature of the rules that regulated their constitution and working, their exact sphere of action and the relation of this to the central government. Inscriptions copied in the Chingleput District alone indicate that during the ninth century different types of village assemblies carried on their work. One of the most important of these was called the Sabhā. These were usually to be found in Brahmadeva villages granted to the Brahmanas and therefore were almost entirely run by the Brahmans. The rules laid down in the Uttaramallūr inscription for the membership of the village assemblies applies in all probability to such Sabhas. A recently discovered inscription dated in the thirty-first year of Māranśadaiyan throws some light on some of the rules of membership of the village Sabhās which differ from all those known till now. (i) It is stated in this record that of the children of the shareholders in the villages, only one who is well versed in the Mantra-Brahmana and one Dharma, and well-behaved, may be on the village assembly and only one of similar qualifications may be in the assembly for a share purchased, received as present, or acquired by him as Strīdhana; (ii) that shares purchased, presented, or acquired as Strīdhana could entitle one if at all, only to a full membership in the assembly, and in no case will quarter or half or three-quarter of the membership be recognized; (iii) that those who purchase shares should elect only such men to represent their share in the assembly as have critically studied a whole Vēda with their parisēshas; (iv) that those who do not possess full membership as laid down by Rule II cannot stand on any committee for the management of the village affairs; (v) that those who satisfy the prescribed conditions should in no case persistently oppose the proceedings of the assembly, by saying nay, nay, to every proposal brought up before the assembly; (vi) those who do this together with their supporters will pay a fine of five kāsu on each item in which they have so behaved and still continue to submit to the same rules.

The activities of the Sabhās were varied in character and they dealt with all important aspects of village life. From the Pallava inscriptions alone we gather that these Sabhās looked after the temple and its administration, and received the endowments made on behalf of temple services. In addition to this many of these Sabhās looked after the supervision and repairs to the village tanks which were brought into existence with considerable labour at the instance of the Pallava kings. Some of these immense irrigational tanks which must have engaged the skilled labour of a vast body of men have survived to our own times. These include, the Paramēśvara Tatāka in Kūram near Kāñchipuram, the Mahēndra Tatāka in Mahēndravādi not far from Arkonam, Tirayanēri, Vayiramēga Tatāka in Uttaramallūr, in the Madurantakam Taluk, Chitramēgha Tatāka, Veḷḷēri and probably the large tank at Māmanḍūr which now irrigates a large area. The

1 The last provision is rather ingenious in as much as it shows that as early as the ninth century the necessity to deal with the refractory and obstructionist tactics had been felt though the safeguard does not appeal to the modern mind.

2 Fuller details are available in Chola inscriptions such as those of Parāntaka and his successors when the village assemblies not only managed all local affairs such as the collection of revenue, upkeep of tanks and irrigation canals, administration of temples but also looked after the local judicial administration, the education religious and secular of the young as well as the adult, and maintenance of hospitals for the diseased. The principle of election and the ballot box became very popular and local administration was conducted very efficiently. The annual change of office-bearers in the various committees extended to every villager the opportunity of getting acquainted with practical administration.
irrigation channels figuring in the Pallava inscriptions include the Perumbiddugu Väykkäl, the channel cut from the Pälär to Kūram and the Vayiramēga Väykkäl, both of which probably owe their origin to the Pallava kings bearing these surnames. The supervision and upkeep of these tanks and channels must have entailed a great deal of labour and attention on the part of the village Sabhās many of which had a separate Tank Supervision Committee as is clear from one of the later inscriptions.¹ The great tank at Uttara-mallūr owes its origin to one of the Pallava kings named Vayiramēgan and figures frequently in the inscriptions relating to the activities of the Uttaramallūr Sabhā during the reign of Dantivarman and Vijaya Kampavarman.²

The other important work of the village Sabhās of the Pallava age was the management of temple property and service. The temple appears to have played an important role in the age of the Pallavas and must have attracted large numbers of people for various purposes. A close study of the inscriptions of this period shows that the Pallava kings took a great deal of interest in the building of these temples as well as their proper upkeep. These are scattered all over the Tamil districts, some of the most beautiful and important ones being found at the capital of the kingdom, Kāṇchipuram. The inscriptions at the Rājasimheśvara and at the Vaikunṭaperumāl temples bear ample testimony to the great devotion of the Pallava kings but details of their management in those days are not available. It is quite probable that their management was entrusted to the temple committee of the city council in the days of Rājasimha and Paramēśvaravarman. In the actual management of the temple administration which involved the looking after of lands, appointment of contractors for the day-to-day supply of rice, ghee, flowers, etc., defalcations sometimes

¹ No. 84 of 1896, dated in the twenty-first year of Kampavarman mentions the name of this Committee as the Eri-Vāriya-Perumakkar.
² Ep. Col., No. 74 of 1896, dated in the ninth year of Dantivarman; and Ep. Col., No. 61 of 1898, dated in the twenty-first year of the same king and Ep. Col., No. 84 of 1898, of Kampavarman.
occurred even leading to the reduction in the actual offering to the deity. One such instance is recorded in the Triplicane inscription of Dantivarman, dated in the twelfth year of his reign. The temple management (kulankilär) having mortgaged one of the temple fields in Karumārachēri, the offering to the God fell short. This was restored however by the pious offices of one Pugalṭunai-Visšiyarāyān who redeemed the mortgaged field.

_Literature during the Pallava Age._—Another important benefit of the Pallava rule in South-India was the impetus given to literature, particularly Sanskrit. The age of the Pallavas is also the period of the celebrated movements of the Ālvars and the Aḍiyars which so much revolutionized the religious outlook of the people at that time. The Pallava kings on account partly of their having come from the north had distinct leanings from the beginning for Sanskrit literature and all their early charters with the exception of a few are written in Sanskrit. The _praśasti_ portions in the later copper-plate charters such as the Kāśākkudī plates of Nandivarman Pallavamalla which furnish a historical account of the family of the donor appear to have been written by poets of considerable ability who adorned the contemporary Pallava court. It is only in the later Pallava period that a Tamil portion came to be added to the charters. The _praśasti_ portions as well as the descriptive accounts (such as those of the battle of Peruvāḷanallūr) of some of the plates compare very favourably with some of the best Sanskrit style of the classical _kavis_. We do not unfortunately possess any means whereby the names of the early Sanskrit poets of the Pallava kings before Simhavishnu could be gathered. There is, however, no doubt whatever that Kāṇchipuram almost from the beginning of the Pallava rule was a centre of Sanskrit learning. The city appears to have been famous as a seat of Sanskrit learning as early as the second century B.C.; Patanjali discusses the derivation of the word Kāñchipuraka, possibly because it was famous for Sanskrit learning even then. Even in the Sangam age it will be remembered that Aravāna Aḍigal taught Buddhistic philosophy at this place and at a subsequent period Dignāga the logician who is believed to have been the author of Nyāyapravēśa spent considerable time at Kāñchī and was perhaps a product of medievall Pallava culture. Later, Mayūra Śarman, the progenitor of the Kadamba family, had to proceed to this place for the completion of the Vedic studies. It is not surprising therefore that Simhavishṇu about the close of the sixth century when he heard of Bhāravi staying with Durviniṭa, the Western Ganga king, invited him to his court according to the Avantisundarikathāsāra. ¹ It is by no means unlikely, that Kirtārjunīṭya the well-known work of this poet was composed about this period.

---

Of Mahēndravarman I, the illustrious son and successor of Simhavishṇu, more is known. His great command of Sanskrit is fully seen in his work Mattavitāsa Prahasana which has survived to our times. This has already been noticed while dealing with this king in an earlier chapter. The great musical inscription at Kuṭalumiyāmalai about the same period, as well as the beautiful Sanskrit compositions at the Trichinopoly rock-cut temple and elsewhere are also indicative of the refined taste for Sanskrit composition at this period. It was during the reign of one of his successors that Dandin, the celebrated savant, spent considerable time in the Pallava court, even paying a visit to the wonderful sculptures of Mahāmallapuram. It is not improbable that this was towards the close of the seventh century A.D. The Avantisundarikathāsāra contains interesting details of an earlier sojourn of Dandin in the south, while quite young, when Kāñchipuram was in the throes of foreign invasion and siege by the Chālukyas, when the citizens of the place had to desert the city temporarily. Dandin returned to Kāñchī long after and in all probability flourished for long at the Pallava court. Mātridatta, a poet and scholar and Rāma Śarman, also figure among the friends of Daṇḍin and were perhaps associated with him at Kāṇchipuram. The names of Sanskrit poets at the Pallava court during this period other than these are not known. It is held by some scholars that the Sanskrit plays published recently in Trivandrum as Bhāsa’s were abridgements made during this period of earlier works of Bhāsa and Śūdraka for being staged at the Pallava court. It has been suggested by Mr. L. D. Barnett that these are the works of an anonymous author in the court of the Pāṇḍya King Rājasimha.¹ But as we have got evidence that the Pallava court was the great centre of Sanskrit learning during this period it seems to be more correct to regard that the dramas referred to above were intended to be staged at the Pallava court as is evident from the colophons of some of these plays.² It has been presumed also that the work was composed at Kāṇchī from the occurrence of the name of Dantivarman in the manuscripts of Mudrārākṣasa found in Malabar in the last benedictory verses.

¹ See App. Avantisundarikathāsāra.

The Tēvāram and the Nalāyira Prabandham hymns were also produced during the age of the Pallava monarchs. We have already seen that Appar, the first of the Tēvāram hymnists was the well-known contemporary of Mahēndravarman I who was converted to Śaivism by him. His hymns in the Tēvāram collection number over 3000 and are full of Sanskrit expressions and Brahmanical culture and tradition. Tiruvāna-Sambandar was his younger contemporary and flourished during the reign of Narasimhavarman I. During his period Śaivism was very much in the ascendent and Śiva temples were very numerous in South India. According to the Periyapurāṇam account he is said to have succeeded in converting Neḍumāran the contemporary Pāṇḍya King to Śaivism after a successful disputation with the Śamānas who were very powerful at this period at Madura. His poems in the Tevāram number nearly 4000. Sundarar the last of the sixty-three Śaiva saints appears to have lived in the ninth century and mentions Appar and Sambandar who preceded him. His Tiruttontatokai was the basis on which Nambiyāndar Nambi composed his Andādi and these two formed the main sources of Śekkijār for writing the Periyapurāṇam. Sundanar’s hymns amount to eleven hundreds nearly in the Tevāram.

² इमां सामापवर्षन्तां हिमवंद्रिन्धयकुकुडलामः
पृथ्वीमेकातपलब्रु राजसिंहः प्रशास्तन: II

About the age of Mānikkavāsagar the well-known author of Tiruvāsaṭakam and Tirukkovai, there exists some doubt. According to some Tamil scholars he preceded the three Tevāram hymnists. But as he clearly refers to the Pandyan King Varaguṇa in his works there cannot be any doubt that he flourished in the earlier half of the ninth century. His Tiruvāsaṭakam is a very popular work and celebrates Śiva’s miracles in a simple and attractive style. His activities were confined to Chidambaram and its adjoining places and he does not appear to have come into active contact with the Pallavas.

Of the twelve Vaishnava saints known as the Ālvārs some of whom flourished during the Pallava age the first four—Peyālvār, Budattālvār, Poygaiālvār and Tirumalaiśaiālvār, appear to have been contemporaries and lived at a time before the advent of the Pallavas to Kāṇchipuram. Tradition however records that Tirumalaiśai was a contemporary of one of the Pallava kings, perhaps Tondamān-Ilamāntiraiyan. Of the others Tirumangaiālvār is the most important and has already been referred in a previous chapter. There is a credible Vaishnava tradition that he held a successful disputation with the Śaiva saint Tiruṇāṇa-Sambandar. If this can be relied on he should have lived an exceptionally long period of time. His work exceeds that of any other Ālvār except Nammiḻvār and his peregrinations were spread all over South India. His great Pallava contemporary was Nandivarman Pallavamalla who reigned for an exceptionally long period of sixty-five years. This Ālvār unlike the other Ālvārs makes frequent mention of contemporary political occurrences including the martial exploits of the Pallava King referred to above. One of his verses contains an allusion to the repulse of the Chālukyan King which is corroborated by inscriptions. The war implements of the Pallavas as well as their other insignia also find mention in his hymns. The other Ālvārs, such as Kulaśēkharach, Nammālvār, Periyālvār, Āṇḍāl, etc., did not flourish in Tondamāṇḍalam and did not come into contact with the Pallava Kings.

The origin and evolution of Pallava art and architecture does not properly belong to this work and may be studied elsewhere. It may be however noted here that it is a mistake to suppose that temples did not exist in South India before the Pallava age, for mention is made of them in early Śaṅgam works. They were then built only of wood and perishable material and consequently have not survived. The earliest inscriptive mention, in a Pallava record, of a temple occurs in the grant of Chārudēvi which evidences a donation of land to the temple of Nārāyaṇa at Dāḻūrā early in the fourth century. During the reign of Mahēndravarman I, a commencement was made in the art of monolithic temple building. The first specimens were all of them excavations of hillsides into temples such as those at Trichinopoly, Vallam and Māṇḍūr, modelled after the caves at Uṇḍavalli. A later development was from the cave temples to the Rathas like those of Mahābalipuram. From these, in due course of evolution, came structural temples, among the earliest and best known of which are the Shore-temple at the Seven Pagodas, the Kailāsanātha temple at Kāṇchi and at Panamalai. The evolution continued in the days of subsequent Pallava kings till the rise of what is a distinct Chola style.

1 See the works of Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil and Mr. Longhurst.
2 According to Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil.
APPENDIX A

A CHRONOLOGICAL INDEX OF PALLAVA INSCRIPTIONS

   The inscription records in Prakrit, the gift of a cow to the community of monks, by Queen Gotami Bālaśrī, mother of Gotamiputrasātakarnī, king of Aśmaka, Mulika, etc., who destroyed the Śakas, Yavanas, and the Pahlavas. A village was granted by the queen’s grandson for the embellishment of the cave.

   Sanskrit fragment. Records the restoration of lake Śudarśana, situated at some distance from Girinagara (Girmar). The work was executed by Suviśāka, the son of Kulaipa, and a Pahlava, who had been appointed to rule the whole of Ānarta and Surāśṭra. He is described as having been able, patient, not wavering, not arrogant, upright, and by his good government and proper views and dealings in things temporal and spiritual, to have increased the attachment of the people and the spiritual fame and glory of his master.

   Prakrit record. This is dated in the eighth year of the Āndhra king Śrī-Pulumāvi, king of the Sātavāhana (family) and records the sinking of a reservoir by a resident of Vēpūraka, belonging to the Captain-Kumāradatta, in the country of Sātavāhani-Āhāra which belonged to the (great general) Mahāśeṇāpati-
History of the Pallavas of South India

Khandanāga (Skandanāga). This inscription is important in so far as it establishes that the sway of the Sātavāhanas extended to the south of the Krishna.

Eight copper-plates with a seal bearing in relief a bull and the legend Śivaskandavarman. The language is Prakrit, dialect different from literary Pāli, and the alphabet is considered an epigraphical curiosity.

The grant was issued by the heir-apparent (Yuvamahārāja) Śivaskandavarman of the Bhāradvāja-gōtra and of the Pallava family, and records the gift of a village (Viripara) to two Brahmans. The village is said to have belonged to Āndhrapathā and has not been identified. The record is dated in the fifth titihi, of the sixth fortnight of summer, in the tenth year of the reign of Śivaskandavarman’s predecessor. The immunities secured by the village included, freedom from the diggings for salt, the supply of bullocks, in succession, the entrance of the soldiers, cots and dwellings.

Eight plates from Hirahadagalli, in the Bellari District. Prakrit. Records that the Pallava king Śivaskandavarman of Kāñchi, who belonged to the Bhāradvāja-gōtra and is said to have performed Agnishtōma, Vājapeya and Aśvamedha sacrifices, confirmed and enlarged in the eighth year of his reign a grant made formerly by the great king, the Lord-Bappa (his father), to certain Brahmans residing at Āpitti, and who are described as bhōjakas, of the village of Chillerēkakoḍumika, in the Sātāhaniraṭṭha. The gift consisted of a garden in the above village, the income of which was to be divided in a specified manner.
Appendix A

The writer of the grant was the Privy-Councillor—(Rahasadhikata) Bhaṭṭi-Śarman. Among the other officials mentioned in this record are the Lords of Provinces, Royal Princes, Rulers of Districts, Custom-House Officers, Prefects of countries, Forest-officials, Sergeants, roaming spies, and others.

The original copper-plates secured by Sir Walter Elliot, are now in the British Museum. Language is mostly in Prakrit prose and partly in Sanskrit verse. The seal contains a standing animal, apparently a bull, the crest of the Pallavas.

The grant is dated in some year of Vijayaskandavarman (illegible). It records an order by the Queen Regent in behalf of the heir-apparent Vijaya-Buddhavarman who is described as a Pallava and affiliated to Bhāradvāja-gotra. Dr. Hultzsch has read the name of the queen as Chārudēvi and that of the prince whose mother she claims to have been as Buddh (yan)kura. The grant supplies the genealogical order Mah. Vijayaskandavarman, his son Yuvamahārāja Vijaya Buddhavarman and his son Buddhyaṅkura.

The object of the grant is to register a gift of land made by Chārudēvi consisting of a field near the king’s tank to Nārayanā of the Kujimahātāraka temple, at Dāljura. The village authorities were required to exempt the field from all immunities.

The inscription is written in an Asokan sandstone pillar. The characters belong to the Gupta alphabet, the language is partly Sanskrit prose and partly verse. The record is undated. It gives abundant details as regards the conquests of Samudragupta, the divisions and kings of India in the fourth century A.D. Among the southern kings that Samudragupta conquered and released, the record mentions Mahendra of Kosala, Vyagraraja of Mahakantara, Mantaraja of Kaurala, Mahendra of Pashrapura, Svamidatta of Kotitura on the hill, Damana of Erandapalla, Vishnugopa of Kanchi, Nilaraja of Avamukta, Hastivarman of Vengi, Ugrasena of Palakka, Kubhira of Devrashtra, Danamjaya of Kausthalapura, and all other kings of the region of the south. The inscription proves that Vishnugopa of Kanchi, one of the several southern kings defeated by Samudragupta, flourished in the second quarter of the fourth century A.D.

Five copper-plates from Chendalur in the Ongole Taluk of the Nellore District.

Language is Sanskrit prose and the alphabets closely resemble those of Pikira, Uruvappalli, and Mangalur plates. The inscription is an edict issued from Kanchipura in the second year of the reign of the Pallava-Maharaja Kumarravishnu (II) who is described as the son of Mah. Buddhavarman, the grandson of Mah. Kumarravishnu (I), and the great-grandson of Mah. Skandavarman. The object of the grant is to register the gift of the king to a Brahman in the village of Chendalura in Kavichakarabhoga, a subdivision of the district of Karmankarashtra. Of the localities mentioned in the record Kanchipuram is the well-known capital of the Pallavas and Chendalur a village in the Nellore District.

