I am very glad to know that the Sacred Books of the East, published years ago by the Clarendon Press, Oxford, which have been out-of-print for a number of years, will now be available to all students of religion and philosophy. The enterprise of the publishers is commendable and I hope the books will be widely read.

S. Radhakrishnan
First, the man distinguished between eternal and perishable. Later he discovered within himself the germ of the Eternal. This discovery was an epoch in the history of the human mind and the East was the first to discover it.

To watch in the Sacred Books of the East the dawn of this religious consciousness of man, must always remain one of the most inspiring and hallowing sights in the whole history of the world. In order to have a solid foundation for a comparative study of the Religions of the East, we must have before all things, complete and thoroughly faithful translation of their Sacred Books in which some of the ancient sayings were preserved because they were so true and so striking that they could not be forgotten. They contained eternal truths, expressed for the first time in human language.

With profoundest reverence for Dr. S. Radhakrishnan, President of India, who inspired us for the task; our deep sense of gratitude for Dr. C. D. Deshmukh & Dr. D. S. Kothari, for encouraging assistance; esteemed appreciation of UNESCO for the warm endorsement of the cause; and finally with indebtedness to Dr. H. Rau, Director, Max Müller Bhawan, New Delhi, in procuring us the texts of the Series for reprint, we humbly conclude.

TO

I. THE PARSI SCRIPTURES.

Though we must look to the Avesta for information regarding the main outlines of the Parsi religion, it is to Pahlavi writings we must refer for most of the details relating to the traditions, ceremonies, and customs of this ancient faith, which styles itself emphatically 'the good religion of the Mazdayasniars,' and calls its laity bahdinân, or 'those of the good religion.' In the fragments of the Avesta which still exist, we may trace the solid foundations of the religion, laid by philosophic bards and lawgivers of old, with many a mouldering column and massive fragment of the superstructure erected upon them by the ancient priesthood. These are the last remnants of the faith held by Cyrus, the anointed of the Lord (Isaiah xlv. 1), the righteous one (Is. xlii. 2), or eagle (Is. xlvii. 11), whom He called from the east, and the shepherd who performed His pleasure (Is. xlv. 28); scattered fragments of the creed professed by Darius in his inscriptions, when he attributes his successes to 'the will of Aûramazdâ'; and mouldering ruins of the comparatively pure religion of oriental 'barbarism,' which Alexander and his civilising Greek successors were unable wholly to destroy, and replace by their own idolatrous superstitions. While in the Pahlavi texts we find much of the mediæval edifice built by later Persian priest-craft upon the old foundations, with a strange mixture of old and new materials, and exhibiting the usual symptom of declining powers, a strong insistence upon complex forms and minute details, with little of the freedom of treatment and simplicity of outline characteristic of the ancient bards.
To understand the relationship between these two classes of Parsi sacred writings, it must be observed that the Avesta and Pahlavi of the same scripture, taken together, form its Avesta and Zand, terms which are nearly synonymous with 'revelation and commentary.' Both words are derived from verbal roots implying 'knowledge;' Avesta being the Pahlavi avistâk, which may most probably be traced to the past participle of â, 'to,' + vid, 'to know,' with the meaning of 'what is announced' or 'declaration'; and Zand, being the Pahlavi form of Av. zainti (traceable in the word âzaintis), must be referred to the root zar, 'to know,' with the meaning of 'knowledge, understanding.' European scholars, misled probably by Muhammadan writers, have converted the phrase 'Avesta and Zand' into 'Zend-Avesta,' and have further identified Zand with the language of the Avesta. This use of the word Zand is, however, quite at variance with the practice of all Parsi writers who have been independent of European influence, as they apply the term Zand only to the Pahlavi translations and explanations of their sacred books, the original text of which they call Avesta. So that when they use the phrase 'Avesta and Zand' they mean the whole of any scripture, both the Avesta text and Pahlavi translation and commentary. And the latter, being often their only means of understanding the former, has now become of nearly equal authority with the Avesta itself. It is probable, indeed, that the first Zand was really written in the Avesta language, as we find many traces of such Avesta commentaries interpolated both in the Avesta and Pahlavi texts of the Parsi scriptures; but this is rather a matter of European inference than of Parsi belief. The later (or Pahlavi) Zand appears also, in many places, to be merely a translation of this earlier (or Avesta) Zand, with additional explanations offered by the Pahlavi translators.

Regarding the sacredness of these Pahlavi translations, in the eyes of the Parsis, there can be no manner of doubt, so far as they cannot be shown to be inconsistent with the original Avesta text. But besides these translations there is another class of Pahlavi religious writings whose authority is more open to dispute. These writings are either translations and Zands of Avesta texts no longer extant, or they contain the opinions and decisions of high-priests of later times, when the Pahlavi language was on the decline. Such writings would hardly be considered of indisputable authority by any Parsi of the present day, unless they coincided with his own preconceived opinions. But for outsiders they have the inestimable value either of supplying numerous details of religious traditions and customs which would be vainly sought for elsewhere, or of being contemporary records of the religious ideas of the Parsis in the declining days of their Mazdayasian faith. It is with a few of such writings this volume has to deal; but before describing them more minutely it will be desirable to give some account of the Pahlavi language in which they are written.

2. THE PAHLAVI LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.

The term ‘Pahlavi,’ in its widest extent, is applied to all the varying forms of the mediaeval Persian language, from the time when the grammatical inflexions of ancient Persian were dropped, till the period when the modern alphabet was invented, and the language became corrupted into modern Persian by the adoption of numerous Arabic words and phrases. Some traces of Pahlavi words and phrases, written in old Semitic characters, have been found in the legends of coins struck by certain kings of Persian provinces, subordinate to the Greek successors of Alexander, as early as the third century B.C.¹ Further traces have been discovered in the legends on some provincial coins of the time of the Arsacidan dynasty. But, practically, our acquaintance with Pahlavi commences with the inscriptions, on rocks and coins, of Ardakhshir-i Pâpakân (A.D. 226–240), the founder of the Sasanian dynasty, and ends with certain religious writings of priests and other devout Parsis of post-Muslim times, among the latest of which is one dated A.Y. 250 (A.D. 881). Any fragments of Pahlavi composition of later date than A.D. 1000, must be considered merely as modern imitations of a dead language, and cannot be quoted as authorities for the use of any particular Pahlavi words or construction.

With regard to the origin of the word Pahlavi, or language of Pahlav, many suggestions have been offered; but the most probable explanation is that which connects it with the Parthva of the cuneiform inscriptions, the land of the Parthians known to the Greeks and Romans, and of the Pahlavas mentioned by Sanskrit writers; the change of Parthva into Pahlav being very similar to that of Av. Mithra into Pers. Mihr. No doubt the language of the Parthians themselves was not Pahlavi, but they were the actual rulers of Persia for some centuries at the time when the Pahlavi language was forming there; and, being formidable to their neighbours, it is not surprising that their name became identified with everything Persian, in the same way as the Roman name has been applied by the Persians, not only to the later Greek empire of Constantinople, but even to the earlier conqueror, Alexander the Great.

Strictly speaking, the mediaeval Persian language is only called Pahlavi when it is written in one of the characters used before the invention of the modern Persian alphabet, and in the peculiarly enigmatical mode adopted in Pahlavi writings. Whenever it is transcribed, either in Avesta characters, or in those of the modern Persian alphabet, and freed from this peculiarity, it is called Pâzand.

The peculiar mode of writing Pahlavi, here alluded to, long made the character of the language a standing puzzle for European scholars, and was first satisfactorily explained by Professor Haug, of Munich, in his admirable Essay on the Pahlavi Language already cited.

Like the Assyrians of old, the Persians of Parthian times appear to have borrowed their writing from a foreign race.

But, whereas the Semitic Assyrians adopted a Turanian syllabary, these later Aryan Persians accepted a Semitic alphabet. Besides the alphabet, however, which they could use for spelling their own words, they also transferred a certain number of complete Semitic words to their writings, as representatives of the corresponding words in their own language. These Semitic representatives (the number of which might at any time be increased or diminished at the discretion of the writer) were probably never very numerous, and not more than four hundred of them are to be found in the Pahlavi writings now extant; but, as they represent nearly all the commonest words in the language (excepting those specially relating to religious matters), they often constitute more than half the bulk of a Pahlavi text.

The use of such Semitic words, scattered about in Persian sentences, gives Pahlavi the motley appearance of a compound language; more especially as Persian terminations are often added to the Semitic words. But there are good reasons for supposing that the language was never spoken as it was written. The spoken language appears to have been purely Persian; the Semitic words being merely used as written representatives, or logograms, of the Persian words which were spoken. Thus the Persians would write malkân malkâ, ‘king of kings,’ but they would read shâhân shâh. This is still the mode in which most Parsis read their Pahlavi literature; and it is only by assuming it to have been their universal practice, in former times, that we can account for the total and immediate disappearance of the Semitic portion of the Pahlavi, from their language, when the Persians adopted their modern alphabet. As the Semitic words were merely a Pahlavi mode of writing their Persian equivalents (just as ‘viz.’ is a mode of writing ‘namely’ in English), they disappeared with the Pahlavi writing, and the Persians began at once to write all their words, with their new alphabet, just as they pronounced them.

In the meantime, the greater part of the nation had become Muhammadans, and a new influx of Semitic words commenced, but of a very different character. The Semitic portion of the Pahlavi writing was nearly pure Chaldee, and was confined (as already stated) to the graphic representation of most of the simplest and commonest words unconnected with religion; but it seems to have formed no part of the spoken language, at all events in later times. Whereas the Semitic portion of modern Persian is borrowed from Arabic, and includes most words connected with religion, science, and literature; in fact, every class of words except that which was usually Semitic in Pahlavi writings; and these Arabic words form an essential part of the spoken language, being as indispensable to the modern Persian as words of Norman-French origin are to the English.

In Pahlavi writings, moreover, besides the four hundred Semitic logograms already mentioned, we also find about one hundred obsolete forms of Iranian words used as logograms; much in the same way as 'ye' may be used for 'the,' and 'Xmas' for 'Christmas' in English. The use of all these logograms was, however, quite optional, as their usual Persian equivalents might be substituted for any of them at any time, according to each particular writer's taste and discretion. But whenever they are employed they form what is called the Huzvâris portion of the Pahlavi; while the other words, intended to be pronounced as they are spelt, form the Pâzand portion.

Many attempts have been made to explain the word Huzvâris, but it cannot be said that any satisfactory etymology has yet been proposed. Like the word Pahlavi it seems hardly to occur in any old Pahlavi text, but only in colophons, chapter-headings, and similar notes of modern writers; it seems, therefore, more reasonable to trace it to modern Persian than direct to any more ancient source. Its Pahlavi form, hûzvâris or aûzvâris, appears to represent the modern Persian zuvâris, which is rarely used; the usual Persian form of the word being zuvâris. Now zuvâris is precisely the form of an abstract noun derived from the crude form of a verb zuvârâdan, which has been admitted into some Persian dictionaries on the authority of Golius.¹

with the meaning 'to grow old, to become thread-bare.' If such a verb really exists in Persian, although its meaning may imply 'decrepitude or decay' rather than 'antiquity or obsolescence,' yet its abstract noun would not be altogether inapplicable to the logograms used in Pahlavi, which are, in fact, last remnants of older writings.

The word Pâzand is probably derived from Av. paitizanti, with the meaning 're-explanation,' that is, a further interpretation of the Pâhlavi Zand in the Persian vernacular. This term is applied not only to the purely Persian words in Pahlavi texts, but also (as already noticed) to transliterations of the said texts, either in Avesta or modern Persian characters, in which all the Huzvâris words are replaced by their Pâzand equivalents. These transliterations form what are called Pâzand texts; they retain the exact idiom and construction of the Pahlavi original, and represent the mode in which it was read. It may be remarked, however, that all such Pâzand texts, as have been examined, seem to have been written in India, so that they may be suspected of representing some corrupt Gujarâti pronunciation of Persian, rather than the peculiar orthography of any period of the Persian language.

This theory of the origin and development of Pahlavi writing could hardly be upheld, unless we could trace the same artificial mixture of Huzvâris and Pâzand in all accessible Pahlavi records, from their earliest appearance to the present time. This we are able to do, even in the scanty materials afforded by the legends on the provincial Persian coins of the third century B.C. and second century A.D. already mentioned. But we can trace it with greater certainty not only in the coin legends, but also in the rock inscriptions of the earlier Sasanian kings (A.D. 226–388), in the latest of which we find the written language differing very slightly from that contained in the manuscripts preserved by the Parsis of the present day, although the characters differ very much in form. And, finally, in the legends on the coins of the later Sasanian kings (A.D. 388–651) and on seals of their times, we find even this difference in the shapes of the letters disappearing by degrees. In fact, all the materials at our disposal tend to show that Huzvāris has been an essential constituent of all Pahlavi writings from the time of Alexander’s successors to that of the disuse of Pahlavi characters; but we have no reason to suppose that the spoken language of the great mass of the Persian people ever contained the Semitic words which they thus used as Huzvāris in their writings.

Although the use of Huzvāris, until explained recently, rendered the nature of the Pahlavi language very obscure, it added very little to the difficulty of understanding the Pahlavi texts, because the meaning of nearly every Huzvāris logogram was well known; being recorded in an old glossary preserved by the Parsis, in which every logogram is explained by its proper Pāzand equivalent. The extant copies of this old glossary generally contain the Huzvāris and Pāzand words written in the Pahlavi character, together with their traditional pronunciation, either in Avesta or modern Persian letters; there is, therefore, no particular difficulty in reading or translating the Huzvāris portion of a Pahlavi text, although doubts may often be entertained as to the accuracy of the traditional pronunciation.

The real difficulty of reading Pahlavi texts lies in the Pāzand portion (so far as it may be unexplained by existing vocabularies), and is chiefly occasioned by the ambiguity of some of the Pahlavi letters. The alphabet used in Pahlavi books contains only fourteen distinct letters, so that some letters represent several different sounds; and this ambiguity is increased by the letters being joined together, when a compound of two letters is sometimes exactly like some other single letter. The complication arising from these ambiguities may be understood from the following list of the sounds, simple and compound, represented by each of the fourteen letters of the Pahlavi alphabet respectively:

l.  s.  y, yad, yag, yag, di, dad, dag, dag, g1, gad, gag, gag, g1, gad, gag, gag.

From this list it is easy to see the confusion produced by the letter  DataSource\textbf{ā} being exactly like the letter  DataSource\textbf{ā} y doubled, and by the letter  DataSource\textbf{ā} sh being identical with a compound of  DataSource\textbf{ā} y and  DataSource\textbf{ā} a; and there are, in fact, some compounds of two letters which have from ten to fifteen sounds in common use, besides others which might possibly occur. If it be further considered that there are only three letters (which are also consonants, as in most Semitic languages) to represent five long vowels, and that there are probably five short vowels to be understood, the difficulty of reading Pahlavi correctly may be readily imagined.

When Pahlavi writing was in common use this difficulty was probably no more felt by the Persians, than the complexity of Chinese characters is felt as an evil by a Chinese mandarin, or the corrupt system of English orthography by an educated Englishman. It is only the foreigner, or learner, who fully appreciates the difficulty of understanding such cumbersome systems of writing.

With regard, however, to their Huzvāris logograms the Persians seem to have experienced more difficulty. As the actual sounds of these Semitic words were rarely pronounced, in consequence of their Pāzand equivalents being substituted in reading, there must have been some risk of their true pronunciation being forgotten. That this risk was understood by the Persians, or Parsis, is proved by the existence of the Huzvāris-Pāzand glossary already described, which was evidently compiled as a record both of the pronunciation and meaning of the Huzvāris logograms. But its compilation does not appear to have been undertaken until the true pronunciation of some of these logograms had been already lost. Thus, although the traditional readings of most of the Semitic portion of the Huzvāris can be readily traced to well-known Chaldee words, there are yet many other such readings which are altogether inexplicable as Semitic words. In most such cases, however, European scholars have found that the Huvvâris word can be easily read in some other way which at once connects it with some ordinary Chaldee equivalent. It may, therefore, be reasonably assumed that the compilers of the glossary had in some instances lost the correct pronunciation of these old Semitic words, and that, in such cases, they adopted (as a Parsi would probably do at the present day) the most obvious reading of the letters before them, which thenceforth became an artificial word to be handed down to posterity, by successive generations of writers, with all the authority of old tradition.

In the same manner the artificial pronunciation of the Iranian portion of the Huvvâris may be explained. The compilers of the glossary found a number of words in the Pahlavi texts, which were written in some obsolete or contracted manner; they knew the meanings of these words, but could not trace the true readings in the altered letters; they, therefore, adopted the most obvious readings of the written characters, and thus produced another series of artificial words, such as anhômâ for aûharmazd, vahân for yazdân, madûnad for mainûk, shâtân for shâtrô, &c.

Naturally enough the Parsis are loth to admit the possibility of any error in their traditional readings of Huvvâris, and very few of them have yet adopted the views of European scholars further than to admit that they are ingenious hypotheses, which still require satisfactory proof. They are quite right in demanding such proof, and they may reasonably argue that the conflicting opinions of various European scholars do not tend to increase the certainty of their explanations. But, on the other hand, they are bound to examine all proofs that may be offered, and to consider the arguments of scholars, before utterly rejecting them in favour of their own preconceived notions of traditional authority.

Fortunately, we possess some means of ascertaining the ancient pronunciation of a few Huvvâris words, independent of the opinions of comparative philologists, in the inscriptions already mentioned as having been engraved on rocks, and impressed on coins, by the earlier kings of the Sasanian dynasty in Persia. The earliest of these rock inscriptions records the name and titles of Artakhshatar son of Pāpāk, the first Sasanian monarch (A.D. 226–240); it is engraved in Greek and two kinds of old Pahlavi characters, which have been called Chaldæo-Pahlavi and Sasanian-Pahlavi, because the one bears more resemblance to Chaldee, both in its letters and the language they express, and the other is more frequently used by the subsequent Sasanian monarchs. A similar tri-lingual inscription records the names and titles of his son and successor Shahpūhar I (A.D. 240–271), who has also left a long bi-lingual inscription, in Chaldæo and Sasanian-Pahlavi, in a cave near Persepolis. Another long bi-lingual inscription, fragments of which have been found on stones among the ruins of Pāšt Kūš, is attributed to his early successors, who have also left us several uni-lingual inscriptions in Sasanian-Pahlavi, two of which are of great length, but none later than the end of the fourth century.

The language of the earlier of these inscriptions differs from that of the manuscripts preserved by the Parsis, chiefly in the use of several Semitic words unknown to the manuscript Huzvāris, the non-existence of Iranian Huzvāris (which is evidently a growth of later times), and the less frequent use of Persian terminations affixed to Semitic words. These differences, however, are hardly greater than those which distinguish the English of Chaucer from that of our own day. Moreover, they gradually disappear in process of time, as we find the later inscriptions of the fourth century approaching much closer, in language, to the manuscripts.

As the alphabets of these inscriptions are less imperfect and ambiguous than that of the Pahlavi manuscripts, they render the pronunciation of many words much more certain. They consist of eighteen letters, having the following sounds:

1 So stated in the inscription, but Pahlavi MSS. call him the son of Pāpāk’s daughter and of Sāgān (see Bund, XXXI, 30).
Comparing this list of sounds with that of the sounds of the manuscript alphabet (pp. xvi, xvii) it is evident that the inscriptions must afford a means of distinguishing ā from kh, s from any binary compound of y, d, g, or g, sh from any compound of y, d, g, or g with ā, h, or kh, n from v, r, or l, and y, d, g from each other; all which letters and compounds are left in doubt by the manuscript alphabet. Unfortunately we do not possess trustworthy copies of some of the inscriptions which are evidently the most important from a linguistic point of view; but such copies as have been obtained supply corrections of traditional misreadings of about twenty-five Huzvāris logograms, and at the same time they confirm the correctness of three traditional readings which have been called in question by most European scholars. So far, therefore, the inscriptions would teach the Parsis that the decisions of comparative philologists are not likely to be right more than seven times out of eight, even when they are tolerably unanimous.

The Chaldæo-Pahlavi character appears to have soon

1 Whether the sound of this letter can ever be satisfactorily settled remains doubtful. Levy, in his Beiträge; cited on p. xi, considers it to be the Semitic ��, on palæographical grounds; but there are serious objections to all the identifications that have been proposed.

2 The Sasanian inscriptions, of which new and correct copies are most urgently wanted, are:—1. An inscription of thirty-one lines high up in the left side-compartment (behind the king) of the centre bas-relief of Naqš-i Ragab, near Persepolis. 2. Two inscriptions, of eleven and twelve lines respectively, on the stones of the edifice near the south-west corner of the great platform at Persepolis, south of the Hall of Columns (see Ouseley’s Travels in Persia, vol. ii. p. 237 and plate 42). 3. All the fragments of the Pāf Kûlt inscription, of which probably not more than half have yet been copied.

Of the very long inscription behind the king’s horse in the bas-relief of Naqš-i Rustam, containing more than seventy lines very much damaged, a copy taken by Westergaard in 1843, with his usual accuracy, probably gives nearly all that is legible. And of the Hāvštābād and shorter inscriptions, little or nothing remains doubtful.
INTRODUCTION.

gone out of use, after the establishment of the Sasanian dynasty, as the latest known inscription, in which it occurs, is that of Pāl Kūlī, which contains the name of Au-harmazd I (A.D. 271–272); while the long inscriptions of Naqs-i Ragab and Naqs-i Rustam, which contain the name of Varahrān II (A.D. 275–283), are engraved only in Sasanian-Pahlavi. From these facts it seems probable that Chaldaeo-Pahlavi went out of use about A.D. 275. The Sasanian characters continue to appear, with very little alteration, upon the coins until the end of the fifth century, when most of them begin to assume the cursive form of the manuscript Pahlavi, which appears to have altered very slightly since the eighth century.

The oldest Pahlavi manuscript known to be extant, consists of several fragments of papyrus recently found in a grave in the Fayûm district in Egypt, and now in the Royal Museum at Berlin; it is supposed to have been written in the eighth century. Next to this, after a long interval, come four manuscripts written on Indian paper, all by the same hand, in A.D. 1323–1324; they are two copies of the Yasna and two of the Vendidad, containing the Avesta with its Zand, or Pahlavi translation and commentary; two of these old MSS. are now preserved in Kopenhagen, one in London, and one in Bombay. Next to these in age are two MSS. of miscellaneous Pahlavi texts, written probably about fifty years later; one of these is now in Kopenhagen and one in Bombay. Another MS. of nearly the same age is also a miscellaneous collection of Pahlavi texts, written in A.D. 1397, and now in Munich; where there is also one of the oldest Pāzand-Sanskrit MSS., a copy of the Ardā-Virāf-nāmak, written in A.D. 1410. Another Pāzand-Sanskrit MS., a copy of the Khurdah Avesta, of about the same age, exists in Bombay. Pahlavi and Pāzand manuscripts of the sixteenth century are rather more numerous.

Pahlavi literature reached the zenith of its prosperity about thirteen centuries ago, when it included the whole literature of Persia. Seventy years later its destruction commenced with the fall of the Sasanian dynasty (A.D.
and the subsequent adoption of the modern Persian alphabet gave it its death-blow. The last remnants of Pahlavi writings are now contained in the few manuscripts still preserved by the Parsis in Western India, and their almost-extinct brethren in Persia. A careful estimate of the length of these remnants, so far as they are known to Europeans, has shown that the total extent of existing Pahlavi literature is about thirty-six times that of the Bundahis, as translated in this volume. One-fifth of this literature consists of translations accompanying Avesta texts, and the remaining four-fifths are purely Pahlavi works which are nearly all connected with religion. How much of this literature may have descended from Sasanian times can hardly be ascertained as yet; in fact, it is only very recently that any trustworthy data, for determining the age of a few Pahlavi writings, have been discovered, as will be explained hereafter, when considering the age of the Bundahis.

3. THE BUNDAHIS.

The term Bundahis, 'creation of the beginning,' or 'original creation,' is applied by the Parsis to a Pahlavi work\(^1\) which, in its present state, appears to be a collection of fragments relating to the cosmogony, mythology, and legendary history taught by Mazdayasnian tradition, but which cannot be considered, in any way, a complete treatise on these subjects. This term is applicable enough to much of the earlier part of the work, which treats of the progressive development of creation under good and evil influences; but it is probably not the original name of the book. Its adoption was no doubt partly owing to the occurrence of the word bûn-dahîsîn, or bûn-dahîsînîh, twice in the first sentence, and partly to its appropriateness to the subject. But the same sentence seems to inform

\(^1\) When this work forms part of a collection of Pahlavi texts, the whole manuscript is sometimes called 'the great Bundahis.' There also exists a Saddar Bundahis, or Bundahis of a hundred chapters, which is a comparatively modern compilation, detailing the chief customs and religious laws of the Parsis in a hundred sections.
us that the actual name of the treatise was Zand-ākās, 'knowing the tradition.'

The work commences by describing the state of things in the beginning; the good spirit being in endless light and omniscient, and the evil spirit in endless darkness and with limited knowledge. Both produced their own creatures, which remained apart, in a spiritual or ideal state, for three thousand years, after which the evil spirit began his opposition to the good creation under an agreement that his power was not to last more than nine thousand years, of which only the middle three thousand were to see him successful. By uttering a sacred formula the good spirit throws the evil one into a state of confusion for a second three thousand years, while he produces the archangels and the material creation, including the sun, moon, and stars. At the end of that period the evil spirit, encouraged by the demons he had produced, once more rushes upon the good creation, to destroy it. The demons carry on conflicts with each of the six classes of creation, namely, the sky, water, earth, plants, animals represented by the primeval ox, and mankind represented by Gāyōmard; producing little effect but movement in the sky, saltiness in the water, mountains in the earth, withering in plants, and death to the primeval ox, and also to Gāyōmard after an interval.

Then follows a series of chapters describing the seven regions of the earth, its mountains and seas, the five classes of animals, the origin of mankind, generation, the five kinds of fire and three sacred fires, the white Hōm tree and the tree of many seeds, the three-legged ass, the ox Hadhayōs; the bird Kāmrōs, and other birds and animals opposed to the evil creation, the rivers of the world, the seventeen species of liquids, the lakes, the origin of the ape and bear, the chiefs of the several kinds of creatures and creations, the calendar, lineal measures, trees and plants, the characteristics of various demons, the spiritual chiefs of the various regions of the earth, and the resurrection and future existence; all which descriptions are given on the authority of the Din, which may have been some particular book, or revelation generally. The concluding chapters give the genealogies of the legendary Persian kings and heroes, and of Zaratûst and certain priests, together with an epitome of Persian chronology from the creation to the Muhammadan conquest.

As the work now stands it is evidently of a fragmentary character, bearing unmistakable marks both of omissions and dislocations; and the extant manuscripts, as will be seen, differ among themselves both as to the extent and arrangement of the text. Many passages have the appearance of being translations from an Avesta original, and it is very probable that we have in the Bundahis either a translation, or an epitome, of the Dâmداد Nask; one of the twenty-one books into which the whole of the Zoroastrian scriptures are said to have been divided before the time of Darius. This may be guessed from a comparison of the contents of the Bundahis with those of the Dâmداد Nask, which are detailed in the Dînî-vâgârkarâd as follows:—

"It contained an explanation of the spiritual existence and heaven, good and evil, the material existence of this world, the sky and the earth, and everything which Aûharmazd produced in water, fire, and vegetation, men and quadrupeds, reptiles and birds, and everything which is produced from the waters, and the characteristics of all things. Secondly, the production of the resurrection and future existence; the concourse and separation at the Kînved bridge; on the reward of the meritorious and the punishment of sinners in the future existence, and such-like explanations." Moreover, the Dâmdad Nask is twice quoted as an authority in the Selections of Zâd-sparâm (IX, 1, 16), when treating of animals, in nearly the same words as those used in the Bundahis.

The first manuscript of the Bundahis seen in Europe was brought from Surat by Anquetil Duperron in 1761, and he published a French translation of it in his great work on the Zend-Avesta in 1771. This manuscript, which is now in the National Library at Paris, was a modern copy, written A.D. 1734, and contained a miscellaneous collection of Pahlavi writings besides the Bundahis. And Anquetil’s translation, though carefully prepared in accordance with the information he had obtained from his Parsi instructor, is very far from giving the correct meaning of the original text in many places.

