PREFACE.

THE collection of Egyptian Antiquities in the Fitzwilliam Museum has been formed by donations from Members of the University of Cambridge and others, and by purchases made by the Syndics. The valuable mummy and coffin of Pa-kep, presented by H. R. H. the Prince of Wales, the granite cover of the Sarcophagus of Rameses III., by Belzoni, the granite sarcophagus of Hunefer, a scribe, by Messrs Hanbury and Waddington, and the coffins of Nesi-pa-ur-shefi by Messrs Yorke and Leake of Trinity College, give to this collection, though numerically small, an importance possessed by no other of the same size. During the last six years a considerable number of smaller but typical objects have been added to the collection. In December 1886, the Vice-Chancellor, Dr Swainson, Master of Christ's College, informed me while in Egypt that a sum of £100 had been voted by the University for the purchase of Egyptian antiquities and asked me to expend this money as advantageously as possible. With the permission of Dr Edward A. Bond, C.B., Principal Librarian of the British Museum, I did so, and purchased as large a number of good specimens of classes of objects which I knew to be unrepresented in the collection of the Fitzwilliam Museum as the funds placed at my disposal would allow. These were exhibited at a meeting of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society in May 1887, when I gave some account of them and submitted a list which was afterwards printed in the Reporter of May 17, 1887, No. 686. This attempt to fill up gaps in the collection was continued by the Rev. Greville J. Chester, who in 1890 and 1891 presented to the Fitzwilliam

Museum a considerable number of miscellaneous objects which have helped to make the Egyptian collection more representative. The expenditure of a comparatively small sum of money would now make it a valuable instrument for teaching purposes, and as complete as any collection without constant Government support, in the past or present, can hope to be. It is greatly to be hoped that every opportunity of adding typical objects to this collection will be embraced, for the prices paid for good Egyptian antiquities increases yearly by leaps and bounds, and a time must soon come, if, indeed, it has not already arrived, when institutions with limited means which have chiefly to be spent in antiquities other than Egyptian, will be unable to compete against wealthy collectors and dilettanti.

The usual plan of inserting long notes and historical and archaeological dissertations among the descriptions of objects in the Catalogue has not been followed, for both Prof. J. H. Middleton and I thought it better to give these in the form of chapters distinct from the Catalogue. These chapters are published in a separate volume by the Cambridge University Press entitled "The Mummy: Chapters on Egyptian Funereal Archaeology." The summary of Egyptian history and the list of the cartouches of the principal kings from Mena to Decius, may be of service to those who use both works.

E. A. WALLIS BUDGE.

CATALOGUE.

1. Cover¹ of the red granite sarcophagus of Rameses III., King of Egypt, about B.C. 1200.

This object, one of the most important of the Egyptian antiquities in the Fitzwilliam Museum, was presented to the University of Cambridge by Belzoni² in 1823. It was brought by him from the tomb of Rameses III., which is situated in the Valley of the Tombs of the Kings, Bibân el-Mulûk, on the western bank of the Nile, opposite to the ancient Thebes. On the cover is a figure of Rameses III. in relief. He wears on his head the usual royal head-dress with an uræus over his forehead. Above the head-dress he wears the disk, feathers, and horns, . The figure of the king is made to represent the god Osiris in the form of a mummy. The arms are crossed over the breast; in the right hand he holds the crook , emblem of dominion, and in the left, the whip or flail, emblem of rule. On one side of the king stands Isis , and on the other Nephthys ; each embraces the king's body.

² Belzoni was a native of Padua, although his family came originally from Rome. He left Italy in 1800 to visit various parts of Europe, and married soon after 1803. He arrived in Egypt in 1815, having gone there to build machines for irrigating the country. While there he was employed by Mr. Salt, His Britannic Majesty's Consul-General at Cairo, to remove Egyptian antiquities from Thebes to London, and his investigations at Thebes produced good results. He discovered the tomb of Seti I., and brought the magnificent sarcophagus of that king to England, where it was purchased by Sir John Soane for £2000. His excavations in Egypt lasted five years, 1815-1819. He died December 3rd, 1823, at Gato, in the kingdom of Benin, on the West Coast of Africa. For an account of his labours, see Narrative of the Operations and Discoveries in Egypt and Nubia, by G. Belzoni, London, 1820.

Between the king and each goddess is a female figure, with raised hands, accompanied by a serpent. The cover is fractured in many places, and it appears that the damage was done to it in ancient times.¹ Owing to these breaks a large portion of the two lines of inscription which run round the edges of the cover is wanting; each line begins at the head of the cover. The more complete line reads:—

are they as

The end of the line repeats the names and titles of the king. Of the second line only the first few words giving the phenomen of the king, the name Osiris, etc., remain.