Four copper-plates. Language, Sanskrit characters belonging to the southern class. The grant is addressed from the Royal Camp the victorious Tambrapasthana. The record mentions in chronological order Mah. Kumāravishṇu, who is described as a Pallava king of the Bhāradvāja gotra and a performer of the Aśvamedha sacrifice, his son Mah. Skandavarman who acquired his kingdom by his own prowess, his son Viravarman victorious in many battles and his son Vijayakandavarman, the donor. The grant conveys an order to the officers of Oṃgoḍu and the residents that the village was given as a Sātvika gift with the eighteen kinds of exemptions to Gōlaśarman of the Kaśyapa-gotra, a student of two Vėdas, and well versed in the six Angas. The grant was engraved in the victorious year 33, on the thirteenth day of the third fortnight of winter.

Language and script: Same as above. The grant consists of the beginning of a Sanskrit inscription engraved on one side of a copper-plate. The name of the donor of the plate is lost but the record gives the name of his great-grandfather—Śri Virakōrcha- varman—the laudatory verses attributed to him agreeing literally with those attributed to the Pallava kings Skandavarman I and Skandavarman II. The king’s order was addressed from Vijaya-Daśanapura.

Five copper-plates with seal much worn but bearing in relief an animal perhaps the bull. Language is Sanskrit prose excepting the final imprecatory verses. The alphabet closely resembles the Uruvappalli plates.

The record opens with an invocation to Vishṇu (Bhagavat) and proceeds to record the grant of a village named Pikīra in the district of Mundarāśṭra. It is dated in the fifth year of the reign of Mah. Simhavarman and issued from the camp at Menmāṭur, in the Nellore District. Mah. Simhavarman, the donor is described as the son of Yuva Mah. Vishṇugōpa, the grandson of Mah. Skandavarman (II) and the great-grandson of Mah. Viravarman. The term Yuva-mahārāja which is prefixed to Vishṇugōpa in the present grant as well as in the Uruvappalli grant suggests that he probably never ruled.

Six copper-plates. Language, Sanskrit in the southern characters. The grant which was issued from Daśanapurā registers the gift of the village of Mangadūr, situated in the country of Vengorāśṭra to certain Brahmans. The record is dated in the eighth year of the reign of Simhavarman who is stated to have been the great-grandson of Mah. Śri-Viravarman, the grandson of Mah. Skandavarman. Dr. Fleet considered that Simhavarman was an elder brother of Yuva Mahārāja Vishṇugōpa one of whose grants is dated in the eleventh year of Simhavarman’s reign.

Language and characters same as above. The grant was issued from Palakkada and is dated in the eleventh year of Mah. Simhavarman. It mentions in genealogical order the names of four kings, Mah. Śrī Skandavarman, his son Mah. Śrīviravarman, his son Mah. Skandavarman, and his son Yuva Mah. Vishṇugōpavarman the donor who is described as the most divine worshipper of the divine one (Paramabhaṅgavata). The object of the grant is to register a gift of 200 nivartanas of land in the village of Uruvappalli in the Mundarāśṭra country to the temple of God Vishṇuhāra established by Senāpati Vishṇuvarman at the village of Kundukura. A minute description of the boundaries of the land is furnished.

Five copper-plates on a ring with no seal. Sanskrit language: characters same. The object of the grant is to register a gift of the village of Ōmgōdu in Karmarāṣṭra to a certain Dēvaśarman, who was a resident of Kēndūr and belonged to Kasyapagōtra. The grant was made in the fourth year of the reign, in the month of Vaiśakha Suklapaksha Panchami. It is taken as having been given on the occasion of an eclipse. The donor Simhavarman (II) is stated to have been the son of Yuva Mahārāja Vishnugōpa, grandson of Mah. Skandavarman, and the great-grandson of Mah. Viravarman.

Three copper-plates with a circular seal containing in bas-relief a standing bull. Language, Sanskrit in the southern script.

The donor of the inscription is said to have been a devout worshipper of Vishnu and the law-abiding Mahārāja Nandivarman of the Bhāradvājagōtra. He is said to have been the son of Mah. Skandavarman, the grandson of Mah. Simhavarman, and the great-grandson of Mah. Skandavarman. It registers the order of the King conveyed from Vijaya-Kānchīpura recording a gift of the village of Kānchivāyil, and four pieces of forest land situated in the district of Aḍayāra to a Brahman inhabitant of Kānchivāyil named Kulaśarman. The grant was issued in the fifth lunar day of Vaiśakha in the first year of the reign. The Tamil endorsement on the first plate which is dated in the twenty-sixth year of Madiraikonda-Ko-Parakēsari records the amalgamation of two villages.
Sanskrit and Telugu. This record which is not dated, was issued from Vijayapalōkata and registers a grant of land by the donor Vijaya-Vishṇugopavarman, to a certain Chasmiśarman of the Kaśyapagōtra and a resident of Kundūr. According to this record Vijaya-Vishṇugopavarman was the son of Simhavarman, grandson of Mah. Vishṇugopavarman and the great-grandson of Skandavarman.

The inscription which was discovered by L. Rice is written in Sanskrit in the box-headed variety of the Southern characters. It relates to the excavation of a tank near an ancient Śiva temple at Sthānukundūr, commenced by the Kadamba king Kakutsthavarman and completed by his son Śāntivarman. The author of the record which is written in high Kāvyā style was Kubja. The greater portion of this inscription is devoted to an account of the early kings of Kadamba dynasty which is interesting for the information it gives of the relation of the Kadambas with the Pallava kings, the Bāṇas, etc. According to the inscription the Kadāmbas were a Brahman family belonging to the Mānavaśagotra and descended from Hṛitiputra. In this family was born Mayūraśarman who went to Kāñchī in order to study and there was involved in a quarrel with the Pallava rulers. He took up arms against them and after a prolonged struggle, the kings of Kāñchī conferred upon him the territory between Amarārvana and Prēmāra. He was succeeded by his son Kangavarman, his son Bhagāratha, and his two sons Raghu and Kakutsthavarman. His successor was Santivarman during whose reign this record was composed.

Old type of Kannada Characters. (Telugu-Canarese). The plates mention in order Konkanivarma Dharma-Mahädhiräja of the Kanväyanagötra, his son Madhava Mahädhiräja I, who was an able exponent of the science of polity, his son Äryavarman who is described to have been 'duly installed on the throne by Simhavarma-Mahäräja, the lord of the prosperous Pallava family' and his son Madhava Mahädhiräja II who was duly installed on the throne by the illustrious Pallava king Skandavarman. The object of the grant is to register sixty-five paddy-fields in Paruvivishaya to Kumära-Śarman of the Vatsagötra.

Exception has been taken by Dr. Fleet to this copper-plate grant. He considers them genuine as against others and the mention of the contemporaneous Pallava kings Simhavarma-Mahäräja and Skandavarma-Mahäräja is important. It is probable that they were related as father and son.

This inscription is engraved on the rock-cut pillars in the Śiva temple called Sthambēvara, in the village of Śiyamaṅgalam, Wandiwash Taluk, North Arcot District. It consists of a single Sanskrit verse written in an archaic alphabet resembling the cave inscriptions at Trichinopoly and Mahändrarvādi, and records the fact that the temple called Avani-bhājaṇa-Pallaveśvara was caused to be excavated by a king called Lalitänkura who has been identified with Mahändrarvarman I of the Pallava kings.

This inscription, written in archaic Tamil, is engraved on the upper portions of the doorpillars of the Vasantēsvara temple at Vallam, near Chingleput. It records that one Vasantapriyarāja, the servant of Pañnapidugu alias Lalitānkuran, Satrumallan, Gunābharan, Mahēndrapōta-Raja caused the temple to be executed. The surnames belong to Mahēndravarman I.

This inscription is written in the same archaic Pallava alphabet as the Trichinopoly rock inscription and consists of a single Sanskrit verse in the kōkilaka metre, inscribed on the pilaster on the left end of the lacađe in the rock-cut temple here. It records the fact that Gunābharā caused the temple to be cut out of the rock and that it was dedicated to Vishṇu and bore the name Mahēndra Vishṇugriha, i.e. the Vishṇu temple of Mahēndra, that it stood on the bank of the Mahēndraṭaṭaka, i.e. the tank of Mahēndra and that it was situated in Mahēndrapura, the City of Mahēndra. Mahēndrapura is probably identical with Mahēndravāḍi and Gunābharā with Mahēndravarman I.

Two inscriptions in Sanskrit in archaic Pallava-Grantha characters on two pillars in the upper cave of the Rock at Trichinopoly record that a king called Gunābharā, who bore the birudas, Purushottama, Satyasamdhā and Satrumalla, constructed a temple on the top of the mountain and placed in it a linga and a statue of himself. As the Kāvēri is here called ‘the beloved of the Pallavas’ and as the inscription is found in the Chōla territory it is clear that the Pallavas had extended their dominions during this period to the region of the Kāvēri.

The record is written in the Pallava-Grantha characters of the seventh century A.D., and is a Sanskrit verse in the Gīti metre. It is somewhat damaged and can be read only with difficulty. It states that King Vichitrachitta caused to be constructed a temple for Brahma, Iśvara and Vishnu, without the use of bricks, timber, metals and mortar. Vichitrachitta is a surname of Mahēndravarman I.

Sanskrit and Tamil. The inscriptions are written on a pillar in a rock-cut cave at Dalavānūr in the Tindivanam Taluk of the South Arcot District. The first inscription consists of a single Sanskrit sloka which states that the cave-temple containing the inscription was executed at the order of Śatrumalla and named Śatrumallēśvarālaya. The second is divided into two sections of which one is Tamil verse and the other prose, and records the same fact. The name of the locality is stated to be Vēṇāṭṭu. Narēndra is only a surname of Pallava Mahēndravarman I and the reference to the donor as Tondaiyamtirvēndan confirms this surmise.

This inscription written on the beams of the upper and lower verandahs of the cave temple at Pallavaram in archaic Pallava-grantha-characters. Fragment. It gives a list of birudas of which some are Sanskrit, others Telugu. Of these Śrī-Mahēndra-vikrama, Mattavilāsa, Chēṭhakāri, Vichitrachitta, Aluptakāma, Kalahapriya, and Sankīrṇajātī are in Sanskrit and Nīlvilonaṇyaṃbu, Ventulavittu, etc., are in Telugu. Some of these birudas are those of Mahēndravarman.

This is engraved on the pillar of the Paurnami Mandapa to the south of the central sanctuary of the Ekāmbaranāthasvāmi temple, and consists of a series of birudas of the king who got them engraved such as Abhimukha, Chitrakārapuli, Vambara, Dṛḍabhakti, etc. As some of these surnames occur in his other cave inscriptions it is probable that they belong to Mahēndravarman I.

The inscription is written in Sanskrit in the Pallavagrantha characters of the seventh century, on a rock behind the Sikhānāthasvāmi temple in Kuḍumiyāmalai (Pudukotta State). The inscription is divided into seven sections, corresponding to the seven classical rāgas and was engraved at the instance of an unnamed king who was a disciple of Rudrachārya for the benefit of his pupils.

Sanskrit in characters of the southern class. The inscription is a poem by a certain Ravikirti who during the reign of Pulakēsin II founded the temple of Jinēndra on which it is engraved. It bears the date Śaka Samvat 556 corresponding to A.D. 634–35. It gives an eulogistic account of the history of Chāḷukya family especially of the exploits of Pulakēsin II who is described to have besieged Banavāsi, subdued the Gangas, the Āḷūpas, and the Mauryas in the Konkanas, besieged Puri, subdued the Lātās, Mālavas, and the Gūrjaras, defeated Harsha of Kanauj, fought with the Kalingas and the Kosalas, captured Pishṭapura, fought at the Kaunāla, defeated the Pallavas of Kāñchipuram (‘causing the splendour of the lord of the Pallavas who had opposed the rise of his power to be obscured by the dust of his army, and to vanish behind the walls of Kāñchipuram’), crossed the River Kāvēri and caused prosperity to the Chōlas, Kēraḷas and the Pāṇḍyas. The fame of the composer of this poem is said to have exceeded that of Kālidāsa and Bhāravi, thus showing that already in the seventh century the fame of Kālidāsa had spread so as to be quoted in contemporary inscriptions.

This inscription is dated in the twenty-seventh year of the reign of Rājakēsarivarman and records that at the request of a certain Puttan a grant which had been made by Skandaśishya and confirmed by Vatāpikonda-Narasingapōtarayar was renewed. The gift was originally made to the Mūlathānattu-Perumān, which has not been identified. Both the kings are spoken of as former kings. On paleographical grounds the grant may be dated in the ninth century A.D. Tirukkalukkuṟṟam is spoken of as being in the Kālattūrkoṭṭam. Skandaśishya may be Skandavarman and Vatāpikonda-Narasingapōtarayar is Narasimhavarman I.

This fragmentary inscription engraved on the north side of a shapeless rock lying to the north-west of the temple of Jeggina Irappa in the Badami Taluq in the Biyapur District. The characters are of the same type as those of the Pallava grants of Vishnugopavarman. The fragment is of great interest as mentioning Badami under the ancient name of Vatapi and speaking (l. 4) of 'the Pallava, the foremost of kings'. It refers also to Narasimhavishnu and contains a reference to the occupation of the city by Māmallā.

These inscriptions consist of a number of words in the nominative case. The characters resemble the Mahēndravādi and Śiyamangalam inscriptions of Mahēndravarman I. The language is Sanskrit. They do not contain any date and their approximate time has to be fixed on palæographical grounds. They appear from a comparative study to belong to Narasimhavarman I. Narasimha is twice mentioned. From the archaic nature of the alphabets Dr. Hultsch thinks that the Narasimha of the Dharmarājaratha may be identified with the Narasimha I of the Pallavas. The identification is made almost certain by a reference to the published facsimile of the Badami stone inscription of Narasimhavarman I the alphabets of which are nearly identical with those of the Dharmarājaratha Inscriptions. Dharmarājaratha was probably sculptured in the first half of the seventh century A.D.

This inscription records that the monolith on which it is engraved was a Śiva temple and was called the Īśvara temple of Atyantakāma-Pallava. From sloka 2 of this inscription Dr. Hultsch has concluded that Atyantakāma must be either Paramēśvaravarman I, father of Rājasimha, or Paramēśvaravarman II, his son, preferably the former. The alphabets of Atyantakāma’s inscription of the Seven Pagodas bear so close a resemblance to Kailāsanātha temple epigraphs of Rājasimha that both of them may be assigned to about the same period (viz.) the third quarter of the seventh century A.D. Among Atyantakāma’s surnames the following are given—Śrīnīdhi, Śrībhara, Rānajaya, Taruṇāṅkura, Kāmarāga.

This is a duplicate of Gaṅgāsa temple inscription and proves that the cave-temple now called Dharmarāja Maṇḍapa was in reality a Śiva temple and that it was erected at the orders of the Pallava king Paramēśvara, who named it Atyantakāma-Pallavēśvara after one of his own surnames Atyantakāma.

34. Inscription of Paramēśvaravarman at the Rāmānuja Maṇḍapa. Ibid., p. 11.
This inscription consists of the last śloka of the preceding inscription and the cave-temple on which it is inscribed accordingly was a Śiva temple having been excavated during the reign of the Pallava king Paramēśvaravarman.

This inscription on the left of the cave-temple at Sāluvankuppam records that the excavation was a temple of Śiva and that it was made by King Atiraṇachandā who named it after himself Atiraṇa-chandēśvara. Verses 1, 2 and 4 are identical with Paramēśvaravarman’s Mahābalipuram inscription. It contains the birudas, Atyantakāma, Śrīnīdhi, Kāmarāga, Śrībhara, Rānajaya, Anugraśila, Kālakāla, Samaradananjaya and Sangramadhirā. Most of these are applied to Rājasimha in his inscriptions at Kāṅchī. The alphabet resembles those of Kaśākkuḍī plates of Nandivarman II. The name Atirāṇachanda is unknown from other sources.

Nos. 24, 25 and 26 are Nāgari copies of the above.

Seven copper-plates from Kūram near Conjeevaram. The seal bears the usual Pallava symbol the seated bull facing the left. The language is partly in Sanskrit verse and prose and the rest Tamil and the script Pallava-Grantha. The Sanskrit portion opens with benedictory verses of which the first two are addressed to Śiva. Then follows a mythical genealogy from Brahma to Pallava after whom are mentioned Mahēndravarman, his son Narasimha-varman, who is stated to have repeatedly defeated the Cholas, the Kēralas, the Kaḷabhras and the Pāṇḍyas, and who vanquished Pulakēsin in the battles of Pariyaḷa, Manimangala, and Śūramāra and destroyed his capital Vāṭāpi. Of Paramēśvaravarman himself is given a long description of military exploits which mentions that he made Vikramāditya whose army consisted of several lakshas take to flight covered only by a rag. The object of the Kūram grant is a gift of the village of Paramēśvaramangalam made to the temple of Śiva which had been built at Kūram by Vidyāvinita-Pallava. The village was evidently named after the king himself and divided into twenty-five parts of which three were to be enjoyed by two Brahmins Anantaśivāchārya and Pulāśarman who looked after the divine service of the temple. The fourth part was set aside for the cost of providing water and fire for the temple mandapa, the fifth for the reading of the Bhārata at this place while the remaining twenty parts were given to twenty Chaturvedins. Kūram is mentioned as belonging to Manyavāntararāśhra of Nirvēḻūr, a division of Uṟṟukāṭṭukkottam. The village of Paramēśvaramangalam belonged to Panmā-Nādu Patmamānyāvāntarāśṭra, a sub-division of Manavirkoṭṭam.

Three copper-plates. Language is Sanskrit prose and verse; alphabet like other Chāḷukya grants. The inscription records the grant of land by the Western-Chāḷukya king Vikramāditya I, the son of Satyāśraya, (Pulakēśin II) grandson of Kirtivarman (I) and great grandson of Pulakēśin (I). Several surnames of the king are mentioned such as Śrīvallabha, Raṇarasika, Raṇamalla. Śloka 3 states that he defeated Narasimha, Mahēndra and Īśvara, the three successive Pallava kings, Narasimhavarman I, Mahēndravarman II and Paramēśvaravarman I. Śloka 4 alludes to the conquest of Kāṇchi the capital of the Pallavas. Śloka 5 states that Vikramāditya first destroyed the Mahāmallar family. At the time of the grant Vikramāditya’s army having invaded the Chōla province was encamped in Uragapura on the southern bank of the Kāvery (ii. 25ff). The date of the grant was the full-moon tithi of Vaiśākha in the twentieth year of the reign which was current after 596 Šāka, equivalent to Tuesday, 25th April, A.D. 674. (Dr. Hultzsch identified Uragapuram with Negapatam in the Tanjore District and Venkayya with Uraiyyur near Trichinopoly Town, the ancient Chola capital.)