In 1820 the very old codex from which Anquetil’s MS. had been copied was brought to Europe, from Bombay, by the Danish scholar Rask, and was subsequently deposited in the University Library at Kopenhagen. This most important codex, which will be more particularly described under the appellation of K20, appears to have been written during the latter half of the fourteenth century; and a facsimile of the Pahlavi text of the Bundahis, which it contains, was very carefully traced from it, lithographed, and published by Westergaard in 1851.¹

In a review of this lithographed edition of the Pahlavi text, published in the Göttinger Gelehrte Anzeigen in 1854,² Haug gave a German translation of the first three chapters of the Bundahis. And Spiegel, in his Traditional Literature of the Persis³, published in 1860 a German translation of many passages in the Bundahis, together with a transcript of the Pahlavi text of Chaps. I, II, III, and XXX in Hebrew characters. But the complete German translation of the Bundahis by Windischmann, with his commentary on its contents, published in his Zoroastrian Studies⁴ in 1863, was probably the most important step in advance since the time of Anquetil, and the utmost that could be done on the authority of a single MS. which is far from perfect.

In 1866 another very old codex, containing the Pahlavi texts of the Bundahis and other works, was brought to Europe by Haug, to whom it had been presented at Surat in 1864. It is now in the State Library at Munich, and will be more minutely described under the appellation of M6. In this codex the Bundahis is arranged in a different order from that in K2o, and Chaps. XXVIII, XXIX, and XXXI–XXXIII are omitted.

A second complete German translation of the Bundahis, with a lithographed copy of the Pahlavi text, a transliteration of the text in modern Persian characters, and a glossary of all the words it contains, was published by Justi in 1868.

Its author, having had access to other MSS. (descended from M6) at London and Oxford, was able to rectify many of the deficiencies in Windischmann’s translation; but, otherwise, he made but little progress in elucidating difficult passages.

Other European writers have published the result of their studies of particular parts of the Bundahis, but it does not appear that any of them have attempted a continuous translation of several chapters.

Whether the existence of previous translations be more of an assistance than a hindrance in preparing a new one, may well be a matter of doubt. Previous translations may prevent oversights, and in difficult passages it is useful to see how others have floundered through the mire; but, on the other hand, they occasion much loss of time, by the necessity of examining many of their dubious renderings before finally fixing upon others that seem more satisfactory. The object of the present translation is to give the meaning of the original text as literally as possible, and with a minimum of extra words; the different renderings of other translators being very rarely noticed, unless there be some probability of their being of service.

to the reader. Some doubtful words and passages still defy all attempts at satisfactory solution, but of these the reader is warned; and, no doubt, a few oversights and mistakes will be discovered.

With regard to the original text, we have to recover it from four manuscripts which are, more or less, independent authorities, and may be styled K20, K20b, M6, and TD. The first three of these have evidently descended, either directly or through one or more intermediate copies, from the same original; but the source of TD, so far as it can be ascertained, seems to have been far removed from that of the others. All the other MSS. of the Bundahis, which have been examined, whether Pahlavi or Pâzand, are descended either from K20 or M6, and are, therefore, of no independent authority.

K20 is the very old codex already mentioned as having been brought from Bombay by Rask in 1820, and is now No. 20 of the collection of Avesta and Pahlavi MSS. in the University Library at Kopenhagen. It consists now of 173 folios of very old and much-worn Indian paper of large octavo size, but five other folios are certainly missing, besides an uncertain number lost from the end of the volume. This MS. contains twenty Pahlavi texts, written twenty lines to the page, and some of them accompanied by Avesta; the Bundahis is the ninth of these texts, and occupies fols. 88–129, of which fol. 121 is missing. Three of the texts, occurring before the Bundahis, have dated colophons, but the dates are A.Y. 690, 720, and 700, all within 36 folios; it is, therefore, evident that these dates have been copied from older MSS.; but at the same time the appearance of the paper indicates that the actual date of the MS. cannot be much later than A.Y. 720 (A.D. 1351), and there are reasons for believing that it was written several years before A.Y. 766 (A.D. 1397), as will be explained in the description of M6. Owing to its age and comparative completeness this MS. of the Bundahis is certainly the most important one extant, although comparison with other MSS. proves that its writer was rather careless, and frequently omitted words and phrases. The loss of fol. 121, though it has hitherto left an inconvenient gap in the text (not filled up by other MSS.), is more than compensated by the three extra chapters which this MS. and its copies have hitherto alone supplied. The text on the lost folio was supposed by Anquetil to have contained a whole chapter besides portions of the two adjacent ones; this is now known to be a mistake, Anquetil's Chap. XXVIII being quite imaginary; the end of Chap. XXVII has long been supplied from other MSS., but the beginning of the next chapter has hitherto been missing.

Only two copies of K₂₀ appear to be known to Europeans; the best of these is the copy brought from Surat by Anquetil, No. 7 of his collection of manuscripts, now in the National Library at Paris; this was written in A.D. 1734, when K₂₀ appears to have been nearly in its present imperfect state, though it may have had some 15 folios more at the end. This copy seems to have been carefully written; but the same cannot be said of the other copy, No. 21 in the University Library at Kopenhagen, which is full of blunders, both of commission and omission, and can hardly have been written by so good a Pahlavi scholar as Dastûr Dârâb, Anquetil's instructor, although attributed to him.

K₂₀b consists of nineteen loose folios, found by Westergaard among some miscellaneous fragments in the collection of Avesta and Pahlavi MSS. in the University Library at Kopenhagen, and now forming No. 20b in that collection. The first two folios are lost, but the third folio commences with the Pahlavi equivalent of the words 'knew that Aharman exists' (Bund. Chap. I, 8), and the text continues to the end of Chap. XI, 1, where it leaps at once (in the middle of a line on the fifteenth folio) to Chap. XXX, 15, 'one brother who is righteous,' whence the text continues to the end of Chap. XXXI, 15, which is followed by Chaps. XXXII, XXXIV, as in K₂₀. This

1 I am indebted to the late Professor N. L. Westergaard for all information about this MS., and also for a tracing of the Pahlavi text of so much of Chap. XXXI as is contained in it.
MS. is not very old, and contains merely a fragment of the text; but its value consists in its not being a descendant of either K20 or M6, as it clearly represents a third line of descent from their common original. It agrees with K20 in the general arrangement of its chapters, so far as they go, and also in containing Chap. XXXI; but it differs from it in some of the details of that chapter, and agrees with M6 in some verbal peculiarities elsewhere; it has not, however, been collated in any other chapter. The omission of nearly twenty chapters, in the centre of the work, indicates that some one of the MSS. from which it is descended, had lost many of its central folios before it was copied, and that the copyist did not notice the deficiency; such unnoticed omissions frequently occur in Pahlavi manuscripts.

M6 is the very old codex brought to Europe by Haug in 1866, and now No. 6 of the Haug collection in the State Library at Munich. It consists of 240 folios of very old, but well-preserved, Indian paper of large octavo size (to which thirteen others, of rather later date, have been prefixed) bound in two volumes. This MS. contains nineteen Pahlavi texts, written from seventeen to twenty-two lines to the page, and some of them accompanied by Avesta; eleven of these texts are also found in K20, and the Bundahis is the fourteenth of the nineteen, occupying fols. 53–99 of the second volume. Two of the other texts have dated colophons, the dates being fifty days apart in A. Y. 766 (A.D. 1397), and as there are 150 folios between the two dates there is every probability that they are the actual dates on which the two colophons were written. The arrangement of the Bundahis in this MS. is different from that in K20, giving the chapters in the following order:—Chaps. XV–XXIII, I–XIV, XXIV–XXVII, XXX, XXXII, XXXIV, and omitting Chaps. XXVIII, XXIX, and XXXI. These omissions and the misplacement of Chaps. I–XIV render it probable that the MS., from which the Bundahis in M6 was copied, was already in a state of decay; and this supposition is confirmed by upwards of fifty peculiar mistakes, scattered over most parts of the text in M6, which are evidently due to the illegibility of the original from which it was copied, or to its illegible words having been touched up by an ignorant writer, instances of which are not uncommon in old Pahlavi MSS.
Eliminating these errors, for which the writer of M6 cannot be held responsible, he seems to have been a more careful copyist than the writer of K20, and supplies several words and phrases omitted by the latter. The close correspondence of K20 and M6 in most other places, renders it probable that they were copied from the same original, in which case K20 must have been written several years earlier than M6, before the original MS. became decayed and difficult to read. It is possible, however, that K20 was copied from an early copy of the original of M6; in which case the date of K20 is more uncertain, and may even be later than that of M6.

Several MSS. of the Bundahis descended from M6 are in existence. One is in the MS. No. 121 of the Ouseley collection in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, and contains the chapters in the following order:—Chaps. XV–XXIII,
I–VII, 17 (to ‘Arag river’), XII–XIV, XXIV–XXVII, XXX, VII, 12–XI; followed by Sls. Chap. XX, 4–17, also derived from M6. Another is in the library of Dastur Jâmâspji Minochiharji at Bombay, and contains the chapters also in a dislocated state (due to the misplacement of folios in some former MS.) as follows:—Chaps. XV–XXIII, I–XI, 5 (to ‘and the evil spirit’), XII, 2 (from ‘Sišidâv’)—XII, 12 (first word), XI, 5 (from ‘produced most for Khvanîras’)—XII, 2 (to ‘and Kôndras, Mount’), XXX, 32 (from ‘the renovation arises in’)—XXX, 33, XXXII, XXXIV, Sls. Chap. XVIII, Bund. Chaps. XII, 12 (from ‘Aîrak’)—XIV, XXIV–XXVII, XXX. A third is in the library of Dastur Nôshirvânji Jâmâspji at Poona, and contains the text in the same order as M6. A fragment of the Pahlavi text of the Bundahis, also descended from M6, occupies eight folios in the Additional Oriental MS. No. 22,378 in the Library of the British Museum; it contains Chaps. XVIII, XIX, 17, and XX, 1–2 (to ‘one from the other’).

There are also several Pâzand manuscripts of the Bun-INTRODUCTION.

dahis, written in Avesta characters, and likewise derived from M6. One of the best of these is No. 22 of the collection of Avesta and Pahlavi MSS. in the India Office Library at London; it is old, and has the date A.Y. 936 (A.D. 1567) in a Pahlavi colophon on fol. 111, but this may have been copied from an older MS.; its contents are arranged as follows:—Chaps. XVIII–XXIII, I–XIV, XXIV–XXVII, XXX, XXXII, XXXIV, followed by several short Pāzand texts, only part of which are derived from M6, and the last of them being left incomplete by the loss of the folios which originally formed the end of the volume; instead of these lost folios others, containing Chaps. XV–XVII, have been added and bound up with the rest. Another MS., No. 7 in the same collection, which is dated A.Y. 1174 (A.D. 1805), is a modern copy derived from No. 22 through one or more intervening MSS.¹; it contains precisely the same text, but with many variations in orthography, indicative of the very uncertain character of Pāzand spelling. Two fragments of the Pāzand text are also contained in the MSS. No. 121 at Oxford, already mentioned; they consist of Chaps. V, 3–7 (to 'would have known the secret') and XXV, 18–22. Another fragment, evidently copied from an old MS., is found on fols. 34, 35 of the Rivāyat MS. No. 8 of the collection in the India Office Library; it consists of Chap. XVIII, 1–8.

The Pāzand text of the Bundahis, derived from M6, is also written in Persian characters in M7 (No. 7 of the Haug collection at Munich), dated A.Y. 1178 (A.D. 1809). It is interlined by Persian glosses, word for word, and consists of Chaps. XVIII–XXIII, I–XIV, XXIV–XXVII, and XXX on fols. 81–119, with Chaps. XV–XVII on fols. 120–126, a repetition of Chap. XV and part of XVI on fols. 223–227, and Chap. XXXII on fol. 232.

Thus far, it will be noticed, we have two good independent authorities, K20 and M6, for ascertaining the text of the Bundahis in the fourteenth century, so far as Chaps. I–

XXVII, XXX, XXXII, and XXXIV are concerned; and we have also, in K20b, a second authority for so much of Chap. XXXI as occurs in K20; but for Chaps. XXVIII and XXIX we have nothing but K20 to rely on, and part of Chap. XXVIII is lost in that manuscript. Such was the unsatisfactory state of that part of the text until Dec. 1877, when information about the MS. TD was received, followed by further details and a copy of Chaps. XXVIII, XXIX, and XXXI–XXXIII in Oct. 1878.

TD is a manuscript of the Bundahis which contains much more extensive text than the MSS. already described, but whether it be an extension of the hitherto-received text, or the received text be an abridgment of this longer one, is likely to be a matter of dispute among Pahlavi scholars until the whole of the new text has been thoroughly examined. At any rate, the contents of this MS., combined with those of some MSS. of the Dādīstān-i Dinīk, afford a means of fixing the date of this recension of the Bundahis, as will be seen hereafter.

This MS. belongs to a young Mobad named Tehmuras Dinshawji Ankesaria in Bombay, and was brought from Persia a few years ago by a Mobad named Khodabakhsh Farod Abadan. It occupies the first 103 folios of the volume containing it, and is followed by 112 more folios containing the Nīrangistān. The first original folio, which contained the text as far as Chap. I, 5 (to ‘endless light’), has been lost and replaced by another (which, however, is now old) containing some introductory sentences, besides the missing text. The last original folio of the Bundahis, containing the last five lines of the last chapter, has also been lost and replaced by another modern folio, which contains the missing text followed by two colophons, both expressing approval of the text, and asserting that the MS. was written by Gopatshah Rustom Bōndār. The first of these colophons is undated, but gives the testimony of Dastūr Rūstām ¹ Gūstāsp Ardashīr, who is known to have written another MS. dated A.Y. 1068 (A.D. 1699). The second colophon is by Dastūr Jamshe'd Jāmāsp Hakīm, and is dated A.Y. 1113 (A.D. 1743), which was probably the date when this last folio was supplied to complete the old defective MS.

1 I am indebted to Mr. Khursheedji Rustamji Cama, of Bombay (who is well known for the interest he takes in all matters relating to the ancient customs and history of his fellow-countrymen), for obtaining this information, and to the owner of the MS. for his liberality in supplying me with all the details and extracts mentioned in the text.

With regard to the age of the older part of this MS. we can arrive at an approximation in the following manner:—

A valuable MS. of the Dādistān-i Dinīk, which also belongs to Tehmuraz Dinshawji, was written (according to a colophon which it contains) by Gōpatshah Rūstōm ² Bāndār Mālḵā-mardān in the land of Kirmān, who was evidently the same person as the writer of TD. Another MS. of the Dādistān-i Dinīk was written by Marsapān Frē'dūn Vāhrom Rūstām Bāndār Mālḵā-mardān Dīn-ayār, also in the land of Kirmān, in A.Y. 941 (A.D. 1572). Comparing these two genealogies together it seems evident that Gōpatshah was a brother of Vāhrom, the grandfather of Marsapān, and, therefore, a grand-uncle of Marsapān himself. Allowing for these two generations, it is probable that Gōpatshah wrote TD about A.Y. 900 (say A.D. 1530); although instances have occurred in which a son has written a MS. at an earlier date than that of one written by his father.

The introductory sentences on the first restored folio are evidently a modern addition to the text, after it had acquired the name of Bundahis; but they seem to have been copied from some other MS., as the copyist appears to have hardly understood them, having written them continuously with the beginning of the text, without break or stop. The spelling is modern, but that may be due to the copyist; and the language is difficult, but may be translated as follows ³: glorious, omniscient, wise, powerful, and supreme, by what is well-thought, well-said, and well-done in thought, word, and deed, and the good augury of all the celestial angels and terrestrial angels upon the virtuous creation, I beseech.

'Written at the second fortunate conjunction (akhṭar) in the high-priestship (dāstūrīh) of the God-devoted, all-sagacious cultivator of righteousness, the lover of good works who is God-discerning, spirit-surveying, and approved by the good, the high-priest of the good religion of the Mazdayasnians, the glorified ¹ Spendyād son of Māh-vindād, son of Rūstōm, son of Shatrōyār.

'The writing² of the Bûndahīs was set going by the coming of the Arabs to the country of Iran, whose hetērodoxy (dūs-dīnīh) and ignorance have arisen from not understanding the mysteries of Kayān³ orthodoxy (hū-dīnōīh) and of those revered by the upholders of the religion. From their deep seats it draws the purport of benedictions, and from dubious thinking of actions it draws words of true meaning, the disclosure of which is entertaining knowledge.

'On account of evil times, even he of the undecayed family of the Kayāns and the Kayān upholders of the religion are mingled with the obedient and just of those heterodox; and by the upper class the words of the orthodox, uttered in assembled worship, are considered as filthy vice. He also whose wish was to learn propriety (varāg) through this treatise (farḥāng), might provide it for himself, from various places, by trouble and day and night painstaking, but was not able.'

The text of Chap. I then commences (without any intermediate stop) with the words zak zand-ākāsīh, 'that knowledge of tradition.' As the whole text of the Bundahīs occupies about 203 pages in TD, and each page contains seventeen lines rather longer than those in K20, it is evident that the text in TD must be more than twice the length of that in K20, which occupied originally about eighty-three pages of twenty lines each. This additional text consists not only of additional matter in many of the chapters, but also of extra chapters, which give the work a more complete appearance than it presents in the manuscripts hitherto known. The whole number of chapters in TD appear to be forty-two, the general character of the contents of which may be gathered from the following list of the headings of each chapter, with the space it occupies in TD, and a reference to the corresponding chapter of the translation in this volume (such chapters as seem to be entirely wanting in K20 being marked with an asterisk):

1. The knowledge of tradition, first about Aûharmazd's original creation and the antagonism of the evil spirit, afterwards about the nature of the creatures of the world, from the original creation till the end; 19 pages; see Chap. I.

Comparing this list of contents with the text in K20, as published in Westergaard’s lithographed facsimile edition, it appears that TD contains, not only fifteen extra chapters, but also very much additional matter in the chapters corresponding to Chaps. I, II, V, XVI, XXVIII, and XXXI of the translation in this volume, and smaller additions to those corresponding to Chaps. III, IV, XV, XVII, and XXXIV. The arrangement of the chapters in TD is also much more methodical than in the Indian MSS., especially with regard to Chaps. XX, XXI, XXII, and XXVII, which evidently occupy their proper position in TD; and so far as Chap. XX is concerned, this arrangement is confirmed by the insertion of its first sentence between Chaps. XIII and XIV in the Indian MSS., which indicates that the whole chapter must have been in that position in some older copy. In fact, the Indian MSS. must probably be now regarded merely as collections of extracts from the original work; this has been long suspected from the fragmentary character of the text they contain, but it could hardly be proved until a more complete text had been discovered.

Whether TD may be considered as a copy of the text as it stood originally, or merely of an after recension of the work, can hardly be determined with certainty until the whole contents of the manuscript have been carefully examined; it is, therefore, to be hoped that its owner will be induced to publish a lithographed facsimile of the whole, after the manner of Westergaard's edition. So far as appears in the lengthy and valuable extracts, with which he has kindly favoured me, no decided difference of style can be detected between the additional matter and the text hitherto known, nor any inconsistencies more striking than such as sometimes occur in the Indian MSS. On the other hand, it will be noticed that heading No. 25 in the list of contents seems to be misplaced, which is an argument against the text being in its original state; and the style of the Bundahis is so much less involved and obscure than that of the Selections of Zâd-sparam (see Appendix to the Bundahis), which treat of some of the same subjects, that it may be fairly suspected of having been written originally in a different age. But the writer of the text, as it appears in TD, calls Zâd-sparam¹ one of his contemporaries (see Chap. XXXIII, 10, 11 of the translation); it may, therefore, be suspected that he merely re-edited an old text with some additions of his own, which, however, are rather difficult to distinguish from the rest. No stress can be laid upon peculiarities of orthography in TD, as they are, in all likelihood, attributable to copyists long subsequent to Zâd-sparam's contemporaries.

Any future translator of the Bundahis will probably have to take the text in TD as the nearest accessible approach to the original work; but the present translation is based, as heretofore, upon the text in K20, corrected in many places from M6, but with due care not to adopt readings which seem due to the illegibility of the original from which M6 was copied, as already explained. In Chaps. XXVIII, XXIX, XXXI, XXXII, and XXXIII, however, TD has been taken as a principal authority, merely checked by K20, and having its additional passages carefully indicated; and in Chap. XXXI, K20b has also been consulted.

Since the present translation was printed, any lingering doubts, as to the genuineness of the text in TD, have been, in a great measure, dissipated by the discovery that a small fragment1 of an old MS. of the Bundahis, which has long been in Europe, is evidently a portion of a text of similar character to TD, and of exactly the same extent. This small fragment consists of two folios belonging to an old MS. brought from Persia by the late Professor Westergaard in 1843-44, and which is evidently the codex mentioned by him in the preface to his Zend-Avesta, p. 8, note 3. These two folios, which are numbered 130 and 131 in Persian words, now form the commencement of this old mutilated MS., of which the first 129 folios have been lost. They contain very little more than one page of the Bundahis text, namely, the last sentences of the last chapter (corresponding to Bund. XXXIV, 7-9), followed by a colophon occupying less than two pages. This fragment of the text contains some additional details not found in the Indian MSS., as well as a few other variations of no great importance. It may be translated as follows:—

`, . . . Sâhm2 was in those reigns of Aûzôbô, Kavâd, and Mânûkhihar.] Kaï-Kâyûs, till his going to the sky, seventy-five years, and after that, seventy-five years, altogether a hundred and fifty years; Kaï-Khûsrôbô sixty years; Khârâsp a hundred and twenty years; Kaî-Vistâsp, till the coming of the religion, thirty years; [total (mar) one thousand years. Then the millennium reign came to Capricornus, and Zaratûhast the Spitamân, with tidings (pêtkhambarîh) from the creator Aûharmazd, came to King Vistâsp; and Vistâsp was king[,] after receiving the religion, ninety years.

1 I am indebted to Professor G. Hoffmann, of Kiel, for directing my attention to this fragment, and also for kindly sending me a facsimile of it. It had been recognised as a portion of the Bundahis by Dr. Andreas some years ago, and probably by the owner of the MS., the late Professor Westergaard, long before that.

Vohûman, son of Spend-dâd, a hundred and twelve years;
Hûmâî, daughter of Vohûman, thirty years; Dàràî, son of Kîhar-âsâd, that is, of the daughter of Vohûman, twelve years; Dàràî, son of Dàràî, fourteen years; and Alexander the Rûman four years.

The Askânians should bear the title in an uninterrupted sovereignty two hundred and so many years; and Artakhshatar, son of Pâpak, and the number of the Sásânians bear it four hundred and sixty years, until the withering Arabs obtained a place [as far as the year 447 of the Persians;
now it is the Persian year 527].

The colophon, which follows, states that the MS. was finished on the thirteenth day of the ninth month A.Y. 936 (A.D. 1567), and was written by Mitrô-âpân, son of Anôshakrûbân, son of Rûstâm. This MS. is, therefore, of nearly the same age as TD; but there has been no opportunity of collating the fragment of it, which is still extant, with the corresponding portion of TD. That it was a MS. of the same character as TD (that is, one containing the same text as K20, but with much additional matter) appears clearly

nâvad as a variant of navad, ‘ninety.’
5 The words are, vad gînâk ayâst khûskô-i Tâzîkânô, but the exact meaning is rather doubtful.
6 The last date is doubtful, as the Pahlavi text gives the ciphers only for ‘five and twenty-seven,’ omitting that for ‘hundred.’ These Persian dates must either have been added by some former copyist, or Chap. XXXIV must have been appended to the Bundahis at a later date than the ninth century, when the preceding genealogical chapters were probably added to the original work (see p. xliii). The Persian year 527 was A.D. 1158.
from the fragment translated above. Regarding its original extent, it is possible to make an approximate estimate, by calculating the quantity of text which the 129 lost folios must have contained, from the quantity actually existing on folio 130. According to this calculation, the original extent of the text of the Bundahis in this MS. must have been very nearly 30,000 words; and it is remarkable that a similar calculation of the extent of the text in TD, based upon the actual contents of ten folios out of 103, gives precisely the same result. This coincidence is a strong argument in favour of the absolute identity of the text lost from Westergaard’s MS. with that actually existing in TD; it shows, further, that the original extent of the Bundahis may now be safely estimated at 30,000 words, instead of the 13,000 contained in K20 when that MS. was complete.

That this fragment belonged to a separate MS., and is not the folio missing from the end of TD, is shown not only by its containing more of the text than is said to be missing, but also by the first folio of the fragment being numbered 130, instead of 103, and by its containing fifteen lines to the page, instead of seventeen, as would be necessary in order to correspond with TD.

Regarding the age of the Bundahis many opinions have been hazarded, but as they have been chiefly based upon minute details of supposed internal evidence evolved from each writer’s special misinterpretation of the text, it is unnecessary to detail them. The only indication of its age that can be fairly obtained from internal evidence, is that the text of the Bundahis could not have been completed, in its present form, until after the Muhammadan conquest of Persia (A.D. 651). This is shown not only by the statements that the sovereignty ‘went to the Arabs’ (Chap. XXXIV, 9), that ‘now, through the invasion of the Arabs, they (the negroes) are again diffused through the country of Iran’ (Chap. XXIII, 3), and that ‘whoever keeps the year by the revolution of the moon mingles summer with winter and winter with summer’ (Chap. XXV, 19, referring probably to the Muhammadan year not corresponding with the seasons), but also, more positively by the following translation of an extract from Chap. 39 in TD:

'And when the sovereignty came to Yazdakard he exercised sovereignty twenty years, and then the Arabs rushed into the country of Iran in great multitude. Yazdakard did not prosper (lā rākaftō) in warfare with them, and went to Khūrāsān and Türkistān to seek horses, men, and assistance, and was slain by them there. The son of Yazdakard went to the Hindūs and fetched an army of champions; before it came, conducted unto Khūrāsān, that army of champions dispersed. The country of Iran remained with the Arabs, and their own irreligious law was propagated by them, and many ancestral customs were destroyed; the religion of the Mazdayasnians was weakened, and washing of corpses, burial of corpses, and eating of dead matter were put in practice. From the original creation until this day evil more grievous than this has not happened, for through their evil deeds—on account of want, foreign habits (Anīrānīh), hostile acts, bad decrees, and bad religion—ruin, want, and other evils have taken lodgment.'

None of these passages could have been written before the Muhammadan conquest; but the writer, or editor, of the text as it appears in TD, supplies the means of approximating much more closely to the date of his work, in a passage in Chap. 41 of TD, in which he mentions the names of several of his contemporaries (see Chap. XXXIII, 10, 11). Among these, as already noticed, he mentions 'Zād-sparham son of Yūdān-Yim,' who must have been the writer of the Selections of Zād-sparam, a translation of which is added as an appendix to the Bundahīs in this volume. This writer was the brother of Mānūškīhar son of Yūdān-Yim, who wrote the Dādistān-i Dīnīk, and from colophons found in certain MSS. of the Dādistān (which will be more particularly described in the next section of this introduction) it appears that this Mānūškīhar was high-priest of Pārs and Kīrmān in A.Y. 250 (A.D. 881). This date may, therefore, be taken as a very close approximation to the time at which the Bundahis probably assumed the form we find in TD; but that MS., having been written about 650 years later, can hardly have been copied direct from the original. Whether that original was merely a new edition of an older Pahlavi work, as may be suspected from the simplicity of its language, or whether it was first translated, for the most part, from the Avesta of the Dāmdād Nask, in the ninth century, we have no means of determining with certainty. Judging, however, from Chap. I, 1, the original Bundahīr probably ended with the account of the resurrection (Chap. XXX), and the extra chapters, containing genealogical and chronological details (matters not mentioned in Chap. I, 1), together with all allusions to the Arabs, were probably added by the revising editor in the ninth century. The last, or chronological, chapter may even have been added at a later date.