¹ The cover is figured in Les Principaux Monumens Egyptiens, par Charles Yorke et M. Martin Leake, Londres, pl. xiv., 1827. On pp. 20-25 of that work is printed a letter by Belzoni to Mr. G. A. Browne, of Trinity College, Cambridge, concerning the inscriptions on this cover.

² The cover actually has  .

The sarcophagus¹ to which the cover above described belonged, is now preserved in the Museum of the Louvre; it is monolithic, and is in the form of a cartouche . The inside and outside are covered with scenes and inscriptions of great interest, and relate to the passage of the sun in the underworld; they are selections from the work entitled the "Book of being in the Underworld."

The mummy of Rameses III. was found among the royal mummies brought from Dêr el-Bahari by MM. Maspero and Brugsch; it is now preserved at Gizeh. It was wrapped in orange coloured linen and bound round with four bands of ordinary linen. On the outer covering there was no inscription, but round the head was a bandage inscribed with vultures, uræi, etc. It had been deposited in the coffin of Queen Nefert-ari, and was for some time regarded as her mummy; but when it was unrolled on June 1st, 1886, it was seen from the hieratic inscriptions on the bandages that it was certainly the mummy of Rameses III., and that new linen bandages had been wrapped round it in the 9th year of "the chief priest of Âmen-Râ, king of the gods, Pa-net'em I.," about B.C. 1100. M. Maspero has given excellent pictures of the mummy, and of the face and features of the king, and careful measurements of the body and its limbs; his general description of it is as follows:² "Les cheveux et la barbe sont ras. Le nez, busqué comme celui de Ramsès II., a été légèrement déprimé par les bandelettes. La bouche est mince; cinq dents seulement sont visibles; la première molaire a été usée ou cassée. Les oreilles sont rondes; le tragus en est peu développé et l'ourlet très fort. Le lobe avait été percé, mais les pendants ont été enlevés dès l'antiquité. Les parties génitales ont été tranchées pour être embaumées à part." (P. 566.)

² Les Momies Royales de Dêr el-Bahari, pp. 563-566.

The tomb of Rameses III., situated in the eastern valley, on the west bank of the Nile, opposite Thebes, is commonly known by the name given to it by Bruce, "the Harper's Tomb." It is one of the most beautiful and interesting of the tombs which now remain. It was originally intended for Set-necht,

  , the father of Rameses III., who built the first room only. The sarcophagus stood in a large hall, the roof of which was supported by eight pillars at the end of the tomb. A description of the scenes painted on the walls of the chambers and corridors has been given by Champollion, Notices, t. I. pp. 404-424, and 744-752, and by Champollion-Figeac, Egypte Ancienne, p. 347, col. 2. The most recent description is by Lefébure, Naville, and Schiaparelli, in Les Hypogées Royaux de Thèbes, seconde division, Paris, 1889, pp. 87-120 (Les Annales du Musée Guimet).

For a brief notice of the chief events in the reign of this king, see the sketch of Egyptian history at the beginning of this book.

2. Sarcophagus of Hunefer, a Scribe, about B.C. 400.

This grey granite sarcophagus measures 7 ft. 4 in. by 4 ft. by 2 ft. 7 in., and is one of a class of which comparatively few examples remain;¹ it is made in the shape of a mummy. It was presented to the Fitzwilliam Museum by Messrs. Hanbury and Waddington, of Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1835. The outside is decorated with short lines of roughly cut shallow hieroglyphs and figures of the more important gods of the underworld; these were originally painted red to make them more easily seen. The insides of the sarcophagus and cover are uninscribed. The hollow in the sarcophagus in which the mummy was laid is shallow, and the cover is but slightly concave. The edges of both cover and sarcophagus have been damaged in ancient times, and towards the head much injury has been done to the inscriptions either by weather or by rough usage during transport from Egypt.

The face and features hewn on the cover are of a remarkable character. The ears and nose are large and flat, the lips are thick, and the general appearance of the face recalls to mind the sarcophagi of Eshmûnâzâr¹ and Tabnîth.² Under a broad necklace is a figure of Nut with outspread wings, and on each side of her is a figure of Anubis , and an ut'at, . At the head of the cover is a figure of Nephthys, and a mutilated inscription stating that this goddess has come for the protection of the dead man; and at the foot is a figure of Isis, from each of whose arms hangs  *ân*χ, "life," and by each of whose sides is  sa, "protection." The inscription reads: "Says Isis, the mighty lady, divine mother, 'I have come to thee to protect thee, O Osiris, the hâ, Hunefer.'"³ The perpendicular line of hieroglyphics reads:—

ân	Âusâr	hâ	Hu - nefer	maât	xeru	ha
"Behold Osiris, the hâ Hunefer, triumphant! Hail, mut - â	Nut	pesés	- s	tenh	en	her - â

mother my Nut spreads she wing[s her] over me"

This formula is also found on a granite cover of a sarcophagus of a high official called      , Setaa, preserved in the British Museum (Egyptian Gallery, No. 78) On each side of this line are three divisions in which are figures of Hâpi, Mesthâ      . The short lines of inscriptions which accompany each figure begin with        met âmaxi ger, and contain the name of the god of whom the deceased is a "watchful adorer," and the name of the deceased. The inscription on the right hand edge reads:—

"Says Seb, the prince . . . the heir, prince of the underworld, to Osiris, the hā Hunefer, Horus, to wit, son of Isis, give to thee the mountains of the underworld their two hands." The corresponding line on the other side of the cover is mutilated.