The beginning and end of this inscription found in the Talapuriśvara temple at Panamalai are covered by a paved floor. The record which consists of six verses is in the floried Grantha-Pallava characters and is written right round the temple as in the Kailāsanātha temple inscription of Rājasimha at Kāñchipura. The existing portion mentions Aśvatāma, his son Pallava, who was the progenetor of the great Pallava family the members of which, washed their sins away by Aśvamēdha sacrifices and belonged to the Bhāradvājavamśa. Rājasimha is described as a famous king of the line who was born from Paramēśvara as 'Guha from Śiva'. Under his care the tree of Dharma is said to have thriven even though oppressed by the hot sun, the Kali age.

Twelve Sanskrit verses in the Grantha-Pallava running round the outside of the central shrine. The record opens with a benediction addressed to Ganga, and then gives a mythical pedigree of Pallava from (Brahman). It further says that in the race of the Pallavas was born Ugradanṭa, the destroyer of the city of Raṇarasika whose son was Rājasimha who bore the surnames Atyantakāma, Raṇajaya, Śrībharā; he is said to have built the Śiva temple round which the inscription is written and called it after his own name Rājasimha-Pallavēśvara or Rājasimhēśvara.

The record consisting of three Sanskrit verses in characters similar to Rājasimha's records that the small Śiva shrine was founded by Rangapatāka the wife of Narasimhavishṇu or Kālakāla whose sign was the Bull.

This record consists of a single Sanskrit sloka in Grantha-Pallava characters and is identical with the last verse of Rājasimha's Kāñchi inscription (S.I.I., vol. i, No. 24). It mentions the birudas of Rājasimha, Śrībharā, Chitrakārmuka, Ekavīra, and Śivachudāmani. Dr. Hultzsch from a study of this inscription concludes that the Panamalai cave was founded by Rājasimha and that the Pallava rule extended as far south as Panamalai at this period.

This record consisting of about six Sanskrit verses is inscribed round the plinths of the two bali-pithas recently excavated in the shore-temple. The record is not complete but contains an eulogy of a Pallava king whose attributes were Aṭyanṭakāma, Aparājita, Śivachādāmani, etc. Another verse refers to him as Rājasimha, Raṇajaya, Śribhara and Chitракārmuka and is identical with the twelfth verse of the Kāñchipuram inscription of Rājasimha. The mention in the record of the king as the ruling sovereign makes it probable that he was Rājasimha son of Paramēśvaravarman I, who bore the surnames Kshatriyasimha and Rājasimha. The two Śiva temples of the Shore Temple Kshatriyasimha and Rājasimhapallavēśvaram were evidently contemporay with Rājasimhapallavēśvaram of Kāñchipuram and named after Rājasimha.

This record is engraved on a cubical pillar in the Vyāghrapuriśvara temple at Vāyalūr. It is written in the usual Grantha-Pallava characters of the florid type used in the Ramānuja māṇḍapa and the Ganeśa temple inscriptions at Mahābalipuram, and the Kailasanātha inscription at Kāñchipuram. It gives a list of the Pallava kings in genealogical order. Beginning with the names of Brahma, Angirasa, etc., it proceeds to mention the names of Aśoka, Harigupta, Āryavarman, Bhūtadatta, etc. and a long list of further names obviously in the order of descent. These include Sūryavarman, Rūpamalla, Dhritaka Vimala Konkaṇika, Kālabhartr, Chūta-Pallava, Virakūrcha, Vishnugōpa, Skandavarman, Kumāravishṇu, among the early Pallava kings of the copper-plates. Then are mentioned the names of Simhavarman, Nandivarman, Simhavishṇu, Mahēndravarman, Narasimhavarman and Paramēśvaravarman and Rājasimha. The value of the record consists in the connection which it establishes between the Pallavas of the Prakrit charters and those of the Sanskrit charters and the connection of these again with those of the Simhavishṇu line.

The record consists of four Sanskrit verses in Grantha-Pallava characters of Rājasimha’s period and registers the fact that Mahendra, the son of Rājasimha and grandson of Lokāditya built a temple of Śiva and called it Mahēndrēśvara after his own name. The record is engraved round the smaller shrine which stands in front of Rājasimha’s Kailāsanātha shrine. It speaks of Lokāditya that ‘his valour dried up the army of Rānarasika, just as the heat of the sun does the mud.’

This inscription engraved on a slab lying in front of the Viraṭṭaṇēśvara temple at Tiruvādi records in Tamil a gift of gold and is dated in the third year of Paramēśvarapotayar.

This is not a single record but a series of inscriptions each explaining the group of sculptures below which it is put up. They are in the nature of explanatory notes denoting particular events in Pallava history. The portion relating to the events leading to the accession of Pallavamalla is very important and contains a full account of the circumstances under which Nandivarman (II) succeeded to the Pallava throne which is depicted in twelve sculptured scenes on the south wall of the veranda running round the central shrine. It is stated therein that after the death of Paramēśvaravarman II a deputation of the officials and citizens waited on Hiranyakavarman-Mahāraja for the selection of a sovereign to the Pallava throne. Hiranyakavarman, thereupon, held an important consultation with the chief potentates and his sons. Ultimately Pallavamalla the twelve-year-old son of Hiranyakavarman was selected by common consent and was crowned king under the name Nandivarman, and with the Pallava insignia and war instruments—Samudraghūsha, Khaṭvāṅgadhvaja and Vṛishabha-lāñchana. The members of the Merchants’-guild, the City-Council, and the Ubhaiyagaṇa of Kāñchi are also mentioned as having taken an important part in the above events.

Tamil record, dated in the third year of Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman records the building of a temple maṇḍapa at Sthambēśvara temple at Śiyamangalam (South Arcot District).

Tamil record inscribed on a rock in the prākāra of the Viraṭtānēśvara temple, Kīḻur, near Tirukkoilūr, dated in the fourth year of Nandivikramavarman registering gift of gold for lamp.

This is a Tamil inscription found on the south wall of the rock-cut cave at Daḷavānūr (South Arcot District,) is dated in the fifteenth year of Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman. Much damaged.

Tamil inscription, dated in the sixteenth year of Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman recording gift of gold for a lamp found in the prākara of the Viraṭṭānēśvara temple at Kjūr near Tirukkoilūr.

Tamil inscription dated in the nineteenth year of Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman found on the west wall of the Rishabhanātha temple records gift of paddy. Incomplete.

53. Udayēndiram Plates of Nandivarman Pallavamalla.
The grant consists of two parts, the first a grant of the Pallava king Nandivarman Pallavamalla in the Sanskrit, and the other an inscription of the time of the Chōla king Madiraikondu-Kō-Parakēśarivarman in Tamil.
The object of the Sanskrit portion is to register a grant made at the request of one of his military officers Udayachandra by Nandivarman Pallavamalla in the twenty-first year of the reign. Udayachandra is described as belonging to the Pūchān family and as residing in the city of Villivala on the River Vēgavati. The record gives the mythical genealogy, and the race of Simhavishnu and his successors. It describes Nandivarman-Pallavamalla as the son of Paramēśvararivarman II. The most interesting part of the grant is that relating to the services rendered by Udayachandra to Pallavamalla which included the release of his sovereign from Nandipura where he was besieged by the Tamil kings, the killing of Chitramāya, defeat of the Šabara king Udayana, the Nishēda chief Prithivi-Vyághra, and the subjection of the district of Vishnurája to the Pallava, etc. The donees were hundred and eight Bráhmans, while the grant consisted of Kumāramangala-Vellátur and two water-levers. The Tamil endorsement dated in the twenty-sixth year of Ko-Parakéśarivarman relates to the agreement of two villages Udayachandramangalam and the neighbouring village of Kānchi-vāyi to form one village of the two.

Sanskrit and Tamil. The characters of the plates belong to the Pallava-grantha, and bear a close resemblance to the Kūram plates. The grant part of the record is preceded by an account of the ancestors of the donor Nandivarman Pallavamalla which was composed by Trivikrama. After the mythical genealogy from Brahma to Ásokarivarman, the record mentions the Pallava kings Skandavarman, Kalindavarman, Kānipa, Vīrakurça, Virasimha, Simhvarman and Vishnusimha. Then are mentioned Simhavishnú called Avanisimha, Mahēndravarman (I), his son Narasimhavarman (I), his son Mahēndravarman II, his son Paramēśvaravarman (I), his son Narasimhavarman II, his son Paramēśvaravarman (II). The donor Nandivarman Pallavamalla in whose twenty-second year the record is dated is described as being descended from Simhavishnú’s younger brother Bhima varman, between whom and Nandivarman (II) there intervened the kings Bhimavarman, Ádityavarman, Govindavarman and Hiranya, the father of Nandivarman. The object of the grant which was made at the request of Brahmašrīrāja was Kōdukoḷli which received the name of Ėkahiramangalam. The donee was Jyēšṭhapāda-Sōmayājin who belonged to the Bhāradvājagōtra a Vedic scholar, and a student of Kalpa, Vyakarana, Jyotisha, Nirukta, etc., and who lived in Puniya in Tundaka-Rashtra. There is an interesting list of immunities secured by the donee. Mention is also made of local officials and His Majesty's Treasurer Sri-Paramesvara-Mahakoshthagarin.
186 History of the Pallavas of South India

This inscription found in the west and east walls of the Mukteshvara temple of Conjeevaram is dated in the twenty-eighth year of Nandivarman and gives the ancient name of the temple as Dharmamahadeviisvara evidently after Dharmamahadevi, a Pallava Queen.

This inscription written in very archaic Tamil characters consists of a single sentence in Tamil, records in the fiftieth year of Nandipottarasar an inhabitant of Pugalalaimangalam caused to be engraaved an image of Ponniyakkiyar attended by the preceptor Nagananadin.

Tamil fragmentary inscription on a stone in the Grama-devata temple at Sadupperi is dated in the fifty-second year of Kō-Vijaya-Nandivikramavarma.

Tamil inscription, dated in the fifty-second year of Vijaya-Nandivivaravarma found in Kuludikkai, North Arcot District, records the death of Kannadu-Perungangar, chief of Karkattur who at the instance of the great Bana king fought and fell on the day of the great Pallava invasion against Permanadigal and the destruction of Perungulikottai.

Fourteen copper-plates from Tandanottam with seal bearing in relief a couchant Bull facing right,
Appendix A

Sanskrit and Tamil in the Grantha-Pallava characters. Some of the introductory plates containing the genealogy of the Pallava kings are missing. The existing plates commence with the information that a particular king conquered the south, after which the birth of Hiranyavarman is recorded. From him was born Nandivarman who bore the biruda Ekadhira. Of him it is recorded that he took away from an unnamed Ganga-king a neck ornament which contained in it the gem called Ugrodaya. The inscription also gives the name of Nandivarman’s elephant as Patravardhana (v. 7.). The object of the grant was to register the gift of a village called Dayamukhamangalam to 308 Brahmans learned in the Vedas, and Smytis who were Chaturvedis, Trivedis, Somayajins, Bhattas, Shadangavids, Kramavids, etc. Provision was made for the conduct of worship to the local Vishnu and the Siva temples, and also for the recitation of the Mahabharata in the temple-hall. The Sanskrit part of the record ends with the portion which mentions that the agnapti of the charter was Kumara, the Chief of the Treasury, and the composer of the Prasasti, the poet Paramesvara-Uttarakarangika, the Tamil portion is dated in the fifty-eighth year of Kovisaiya-Nandivikramavarman and records an order which was issued to the residents of Tenkarainadu, a district of Solanadu. The donees whose enumeration occupies more than eleven plates, number 244. To judge from their titles it may be presumed that most of them were learned. The concluding portion enumerates the obligations and the immunities of taxation secured by the donees.

Tamil record. This inscription is engraved on the surface of a large boulder in the bed of the Niva river, near Tiruvallam, and is written in archaic Grantha-Tamil characters. It is dated in the sixty-second year of Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman while Māvali-Vaṇarāya was ruling the Vaḍuga-vali-Twelve-thousand; it registers a gift of land for the renewal of a temple Vaḍasikharakovil, at Vaṇapuram by a goldsmith called Aridhiran, a resident of Aḷingañapākkam in the district of Üṟṟukāṭṭukōṭṭam.

Five copper-plates written on eight sides unearthed from a hamlet of Kottamangalam in Tanjore District. The engraving is partly in Grantha and partly Tamil. The record consists of eleven Sanskrit verses and a prose passage in Tamil. It opens with invocatory verses to Viṣṇu. Then is given the usual mythical genealogy of Pallava through Brahma, Angiras, Brhaaspati, etc. Verses 4 and 5 give a panegyric account of the Pallava family. The historical account which begins with (v. 6.) states that after Virākūrcha and others had gone to heaven, Hiranyavarma became king. Then came Nandivarman while yet he was very young and his conquests over Vallabhā, Kaḷabhra, Kēṟaḷa Pandya and Chola, are detailed. The Tamil portion is dated in the sixty-first year of the reign of Ko. Vij. Nandivikramavarman and registers a gift of land which was received by the Brahmans of Nalgar. The names of the donees are then enumerated.

This Grantha-Tamil inscription is written on two sides of a slab lying in the court-yard of the Ādivarāha temple at Mahābalipuram. It is dated in the 65th year of Nandipotavarman and registers a gift of land by purchase from the citizens of Mahāmallapuram.

63. Kāṇchi inscription of Vikramādiṭya II. Dr. Hultzsch, Ep. Ind., vol. iii, p. 359. The inscription is in Kanarese prose and is engraved on the back of the pillar of the mandapa in front of the Rājasimhēśvara shrine. It records that Vikramāditya Satyāśraya after his conquest of Kāñchi, did not confiscate the property of Rājasimhēśvara temple but granted large sums of money to the temple. The inscription ends with the imprecation that those who destroy the letters of the record and the stability of the king's charity, shall incur the sin of those who killed the men of the assembly of the city (Ghaṭikaiyār).

Five copper-plates first brought to notice by L. Rice. The language of the record is Sanskrit and mostly prose. The record belongs to the Western Chālukya king Kirtivarman II whose ancestors are mentioned between lines 2-59. The object of the inscription is to record in the eleventh year of his reign, 679 Śaka, the gift of Šulliyūr and two other villages to Mādhava-Śarman. The gift was made while the king was encamped on the northern bank of Bhimarathi.

The historical portion of the grant mentions the origin and exploits of the early Chālukyan Kings, Pulakēśin, Satyāśraya-Vikramāditya of whom it is said that he forced the king of Kāñchi 'who had never bowed to any man to lay his crown at his feet'. Of his son Vinayāditya it is said that he captured the whole army of Trairājya-Pallava and also levied tribute from the rulers of Kavēra, Pārasika, Simhala, and other islands. Then Vijayāditya's exploits are mentioned and is followed by an account of Vikramāditya who immediately after his coronation, being resolved to root out the Pallavas (who are described as the obscurers of the splendours of the former kings of his line and their natural enemies) entered the Tundākarāśṭra, slew the Pallava king Nandipōtavarman, captured his trophies, elephants and rubies, etc., triumphantly entered Kāñchi and without plundering it caused the statues in the Rājasimhēśvara to be overlaid with gold. Of Kirtivarman the donor of the grant, the inscription records that, while yet a Yuvarāja, he marched into the city of Kāñchi scattered the forces of the Pallava king who had to take refuge in a hill-fort, and returned with a large booty which he delivered to his father and in due course became a Sarvabhauma.

The record belongs to the Western Chālukya king Kirtivarman II. The language of the inscription is in Sanskrit and in prose while the characters belong to the southern class of alphabets.

After recounting the exploits of Kirtivarman I and Pulakēsin II it says of Vikramāditya I, that he recovered part of the Chālukyan dominions by means of his horse Chitrakāṇṭha which had been previously overrun by the Pallavas and had obeisance done to him by them. Vijayāditya though he was taken prisoner, contrived to effect a skilful escape. Of Vikramāditya II the record says that he led an excursion to the Tunḍākavishaya, defeated his natural foe, entered the Pallava capital Kāñchi and restored to Rājasimhēśvara and the other temples, heaps of gold and rubies which had been taken away from them. He was succeeded by Kirtivarman II, the donor of the grant. The object of the grant is to register the gift of the village of Bēpattı made at the request of his queen in the sixth year of his reign in Śaka 672 on the occasion of a lunar eclipse.

The record consists of Sanskrit and Tamil, the Sanskrit portion being written in Grantha characters while the
Appendix A

Tamil portion is written in Vaṭṭeluttu characters. The Sanskrit portion after giving a mythical origin of the Pândya kings mentions Mārarvarman who is said to have performed the tulābhāra ceremony; his son was Raṇadhirā; his son was Mārarvarman Rājaśimha who is stated to have defeated Pallavamalla in battle, and performed the tulābhāra and hemagarbha ceremonies. Jaṭilha was his son born through a Mallava princess whom he had married. His son was Rājaśimha the donor of the present record. The praśasti was composed by Varōdayabhaṭṭa.

The Tamil portion refers to the grant of Vēlvikkudī by Palyāgaśālai-mudukuduchi-peruvaludi to Korkaikilān-Narkorran and mentions the Kalabhra-occupation of the country. Then it proceeds to record the re-establishment of the Pândya power under Kaṭungōn whose son was Adhirāja-Mārarvarman-Avani-Śūjāmani. His son was Śelīyan-Śendan famous for his heroism, his son Arikēsarān Asamasaman-Mārarvarman of whom it is recorded that he overcame the ocean-like army of the Vilvēli in the battle of Nelvēli, conquered the king of Kērala and performed several times the ceremonies of Hēmagarba and the Tulābhāra. His son Kō-Śadaiyan is said to have destroyed at Marudūr the army, and at Mangalapura the Mahāratha who was overcome and destroyed. Tēr-Māran, his son, fought the battles of Neḍuvayal, Kuṟumaḍai, Maṇṭi-kurichchi, Tirumangai, Pūvāḷūr, Koḍumbāḷūr, and Kuḷumbūr against the Pallava. He is further credited with having subdued Maḷakongam, entered into relations with the Ganganāja, renewed the walls of Kūḍal, Vaṇji and Koḷi. His son was Tennan-vānava-Neḍuṇjaḍayān, who is stated to have conquered at Penṇaṅgaḍam, the Āyavēl and the Kuṟumbas at the battle of Nāṭṭukurumbu. In the third year of his reign he renewed a land grant made by Palyāgaśālai-mudukuduchi-Peruvaludi to the palace singer. The agnapti of the grant was Māran-Kāri and the poet who composed the Tamil portion of the grant was Ėnādi alias Šāttan.

67. Bigger Sinnamanur Plates of Rājasimha. Mad. Ep. Rep. for 1907, pp. 63 ff. Sanskrit and Tamil in Grantha and Vatteluttu characters. The Sanskrit portion occupies four plates. After enumeration of the names of a number of mythical kings are mentioned Arikēśarīn, Ṣaṭṭa, Rājaśimha, Varagupa, and Māravarman who held the birudas Ėkadhīra and Šrivallabha. He is said to have conquered Māyapāṇḍya, Kēraḷa, Simhala and Pallava, and Vallabha; Varagunavarman, Parāntaka and Rājaśimha are then mentioned in order, the last being the donor of the grant, the object of which was to record the gift of Narcheigai-puttūr in Ālanādu to one Parāntaka of Kausika-gotra.