A Gugarātī translation, or rather paraphrase, of the Bundahīs was published in 1819 by Edal Dārāb Jamshēd Jāmāsp Āsā, and a revised edition of it was published by Peshutan Rustam in 1877. In the preface to the latter edition it is stated that the translator made use of two MSS., one being a copy of a manuscript written in Iran in A.Y. 776 by Rustamji Meherwanji Margabān Sheheriār, and the other a MS. written in India by Dastür Jamshēdji Jāmāspji in A.Y. 1139. It is also mentioned that he was four years at work upon his translation. The editor of the new edition states that he has laboured to improve the work by collecting all the further information he could find, on the various subjects, in many other Pahlavi works. The result of all this labour is not so much a mere translation of the Bundahis, as a larger work upon the same subject, or a paraphrase more methodically arranged, as may be seen from the following summary of its contents:

2 There is no doubt whatever that the writer of the preface is referring to M5, although his description is incorrect. M6 was written at Bhrād in India A.Y. 766 by Peshutan Rām Kāndhīn Shāharyār Neryūsang Shāhmarat Shaharyār Bhrām Aūrmazdāyār Rāmīyār; but some portion of it (probably not the Bundahīs) was copied from a MS. written A.Y. 618 (A.D. 1249) by Rūstam Mihir-āpān Marzaapān Dāhīn-ayār, who must be the copyist mentioned in the preface to the Gugarātī translation.

The headings of the fifty-nine chapters, which form the first part of the work, are:—Ahuramazd’s covenant, account of the sky, of the first twelve things created, of Mount Alborg; of the twelve signs of the zodiac, of the stars, of the soul, of the first practices adopted by the creatures of the evil spirit Ahereman, of Ahereman’s first breaking into the sky, of Ahereman’s coming upon the primeval ox, of Ahereman’s arrival in the fire, of Ahereman’s coming upon Gaiomard, of the coming of Ahuramazd and Ahereman upon Gaiomard at the time of his creation, of the lustre residing in both spirits; further account of the arrangement of the sky, another account of all the mountains, of depressions for water, of great and small rivers, of the eighteen rivers of fresh water, of the seven external and seven internal liquids in the bodies of men, of the period in which water falling on the earth arrives at its destination, of the three spiritual rivers, of the star Tehestar’s destroying the noxious creatures which Ahereman had distributed over the earth, of the prophet Zarathost’s asking the creator Ahuramazd how long these noxious creatures will remain in the latter millenniums, of driving the poison of the noxious creatures out of the earth, of the divisions of the land, of the creator Ahuramazd’s placing valiant stars as club-bearers over the heads of the demons, of all the things produced by the passing away of the primeval ox, of the 282 species of beasts and birds, of the bird named Kamros, of the bird named Karsapad and the hollow of Vargamkard, of the birds who are enemies opposed to the demons and fiends, of the bitter and sweet plants among the fifty-five kinds of grain and twelve kinds of herbs, of the flowers of the thirty days, of the revolution of the sun and moon and stars, and how night falls, and how the day becomes light, of the seven regions of the earth, of depressions, of the creatures of the sea, of the flow and ebb of the tide, of the three-legged ass, of the Gâhambârs, of Rapithvan, of the revolution of the seasons, of the production of mankind from the passing away of Gaiomard, of the production of offspring from the seed of men, of all fires, of all the clever work produced in the reign of King Jamshed and the production of the ape and bear, of the production of the Abyssinian and negro from Zohâk, of the splendour and glory of King Jamshed, of the soul of Kersâsp, of Kersâsp's soul being the first to rise, of the names of the prophet Zarathost's pedigree, of his going out into the world, of his children, of the orders given by Ahereman to the demons when the creator Ahuramazd created the creatures, of the weeping and raging of the evil spirit Ahereman, of the weeping of the demon of Wrath in the presence of Ahereman when the prophet Zarathost brought the religion, of the computation of twelve thousand years.

The headings of the thirteen chapters, which form the second part, are:—Account of the last millenniums, of the appearance of Hoseedar-bâmi, of his going out into the world, of the appearance of Hoseedar-mâh, of Sosios, of the fifty-seven years, of giving the light of the sun to men on the day of the resurrection, of the rising again of the whole of mankind on that day, of the resurrection, of the means of resurrection, of the annihilation of the evil spirit Ahereman and the demons and fiends on the day of resurrection, of the creator Ahuramazd's making the earth and sky one after the resurrection, of the proceedings of all creatures after the resurrection.

The third part contains an abstract of the contents of the hundred chapters of the Sad-dar Bundahis, and concludes with an account of the ceremonial formula practised when tying the kusti or sacred thread-girdle.
4. The Selections of Zād-Spāram.

In some manuscripts of the Dādistān-i Dīnīk the ninety-two questions and answers, which usually go by that name, are preceded and followed by Pahlavi texts which are each nearly equal in extent to the questions and answers, and treat of a variety of subjects, somewhat in the manner of a Rivâyat. Of the texts which follow the questions and answers the following are the principal:—

Incantations for fever, &c.; indications afforded by natural marks on the body; about the hamīstakān (‘the ever-stationary,’ or neutral state of future existence) and the different grades in heaven; copy of an epistle¹ from Herbad Mānūšēkhar son of Yūdān-Yim², which he addressed to the good people of Sīrkān³, about the decisions pronounced by Herbad Zād-spāram son of Yūdān-Yim; copy of a letter from Herbad Mānūšēkhar son of Yūdān-Yim to his brother, Herbad Zād-spāram, on the same subject, and replying to a letter of his written from Nīvshāpūhar; copy of a notice by Herbad Mānūšēkhar, son of Yūdān-Yim and high-priest (raď) of Pārs and Kirmān, of the necessity of fifteenfold ablation on account of grievous sin, written and sealed in the third month a.V. 250 (A.D. 881); memoranda and writings called ‘Selections of Zād-spāram son of Yūdān-Yim,’ the first part treating of many of the same subjects as the Bundahis, together with legends regarding Zaratúst and his family; the second part about the formation of men out of body, life, and soul; and the third part about the details of the renovation of the universe. The last part of these Selections is incomplete in all known MSS., and is followed by some fragments of a further series of questions and answers regarding the omniscient wisdom, the evil spirit, Kangdes, the enclosure formed by Yím, &c.

¹ This long epistle contains one statement which is important in its bearing upon the age of certain Pahlavi writings. It states that Nishahpūhar was in the council of Anōshak-rūbān Khūsrū, king of kings and son of Kavad, also that he was Mobad of Mobads and a commentator. Now this is the name of a commentator quoted in the Pahlavi Vend. III, 151, V, 112, VIII, 64, and very frequently in the Nirangistān; it is also a title applied to Ardā-Virāf (see AV. I, 35). These facts seem to limit the age of the last revision of the Pahlavi Vendidad, and of the composition of the Pahlavi Nirangistān and Ardā-Virāf-nāmaḵ to the time of King Khūsrū Nōshirvān (a.V. 531-579). The statement depends, of course, upon the accuracy of a tradition three centuries old, as this epistle must have been written about a.D. 880.

A translation of so much of the Selections of Zâd-sparâm as treats of the same subjects as the Bundahís, has been added as an appendix to the translation of that work in this volume, because the language used in these Selections seems to have an important bearing upon the question of the age of the Bundahís. The time when the Selections themselves were written is fixed with considerable precision by the date (A. D. 881), when their author's brother, Mânûskhâr, issued his public notice, as mentioned above. But Zâd-sparâm uses, in many places, precisely the same words as those employed in the Bundahís, interspersed with much matter written in a more declamatory style; it is, therefore, evident that he had the Bundahís before him to quote from, and that work must consequently have been written either by one of his contemporaries, or by an older writer. So far the Selections merely confirm the information already obtained more directly from TD (see p. xxxviii); but the involved style of their language seems to prove more than this. In fact, in none of the text of the Dádistân-i Dînîk and its accompaniments is there much of the simplicity of style and directness of purpose which are the chief characteristics of most of the language of the Bundahís. So far, therefore, as style can be considered a mark of age, rather than a mere personal peculiarity of a contemporary writer, the contrast between the straightforward language of the Bundahís and the laboured sentences of Mânûskhâr and Zâd-sparâm, sons of Yûdân-Yím, tends to prove that the bulk of the Bundahís was already an old work in their days; and was probably saved from oblivion through their writings or influence. That this original Bundahís or Zandâkás was an abridged translation of the Avesta of the

The first part of these Selections consists of ‘sayings about the meeting of the beneficent and evil spirits,’ and the first portion of these ‘sayings’ (divided into eleven chapters in the translation) is chiefly a paraphrase of Chaps. I–XVII of the Bundahis (omitting Chaps. II, V, and XVI). It describes the original state of the two spirits, their meeting and covenant, with a paraphrase of the Ahûnavar formula; the production of the first creatures, including time; the incursion of the evil spirit and his temporary success in deranging the creation, with the reason why he was unable to destroy the primitive man for thirty years; followed by the seven contests he carried on with the sky, water, earth, plants, animals, man, and fire, respectively, detailing how each of these creations was modified in consequence of the incursion of the evil spirit. In the account of the first of these contests the Pahlavi translation of one stanza in the Gāthas is quoted verbatim, showing that the same Pahlavi version of the Yasna was used in the ninth century as now exists. The remainder of these ‘sayings,’ having no particular connection with the Bundahis, has not been translated.

With regard to the Pahlavi text of the Selections, the present translator has been compelled to rely upon a single manuscript of the Dādīstān-i Dīnīk, brought by Westergaard from Kirmān ¹ in 1843, and now No. 35 of the collection of Avesta and Pahlavi MSS. in the University Library at Kopenhagen; it may, therefore, be called K35. This MS. is incomplete, having lost nearly one-third of its original bulk, but still contains 181 folios of large octavo size, written fifteen to seventeen lines to the page; the first seventy-one folios of the work have been lost, and about thirty-five folios are also missing from the end; but the whole of the ninety-two questions and answers, together with one-third of the texts which usually precede them, and three-fifths of those which usually follow them, are still remaining. This MS. has lost its date, but a copy\(^1\) of it exists in Bombay (written when it was complete) which ends with a colophon dated A.Y. 941 (A.D. 1572), as detailed in p. xxxiii; this may either be the actual date of that copy, or it may have been merely copied from K.35, which cannot be much older. The latter supposition appears the more probable, as this colophon seems to be left incomplete by the loss of the last folio in the Bombay copy, and may, therefore, have been followed by another colophon giving a later date.

This copy of K.35 was, no doubt, originally complete, but has lost many of its folios in the course of time; most of the missing text has been restored from another MS., but there are still twelve or more folios missing from the latter part of the work; it contains, however, all that portion of the Selections which is translated in this volume, but has, of course, no authority independent of K.35. The other MS. in Bombay, from which some of the missing text was recovered, is in the library of Dastūr Jāmāspji Minochīharji; it is a modern copy, written at different periods from forty to sixty years ago, and is incomplete, as it contains only one-fourth of the texts which usually follow the ninety-two questions and answers, and includes no portion of the Selections of Zād-spāram.

Another MS. of the Dādistān-i Dīnk and its accompaniments, written also at Kirmān, but two generations earlier than K.35 (say, about A.D. 1530), has been already mentioned (see p. xxxiii). It is said, still to contain 227 folios, though its first seventy folios are missing; it must, therefore, begin very near the same place as K.35, but extends much further, as it supplies about half the text still missing from the

\(^1\) The fact of its being a copy of K.35 is proved by strong circumstantial evidence. In the first place, it contains several false readings which are clearly due to mis-shapen letters and accidental marks in K.35, so that it is evidently descended from that MS. But it is further proved to have been copied direct from that MS., by the last words in thirty-two of its pages having been marked with interlined circles in K.35; the circle having been the copyist’s mark for finding his place, when beginning a new page after turning over his folios.
Bombay copy of K35, though it has lost about fourteen folios at the end. This MS. must be either the original from which K35 was copied, or an independent authority of equal value, but it has not been available for settling the text of the Selections for the present translation.

5. The Bahman Yast.

The Bahman Yast, usually called the 'Zand of the Vohûman Yast,' professes to be a prophetic work, in which Aûharmazd gives Zaratûst an account of what was to happen to the Iranian nation and religion in the future.

It begins with an introduction (Chap. I) which states that, according to the Stûdgar Nask, Zaratûst having asked Aûharmazd for immortality, was supplied temporarily with omniscient wisdom, and had a vision of a tree with four branches of different metals which were explained to him as symbolical of four different periods, the times of Vistâsp, of Ardakhshir the Kayânian, of Khûsrô Nôshirvân, and of certain demons or idolators who were to appear at the end of a thousand years. It states, further, that the commentaries of the Vohûman, Horvadam, and Ástâd Yasts mentioned the heretic Mazdak, and that Khûsrô Nôshirvân summoned a council of high-priests and commentators, and ordered them not to conceal these Yasts, but to teach the commentary only among their own relations.

The text then proceeds (Chap. II) to give the details of the commentary on the Vohûman Yast as follows:—Zaratûst, having again asked Aûharmazd for immortality, is refused, but is again supplied with omniscient wisdom for a week, during which time he sees, among other things, a tree with seven branches of different metals, which are again explained to him as denoting the seven ages of the religion, its six ages of triumph in the reigns of Vistâsp, of Ardakhshir the Kayânian, of one of the Askânian kings, of Ardakhshir Pâpakán and Shahpûr I and II, of Vâhrâm Gôr, and of Khûsrô Nôshirvân, and its seventh age of adversity when Iran is to be invaded from the east by hordes of demons or idolators with dishevelled hair, who are to work much mischief, so as to destroy the greater part of the nation and mislead the rest, until the religion becomes nearly extinct. The details of this mischief, written in a tone of lamentation, constitute the greater part of the text, which also notices that the sovereignty will pass from the Arabs, Rūmans, and these leathern-belted demons (Tûrks) to other Tûrks and non-Tûranians who are worse than themselves.

Distressed at this narrative Zaratûst asks Aûhar Mazda (Chap. III, 1) how the religion is to be restored, and these demons destroyed? He is informed that, in the course of time, other fiends with red banners, red weapons, and red hats, who seem to be Christians, will appear in the north-west, and will advance either to the Arvand (Tigris) or the Euphrates, driving back the former demons who will assemble all their allies to a great conflict, one of the three great battles of the religions of the world, in which the wicked will be so utterly destroyed that none will be left to pass into the next millennium.

Zaratûst enquires (III, 12) how so many can perish, and is informed that, after the demons with dishevelled hair appear, Hûshêdar, the first of the last three apostles, is born near Lake Frazdân; and when he begins to confer with Aûhar Mazda a Kayân prince is born in the direction of Kînistân (Samarkand), who is called Vâhrâm the Varvänd, and when he is thirty years old he collects a large army of Hindu (Bactrian) and Kînî (Samarkandian) troops, and advances into Iran, where he is reinforced by a numerous army of Iranian warriors, and defeats the demon races with immense slaughter, in the great conflict already mentioned, so that there will be only one man left to a thousand women.

The writer then proceeds to describe the supernatural agencies employed to produce this result: how the evil spirit (III, 24) comes to the assistance of the demon-worshippers; how Aûhar Mazda sends his angels to Kangdez, to summon Pêshyôtanû, the immortal son of Vistâsp, with his disciples, to re-establish the sacred fires and restore the religious ceremonies; and how the angels assist them against the evil spirits, so that Vâhrâm the Vargâvand is enabled to destroy the fiendish races, as already detailed, and Pêshyôtanû becomes supreme high-priest of the Iranian world.

Finally, the writer gives some details regarding the missions of the last three apostles, returning for that purpose (III, 44) to the birth of Hûshêdar, the first of the three, whose millennium witnesses both the invasion and the destruction of the fiendish races. Hûshêdar proves his apostolic authority, to the satisfaction of Vargâvand and the people, by making the sun stand still for ten days and nights. His mission is to ‘bring the creatures back to their proper state;’ and it is not till near the end of his millennium that Pêshyôtanû appears, as before described. As this millennium begins with the invasion of the fiendish races and the fall of the Sasanian dynasty, it must have terminated in the seventeenth century, unless it was to last more than a thousand years. A very brief account is then given of the millennium of Hûshêdar-mâh, the second of the three apostles, whose mission is to make ‘the creatures more progressive’ and to destroy ‘the fiend of serpent origin’ (Aš-i Dahâk). During his millennium (which appears to be now in progress) mankind become so skilled in medicine that they do not readily die; but owing to their toleration of heretics the evil spirit once more attains power, and releases Aš-i Dahâk, from his confinement in Mount Dimâvand, to work evil in the world, till Aûharmazd sends his angels to rouse Keresâsp the Sâmân, who rises from his trance and kills Aš-i Dahâk with his club at the end of the millennium. Afterwards, Sôshyans, the last apostle, appears to ‘make the creatures again pure;’ when the resurrection takes place and the future existence commences.

Whether this text, as now extant, be the original commentary or zand of the Vohûman Yast admits of doubt, since it appears to quote that commentary (Chap. II, 1) as an authority for its statements; it is, therefore, most probably, only an epitome of the original commentary. Such an epitome would naturally quote many passages verbatim.
from the original work, which ought to bear traces of translation from an Avesta text, as its title zand implies a Pahlavi translation from the Avesta (see p. x). There are, in fact, many such traces in this epitome, as indicated by the numerous sentences beginning with a verb, the mode of addressing Aûharmazd, the quotation of different opinions from various commentators, and other minor peculiarities. Some of these might be the result of careful imitation of other commentaries, but it seems more likely that they are occasioned by literal translation from an original Avesta text. In speculating, therefore, upon the contents of the Bahman Yast it is necessary to remember that we are most probably dealing with a composite work, whose statements may be referred to the three different ages of the Avesta original, the Pahlavi translation and commentary, and the Pahlavi epitome of the latter; and that this last form of the text is the only old version now extant.

With regard to the age of the work we have the external evidence that a copy of it exists in a manuscript (K20) written about five hundred years ago, and that this copy is evidently descended from older manuscripts as it contains several clerical blunders incompatible with any idea of its being the original manuscript, as witness the omissions noted in Chaps. II, 10, 13, 14, 22, 27, 45, III, 30, 32, the misplacement of II, 18, and many miswritings of single words. Owing to the threefold character of the work, already noticed, the internal evidence of its age can only apply to its last recension in the form of an epitome, as an oriental editor (to say nothing of others) generally considers himself at liberty to alter and add to his text, if he does not understand it, or thinks he can improve it. That this liberty has been freely exercised, with regard to these professed prophecies, is shown by the identification of the four prophetical ages of the Stûdgär Nask in the first chapter of the Bahman Yast being different from that given in the Dinkard. The Dinkard quotes the Stûdgär Nask (that is, its Pahlavi version) as identifying the iron age with some period of religious indifference subsequent to the time of Âtarô-pâd son of Mâraspend, the supreme high-priest and prime minister of Shahpûr II (A.D. 309–379); but the Bahman Yast (Chap. I, 5) quotes the Nask as identifying the same age with the reign of an idolatrous race subsequent to the time of Khûsrû Nôshirvân (A.D. 531–579). This example is sufficient to show that the compiler of the extant epitome of the Bahman Yast commentary largely availed himself of his editorial license, and it indicates the difficulty of distinguishing his statements from those of the former editors. At the same time it proves that the epitome could not have been compiled till after Iran had been overrun by a foreign race subsequent to the reign of Khûsrû Nôshirvân. It is remarkable that the compiler does not mention any later Sasanian king, that he does not allude to Muhammedanism, and speaks of the foreign invaders as Turanians and Christians, only mentioning Arabs incidentally in later times; at the same time the foreign invasion (which lasts a thousand years) is of too permanent a character to allow of its having reference merely to the troublous times of Nôshirvân’s successor.

Perhaps the most reasonable hypotheses that can be founded upon these facts are, first, that the original zand or commentary of the Bahman Yast was written and translated from the Avesta in the latter part of the reign of Khûsrû Nôshirvân, or very shortly afterwards, which would account for no later king being mentioned by name; and, secondly, that the epitome now extant was compiled by some writer who lived so long after the Arab invasion that the details of their inroad had become obscured by the more recent successes of Turanian rulers, such as the Ghaznavids and Salûqs of the eleventh and twelfth centuries. It is hardly possible that the epitomist could have lived as late as the time of Gingiz Khân, the great Mongol conqueror (A.D. 1206–1227), as that would bring him within 150 years of the date of the extant manuscript of his work, which has no appearance of being an immediate copy of the original; but the rule of the Salûqs would certainly have afforded him sufficient materials for his long description of the iron age. The Avesta of the Bahman Yast was probably compiled from older sources (like the rest of the Avesta) during
doubt, very different in its details from the epitome of its commentary which still exists.

These hypotheses, regarding the threefold origin of the present form of this Yast, derive some confirmation from the inconsistencies in its chronological details; especially those relating to the periods of the invaders' reign and of Hûshêdar's birth. The Zoroastrians have for ages been expecting the appearance of Hûshêdar, the first of their last three apostles, but have always had to postpone their expectations from time to time, like the Jews and other interpreters of prophecy; so that they are still looking forward into the future for his advent, although his millenium has long since expired according to the chronology adopted in the Bahman Yast. This chronology, of course, represents the expectations of Zoroastrians in past times, and seems to express three different opinions. First, we have the statement that the last great battle of the demonraces is to take place at the end of Zaratûst's millennium (see-Chap. III, 9), when the wicked will be so destroye(d compare III, 22, 23) that none will pass into the next millennium (III, 11), which is that of Hûshêdar (III, 43).
And that the reign of evil is to precede the end of Zaratûst's millennium is evidently assumed also in Chap. II, 41, 63.
Such opinions may reasonably be traced to the original Avesta writer, who must have expected only a short reign of evil to arise and fall near the latter end of Zaratûst's millennium, which was still far in the future, and to be followed by the appearance of Hûshêdar to restore the 'good' religion. Secondly, we are told (I, 5, II, 22, 24, 31) that the invasion of the demon-races, with its attendant evils, is to take place when Zaratûst's millennium is ended; on their appearance Hûshêdar is born (III, 13), and when he is thirty years old (compare III, 14 with III, 44) Vâhrâm the Vargâvand is also born, who at the age of thirty (III, 17) advances into Iran with an innumerable army to destroy the invaders. Such statements may be attributed to the original Pahlavi translator and commentator who, writing about A.D. 570–590, would have before his eyes the disastrous reign of Aûharmazd IV, the son and successor of Khûsrû Nûshirvân, together with the prowess of the famous Persian general Bahram Kôpîn, which drove out all invaders. This writer evidently expected the reign of the demon-races to last less than a century, but still at some period in the near future; merely illustrating his theme by details of the disasters and wars of his own time. Thirdly, we find it stated (III, 44) that Hûshêdar will be born in 1600, which seems to mean the sixteenth hundredth year of Zaratûst’s millennium, or six hundredth of his own (say A.D. 1193-1235), also that the reign of the demon-races is to last a thousand years (III, 34), and that Pêshyotanû does not come to restore the religion till near the end of the millennium (III, 51); it also appears (III, 49) that Vargâvand occupies a prominent position when Hûshêdar comes from his conference with Aûharmazd at thirty years of age (III, 44, 45). Such details were probably inserted by the compiler of the epitome, who had to admit the facts that the reign of the demon-races had already lasted for centuries, and that Hûshêdar had not yet appeared. To get over these difficulties he probably adopted the opinions current in his day, and postponed the advent of Hûshêdar till the beginning of the next century in his millennium, and put off the destruction of the wicked, as a more hopeless matter, till near the end of the millennium. Both these periods are now long since past, and the present Zoroastrians have still to postpone the fulfilment of the prophecies connected with their last three apostles, or else to understand them in a less literal fashion than heretofore.

For the Pahlavi text of the Bahman Yast the translator has to rely upon the single old manuscript K20, already described (p. xxvii), in which it occupies the 13a folios immediately following the Bundahis; these folios are much worn, and a few words have been torn off some of them, but nearly all of these missing words can be restored by aid of the Pâzand version. The Pahlavi text is also found in the modern copies of K20 at Paris and Kopenhagen, but these copies (P7 and K21) have no authority independent of K20. In India this text has long been exceedingly rare,

The Pâzand version is more common in Parsi libraries, but contains a very imperfect text. Of this version two modern copies have been consulted; one of these occupies fols. 38–62 of a small manuscript, No. 22 of the Haug collection in the State Library at Munich; the other is a copy of a manuscript in the library of the high-priest of the Parsis in Bombay. Both these MSS. are evidently descended from the same original, which must have been a very imperfect transliteration of a Pahlavi text closely resembling that of K20, but yet independent of that MS., as a few words omitted in K20 are supplied by these Pâzand MSS. (see B.Yt. II, 13, 14, 22, &c.) To a certain extent, therefore, these Pâzand MSS. are of some assistance in settling the text of a few sentences, but the greater part of their contents is so imperfect as to be utterly unintelligible; they not only omit Chaps. I, 1–8, II, 17, 30–32, 40, III, 9, 12, 17–44, 58–63 entirely, but also words and phrases from nearly every other section of the text. Adhering scrupulously to the Pahlavi original for a few consecutive words, and then widely departing from it by misreading or omitting all difficult words and passages, this Pâzand version is a complete contrast to the Pâzand writings of Nêryôsang, being of little use to the reader beyond showing the extremely low ebb to which Pahlavi learning must have fallen, among the Parsis, before such unintelligible writings could have been accepted as Pâzand texts.

There is also a Persian version of the Bahman Yâst, a copy of which, written A.D. 1676, is contained in a large Rivâyat MS. No. 29, belonging to the University Library at Bombay. According to the colophon of this Persian version it was composed in A.D. 1496 by Rustam Isfendiyâr of Yazd, from an Avesta (Pâzand) MS. belonging to his brother Jamshêd. This Persian version contains less than three per cent of Arabic words, and is more of a paraphrase than a translation, but it adheres very closely to the meaning of the Pahlavi text from Chaps. I, 1 to III, 9, where a dislocation occurs, evidently owing either to the displacement of two folios in an older MS., or to the second page of a folio being copied before the first, so that §§ 10–14 follow §§ 15–22. From the middle of § 22 the folios of the older MS. seem to have been lost as far as the end of Hûshêdar’s millennium (§ 51), to which point the Persian version leaps, but the remainder of this paraphrase is much more diffuse than the Bahman Yast, and is evidently derived from some other Pahlavi work.

This conclusion of the Persian version describes how adversity departs from the world, and ten people are satisfied with the milk of one cow, when Hûshêdar-mâh appears and his millennium commences. On his coming from his conference with Aûharmazd the sun stands still for twenty days and nights, in consequence of which two-thirds of the people in the world believe in the religion. Meat is no longer eaten, but only milk and butter, and a hundred people are satisfied with the milk of one cow. Hûshêdar-mâh destroys the terrible serpent, which accompanies apostasy, by means of the divine glory and Avesta formulas; he clears all noxious creatures out of the world, and wild animals live harmlessly among mankind; the fiends of apostasy and deceit depart from the world, which becomes populous and delightful, and mankind abstain from falsehood. After the five-hundredth year of Hûshêdar-mâh has passed away, Sôshyans (Sâsân) appears, and destroys the fiend who torments fire. The sun stands still for thirty days and nights, when all mankind believe in the religion, and the year becomes exactly 360 days. Dahâk escapes from his confinement, and reigns for a day and a half in the world with much tyranny; when Sôshyans rouses Sâm Nârîmân, who accepts the religion and becomes immortal. Sâm calls upon Dahâk to accept the religion, but the latter proposes that they should together seize upon heaven for themselves, whereupon Sâm kills him. All evil having departed from the world mankind become like the archangels, and the resurrection takes place, which is described with many of the same details as are mentioned in Bund. XXX.

Accompanying this Persian version in B29 is another

fragment from the same source, which treats of the same subjects as the third chapter of the Bahman Yâst, but is differently arranged. It confines itself to the millennium of Hûshêdâr, and may possibly be some modification of the contents of the folios missing from the version described above. After some introductory matter this fragment contains a paraphrase (less accurate than the preceding) of Chap. III, 23–49 of the Bahman Yâst; it then proceeds to state that Hûshêdâr destroys the wolf race, so that wolves, thieves, highway robbers, and criminals cease to exist. When Hûshêdâr's three-hundredth year has passed away the winter of Malkôs arrives and destroys all animals and vegetation, and only one man survives out of ten thousand; after which the world is repeopled from the enclosure made by Yim. Then comes the gathering of the nations to the great battle on the Euphrates, where the slaughter is so great that the water of the river becomes red, and the survivors wade in blood up to their horses' girths. Afterwards, the Kayân king, Vargâvand, advances from the frontiers of India and takes possession of Iran to the great delight of the inhabitants, but only after a great battle; and then Pêshyôtanû is summoned from Kangdez to restore the religious ceremonies.