On the head of the sarcophagus is a figure of Nephthys, with upraised arms, from each of which hangs $\dagger \bar{a}n\chi$ "life." She says, "I come to protect thee, Osiris, superintendent of the house (temple), hā Hunefer, triumphant."² On the foot are cut , i.e., signs of "protection" and "stability." Around these are inscribed:—

Beginning on the right-hand side at the head, and reading towards the foot of the sarcophagus, are the following deities:—ibis-headed god, Mesthit, Ânpu, Qebh-sennuf, ibis-headed god, holding , Hâpi, Âpuat, Tuamâutef, and Seb, the "prince of the gods." The lines of inscription relating to these figures are occupied chiefly with the titles of the offices held by the deceased, and the names of gods; they are of little interest.

From the inscription on the foot of the sarcophagus it is clear that the deceased Hunefer was a nobleman of high rank  hā, and that he held a number of important offices connected with the administration of the revenues of the temple of Âmen, and of many other gods.

He was "royal scribe,"  suten nā, "superintendent of the farms of all the gods,"        mer ahet en neteret nebu, "superintendent of granaries," mer sennet, "superintendent of the great house of Âmen,"

"superintendent of the treasury of Âmen," mer pau het' en Âmen, and "director of the festival of Âmen,"     sem heb en Âmen. The British Museum possesses a beautifully illuminated hieroglyphic papyrus (No. 9901), written for a "superintendent of the king, the lord of the two lands, Men-maāt-Rā (Seti I.), superintendent of the cattle of the lord of the two lands, royal scribe, Hunefer"; but it is not possible that this papyrus and the sarcophagus described above were made for the same person.

3. The Coffins of Nesi-pa-ur-shef, superintendent of the scribes in the Temple of Âmen-Rā, at Thebes, about B.C. 1500. Presented to the Fitzwilliam Museum by the Right Hon. Charles Philip Yorke and William Martin Leake, Esq.

I. The Cover which was laid upon the Mummy.

This wooden cover, which was laid upon the mummy, measures 5 ft. 8 $\frac{3}{4}$ in. \times 18 in., and is made in the shape of a mummied man, with his hands crossed over his breast. The head-dress is painted blue, and over the forehead is a band painted with squares of green and red to imitate inlaid precious stones. The beard is wanting. The hands, which are made of solid pieces of wood, and which were glued to the coffin after it was made, probably once held wooden models of the crook , and whip , which the god Osiris is always represented as holding. On each arm are bracelets, and immediately above the wrist is a figure of the hawk of Horus with a whip  on a stand, on the front of which is an uræus wearing the crown of Upper Egypt  het'. Behind is a winged uræus wearing a disk and having a sceptre , and ut'at . Above the hands is a ram-headed, winged beetle having  between his forelegs, and the emblems of the circuit described by the sun in the heavens  sen, stability,  tet, and two uræi between the hind legs. Above the beetle are winged uræi and ut'ats. Around the neck is a deep collar, composed of rows of lotus buds and flowers, painted green and red upon a yellow ground, as are all the scenes on the outside of this cover. Over the portion of the collar which falls under each shoulder is the head of the hawk of Horus.

Immediately below the arms is a ram-headed beetle wearing a disk, on each side of which is an uræus; from each neck hang   ānχ us ānχ, "life, power, life." Beneath the beetle are the emblem of stability  tet, and the figure  heh, "myriads of years," who has  sen, "the sun's circuit," upon his head, and  ānχ, "life," hanging from one arm. On the left hand side is a figure of the god Osiris seated upon a throne wearing  and holding a  heq and  xu in his hands. Before him, standing on , is the soul of the dead man in the form of a human-headed bird , making an offering of incense  and flowers. Behind the soul stands the goddess Isis, wife of Osiris, winged, having  Auset on her head, and  maat, the emblem of law, in her right hand; above her is written      neter āa Auset hent perxeru, "Great goddess, Isis, mistress of sepulchral meals." On the right hand side is a repetition of this scene, but the goddess there represented standing behind the soul is Nephthys,

 Nebt-het, the sister of Osiris.