The Tamil portion which is written in Vatteluttu characters after mentioning the mythical and semi-mythical exploits of early Pāṇḍya kings makes mention of the Tamil translation of the Mahābārata, and the establishment of the Madura College (Sangam). Then are mentioned Parānkuṣa who is said to have conquered the Pallavas at Śankaramangai, his grandson Rājasimha Varagunamahārāja, his son Parachakrukōḷāhala, who gained victories at Kunnūr, Śingalām, and Viḷīnām, and defeated at Kuḍamūkku, the Gangas, the Pallavas, the Cholas, the Kalingas and the Māgadhās: then came Varagunavarman, his younger brother Parāntakan. Śaḍaiyan who fought at Kharagiri and destroyed Peṇnāgaḍam; then came Rājasimha the donor.

68. Madras Museum Plates of Jāṭilavarman. Venkayya, Ind. Ant., 1893, pp. 57 ff. The Sanskrit portion is in Grantha characters and the Tamil in Vatteluttu characters. After invocatory verses to Brahma, Viṣṇu and Śiva, Māravarman is mentioned as having been born in the Pāṇḍya race and is credited with having destroyed the Pallavas. In the Tamil portion his son Jaṭila is described as having destroyed his enemies at Viliñam, Śeliyakkudi, and Vellur and as having advanced against an enemy who was joined by the Pallava and the Kēraḷa. He is also stated to have captured the Western-Kongu king, entered the village of Kānchivāyil and there built a temple to Viṣṇu. He also destroyed the town of Viliñam and the king of Vēn. (Vienadu or Travancore.) The object of the record is to register the gift of a village Vēlangudi to Sujjalabhatā, a learned Brahman.

This record written on a slab built into the floor of the mandapa in front of the Vānādhiśvara temple, Vayalakavur (Conjeevaram Taluk) is dated in the second year of the reign of Vijaya-Dantivikrama-varman and registers a gift of paddy by five private individuals for offerings and lamp for the Bhaṭāra of the village.

Tamil prose and verse. This inscription is engraved in one of the stones of the well, south of the Punḍarikāksha Perumāl temple at Tiruvellārāi near Trichinopoly. The object of the inscription is to record the construction of a well called Mārpiṭugu-perungināaru by one Kamban-Araiyan, the younger brother of a certain Viṣaiya-Nallulān of Ālambākkam. The work was commenced according to the record, in the fourth year of Dantivarman of the Pallavatilaka family and sprung from Bhāradvāja-Gotra, and completed in the fifth year. The village and the tank may be identified with the modern village and tank of Ālambākkam situated at a distance of twelve miles from Lalguḍi in the Trichinopoly District.
71. Toṇḍūr Inscription of Dantivikramavarman. Tamil.
This is a Tamil inscription on a boulder in a field near the Viṇṇambārai rock near Toṇḍūr. The object of the inscription is to register in the sixth year of Vijaya-Dantivikramavarman a gift of gold by Viṇṇakōvaraiyar to the temple of Kunrānār-Bhaṭṭārī for the merit of Udāradhi and Nambi who fell in a cattle raid. The gold was received by the residents of Kīlvaḷi-Aruvāgūr in Singapurāṇāḍu.

72. Tamil Record at Uttaramallūr. _Ep. Col._, No. 80 of 1898. Fragmentary-Tamil inscription is dated in the seventh year of Dantivarman recording sale of land.

73. Uttaramallūr Inscription of Dantipōṭtaraśar. _Ep. Col._, No. 74 of 1898.
This is a Tamil inscription engraved in the south wall of the Vaikunṭhapurumāl temple at Uttaramallūr dated in the ninth year of Dantipōṭtaraśar. The object of the inscription is to register a gift of gold for digging a tank.

74. Uttaramallūr Tamil Inscription. _Ep. Col._, No. 51 of 1898. This Tamil fragmentary inscription found in the Sundaravaradaperumāl temple at Uttaramallūr is dated in the tenth year of Vijaya-Dantivikramavarman.

This inscription consists of nineteen lines of Tamil prose and is found in the _garbhaṛha_ of the Pārthasārathī temple at Triplicane. It is dated in the twelfth year of Dantivarma-Mahāraja who is described as the ornament of the Pallava family and as belonging to the Bhāradvāja-gōtra. The object of the inscription is to record that the priests of the temple had mortgaged a field belonging to the temple and in consequence the interest of forty-five kadis of paddy fell short in the rice-offerings presented to the God. This was restored by a certain Pugalṭṇāpāi-Viśaiyarāyān who redeemed the gold by a gift of thirty kadis of paddy and five kalānjus of gold.

This inscription engraved on the south wall of the Vaikunṭhapurumāl temple at Uttaramallūr is dated in the twenty-first year of Dantivikramavarman and records a certain resolution of the Village Assembly.

This inscription is written on a detached stone lying outside the temple at Tiruchāṇūr dated in the fifty-first year of Vijaya-Dantivikrama records a gift of lamp by Ulagaperumānār to the shrine of Tiruvilangovil-Perumāṇadigal in Tiruchōhinīr in Kaṭavūr-Nāḍu, a subdivision of Tiruvēṅgāḍakōṭṭam.

Tamil. This record written on a stone in the Paramēśvara temple at Guḍīmallam. It is dated in the forty-ninth year of Vijaya-Dantivikramavarman, while Vijayāṇḍita-Māvalivāṇarāyar was ruling the earth, and registers the gift of land called Nandikundil to the tank Vellēri. Out of the produce of this land was to be met the charges for digging pits in the tank and depositing it in the bund.

This inscription dated in Dantivikramavarman’s reign is engraved on a slab in the shrine of Tirumēṟṟalī in Pillaipañayam. It mentions a certain Muttaraiyan who had petitioned for certain charities to the temple of Tirumēṟṟalī and a certain matha attached. The portion recording the regnal year in which the record was inscribed is damaged.

This copper-plate grant records the grant made by Govinda III while encamped on the bank of the River Tungabhadra to Gōrava a Śaiva priest. The record is dated Thursday, the fifth tithi of the dark fortnight of the month of Vaiśāka, of the year Subhānu, Śaka 726 expired, corresponding to Thursday, 4th April, A.D. 804. The record mentions that Govinda had conquered Dantiga the ruler of Kāṇchi and as having levied tribute from him.

This is a Tamil inscription written in the rock-cut cave of Parvatagiriśvara temple at Kunnāndar koil (Pudukkotta) in the third year of Nandipōttarasār and registers a gift of rice for feeding 100 persons on the day of Tiruvādirai by a resident of Vaḻuvir.

Five copper-plates in Sanskrit and Tamil, the seal bearing a Pallava bull in a recumbent posture facing the proper right. After invocatory verses to the supreme being, the legendary origin of the Pallavas is given from Vishṇu to Pallava through Brahma, Angirasa, Bṛhaspati, Śamyu, Bhāradvāja, Drōṇa and Aśvattāma. Then occur the names of Aṣōkavarman, Kāḷabharatr, his son Chūṭa-Pallava, Virakūrcha, of whom it is stated that he acquired the emblems of sovereignty on marrying the daughter of the Lord of the Serpents. Their son Skandaśishya is said to have seized the Ghatika of the Brahmans from Satyasēna. After him was born Kumāravīṣṇu who is stated to have captured Kāṇchi. His son Buddhavarman is described to have been a submarine fire to the ocean of the Chōḷa army. After Vishṇugōpa and several other kings had passed away Nandivarman I was born who is credited with having subjected a powerful snake called Drishtivisha. Simhavarman is introduced in verse 10 as the father of Simhavishnu the latter being described as the conqueror of the Chola country. The subsequent verses repeat the names and exploits of the members of the Simhavishnu line supplied by Kasaikkudi and other plates. Two successions after Nandivarman Pallavamalla are supplied by these plates. Dantivarman was the son of Nandivarman II through Reva (Stoka 18). His son through Aggananimmati the Kadamba princess was King Nandivarman III, the donor. The object of the grant which was made in the sixth year of the reign was the gift of the village of Srikattupalli to the Siva temple built by a certain Yagnabhatta on the request of a Chola Maharaja, Kumarankuśa. A long list of exemptions stating sources of royal revenue is given. The village has been identified with Kattupalli in Ponnēri Taluk.

This is a Tamil inscription dated in the tenth year of Tellapperinda-Nandipottarayar, (i.e.) Nandipottarayar the victor at Tellār, engraved in the entrance of Grithasthānēśvara temple at Tillaṇam. The object of the inscription is to register a gift of gold for a perpetual lamp.

This inscription which is written in the first pillar in the mandapa of Sundarēśvara temple at Śendalai, records in the twelfth year of Nandipottarayar who defeated his enemies at Tellāru, a gift of land to the temple.

Tamil. This inscription which is found in the Śiva temple of Bilvanāthēśvara at Tiruvallam belongs to the seventeenth year of the reign of Vijaya Nandivikramavarman three villages which were clubbed together and called Viḍēlvidugu-Vikramaḍitya-Chaturvēdimangalam, were given away to Śiva at Tikkālivallam in Miyārunādu, a subdivision of the Paḍuvvūrankōṭtam. It stipulates that the Assembly should pay 2000 kādi of paddy and twenty Kalanjū of gold to the temple for the feeding of Śiva Brahmans, the drum-beaters and other temple servants including the singers of Tirupadiyam as well as for perpetual lamps, anointment of idols, temple repairs, etc. The mention of Tirupadiyam at this early period is significant.

This is a Tamil inscription engraved on a stone built into the veranda round the garbagrha of the Ulagālanda-Perumāl temple at Kāṇchipuram, dated in the eighteenth year of the Nandipōttarāyar who was victorious at Tēllāru. It registers a license to the villagers of Viḍēlvīḍugu-Kudiraichēriyār to carry on trade in all goods from camphor on one side and shoes on the other side. This was done at the request of Anuttara-Pallavarāyan. The Āgūapti was Kāḍupatthi Tamiḻappērarayam.

This inscription is engraved into the entrance to the Śadāiyar temple at Tiruchannambūndi near Kovilaḍi, Tanjore District and registers, in the eighteenth year of Nandipōttarāyar who was victorious at Tēllāru, a gift of two lamps to the temple.

This inscription engraved in the twenty-second year of Nandipōttarāyar, the victor at Tēllāru, in a stone in the north wall of the Ādimūlēśvara temple at Tirupalatturai registers a gift of gold for two lamps in the temple of Mahādevabhaṭara at Tiruparāyuratorai.

Appendix A

This is a Bāna inscription in Tamil found in the Paramēśvara temple at Guḍimallam. It records, in the twenty-third year of the glorious Nandipōttarasar, while Vikramāditya-Māvalivānarāya was ruling the Vadugavalimērkku, one of the members of the committee administering the Tiruviprambeṣu, purchased by a deed of sale a field from one Agnisārman and made a gift of it to the God Mahādēva of the temple of Paraśurāmēśvara for ghee and sacred lamps. The Assembly accordingly ordered that all the oil-mills in the village should be set up and the oil secured.

This Tamil inscription, dated in the sixth year of Nripatungapōtarāyar is written on a slab set up near the sluice of a tank at Valuvūr and registers the construction of a sluice by a private individual.

Tamil, dated in the seventh year of Vijaya-Nṛpatunganvarman and engraved in the north base of a ruined maṇḍapa in a rock-cut Śiva shrine at Narttāmalai refers to the excavation of the temple by Śāttan Paliyili, son of Viḍēlviḍugu Muttaraiyan.

Original plates missing. The record which is in Sanskrit and Tamil consists of about thirty verses in Sanskrit. The first contains an invocation to Vishṇu while the next five furnish the mythical pedigree from Brahma to Pallava, through Āṅgirasa and Śamyu, Bhāradvāja, Drōṇa and Aśvattāman. In the lineage of the Pallava was born Vimala, Konkanika, etc., after whose demise came Dantivarman a devotee of Vishṇu who was equal to Indra and who had obeisance done to him by other Kings. From Dantivarman was born the powerful Nandivarman, who is described as having taken the earth unaided in battle, and who had married Śankā born in the Rāṣṭrakūta family. Their son was Nṛpatungadēva who was the donor famous in other worlds, as Rama was and who is said to have been victorious in the battle of Kālava (?) and who defeated the Pāṇḍyan armies on the banks of the Arichit. The object of the record is to register the gift of three villages, Chēṭṭūpākkam, Vilāṅgāṭṭukaḍuvanur, and Iraippunaichēri to the College of Vedic studies at Bāhūr (Vidyāsthāna). The villages were freed from all taxes. The Tamil portion dated in the eighth year of Vijaya-Nṛpatungavarman records the announcement of the gift to the residents of the Bāhūr village and refers to Viḍēlviḍugu-Kāḍupatti-Tamilapēraraiyan as the Āgnāpti, and that the villages as being situated in the subdivision of Aruvāṇādu.

This is a Tamil inscription found in the first prakara wall of the Nāṭarājasvāmi shrine, in the Vaṭāranyesvara temple at Tiruvāḷangādu records in the eleventh year of Nṛpatunga’s reign that the Queen Kāḍavan Mahādēviyar made a gift of 108 kalanju of gold to the temple of Tiruvāḷangādu in the Palayanūrnādu.

This is a Tamil stone inscription written in a slab lying in a big irrigation tank in the village of Marudādu which records that in the twelfth year of Kö-Vijaya Nṛpatungavarman a certain Kongarayarnināra-Perumān constructed a bank of stones to the tank at Marudādu and also renovated the head of the irrigation channel.

Appendix A

This is a Tamil inscription found near a Ganēśa image outside Kailāsanātha temple at Paramēśvaramangalam and registers a gift of eleven kalanjus of gold in the sixteenth year of Nrpatunga for offerings to the God Mahādēva in the temple of Śailēśvara at Paramēśvaramangalam. The amount of the gift was deposited on interest with the Ganaperumakkal of Śailēśvara by Nandiniraimati.

This inscription records in Tamil that in the twenty-first year of Vijaya-Nṛpatungavarman—one Nannan Koṟṟan made a gift of twelve Kalanju of gold for a perpetual lamp to the God Mahādēva of Tiruviraṭtanam temple at Tirukōvilūṟ situated in Kurukkaikūṟram, a sub-division of Milādu. The citizens of Tirukōvilūṟ accepted the gift and promised to carry out the donor’s wish.

This is a Tamil inscription dated in the twenty-second year of Vijaya Nṛpatungavikramavarman and is found on a pillar in the Śādaiyar temple at Tiruchennambūndi near Kōvilaḍi. The object of the inscription is to record the gift of gold by a Pallava Queen to the temple of Tirukaḍaimūḍi-Mahādēva.

100. Ep. Col., No. 301 of 1901. Same year, gift by another individual to the same temple.

This inscription is found at the Viraṭtanēśvara temple at Kandiyūr and is dated in the twenty-first year of Vijaya-Nṛpatungavikramavarman.

This is a much damaged Tamil inscription engraved on a pillar on a Śiva temple and dated in the twenty-first year of Nṛpatungavarman's reign. It records a resolution of the Assembly at Kūram.

This Tamil inscription found in a niche of the north wall of the prakāra of the Saptarṣhiśvara temple at Lālgudi is dated in the twenty-second year of Kōvijaya Nṛpatungavikramavarman and registers a gift of lamp and offerings to God.

This is a Tamil inscription inscribed on a beam in the Venketēśaperumāl temple at Tirumukkūdal in the Madurāntakam Taluk dated in the twenty-fourth year of Vijaya Nṛpatungavarman. Its object is to register a gift of gold to the temple of Vishṇuḥatāra by Arigandaperumānār, son of Kāḍupaṭṭi-Muttaraiyar. The Assembly of Śīyyapuram in theŪrrukāṭṭukōṭṭam took charge of the gift.

This inscription found in the Paramēśvara temple at Guḍimallam in Kālahasti zamīndari is dated in the twenty-fourth year of Vijaya Nṛpatungavarman while Māvali-Vāṇarāya was ruling the west of the Vaḍugavālimēru. It makes mention of the members of the Assembly of Tiruviprambēdu, which is mentioned as being situated in Śilaināḍu a subdivision of Tiruvēŋgadakōṭṭam.

This Tamil insciptional fragment found on the ceiling of the mandaṇpa in front of the Varadarājā temple at Kāveripākkm records the gift of gold in the twenty-fifth year of Vijaya Nṛpatungavikrama.

This inscription found in the north wall of the mandaṇpa in front of the Varadarājā temple at Kāveripākkm mentions Māṅgāṇaṇāḍu, a subdivision of Paḍuvūrkoṭṭam and Kāvidipākkam, alias Avaninārayanachaturvēdiyamalam in the same koṭṭam.

The two slabs bear on their top a Tamil inscription and below on a counter-sunk surface a bas relief representing a warrior holding a bow and sword. These are dated in the twenty-sixth year of Kō-Vijaya Nṛpatungavarman and record the death of the servant of Pirudi Gangaśya when the army of the Nojamba attacked Amayūr, in Mēl-Adayārunādu, a sub-division of Paḻuvūrkōṭṭam for lifting cattle. (Dr. Hultzsch held the view that Pirudi-Gangarayar of these inscriptions is perhaps identical with the Western-Ganga King Prthivīpati I.)

A set of seven copper-plates having a seal with several emblems the principal figure being a bull. The language of the first three plates is Sanskrit in the old Grantha characters, the remaining plates in Tamil. The object of the record is to record the grant of Śri-Nṛpatunga, in the sixth year of his reign, a gift of the village of Pratimadēvi-Chaturvēdimalam to certain Brahmans. The genealogy of the donor is traced from Vishnu to Pallava through Āngirasa, Bharadvāja, Drōṇa and Drōni, and from Pallava through Harigupta, Aśokavarman, Kalarvya-vara, Narasimha, Mahēndra, Nṛpati, Rājasimha, to Śri-Dantivarman the father of the donor.

INSCRIPTIONS OF MISCELLANEOUS PALLAVA CHIEFS OF THE SECOND HALF OF THE NINTH CENTURY

Tamil inscription dated in the sixth year of Vijaya-Kampavarman recording gift of gold to the Vishnu temple at Góvardhana at Uttaramallur.

111. Another Tamil Record, Ep. Col., No. 398 of 1905, dated in the sixth year of the same king’s rule but fragmentary, is found in the Varadarāja-perumāl temple at Kavēripākkam.

112. Ep. Col., No. 3 of 1898. Tamil inscription written in the west wall of the Vaikuntha-perumāl temple at Uttaramallur records the gift of gold to the Mahādeva in the neighbouring village in the eighth year of the reign.

114. Ep. Col., No. 6 of 1898, found in the Vaikuntha-perumāl temple wall records a gift to Mahāvishnu, and is dated in the eighth year of the same reign.

116. Ep. Col., No. 429 of 1902; Ep. Ind., vol. vii, pp. 192–3. Tamil inscription, dated in the eighth year of Vijayakampavarman’s reign written in a long stone in a tope opposite to the ruined Īśvara temple at Šolapuram near Vellore. The record consists of two Sanskrit verses and a half in the Grantha characters and a passage in Tamil prose. The Tamil portion which is dated in the eighth year states that a chief named Rājaditya built a Śiva temple and a tomb in memory of his deceased father Prithivi-Gangarāyar. The mutilated Sanskrit portions give a genealogical account of Rājaditya and mentions Mādhavā as the earliest ancestor of his son Atvivarman, and another whose name is illegible. Rājaditya is described as the son of Prithivi-Gangarāyar and the contemporary of Vijayakampa.
Damaged Tamil inscription at Uttaramallur Vaikuntha-perumal temple, dated in the tenth year of the same king.