A German translation of some passages in the Bahman Yâst, with a brief summary of the greater part of the remainder, was published in 1860 in Spiegel's Traditionelle Literatur der Parsen, pp. 128–135.

6. The Shâyast lâ-shâyast.

Another treatise which must be referred to about the same age as the Bundahis, though of a very different character, is the Shâyast lâ-shâyast or 'the proper and improper.' It is a compilation of miscellaneous laws and customs regarding sin and impurity, with other memoranda about ceremonies and religious subjects in general. Its name has, no doubt, been given to it in modern times¹, and has probably arisen from the frequent use it makes of the words shāyad, 'it is fit or proper;' and lā shāyad, 'it is not fit or proper.' And, owing to its resemblance to those Persian miscellanies of traditional memoranda called Rivāyats, it has also been named the Pahlavi Rivāyat, though chiefly by Europeans.

It consists of two parts, which are often put together in modern MSS., and bear the same name, but are widely separated in the oldest MSS. These two parts, consisting respectively of Chaps. I–X and XI–XIV in the present translation, are evidently two distinct treatises on the same and similar subjects, but of nearly the same age. That they were compiled by two different persons, who had access to nearly the same authorities, appears evident from Chaps. XI, 1, 2, XII, 11, 13–16, 18, 20 being repetitions of Chaps. I, 1, 2, X, 4, 20–23, 7, 31, with only slight alterations; such repetitions as would hardly be made in a single treatise by the same writer. Minor repetitions in the first part, such as those of some phrases in Chaps. II, 65, IV, 14, repeated in Chap. X, 24, 33, might readily be made by the same writer in different parts of the same treatise. To these two parts of the Shāyast lā-shāyast a third part has been added in the present translation, as an appendix, consisting of a number of miscellaneous passages of a somewhat similar character, which are found in the same old MSS. that contain the first two parts, but which cannot be attributed either to the same writers or the same age as those parts.

The first part commences with the names and amounts of the various degrees of sin, and the names of the chief commentators on the Vendidad. It then gives long details regarding the precautions to be taken with reference to corpses and menstruous women, and the impurity they occasion; besides mentioning (Chap. II, 33–35) the pollution in its opening words, as follows:—'This book is on "the proper and improper" which is brought out from the good, pure religion of the Mazda-yanians;' though this term may possibly relate to its own contents. There is also a Persian treatise called Shāyast na-shāyast, which gives a good deal of information obtained from the Persian Rivāyats, and copies of which are contained in the MSS. Nos. 56 and 116 of the Ouseley collection in the Bodleian Library at Oxford.

caused by a serpent. It next describes the proper size and materials of the sacred thread-girdle and shirt, giving some details about the sins of running about uncovered and walking with one boot, and thence proceeding to the sin of unseasonable chatter. Details are then given about good works, and those who can and cannot perform them; in which reference is made to Christians, Jews, and those of other persuasions (Chap. VI, 7). The next subjects treated of are reverencing the sun and fire, the sin of extinguishing fire, confession and renunciation of sin, atonement for sins, especially mortal sins, both those affecting others and those only affecting one's own soul; with a digression (Chap. VIII, 3) prohibiting the rich from hunting. The remainder of this first treatise is of a miscellaneous character, referring to the following subjects:—The Hâsar of time, priests passing away in idolatry, the discussion of religion, ceremonies not done aright, throwing a corpse into the sea, evil of eating in the dark, the four kinds of worship, when the angels should be invoked in worship, the ephemeral nature of life, proper looseness for a girdle, when the sacred cake set aside for the guardian spirits can be used, maintaining a fire where a woman is pregnant, providing a tank for ablution, the Gâthas not to be recited over the dead, food and drink not to be thrown away to the north at night, unlawful slaughter of animals, how the corpse of a pregnant woman should be carried, forgiveness of trespasses, evil of walking without boots, when the sacred girdle is to be assumed, breaking the spell of an inward prayer, ten women wanted at childbirth, and how the infant is to be treated, sin of beating an innocent person, evil of a false judge, men and women who do not marry, a toothpick must be free from bark, acknowledging the children of a handmaid, advantage of offspring and of excess in almsgiving, prayer on lying down and getting up, Avesta not to be murmled, doubtful actions to be avoided or consulted about, evil of laughing during prayer, crowing of a hen, treatment of a hedgehog, after a violent death corruption does not set in immediately, necessity of a dog's gaze, putrid meat and hairy cakes or butter unfit for ceremonies, when a woman can do priestly duty, &c.
The second part also commences with the names and amounts of the various degrees of sin, followed by the proper meat-offerings for various angels and guardian spirits. Next come miscellaneous observations on the following subjects:—The simplest form of worship, necessity of submitting to a high-priest, advantage of a fire in the house, sin of clothing the dead, presentation of holy-water to the nearest fire after a death, nail-parings to be prayed over, advantage of light at childbirth, offerings to the angels, maintaining a fire where a woman is pregnant and a child is born, a toothpick must be free from bark, acknowledging the children of a handmaid, advantage of offspring and of excess in almsgiving, evil of drawing well-water at night, food not to be thrown away to the north at night, advantage of prayer at feasts, treatment of a hedgehog, praying when washing the face, the proper choice of a purifying priest, no one should be hopeless of heaven, necessity of a wife being religious as well as her husband, the ceremonies which are good works, and the cause of sneezing, yawning, and sighing. These are followed by a long account of the mystic signification of the Gāthas, with some information as to the errors which may be committed in consecrating the sacred cakes, and how the beginning of the morning watch is to be determined.

The third part, or appendix, commences with an account of how each of the archangels can be best propitiated, by a proper regard for the particular worldly existence which he specially protects. This is followed by a statement of the various degrees of sin, and of the amount of good works attributed to various ceremonies. Then come some account of the ceremonies after a death, particulars of those who have no part in the resurrection, the duty of submission to the priesthood, whether evil may be done for the sake of good, the place where people will rise from the dead, Aēshm's complaint to Aharman of the three things he could not injure in the world, the occasions on which the Ahunavarn formula should be recited, and the number of recitals that are requisite, &c. And, finally, statements of the lengths of midday and afternoon shadows, blessings invoked from the thirty angels and archangels who preside over the days of the month, and the special epithets of the same.

With regard to the age of this treatise we have no precise information. All three parts are found in a MS. (M6) which was written in A.D. 1397 (see p. xxix), and nearly the whole is also found in the MS. K20, which may be a few years older (see p. xxvii), and in which the first part of the Shâyast lâ-shâyast is followed by a Persian colophon dated A.Y. 700 (A.D. 1331), copied probably from an older MS. The text in both these old MSS. seems to have been derived almost direct from the same original, which must have been so old when M6 was written that the copyist found some words illegible (see notes on Chaps. VIII, 19, X, 34, XII, 14, 15, &c.). Now it is known from a colophon that a portion of M6, containing the book of Ardâ-Virâf and the tale of Gôst-i Fryânô, was copied from a MS.
written in A.D. 1249; and we may safely conclude that the Shâyast lâ-shâyast was copied, either from the same MS., or from one fully as old. So far, therefore, as external evidence goes, there is every reason to suppose that the whole of the Shâyast lâ-shâyast, with its appendix\(^1\), was existing in a MS. written about 630 years ago.

But internal evidence points to a far higher antiquity for the first two parts, as the compilers of those treatises evidently had access, not only to several old commentaries, but also to many of the Nasks, which have long been lost.
Thus, the first treatise contains quotations from the commentaries of Afarg, Gôgôsasp, Kûshtanô-bûgêd, Mêdôkmâh, Rôshan, and Sôshyans, which are all frequently quoted in the Pahlavi translation of the Vendidad (see Slx.
I, 3, 4, notes); besides mentioning the opinions of Mardbûd, Néryôsang, Nôsâî Bûrz-Mitrô, and Vand-Aûharmazd, who are rarely or never mentioned in the Pahlavi Vendidad.
It also quotes no less than eleven of the twenty Nasks or books of the complete Mazdayasnian literature which are no longer extant, besides the Vendidad, the only Nask that still survives in the full extent it had in Sasanian times.

\(^1\) Except Chaps. XXII, XXIII (see the note on the heading of Chap. XXII).
The Nasks quoted are the Stūdgar (Sls. X, 8), the Bagh (X, 26), the Dāmdād (X, 22), the Pāvōn (IX, 9), the Ratūs-tāltīth (X, 29), the Khārast (X, 28), the Spend (X, 4), the Nihādūm (X, 3, 22, 23), the Dūbāsrūgēd (X, 13), the Hūspāram (X, 21), and the Sakādūm (X, 25), very few of which are mentioned even in the Pahlavi Vendidad. The second treatise mentions only one commentator, Vand-Aūharmazd, but it quotes eight of the Nasks no longer extant; these are the Stūdgar (Sls. XII, 32), the Dāmdād (XII, 5, 15), the Spend (XII, 3, 11, 15, 29), the Bāg-yasnō (XII, 17), the Nihādūm (XII, 15, 16), the Hūspāram (XII, 1, 7, 14, 31, XIII, 17), the Sakādūm (XII, 2, 10, 12, XIII, 30), and the Hādōkht (XII, 19, 30, XIII, 6, 10).

Of two of these Nasks, the Bagh and Hādōkht, a few fragments may still survive (see notes on Sls. X, 26, Haug's Essays, p. 134, B. Yt. III, 25), but those of the latter Nask do not appear to contain the passages quoted in the Shāyast lā-shāyast. With regard to the rest we only know that the Dāmdād, Hūspāram, and Sakādūm must have been in existence about A.D. 881, as they are quoted in the writings of Zād-spāram and Mānūškīhar, sons of Yūdān-Yim, who lived at that time (see pp. xliii, xlvi); and the Nihādūm and Hūspāram are also quoted in the Pahlavi Vendidad. It is true that the Dinkard gives copious information about the contents of all the Nasks, with two or three exceptions; and the Dinkard seems to have assumed its present form about A.D. 900 (see Bund. XXXIII, 11, notes); but its last editor was evidently merely a compiler of old fragments, so there is no certainty that many of the Nasks actually existed in his time.

Thus far, therefore, the internal evidence seems to prove that the two treatises called Shāyast lā-shāyast, which constitute the first two parts of the present translation, are more than a thousand years old. On the other hand, they cannot be more than three centuries older, because they frequently quote passages from the Pahlavi Vendidad which, as we have seen (p. xlvi, note 1), could not have assumed its present form before the time of Khūsūrū Nūshir-vān (A.D. 531–579). As they contain no reference to any interference of the governing powers with the religion or priesthood, it is probable that they were written before the Muhammadan conquest (A.D. 636–651), although they do not mention the existence of any ‘king of the kings,’ the usual title of the Sasanian monarchs. And this probability is increased by there being no direct mention of Muhammadanism among the contemporary religions named in Chap. VI, 7, unless we assume that passage to be a quotation from an earlier book. We may, therefore, conclude, with tolerable certainty, that the Pahlavi text of the first two parts of the present translation of the Shâystâ lâshâyast was compiled some time in the seventh century; but, like the Bundahis and Bahman Yast, it was, for the most part, a compilation of extracts and translations from far older writings, and may also have been rearranged shortly after the Muhammadan conquest.

The fragments which are collected in the appendix, or third part of the present translation, are probably of various ages, and several of them may not be more than seven centuries old. The commentator Bakhtâfrîd, whose work (now lost) is quoted in Chap. XX, 11, may have lived in the time of Khûsrû Nûshirvân (see B. Yt. I, 7). And Chap. XXI must certainly have been written in Persia, as the lengths of noonday shadows which it mentions are only suitable for 32° north latitude. As regards the last two chapters we have no evidence that they are quite five centuries old.

For the Pahlavi text of the Shâystâ lâshâyast and its appendix we have not only the very old codex M6 (see p. xxix) for the whole of it, but also the equally old codex K20 (see p. xxvii) for all but Chaps. XV–XVII, XX, XXII, and XXIII in the appendix. In M6 the first two parts are separated by twenty folios, containing the Farhang-i Oilmkhadûk, and the second part is separated from the first three chapters of the appendix by four folios, containing the Patit-i Khud; the next three chapters of the appendix are from the latter end of the second volume of M6, Chap. XXI is from the middle of the same, and the last two chapters are from some additional folios at the beginning of the first volume. In K20 the first two parts are separated by ninety-two folios, containing the Farhang-i Oim-khadûk, Bundahîs, Bahman Yast, and several other Pahlavi and Avesta texts; Chap. XVIII precedes the first part, Chap. XIX precedes the second part, and Chap. XXI is in an earlier part of the MS.

Derived from K20 are the two modern copies P7 and K21 (see p. xxviii). Derived from M6 are the modern copy of the first two parts in M9 (No. 9 of the Haug collection in the State Library at Munich), a copy of Chaps. XIV, XV in L15 (No. 15 of the collection of Avesta and Pahlavi MSS. in the India Office Library at London), a copy of Chap. XX, 4-17 in O121 (No. 121 of the Ouseley collection in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, see p. xxx), and a copy of Chap. XVIII in Dastûr Jâmâspji’s MS. of the Bundahîs at Bombay. While an independent Pahlavi version of Chap. XXIII occurs in a very old codex in the library of the high-priest of the Parsis at Bombay, which version has been used for the text of the present translation, because that chapter is incomplete in M6.

Pâzand versions of some of the chapters, chiefly in the appendix, are to be found in some MSS., but all derived apparently from M6. Thus, in the Pâzand MSS. L7 and L22 (Nos. 7 and 22 in the India Office Library at London, see p. xxxi), written in Avesta characters, Chaps. XVIII, XX, XV follow the last chapter of the Bundahîs, and Chap. XIV occurs a few folios further on. And in the Pâzand MS. M7 (No. 7 of the Haug collection in the State Library at Munich), written in Persian characters, the following detached passages occur in a miscellaneous collection of extracts (fols. 126-133):—Chaps. XX, 4-16, X, 18, 19, IX, 9, 10, XX, 12, 13, 4, 5, VIII, 2, 4-14, XX, 11. A Persian version of Chap. XVIII also occurs in M5 (No. 5 of the same collection) on fol. 54.

It does not appear that the Shâyast lâ-shâyast has ever been hitherto translated into any European language, nor

1 Except Chap. XVIII, which was translated into German by Justi, as the last chapter of his translation of the Bundahîs (see p. xxvi).
is any Persian or Gugarati translation of it known to the present translator, though a good deal of the matter it contains may be found in the Persian Rivâyats, but generally given in a different form. Owing to the technical character of the treatise, it is hazardous for any one but a Parsi priest to attempt to translate it, so that errors will, no doubt, be apparent to the initiated in the present translation. At the same time it must not be forgotten that the laws and customs mentioned in the text were those current in Persia twelve centuries ago, which may be expected to differ, in many details, from those of the Parsees in India at the present day. This is a consideration which a Parsi translator might be too apt to ignore; so that his thorough knowledge of present customs, though invaluable for the decipherment of ambiguous phrases, might lead him astray when dealing with clear statements of customs and rules now obsolete and, therefore, at variance with his preconceived ideas of propriety.

7. CONCLUDING REMARKS.

The Pahlavi texts selected for translation in this volume are specimens of three distinct species of writings. Thus, the Bundahis and its appendix, which deal chiefly with cosmogony, myths, and traditions, may be roughly compared to the book of Genesis. The Bahman Yast, which professes to be prophetical, may be likened unto the Apocalypse. And the Shâyast lâ-shâyast, which treats of religious laws regarding impurity, sin, ritual, and miscellaneous matters, bears some resemblance to Leviticus. But, though thus dealing with very different subjects, these texts appear to have all originated in much the same manner, a manner which is characteristic of the oldest class of the Pahlavi writings still extant. All three are full of translations from old Avesta texts, collected together probably in the latter days of the Sasanian dynasty, and finally rearranged some time after the Muhammadan conquest of Persia; so that, practically, they may be taken as representing the ideas entertained of their prehistoric religion by Persians in the sixth century, but modified so far as to suit the taste and exigencies of the tenth.

But, notwithstanding the wide range of subjects embraced by these texts, it would be rash for the reader to assume that they afford him sufficient information for forming a decided opinion as to the character of the Parsi religion. The texts translated in this volume contain barely one-eleventh part of the religious literature extant in the Pahlavi language, without taking the Pahlavi versions of existing Avesta texts into account, which latter are even more important than the former, from a religious point of view, as they are considered more authoritative by the Parsis themselves. What proportion the literature extant may bear to that which is lost it is impossible to guess; but, omitting all consideration of the possible contents of the lost literature, it is obvious that the remaining ten-elevenths of that which is extant may contain much which would modify any opinion based merely upon the one-eleventh here translated. What the untranslated portion actually contains no one really knows. The best Pahlavi scholar can never be sure that he understands the contents of a Pahlavi text until he has fully translated it; no amount of careful reading can make him certain that he does not misunderstand some essential part of it, and were he to assert the contrary he would be merely misleading others and going astray himself. How far the translations in this volume will enable the reader to judge of the Parsi religion may perhaps be best understood by considering how far a careful perusal of the books of Genesis, Leviticus, and the Revelation, which constitute one-eleventh part of the Protestant Bible, would enable him to judge of Christianity, without any further information.

But, though these translations must be considered merely as a contribution towards a correct account of mediæval Zoroastrianism, the Bundahîs does afford some very definite information upon one of the fundamental doctrines of that faith. The Parsi religion has long been represented by its opponents as a dualism; and this accusation, made in good faith by Muhammadan writers, and echoed more incautiously by Christians, has been advanced so strenuously that it has often been admitted even by Parsis themselves, as regards the mediæval form of their faith. But neither party seems to have fairly considered how any religion which admits the personality of an evil spirit, in order to account for the existence of evil, can fail to become a dualism to a certain extent. If, therefore, the term is to be used in controversy, it behoves those who use it to define the limits of objectionable dualism with great precision, so as not to include most of the religions of the world, their own among the number.

If it be necessary for a dualism that the evil spirit be omnipresent, omniscient, almighty, or eternal, then is the Parsi religion no dualism. The Zoroastrians distinctly asserts that the evil spirit is not omniscient and almighty (Chap. I, 16); that his understanding is backward (I, 3, 9), so that he was not aware of the existence of Ahriman till he arose from the abyss and saw the light (I, 9); that he is unobservant and ignorant of the future (I, 19) till it is revealed to him by Ahriman (I, 21); that his creatures perish at the resurrection (I, 7, 21), and he himself becomes impotent (I, 21, III, 1) and will not be (I, 3, XXX, 32). Nowhere is he supposed to be in two places at once, or to know what is occurring elsewhere than in his own presence. So far, his powers are considerably less than those generally assigned by Christians to the devil, who is certainly represented as being a more intelligent and ubiquitous personage. On the other hand, Ahriman is able to produce fiends and demons (Chap. I, 10, 24), and the noxious creatures are said to be his (III, 15, XIV, 30, XVIII, 2); in which respects he has probably rather more power than the devil, although the limits of the latter’s means of producing evil are by no means well defined.

The origin and end of Ahriman appear to be left as uncertain as those of the devil, and, altogether, the resemblance between these two ideas of the evil spirit is remarkably close; in fact, almost too close to admit of the possibility of their being ideas of different origin. The only important differences are that Zoroastrianism does not believe in an eternity of evil as Christianity does, and that Christianity has been content to leave all its other ideas about the devil in a very hazy and uncertain form, while Zoroastrianism has not shrunk from carrying similar ideas to their logical conclusion. If, therefore, a belief in Aharman, as the author of evil, makes the Parsi religion a dualism, it is difficult to understand why a belief in the devil, as the author of evil, does not make Christianity also a dualism. At any rate, it is evident from the Bundahis that a Christian is treading on hazardous ground when he objects to Zoroastrianism on the score of its dualism.

Another misrepresentation of the Parsi religion is shown to have no foundation in fact, by a passage in the Selections of Zâd-spâram. Several writers, both Greek and Armenian, contemporaries of the Sasanian dynasty, represent the Persians as believing that both Aûharmazd and Aharman were produced by an eternal being, who is evidently a personification of the Avesta phrase for 'boundless time.' This view was apparently confirmed by a passage in Anquetil Duperron's French translation of the Vendidad (XIX, 32-34), but this has long been known to be a mistranslation due to Anquetil's ignorance of Avesta grammar; so that the supposed doctrine of 'boundless time' being the originator of everything is not to be found in the Avesta; still it might have sprung up in Sasanian times. But the Selections of Zâd-spâram (I, 24) distinctly state that Aûharmazd produced the creature Zörvân (precisely the term used in the phrase 'boundless time' in the Avesta). Here 'time,' although personified, is represented as a creature of Aûharmazd, produced after the first appearance of Aharman; which contradicts the statement of the Greek and Armenian writers completely, and shows how little reliance can be placed upon the assertions of foreigners regarding matters which they view with antipathy or prejudice.

With reference to the general plan of these translations of Pahlavi texts a few remarks seem necessary. In the first place, it will be obvious to any attentive reader of this introduction that a translator of Pahlavi has not merely to translate, but also to edit, the original text; and, in some cases, he has even to discover it. Next, as regards the translation, it has been already mentioned (p. xxvi) that the translator’s object is to make it as literal as possible; in order, therefore, to check the inevitable tendency of free translation to wander from the meaning of the original text, all extra words added to complete the sense, unless most distinctly understood in the original, are italicised in the translation. And in all cases that seem doubtful the reader’s attention is called to the fact by a note, though it is possible that some doubtful matters may be overlooked.

The notes deal not only with explanations that may be necessary for the general reader, but also with various readings and other details that may be useful to scholars; they are, therefore, very numerous, though some passages may still be left without sufficient explanation. References to the Vendidad, Yasna, and Visparad are made to Spiegel’s edition of the original texts, not because that edition is superior, or even equal, in accuracy to that of Westergaard, but because it is the only edition which gives the Pahlavi translations, because its sections are shorter and, therefore, reference to them is more definite, and because the only English translation of the Avesta hitherto existing¹ is based upon Spiegel’s edition, and is divided into the same sections.

No attempt has been made to trace any of the myths or traditions farther back than the Avesta, whence their descent is a fact that can hardly be disputed. To trace them back to earlier times, to a supposed Indo-Iranian personification or poetic distortion of meteorological phenomena, would be, in the present state of our knowledge, merely substituting plausible guesses for ascertained facts. In many cases, indeed, we have really no right to assume that an Avesta myth has descended from any such Indo-Iranian origin, as there have been ample opportunities for the infiltration of myths from other sources, yet unknown, among the many nations with which the religion of the Avesta has come in contact, both before and since the time of Zarathuṣṭ. For, notwithstanding the ingenious rhetoric of the expounders of myths, it is still as unsafe, from a scientific point of view, to disbelieve the former existence of Zarathuṣṭ as it is to doubt that of Moses, or any other practically prehistoric personage, merely because mythic tales have gathered about his name in later times, as they always do about the memory of any individual who has become famous or revered.

In many cases the original Pahlavi word is appended, in parentheses, to its English equivalent in the translation. This has been done for the sake of explanation, when the word is technical or rare, or the translation is unusual. For, with regard to technical terms, it has been considered best, in nearly all cases, to translate them by some explanatory phrase, in preference to filling the translation with foreign words which would convey little or no distinct meaning to the general reader. Some of these technical terms have almost exact equivalents in English, such as those translated ‘resurrection’ and ‘demon,’ or can be well expressed by descriptive phrases, such as ‘sacred twigs’ and ‘sacred cakes.’ Other terms are only approximately rendered by such words as ‘archangel’ and ‘angel;’ others can hardly be expressed at all times by the same English words, but must change according to the context, such as the term variously rendered by ‘worship, ceremonial, prayer, or rites.’ While the meaning of some few terms is so technical, complicated, or uncertain, that it is safer to use the Pahlavi word itself, such as Tanāpūhar, Frasast, Gēti-kharīḍ, Dvāsdah-hōmāst, &c.

The following is a list of nearly all the technical terms that have been translated, with the English equivalents generally used to express them:—Āfrīn, ‘blessing;’ aharīmōk, ‘apostate, heretic;’ aharūbō, ‘righteous;’ aharūbō-dād, ‘alms, almsgiving;’ akdīnō, ‘infidel;’ amēshōspend, ‘archangel;’ armēst, ‘helpless;’ ast-hōmand, ‘material;’ aūsōfrīd, ‘propitiation, offering;’ baghō-bakhītō, ‘divine providence;’ baresōm, ‘sacred twigs or twig-bundle;’
INTRODUCTION.

'ceremonial, ceremony, sacred ceremony, ceremonial worship, worship, reverence, rites, prayer;' yêdatô, 'angel;' zand, 'commentary;' zôhar or zôr, 'holy-water;' zôt, 'officiating priest.'

With regard to the orthography of Pahlavi names and words, advantage has been taken of the system of transliteration adopted for this series of Translations of the Sacred Books of the East, by making use of italics for the purpose of distinguishing between certain Pahlavi letters which were probably pronounced very nearly alike. Thus, besides the usual letters ‹ for v and š for z, the Pahlavi letter ñ is often used to denote those same sounds which, in such cases, are represented by the italic letters v and z. An extension of the same mode of distinction to the letters l and r would be desirable, but has not been attempted in this volume; these two letters are usually written ʃ, but in a few words they are represented by l or by š, in which cases they would be better expressed by the italics l and r. Some attempt has been made to adhere to one uniform orthography in such names as occur frequently, but as there is no such uniformity in the various languages and writings quoted, nor even in the same manuscript, some deviations can hardly be avoided.

In conclusion it may be remarked that a translator of Pahlavi generally begins his career by undervaluing the correctness of Pahlavi texts and the literary ability of their authors, but he can hardly proceed far without finding abundant reason for altering his opinion of both. His depreciatory view of Pahlavi literature is generally due partly to want of knowledge, and partly to his trusting too much to the vile perversions of Pahlavi texts usually supplied by Pāzand writers. But as his knowledge of Pahlavi increases he becomes better able to appreciate the literary merits of the texts. If the reader should have already formed some such low estimate of the ability of Pahlavi writers, it may be hoped that these translations will afford him sufficient reason for changing his opinion; if not, they will have signally failed in doing those writers justice.

THE ORIGINAL CREATION.
Observations.

1. For all divisions into chapters and sections the translator is responsible, as the original text is written continuously, with very few stops marked.

2. Italics are used for any English words which are not expressed, or fully understood, in the original text, but are added to complete the sense of the translation.

3. Oriental words are usually ‘spaced.’ Italics occurring in them, or in names, are intended to represent certain peculiar Oriental letters. The italic consonants $d$, $n$, $v$ may be pronounced as in English; but $g$ should be sounded like $j$, $h$ like $wh$, $k$ like $ch$ in ‘church,’ $n$ like $ng$, $s$ like $sh$, $z$ like French $j$. For further information, see ‘Transliteration of Oriental Alphabets adopted for the Translations of the Sacred Books of the East’ at the end of the volume.

4. In Pahlavi words all circumflexed vowels and any final $\hat{o}$ are expressed in the Pahlavi original, but all other vowels are merely understood.

5. In the translation, words in parentheses are merely explanatory of those which precede them.

7. The manuscripts mentioned in the notes are:—K20 (about 500 years old), No. 20 in the University Library at Copenhagen. K20b (uncertain date), a fragment of the text, No. 20b in the same library. M6 (written A.D. 1397), No. 6 of the Haug Collection in the State Library at Munich. TD (written about A.D. 1530), belonging to Mobad Tehmurâs Dinshawji Anklesaria at Bombay.

Chapter I.

1. In the name of the creator Aûharmazd.

1. The Zand-âkâs ("Zand-knowing or tradition-informed")\(^1\), which is first about Aûharmazd's original creation and the antagonism of the evil spirit\(^2\), and afterwards about the nature of the creatures from the original creation till the end, which is the future existence (tanû-i pa'sînô). 2. As revealed by the religion of the Mazdayasnians, so it is declared that Aûharmazd is supreme in omniscience and goodness,

\(^1\) The Pâzand and most of the modern Pahlavi manuscripts have, 'From the Zand-âkâs,' but the word min, 'from,' does not occur in the old manuscript K20, and is a modern addition to M6. From this opening sentence it would appear that the author of the work gave it the name Zand-âkâs.