Beneath these scenes, and under a star-spangled sky, holding  ānχ in each hand, is a winged female figure; this figure is the goddess Nut, who is here supposed to cover and protect the dead man with her wings. On each side of her are the usual  sen, winged uræus, and ut'at. To the left of the figure is a jackal god, Anubis  Ānpu, who holds between his paws a sceptre , to which is attached a double menāt . In front of the jackal is a standard, upon the top of which are a disk and plumes. Above it is a legend  Āusār neb heh χent Āmentet āri t'etta, "Osiris, lord of eternity, president of Āmentet, maker of everlasting." The jackal and the standard are repeated on the right hand side, but the legend over the standard reads  Āusār neb heh heq ānχiu tā-f χet neb, "Osiris, lord of eternity, ruler of the living; may he grant all things."

The remaining surface of the cover is divided into two halves by means of two perpendicular lines of hieroglyphics, and each half contains five scenes. The hieroglyphics read:—

I.

The pillars of each shrine are formed by a  placed above a lotus column.

The feet of this cover are wanting.

II. The Cover which was laid upon the Mummy.

On the inside of this cover the following scenes are painted in yellow upon a purple ground:—

I. The water of the sky, upon which is a boat ; under the boat at each end is a fish; one is called the âbțu fish, , and the other the *ântu*¹ fish . In the boat is a ram-headed beetle, under each wing is a serpent , and between the hind legs is  sen, emblematic of the sun's course through the heavens. Above is the disk of the sun with uræi .

II. Bent female figure, with hands and feet touching the ground. On the back of this figure, which represents Nut, the goddess of the sky, sails a boat, on the front of which is  ut'at. In the boat are a beetle, the goddess Maât , Râ the Sun-god, , and a god  who rows the boat with two oars , on the blades of which are painted lotus flowers,   and . The heads of the oars, and the posts upon which they rest, are hawk-headed. Behind the god who rows the boat is  ses. The bent female figure is called          Nut urt mes neteru, "Nut, the mighty lady, genetrix of the gods,"² before and behind her is a winged ut'at. Beneath her is the god     .

¹ The âbțu and the ântu fishes are referred to in the XVth chapter of the Book of the Dead. (Naville, Band I., Bl. xiv., ll. 13, 14)

                        maa-nâ abțu sep xeperu țekai-â ânt em xeperu-s. "May I see the Âbțu fish in the season of [his] coming into being, may I see the Ânt fish in his evolutions."

² B.M. coffin cover No. 15,659 gives    .

 "Heka ta neter āa neb pet, Heka the great god, lord of heaven," having  on his head. On each side of him is a bird in adoration with human head and hands.

III. Lion, couchant, with bearded human head at each end of his body ; on each forehead is an uræus. This lion represents the day, and one head is called   * neter āa nebt tuat, "Great god, lord of the dawn," and the other   neter āa nebt Ament, "Great god, lord of the west" (i.e., evening). In front of each is a winged uræus. Above is a boat in which is a figure of the sun on the horizon  χut, and on the disk is Rā, the Sun-god, having disk and uræus on his head, and the sign for life  ānχ in his hands. He is adored on each side by a cynocephalus ape with uplifted hands.

IV. Star-spangled sky on which lies the mummy of the dead man, which is here described as       Ausār neb Abtet, "Osiris, lord of Abydos." Above are a pair of arms  embracing the disk of the sun , which shines upon the mummy, and whose rays cause five plants to spring up from it. The sun is adored on each side by a kneeling ram-headed god with uplifted hands, who is called  neter āa, "great god."

V. Shrine or ark, formed by a serpent, in which stand, 1, the goddess Isis, lion-headed, and wearing an uræus: 2, the god Cheperā, beetle-headed; and 3, the god Osiris, ram-headed, and wearing an uræus.

There are in the British Museum two covers of coffins (Nos. 15,659 and 22,542), the decoration of which is similar to that of the coffins of Nesi-pa-ur-shef. No. 22,542 is painted on the inside a light purple colour, and is uninscribed; No. 15,659 is painted inside with a colour similar to that of the cover of Nesi-pa-ur-shef, but the arrangement of the scenes is different, both as regards contents and order; they are as follows:—
I. Winged beetle, with disk, in a boat sailing across the sky; at one end of the boat is the ābīu fish, at the other is the borders, to imitate the inlaying of precious stones. The face is painted yellow, the eyebrows green, the nostrils are hollow; the beard is wanting. The arms are crossed over the breast, and the hands, one of which is wanting, originally held models of the  and , which the god Osiris, in whose form the coffin is made, is always represented as holding. A deep collar of five rows of lotus buds, flowers, etc., painted red and green upon a yellow ground, falls over the breast; the part of it which lies over each shoulder is ornamented with a head of the hawk of Horus. Above the arms are the figure of a ram-headed beetle wearing a disk,  heh, "millions of years," winged uræi and ut'ats. The wrists and arms are ornamented with bracelets, and on each arm is a scene in which the deceased is represented lying on a bier , by which stand Isis and Nephthys weeping and lamenting for the dead. Beneath one bier are the four "Canopic jars," all human-headed (sic), in which the intestines of the deceased are preserved; under the other bier are two only, together with uræus , ānχ  and . Above each arm is the god Osiris seated in a shrine, wearing the atef crown  and holding in his hands  and ; before him is the soul of the deceased, with both hands raised in adoration.