This Tamil inscription on the south wall of the Vishnu temple at Ukkal records in Tamil that one Sadaiyan gave 400 kadas of paddy to the villagers of Ukkal in the tenth year of Kampavarman to feed the Brahmans.

Tamil inscription on the south wall of the Lakshmi-Narayana temple of Kavantandlam records in the fourteenth year of Kampavarman that one Manasarapa an inhabitant of Kulanur in Vengai Nadu made a gift of land to the Vishnu temple at Kavantandlam. (Chenglepat District).

Tamil record in the Vaikuntha-perumal temple at Uttaramallur registers a gift of gold to the temple in the fifteenth year of Vijayakampavarman.

Tamil inscription engraved on the south wall of the Vishnu temple of Ukkal, dated in the fifteenth year of the reign of Kampavarman. The inscription records that a certain Sadaiyan gave over 1000 kadi of paddy to the Assembly of Ukkal, who pledged themselves to supply in return 500 kadi of paddy per year for some unspecified purpose.

This is a Tamil inscription engraved on a stone built into a floor close to the south wall of the Varadaraja-perumal temple at Kaveripakkam. It is dated in the seventeenth year of Vijayakampavarman and records a gift of gold and mentions Avani-Narayanachaturvedimangalam, an alternative name of Kaveripakkam.
This Tamil inscription put up in the south wall of the Lakshmi-Nārāyaṇa temple at Kāvantandlam records in the eighteenth year of Kampavarman the celebration of certain festivals at Mānasarpa-Viṣṇugṛha.

This is a Tamil inscription at the Vaikunṭha-perumāḷ temple at Uttaramallur and records the gift of gold in the twenty-first year of Vijayakampavarman for the repair of a local tank.

Tamil inscription on one of the walls of the Vaikunṭha-perumāḷ temple of Uttaramallur records, in the twenty-third year of Kampa-Perumān, an allotment of gold and paddy.

127. Ep. Ind., vol. vii, p. 93. Śolapuram Tamil inscription. This inscription in the north wall of the Perumāḷ temple at Śolapuram near Vellore records the building of a temple of Nārayāna at Kāṭṭutumbūr, that is, Śolavaram called Kanakavalli-Viṣṇugṛha identical with the temple in which the inscription is engraved. Kāṭṭutumbūr is described as being in Pangala-Nāḍu, a subdivision of Paḍuvūr-kōṭṭam.

This is a Tamil inscription engraved in one of the slabs built into the floor of the Ādhipurēśvara temple at Tiruvorriyūr. The object of the inscription is to record a gift of twenty-seven kalanjuś of gold for offerings by Pūḍi-Arindigai wife of Viḍēlvēdugu Ilāṅgōvēḷar of Koṭumbāḷūr in Konāḍu. The amount was placed in the hands of the residents of Vaikăṭṭūr, a suburb of Tiruvorṛriyūr on interest at three manjādi per kalanju per annum.

This inscription is written on a slab set up near the Village Munsiff’s savadi at Olakkūr and is a Viṟagai of the period of Kampaperumāḷ. It records the death of a hero on the occasion when the town was destroyed. The characters in which the inscription is recorded are old enough to be ascribed to the time of the later Pallava kings of the ninth century. The hero who met with his death is represented by a standing figure with a drawn sword in the right hand.

This inscription found in the slabs at Vallēśvāra temple at Māṅgādu records in the third year of Kō-Vijaya-Aparājitavarman a gift of gold for lamp and offerings to the temple of Tiruveīlīkilī-Mahādēva at Māṅgādu in Kachchipēdu.

This is a Tamil inscription engraved on a slab in the floor of the verandah of the Ādhīpūrēśvara shrine at Tiruvorriyur belonging to the fourth year of Kō-Vijaya-Aparājitavarman. The object of this record is to register the gift of thirty kalanjuś of ārkāremmai gold for a lamp to the god of Tiruvorriyur (Mahādēva) by Amatti alias Kurumbakoḷāri a concubine of Vayiramēghan alias Vāṇakōvaraiyar son of Perunangai. The amount was deposited with the Assembly of Āḍambākkam a hamlet of Tiruvorriyur and the Amiṭṭagaṇa (committee) on interest of three manjadi per kalanju, every year.

This Tamil inscription written on a stone lying in the Matangēśvara temple at Satyavēdu is dated in the fourth year of Aparājitavarman records the village of Turaiyur with its income consisting of pon and puravu for worship in the Mahādēva temple at Matangapalli in Tekkūrṇādu a sub-division of Paiyur-Ilangōṭtam by Kumarāṇḍai-Kurumbarāḍittan alias Kāḍupāṭṭi Pērariyan of Śēranādu.

This is a stone inscription in Tamil dated in the fourth year of Kō-Vijaya-Aparājitavarman, and records the gift of thirty kalanjus of gold for a lamp to the temple of Tiruvorriyur Mahadeva by Sappakkan alias Patradani who was a concubine of Vairameghan alias Vannakovaraiyan son of Sami-Akkan. It mentions the assembly of Adamakkam a suburb of Tiruvorriyur and Amrhtagantur, the village committee who took charge of the money-gift.

This is a Tamil inscription engraved in the Ardharamandaof the same temple records in the fifth year of Aparajitai gift of 100 sheep for a lamp by Porrinangai wife of Kadupattiparaiyan, a chief mentioned in a previous inscription. It also mentions the measure called the Vidavidugu.

This Tamil inscription records that in the sixth year of Kō-Vijaya-Aparajitavarman a gift of gold for two lamps by the community of the Mahesvaras which was accepted by the assembly of Manali a village near Tiruvorriyur.

This Tamil inscription on a slab inside the Adhipureśvara temple records in the seventh year of Kō-Vijaya-Aparajitavarman a gift of gold for a lamp to the temple by the Queen Mahadevi Adigal. The Assembly of Adamakkam received it on interest.

This is a Grantha-Tamil inscription of the eighth year of Kō-Vijaya-Aparajitavarman engraved on a slab built into the veranda of the Adhipureśvara temple in Tiruvorriyur. The object of the inscription is to record the gift of fifty kalanjus of ṛkarchemmai gold for offerings and a lamp by Paṭṭāṅgikanḍan, chief of Kāṭṭur in Vaṭagarai-Innambarnadu in Cholanadu. The provisions made were elaborate and included rice, ghee, plantain, sugar, vegetables, arecanuts, betel-leaves, tender cocoanuts, pancha-gavya, sandal-paste and camphor.
Appendix A

This inscription which is found in the temple of Orāmarshur records a gift of land by purchase from the residents of Iganaimūdūr for offering to a shrine called Chōlamalēśvara by a donor whose name is lost.

This inscription in Tamil verse on the south wall of the Vīraṭanēśvara shrine at Tiruttanāpi records in the eighteenth year of Vijaya-Aparājitavarman a gift of 1000 kuli of land by Nambi-Appi to the temple.

This is another inscription in Tamil verse in the same place and records that a certain Nambi-Appi built a temple of Tiruttanāiyal of granite. The verse is said to have been composed by the king whose name is not however given.

Sanskrit and Tamil copper-plates. The Sanskrit portion gives a genealogy of the Ganga-Bāṇa king Prithivipati II, surnamed Hastimalla (verses 12–23) and the information that, with the permission of his sovereign Parakēsari-Parāntaka I he granted the village of Kādaikōṭṭur to the village of Udaiyēndra-Chaturvēdīmangalam. The Tamil portion gives the boundaries of the granted land and is dated in the fifteenth year of Parāntaka I. The genealogical portion records the military exploits of Prithivipati I in several verses one of which (verse 18) says that, ‘having defeated by force the Pāṇḍya’s lord Varagūṇa at the head of the great battle of Śripurambiya and having thus made his friend’s title Aparājita significant, the hero entered heaven by sacrificing his own life.’ (It has been surmised from this that the battle of Śripurambiya was fought by the Pallava king Aparājīta against Varaguṇa and that the former had for his ally the Western Ganga king Prithivipati and that the battle ended in favour of Aparājīta though his ally lost his life in it.)

The Tiruvālangādu plates of Rajendrachola belonging to the sixth year of Rajendra, while describing the achievements of the ancestors of Rajendra, record (verse 49) that the Chōla king Āditya ‘having conquered in battle the Pallava with his brilliant army though he was Aparājīta, he took possession of his queen, the earth and accomplished his object in this direction too’. This Aparājīta is evidently identical with the Aparājīta-Vikramavaran whose inscription at Tiruttani is dated in the eighteenth year and who, along with Western Ganga king Prithivipati for his ally, fought against the Pāṇḍya king Varaguṇa at the battle of Śripurambiya.

This is a Tamil inscription of the third year of Vijaya-Narasimhavarman and records that Atimatturmarugan, an inhabitant of Pākkam and a servant of Valimadura having recovered the cattle, in a cattle raid fell in the same cause.

This inscription consists of nine lines on a rough stone slab in Kil-Muttugūr, a village in Guḍiyattam Taluk of the North Arcot District. The alphabet is in Tamil and resembles the Vatṭeluttu inscriptions. The inscription records in Tamil the gift of land and houses at Mukkuḍūr to a Brahman in the eighteenth year of Kō-Vijaya Narasimhavarman. Below the inscription is a bas-relief with two central figures of elephant and goose from which Dr. Hultsch has drawn the inference that Narasimhavarman belonged to the Western-Ganga dynasty.

145. This is an archaic Tamil inscription of the twenty-fourth year of Kō-Vijaya Narasimhavikramavarman and records the death of a hero in the service of Skanda, the Ādhirāja of the Bāṇās and who fell in the recovery of cattle lifted by three persons.

146. Vijaya-Īśvaravarman. Ep. Ind., vol. vii, p. 24. This Tamil inscription in Vaṭṭeluttu characters records in the twelfth year of Vijaya-Īśvaravarman the death of a hero who was killed by a Bāṇā chief called Kārōnirī at Śīraiyūr.

148. Ep. Col., No. 150 of 1916. This is a Tamil inscription engraved on a slab built into the north wall of the Agastyēśvara temple at Poyyanūr, Arkonam Taluk, records in Tamil the gift for offerings in the second year of Vayiramēghavarman for the temple of Tiruvagattīśvaru Mahādeva at Poygainallūr in Dāmalkōṭṭam.

149. Ep. Col., No. 152 of 1916. This is a similar record dated in the second year of Vayiramēghavarman and registers a gift for conducting Śribali in the temple of Tirukulicharattu Āḻvār at Pālakalam.

150. Kāṭṭirai, Ep. Ind., vol. vii, p. 25. This is a Tamil inscription put up on a rock near Tandlam, Arkonam Taluk, dated in the tenth year of Šatti, the king of Kaḍavas. It consists of two Tamil verses each of which states that a Pallavamahārāja built a sluice for the tank at Tandlam.
This inscription engraved in Pallava-Grantha on a pillar in a rock-cut cave at Mēlachēri, Gingeē Taluk, states that the Śiva temple called Śri-Śikhari-Pallava-vēśvaram was excavated by King Chandrāditya at Simhapura.

SOME INSCRIPTIONS IN ORIGINAL

MAYIDAVOLU PLATES

Diśha[ṃ] || Kāṁchīpurato Yuvamahārājo Bhāradāya-sagotto Pallavānam Śivakha[ṃ]da vammo Damñaka-devapataṃ ānapayati [i]amhehi dāni amha-vejayike ya [dhaṃ]m-āyu-bala-vadhanike bamhanānam Agivesa sagottasa Puvakoṭujasa Agi(ği)vesa-sagottasa Goṇāṃdijasa Aṃdhāpati (thi) ya-gāmo (Viripa)ram amhehi udak-ādim sampadato [i] etasa gāmasa Viriparasa savā-bamhadeyapa (ṛ)i(ḥa)ro(re) vitārē:ma [i] alona [kh]ādakam araḥhasan (vi) nāyikam aparām-parābaliva[dam] abhadapapesasam akūracholakavi-nāṣikhaṭ [a] samvāsam [i] etehi anēhica savā-bamhadēya-majācāya savā-pariharēhi pariharito [i] pariharātha parihaṛēpetha cha[||] jo amha-sāṣarēṃ atichhitūna pilā badh[a]karejja [vāta] kārāpejjā va tasa ambo Sārīra [m] sāsanaṃ karejāmo [i] sa[m] vachhara [m] dasamaṃ 10 gimhā pakho chtho 6 divasaṃ pāmchami 5 [i] ānati sayatti dattā
paṭṭikā [||]

BRITISH MUSEUM PLATES OF CHARUDĒVI

Siddha || Sri-Vijaya-Khandavam[ṃ]a-Mahārājassa
Samvachchār[a] ... [i] yuvamahārājassa Bhāraddāyassā Pallavānam si(r)i-Vijaya-Buddhavammassadevi [Bu]ddhi. kurajānāvi (janani) Charudevi ka [dake] viya ... (viyāpataṃ) Rājatalākahēṭ [th]ē pāniya (paniya-kupād) pād pāse Ātukassa kasita.
(Kasitavvaṃ) chhettaṃ Dālure Kūli-Mahātaraka
Appendix A

(Mahātaraka) devakula [ssa] bhagavan-Narāyaṇaṃsa amham āyu-balavaddhāniyaṃ kātuṇa bhūmi-nivat-tanā chattāri 4 amhehim sampadattā [ ] tam nātuṇa gameyi(ya)kā āyttā savva-pariharēbi pariharatha pariharāpe [tha] [ ] . . . Ānattī Rohan(j)gu[t] atti.

TRICHINOPOLY INSCRIPTION OF MAHENDRAVARMAN I

कावेऽयपुर्वसरमवर्मसुलिखामारसारमालवारा
देवो बिक्ष्य नदोप्रियः प्रियगुणांमयेप्रस्थेधिति ।
साशुस्त्रा गिरिकृत्यका पितुकुरुं हिलेह मन्येगिरी
निन्तित्तिति पद्वृविद्यामत्तां ब्रह्मणा नदीम ॥ 1 ॥
गुणभरमानमिन राजन्यनेन हिलुनेन हिलिनि ज्ञानम ।
प्रथताविशय लोके विपक्षकृते: परार्धम ॥ 2 ॥
चोलविश्वपर्य शैलोम्बिलिबियां महामिरिबियः ।
हरणामेत्योपितस्तदेवियमिव शांकर्म उयोति: ॥ 3 ॥
शिलाकारण जनिता स्वस्वचिर्य भूतिको ।
मूर्ति: कोरितियोऽवास्य कृता तेनेव शाख्याति ॥ 4 ॥
निष्ठूवय चल्य समधायि गुणभरे भक्तिः—

MAHENDRAVARADI INSCRIPTION OF GUNABHARA

महितसम सतामुमहेन्द्रताकिंवियः
स्थिरयुग कारितं गुणभरेण विद्याय शिलाम् ।
जनवनानिरामुष्कान्महेन्द्रपुरे
महति महेन्द्रविष्णु गुहनाम मुगरियः ॥

History of the Pallavas of South India

Śivamangalam Inscription

Dalavānur Inscription of Narendra

Ep. Ind., vol. xii, p. 225.
APPENDIX B

THE MAHAVAMSA, Ch. XLVII

And when that King Hattha-daṭha II was dead Māṇavamma became king. (Who is this Māṇavamma?), what family came he from, and whose son was he, and how did he take possession of the kingdom? He was sprung from the race of Mahasammata, and inherited the great virtues of that line of princes. He was the son of Kassapa, who destroyed the Thuparama. And his queen was Sangha, the daughter of the Raja of Malaya. After he had obtained the hand of this princess in marriage he lived secretly with her in the northern country until it came to the ears of Hattha-daṭha, whereupon he went over to India and having made himself known to King Narasiha, he entered his service and with much labour found favour in the sight of that king. And when he saw that the king's friendship was unfeigned, he brought his wife also to India and lived there with her, ministering to the king by day and night and another king, Kanḍuvaṭhi, with whom also he had found favour gave him such great possessions that it seemed as if the whole of that king's dominions had been granted to him; and while he was living in this way his wife Sangha bore him four sons and four daughters.

And it happened one day as the king, Narasiha, was out on his elephant on pleasure attended by Māṇavamma, he became thirsty and drank of the water of a tender cocoanut sitting on his elephant and gave the nut (of which he had drunk with the water that was left therein) to Māṇavamma thinking him to be some other attendant. And Māṇavamma took the nut that was offered to him and communed thus with himself: 'This king is a friend to me and, considered in its true light, what is there mean or degrading in eating the remnants of that which another had partaken? It can in no wise harm me, therefore, to drink this.' Then he drank off the nut. Yes, so great are the efforts of exceeding prudent men who are resolved to overcome difficulties! And the king (happening at that moment to turn round) perceived the error he had made, and fearing (lest what he had done should grieve his friend, and desiring also to repair the wrong he had unwittingly done to him) seized the nut and himself drank off what had been left in it by his friend. In such manner do honourable men always conduct themselves.

Thenceforth the king Narasiha placed Māṇavamma on an equal footing with himself, regarding food, and lodging, and honour and equipage.

And while they were living there together, a king, Vallabha, came to make war against Narasiha. And the king Narasiha reflected within himself in this wise: 'This man (Māṇavamma) has served me diligently by day and night, so that with my help he might obtain the kingdom which is his birthright. Wherefore if he should now follow me to the place of battle and lose his life in the field, his purpose, and my desire also to help him, would be of no avail.' Therefore the king left Māṇavamma in the city, and went alone to the place of battle, and began to prepare for war against Vallabha. And (after his departure) Māṇavamma thought to himself: 'It would advantage me no wise to survive the king if he should be slain in battle (as I would then be left without a friend and with none to help me). If such an event should happen, my friendship should have been formed in vain. For what purpose, besides, has the king treated me as an equal (unless he expected that I might be of service to him in difficulties)? Therefore it is meet that I should follow the king to the place of battle, and join him in the field, and share either of defeat or victory, of life or of death, with my friend the king.' And for this end he raised a large army, and having equipped it fully, he mounted on a noble elephant and set out for the place of battle, and showed himself before Narasiha. And king Narasiha was greatly delighted at the sight, and exclaimed with great emotion, 'Surely, now know I the trust I had placed on him has been rightly placed.'
And afterwards the forces of Māṇa as well as those of the king joined together, and crushed the army of Vallabha.

And Māṇavamma displayed great valour in the field of battle, beating down the enemy on all sides like unto Narayana in the battle of the gods. And Narasiha was greatly pleased with the valour of Māṇavamma, and embraced him fondly, and exclaimed, 'Of a truth thou hast been to me the giver of victory!' And he returned thence to his own city and held a feast in honour of his victory, and rewarded the army of Māṇavamma with all the honours that were due. And in course of time the king thought thus within himself: 'This my friend has left naught undone to prove his love for me; he is no longer my debtor. My debt to him must I now repay by what it is my duty to do, even though grateful men are hardly found who know the value of services done for them.' He then assembled his officers together and spake to them in this wise: 'You yourselves are witnesses of the deeds of valour done by my friend here. And now it is my duty to do for him that which will be a benefit unto him, remembering that to give help unto one who had given help in the past, is the duty of the righteous man.' And when these words were said, all the ministers replied, 'Whatsoever your majesty desireth, even that is our desire also.'