\(^2\) The Avesta Angra-mainyu, the spirit who causes adversity or anxiety (see Darmesteter's Ormazd et Ahriman, pp. 92–95); the Pahlavi name is, most probably, merely a corrupt transliteration of the Avesta form, and may be read Ganrâk-maînôk, as the Avesta Spenta-mainyu, the spirit who causes prosperity, has become Spênâk-maînôk in Pahlavi. This latter spirit is represented by Aûharmazd himself in the Bundahis. The Pahlavi word for 'spirit,' which is read madônad by the Parsis, and has been pronounced mânavad by some scholars and mânô by others, is probably a corruption of maînôk, as its Sasanian form was mânô. If it were not for the extra medial letter in ganrâk, and for the obvious partial transliteration of spênâk, it would be preferable to read ganâk, 'smiting,' and to derive it from a supposed verb gandom, 'to smite' (Av. ghna), as proposed by most Zendists. A Parsi would probably suggest gandân, 'to stink.'
and unrivalled in splendour; the region of light is the place of Aûharmazd, which they call ‘endless light,’ and the omniscience and goodness of the unrivalled Aûharmazd is what they call ‘revelation.’

3. Revelation is the explanation of both spirits together; one is he who is independent of unlimited time, because Aûharmazd and the region, religion, and time of Aûharmazd were and are and ever will be; while Aharman in darkness, with backward understanding and desire for destruction, was in the abyss, and it is he who will not be; and the place of that destruction, and also of that darkness, is what they call the ‘endlessly dark.’

4. And between them was empty space, that is, what they call ‘air,’ in which is now their meeting.

5. Both are limited and unlimited spirits, for the supreme is that which they call endless light, and the abyss which is endlessly dark, so that between them is a void, and one is not connected with

1 Reading aham-kaŋ, ‘without a fellow-sovereign, peerless, unrivalled, independent.’ This rare word occurs three times in §§ 2, 3, and some Pâzand writers suggest the meaning ‘everlasting’ (by means of the Persian gloss hamīsah), which is plausible enough, but hâmank would be an extraordinary mode of writing the very common word hamāŋ, ‘ever.’

2 The word dēnô (properly dēnô), Av. daēna, being traceable to a root dô, ‘to see,’ must originally have meant ‘a vision’ (see Haug’s Essays on the Religion of the Parsis, 2nd ed. p. 152, note 2), whence the term has been transferred to ‘religion’ and all religious observances, rules, and writings; so it may be translated either by ‘religion’ or by ‘revelation.’

4 The usual name of the evil spirit; it is probably an older corruption of Angra-mainyu than Ganrâk-maînôk, and a less technical term. Its Sasanian form was Aharmanî.
the other; and, again, both spirits are limited as to their own selves. 6. And, secondly, on account of the omniscience of Aûharmazd, both things are in the creation of Aûharmazd, the finite and the infinite; for this they know is that which is in the covenant of both spirits. 7. And, again, the complete sovereignty of the creatures of Aûharmazd is in the future existence, and that also is unlimited for ever and everlasting; and the creatures of Aharman will perish at the time when the future existence occurs, and that also is eternity.

8. Aûharmazd, through omniscience, knew that Aharman exists, and whatever he schemes he infuses with malice and greediness till the end; and because He accomplishes the end by many means, He also produced spiritually the creatures which were necessary for those means, and they remained three thousand years in a spiritual state, so that they were unthinking and unmoving, with intangible bodies.

9. The evil spirit, on account of backward knowledge, was not aware of the existence of Aûharmazd; and, afterwards, he arose from the abyss, and came in unto the light which he saw. 10. Desirous of destroying, and because of his malicious nature, he rushed in to destroy that light of Aûharmazd unassailed by fiends, and he saw its bravery and glory were greater than his own; so he fled back to the gloomy darkness, and formed many demons and fiends; and the creatures of the destroyer arose for violence.

11. Aûharmazd, by whom the creatures of the evil spirit were seen, creatures terrible, corrupt, and bad, also considered them not commendable (bûrzišntik).

12. Afterwards, the evil spirit saw the creatures of Aûharmazd; they appeared many creatures of delight (vâyâh), enquiring creatures, and they seemed to him commendable, and he commended the creatures and creation of Aûharmazd.

13. Then Aûharmazd, with a knowledge1 of which way the end of the matter would be, went to meet the evil spirit, and proposed peace to him, and spoke thus: ‘Evil spirit! bring assistance unto my creatures, and offer praise! so that, in reward for it, ye (you and your creatures) may become immortal and undecaying, hungerless and thirstless.’

14. And the evil spirit shouted thus2: ‘I will not depart, I will not provide assistance for thy creatures, I will not offer praise among thy creatures, and I am not of the same opinion with thee as to good things. I will destroy thy creatures for ever and everlasting; moreover, I will force all thy creatures into disaffection to thee and affection for myself.’ 15. And the explanation thereof is this, that the evil spirit reflected in this manner, that Aûharmazd was helpless as regarded him; therefore He proffers peace; and he did not agree, but bore on even into conflict with Him.

16. And Aûharmazd spoke thus: ‘You are not omniscient and almighty, O evil spirit! so that it is not possible for thee to destroy me, and it is not possible for thee to force my creatures so that they will not return to my possession.’

17. Then Aûharmazd, through omniscience, knew that: If I do not grant a period of contest, then it will be possible for him to act so that he may be able to cause the seduction of my creatures to himself. As even now there are many of the intermixture of mankind who practise wrong more than right. 18. And Aûharmazd spoke to the evil spirit thus: ‘Appoint a period! so that the intermingling of the conflict may be for nine thousand years.’ For he knew that by appointing this period the evil spirit would be undone.

19. Then the evil spirit, unobservant and through ignorance, was content with that agreement; just like two men quarrelling together, who propose a time thus: Let us appoint such-and-such a day for a fight.

20. Aûharmazd also knew this, through omniscience, that within these nine thousand years, for three thousand years everything proceeds by the will of Aûharmazd, three thousand years there is an intermingling of the wills of Aûharmazd and Ahriman, and the last three thousand years the evil spirit is disabled, and they keep the adversary away from the creatures.

Afterwards, Aûharmazd recited the Ahunavar thus: Yathâ ahû vairyô (‘as a heavenly lord is to be chosen’), &c.¹ once, and uttered the twenty-one words²; He also exhibited to the evil spirit His own triumph in the end, and the impotence of the evil spirit, the annihilation of the demons, and the resurrection and undisturbed future existence of the creatures for ever and everlasting. 22. And the evil spirit, who perceived his own impotence and the annihilation of the demons, became confounded, and fell back to the gloomy darkness; even so as is declared in revelation, that, when one of its (the Ahunavar’s) three parts was uttered, the evil spirit contracted his body through fear, and when two parts of it were uttered he fell upon his knees, and when all of it was uttered he became confounded

¹ This is the most sacred formula of the Parsis, which they have to recite frequently, not only during the performance of their ceremonies, but also in connection with most of their ordinary duties and habits. It is neither a prayer, nor a creed, but a declaratory formula in metre, consisting of one stanza of three lines, containing twenty-one Avesta words, as follows:—

Vangheûs dazdâ mananghô, skyoathnàm angheûs mazdài,

And it may be translated in the following manner: ‘As a heavenly lord is to be chosen, so is an earthly master (spiritual guide), for the sake of righteousness, to be a giver of the good thoughts of the actions of life towards Mazda; and the dominion is for the lord (Ahura) whom he (Mazda) has given as a protector for the poor’ (see Haug’s Essays on the Religion of the Parsis, 2nd ed. pp. 125, 141).

\(^1\) This is the first third of the 9000 years appointed in §§ 18, 20, and the second 3000 years mentioned in Chap. XXXIV, 1.

\(^2\) It is usual to consider dâdan (Huz. yehabituntan), when traceable to Av. dâ=Sans. dhâ, as meaning ‘to create,’ but it can hardly be proved that it means to create out of nothing, any more than any other of the Avesta verbs which it is sometimes convenient to translate by ‘create.’ Before basing any argument upon the use of this word it will, therefore, be safer to substitute the word ‘produce’ in all cases.

\(^3\) Or it may be translated, ‘and from it Vohûman, by good procedure,’ &c. The position here ascribed to Vohûman, or the good thought of Aûharmazd, bears some resemblance to that of the Word in John i. 1–5, but with this essential difference, that Vohûman is merely a creature of Aûharmazd, not identified with him; for the latter idea would be considered, by a Parsi, as rather inconsistent with strict monotheism. The ‘light of the world’ now created must be distinguished from the ‘endless light’ already existing with Aûharmazd in § 2.

\(^4\) The word frashakard, ‘what is made durable, perpetuation,’ is applied to the renovation of the universe which is to take place about the time of the resurrection, as a preparation for eternity.

27. From the dark world of Aharman were Akô-man and Andar, and then Sôvar, and then Nâkahêd, and then Tâfrêv and Zâirîk 2.

28. Of Aûharmazd's creatures of the world, the first was the sky; the second, water; the third, earth; the fourth, plants; the fifth, animals; the sixth, mankind.

Chapter II.

O. On the formation of the luminaries.

1. Aûharmazd produced illumination between the sky and the earth, the constellation stars and those also not of the constellations 3, then the moon, and afterwards the sun, as I shall relate.

1 These five, with Vohûman and Aûharmazd in his angelic capacity, constitute the seven Ameshaspends, 'undying causes of prosperity, immortal benefactors,' or archangels, who have charge of the whole material creation. They are personifications of old Avesta phrases, such as Vohû-manô, 'good thought;' Asha-vahîsta, 'perfect rectitude;' Khshathra-vairya, 'desirable dominion;' Spendta-ârmaîti, 'bountiful devotion;' Haurvatâd, 'completeness or health;' and Ameretâd, 'immortality.'

2 These six demons are the opponents of the six archangels respectively (see Chap. XXX, 29); their names in the Avesta are, Akem-manô, 'evil thought;' Indra, Sauru, Naunghaithya, Tauru, Zairêa (see Vendidâd X, 17, 18 Sp., and XIX, 43 W.), which have been compared with the Vedic god Indra, Sarva (a name of Siva), the Nâsatyas, and Sans. tura, 'diseased,' and garas, 'decay,' respectively. For further details regarding them, see Chap. XXVIII, 7-13.

3 The word akhtar is the usual term in Pahlavi for a constellation of the zodiac; but the term apâkhtar, 'away from the akhtar,' means not only 'the north,' or away from the zodiac, but also 'a
2. First he produced the celestial sphere, and the constellation stars are assigned to it by him; especially these twelve whose names are Varak (the Lamb), Tôrâ (the Bull), Dô-patkar (the Two-figures or Gemini), Kalaêkang (the Crab), Sêr (the Lion), Khûsak (Virgo), Tarâzûk (the Balance), Gazdûm (the Scorpion), Nîmâsp (the Centaur or Sagittarius), Vahlk¹ (Capricornus), Dûl (the Waterpot), and Mâhîk (the Fish); 3. which, from their original creation, were divided into the twenty-eight subdivisions of the astronomers², of which the names are Padêvar, Pêsh-Parviz, Parviz, Paha, Avêsar, Besn, Rakhvad, Taraha, Avra, Nahn, Miyân, Av- dem, Mâshâha, Spûr, Husru, Srob, Nur, Gêl, Garafa, Varant, Gau, Got, Muru, Bunda, Kahtsar, Vaht, Miyân, Kaht³. 4. And all his original creations, planet,’ which is in the zodiac, but apart from the constellations. The meaning of akhtar, most suitable to the context here, appears to be the general term ‘constellation.’

² Literally, ‘fragments of the calculators,’ khûrdâk-i hâmârikân. These subdivisions are the spaces traversed daily by the moon among the stars, generally called ‘lunar mansions.’

residing in the world, are committed to them; so that when the destroyer arrives they overcome the adversary and their own persecution, and the creatures are saved from those adversities.

5. As a specimen of a warlike army, which is destined for battle, they have ordained every single constellation of those 6480 thousand small stars as assistance; and among those constellations four chieftains, appointed on the four sides, are leaders.

6. On the recommendation of those chieftains the many unnumbered stars are specially assigned to the various quarters and various places, as the united strength and appointed power of those constellations.

7. As it is said that Tīstar is the chieftain of the east, Satavēs the chieftain of the west, Vanand the chieftain of the south, and Haptōk-ring the chieftain of the north. 8. The great one which they Pahlavi names would be to transliterate the Pāzand back into Pahlavi characters. The ninth subdivision is mentioned in Chap. VII, r by the name Avrak.

1 That is, to the zodiacal constellations, which are supposed to have special charge of the welfare of creation.

2 Of these four constellations or stars, which are said to act as leaders, there is no doubt that Haptōk-ring, the chieftain of the north, is Ursa Major; and it is usually considered that Tīstar, the chieftain of the east, is Sirius; but the other two chieftains are not so well identified, and there may be some doubt as to the proper stations of the eastern and western chieftains. It is evident, however, that the most westerly stars, visible at any one time of the year, are those which set in the dusk of the evening; and east of these, all the stars are visible during the night as far as those which rise at daybreak, which are the most easterly stars visible at that time of the year. Tīstar or Sirius can, therefore, be considered the chieftain of the eastern stars only when it rises before daybreak, which it does at the latter end of summer; and Haptōk-ring or Ursa Major is due north at midnight (on the meridian below the pole) at about the same time of the year. These stars, there-call a Gâh (period of the day), which they say is the great one of the middle of the sky, till just before the destroyer came was the midday (or south) one of the five, that is, the Rapîtvin fore, fulfil the conditions necessary for being chieftains of the east and north at the end of summer, and we must look for stars capable of being chieftains of the south and west at the same season. Now, when Ursa Major is near the meridian below the pole, Fomalhaut is the most conspicuous star near the meridian in the far south, and is probably to be identified with Vanand the chieftain of the south. And when Sirius rises some time before daybreak, Antares (in Scorpio) sets some time after dusk in the evening, and may well be identified with Satavê the chieftain of the west. Assuming that there has been a precession of the equinoxes equivalent to two hours of time, since the idea of these chieftains (which may perhaps be traced to Avesta times) was first formed, it may be calculated that the time of year when these leading stars then best fulfilled that idea was about a month before the autumnal equinox, when Ursa Major would be due north three-quarters of an hour after midnight, and Fomalhaut due south three-quarters of an hour before midnight, Sirius would rise three hours before the sun, and Antares would set three hours after the sun. In the Avesta these leading stars are named Tistrya, Satavaêsa, Vanart, and Haptôiringa (see Tistar Yt. 0, 8, 9, 12, 32, &c., Rashnu Yt. 26–28, Sirôz. 13).

1 This translation, though very nearly literal, must be accepted with caution. If the word mas be not a name it can hardly mean anything but ‘great;’ and that it refers to a constellation appears from Chap. V, 1. The word khômsâk is an irregular form of the Huz. khômsyâ, ‘five,’ and may refer either to the five chieftains (including ‘the great one’) or to the five Gâhs or periods of the day, of which Rapîtvin is the midday one (see Chap. XXV, 9). The object of the text seems to be to connect the Rapîtvin Gâh with some great mid-sky and midday constellation or star, possibly Regulus, which, about B.C. 960, must have been more in the daylight than any other important star during the seven months of summer, the only time that the Rapîtvin Gâh can be celebrated (see Chap. XXV, 7–14). Justi has, ‘They call that the great one of the place, which is great in the middle of the sky; they say that before the enemy came it was always midday, that is, Rapîtvin.'
9. Aūharmazd performed the spiritual Yasīn ceremony with the archangels (ameshōspendān) in the Rapītvīn Gāh, and in the Yasīn he supplied every means necessary for overcoming the adversary\(^1\).

10. He deliberated with the consciousness (bōd) and guardian spirits (fravāhar) of men\(^2\), and the omniscient wisdom, brought forward among men, spoke thus: ‘Which seems to you the more advantageous, when I shall present you to the world? that you shall contend in a bodily form with the fiend (drūg), and the fiend shall perish, and in the end I shall have you prepared again perfect and immortal, and in the end give you back to the world, and you will be wholly immortal, undecaying, and undisturbed; or that it be always necessary to provide you protection from the destroyer?’

11. Thereupon, the guardian spirits of men became of the same opinion with the omniscient wisdom about going to the world, on account of the evil that comes upon them, in the world, from the fiend (drūg) Ahriman, and their becoming, at last, again unpersecuted by the adversary, perfect, and immortal, in the future existence, for ever and everlasting.

Windischmann has nearly the same, as both follow the Pāzand MSS. in reading hōmsāk (as a variant of hamīsāk), ‘always,’ instead of khōmsāk.

\(^1\) Or ‘adversity.’

\(^2\) These were among the fravashi already created (see Chap. I, 8).

\(^3\) Reading amat, ‘when,’ instead of mān, ‘which’ (see note to Chap. I, 7).
CHAPTER III.

1. On the rush of the destroyer at the creatures it is said, in revelation, that the evil spirit, when he saw the impotence of himself and the confederate (hâm-dâst) demons, owing to the righteous man, became confounded, and seemed in confusion three thousand years. 2. During that confusion the arch-fiends of the demons severally shouted thus: 'Rise up, thou father of us! for we will cause a conflict in the world, the distress and injury from which will become those of Aûharmazd and the archangels.'

3. Severally they recounted their own evil deeds, and it pleased him not; and that wicked evil spirit, through fear of the righteous man, was not able to lift up his head until the wicked Gêh came, at the completion of the three thousand years.

4. And she shouted to the evil spirit thus: 'Rise up, thou father of us! for I will cause that conflict in the world wherefrom the distress and injury of Aûharmazd and the archangels will arise.' 5. And she twice recounted severally her own evil deeds, and it pleased him not; and that wicked evil spirit

2 Probably Gâyômarz.
3 The word kamârâkân is literally 'those with an evil pate,' and is derived from Av. kameredha, 'the head of an evil being,' also applied to 'the evil summit' of Mount Arezûra (Vend. XIX, 140, 142), which is supposed to be at the gate of hell (see Chap. XII, 8). That the chief demons or arch-fiends are meant, appears more clearly in Chap. XXVIII, 12, 44, where the word is kamârâkân.

rose not from that confusion, through fear of the righteous man.

6. And, again, the wicked Gēh shouted thus: ‘Rise up, thou father of us! for in that conflict I will shed thus much vexation¹ on the righteous man and the labouring ox that, through my deeds, life will not be wanted, and I will destroy their living souls (nîsmô); I will vex the water, I will vex the plants, I will vex the fire of Aûharmazd, I will make the whole creation of Aûharmazd vexed.’

7. And she so recounted those evil deeds a second time, that the evil spirit was delighted and started up from that confusion; and he kissed Gēh upon the head, and the pollution which they call menstruation became apparent in Gēh.

8. He shouted to Gēh thus: ‘What is thy wish? so that I may give it thee.’ And Gēh shouted to the evil spirit thus: ‘A man is the wish, so give it to me.’

9. The form of the evil spirit was a log-like lizard’s (vazak) body, and he appeared a young man of fifteen years to Gēh, and that brought the thoughts of Gēh to him ².

³ This seems to be the literal meaning of the sentence, and is confirmed by Chap. XXVIII, 1, but Windischmann and Justi understand that the evil spirit formed a youth for Gēh out of a toad’s body. The incident in the text may be compared with Milton’s idea of Satan and Sin in Paradise Lost, Book II, 745–765.
10. Afterwards, the evil spirit, with the confederate demons, went towards the luminaries, and he saw the sky; and he led them up, fraught with malicious intentions. 11. He stood upon one-third of the inside of the sky, and he sprang, like a snake, out of the sky down to the earth.

12. In the month Fravardin and the day Ašāhramzd he rushed in at noon, and thereby the sky was as shattered and frightened by him, as a sheep by a wolf. 13. He came on to the water which was arranged below the earth, and then the middle of this earth was pierced and entered by him. 14. Afterwards, he came to the vegetation, then to the ox, then to Gāyomard, and then he came to fire; so, just like a fly, he rushed out upon the whole creation; and he made the world quite as injured and dark at midday as though it were in dark night. 15. And noxious creatures were diffused by him over the earth, biting and venomous, such as the snake, scorpion, frog (kalvákg), and lizard (vazak), so that not so much as the point of a needle remained free from noxious creatures. 16. And blight was diffused by him over the vegetation, and it withered away immediately. 17. And avarice, want, pain, hunger, disease, lust, and lethargy were diffused by him abroad upon the ox and Gâyômard.

18. Before his coming to the ox, Aûharmazd ground up the healing fruit, which some call 'bûnâk,' small in water openly before its eyes, so that its damage and discomfort from the calamity (zânisn) might be less; and when it became at the same time lean and ill, as its breath went forth and it passed away, the ox also spoke thus: 'The cattle are to be created, and their work, labour, and care are to be appointed.'

19. And before his coming to Gâyômard, Aûharmazd brought forth a sweat upon Gâyômard, so long as he might recite a prayer (vâg) of one stanza (vikast); moreover, Aûharmazd formed that sweat into the youthful body of a man of fifteen years, radiant and tall. 20. When Gâyômard issued from the sweat he saw the world dark as night, and the earth as though not a needle's point remained free from noxious creatures; the celestial sphere was in revolution, and the sun and moon remained in motion: and the world's struggle, owing to the clamour of the Mâzînîkân demons, was with the constellations.

21. And the evil spirit thought that the creatures of Aûharmazd were all rendered useless except

1 The word mîvâng is an unusual form of mîvak, 'fruit.' It is probably to be traced to an Av. mîvâng, which might mean 'fatness,' as Windischmann suggests.

Gâyomard; and Astô-vidâd with a thousand demons, causers of death, were let forth by him on Gâyomard. 22. But his appointed time had not come, and he (Astô-vidâd) obtained no means of noosing (âvîzt-danô) him; as it is said that, when the opposition of the evil spirit came, the period of the life and rule of Gâyomard was appointed for thirty years. 23. After the coming of the adversary he lived thirty years, and Gâyomard spoke thus: 'Although the destroyer has come, mankind will be all of my race; and this one thing is good, when they perform duty and good works.'

24. And, afterwards, he (the evil spirit) came to fire, and he mingled smoke and darkness with it. 25. The planets, with many demons, dashed against the celestial sphere, and they mixed the constellations; and the whole creation was as disfigured as though fire disfigured every place and smoke arose over it. 26. And ninety days and nights the heavenly angels were contending in the world with the confederate demons of the evil spirit, and hurled them confounded to hell; and the rampart of the sky was formed so that the adversary should not be able to mingle with it.

changing into duality, and persecution, contention, and mingling of high and low became manifest.

CHAPTER IV.

1. This also is said, that when the primeval ox passed away it fell to the right hand, and Gâyômar afterwads, when he passed away, to the left hand.

2. Gôsûrvan, as the soul of the primeval ox came out from the body of the ox, stood up before the ox and cried to Aûharmazd, as much as a thousand men when they sustain a cry at one time, thus: 'With whom is the guardianship of the creatures left by thee, when ruin has broken into the earth, and vegetation is withered, and water is troubled? Where is the man of whom it was said by thee thus: I will produce him, so that he may preach carefulness?'

3. And Aûharmazd spoke thus: 'You are made ill, O Gôsûrvan! you have the illness which the evil spirit brought on; if it were proper to produce that man in this earth at this time, the evil spirit would not have been oppressive in it.'

1 Literally, 'the sole-created ox' from whom all the animals and some plants are supposed to have proceeded (see Chaps. X and XIV), as mankind proceeded from Gâyômar. It is the ox of the primitive creation, mentioned in Chap. III, 14, 18.

2 The spiritual representative of the primeval ox, called Gôsûrvâ, 'soul of the bull,' in the Avesta, of which name Gôsûrvan is a corruption. The complaint of Gôsûrvan is recorded in the Gâthas, the oldest part of the Avesta (see Yas. XXIX).

3 Referring to Zarâtûst.

4 In K2o, 'You are ill.'
4. Forth Gôsûrvan walked to the star station (pâyak) and cried in the same manner, and forth to the moon station and cried in the same manner, and forth to the sun station, and then the guardian spirit of Zaratûst was exhibited to her, and Aûharmaçd said thus:\footnote{1}{1} ‘I will produce for the world him who will preach carefulness.’ 5. Contented became the spirit Gôsûrvan, and assented thus: ‘I will nourish the creatures;’ that is, she became again consenting to a worldly creation in the world.

\section*{Chapter V.}

1. Seven chieftains of the planets have come unto the seven chieftains of the constellations,\footnote{2}{2} as the planet Mercury (Tîr) unto Tîstar, the planet Mars (Vâhrâm) unto Haptôk-ring, the planet Jupiter (Aûharmaçd) unto Vanand, the planet Venus (Anâhîd) unto Satavès, the planet Saturn (Kévân) unto the great one of the middle of the sky, Gôkîhar.\footnote{3}{3} As the text stands in the MSS. it means, ‘and then the guardian spirit of Zaratûst demonstrated to her thus,’ but whether it be intended to represent the fravâhar as producing the creature is doubtful. The angel Gôs, who is identified with Gôsûrvan, is usually considered a female, but this is hardly consistent with being the soul of a bull (see Chap. X, 1, 2), though applicable enough to a representative of the earth. In the Selections of Zâd-sparâm, II, 6, however, this mythological animal is said to have been a female (see Appendix to Bundahîs). 5. Five of these are mentioned in Chap. II, 7, 8, to which the sun and moon are here added.

\footnote{3}{3} As this name stands in the MSS. it may be read Gûrgdâr (as in the Pâz. MSS.), Gûrêhîar, or Dûrkîhar; the reading is very uncertain, and Windischmann suggests Gûrg-kîhar, ‘wolf progeny’ (compare vehrêkô-êithra in Arda-bahist Yast 8). A shooting star, and the thievish (dûggun) Mûspar, provided with tails, unto the sun and moon and stars. 2. The sun has attached Mûspar to its own radiance by mutual agreement, so that he may be less able to do harm (vinâs).

3. Of Mount Albûrs it is declared, that around the world and Mount Têrak, which is the middle of the world, the revolution of the sun is like a moat around the world; it turns back in a circuit owing to the enclosure (var) of Mount Albûrs around Têrak. 4. As it is said that it is the Têrak of Albûrs from behind which my sun and moon and stars return again. 5. For there are a hundred or meteor, is probably meant (see Chap. XXX, 18, 31), and as it is the special disturber of the moon, it may be Gô-kîhar (Av. gao-kîthra, of ox-lineage), a common epithet of the moon; the Pahlavi letter k being often written something like the compound râ; and this supposition is confirmed by the Gôk-kîhar of TD in Chap. XXVIII, 44.

1 This is written Mûs-parik in TD in Chap. XXVIII, 44, and seems to be the mûs pai rikâ of Yas. XVII, 46, LXVII, 23, as noticed by Windischmann; it is probably meant here for a comet, as it is attached to the sun. The zodiacal light and milky way have too little of the wandering character of planets to be considered planetary opponents of the sun and moon.

2 The hara berezaiti, lofty mountain-range, of the Avesta, which is an ideal representative of the loftiest mountains known to the ancient Iranians, the Alburz range in Mazendarân, south of the Caspian. See Chaps. VIII, 2, XII, 1, 3.

3 The Taêra of Yas. XLI, 24, Râm Yt. 7, Zamyâd Yt. 6. See Chap. XII, 2, 4.

4 The word mayâ-ûr is a Huz. hybrid for ãîv-ûr, a water-holder, or ditch.

5 The word may be either ãvêgak or khvêgak, with this meaning.

6 This appears to be a quotation from the Rashnu Yast, 25. The Huz. word for month is here used for the moon.
and eighty apertures (r̲ōγi̲n) in the east, and a hundred and eighty in the west, through Albu̲rz; and the sun, every day, comes in through an aperture, and goes out through an aperture\(^1\); and the whole connection and motion of the moon and constellations and planets is with it: every day it always illumines (or warms) three regions (kēshvar)\(^2\) and a half, as is evident to the eyesight. 6. And twice in every year the day and night are equal, for on the original attack\(^3\), when it (the sun) went forth from its first degree (khūrdak), the day and night were equal, it was the season of spring; when it arrives at the first degree of Kalākang (Cancer) the time of day is greatest, it is the beginning of summer; when it arrives at the sign (khūrdak) Tarāgūk (Libra) the day and night are equal, it is the beginning of autumn; when it arrives at the sign Vahīk (Capricorn) the night is a maximum, it is the beginning of winter; and when it arrives at Varak (Aries) the night and day have again become equal, as when it

1 This mode of accounting for the varying position of sunrise and sunset resembles that in the Book of Enoch, LXXI, but only six eastern and six western gates of heaven are there mentioned, and the sun changes its gates of entrance and exit only once a month, instead of daily.