Below the arms are two scenes:—

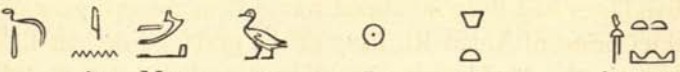

I. Ram-headed winged beetle, emblematic of Rā and Cheperā, wearing disk with uræi . Between his hind legs is a seated female figure, with arms raised and having on her head  sen, the sun's course; by her side is her name  Auset, Isis. Behind her are a standard , with human hand and arm, and the signs  .

On the right hand side are "Osiris, great god, prince of the Āmenta" (underworld), seated in a shrine, and "Isis, great lady, divine mother, daughter of Rā, mistress of sepulchral meals"; between them is the soul of the deceased offering incense  to Osiris. The same scene is repeated on the left hand side, but "Nephthys, the divine sister, daughter of Rā mistress of Āmenta," takes the place of Isis, and the deceased, himself offers incense. Round and about the goddess are winged ut'ats, Q sen, † ānχ, etc.

II. The goddess Nut, with outstretched wings, holding † ānχ, "life," in each hand, winged uræi, uræi, Q sen, and ut'ats; over the right wing is inscribed  Nut urt mest neteru, "Nut, the great lady, genetrix of the gods," and over the left  Rā hent perxeru tāt-s, "daughter of Rā, mistress of sepulchral meals, may she give" On the left hand side of the goddess is a standing figure of the goddess Maāt, pouring out water from a vase  for the deceased, "the divine father of Āmen, Nesi-pa-ur-shef, triumphant," who kneels below, and receives it in his two hands, out of which he drinks.

III. Horned ram wearing disk, plumes, and uræi,  neter āa ānχ maāt, "the great god, living by law," and Nephthys in a shrine. In front of the shrine is the deceased offering fruit, flowers, cakes, and jars of wine to Maât.

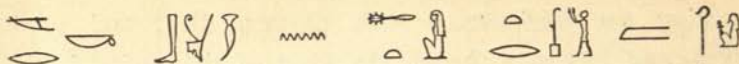

IV. Standard, with disk and plumes, emblem of "Osiris, lord of eternity," Isis, and three (sic) children of Horus, standing on a lotus flower, in a shrine. In front of the shrine is the goddess Maât, pouring out water  upon a hand of the deceased. On the projecting foot of the coffin cover are two scenes in which Isis and Nephthys are represented kneeling by the side of a table of offerings before the god Osiris, "lord of Abydos, prince of Âmenta" (underworld), who wears the atef crown. No regular order appears to have been followed by the artist in painting the outside of this cover. We should expect pictures of the four children of Horus, and of Anubis and Apuat; neither of these two last gods is mentioned, nor Hâpi.

Under the foot of the coffin outside are painted  tet, emblem of stability, winged uræi, ut'ats, Nephthys with uplifted arms and hands, seated on , winged ut'ats and uræi, double standard , and the four children of Horus, viz.,  Mesbâ, "great god, lord of the underworld," human-headed;  Hâpi, ape-headed;  Tuamâutef, great god, lord of the underworld; and  Qebhsennuf, hawk-headed.

The inside of this cover is neither ornamented nor inscribed.

IV. The Inner Coffin of Nesi-pa-ur-shef.

On the bottom of the coffin, inside, are inscribed:—

I. Disk of the sun with uræi, , beetle, and two serpents in a boat sailing across the sky.

II. The "lady of the underworld" (tuat), winged, wearing  upon her head. Above her are two winged uræi, and on each side of her head is the deceased with both hands raised in adoration of the goddess. The inscription reads:—

 Set xest neb-s tās hetep Ausār âtef neterā en Amen-Rā, suten neteru Nesi-pa-ur-shef, "Set (Amenta) opposite her lord. May she grant an offering to Osiris, the divine father of Amen-Rā, king of the gods, Nesi-pa-ur-shef."

Behind each figure of the deceased is the goddess Maāt, and the inscription, "Maāt, mistress of the underworld, may she give an offering!"¹ On each side of the "lady of the underworld" is a standard with disk and plumes: that on the right hand is described as "Osiris, lord of eternity, prince of

On the rounded end of the coffin is painted a figure of Nut, "the genetrix of the gods," accompanied by Isis and Nephthys in the form of winged serpents. The line of inscription on the right hand entreats Nephthys to grant to the deceased sepulchral offerings of the best, and in that on the left Isis is entreated to do the same. Beneath Nut are the four children of Horus, Mesθā, Hāpi, Ṭamāutef, and Qebhsennuf, and two figures of  Nefer Atmu xui tauī, "Nefer Atmu, the strengthener of the two lands."