And the king then granted unto Māṇavamma an army with all the equipage and material and all kinds of artificers, and gave him leave to proceed (to his country and gain for himself the sovereignty thereof). And when Māṇavamma was leaving the country together with his army, the king wept sore as if he had been separated from his own son.

Māṇavamma then took ship and crossed the sea (with his army), and having made a fast voyage, landed at Lanka with his forces, and began to subdue the country (around).

And when Dathopatissa heard of this invasion, he fled (from the capital); and Māṇavamma entered the city and took it, and tarried not to be crowned, but straightway closely pursued the fugitive king (taking with him only a small force). (But he was soon compelled to give up the pursuit, for) that portion of his Tamil army that he had left in the city deserted from him when false tidings were brought that he had been stricken with a serious illness. And Dathopatissa also, when he heard of this defection, raised a large army and prepared for war against Māṇavamma, who, when he saw that (save a few followers) his whole army had deserted from him, and that (if he should carry on the war with so small a force) his enemy might get a chance to triumph over his defeat and his death, resolved to return to India and persuade his friend to help him yet another time, by giving him an army to conquer the kingdom. Accordingly he returned to India, and showed himself again to his friend, Narasiha, and entered his service a second time, and having regained his favour, dwelt at his court until four kings had reigned in this island.

And Narasiha thus thought within himself: 'This my friend, who seeketh most resolutely after fame, hath now spent many years of his life in my service that so he might get back his kingdom. And lo! he will soon have grown old. How then can I now reign (in comfort) and see him (thus miserable). Assuredly I shall this time restore to him his kingdom by sending my army thither. Else what advantageth my life to me?' Thereupon the king gathered his army together, and having equipped it well, gave Māṇavamma all things that he desired to have, and himself accompanied the army to the sea-coast where a mighty array of ships of burden, gaily ornamented, had been prepared for them. And when the king reached the harbour he gave orders to all his officers that they should embark and accompany Māṇavamma; but they all showed unwillingness to do so (without their king).

And Narasiha, having pondered well over the matter, resolved on this stratagem. Keeping himself so that his army might not see him, he gave over to Māṇavamma all his retinue and insignia of royalty together with the ornaments with which he adorned his person, and sent him (secretly) on board the ship, bidding him take the royal drum the kottha with him, and sound it from the deck of the vessel. And Māṇavamma did as he was directed; and the soldiers thinking that it was the king (who was sounding the call), embarked, leaving him alone on land. Then Māṇa began his voyage with the army and all the material of war, which, with the ships in which they were borne, was like unto a city floating down the sea. And in due time reached the port and disembarked with the army. And after the men had been made to rest there for a few days, he began to fight, and took the northern country and subdued the inhabitants thereof, and then put himself at the head of his invincible army and marched against the city. And Potthakaṅṭha, having heard thereof, went forth with a large army to meet the enemy. And the two armies encountered each other like unto two seas that had burst their bounds. And, Māṇavamma clad himself in his armour, and led his men, mounted on his elephant; and he broke through the forces of Potthakaṅṭha and the king (Hattha-daṭṭha), and scattered them on all sides. And Hattha-daṭṭha, the king, as he was fleeing from the field of battle, was seized by some country people. And they cut off his head and brought it to Māṇavamma.

And Potthakaṅṭha, who escaped from the field of battle, took refuge in Merukandara. And the lord of that country (from whom he sought protection), when he saw him (under his roof), communed thus within himself, ‘Yea, now for a long time has this man been my friend: how can I reject him, nor yet how can I keep clear of offence to my lord the king and to this my friend?’ And so (as he could not escape from this portion by reason of its hardship, he resolved to kill himself, and) ate of some poisoned cakes, so that he died. And when Potthakaṅṭha heard what had befallen his friend, he ate also of one of the cakes and died. Thus did the island fall into the hands of Māṇavamma, freed from dangerous foes that are like unto thorns.

And Māṇavamma then lifted his parasol of sovereignty over the island, as if he thereby sheltered the inhabitants thereof from the afflictions which had rained on them. And the good deeds that he did were many in number and of great value. Who can enumerate them all one by one? And this great and renowned man built these buildings: the terraced house called Kappagama, Sepaṇṇi, Siriat Padhanarakha Vihāra, and the beautiful terraced house at Siri Sanghabodhi Vihāra. He covered also the roof of the house at Thuparama. And he built a terraced house at the Thuparama and gave it to the Pansukulika monks. He repaired also the old canopy on the top of the Cetiya and many buildings there that had gone to decay.
APPENDIX C

THE 'AVANTISUNDARIKATHĀSARA'

The Avantisundarikathā and the Avantisundarikathāsara are two old Sanskrit manuscripts discovered by the search party of the Madras Oriental Manuscript Library some years ago. Of these the former is a prose work with a poetic introduction while the other is a summary of this work in verse. While the MSS. are interesting to the students of Sanskrit literature the poetical introduction prefixed to the prose work is of particular interest to the students of Pallava history inasmuch as it shows the literary patronage of some of the Pallava kings of the Simhavishṇu line and the connection of some of the well-known Sanskrit poets with Kanchipuram. It is agreed that this prose work was written by Danḍin and the introductory chapter gives some valuable data for fixing the date and place of Danḍin and his connection with Bhaṭṭaravi as well as the Pallava kings and their interest in architecture and literature. The literary and historical importance of the work have been discussed in full by Mr. Ramakrishnakavi in his paper on 'Avantisundarikathā of Danḍin' which may be referred to. Mr. Harihara Sastri of Trivandrum has questioned the tenability of the identity of Damodara and Bhaṭṭaravi and the relationship of Bhaṭṭaravi and Danḍin suggested by Mr. Kavi in the light of his discovery of the corresponding prose passage from Trivandrum Manuscript Library. The following are extracts from Mr. Ramakrishnakavi's edition which has the advantage of supplying a number of correct readings not found in the Manuscript acquired by the Government Oriental Manuscript Library.

श्रीः

अचन्तिसुन्दरीकथासारः

सक्तयाक्ष्यप्रीया तथापि कथयाम्यहम्।
कान्तामवनितसुन्दरीः कथयमनविष्टराम्॥ ॥ १० ॥
अहितप्रासाद्विष्टान्वयोमानवता पुरी।
काशोपुराण्या कथयाणी ककु (भ:) कुम्भजनमः।॥ ॥ ११ ॥
या सूचिबिन्दुरोगे सर्वश्चरवमितने।।
भोगलयप्रज्ञायं वसुकृतार्णेच गर्भिता॥ ॥ १२ ॥
तस्याऽज्ज्ञे बुधवात्पत्ताशिरविप्रहः।।
प्रस्वेषु महोपालः सिंहशिवण्णाति श्रुतः॥ ॥ १३ ॥
गरिंग्या स्थावरानृ सब्बनोज्जसा जेतुमानपि।।
यो निरिग्ये मुनिशाको मूम्मन्तमयापि॥ ॥ १४ ॥
अहृतूर्वी गन्ध्विवं समासम्मेक्या।। उद्धरिण्योऽहपल्लुपायिण्यदायिया॥ ॥ १५ ॥ dनुजपतिहदयमघुरे।

विभेदिद्विम्मातागितनकुकुटिष्मु।। gदददयहेतु दिश्यी।।

रक्त मन्नानमिं व॥ ॥ १६ ॥
श्रवेनामव्यदारायं कुत्तुलख्वला (व) कृतः॥।
अण्वीद्रथ केनेयं निरिताति वर्णपद्धति॥ ॥ १७ ॥
अनन्तमृदूरानन्दोकथासारः

इन्द्रिवाचसं प्रस्थूपे गन्धर्वं वनन्ते (ढ) श्रमः ।
देवेन सन्युज्ञोत्सरस्म प्रूतातमवधानः ।
अस्यान्तपुरं नाम प्रदेशे पश्चिमोत्ते ।
आय्येर्याशिलाश्रः तत्तथाय वहनो द्विजः ।

\[18\]

ततोस्मिनः सुल्ला काचित्को श्रीकंठक्रमस्तति: ।
श्रीलोकादिव्ययये पुष्पवत्ती सवस्ती ।

\[19\]

नासिक्यः मावोऽस्तक्यमुलदेवनिवेषिताम् ।
प्राप्याचलाम (ढ नाम पु) रोमधिवस्यसि ।

\[20\]

तत्पां नारायणाकसिनासो नारायणोदराय ।

\[21\]

द्रामौदर हिति श्रीमानादिस्ते इवाभव्य ।

\[22\]

स्मेधावी कविर्विधवा महर्षि: प्रभ (ढ) को बिरामः ।
अनुश्याकरोंमैतियों नरेन्द्रे बिशुध्वर्धनो (न) ।

\[23\]

श्रुताट्टिके तत्वर्मांस्यं भूगोलात्मकः ।
अनिन्द्रशिरस्य हां! कार्त्तेतनावौधमधुमयः ।

\[24\]

अनन्तप्रर्तिकेन पितोः सतपत्तर्ष्यिकायः ।
चतुर्वेदि (ढ) माईडे कस्यापि श्रमजनमः ।

\[25\]

सु दुर्विवर्तनामासोदन्यविभाषावाच ।
तस्यान्ति वसलेष्मे तेनायंमुद्दरितिः ।

\[26\]

इति श्रुतः महोपायवस्त्रवादोकलोकः ।
अनेकोमतमकृष्टमकरोद्ममासात ।

\[27\]

हरिविशेषेश्वरेशत्माचरितस्तोपः ।
अम्बिवशष्य मपालमायः सुभाषितः ।

\[28\]
प्रथमः परिच्छेदः ।

दुप्तरिवन्धनिर्देशः प्रकृत्वविभवे गुहः ।

बहतः पैठौ क्रियं तम्यासी तनयत्वथम् ॥ ॥ २९ ॥

मनोरथाः ज्यास्तेपाः मध्यमे वशवर्धनः ।

तस्तनूजाशाखः ख्यूवेदा इवाभवन् ॥ ॥ ३० ॥

श्रोवोद्धतं इत्येकास्मत्तथं वशवदिनां ।

ययोवानस्य च श्राध्या गौरिनामाववतं प्रिया ॥ ॥ ३१ ॥

ततः कर्मचितः सा गौरी अहिष्टिपिशङ्कामे ।

कुमारं दशिनामानं व्यक्तशक्तिक्षमोजनतं ॥ ॥ ३२ ॥

त सा बाला एव माता च पिन्ता चापि व्युणयत ।

अयुज्यत गरोयत्य तस्य ज्ञ्यणं ॥ ॥ ३३ ॥

सविकसः पूरे तस्मन् परचक्रपोषणः ।

घचार चुमाचारः सर्वचयं नुमाति: ॥ ॥ ३४ ॥

अथाश्रयेश्वर्यः: शाश्रेष्ठं च कुतश्रमः ।

पद्यनं पुन्यान्यरण्यानि न्यायसरिष्यानं बहुर् ॥ ॥ ३५ ॥

अथाहुः: ज्ञिनेषोप्रशान्तोप्रदत्रेपुरेन ।

संस्कृतं ध्यम्यथः: मेले निजमाप्यदम् ॥ ॥ ३६ ॥

एकदा वास्तवशिष्टस्वर्थविधानः ।

स्यपति: कष्टिद्वयो प्रणीतप्रपतिविवाहः ॥ ॥ ३७ ॥

अनलपकलितविधिता विकल्पः शिल्पकर्मिणाम् ।

अत लद्धमुनेश्वरं तद्यास्तस्वर्णं: ॥ ॥ ३८ ॥

स्तु शिल्पिवर्षोपशामाङ्गवा सुतिमार्गमः ।

मूर्त्यशक्तिमालयं दशिनमस्यथात् ॥ ॥ ३९ ॥
अभिंविन्धक यथार्थः
प्रार्थनां वित्थिकतः प्रभो न मवाह्यः
महामहुः संगमुः परशुरामः इव मन्दिरे
आस्ते मकुनः सातत्वः पुनः हि मन्दिरे
मणे: कृति तस्यासिद्धि कारणापूर्विकः
मणिवन्धे महांवः स मया सुनितस्वाना
तदालोकितवतिमहति भवति: साधु बा न बा
एततात् प्रयासेन प्रसादालिङ्गयोक्तृतः न
श्रुवा सेनापते: पुत्र: कल्यकोशपेशः
पाश्चवर्ति पररः मैलोः विभ्रोहिनि नम्ब्रायण
आर्य संभार्याभाय स्थपते: प्रण्यालयः
अपि च सृष्टि येन ते सुश्रुधामपि दर्शनम्
भिज्ञि मातृदक्षिणः केरठे मः ढिणोत्तमः
लोकोऽभावायात्स्मिः संबिदधयमो
इति श्रुवा ततः प्रोतसं भीसृष्टिस्मारेकरि
सुहितः सह तं देवं यथो तेन च शिल्पिनः
अग्नितयः कुमाभ्रोकल्लकापतिहलौः
न्युत्तमं गम्भीरशः वदनं स
ततः: सागरकल्लकाश्चिताकाद्भुक्तिनः
सेव्यमानु साक्षात्स्मास्मारिणा वनवायुः
कस्तो दारुः पद्यमल्लुः राजमन्दिरम्
गच्छन वेकाप्येनाथं प्रवेदे मन्दिरं हरे:
तर्जन्वाहुस्वबाहाचरणाम्बुशहङ्गमयम्।
उदनवता मुदाविष्टो ददस्मि मुशास्नम्॥
प्रविश्य प्रतिमाय्णं गवथा निर्विर्मलयम्॥
नाथ्यगच्छति सुक्ष्मवता सत्त्वानं मणिकरङ्गके॥
तस्यापहस्ततब्रुस्तक्षकर्मणि शिष्यया।
विनिमोक्शायं स्मिरं कुर्वनवैयङ्गर्चयं स्तम्भम्॥
तत्सन्न काळे जलोधदेशे ददस्मि मुक्तवारिजम्।
उदयप्रभाशुमातिरिरपवंडलकारी बारिवो॥
ततु प्रयासमेवायं तर्जः प्रेषितं हरे।।
चरणाम्बुशहङ्गमयस्तव यो विदायरोभवत॥
ततः किरोदो कोयोरे कुपपी रक्षाचि च स:।
मूखा तपस्वी मुतेश्वं प्राणपोदपतिंविवम॥
द्वाला दण्डिनमाचष्ट्र योहादिशुकमः सहवत॥
गोरोपुषोवषषि नन्वेतहिस्तत दृष्टवानिति॥
पश्यन्नायचर्चार्यः तेन चिन्तत्विलाका किमिवधो।
कोरुकाक्षुष्टिश्चास्ततेश्यं संवाल्यम्मुच्चकाल॥
पश्यत्संवन्धिनो नन्मममा मुनिशापत:।
पशोमय प्रमकेन माय्यं दिल्येन कौन चिन्॥
अथ वा देवमाराज्ञा प्रसादान्मुनशासनम्॥
अन्याहितमिदैं बृहत्मयम्महुस्तहे॥
ततः क्षमवतं गवथा दर्मश्यामपेशये।।
कथयामास तत्सत्तम मूताथं मूतभावनः॥
अवनितसुन्दरोकथासारः
पृथुकानि्मयतिमुनि्रदीर्ति
प्रथितां विक्रमवर्षान्ति ॥
सरसं रहसि प्रियामितिवाद्रि
सुपलेमेऽपुरुषोज्ञमप्रसादादात ॥ ॥ ६२ ॥
मुक्तजो शयं मित्रपुल्लकश्वातमकथाय भूयः
प्राणान्दे विरितसमये प्राक्तनों न कियाणाम् ॥
स प्रारम्भे सपदि सकलं समर्पणं सुहृद्धम्
शुभ्रायम्: पृथुमय कथां विस्तरेणामितिवादात् ॥ ६३ ॥
इवनितसुन्दरोकथासारः
प्रथम: परिच्छेदः ॥
Page 10, note 2.

This work traces the descent of Danđin in its introductory chapter. In doing so it brings his great grandfather Gopala as a fellow-pupil of Bhāravi whom it brings into contact with three kings of South India, namely, Vishṇuwardhana, the father of Jayasimha I of the Chālukyas of Bādāmi; of Durvinīta, among the Gangas who was his own pupil and commented up on the 15th Sarga of the Kirātarjuna and wrote a Sanskrit version of the Bhṛhatkathā and Simhavishṇu of Kanchi. These details come out clearly from the MS. copy of the prose work Avantisundarikathā, not the versified sāra or abridgement, as shown by Pandit Harihara Sastri, Curator of Sanskrit MSS., Trivandram, in a paper presented to the fourth Oriental Conference in Allahabad.

Page 11, note 2.

The discovery of these panels raises the question as to the religion of the kings and the existence of the place. Simhavishṇu was a Vaishṇava as he is described as Simhavishṇu who worshipped Vishṇu in devotion; Bhaktyārādhita Vishṇu Simhavishṇu. His son and successor Mahendra is said to have been a Jain originally and then become a convert to Śaivism through Appar. It seems likely that he was Jain as in the Mattavilasa he brings into ridicule the Śaiva Kāpālikas and the Śākyas or Buddhists. He has no reference to the Jains. His father's devotion to Vaishṇavism may explain its omission. His portrait in the Varāha cave may be due to the fact that he was there a prince with his father and like him, he may then have been a Vaishṇava. This raises the question of the origin of the place. There is little doubt that the place existed before whatever Mahamalla may have done to enlarge and beautify it.

Page 101, note 1.

The style of pillar described does mark a distinct class of pillars. If Mahamalla originated it, as probably he did, his successors continued it, and we find this kind of pillar in buildings of later times of different ages. To mark it distinctly as having been originated by Mahāmallā we want a few undoubted examples of these ascribable to his age. We cannot say we get that in Mahābalipuram.

Page 102, note 1.

There is no evidence in support of the assertion that Narasimhavarman Mahāmalla founded the town. The town had the vernacular name Mallai and in that name was known earlier, as Bhūtattālvār, a native of the place refers to the place by that name. Tirumangai Āḻvar a contemporary of Nandivarman Pallavamalla refers to the place as kaṭāl mallai-Talaṉayanam, meaning Mallai close to the sea which is otherwise known Talaṉayanam, lying on land. This last is in reference to Vishnu who is abed on the earth, as though on the sea usually, to let a devotee have a view of him in that posture. It was called kaṭāl-Mallai to distinguish it from other Mallais clearly indicating that it is an ordinary native name. This is distinct from the Māmallapuram given to it by Mahāmalla, as is very commonly the case in South India. The village Mallai became the city Māmallapuram by this rechristening. Pandit M. Raghavaïyangar has suggested, from a reference in the Śangam classic Perumbanṟṟuppadai, the identification of this place with Nirpeyarritu in the poem in the Journal of Oriental Research. This term means that which has the name of water and the Pandit finds justification for it in the name Jalaṉayanam given to the Shore-temple in one of the later inscriptions. Tirumangai Āḻvar's reference is Talaśayanam and not Jalaśayanam. It would be difficult to find a reason for the alteration. It must also be noted that Jalasayanam is given to the Śiva shrine in the inscription. While the Pandit deserves credit for the suggestion, Ntr-payarttu is more likely to refer to another place Tīru-Nir-Malai near Pallāvaram and the poem has to be examined closely to see whether this is the place actually meant. (See Indian Antiquary, 1917; The Antiquities of Mahābalipuram, pp. 49 ff.)