2 See § 9 and Chap. XI.

3 The reading of this word is doubtful, although its meaning is tolerably clear. The Pāz. MSS. read har dō, 'both'; Justi reads ardab, 'quarrel;' and in the Selections of Zād-sparām it is written ārdīk. It seems probable that the word is kharāh, 'attack,' which being written exactly like ardē (Av. ashya, see Yas. LVI, 1, 1) has had a circumflex added to indicate the supposed d, and this false reading has led to the more modern form ārdīk (Pers. ārd, 'anger'). But probabilities in obscure matters are often treacherous guides.

4 Reading amat, 'when,' instead of mūn, 'which,' throughout the sentence (see note to Chap. I, 7).
went forth from Varak. 7. So that when it comes back to Varak, in three hundred and sixty days and the five Gâtha days, it goes in and comes out through one and the same aperture; the aperture is not mentioned, for if it had been mentioned the demons would have known the secret, and been able to introduce disaster.

8. From there where the sun comes on on the longest day to where it comes on on the shortest day is the east region Savah; from there where it comes on the shortest day to where it goes off on the shortest day is the direction of the south regions Fradâfsh and Vîdâfsh; from there where it goes in on the shortest day to where it goes in on the longest day is the west region Arzah; from there where it comes in on the longest day to there where it goes in on the longest day are the north regions Vôrûbarst and Vôrûgarst. 9. When the sun comes on, it illuminates (or warms) the regions of Savah, Fradâfsh, Vîdâfsh, and half of Khvanîras; when it goes in on the dark side, it illuminates the regions of Arzah, Vôrûbarst, Vôrûgarst, and one half of Khvanîras; when it is day here it is night there.

1 The five supplementary days added to the last of the twelve months, of thirty days each, to complete the year. For these days no additional apertures are provided in Albûrz, and the sun appears to have the choice of either of the two centre apertures out of the 180 on each side of the world. This arrangement seems to indicate that the idea of the apertures is older than the rectification of the calendar which added the five Gâtha days to an original year of 360 days.

2 This sentence occurs, without the names of the kâshvars or regions, in the Pahl. Vend. XIX, 19. For the kâshvars see Chap. XI.

Chapter VI.

1. On the conflict of the creations of the world with the antagonism of the evil spirit it is said in revelation, that the evil spirit, even as he rushed in and looked upon the pure bravery of the angels and his own violence, wished to rush back. 2. The spirit of the sky is himself like one of the warriors who has put on armour; he arrayed the sky against the evil spirit, and led on in the contest, until Aûharmazd had completed a rampart around, stronger than the sky and in front of the sky. 3. And his guardian spirits (fravâhar) of warriors and the righteous, on war horses and spear in hand, were around the sky; such-like as the hair on the head is the similitude (ângunt-âttak) of those who hold the watch of the rampart. 4. And no passage was found by the evil spirit, who rushed back; and he beheld the annihilation of the demons and his own impotence, as Aûharmazd did his own final triumph, producing the renovation of the universe for ever and everlasting.

pouring, on the same day when the destroyer rushed in, and came again into notice for mischief (âvârak) in the direction of the west. 2. For every single month is the owner of one constellation; the month Tîr is the fourth month\(^1\) of the year, and Cancer the fourth constellation from Aries, so it is the owner of Cancer, into which Tîstar sprang, and displayed the characteristics of a producer of rain; and he brought on the water aloft by the strength of the wind. 3. Co-operators with Tîstar were Vohûman and the angel Hôm, with the assistance of the angel Bûrg and the righteous guardian spirits in orderly arrangement.

4. Tîstar was converted into three forms, the form of a man and the form of a horse and the form of a bull\(^2\); thirty days and nights he was distinguished in brilliance\(^3\), and in each form he produced rain ten days and nights; as the astrologers say that every constellation has three forms. 5. Every single drop of that rain became as big as a bowl, and the water stood the height of a man over the whole of this earth; and the noxious creatures on the earth being all killed by the rain, went into the holes of the earth\(^4\).

1 See Chap. XXV, 20.

2 See Tîstar Yâ. 13, 16, 18, where it is stated that Tîstar assumes the form of a man for the first ten nights, of a bull for the second ten nights, and of a horse for the third ten nights. Also in Vend. XIX, 126 Tîstar is specially invoked in his form of a bull.

3 Or it may be translated, ‘he hovered in the light,’ as Windischmann and Justi have it.

4 In comparing the inundation produced by Tîstar with the Noachian deluge, it must be recollected that the former is represented as occurring before mankind had propagated on the earth.
6. And, afterwards, the wind spirit, so that it may not be contaminated (gûmîlkht), stirs up the wind and atmosphere as the life stirs in the body; and the water was all swept away by it, and was brought out to the borders of the earth, and the wide-formed ocean arose therefrom. 7. The noxious creatures remained dead within the earth, and their venom and stench were mingled with the earth, and in order to carry that poison away from the earth Tîstar went down into the ocean in the form of a white horse with long hoofs.

8. And Apâôsh, the demon, came meeting him in the likeness of a black horse with clumsy (kund) hoofs; a mile (parasang) away from him fled Tîstar, through the fright which drove him away. 9. And Tîstar begged for success from Aûharmazd, and Aûharmazd gave him strength and power, as it is said, that unto Tîstar was brought at once the strength of ten vigorous horses, ten vigorous camels, ten vigorous bulls, ten mountains, and ten rivers. 10. A mile away from him fled Apâôsh, the demon, through fright at his strength; on account of this they speak of an arrow-shot with Tîstar’s strength in the sense of a mile.

1 The term farâkhû-kard, ‘wide-formed,’ is a free Pahlavi translation of Av. voruru-kasha, ‘wide-shored,’ or ‘having wide abysses,’ applied to the boundless ocean (see Chap. XIII, r).

2 For the Avesta account of this expedition of Tîstar, see Tîstar Yt. 20–29.

3 Miswritten Apâv or Apavas in Pâzand, by all MSS. in this chapter, but see Chap. XXVIII, 39.

4 The word parasang is here used for Av. hâthra, which was about an English mile (see Chap. XXVI, 1).

5 A quotation from Tîstar Yt. 25.
II. Afterwards, with a cloud for a jar (khûmb)—thus they call the measure which was a means of the work—he seized upon the water and made it rain most prodigiously, in drops like bull’s heads and men’s heads, pouring in handfuls and pouring in armfuls, both great and small. 12. On the production of that rain the demons Aspengargâk¹ and Apâdsh contended with it, and the fire Vázist² turned its club over; and owing to the blow of the club Aspengargâk made a very grievous noise, as even now, in a conflict with the producer of rain, a groaning and raging³ are manifest. 13. And ten nights and days rain was produced by him in that manner, and the poison and venom of the noxious creatures which were in the earth were all mixed up in the water, and the water became quite salt, because there remained in the earth some of those germs which noxious creatures ever collect.

14. Afterwards, the wind, in the same manner as before, restrained the water, at the end of three days, on various sides of the earth; and the three great seas and twenty-three small seas⁴ arose therefrom, and two fountains (kâshmak) of the sea thereby became manifest, one the Kêkast lake, and one the Sôvbar⁵, whose sources are connected with the fountain of the sea. 15. And at its north side\textsuperscript{1} two rivers flowed out, and went one to the east and one to the west; they are the Arag river and the Vēh river; as it is said thus: ‘Through those finger-breadth tricklings do thou pour and draw forth two such waters, O Aūharmazd!’ 16. Both those rivers wind about through all the extremities of the earth, and intermingle again with the water of the wide-formed ocean. 17. As those two rivers flowed out, and from the same place of origin as theirs, eighteen\textsuperscript{2} navigable rivers flowed out, and after the other waters have flowed out from those navigable streams they all flow back to the Arag\textsuperscript{3} river and Vēh river, whose fertilization (khvāpārdārīh) of the world arises therefrom.

CHAPTER VIII.

0. On the conflict which the evil spirit waged with the earth.

1. As the evil spirit rushed in, the earth shook\textsuperscript{4}, and the substance of mountains was created in the earth. 2. First, Mount Albûrs arose; afterwards, \textsuperscript{1} Probably meaning the north side of the Arêdvîvsûr fountain of the sea, which is said to be on the lofty Hûgar, a portion of Albûrs, from the northern side of which these two semi-mythical rivers are said to flow (see Chaps. XII, 5, XX, 1).

the other ranges of mountains (kôfânîhâ) of the middle of the earth; for as Albûrz grew forth all the mountains remained in motion, for they have all grown forth from the root of Albûrz. 3. At that time they came up from the earth, like a tree which has grown up to the clouds and its root¹ to the bottom; and their root passed on that way from one to the other, and they are arranged in mutual connection. 4. Afterwards, about that wonderful shaking out from the earth, they say that a great mountain is the knot of lands; and the passage for the waters within the mountains is the root which is below the mountains; they forsake the upper parts so that they may flow into it, just as the roots of trees pass into the earth; a counterpart (ânguni-tâk) of the blood in the arteries of men, which gives strength to the whole body. 5. In numbers², apart from Albûrz, all the mountains grew up out of the earth in eighteen years³, from which arises the perfection⁴ of men's advantage.

² Or, 'as it were innumerable;' the word amat meaning both 'number' and 'innumerable.'
³ See Chap. XII, r.
⁴ The word must be farhâkhtgân, 'proprieties,' both here and in Chap. IX, 6, as farhâkhtîn is an ungrammatical form.
⁵ Reading amat, 'when,' instead of mûn, 'which' (see the note to Chap. I, 7).
angel, as the vegetation was his own, pounded the plants small, and mixed them up with the water which Tistar seized, and Tistar made that water rain down upon the whole earth. 3. On the whole earth plants grew up like hair upon the heads of men. 4. Ten thousand\(^1\) of them grew forth of one special description, for keeping away the ten thousand species of disease which the evil spirit produced for the creatures; and from those ten thousand, the 100,000 species\(^2\) of plants have grown forth.

5. From that same germ of plants the tree of all germs\(^3\) was given forth, and grew up in the wide-formed ocean, from which the germs of all species of plants ever increased. 6. And near to that tree of all germs the Gokard tree\(^4\) was produced, for keeping away deformed (duspada) decrepitude; and the full perfection of the world arose therefrom.

seminal energy (tôkhīmh) of the ox. 2. Delivered to the moon station¹, that seed was thoroughly purified by the light of the moon, fully prepared in every way, and produced life in a body. 3. Thence arose two oxen, one male and one female; and, afterwards, two hundred and eighty-two species of each kind² became manifest upon the earth. 4. The dwelling (mānist) of the birds is in the air, and the fish are in the midst of the water.

CHAPTER XI.

1. On the nature of the earth it says in revelation, that there are thirty and three kinds³ of land. 2. On the day when Tīstar produced the rain, when its seas arose therefrom, the whole place, half taken up by water, was converted into seven portions; this portion⁴, as much as one-half, is the middle, and six portions are around; those six portions are together as much as Khvantras. 3. The name

¹ See Chap. XIV, 3. In the Māh Yt. 6, 7, blessings are invoked for ‘the moon of ox lineage’ (gaolithra) in conjunction with the ‘sole-created ox and the ox of many species.’ In the Avesta the gender of these two primeval oxen appears doubtful, owing probably to the dual gen. masc. of their epithets being of the same form as a sing. gen. fem.
² That is, of each sex. See Chap. XIV, 13, 27. In all three occurrences of this number K20 has 272, but all other MSS. have 282 (except M6 in this place only).
³ K20b has ‘thirty-two kinds.’
kēshvar (‘zone or region’) is also applied to them, and they existed side by side (kash kash)¹; as on the east side of this portion (Khvanīras) is the Savah region, on the west is the Arzah region; the two portions on the south side are the Fradadafsh and Vīdadafsh regions, the two portions on the north side are the Vērūbarst and Vērūgarst regions, and that in the middle is Khvaṇīras. 4. And Khvanīras has the sea, for one part of the wide-formed ocean wound about around it; and from Vērūbarst and Vērūgarst a lofty mountain grew up; so that it is not possible for any one to go from region to region ².

5. And of these seven regions every benefit was created most in Khvanīras, and the evil spirit also produced most for Khvanīras, on account of the superiority (sarīh)³ which he saw in it. 6. For the Kayānians and heroes were created in Khvanīras; and the good religion of the Mazdayasnians was created in Khvanīras, and afterwards conveyed to the other regions; Sōshyans⁴ is born in Khvanīras, who makes the evil spirit impotent, and causes the resurrection and future existence.

³ So in M6; but K20 has zadārīh, which would imply, ‘for the destruction of what he saw of it.’

⁴ Always spelt so in the Bundahīs MSS. K20 and M6, and corrupted into Sōshyōs in Pāzand; but it is more usually written Sōshāns in other Pahlavi works, and its Avesta form is Saoshyās (see Chap. XXXII, 8).
CHAPTER XII.

1. On the nature of mountains it says in revelation, that, at first, the mountains have grown forth in eighteen years; and Albûrz ever grew till the completion of eight hundred years; two hundred years up to the star station (pâyak), two hundred years to the moon station, two hundred years to the sun station, and two hundred years to the endless light. 2. While the other mountains have grown out of Albûrz, in number 2244 mountains, and are Hûgar the lofty, Têrak of Albûrz, Kakâd-i-Dàttik, and the Aresûr ridge, the Aûsîndîm mountain, Mount Apârsên which they say is the mountain of Pârs, Mount Zarid also which is Mount Mânûs, Mount Aîrák, Mount Kaf, Mount Vâdgês, Mount Aûshdâstân, Mount Aresûr-bûm, Mount Rûyis-hômánd, Mount Padashkhvârkar which is the greatest in Khvârîh, the mountain which they call Kînû, Mount Rêvand, Mount Dârşêt the Bakîr mountain, Mount Kábed-sîkaf, Mount Sîyâk-mûtmand, Mount Vâsîr-hômánd, Mount Spêndyâd and Kôndrâsp, Mount Asnavand and Kôndras, Mount

1 These are the four grades of the Mazdayasian heaven.
2 In all the geographical details, mentioned in the Bundahîs, there is a strange mixture of mythical tradition with actual fact. The author of the work finds names mentioned in the Avesta, by old writers of another country, and endeavours to identify them with places known to himself; much in the same way as attempts have been made to identify the geographical details of the garden of Eden. Most of the names of these mountains occur in the Zamyâd Yâst, or in other parts of the Avesta, as will be noticed in detail further on. The number 2244 is also mentioned in § 7 of that Yâst. A very able commentary on this chapter will be found in Windischmann's Zoroastriiche Studien, pp. 1-19.
Si̇k̂idāv, a mountain among those which are in Kangdez, of which they say that they are a comfort and delight of the good creator, the smaller hills.

3. I will mention them also a second time; Albûrz is around this earth and is connected with the sky. 4. The Têrak of Albûrz is that through which the stars, moon, and sun pass in, and through it they come back. 5. Hûgar the lofty is that from which the water of Arêdvîsvûr leaps down the height of a thousand men. 6. The Âu-sîndôm mountain is that which, being of ruby

1 The Av. Si̇k̂idâva of Zamyâd Yt. 5.
2 See Chap. XXIX, 4, 10; the name is here written Kangdez in K20. In Mô the word is kôf, 'mountain,' which is almost identical in form; if this be the correct reading, the translation will be, 'a mountain among those in the mountain which they say is agreeable and the delight,' &c. This mountain is, however, probably intended for the Av. Ântare-kangha, 'within Kangha,' of Zamyâd Yt. 4.
3 The Haraiti-bares of Zamyâd Yt. 1; but it is more usually called Hara berezaiti (see Chap. V, 3).
4 A central peak of the mythic Albûrz, around which the heavenly bodies are said to revolve (see Chap. V, 3). It is the Av. Taêra, mentioned in Yas. XLI, 24, Râm Yt. 7, Zamyâd Yt. 6.
5 So in Mô, but K20 has ' go in.'
6 This appears to be another peak of the mythic Albûrz, probably in the west, as it is connected with Satavês, the western chieftain of the constellations (see Chaps. XXIV, 17, and II, 7). It is the Av. Hukairya berezô, of Yas. LXIV, 14, Âbân Yt. 3, 25, 96, Gôs Yt. 8, Mihir Yt. 88, Rashnu Yt. 24, Fravardîn Yt. 6, Râm Yt. 15.
7 See Chap. XIII, 3-5.
8 In Âûharmazd Yt. 31 and Zamyâd Yt. 2, 66, an Ushidhûo mountain is mentioned as having many mountain waters around it, but this seems to be a near neighbour of the Ushidarena mountain (see § 15). The details in the text correspond with the description of the Hindva mountain, given in Tîstar Yt. 32, thus: us Hindvad paiti garôîd yô histaiti maîdîm zrayanghô vouru-kashahkan, 'up on the Hindva mountain, which stands amid the wide-shored (khûn-âhînô), of the substance of the sky\textsuperscript{1}, is \textit{in} the midst of the wide-formed ocean, so that its water, which is from Hûgar, pours down into it (the ocean). 7. \textit{Kabâd-i-Dâîtik} ('the judicial peak') is that of the middle of the world, the height of a hundred men, on which the \textit{Kînvar} bridge\textsuperscript{2} stands; and they take account of the soul at that place. 8. The \textit{Aresûr} \textsuperscript{3} ridge [of the Albûrz mountain] is a summit at the gate of hell, where they always hold the concourse of the demons. 9. This also is said, that, excepting Albûrz, the Apârsên \textsuperscript{4} mountain is the ocean;\textsuperscript{5} and the Pahlavi name, Aûsûndôm, has probably arisen from the us Hindva'd of this passage, as suggested by Justi. (See Chaps. XIII, 5, and XVIII, 10, 11.)

\textsuperscript{4} Justi adopts the reading \textit{Harpârsên}, which occurs in K\textsubscript{20} four times out of eleven, but is corrected thrice. Windischmann suggests that this mountain is the Av. \textit{skyata} (or \textit{iskatâ}) \textit{upairi-saena} of Yas. X, 29, and Zamyâd Yt. 3, which the Pahlavi translator of the Yasna explains as 'the Pârsên crag.' It seems to be a general name for the principal mountain ranges in the south and east of Iran, as may be seen on comparing this passage and Chap. XXIV, greatest; the Apârsên mountain they call the mountain of Pârs, and its beginning is in Sagastân \(^1\) and its end in Khûgîstân. 10. Mount Mânûs \(^2\) is great; the mountain on which Mânûskîhhar was born.

11. The remaining mountains have chiefly grown from those; as it is said that the elevation (afsârîh) of the districts had arisen most around those three mountains \(^3\). 12. Mount Atrak \(^4\) is in the middle from Hamadân to Khvârizem, and has grown from Mount Apârsên. 13. Mount [Kînö] \(^5\), which is on-its with Apârsên. 14. Mount Kaf \(^6\) has grown from the same Mount Apârsên. 15. Mount Aushdâs-

Marv, and Balkh rivers are said to spring from Mount Apârsên; but its application to the southern range is perhaps due to the etymological attempt, in the text, to connect it with Pârs. The Selections of Zâd-spâram, VII, 7, have Kînîstân for Khûgîstân.

\(^1\) This name can also be read Sîstân.

\(^2\) In § 2 it is also called Zariâ, but in Zamyâd Yt. 1 Zerethô and Aredhô-manusha are mentioned as neighbouring mountains. The word ‘great’ is omitted in M6.

\(^3\) That is, around the ranges of Albûrs, Apârsên, and Mânûr.

\(^4\) Perhaps intended for the Erezishô of Zamyâd Yt. 2. The description would apply to any of the mountains near Nîsâpûr.

\(^5\) This name is omitted in the MSS., but is taken from § 2 as suggested by Justi. Perhaps it may be connected with ‘the country of Sênî’ (Chap. XV, 29), which is explained as being Kînîstân, probably the land of Samarkand, which place was formerly called Kîn, according to a passage in some MSS. of Tabari’s Chronicle, quoted in Ouseley’s Oriental Geography, p. 298.

\(^6\) Not Kaf, nor is it mentioned in the Pahlavi Vend. V, 57, as supposed by Justi; the kâf kôp ârâyad of Spiegel’s edition of the Pahlavi text being a misprint for kâfakô pârâyad, ‘it traverses a fissure’ (see Haug’s Essays, 2nd ed. p. 326, note 2).

The Rêvand mountain is in Khûrásân, on which the Bûrzân fire was established; and its name Rêvand means this, that it is glorious. 19. The Vâdgeân mountain is that which is on the frontier of the Vâdgeânis; that quarter is full of timber and full of trees. 20. The Bakyir mountain is that which Frâsiyâv of Tûr used as a stronghold, and he made his residence within it; and in the days of Yîm a myriad towns and cities were erected on its pleasant and prosperous territory. 21. Mount Kâbed-sîkâf (‘very rugged’)

2 Called Arezûr-bûm in § 2, which name stands for the sixth and seventh mountains, Erezur and Bumyû, in Zamyâd Yt. 2. The land of Arûm was the eastern empire of the Romans.
3 Evidently the mountain range south of the Caspian, now called Albûrz; but whether this actual Albûrz is to be considered a part of the mythic Albûrz is not very clear.
4 The Av. Raêwûs, ‘shining,’ of Zamyâd Yt. 6. It is also called the Ridge of Vîstâsp (see § 34).

8 In § 2 it is Bakyir, which Justi thinks is another name for Mount Dârsêt (‘white poplar’); but the latter name not being repeated here makes this supposition probable.
9 K20 has rûm and Mô has lanman, but both explained by the Pâz. gloss Yîm, which is also the reading of the Pâz. MSS. If the gloss be rejected the most probable translation would be, ‘and in our days Shatrû-rûm (or râmûn), the victorious, erected on it a myriad towns and cities.’

Mount Šyâk-hômand (‘being black’) and Mount Vafar-hômand (‘having snow’), as far as their Kîvûl borders, have grown out of it (Apârsên) towards the direction of Kînô. 23. The Spendedâd mountain is in the circuit (var) of Rêvand. 24. The Kôndrâsp mountain, on the summit of which is Lake Sôvbar, is in the district (or by the town) of Tûs. 25. The Kôndrâs mountain is in Atrân-vêg. 26. The Asnavand mountain is in Âtarô-pâtakân. 27. The Rôyism-hômand (‘having growth’) mountain is that on which vegetation has grown.

6 If the circumflex be used in Pahlavi to indicate not only the consonant d, but also the vowel ê, î when it follows a vowel, as seems probable, this name can be read Kôfrâs; in any case, it is evidently intended for the Av. Kaoirisa in Zamyâd Yt. 6. It is written Kôndras in § 2.

1 This list is evidently intended to include the chief mountains known to the author of the Bundahis, which he could not identify with any of those mentioned in the Avesta.
2 This is the Pâzand reading of the name, on which very little reliance can be placed; the Pahlavi can also be read Dânad, and it may be the Deana mountain, 12,000 feet high, near Kaski-zard.
3 See Chap. XXIX, 9. This volcanic mountain, about 20,000 feet high and near Teheran, still retains this ancient Persian name, meaning ‘wintry.’ It is the chief mountain of the Padashkhvârgar range, which the Bundahis evidently considers as an offshoot of the Apârsên ranges.
4 The present name of a mountain between Nîsâpûr and the desert.
5 The name of a place about midway between Astarâbâd and Nîsâpûr. This mountain is called Migîn in § 29, probably from a place called Mezinan in the same neighbourhood.
it, and it was called 'Come-to-help' by them. 34. The Ganâvâd¹ mountain is likewise there, on the Ridge of Vistâsp (pûst-i Vistâspân)² at the abode of the Bûrzîn-Mitrô fire, nine leagues (parasang) to the west. 35. Râvak Bîsan³ is in Zrâvakâd; this place, some say, is Zravad, some call it Bîsan, some Kalâk; from this the road of two sides of the mountain is down the middle of a fortress; for this reason, that is, because it is there formed, they call Kalâk a fortress; this place they also call within the land of Sarak. 36. Mount Asparôg⁴ is established from the country of Lake Kèkast⁵ unto Pârs. 37. Pâhargar ('the Pâhar range') is in Khûrâsân. 38. Mount Marak⁶ is in Lârân. 39. Mount Zarîn is in Türkistân. 40. Mount Bakht-tan⁷ is in Spâhân.

41. The rest, apart from this enumeration, which they reckon as fostering hills of the country in the religion of the Mazdayasnians, are the small hills, those which have grown piecemeal in places.

wide-formed is the ocean that the water of a thousand lakes is held by it, such as the source Arêdvivsûr\(^1\), which some say is the fountain lake. 2. Every particular lake is of a particular kind\(^2\); some are great, and some are small; some are so large that a man with a horse might compass them around in forty days\(^3\), which is 1700 leagues (parasang) in extent.

3. Through the warmth and clearness of the water, purifying more than other waters, everything continually flows from the source Arêdvivsûr. 4. At the south of Mount Albûrz a hundred thousand golden channels are there formed, and that water goes with warmth and clearness, through the channels, on to Hûgar the lofty\(^4\); on the summit of that mountain is a lake\(^5\); into that lake it flows, becomes quite purified, and comes back through a different golden channel. 5. At the height of a thousand men an open golden branch from that channel is connected with Mount Aûsimdôm\(^6\) amid the wide-formed ocean; from there one portion flows forth to the ocean for the purification of the sea, and one portion drizzles in moisture upon the whole of this earth, and all the creations of Aûharmazd acquire direction of the south limit of Albûrz, and possesses one-third of this earth.'

6. Of the salt seas three are principal, and twenty-three are small. 7. Of the three which are principal, one is the Pūṭik, one the Kamrūd, and one the Sahī-būn. 8. Of all three the Pūṭik\(^1\) is the largest, in which is a flow and ebb, on the same side as the wide-formed ocean, and it is joined to the wide-formed ocean. 9. Amid this wide-formed ocean, on the Pūṭik side, it has a sea which they call the Gulf (var) of Satavēs\(^2\). 10. Thick and salt the stench\(^3\) wishes to go from the sea Pūṭik to the wide-formed ocean; with a mighty high wind therefrom, the Gulf of Satavēs drives away whatever is stench, and whatever is pure and clean goes into the wide-formed ocean and the source Arēdvīvsūr; and that flows back a second time to Pūṭik\(^4\). 11. The control\(^5\) of this sea (the Pūṭik) is connected with the moon and wind; it comes again and goes down, in increase and decrease, because of her revolving.

\(^2\) So called from the constellation Satavēs (§ 12), see Chap. II, 7. The details given in the text are applicable to the Gulf and Sea of Umān, the Arabian Sea of Europeans. The description of this Gulf, given in the Pahl. Vend. V, 57, which is rather obscure, is as follows: 'In purification the impurities flow, in the purity of water, from the sea Pūṭik into the wide-formed ocean; at the southernmost side the water stands back in mist, and the blue body of Satavēs stands back around it. Pūṭik stands out from the side of Satavēs, this is where it is. From which side it stands is not clear to me. The water comes to Satavēs through the bottom; some say that it traverses a fissure.'

\(^3\) Perhaps a better reading would be stūrg sūr-i gōndakīh, 'the intense saltiness which is stench.' The author appears to have had some vague idea of the monsoon.