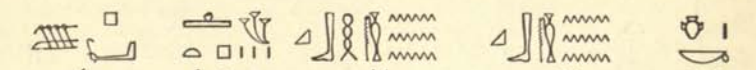

On the the right hand side, beginning from the foot, are the following scenes:—

I. The goddess Nut standing in a Persea tree, before the tomb of the deceased Nesi-pa-ur-shef, pouring out water from a vase  for his soul, which stands below drinking from its hands; behind kneels the deceased offering incense  to the goddess. The inscription which relates to this scene reads:—

V. The goddess Nut separated from the embrace of the god Seb by "Shu, son of Râ, the great god, lord of Ma[nu],"² who stands beneath her with upraised hands and arms. The god Seb lies prostrate at his feet. On the right hand side of Shu are:—1, "the living soul of Osiris,"³ in the form of a man-headed hawk; 2, "the great god of Amenta," ram-headed; and 3, Isis in the form of a winged serpent. On the left hand are also, 1, the "living soul of Osiris"; 2, the "great god of Amenta," ram-headed; and 3, Nephthys in the form of a winged serpent. The inscription referring to the ram-headed god on the right reads:—

I. Deceased offering incense and libation by the side of a table of offerings. Thoth, "lord of law," ibis-headed, and Isis with outstretched wings, standing one on each side of a standard , with disk and plumes, emblem of "Osiris, lord of eternity."

II. Thoth, ibis-headed, wearing , and holding  by the side of a table of offerings. To the left two lines of inscription, duplicate of that on the right side, scene VI.

III. Osiris seated. To the right of him Isis, Nephthys, Shu and Heka  ; the first three of these gods have  in the right hand, the fourth has a staff in the form of a serpent. To the left of Osiris are Thoth and Horus. Beneath these gods is a serpent, part of the body of which is erect on the left hand side. Beneath the serpent is a throne with steps on each side ; one side is ornamented with the sun's disk shedding rays of light , , , and . On it is also inscribed   pa nefer, "the beautiful house." To the right of the throne is a crocodile-headed quadruped with horns, called     neb tuat Renenet, "Renenet, lady of the underworld"; to the left is a similar animal called     neb tuat Shanai, "Shanai, lord of the underworld." The two lines of inscription to the left of the shrine state that Isis and Nephthys will give the usual sepulchral gifts to the deceased.

V. Shrine in which stand Anubis (?) jackal-headed, Osiris ram-headed, and Isis lion-headed.

VI. The entrance to the tomb of the deceased in the Theban mountain, above which the soul of the deceased is seated. From the mountain comes forth the goddess Hathor in the form of a cow, wearing disk and plumes, and a Hathor-headed $\bar{a}n\chi$ round the neck. The inscription reads  χeft neb-set, "opposite her lord." Beneath is "Anubis, great god, lord of Amenta," jackal-headed, wearing . The scene is filled up by winged serpents,  and \mathcal{O} .

On the foot of the coffin are painted the goddess Nephthys with upraised arms, from which hang ; the four children of Horus, Mes $\theta\bar{a}$, H \bar{a} pi, T \bar{u} am \bar{a} utef, and Qeb \bar{h} sennuf; the goddess Amentet, and a serpent-headed deity. The inscriptions at the extreme end of each side state that Isis and Nephthys will grant to the deceased the usual sepulchral offerings.

Length, 6 ft 1½ in.; width at shoulders, 1 ft. 9 in.; at foot, 1 ft. 1½ in.

VI. Outer Coffin of Nesi-pa-ur-shef.

This coffin, like that which was placed inside it, is made in the shape of a mummy; the head-dress is painted green, the face yellow, the hands are crossed over the breast, and the inscriptions and scenes upon it are painted in light and dark green, yellow, and red upon a white ground. The beard is wanting, as also are the objects which were originally held in the hands. The cover was fixed to the coffin by means of eight dowels into which pegs of wood were driven. The scenes upon it are painted on a larger scale, and with the inscriptions are substantially the same as those found on the inner coffin. The necklace is of the same pattern, the arms and wrists are ornamented in the same way; the arrangement of the scenes is the same, but many details are here omitted. Beneath the figure of Nut with outstretched wings are three lines of inscription, but large parts of them are effaced. The two scenes on the projecting foot of the cover lack the inscriptions which accompany the same scenes on the cover of the inner coffin. The inscriptions on the other parts of the cover, which are identical with those on the inner coffin, are not repeated here.