Page 120, note 2.

The views of the late Mr. H. K. Sastri seem to have been due entirely to a misconstruction of the sloka in the Taṇḍantottam plates and a misunderstanding of the word punah (again). The previous verse refers to the conquest of the south and refers obviously to the exploits of Simhavishṇu of the main line. From these the genealogy passes on to the descendants of his younger brother Bhimavarman. The first important character in this line is Hiraṇyavarman whose son Nandivarman Pallavamalla became a great Pallava ruler. The poet apparently spoke of Simhavishṇu as an avatār of Vishṇu and refers to Hiraṇyavarman similarly as a second avatār of the same Vishṇu (Bhuranyutējāḥ). The use of the punah (again) is then quite justified. There is no need to identify this Nandivarman with Nandi of Tēḷḷāru and create difficulties to surmount. The first is given his peculiar title Ēkadhira and he is described as a Paramavaishnava. The other is described as an equally devout Śaiva. Each of them gives himself credit for such allegiance in religion in the concluding verses. There is no room for a second Hiraṇyavarman nor is there any need.

The name of this author Perundēvanār and his work Bhāratavenha have been too readily identified with the author Bhāratam-pādiya Perundēvanār and his Bhāratam. The first refers himself and his work to the reign of Nandivarman of Teḷḷāru and therefore to the ninth century beyond a doubt. In regard to the other however we have neither the work nor any extracts. He is regarded as the author of the invocatory poems to the eight Šangam collections of which the Ahanānūru collection was made for Ugra-Pāṇḍya by Rudra Šarman. An ancient Pāṇḍya, anterior to the genealogical lists, is given credit for having got the Bhāratam done into Tamil in the larger Šinnamanur plates. This achievement is put on a footing of equality with the victory at Talaiālangānam and the establishment of the Šangam in Madura. In the face of these distinctive features the identifications of the two Perundēvans would be impossible and the Bhāratam of the earlier Perundēvan cannot be the venbā that has come down to us in part.
ERRATA

Page    Line
39      25 for Kūlimaharaṭha, read Kulimahātāraka.
42      12 for Simhavarman and Skandavarman, read Mādhavavarman.
        15 for Simhavarman, read Mādhavavarman.
71      25 for fifth, read fourth.
        29 for sixth, read fifth.
104     12 for circa 600, read circa 655.
108 { f.n. 2 } for क्षण read रक्तण.
       { line 1 } "  2 for अवारण read अवारण.
113     Gen. Table for Simhavarman read Simhavishnu.
116 { f.n. 1 } for Malapракritis, read Mūlapракritis.
       { line 8 } "  for the work, read of the work.
137 { f.n. 2 } 7 for Sundanar, read Sundarar.
       { line 2 } "  2 for vol. xiv, read vol. xv.

N.B.—A few other errors mostly in diacritical marks have not been noticed here as being too obvious.
INDEX

(References are to pages)

A
Adambakkam, Assembly of, 154, 207
 Arbitrary, 153
Aditya I, Chola king, conquest of Tampālam by, 133, 134
Adityavarman, Pallava, 83
Adivarāhasvāmi temple, royal sculptures at, 87
Adonḍachola, 25, 27
Adonḍaichakravarthi, 13, 14
Agastyaśvara temple, at Poyyanur, 144
Aggālanimmaṭi, Kadamba princess, 73, 137
Agnīśṭoma, 34, 37
Airaṇḍapallā, identification of, 45
Ajarvarman, Kadamba king, 73
Ajjhitaḥṭārīka, Kadamba princess, 72
Ālīnāḍu, 131
Aluptakāma (Mahendravarman 1), 90
Amaraṇati, 34, 37, 41
Amāṭya, 38
Amogavarsha, 139
Anantāsvāchārya, 107
Anādh—for, 33, 34, 37
Angira, 47
Ankura, a title, 21
Anniga, 145
Aparājītavrman—
Campaign against Pandyas, 142
Defeat by Aditya, 143
Later Pallava King, 141–43
Monuments of, 143
Appar (Tirunavukkarasar), 30, 31; age of the activity of, 88, 90, 159
Araisons, Varaguna encamped at, 136 Architecture, Longhurst, on the value of a study of for fixing the date of monuments, 100–1
Areca nuts, duties on, 153

Arichit (Arisil), battle of, 139, 140n
Arivaiyana, War-elephant, 105
Arivarman (Aryavarman), 42
Arthasastras, 38
Aruvājar, 9
Ashtabhujā, temple of, in Kāñchi, 126
Ashtādāspariharṣas, 38, 151
Asokarāja, 27, 28, 38
Asokavarman, 20, 47, 48, 49, 50
Aśvameṣṭha, 21, 34, 37, 126n
Aṭṭāyā, Pallava war-horse of Paramesvaravarman I, 105
Aṭṭāyā (Paramesvaravarman I), 107
Avanibhajana, identification of, 11, 86
Avanīnāraṇa (Nandivarman III), 138
Avanīnāraṇa-Chaturvedimangalām (Kaveripakkam), 154, 205
Avanisimhā, see Simhavishnu
Avantisundarikāthāsūra, 1, 10, 43, 81, 158; see also App. C, pp. 223 ff Āvamukta, Nilarāja of, 45, 47

B
Bahlīka, 18
Bāhūr—
Boundaries of villages gifted, 150n
Course of Studies offered in, 141
Endowment to, 149–50
Sanskrit College at, 141
Bappadeva, 33, 34, 35, 36, 38, 39, 50
Bhagavadajjukam, Saus. burlesque, 93n
Bhagiratha, Kadamba King, 71
Balliot-box, principle of, understood in Chola times, 155n
Bāṇa, 6, 136
feudatory of Nripatunga, 140
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Index</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>236</td>
<td>INDEX</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>236</td>
<td>Bhairavakoṇḍa, 8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Bhārata, reading of at the Kuram temple, 107</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Bhāralavena, 82</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Bhāravi, 10, 24, 43, 79, 81, 88</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>at the Pallava Court, 158</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Bhāsa, plays of at the Pallava court, 111</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Bhimavarmen, Pallava, 83, 84</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Bhogivarman, Kadamba King, 73</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Bhūta, fiscal term, 153</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Bhuvanakosa, 18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Brhat-Bānas, 71</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Buddhā, indebted to Vēdānta for his doctrines, 27, 95</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Buddhavarman, 23, 34</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Buddhism, 28, 37; Degenerate state of, 95</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Buddhyanka, 34, 39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Burnell (Dr.), 2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>C</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Camps, Pallava royal camps, 54</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Ceylon, 13</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>invasion under Narasimhavarman I, 99</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>second naval expedition to, 99, 100</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Chalukyas (W.), 6, 10, 17</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Chadadapaṇḍa, 73</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Chandalur plates, 41</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Chandrāditya, 144</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Chārudevi, 34, 39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Chāruponnēra, 145</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Chera, 17</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Chelihakāri (= Mahendravarman I), 90</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Chicaco (=? Erandol), 45</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Chintāmani, 1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Chitramaya, Pallava Prince, 112, 123, 124, 125</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Chitramēgha Tatāka, 155</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Chola interregnum, at Kāṇchi, 63-6, see also Introduction</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Chola inscriptions, details on local administration in, 155n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Chūtavana, battle of, 125</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>identification of, 126</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Conjeevaram, see Kāṇchipuram</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Copper-plate charters of the Pallavas, see App. A, pp. 163-220</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>237</td>
<td>D</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Dakshigāpatha, 18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Dalavanur, 6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Dālūra, 35, 39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Dandin, 10, 24, 43</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>At the Pallava Court, 110-111</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>158</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Earlier sojourn of, 158</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Friends of, 159, see App. C.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Dantiga (= Dantivarman), subjugation of by Govinda III, 135</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Danti-Nandivarman, 133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Dantipottarasar, 133, see Dantivarman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Dantivarman, 131, 132, 133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Reign of, 134-6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Darsi (= Dasanapura ?), 41, 62</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Dasanapura, 41, 54-5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Identification of, 62</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Dévarāśtra, 45</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Identification of, 45n</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Devēndravarman, 45</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Dhanahijaya, 45</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
|      | Dhānyakata (= Dharanikotta,.)
|      | Amaravati, 34 |
|      | Dharmapāla, 12, 26 |
|      | Dharmarājaraṭha, 8 |
|      | Digambara Jains, 11, 42 |
|      | Dharanikondapōsar, 114, 116n |
|      | Dillipa, Nolamba chief, 145 |
|      | Dramas, intended to be staged at the Pallava court, 159 |
|      | Durvinita, Ganga King, 10, 43 |
| 238  | E |
|      | Election principle of, in Village Assemblies, 155 |
|      | Elliot (Sir W.), 1 |
|      | Epigraphy, Dr Fleet on the value of, for research, 4-5 |
|      | Erī-Vārīya-Perumakkal (= Tank Management Committee), mention of, in Pallava inscriptions, 156n |
| 239  | F |
|      | Fergusson (J.), 2 |
|      | Fleet (Dr.), on epigraphy, 2, 3, 4; Lokavibhāga, 42 |
INDEX

G
Ganesha temple, 106
Ganga-Pallava theory, 132n, see also Introduction
Gangas, 4, 6, 10, 13, 41, 42
Gautamiputra Satakarni, 16, 17, 37
Genealogy of the Early Pallavas, 56-60
Ghâ'îka, 24
Godavari (R.), 37, 45, 46
Goldsmiths, duty on, 152
Gopala Aiyar (V.), 137
Gopinatha Rao (T. A.), 4, 91, 136, 140
Governmental organization of the Pallavas, 146-157; affinity to North Indian ones, 148, 148n Govinda III, Invasion of Kâûchî by, 135
Govindavarman, Pallava, 83
Govindavarman, Vishnuvardin King, 76
Grama, officers in charge of, 148
Gudimallam, 140
Gûnâbhajana (= Paramesvaravarman I)
Gûnâbhara, see Mahendravarman I
Gupta Era, initial date of, Shama Sastri on, 33
Gupta inscriptions, compared with the Pallava, 153
Gurjara, 18

H
Haribara Sastri, 43n
Harivarman, Kadamba King, 73
Hastivarman of Vengi, 45, 47
Hêmâvati pillar inscription, 145
Hirahadagallji plates, 19, 33, 35, 37
Hîrâyâya, revenue term, 153
Hîrâyavarma Mahârâja, 83, 114
Position of in Pallava genealogy, 116
Huien-Tsang, Chinese Pilgrim, 12, 27, 28, 82
Description of the city of Kâûchî, 102-3
On state of Buddhism in Kâûchî and Pandya country, 103
Visit to Kâûchî, 102
Hultsch (Dr.), 2, 6, 33
Identification of Sripuramibiyan, 142

New reading of the Bahur plates, 140n
On the age of Seven-Pagodas, 104n
On the identification of Uragapuram, 104n
On the position of Kampa-varman, 143, 144
Huns, 18

I
Ikshvâku, 17
Ilâm-Kîlî, 29
Ilâm-Tirayan (= Tôpadam Ilâm-Tirayan, 21, 23, 27, 29, 36
Ilâm-pûltî, revenue term, 152
Ilavar, 152
Indrabhattârakavarman, Vishnu-kuṇḍin King, 76
Inscriptions of the Pallavas, see App. A, pp. 163-220
Irâivanâr - Âhâppiṟṟi, Commentary on, 124

J
Jaina temples in Kâûchî, 103
Jayavarman, 37
Jouveau-Dubreuil—
On the origin of Pallavas, 19
On the nature of the Gupta invasion in the South, 44-5
On the Vishnuvardin origin of Pallava Art, 77-8
On Uragapuram, 104
On Pallava painting, 92-3
On Pallava styles of architecture, 91
Jyêšṭapada Somâyâji, Brahmin Scholar, attainments of, 129-30

K
Kadambas, 24, 69-73
Kadanmallai, see Mahâbalipuram
Kailásanâtha temple (= Râjasimhâsvara), 8, 13
Kâdavan-Mahâdêviyar, Queen, 200
Kadavas, 17
Kakutstharvarman, Kadamba King, 53, 72
Kâlabhârtti, 47, 48, 49, 50
INDEX

Kalabhras, vanquished by Simha-vishnu, 84, 85
Identification of, 85n, 120
Significance of in Pallava History Introduction
Kalavali-Närpatu, 30
Kaljar, 25; Relations with Kalabhra, 26
Kalumlam, battle of, 30
Kāmaṇḍalaka, Nitisāra of, 148n.
Kamāra, 38
Kampaperumāḷ (= Kampavarman), 144
Kampavarman (= Vijayakampavarman), 132-4
Kāṇagopā, 39
Kānchipuram, Pre-Pallava history of, 15-31
Hiuen-Tsang in, 102-3
Invasions of the Chalukyas into, 89, 105, 138
Rashtrakutas invasions into, 126, 127
State of learning in, 71, 110-11, 157-58
Temples of, 109-10, 114, 131
Under Karikāla, 28-30
Under the Pallavas of Prakrit Charters, 33 ff
Kangavarman, 71
Kanjanur, ancient name of, 87
Kāḷapikas, 10
Life of, as described in Mattavilasa-prahasaṇa, 94, 95
Karikālacholā, 9, 28, 29, 31, 55
Kārnāṭakas, identification of with Kalabhras, 85n Kārpaṇṭa, 130
Karuvar, dest. of, 29
Kāṭṭirai, 144
Kāṭunukturāṭra, Pallava Musical Instrument, capture of, 121
Kauṭiliya, Arthaśāstra of, 148n
Kāveṭhipattinam, 9
Sea-trade with, 26
Kāṣyapardasa, of Dandin, 78, 111, 112
Reference to Kāṇchi in, 111
Kāṭuṃniṃṭumṣa, 18
Kērālaputras, of Asokan inscription, 28
Kēsavaperumāḷ temple, at Kuram, 131
Kēṭāvāṅkhadavāja, Pallava royal emblem, 121
Kēṭiḷḷi, Chola chiefs, 21, 29, 30
Kēḷmēḷilangai, 7
Kiriṭārjunīya, 78, 81
age of, 158
Kirtivarman, raid on Kāṇchi by, 122
Kōḍukollī (= Ekadharamalam), 130
Kōḍumbalūr, battle of, 123
Kōṇḍaṃudī plates, compared with Mayidavolu plates, 36
Kosala, 44
Kōṭṭalakas (Tam. = Kottam), 148
Kōṭṭams, division of in Toṇḍaṃḍalam, 25, 147
Names of, 147n
Kōvūr Kēḷḷa, 29
Krishna Sastri (H) —
Duration of the reign of Pallava malla, 119
Identification of the reliefs at Mahābalipuram discussed, 87
On the Omgodu plates of Simha-varman, 67
Krishnaswami Aiyangar, on the origin of the Pallavas, 4, 17-18
Krishnavarman, Kadamba King, 72, 73
Kshatrapas, southward advance of, 53
Kshatryasimhapallavēṣvara, at Mahābalipuram, 13, 110
Kubēra, of Dēvarāstra, 45
Kubja-Vishnuvardhana (E. Chalukya), 89
Kudamukku (Tirukudamukku) (= Kambhakonam), battle of, 140
Kudavāyi Kōṭṭam, identification of, with Kodavaśal, 30
Kulōṭtungachōla, 25, 26, 27
Kulōmūr, battlefield, 123
Kundukāra, Village of, 140n
Kurāṇḍarkovil, Pudukotta, 131
Kuntala, 53
Kārām, Assembly of, 154
Kuram plates, battle of Peruvaḷanallūr, description in, 105, 105n
Kurugōdu, battle of, 137
Kurumbabhuṁi (= Toṇḍaṃḍalam), 27
Kurumbas, 14, 24, 25, 26, 28
Subjugation of, 27
Kurunilamannar, 25
Kustnalapura, Dhanamjaya of, 45
INDEX

L
Land-Survey, in Pallava records, 149-50
Literature, value of, for Pallava History, 8-13
Impetus given to, by the Pallavas, 157-61
Lōkavībhāga, Jaina work, 11, 42-3, 66-7

M
Mackenzie (Col. C.), work of, 26
Mackenzie MSS., 1, 24-5
Mādhava II (W. Ganga), 42
Mādhavavarman I, Vishnukundin
King, 76
Mahabalipuram — Seven Pagodas, Māvalivaram, Mallai, Kadaṇmallai, Mahāmallapuram, 2, 7, 8, 13, 39
Discussion on the age of, 101-2
Monoliths at, 100-2
Naval base for Ceylon invasions, 99
Port of, reference in Tirumangai Alavār to, 99, 99n, 100
Royal statues at, 87-8
Mahēndrapatēsadhīrājan, see Mahēndrabharman I, 88
Mahākāntāra, Vyāgarāja of, 44, 45
Mahāmallai, see Narasimhavarman I
Mahāmallapuram, see Mahabalipuram
Mahavamsa, 13, 98; Account relating to Māṇavamāṃ, App. B.
Mahāyāna Buddhism, State of, at Kānchi, 103
Mahēndragiri, 45
Mahēndrapāla, 18
Mahēndrapura (= Mahēndravāḍi), 91
Mahēndratatāka, Pallava tank at Mahēndravāḍi, 91
Mahēndravāḍi, 7, 13
Vishnu temple at, 90, 91
Mahēndrabharman I, 6, 8, 10, 48, 81
Literary achievement of, 93-4
Military events, 89
Painting and music, under, 92-3
Reign of, 88-96
Religious views of, 90, 91
Style of architecture, 91-2
Temples of, 90
Mahēndrabharman II, 103-4
Mahēndravikrama, see Mahēndrabharman I
Mahēndravishnavṛha, Pallava temple at Mahēndravāḍi, 91
Mahipāla, 18
Mālanādu, 85n Malavas—
Defeated by Simhavishnu, 84, 85
Identification of, 85n Mallai (= Mahābalipuram), 138
Māmalla style of architecture, 101
Māmandur, Pallava cave at, 6, 7
Tank at, Pallava origin of, 155
Māmbākkam, 149
Maṇali, ancient name of, 87
Assembly at, 154
Māṇavamāṃ Ceylon Prince, 98
At the Pallava court, 99
Mānḍagapaṭṭu, Pallava monument in, 6, 7
Importance of, 91n
Māṇḍhūtrivarman, Kadamba King, 71
Mangala, Nolamba King, 145
Māṇikkavāsagar, age and position of, 160
Maṇimangala, battle of, 97
Maṇimēkāḷai, 21, 29, 30
Maṇipālavanam, 21, 22
Maṇḍai, battle-field (= Mannai-kudī, Maṇnikurichi, Maṇa-kudī), 123, 126
Māntarāla, of Kōrala, 45
Mārān Sadaiyan, Pandyan King, incursions of into Tondamāndaral, 136
Marriages, fee on, 152
Mātridattā, 158
Maṭṭaviḷāsa, see Maṭṭavilāsa
Maṭṭaviḷāsa Prahasana, 10, 11, 81
Contents of, 93-4
Light thrown by, 94-6
Mayyaduvaḷī Plates of Sivaskandavarman, 19, 33, 37, App. A.
Mayilai (= Mylapore), Pallava Capital, under Nandivarman III, 138
Mēḷachēri, Pallava temple at, 7
Melanga, identity of, 38
Menmatuṟa, 54, 55
Molo-kiu-chi (= Pandya country) visit by Hiuen-Tsang, 103
Mrigēśavarman, 71, 72
INDEX