12. The control of the Gulf of Satavēs is attached to the constellation Satavēs, in whose protection are the seas of the southern quarter, just as those on the northern side are in the protection of Haptōk-ring. 13. Concerning the flow and ebb it is said, that everywhere from the presence of the moon two winds continually blow, whose abode is in the Gulf of Satavēs; one they call the down-draught, and one the up-draught; when the up-draught blows it is the flow, and when the down-draught blows it is the ebb. 14. In the other seas there is nothing of the nature of a revolution of the moon therein, and there are no flow and ebb. 15. The sea of Kamrūd is that which they pass by, in the north, in Taparīstān; that of Sāhl-būn is in Arūm.
16. Of the small seas that which was most whole-

3 This is not a confused attempt to explain the tides as the effect of the land and sea breezes, as might be suspected at first, but is a reasonable conclusion from imaginary facts. Assuming that the wind always blows eastward and westward from the moon, it follows that as the moon rises an easterly wind must blow, which may be supposed to drive the flood tide westward into the Persian Gulf; until the moon passes the meridian, when the wind, changing to the west, ought to drive the ebb tide eastward out of the Gulf, thus accounting for one flow and ebb every day, dependent on the position of the moon.
4 Evidently the Caspian, which lies north of Taparīstān, a province including part of Māzendarān.
5 Or perhaps Gāhl-būn, meaning probably the Mediterranean or Euxine, if not both of them; the author appears merely to have heard of the existence of such a sea in Asia Minor (Arūm). In the Selections of Zād-sparam, VI, 14, it is called Gēhān-būn.

When the renovation of the universe occurs it will again become sweet\textsuperscript{3}.

CHAPTER XIV.

1. On the nature of the five classes of animals (gôspênd) it says in revelation, that, when the primeval ox passed away\textsuperscript{4}, there where the marrow came out grain grew up\textsuperscript{5} of fifty and five species, and twelve\textsuperscript{6} species of medicinal plants grew; as it says, that out of the marrow is every separate creature, every single thing whose lodgment is in the marrow. 2. From the horns arose peas (mîgûk),

3. The seed of the ox was carried up to the moon station\textsuperscript{3}; there it was thoroughly purified, \textit{and} produced the manifold species of animals\textsuperscript{4}. 4. First, two oxen, one male and one female, and, afterwards, one pair of every single species was let go into the earth, \textit{and} was discernible in Atrān-ヴég for a Hāsar (‘mile’), which is like a Parasang (‘league’)\textsuperscript{5}; as it says, that, on account of the valuableness of the ox, it was created twice, one time as an ox, and one time as the manifold species of animals. 5. A thousand days and nights they were without eating, and first water and afterwards herbage (aûrvar) were devoured by them.

6. And, afterwards, the three classes (kârdak) of animals were produced therefrom, as it says that first were the goat and sheep, and then the camel

\textsuperscript{2} Reading dîl; but the word may also be read sar, ‘the head,’ or jigar, ‘the liver.’
\textsuperscript{3} See Chap. X, 2.
\textsuperscript{4} This translation suits both text and context very well, but gôspend pûr-sardak is evidently intended for the Av. gâûs pouru-saredhô, ‘the ox of many species,’ of Mâh.Yt. o, 7, and Srîrâz. r2.
\textsuperscript{5} Reading mûn aê parasang humânâk; if 3 be read for aê the translation must be, ‘three of which are like a Parasang,’ for a Hâsar cannot be equal to three Parasangs (see Chaps. XVI, 7, and XXVI). The phrase in the text probably means merely that a Hâsar is a measure for long distances, just as a Parasang is.
and swine, and then the horse and ass. 7. For, first, those suitable for grazing were created therefrom, those are now kept in the valley (lāf); the second created were those of the hill summits (sar-i dēz)¹, which are wide-travellers, and habits (nihādak) are not taught to them by hand; the third created were those dwelling in the water.

8. As for the genera (khadūţnak), the first genus is that which has the foot cloven in two, and is suitable for grazing; of which a camel larger than a horse is small and new-born. 9. The second genus is ass-footed, of which the swift² horse is the largest, and the ass the least. 10. The third genus is that of the five-dividing paw, of which the dog is the largest, and the civet-cat the least. 11. The fourth genus is the flying, of which the griffon of three natures³ is the largest, and the chaffinch ⁴ the least. 12. The fifth genus is that of the water, of which the Kar fish ⁵ is the largest, and the Nemadu ⁶ the least.

two hundred and eighty-two species (sardak). 14. First are five species of goat, the ass-goat, the milch-goat, the mountain-goat, the fawn, and the common goat. 15. Second, five species of sheep, that with a tail, that which has no tail, the dog-sheep, the wether, and the Kûrisk sheep, a sheep whose horn is great; it possesses a grandeur like unto a horse, and they use it mostly for a steed (bâra), as it is said that Mânûslihar kept a Kûrisk as a steed. 16. Third, two species of camel, the mountain one and that suitable for grazing; for one is fit to keep in the mountain, and one in the plain; they are one-humped and two-humped. 17. Fourth, fifteen species of ox, the white, mud-coloured, red, yellow, black, and dappled, the elk, the buffalo, the camel-leopard ox, the fish-chewing ox, the Fars ox, the Kâgau, and other species of ox. 18. Fifth, eight species of horse, the Arab, the Persian, the mule, the ass, the wild ass (gôr), the hippopotamus (asp-i âvi), and other species of horse. 19. Sixth, ten species of dog, the shepherd's dog, the village-dog which is the house-protector, the blood-hound, the slender hound, the water-

5 Transcribing the Pâz. mâhi khu ushân into Pahlavi it may be read mähîkân-khâvshân (khâshân?).
6 Instead of these first three species M6 has 'the white, black, yellow, bay, and chestnut.' K2o omits 'the ass' by mistake.
7 These first four species are the Av. pasus-haurvô, vis-haurvô, vôhunazgô, and taurunô of Vend. V, 92–98, XIII, 21, 26–74, 117, 164, 165.

Seventh, five species of the black \(^4\) hare; two are wild species, one dwelling in a burrow \(^5\) and one dwelling in the jungle. 21. Eighth, eight species of weasel; one the marten, one the black marten, the squirrel, the Bez ermine \(^6\), the white ermine, and other species of weasel. 22. Ninth, eight species of musk animals; one that which is recognised by its musk \(^7\), one

\(^2\) The word indra has usually been taken as a Pâz. misreading of the Pahl. aūdrak (Av. udra, ‘otter,’ of Vend. XIII, 48, 167, 169, XIV, 2), but this would be more probably read āandra. The Pahl. sūgar, ‘porcupine,’ is just as likely to be misread indra, and its meaning suits the context better.
\(^3\) The Pâz. āmokhtesn, which is an ungrammatical form, is evidently a misreading of the Pahl. āmūkhtagân.
\(^4\) K20 has seyâ, M6 has zyâgi ēst. Perhaps some old copyist has corrected sîyâk-gōsh into khar-gōsh, and so both the epithets have crept into the text, the word ‘black’ being superfluous.
\(^5\) Reading khan-mânist, the Pâz. khu being an obvious misreading of khan.
\(^6\) The Pâz. bez is written bedh in the Pâzand MS. (the z in M6 being shaped something like dh), and Justi supposes it represents the Arabic abyadh or ba'idhâ, ‘white,’ and is explained by the Pers. sapēd, ‘white,’ which follows; but there is nothing in the text to indicate that the second name is an explanation of the first. It is more probable that bez represents the Pers. bīgād, ‘reddish, rufous, variegated,’ an epithet quite applicable to the ermine in its summer fur.
the musk animal with a bag in which is their pleasant scent, the Bis-musk which eats the Birherb, the black musk which is the enemy of the serpent that is numerous in rivers, and other species of musk animals. 23. Tenth, one hundred and ten species of birds; flying creatures (vey=vâi) such as the griffon bird, the Karsipt, the eagle, the Kahrkâs which they call the vulture, the crow, the Ardâ, the crane, and the tenth is the bat. 24. There are two of them which have milk in the teat and suckle their young, the griffon bird and the bat which flies in the night; as they say that the bat is created of three races (sardak), the race (âyina) of the dog, the bird, and the musk animal; for it flies like a bird, has many teeth like a dog, and is dwelling in holes like a musk-rat. 25. These hundred and ten species of birds are distributed into eight groups (khadûnak), mostly as scattered about as when a man scatters seed, and drops the seed in his fingers to the ground, large, middling, and small. 26. Eleventh, fish were created of ten

4 See Chap. XIX, 25.
5 Counting the ‘flying creatures’ and ‘the vulture’ as distinct species, ‘the bat’ is the tenth. It has been generally supposed that we should read ‘eleventh,’ and consider the bats as an eleventh group, especially as the MSS. call the next group (the fish) the ‘twelfth;’ but this view is contradicted by the remarks about the bats being mingled with those about the birds, and also by Zâd-saram in his Selections, Chap. IX, 14 (see App. to Bund.), not mentioning any group of bats among the other animals.
6 All the MSS. have ‘twelfth,’ but they give no ‘eleventh’ nor ‘thirteenth,’ though they have ‘fourteenth’ in § 29. These irre-

28. Of the dog they say that out of the star station, that is, away from the direction of the constellation Haptok-ring, was given to him further by a stage (yogist) than to men, on account of his protection of sheep, and as associating with sheep and men; for this the dog is purposely adapted, as three more kinds of advantage are given to him than to man, he has his own boots, his own clothing, and may wander about without self-exertion. 29. The twelfth is the sharp-toothed beast of gularities seem to indicate that part of this chapter has been omitted by some old copyist.

1 See Chaps. XVIII, 5, and XXIV, 13.
2 None of these names are found in the portion of the Avesta now extant.
3 K20 alone has 272 (see Chap. X, 3). The actual total number of species mentioned is 186, leaving ninety-six for the 'species within species.' Zad-sparam in his Selections, Chap. IX, 14, differs from the numbers given in the text merely in giving ten species of ox, instead of fifteen; so the total of his details is 181, leaving 101 sub-species to make up his grand total of 282 (see App. to Bund.)
4 A yogist (compare Sans. yogana) was probably from fifteen to sixteen English miles, as it consisted of sixteen hâsar, each of one thousand steps of the two feet (see Chap. XXVI, 1). This sentence seems to imply that on account of the useful qualities of the dog he has a part of the lowermost grade of paradise allotted to him, further from the demon-haunted north than that allotted to the men whose inferior order of merit does not entitle them to enter the higher grades of paradise.

30. Aûharmazd said when the bird Vâresha was created by him, which is a bird of prey, thus: ‘Thou art created by me, O bird Vâresha! so that my vexation may be greater than my satisfaction with thee, for thou doest the will of the evil spirit more than that of me; like the wicked man who did not become satiated with wealth, thou also dost not become satiated with the slaughter of birds; but if thou be not created by me, O bird Vâresha! thou wouldst be created by him, the evil spirit, as a kite with the body of a Varpa, by which no creature would be left alive.’

31. Many animals are created in all these species for this reason, that when one shall be perishing through the evil spirit, one shall remain.

4 These names are merely variants of the Mâshyâ and Mâshyôô of the latter part of this chapter (nom. dual, m. and f., of Av. mashya, ‘mortal’). This is shown by the Pandnâmak-i Zaratûtst, saying: ‘and my human nature is from Matróth and Matróôth, from which first generation and seed from Gâyômard I have sprung.’ And the names are also found in the more Persian forms Maharît and Maharîyôô, from (see the note to § 22). Windischmann considered the meaning to be that ‘they grew up on the day Mitrô of the month Mitrô,’ that is, the sixteenth day of the seventh month of the Parsi year; this is not confirmed, however, by Zâdsparam in his Selections, Chap. X, 4 (see App. to Bund.)

created; it is given into the body that it may produce activity, and the body is created only for activity;’ hence the conclusion is this, that the soul

5. And both of them changed from the shape of a plant into the shape of man, and the breath (niśmô) grown up whose fruit was the ten varieties of man.

6. Aûharmazd spoke to Mashya and Mashyôî thus: ‘You are man, you are the ancestry of the world, and you are created perfect in devotion by me; perform devotedly the duty of the law, think good thoughts, speak good words, do good deeds, and worship no demons!’
7. Both of them first thought this, that one of them should please the other, as he is a man for him; and the first deed done by them was this, when they went out they washed themselves thoroughly; and the first words spoken by them were these, that Aûharmazd created the water and earth, plants and animals, the stars, moon, and sun, and all prosperity whose origin and effect are from the manifestation of righteousness.
8. And, afterwards, antagonism rushed into their minds, and their minds were thoroughly corrupted, and they exclaimed that the evil spirit created the water and earth, plants and animals, and the other things as aforesaid. 9. That false speech was spoken through the will of the demons, and the evil spirit possessed himself of this first enjoyment from them; through that false speech they both became wicked, and their souls are in hell until the future existence.

10. And they had gone thirty days without food, covered with clothing of herbage (giyâh); and after the thirty days they went forth into the wilderness, came to a white-haired goat, and milked the milk from the udder with their mouths. 11. When they had devoured the milk Mâshya said to Mâshyôt thus: ‘My delight was owing to it when I had not devoured the milk, and my delight is more delightful now when it is devoured by my vile body.’

12. That second false speech enhanced the power of the demons, and the taste of the food was taken away by them, so that out of a hundred parts one part remained.

13. Afterwards, in another thirty days and nights they came to a sheep, fat and white-jawed, and they slaughtered it; and fire was extracted by them out of the wood of the lote-plum and box-tree, through the guidance of the heavenly angels, since both woods were most productive of fire for them; and the fire was stimulated by their mouths; and the first fuel kindled by them was dry grass, kendâr, lotos, date palm leaves, and myrtle; and they made a roast of the sheep. 14. And they dropped three handfuls of the meat into the fire, and said: 'This is the share of the fire.' One piece of the rest they tossed to the sky, and said: 'This is the share of the angels.' A bird, the vulture, advanced and carried some of it away from before them, as a dog ate the first meat. 15. And, first, a clothing of skins covered them; afterwards, it is said, woven garments were prepared from a cloth woven in the wilderness. 16. And they dug out a pit in the earth, and iron was obtained by them and beaten out with a stone, and without a forge they beat out a cutting edge from it; and they cut wood with it, and prepared a wooden shelter from the sun (pês-khûr).

1 Reading akhûrisn instead of the khûrisn of all MSS. which is hardly intelligible. Perhaps āv-khûrisn, ‘drinking water,’ ought to be read, as it is alluded to in Chap. XXX, 1.

17. Owing to the gracelessness which they practised, the demons became more oppressive, and they themselves carried on unnatural malice between themselves; they advanced one against the other, and smote and tore their hair and cheeks. 18. Then the demons shouted out of the darkness

thus: 'You are man; worship the demon! so that your demon of malice may repose.' 19. Mâshya went forth and milked a cow's milk, and poured it out towards the northern quarter; through that the demons became more powerful, and owing to them they both became so dry-backed that in fifty winters they had no desire for intercourse, and though they had had intercourse they would have had no children. 20. And on the completion of fifty years the source of desire arose, first in Mâshya and then in Mâshyôî, for Mâshya said to Mâshyôî thus: 'When I see thy shame my desires arise.' Then Mâshyôî spoke thus: 'Brother Mâshya! when I see thy great desire I am also agitated.' 21. Afterwards, it became their mutual wish that the satisfaction of their desires should be accomplished, as they reflected thus: 'Our duty even for those fifty years was this.'

22. From them was born in nine months a pair, male and female; and owing to tenderness for offspring the mother devoured one, and the father one. 23. And, afterwards, Aûharmazd took tenderness for offspring away from them, so that one may nourish a child, and the child may remain.

24. And from them arose seven pairs, male and

2 Or, 'the deliciousness of children' (šîrînîh-î farzand). Justi has, 'owing to an eruption on the children the mother deserted one,' &c.; but the legend of devouring the first children is still more clearly mentioned in the Pahlavi Rivâyat, which forms the first book of the Dâdîstân-i Dînîk (preceding the ninety-two questions and answers to which that name is usually applied) as follows: Maharîh va Maharîyâôîh dûshâram râî nazdistî farzand-i nafsman barâ vastamûnd, 'Mâshya and Mâshyôî, through affection, at first ate up their own offspring.'
female, and each was a brother and sister-wife; and from every one of them, in fifty years, children were born, and they themselves died in a hundred years.

25. Of those seven pairs one was Siyākmak, the name of the man, and Nasāk¹ of the woman; and from them a pair was born, whose names were Fravāk of the man and Fravākāin of the woman.

26. From them fifteen pairs were born, every single pair of whom became a race (sardak); and from them the constant continuance of the generations of the world arose.

27. Owing to the increase (zāyisn) of the whole fifteen races, nine races proceeded on the back of the ox Sarsaok², through the wide-formed ocean, to the other six regions (keshvar), and stayed there; and six races of men remained in Khvaniras.

28. Of those six races the name of the man of one pair was Tâz and of the woman Tâzak, and they went to the plain of the Tâzikān (Arabs); and of one pair Hôshyang³ was the name of the man and Gûzak of the woman, and from them arose the Aîranakân (Iranians); and from one pair the Mâzendarâns⁴ have arisen. 29. Among the number (pavan aë mar) were those who are in the coun-

His usual epithet is parâdhiâta (Pahl. pêš-dâd), which is thus explained in the Pahlavi Vend. XX, 7: 'this early law (pêš-dâdih) was this, that he first set going the law of sovereignty.' For this reason he is considered to be the founder of the earliest, or Pêsdâdian, dynasty. See Chaps. XXXI, 1, XXXIV, 3, 4.

Those, indeed, throughout the seven regions are all from the lineage of Fravâk, son of Siyâkmak, son of Mâshya.

31. As there were ten varieties of man\textsuperscript{5}, and fifteen races from Fravâk, there were twenty-five races all from the seed of Gâyômard; the varieties are such as those of the earth, of the water, the breast-eared, the breast-eyed, the one-legged, those also who have wings like a bat, those of the forest, with tails, and who have hair on the body\textsuperscript{6}.

The country of Tûr was part of the present Turkistân, that of Salm is rightly identified with Arûm (the eastern Roman Empire, or Asia Minor) in the text; the country of Sênî (miswritten Sênd), being identified with Kînîstân, was probably the territory of Samarkand, and may perhaps be connected with Mount Kînô (see Chap. XII, 2, 13); and the land of Dâî must be sought somewhere in the same neighbourhood.

CHAPTER XVI.

1. On the nature of generation it says in revelation, that a woman when she comes out from menstruation, during ten days and nights, when they go near unto her, soon becomes pregnant. 2. When she is cleansed from her menstruation, and when the time for pregnancy has come, always when the seed of the man is the more powerful a son arises from it; when that of the woman is the more powerful, a daughter; when both seeds are equal, twins and triplets. 3. If the male seed comes the sooner, it adds to the female, and she becomes robust; if the female seed comes the sooner, it becomes blood, and the leanness of the female arises therefrom.

4. The female seed is cold and moist, and its flow is from the loins, and the colour is white, red, and yellow; and the male seed is hot and dry, its flow is from the brain of the head, and the colour is white and mud-coloured (hasgûn). 5. All¹ the seed of the females which issues beforehand, takes a place within the womb, and the seed of the males will remain above it, and will fill the space of the womb; whatever refrains therefrom becomes blood again, enters into the veins of the females, and at the time any one is born it becomes milk and for the last three details seem to refer to one variety, the monkeys. The Pārsī MS. of miscellaneous texts, M7 (fol. 120), says, 'The names of the ten species of men are the breast-eyed, the three-eyed, the breast-eared, the elephant-eared, the one-legged, the web-footed, the leopard-headed, the lion-headed, the camel-headed, and the dog-headed.'

nourishes him, as all milk arises from the seed of the males, and the blood is that of the females.

6. These four things, they say, are male, and these female: the sky, metal, wind, and fire are male, and are never otherwise; the water, earth, plants, and fish are female, and are never otherwise; the remaining creation consists of male and female.

7. As regards the fish it says that, at the time of excitement, they go forwards and come back in the water, two and two, the length of a mile (hāsar), which is one-fourth of a league (parasang), in the running water; in that coming and going they then rub their bodies together, and a kind of sweat drops out betwixt them, and both become pregnant.

CHAPTER XVII.

1. On the nature of fire it says in revelation, that fire is produced of five kinds, namely, the fire Berezi-savang, the fire which shoots up before Aū-harmazd the lord; the fire Vohu-fryān, the fire which is in the bodies of men and animals; the fire Urvāzist, the fire which is in plants; the fire

1 K20 has 'the male fish,' which is inconsistent with the preceding sentence.

2 These Avesta names of the five kinds of fire are enumerated in Yas. XVII, 63–67; and the Pahlavi translation of that passage interchanges the attributes ascribed to the first and fifth in the text, thus it calls the first 'the fire of sublime benefit in connection with Varahān (Bahrām).’ See also Selections of Zād-spāram, XI, 1.

3 'The fire of the good diffuser (or offerer), that within the bodies of men' (Pahl. Yas. XVII, 64).

4 'The fire of prosperous (or abundant) life, that within plants' (Pahl. Yas. XVII, 65).
Vāzist\(^1\), the fire which is in a cloud which stands opposed to Spēngargâk in conflict; the fire Spēnist\(^2\), the fire which they keep in use in the world, likewise the fire of Vāhrām\(^3\). 2. Of those five fires one consumes both water and food, as that which is in the bodies of men; one consumes water and consumes no food, as that which is in plants, which live and grow through water; one consumes food and consumes no water, as that which they keep in use in the world, and likewise the fire of Vāhrām; one consumes no water and no food, as the fire Vāzist.

3. The Berezi-savang is that in the earth and mountains and other things, which\(^4\) Āūharmazd created, in the original creation, like three breathing souls (nîsmō); through the watchfulness and protection due to them the world ever develops (vakhshêd).

4. And in the reign of Takhmîrûp\(^5\), when men continually passed, on the back of the ox Sarṣaok\(^6\), from Khvansîras to the other regions, one night

\(^3\) The Bahrām fire, or sacred fire at places of worship.

\(^4\) Mô has min, instead of mûn, which alters the translation, but not the meaning. This appears to be a different account of the fire Berezi-savang to that given in § 1, but it merely implies that it is fire in its spiritual state, and the name can, therefore, be applied to any natural fire which can be attributed to supernatural agency, such as burning springs of petroleum, volcanic eruptions, ignis fatuus, phosphorescence of the sea, &c.

amid the sea the wind rushed upon 1 the fireplace—the fireplace in which the fire was, such as was provided in three places on the back of the ox—which the wind dropped with the fire into the sea; and all those three fires, like three breathing souls, continually shot up in the place and position of the fire on the back of the ox, so that it becomes quite light, and the men pass again through the sea.

5. And in the reign of Yim 2 every duty was performed more fully through the assistance of all those three fires; and the fire Frōbak 3 was established by him at the appointed place (dād-gās) on the Gadman-hōmand (‘glorious’) mountain in Khvārizem 4, which Yim constructed for them; and the glory of Yim saves the fire Frōbak from the hand of Dahāk 5.

6. In the reign of King Vistāsp, upon revelation from the religion 6, it was established, out of Khvārizem, at the Rōshan (‘shining’) mountain in Kāvulistān, the country of Kāvul (Kābul), just as it remains there even now.

7. The fire Gūsasp, until the reign of Kāt-Khūsrōb 7, continually afforded the world protection in the manner aforesaid 8; and when Kāt-Khūsrōb was

8. The fire Bûrzin-Mitrô, until the reign of King Vistâsp, ever assisted, in like manner, in the world, and continually afforded protection; and when the glorified Zarâtûst was introduced to produce confidence in the progress of the religion, King Vistâsp and his offspring were steadfast in the religion of God, and Vistâsp established this fire at the appointed place on Mount Rêvand, where they say the Ridge of Vistâsp (pûst-i Vistâspân) is.

9. All those three fires are the whole body of the fire of Vâhrâm, together with the fire of the world, and those breathing souls are lodged in them; a counterpart of the body of man when it forms in the womb of the mother, and a soul from the spirit-world settles within it, which controls the body while living; when that body dies, the body mingles with the earth, and the soul goes back to the spirit.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1. On the nature of the tree they call Gôkard\(^1\) it says in revelation, that it was the first day when the tree they call Gôkard grew in the deep mud\(^2\) within the wide-formed ocean; and it is necessary as a producer of the renovation of the universe, for they prepare its immortality therefrom. 2. The evil spirit has formed therein, among those which enter as opponents, a lizard\(^3\) as an opponent in that deep water, so that it may injure the Hôm\(^4\). 3. And for keeping away that lizard, Aûharmazd has created there ten Kar fish\(^5\) which, at all times, continually circle around the Hôm, so that the head of one of those fish is continually towards the lizard. 4. And together with the lizard those fish are spiritually fed\(^6\), that is, no food is necessary for them; and till the renovation of the universe they remain in contention. 5. There are places where that fish is written of as ‘the Ariz\textsuperscript{1} of the water;’ as it says that the greatest of the creatures of Aûharmazd is that fish, and the greatest of those proceeding from the evil spirit is that lizard; with the jaws of their bodies, moreover, they snap in two whatever of the creatures of both spirits has entered between them, except that one fish which is the Vâs of Pankâsadvarân\textsuperscript{2}. 6. This, too, is said, that those fish are so serpent-like\textsuperscript{3} in that deep water, they know the scratch (mâlisn) of a needle’s point by which the water shall increase, or by which it is diminishing.

\(^3\) That the writer of the Bundahis applies the term vazagh to a lizard, rather than a frog, appears from the ‘log-like lizard’s body’ of Chap. III, 9.

\(^4\) That is, the Gôkard tree, which is the white Hôm (see Chap. XXVII, 4).

7. Regarding the Vâs of Pankâsadvarân it is declared that it moves within the wide-formed ocean, and its length is as much as what a man, while in a swift race, will walk from dawn till when the sun goes down; so much that it does not itself move\textsuperscript{4} the length of the whole of its great body. 8. This, too, is said, that the creatures of the waters live also specially under its guardianship.

9. The tree of many seeds has grown amid the wide-formed ocean, and in its seed are all plants; some say it is the proper-curing, some the energetic-curing, some the all-curing\textsuperscript{5}.

\textsuperscript{4} Kâo omits the words from ‘walk’ to ‘move.’
\textsuperscript{5} This is the tree of the saêna or Simurgh, as described in Rashnu Yt. 17, and these three epithets are translations of its three titles, hubis, eredhwô-bis, and vîspô-bis. See also Chap. XXVII, 2, 3.
10. Between¹ these trees of such kinds² is formed the mountain with cavities, 9999 thousand myriads in number, each myriad being ten thousand.

II. Unto that mountain is given the protection of the waters, so that water streams forth from there, in the rivulet channels, to the land of the seven regions, as the source of all the sea-water in the land of the seven regions is from there³.

CHAPTER XIX.

1. Regarding the three-legged ass⁴ they say, that it stands amid the wide-formed ocean, and its feet are three, eyes six, mouths⁵ nine, ears two, and horn

³ This description of the mountain seems to identify it with the Ašāšinām mountain of Chaps. XII, 6, and XIII, 5.

position of the hump; with the sharpness of those six eyes it overcomes and destroys.  3. Of the nine mouths three are in the head, three in the hump, and three in the inner part of the flanks; and each mouth is about the size of a cottage, and it is itself as large as Mount Alvand.  4. Each one of the three feet, when it is placed on the ground, is as much as a flock (gir'd) of a thousand sheep comes under when they repose together; and each pastern is so great in its circuit that a thousand men with a thousand horses may pass inside.  5. As for the two ears it is Mâzendarân which they will encompass.  6. The one horn is as it were of gold and hollow, and a thousand branch horns have grown upon it, some befitting a camel, some befitting a horse, some befitting an ox, some befitting an ass, in the Indian ox, and not like that of the camel.

8. When that ass shall hold its neck in the ocean its ears will terrify (asahmēd), and all the water of the wide-formed ocean will shake with agitation, and the side of Ganâvad\(^1\) will tremble (shīvanēd).

9. When it utters a cry all female water-creatures, of the creatures of Aûharmazd, will become pregnant; and all pregnant noxious water-creatures, when they hear that cry, will cast their young.

10. When it stales in the ocean all the sea-water will become purified, which is in the seven regions of the earth—it is even on that account when all asses which come into water stale in the water—as it says thus: 'If, O three-legged ass! you were not created for the water, all the water in the sea would have perished from the contamination which the poison of the evil spirit has brought into its water, through the death of the creatures of Aûharmazd.'

11. Tîstar seizes the water\(^2\) more completely from the ocean with the assistance of the three-legged ass. 12. Of ambergris also (ambar-iē) it is declared, that it is the dung of the three-legged ass; for if it has much spirit food, then also the moisture of the liquid nourishment goes through the veins pertaining to the body into the urine, and the dung is cast away.