Around the outside edge of the coffin are two lines of inscription which contain the same text as those on the edge of the inner coffin. The scenes painted on the outside, beginning at the foot on the right hand side, are as follows:—

I. The tomb of the deceased in the Theban mountains and tets ; on the top is written  Ausâr, "Osiris," Hathor in form of a cow, winged serpent (Isis), Anubis, the goddess Maât, and standard ; before these stands the deceased offering a vessel  and , incense.

II. Deceased in a shrine standing by the side of a table of offerings, making an offering of  to Mes θ â, Hâpi, T \ddot{u} amâutef, and Qebhsennuf, the four children of Horus.

III. The goddess Nut raised from the embrace of Seb by Shu; on each side is the soul of the deceased by the side of a table of offerings.

IV. Thoth in a shrine.

V. Osiris, ram-headed, with horns and uræus. The deceased in a shrine offers incense to him.

VI. Nephthys standing with upraised hands and arms, and double .

VII. Standard, with plumes and disk, emblem of Osiris, the goddess Isis and the deceased offering .

VIII. Thoth, ibis-headed, adoring Osiris, seated, behind whom stand Isis and Nephthys; serpent and serpent-headed god who holds a knife  in each hand; throne, with steps on each side, ornamented with  and .

IX. The goddess Maât, the god Cheperâ, Râ, ram-headed, and the god Heka in the boat of the Sun sailing across the sky. Beneath the mummy of the deceased, upon which fall rays of light, are disks and stars  proceeding from an inverted head of the hawk of Horus.  To the right are offerings, uræus and stand , and a hawk-headed god; to the left are offerings, a vulture, and a bearded man-headed god. The deceased stands by the side of a table of offerings and says:—

4. COFFINS OF PA-KEPU, A WATER-CARRIER AT THEBES, ABOUT B.C. 500.

I. The Outer Coffin.

The painted wooden coffins of Pa-kepu were presented to the Fitzwilliam Museum by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, in 1869. The outer coffin is 6 ft. 10 in. long, and the inner is 5 ft. 11 in. They are well made and strong, but the artist's work is poor.

The face is red, the beard is black, and the head-dress is painted with stripes of red and black, upon a yellow ground; the scenes on the cover are in green, black, purple, yellow and drab, and the inscriptions, arranged in short lines, are painted in black upon a white and yellow ground alternately.

I. Winged disk with uræi; by the side of each wing

Behutet.

II. The heart of the deceased being weighed against Maât ; Thoth leading the deceased into the presence of Horus and Osiris; the four children of Horus standing upon a lotus flower; Isis, Nephthys, Mesθā, Hāpi, Ṭuam-āutef, Qebhsennuf, two crocodile-headed gods, Horus and Thoth; these last four gods represent some of the forty-two “assessors.”

III. Inscription, which reads¹:—“ May Osiris at the head of the underworld, great god, lord of Abydos, grant a royal offering; thousands of cakes, thousands of jugs of beer thousands of oxen, thousands of ducks, thousands of incense thousands of linen bandages, thousands of vessels of oil, thousands of vessels of wine, thousands of vessels of milk, thousands of offerings, thousands of offerings of t'efau food, thousands of all beautiful and pure things to the ka of Osiris, the water-carrier of the western part of Thebes.”

IV. Mummy of the deceased lying on a bier, beneath which are the four Canopic jars containing his intestines; Anubis stands by the bier giving  ānχ “life” to the mummy; on each side is a hawk wearing a disk. The inscriptions read, “Behutet, great god, lord of heaven, Shu, may he grant all offerings of t'efa food and things,” “Behutet, great god, lord of heaven, may he grant offerings of t'efa food."¹

V. An inscription which repeats the entreaty for sepulchral meals for² "the ka of Osiris, the water-carrier of the Western part of Thebes, this Pa-kepu, triumphant, lord of watchful adoration, son of Amen-ḥetep-āu-ānt, born of the lady of the house, this Āarru, triumphant."

VI. Standard, in the form of a lotus flower, having menāts , disk, plumes and uræi; hawk of Horus and ut'at. To the right are Mesḥā and Qebḥsennuf, to the left Hāpi and Ṭamāutef. The inscriptions are identical with those above.

VII. Repetition of inscription asking for sepulchral meals.

VIII. Rā, Cheperā, Thoth and two other gods sailing across the sky in a boat. Before and behind the boat are  and a cynocephalus ape  in adoration.

IX. On the projecting foot of the coffin are ut'at and hawk of Horus wearing disk and  in a shrine. The inscriptions on each side ask for sepulchral foods.