Mudrārūkshasa, mention of Danti-varman in, 159
Muktesvara temple of, at Kāñchi, 131
Mūlāsthāna temple of, at Tirukkalukkunram, 54
Music, inscriptional treatise on, at Kudumiyanmalai, 93
Muttaralyan, 6, 140

N
Nāgas, 19, 20, 21, 22, 30, 50, 51, 52
Nālanda, University of, 12
Nālāyiraprabhandha, 11, 81
Nāḷḷārū, battle of, 137
Nāḷukaviperumāl ( = Tirumangai Āvār), 131
Nambiyāndar Nambi, 160
Nandikkalambakam, 24, 81, 82
Contents of, 136-8
Nandipōtarāyar, 133, see Nandivarman III
Nandipōtavarman, see Nandivarman II, Pallavamalla
Nandipōtārāsār ( = Nandivarman), 138
Nandipura ( = Nandipuravinnagaram), siege of, 124
Nandipuravinnagaram ( = Nathankovil Nandipura), 13, 124
Nandivarman III, 11, 46, 47, 82
Campaigns against the Pandyas, 137
Events of the reign, 136-9
Nānnuṅkan Tiruvandādi, 96
Nanniga, 145
Narasimhacharya (R.) on Loka-vibhāga, 43
Narasimhavarman I ( = Mahāmalla), 13
Ceylon invasions, 98-100
Monuments of, at Mahābalipuram, 100-2
Raid on Vāṭāpi, 98
Reign of, 97-103
Narasimhavishnou, see Rājasimha
Narayana, temple of, at Dālura, 161
Narēndra ( = Manēndravarman I), 90
Narēndrasēṇa, 72
Nāṟṟinaṟi, 24
Nāyanaṁras, age of, 78
Nedumārān, Pandyan king, conversion of, to Saivism, 159
Neduvayal, battlefield, 123
Nellūr ( = Nellore), battle of, 125
Nelvayipakkam, 149
Nelvēli, battle of ( = Nenmali), identification of, 125
Nenmaliyipakkam, 149
Nillarājā, of Āvamukta, 45, 47
Nimbavana—
Battle of, 125
Identification of, 126
Nītīśāra, 148n
Nolambas, 145
Nojamavāḍī thirty-two thousand, 145
Nṛpātungapōtārayar ( = Nṛpa-tungavarman), 139
Nṛpatungavarman, 139-42
Campaigns against the Pandyas, 139-40
Educational endowments under, 141
Extent of Empire during, 140
Rashtrakuta descent of, 139

O
Olakkūr, destruction of, 144
Orissa, 44

P
Pahlavas, distinct from Pallavas, 15, 17-18, 22
Painting, vestiges of Pallava, at Sittanavasal, 92-3
Palakkada, 41
Identity of, 54n, 55
Pālakka, Uygrasena of, 45, 47
Palayārū, battle of, 137
Pallava-Chalukya conflicts—
Beginnings of, 88
Supposed origin of, 89, see also Introduction
Pallava art, origin and evolution of, 161
Pallava temples, evolution of, 161
Pallavamalla, see Nandivarman II
Pallavamalla ( = Nandivarman II), 113, 114, 116n, 119-31
Chalukyan invasion of Kāñchi, 121-2
Duration of reign of, 119-20
Military events, 123-8
Religious leanings 127-8
State of learning under, 128-30
Pallavanichcharam, 13
INDEX

Pallavaram, 6, 7, 13
Pallava rule, general considerations of, 146-61
Pallavas—
  Administration of, 147-57
  Administration of, 161
Early Pallavas of the Prakrit Records, 32-40
Great Pallavas, 79-131
History on the research on, 1-4
Later Pallavas, 132-45
Literature under, 157-61
Materials for the history of, 4 ff
Of the Sanskrit plates, 41-69
Pallava inscriptions and copper plates, App. A, 163-214
Pallava rule in S. India, general reflections, 146-61
Theories of the origin of, 15-25, also Introduction
Pānarāṣṭra, 12
Paramēśvaratākā, Kuram, 155
Paramēśvaravarman II, 111-2
Paramēśvaravarman I, 41, 104-8
Paramēśvaravīṇṇagaram, see Vai-kuntha Pērmal temple, Kāṅchi, 13
Origin of, 131
Parīpāadal, astronomical details in, 9
Parīyalā, battle of, 97
Parthasarathi temple, Inscription at, 135
Pallava origin of, 135n
Referred to by Tirumangai Āḻvār, 135
Parthian home of the Pallavas, 25
Pāṣupatās, 95
Pāṭalikā (= Pataliputra), 12, 44
Patanjali, reference in, to Kāṅchipura, 157, 158
Periyapurāṇam, 1, 12, 90, 98
Account of the raid on Vaiṭāpi, 98, 122
Periyatirumadāl, 131
Periyatirumūḷi, 10n
Persian home of the Pallavas, 25
Perumānāṟṟuppadai, condition of Kāṅchi, description in, 28, 29
Perundēvanār, 82; identity of see special Note by Editor
Perungrū, Assembly of, 154
Peruvanallūr, battle of, 105
Pikira, 41, 44
Pilivaḷai, Naga princess, 30

Pingalandai, on the Pallavas, 10
Pishtāpura, 45
Poduka, 38
Pollachi, 45
Potters, duty on, 152
Poygaiyar, identity of with Poygaī Āḻvār, 30
Prabhāvati Gupta, 72
Prakrit charters, Jouvesu-Dubreuil on their age, 56
Prithivipathi I, Western Ganga, military exploits of, against Varuṇaga, 142
Prithivisēna I, Vakataka, 53
Southern conquest of, 71, 72
Prithivi Vyāgra, Nishāda chief, 125
Prithudaka (= Pehoa), 18
Profession taxes, under the Pallava kings, 152
Pulikēśin (II), 89
Pullalūr (= Pallur and Polilore), battle of, 89
Pullasarmaṇ, 107
Pulumāvi, 34
Purāṇāṇuṟu, 24, 29
Purushōṭṭama, (= Mahēndra-varman I), 90
Pūsālār Nayanār, story of, 109, 109n
Pūsāli, family of, 141
Pūthāḷi, revenue term, 152
Pūvalūr, battlefield, 123

R
Raghu, Kadamba, 71
Rahasyatikādas (= Privy-councillors), 148
Rājakēsari-varman (= Aditya I), 133
Rājasēkharai, 18
Rājasimha, Pandyan king, 159
Rājasimha (= Narasimha-varman II), 6, 48
Danṭin at the court of, 111n
Literature under, 110-11
Monuments of, 109
Reign of, 108-12
Surnames of, 108
Rājasimhēśvara, see Kailāsa-nāṭha temple
Rājavarma (= Rājasimha), 110
Ranakrishnakavi (M.), 221
Rāma Ārman, 159
Rānāmalla, Pallava Prince, 114, 116n
Rangacharya (M.), on Dandin's connection with Kāñchi, 110, 111
Rangapatāka, Pallava Queen, Siva shrine at Kāñchi built by, 108, 108n
Rasanāyagam, theory of, examined, 21
Rāṣṭrakūṭa, invasions on Kāñchi, 126–7
Marriage alliance with Pallavas, 127
Rāṣṭras (= mandala), 148
Ravivarman, Kadamba, 72, 73
Rea. (A.), on the origin of the Pallavas, 25
Rēva, Rāṣṭrakūṭa Princess, 127, 131
Rice (L.), on the Parthian origin of the Pallavas, 17
Rudrāchārya, 93
Rudradāman, 16, 19, 20, 21
Rudran Kaṅñanār, 9, 14, 28, 36
Rudrasimha (III), Mahākṣhatrapa, 53
S
Sābaras (= Sauras), 125
Sābhās (= Village-Assemblies)—Activities of, 155–7
Committees of, 156
Different types of, 154
Distribution of, in the Pallava Kingdom, 153–7
In Chola times, 155n
Membership of, 154–5
Sakas, 17
Śākyabhikshus, 10, 95
Śālankīyas, 47, 73–6
Religion of, 75
Relation of, with the Pallavas, 75
Salt, manufacture of, royalty on, 151, 152
Samāṇas, at Madura, 160
Sambandar, see Tirugnāna-Sambandar
Samudraghoṣha, Pallava war-drum, 121
Samudragupta, 22, 32, 35, 39, 44–7, 52
Śangam works—Light thrown by, 9
Testimony of, 8, 9, 22n, 28, 36
Śangharāmas, in Kāñchi, account of, by Hiuen-Tsang, 103
Śangramamalla, 114, 116n
Śanka, Rāṣṭrakūṭa Princess, 138, 139
Śankaragrāma, battle of, 125
Śankaramangai (= Sankaragrāma) Battlefield, 123
Identity of, 126
Śankīraṇājāti (= Mahēndravarman I), 90
Sanskrit inscriptions, Dr. Fleet on, 5
Santivarman, Kadamba King, 71
Sarvanandi, 66
Satahaniratta (= Sātahani-Āhara), 34
Sātavāhanas, 28, 36, 39, 51, 52
Satrumalla (= Mahēndravarman I), 11
Satrumalleśvarālaya, Pallava temple, 13
Śattan-Palijyili, Muttaraiya chief 140
Śatyasandha (= Mahēndravarman I), 90
Śatyasēṇa (Śvāmi), 52
Śekkilār, sources of, for writing Periyapurāṇam, 160
Senganṇan, 30, 31
Sēṭṭupākkam, 149
Seven Pagodas, see Mahābali-puram
Shama Sastri—On the initial date of Gupta era, 33, 60
On the date of Talgunda Pillar inscription, 71
Shepherds, duty on, 155
Shore Temple, at Mahābalipuram, 109–10
Śiddhāpura, 28
Śilabhadra, 12
Birth place of, 103
Simhaḷa (= Ceylon), 84
Simhapota, Nol-Chief, 14
Simhasēṇa, 12
Simhavarman, 12, 42, 43, 44
Simhavishṇu (= Avanisimha) Achievements of, 84
Bas-relief of, 87, 88
Dynasty of, 82–112
Regin of, 10, 43, 44, 47, 49, 82–8
Religious learnings, 86
Sanskrit culture in the court of, 84, 158
INDEX

Simhavishnuchaturvedimangalam, 87
Simhavishnupotarayan, see Simhavishnu, 79
Simmavinupotadhiraj, see Simhavishnu, 87
Singavaram, 7
Sivayalirnamadai, 131
Sirutonda (= Paranjoti), 98
Sittannavasal, Pallava vestiges in, 7
Sivakandanaga, 19, 20
Sivakandavarman, 23, 29, 35, 36, 37, 39, 44, 48, 50
Siyamangalam, cave-temple at, origin of, 86
Skandanaga, 51
Skandasithya, 52, 53, 54
Skandavarma, 43, 48, 55
Srimalla, 114, 116 n
Sri-Mara Parachakakolagehala, Pandyan King, 140
Srinivasa Aiyangar, (P. T.), 4, 126
Sripurambya (= Tirupurambyam)—
Battle of, 142
Identity with Sripurambyam, date of, 146
Sriskhari-Pallavesvaram, Pallava temple, 144
Sthavira school of Buddhism in Kanchi, 103
Stupas, Asoka’s stupas in Kanchi, 103
Subramanya Aiyar (K V.), on the reign of Pallavamalla, 116, 119, 123 n
Sudraka, earlier works of, nature of, 159
Sundarar, position and work of, 160
Suprayoga (R.), 149 n
Suvarama, battle of, 97
Sureshtra, 20
Suvavajundur, 125
Suvisaka, Pallava minister, 19, 20
Swamidatta, of Kottura, 45
Swamikannu Pillai, on the astronomical details in the Puripadai, 9
Svaminatha Aiyar, Pandit on the reading of Kajavar in Tamil MSS., 85 n

T
Tambrapa (= Tambrapathana) 41, 54, 55
Tanks, excavation of, by the Pallavas, 155-6
Tank Supervision Committee, 156
Tarupavachaspathi, comment by, 111
Tathagatha, in Kanchi, 103
Taxation and revenue—
Compared with the Gupta, 153, 153 n
Sources and nature of, under Pallavas, 150-54, 151 n
Tellargernda Nandivarman, 136, see (= Nandivarman III) Temples—
At Kanchi, 109, 131
Earliest Pallava inscriptional reference to existence of, 161
Evolution of, 161
Impetus to temple building, 159
Mahabalipuram, 88, 100-2, 107-8
Management of, by village-assemblies, 156, 157
Monolithic temples, 7
Tevaram hymnists, 10, 11, 30, 159-160
Tirayaneeri, 155
Tirayar chiefs, identity of, 23, 24
Tirthikas, 148
Tirugna-Sambandar, 30, 95
Tirukkalukkonam, Pallava cave in, 7, 54
Tirukkolvai, 160
Tirukudamukku (= Kumbhakonam), 140 n
Tirukolilur, Assembly of, 154, 201
Tirukuruundaikam, 131
Tirumalaisai Ajvar, age of, 96
Tirumangai Ajvar, 31, 39
Allusion to victories of Nandi-varman II, 123-4
Mention of Pallava war instruments by, 121 n
Reference to Triplicane temple in, 135, 160
Works of, 130-31,
Tirumangai, battlefield, 123
Tirumukkakayam (see on Royal messages), 152
Tirunariyur, 31
Tirunavukkarasu, see Appar
INDEX

Tirunedundandakam, 131
Tirupurambiyam (=Sripurambiyam), battle of, 142
Tiruttondatogai, 160
Tiruvheka, temple of, at Kāñchi, 29
Tiruvellukkārirukkai, 131
Tiruviprambēdu, 154
Assembly of, 199
Tiruvōrīyur, Assembly of, 154
Toddī-drawers, duty on, 152
Toṇdāmaṇḍalam (= Tūndakāraśṭra) 14, 20, 26, 27, 34, 36
Conquest of, by Aditya Chola, 133, 134.
Division of, into Districts, 147n
Invasion into, by Vikrāmdētya II, 121
Tōndamaṇḍalapattayam, 22n, 23n
Toṇdāmān Iļam-Tirayyan, 9, 13, 21, 22, 24, 28, 29, 30, 35, 51
Toṇdayar, 9, 17
Trīvikrama, pārasati composer, 130
Trṇayana Pallava, 145
Tūndakāraśṭra, see Toṇdamaṇḍalam, 36, 121
Tūndakāvishayaya, see Toṇdamaṇḍalam
Tungavarman (=Nripatungavarman), 141

U

Udayachandra, Pallava General, exploits of, 123-26
Udayana, Sabara King, 125
Ugrakopan (=Nandivaran III), 138
Ugraperuvaljudi, 29
Ugrasēna, of Palakkā, 45, 47
Ukkal, Assembly of, 154, 205
Ulaviyakūlī, 152, 152n
Undavalli caves, their origin, 78
Upārikara, 153
Urapuran, 104,
Identification of, 104n
Urattūr, 149
Uttaramallūr, 154
Assembly of, 195
Pallava tank at, 155, 156
Uttarapada, 18

V

Vaṅgai, battle of, 137
Vāgūr (=Bahūr), 150
Vaṅkunthaperumāl temple, Kāñchi
Construction of by Pallavamalla, 131
Sculptures in, 114
Their interpretation, 115, 116n
Vāŋjapēya, 21, 34, 37
Vāṅkātas, 52, 53
Valaiyavan, 21, 30
Vallam, Pallava monument at, 6, 7
Varaguṇa (II), defeat at Sripurambiyam, 142
Varaguna Mahārāja, campaigns in the Pallava territory; 135-7
Varatungan (=Nandivaran III), 138
Vāśishtiputra Palumāvi, 37
Vātāpi (=Badami), 97
Capture of, by Narasimhavarman I, 97, 98
Vayallūr, pillar genealogy of, 49
Vayiramēga (=Dantidurga), at Kāñchi, 126-7,
Allusion to in Tirumangai Alvār’s hymns, 126n
Identity of 126n, 127
Vayiramēghatāṭika, Pallava Tank at Utaramallūr, 144, 155
Vayiramēghavarman, Pallava, position of, in Pallava genealogy, 141, 144
Vayirmeghvāykkal, P a l l a v a channel, 144
Vēgavati (R.), 124
Vēḷḷāru, battle of, 137
Velḷēri, 155
Vēngi, identification of, with Pedda Vengi, 16, 45, 47, 74
Venkayya—
Identification of Dasanapura, 62
On Chola interregnum in Pallava History, 63-4
On the origin of the Pallavas, 16
Vichitrachitta (=Mahēndravarman I), 90
Vidētīvidugu (=Nandivarman III), 138
Vidyāvintā Pallava (=Paramēśvaravarman I), 107
INDEX

Vihāras, in Kāñchipuram, 95
Vijaya Budhavarman, 39, 44
Vijayadēvavarman, Salankayana King, 73
Vijayāditya Māvalivānarayar, Bana King, 136
Vijaya-Iśvaravarman, 145
Vijayanandivarman, Salankayana King, 74
Vijayanandivikramavarman, see Nandivarman III
Vijayaskandavarman, 34, 35, 39, 48
Vijayaskandavarman, Salankayana King, 74
Vikramāditya, Bana Chief, 138
Vikramāditya, I, Southern invasion of, 105
Vikramendravarman I, Vishṇu-kundin King, 76
Vikramendravarman II, Vishṇu-kundin King, 76
Vīḷangāttangaduvanūr, 149, 150

Village-boundaries, precautions in the marking of, 149
Vilvala (=Villivalam), 124
Vinukonda, 75
Vīrakūrcha (=Vīrakorcha), 20, 48, 50, 51, 52, 54
Vīrattānēśvara temple, at Tiruttani, 143
Vīrattānēśvara temple, at Tiruvadi, 131
Vishayikas (=Viceroy), 148
Vishṇugōpa, 22, 23, 32, 33, 35, 39, 44, 47
Vishṇukūḍīns, 75-78
Genealogy of, 78
Relation with the Pallavas, 77
Rock-cut temples attributed to, 77
Vishṇurāja (=Vishṇuvardhana III, E. Chalukya); 125
Vishṇuvardhana, 10, 43
Vishṇuvarman, 73
Vyāgrarāja, 45