5. MUMMY AND COFFIN OF A PERSON UNKNOWN.

Mummy, of a late period, enclosed in a cartonnage case, the greater part of which has disappeared ; the cover of the coffin in which it was placed is also wanting. The pectoral, parts of which still remain, has painted upon it a scene in which the deceased is represented lying on a bier, beneath which are the four jars which contained the intestines of the deceased. The god of the dead, Anubis, stands by the side of the bier, and Isis and Nephthys stand at the head and foot respectively. Lower down, to the right, are two of the children of Horus, Isis, and Anubis, jackal-headed, with his whip , seated on the tomb  ; to the left are the other two children of Horus, Nephthys, and Anubis as before. Between two perpendicular rows of gods is a line of inscription which runs:—

I am unable to read any more than the first few words, and it is tolerably clear that the writer either copied a text which he could not read, or that he invented what is here written. The mummy appears to belong to the very late Roman period about A.D. 350, and it is probable that the coffin in which it now lies once belonged to some one else.

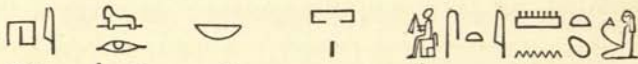

Presented to the Museum by the Hon. George Townshend.¹

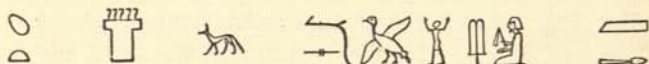

CANOPIC JARS.

6-9. Set of canopic jars made for "the lady of the house," Shepset-Âment, daughter of Nes-pa-qa-Shuti. The inscriptions on each are inlaid in blue, and the , which is over each inscription, in dark sage-green colour.

 ān Āusār nebt Tētet t̄ā - f hetep
 "Behold Osiris, lord of Tattu, may give he offerings
 nebt t'efau neb en Āusār Pa - χreṭ - er - āā maātχeru all, tchefau food all to Osiris, Pa - chrat - er - āā, triumphant."

The sides of the box are kept together by wooden pegs.

Thebes, XIXth dynasty. 11½ in. × 11 in. × 6¼ in.

11. Rectangular wooden box, in the form of a shrine , on the sides of which are painted:—1. The doors of the tomb with bolts ; 2. The four children of Horus, Mesthā, Hāpi, Ṭuamāutef, and Qebhsennuf; 3. Standard, with disk and plumes, emblems of Osiris, and Isis and Nephthys in the form of uræi; and 4. Two bearded men and two snake-headed gods. The figures are painted green and red upon a yellow ground. The sixteen small green glazed faience ushabtiu figures which are in it do not belong to the box. Each figure is $3\frac{3}{4}$ in. high, and is inscribed with one line of hieroglyphics which read:

Ausar Nesi-χensu-pa maātχeru, "Osiris, Nesi-Chensu-pa-[chret], triumphant." Fifteen of the figures have both hands crossed over the breast, and one has the left hand only laid on the breast, while the right arm hangs straight by his side. A variant of the name which occurs is

In the bottom of the box are some fragments of a papyrus and the linen in which it was wrapped; the few traces of characters which remain on one of the pieces show that it was written during the Ptolemaic period.

Thebes, XIXth dynasty. $15\frac{1}{2}$ in. \times $9\frac{1}{2}$ in.

12. Rectangular wooden box, in the form of a shrine , on the sides of which are painted: 1. The doors of the tomb with bolts ; 2. Five bearded man-headed gods, each holding a knife  in his hand; 3. tet, having horns, disk and plumes , emblem of Osiris, and Isis , and Nephthys , in the form of serpents. Over the side on which doors of the tomb are painted are three winged disks with pendent uræi, and over the other three sides is a design composed of buckles and tets .

Thebes, XIXth dynasty. $15\frac{1}{2}$ in. \times 9 in. (at base).

13. Uninscribed rectangular wooden box, with raised, rounded wooden ends; the inside and outside are covered with a thin layer of plaster. Thebes. $8\frac{1}{4}$ in. \times $4\frac{1}{4}$ in. \times $4\frac{1}{4}$ in.

(Presented by the late Rev. Greville J. Chester, B.A.)

14. Sepulchral wooden box, in the shape of a tomb, for holding ushabtiu figures, on the cover of which is inscribed in Demotic the name of the person for whom it was made. The wooden hawk which now surmounts it belongs to another box. On the sides are painted: 1. Two figures of Anubis, standing at the doors of the tomb, and three seated figures. 2.  and figures of Āmseth and Hāpi. 3.  and figure of ʔet ʔet , having on the top plumes and horns , and on each side an uræus ; that on the right wears the white crown , that on the left wears the red crown . 4.  and figures of Qebḥsennuf and ʔuā-māutef. The inscriptions are as follows:—

4.

The name of the man for whom the box appears to have been made seems to occur in line 1:  Hā-seruāt. The hieroglyphic legends are of an unusual nature, and are very roughly written.

(Presented by the late H. B. Brady, Esq.)

PTAḤ-SEKER-ĀUSĀR FIGURE.

15. Ptaḥ-Seker-Osiris figure, man-headed, wearing horns, disk, and plumes ; the face is painted yellow, the head-dress blue, and the breastplate red and black upon a yellow and white ground. The figure is fastened into a rectangular stand, and is inscribed:—