13. Of the ox Hadhayôs\(^3\), which they call Sar-saok\(^4\), it says, that in the original creation men passed from region to region upon it, and in the renovation of the universe they prepare Hûsh (the beverage producing immortality) from it. 14. It is said, that life is in the hand of that foremost man, at the end of his years; who has constructed the most defences around this earth, until the renovation of the universe is requisite.

15. Regarding the bird Kâmrûs it says, that it is on the summit of Mount Albûrz; and every three years many come from the non-Iranian districts for booty (gîrd) , by going to bring damage (ziyân) on the Iranian districts, and to effect the devastation of the world; then the angel Bûrg, having come up from the low country of Lake Arag, arouses that very bird Kâmrûs, and it flies upon the loftiest of all the lofty mountains, and picks up all those non-Iranian districts as a bird does corn.

16. Regarding Karsipt they say, that it knew how to speak words, and brought the religion to the enclosure which Yim made, and circulated it; there they utter the Avesta in the language of birds.

1 Transcribing the Pâz. svadyî into Pahlavi we have snatîh, 'term of years.' The whole sentence is very obscure.

XXII, some of the epithets referring to its Avesta equivalent Rangha are more applicable to a lake than to a river, as in Bahram Yt. 29. Possibly the low lands between the Caspian and Aral, or on the shores of the Caspian, are meant.

18. The griffon bird, which is a bat, is noticed (kard) twice in another chapter (babâ).

19. Regarding the bird Ashôzust, which is the bird Zobara-vahman and also the bird Sôk, they say that it has given an Avesta with its tongue; when it speaks the demons tremble at it and take nothing away there; a nail-paring, when it is not prayed over (afsûd), the demons and wizards seize, and like an arrow it shoots at and kills that bird.

20. On this account the bird seizes and devours a nail-paring when it is prayed over, so that the demons may not control its use; when it is not prayed over it does not devour it, and the demons are able to commit an offence with it.

21. Also other beasts and birds are created all in opposition to noxious creatures, as it says, that when the birds and beasts are all in opposition to noxious creatures and wizards, &c. 22. This, too, it says, that of all precious birds the crow (valâgh) is the most precious. 23. Regarding the white falcon it does not mean ‘bird,’ and the Pahlavi translator calls it ‘a quadruped.’ In the Pahl. Visp. I, 1, ‘the Karsipt is the chief of flying creatures,’ and the Bundahis also takes it as a bird (see Chaps. XIV, 23, XXIV, 11).

1 See Chaps. XIV, 11, 23, 24, XXIV, 11, 29.
2 The Av. Ashô-zusta of Vend. XVII, 26, 28.
3 Compare Pers. zûlah, ‘a sparrow or lark.’
4 Compare Pers. sâk, ‘a magpie.’
5 This quotation is evidently left incomplete.
6 The Pahlavi word is ambiguous; it may be read zîl, ‘cheap, common,’ or it may be zagar = yakar, ‘dear, precious,’ but the says, that it kills the serpent with wings. 24. The magpie (kás̲kínak) bird kills the locust, and is created in opposition to it. 25. The Kahrkás, dwelling in decay, which is the vulture, is created for devouring dead matter (nasáš) ; so also are the crow (valák) and the mountain kite.

26. The mountain ox, the mountain goat, the deer, the wild ass, and other beasts devour all snakes. 27. So also, of other animals, dogs are created in opposition to the wolf species, and for securing the protection of sheep; the fox is created in opposition to the demon Khava; the ichneumon is created in opposition to the venomous snake (garzak) and other noxious creatures in burrows; so also the great musk-animal is created in opposition to ravenous intestinal worms (kadák-dának garzak). 28. The hedgehog is created in opposition to the ant which carries off grain, as it says, that the hedgehog, every time that it voids urine into an ant’s nest, will destroy a thousand ants; when the grain-carrier travels over the earth it pro-latter seems most probable, although the crow is perhaps as ‘common’ as it is ‘precious,’ as a scavenger in the East. Singularly enough Pers. arzân is a synonym to both words, as it means both ‘cheap’ and ‘worthy.’

1 The Av. kahrkáša of Vend. III, 66, IX, 181, Âbán Yt. 61, Mihir Yt. 129; its epithet zár ñán-mánész, ‘dwelling in decay,’ is evidently intended as a translation of the Av. zarenumainis, applied to it in Bahram Yt. 33, Din Yt. 13.

2 The text should probably be valák-i šiýáš va sár-i gar, ‘the black crow and the mountain kite,’ which are given as different birds in Sháyast-lá-sháyast, II, 5.

3 Ká o omits the words from this ‘opposition’ to the next one.

4 The mór-i dának-kash is the Av. maoíris dánõ-karshõ of Vend. XIV, 14, XVI, 28, XVIII, 146.
duces a hollow track; when the hedgehog travels over it the track goes away from it, and it becomes level. 29. The water-beaver is created in opposition to the demon which is in the water. 30. The conclusion is this, that, of all beasts and birds and fishes, every one is created in opposition to some noxious creature.

31. Regarding the vulture (karkâs) it says, that, even from his highest flight, he sees when flesh the size of a fist is on the ground; and the scent of musk is created under his wing, so that if, in devouring dead matter, the stench of the dead matter comes out from it, he puts his head back under the wing and is comfortable again. 32. Regarding the Arab horse they say, that if, in a dark night, a single hair occurs on the ground, he sees it.

33. The cock is created in opposition to demons and wizards, co-operating with the dog; as it says in revelation, that, of the creatures of the world, those which are co-operating with Srôsh, in destroying the fiends, are the cock and the dog. 34. This, too, it says, that it would not have been managed if I had not created the shepherd's dog, which is the Pasus-haurva, and the house watchdog, the Vis-haurva; for it says in revelation, that the dog is a destroyer of such a fiend as covetousness, among those which are in the nature (afrîh) of man and of animals. 35. Moreover it says, that, inasmuch as it will destroy all the disobedient, when it barks it will destroy pain; and its flesh and fat are remedies for driving away decay and pain from men.

36. Aûharmand created nothing useless whatever, for all these (kolâ aê) are created for advantage; when one does not understand the reason of them, it is necessary to ask the Dastûr (‘high-priest’), for his five dispositions (khûk) are created in this way that he may continually destroy the fiend (or deceit).

CHAPTER XX.

1. On the nature of rivers it says in revelation, that these two rivers flow forth from the north, part from Albûrz and part from the Albûrz of Aûhar-

1 Or it may be thus: ‘For it says thus: Wherewith will it destroy? When it barks it will destroy the assembly (gîrd) of all the disobedient.’

2 This is the most obvious meaning, but Spiegel (in a note to Windischmann’s Zoroastrische Studien, p. 95) translates both this sentence and the next very differently, so as to harmonize with Vend. XIII, 78, 99.

3 The five dispositions (khîm) of priests are thus detailed in old Pahlavi MSS.: ‘First, innocence; second, discreetness of thoughts, words, and deeds; third, holding the priestly office as that of a very wise and very true-speaking master, who has learned religion attentively and teaches it truly; fourth, celebrating the worship of God (yazdân) with a ritual (nfrang) of rightly spoken words and scriptures known by heart (narm naskîhâ); fifth, remaining day and night propitiatingly in his vocation, struggling with his own resistance (hamêstâr), and, all life long, not turning away from steadfastness in religion, and being energetic in his vocation.’
mazd ¹; one towards the west, that is the Arag ²; and one towards the east, that is the Vēh river. 2. After them eighteen rivers flowed forth from the same source, just as the remaining waters have flowed forth from them in great multitude; as they say that they flowed out so very fast, one from the other, as when a man recites one Ashem-vohû ³ of a series (padisâr). 3. All of those, with the same water, are again mingled with these rivers, that is, the Arag river and Vēh river. 4. Both of them continually circulate through the two extremities of the earth, and pass into the sea; and all the regions feast owing to the discharge (za hâk) of both, which, after both arrive together at the wide-formed ocean, returns to the sources whence they flowed out; as it says in revelation, that just as the light comes in through Albûrz and goes out through Albûrz ⁴, the

² For further details regarding these two semi-mythical rivers see §§ 8, 9.

water also comes out through Albûrz and goes away through Albûrz. 5. This, too, it says, that the spirit of the Arag begged of Aûharma zd thus: 'O first omniscient creative power! from whom the Vêh river begged for the welfare that thou mightest grant, do thou then grant it in my quantity!' 6. The spirit of the Vêh river similarly begged of Aûharma zd for the Arag river; and on account of loving assistance, one towards the other, they flowed forth with equal strength, as before the coming of the destroyer they proceeded without rapids, and when the fiend shall be destroyed they will again be without rapids.

7. Of those eighteen principal rivers, distinct from the Arag river and Vêh river, and the other rivers which flow out from them, I will mention the more famous: the Arag river, the Vêh river, the Diglat river they call also again the Vêh river, the Frât river, the Dâttîk river, the Dargâm river, the Zôndak river, the Harôt river, the Marv river, the Hêtûmand river, the Akhôshir river, the Nâvadâ river, the Zîsmând river, the Khvegand river, the Balkh river, the Mehrvâ river they call the Hendvâ river, the Spêd river, the Rad river which they call also the Koir, the Khvaraê river which they call

1 So in M6, but K2o has, 'First is the propitiation of all kinds.'
2 Literally, 'when they shall destroy the fiend.'
3 For details regarding these rivers see the sequel.
4 The Pâz. Deyrid is evidently a misreading of Pahl. Diglat or Digrat, which occurs in § 12.
5 So in K2o, but M6 (omitting two words) has, 'they call also the Didgar.'
6 No further details are given, in this chapter, about this river, but it seems to be the river Nähvtâk of Chap. XXI, 6, the Nâiftâk of Chap. XXIX, 4, 5.
7 K2o has 'Spend.'
8 Called Tort in § 24.
also the Mesrgân, the Harhaz\textsuperscript{1} river, the Teremet river, the Khvanaídís\textsuperscript{2} river, the Dâraga river, the Kásík river, the \textit{Sëd} \textsuperscript{3} (‘shining’) river Pèdâ-meyan \textit{or} Katru-meyan river \textit{of} Mokarstân.

8. I \textit{will} mention them also a second time: the Arag\textsuperscript{4} river is that of which it is said that it comes out from Albûrz in the land of Sûrâk\textsuperscript{5}, \textit{in} which they call it also the Åmî; it passes on through the land of Spêtòs, which they also call Mersen, and they call it there the river Niv\textsuperscript{6}. 9. The Vêh\textsuperscript{7} river

\textsuperscript{2} Mô has Khvanaínidís, but in K\textsubscript{2\textsuperscript{0}} it is doubtful whether the extra syllable (which is interlined) is intended to be inserted or substituted; the shorter form is, however, more reconcilable with the Pahlavi form of Vendeser in § 29.

\textsuperscript{4} Sometimes written Arang or Arêng, but the nasal is usually omitted; it is the Av. Rangha of Åbân Yt. 63, Rashnu Yt. 18, Râm Yt. 27, which is described more like a lake or sea in Vend. I, 77, Bahram Yt. 29. This semi-mythical river is supposed to encompass a great part of the known world (see Chap. VII, 16), and the Bundahir probably means to trace its course down the Åmû (Oxus) from Sogdiana, across the Caspian, up the Aras (Araxes) or the Kur (Cyrus), through the Euxine and Mediterranean, and up the Nile to the Indian Ocean. The Åmû (Oxus) is also sometimes considered a part of the Vêh river or Indus (see §§ 22, 28).

\textsuperscript{6} The combination of the three names in this clause, as Justi observes, renders it probable that we should read, ‘the land of Egypt,’ which is called Mîsr, and where the river is the Nile. The letter S in Pâz. Spêtós is very like an obsolete form of Av. g, or it may be read as Pahl. ûk or ûg, so the name may originally have been Gpêtös or Ikpêtös; and the Pâz. Nîv, if transcribed into Pahlavi, can also be read Nil.

\textsuperscript{7} The ‘good’ river, which, with the Arag and the ocean, completes passes on in the east, goes through the land of Sind\(^1\), and flows to the sea in Hindūstān, and they call it there the Mehrā\(^2\) river. 10. The sources of the Frāṭ\(^3\) river are from the frontier of Arūm, they feed upon it in Sūristān, and it flows to the Diglat river; and of this Frāṭ it is\(^4\) that they produce irrigation over the land. 11. It is declared that Mānū-skīhar excavated the sources, and cast back the water all to one place, as it says thus: 'I reverence the Frāṭ, full of fish, which Mānū-skīhar excavated for the benefit of his own soul, and he seized the water and gave to drink.' 12. The Diglat\(^6\) river comes out from Salmān\(^7\), and flows to the sea in Khūgistān. 13. The Dāītik\(^8\) river is the river the circuit of the known world, and is evidently identified with the Indus; sometimes it seems also to include the Āmū (Oxus), as Bactria was considered a part of India; thus we find the Balkh and Teremet rivers flowing into the Vēh (see §§ 22, 28).

\(^1\) See § 30.

\(^2\) No doubt the Mehrāvā or Hendvā river of § 7, and the Mihrān of Ouseley's Oriental Geography of the pseudo Ibn 'Haqāq, pp. 148–155, which appears to combine the Satīq and lower Indus. The final n is usually omitted by the Bundahir after ā in Pāzand words. This river is also called Kāsak (see § 30).

\(^3\) The Euphrates, which rises in Armenia (part of the eastern empire of the Romans), traverses Syria, and joins the Tigris.

\(^4\) Or, 'and its convenience is this;' a play upon the words farhat and Frāṭ, which are identical in Pahlavi.

\(^5\) Referring probably to canals for irrigation along the course of the Euphrates.

\(^6\) The Tigris (Arabic Diglat), Hiddekel of Gen. ii. 14, Dan. x. 4, and perhaps the Av. tīghris of Tīstar Yt. 6, 37; misread Dēṭrid in Pāzand.

\(^7\) The country of Salmān (see Chap. XV, 29), son of Frēḏūn (see Chap. XXXI, 9, 10). The name can also be read Dilmān, which is the name of a place in the same neighbourhood.

\(^8\) The Av. Dāītya of Vend. XIX, 5, Aūharmazd Yt. 21, Ābān Yt. 112, Gōx Yt. 29. The 'good dāītya of Airyana-vaēgō' is also which comes out from Afrán-vég, and goes out through the hill-country; of all rivers the noxious creatures in it are most, as it says, that the Dāltāk river is full of noxious creatures. 14. The Dargām river is in Sūde. 15. The Zend² river passes through the mountains of Pangistān, and flows away to the Haro river. 16. The Haro³ river flows out from the Apārsēn range. 17. The Hētūmand⁵ river is in Sagastān, and its sources are from the Apārsēn range; this is distinct from that which Frāstyāv conducted away. 18. The river Akhōshir is in Kūmls⁷. 19. The Zīsmand⁸ river, in the direc-

mentioned in Vend. I, 6, II, 42, 43, Ābān Yt. 17, 104, Rām Yt. 2, but this may not be a river, though the phrase has, no doubt, led to locating the river Dāltāk in Afrán-vég.

tion of Soghd, flows away towards the Khve gand river. 20. The Khve gand river goes on through the midst of Samarkand and Pargâna, and they call it also the river Ashârd. 21. The Marv river, a glorious river in the east, flows out from the Apârsên range. 22. The Balkh river comes out from the Apârsên mountain of Bâmîkân, and flows on to the Vêh river. 23. The Spêd river is in Âtarê-patakân; they say that Dahâk begged a favour here from Aharman and the demons. 24. The Tort river, which they call also the Koir, comes out from 1 This is evidently not the small affluent now called the Khugand, but the great Syr-darya or Iaxartes, which flows through the provinces of Farghânah and Samarkand, past Kokand, Khugand, and Tashkand, into the Aral. The Pâz. Ashârd represents Pahl. Khshârt, or Ashârt (Iaxartes).

2 Or, 'in Khûrâsân.'
3 Bâmian, near—which the river of Balkh has its source.
4 Justi observes that it should be 'the Arag river;' but according to an Armenian writer of the seventh century the Persians called the Oxus the Vêh river, and considered it to be in India, because Buddhists occupied the country on its banks (see Garrez in Journal Asiatique for 1869, pp. 161—198). It would seem, therefore, that the Oxus was sometimes (or in early times) considered a part of the Arag (Araxes), and sometimes (or in later times) a part of the Vêh (Indus).
5 So in Mô, but K2o has 'Spend,' both here and in § 7. The name of this river corresponds with that of the Seôd Rûd, although the position of that river agrees best with the account given of the Dâfûk in § 13.
6 Called Rad in § 7 (by the loss of the first letter of the original Pahlavi name); by its alternative name, Koir, Justi identifies it as the Kûr in Georgia, flowing into the Caspian, or sea of Vergân, the Av. Vehrkâna (Hyrcania) of Vend. I, 42, which is Gûrgân in Pahlavi.
the sea of Gîklân\textsuperscript{1}, and flows to the sea of Vergân\textsuperscript{2}. 25. The Zahâvayi\textsuperscript{3} is the river which comes out from Ātarô-pâtakân, and flows to the sea in Pârs. 26. The sources of the Khvarâe\textsuperscript{4} river are from Spâhân\textsuperscript{5}; it passes on through Khûgîstân, flows forth to the Diglat\textsuperscript{6} river, and in Spâhân they call it the Mesrkân\textsuperscript{7} river. 27. The Harhaz\textsuperscript{8} river is in Tapa-rîstân, and its sources are from Mount Dimâvand. 28. The Teremet\textsuperscript{9} river flows away to the Vêh river. 29. The Vendeses\textsuperscript{10} river is in that part of Pârs which they call Sagastân. 30. The Kâsak\textsuperscript{11} river comes out through a ravine (kâf) in the province of Tûs\textsuperscript{12}, and they call it there the Kasp river; more\textsuperscript{1} Mô has Pâz. Keyâseh, but this is in Sagastân (see Chap. XIII, 16).

\textsuperscript{2} The MSS. have Vergâ, but the final nasal after â is often omitted in Pâzand readings in the Bundahis.

\textsuperscript{3} Not mentioned in § 7. Possibly one of the rivers Zâb, which rise on the borders of Âdarbîgân, flow into the Tigris, and so reach the Persian Gulf, the sea on the coast of Pârs. Or it may be the Shirvân, another affluent of the Tigris, which flows through the district of Zohab.

\textsuperscript{4} The Kuran, upon which the town of Shûstar was founded by one of the early Sasanian kings, who also dug a canal, east of the town, so as to form a loop branch of the river; this canal was called Nahr-i Masrûqân by Oriental geographers (see Rawlinson, Journal Roy. Geogr. Soc. vol. ix. pp. 73–75).

\textsuperscript{6} Miswritten Dayrid in Pâzand (see § 12).

\textsuperscript{7} Written in Pâzand without the final n, as usual. This is the old name of the canal forming the eastern branch of the Kuran at Shûstar; it is now called Âb-i Gargar.

\textsuperscript{8} Flows into the Caspian near Amûl.

\textsuperscript{9} Probably the river which flows into the Âmû (Oxus) at Tar-maz; but, in that case, the Oxus is here again identified with the Vêh (Indus) as in § 22, instead of the Arag (Araxes) as in § 8.

\textsuperscript{10} Called Khvanafdîs, or Khvanaînidîs, in § 7.

over, the river, which is there the Vēh, they call the Kāsak\(^1\); even in Sind they call \(i\) the Kāsak. 31. The Pēdāk-mīyān\(^2\), which is the river Kātru-mīyān, is that which is in Kangdez\(^3\). 32. The Dāraga river is in Atrān-vēg, on the bank (bār) of which was the dwelling of Pūrūshasp, the father of Zarātūst\(^4\). 33. The other innumerable waters and rivers, springs and channels are one in origin with those\(^5\); so in various districts and various places they call them by various names.

34. Regarding Frāsiyāv\(^6\) they say, that a thousand springs were conducted away by him into the sea Kyānsīh\(^7\), suitable for horses, suitable for camels, suitable for oxen, suitable for asses, both great and small\(^8\); and he conducted the spring Zarīnmand (or golden source), which is the Hētūmand\(^9\) river they say, into the same sea; and he conducted the seven navigable waters of the source of the Vakaēni\(^10\) river into the same sea, and made men settle there.

\(^1\) Or, 'this same Vēh river they call there the Kāsak; even in Šēnī they call \(i\) the Kāsak;' Šēnī is apt to be miswritten Šēnd or Šīnd (see Chap. XV, 29).

\(^2\) See § 7. The latter half of both names can also be read māhan, māhū, or mahān. Pēshyōtan, son of Vīstāsp, seems to have taken a surname from this river (see Chap. XXIX, 5).

\(^3\) See Chap. XXIX, 10.

\(^5\) Or, 'are from those as a source.'

\(^6\) The MSS. have 'Pūrūshasp,' but compare § 17 and Chap. XXI, 6. The two names are somewhat alike in Pahlavi writing.

\(^7\) See Chap. XIII, 16.

\(^8\) Compare Chap. XIX, 6. K20 omits the words 'suitable for asses' here.

\(^9\) Another Hētūmand according to § 17. Possibly a dried-up bed of that river.

\(^10\) K20 has Vataēni; \(k\) and \(t\) being much alike in Pāzand. The CHAPTER XXI.

1. In revelation they mention seventeen species of liquid (mayâ), as one liquid resides in plants; second, that which is flowing from the mountains, that is, the rivers; third, that which is rain-water; fourth, that of tanks and other special constructions; fifth, the semen of animals and men; sixth, the urine of animals and men; seventh, the sweat of animals and men; the eighth liquid is that in the skin of animals and men; ninth, the tears of animals and men; tenth, the blood of animals and men; eleventh, the oil in animals and men, a necessary in both worlds; twelfth, the saliva of animals and men, with which they nourish the embryo; the thirteenth is that which is under the bark of plants, as it is said that every bark has a liquid, through which a drop appears on a twig (têkh) when placed four finger-breadths before a fire; fourteenth, the milk of animals and men. 2. All these, through growth, or

'navigable (nâvtâk) waters' may be 'the Nâvadâ river' of § 7, 'the river Nâhvtâk' of Chap. XXI, 6, and Nâvtâk of Chap. XXIX, 4, 5.

1 This chapter is evidently a continuation of the preceding one.

2 Only fourteen are mentioned in the details which follow.

3 Most of these details are derived from the Pahl. Yas. XXXVIII, 7-9, 13, 14; and several varieties of water are also described in Yas. LXVII, 15.

4 This sixth liquid is omitted by K20.

6 K20 omits the word pûs, 'embryo.'

7 The meaning 'bark' for Pâz. ayvan is merely a guess; Anquetil has 'sap' (compare Pers. âvînâ, 'juice'), but this is hardly consistent with the rest of the sentence.

8 See Chap. XXVII, 25.
the body which is formed, mingle again with the rivers, for the body which is formed and the growth are both one.

3. This, too, they say, that of these three rivers, that is, the Arag river, the Marv river, and the Vēh\(^1\) river, the spirits were dissatisfied, so that they would not flow into the world, owing to the defilement of stagnant water (a rmēst) which they beheld, so that they were in tribulation through it until Zaratūst was exhibited to them, whom I (Aûharmazd) will create, who will pour sixfold holy-water (zōr) into it and make it again wholesome; he will preach carefulness\(^2\). 4. This, too, it says, that, of water whose holy-water is more and pollution less, the holy-water has come in excess, and in three years it goes back to the sources\(^3\); that of which the pollution and holy-water have both become equal, arrives back in six years; that of which the pollution is more and holy-water less, arrives back in nine years. 5. So, also, the growth of plants is connected, in this manner, strongly with the root\(^4\); so, likewise, the blessings (āfrīn) which the righteous utter, come back, in this proportion, to themselves.

6. Regarding the river Nāhvṭāk\(^5\) it says, that Frāsiyāv of Tūr conducted it away; and when\(^6\)

CHAPTER XXII.

1. On the nature of lakes it says in revelation, that thus many fountains of waters have come into notice, which they call lakes (var); counterparts of the eyes (khashm) of men are those fountains (khashmak) of waters; such as Lake Kêkast, Lake Sôvbar, Lake Khvârizem\(^3\), Lake Frazdân, Lake Zarînmand, Lake Åsvast, Lake Husru, Lake Satavês, Lake Urvis.

2. I will mention them also a second time: Lake Kêkast\(^4\) is in Ātarû-pâtakân, warm is the water and opposed to harm, so that nothing whatever is living in it; and its source is connected with the wide-formed ocean\(^5\). 3. Lake Sôvbar is in the upper district and country on the summit of the mountain of Tûs\(^6\); as it says, that the Sûû-d-bûhar \(^7\) (‘share of benefit’) is propitious and good from which abound-

Lake Frazdān is in Sagastān; they say, where a generous man, who is righteous, throws anything into it, it receives it; when not righteous, it throws it out again; its source also is connected with the wide-formed ocean. 6. Lake Zarīnmand is in Hamadān.

7. Regarding Lake Āsvast it is declared that the undefiled water which it contains is always constantly flowing into the sea, so bright and copious that one might say that the sun had come into it and looked at Lake Āsvast, into that water which is requisite for restoring the dead in the renovation of the universe. 8. Lake Husru is within fifty

It is said that in Kamîndân is an abyss (zafar), from which everything they throw in always comes back, and it will not receive it unless alive (gânvar); when they throw a living creature into it, it carries it down; men say that a fountain from hell is in it. 11. Lake Urvis is on Hûgar the lofty\(^2\).

2. This, too, they say, that in the reign of Azî Dahâk\(^4\) a young woman was admitted to a demon, and a young man was admitted to a witch (parîk), and on seeing them they had intercourse; owing to that one intercourse the black-skinned negro arose from them. 3. When Frêdûn\(^5\) came to them they fled from the country of Iran, and settled upon the sea-coast; now, through the invasion of the Arabs, they are again diffused through the country of Iran.

1. On the chieftainship of men and animals and every single thing it says in revelation, that first of the human species Gâyômard was produced, brilliant and white, with eyes which looked out for the great one, him who was here the Zaratûstrôtûm (chief high-priest); the chieftainship of all things was from Zaratûst. 2. The black sheep which is fat and white-jawed is the chief of sheep; it was the first of those species created. 4. The camel with white-haired knees and two humps is the chief of camels. 5. First the black-haired ox with yellow knees was created; he is the chief of oxen. 6. First the dazzling white (arûs) horse, with yellow ears, glossy hair, and white eyes, was produced; he is the chief of horses. 7. The white, cat-footed ass is the chief of asses. 8. First of dogs the fair (arûs) dog with yellow hair was produced; he is the chief of dogs. 9. The hare was produced brown

1 So in all MSS., but by reading mûn, 'who,' instead of min, 'from,' we should have, 'him who was here the chief high-priest and chieftainship of all things, who was Zaratûst.' The Pahlavi Visp. I, 1, gives the following list of chiefs: 'The chief of spirits is Aûharmazd, the chief of worldly existences is Zaratûst, the chief of water-creatures is the Kar-fish, the chief of land-animals is the ermine, the chief of flying-creatures is the Karsipt, the chief of the wide-travellers is the . . . , the chief of those suitable for grazing is the ass-goat.'

First of birds the griffon of three natures 1 was created, not for here (this world), for the Karsipt 2 is the chief, which they call the falcon (kark), that which revelation says was brought to the enclosure formed by Yim. 12. First of fur animals the white ermine was produced; he is the chief of fur animals; as it says that it is the white ermine which came unto the assembly of the archangels. 13. The Kar-fish, or Ariz 3, is the chief of the water-creatures. 14. The Dâltîk 4 river is the chief of streams. 15. The Dârâga 5 river is the chief of exalted rivers, for the dwelling of the father of Zaratûst was on its banks 6, and Zaratûst was born there. 16. The hoary forest 7 is the chief of forests. 17. The summer vetch, which they also call ‘pag’ (gâvirs), is the chief of small-seeded grains. 22. The Kûstîk (sacred thread-girdle) is the chief of clothes. 23. The Bâzâyvâna is the chief of seas. 24. Of two men, when they come forward together, the wiser and more truthful is chief.

25. This, too, it says in revelation, that Aûharmazd created the whole material world one abode, so that all may be one; for there is much splendour and glory of industry in the world. 26. Whatsoever he performs, who practises that which is good, is the value of the water of life; since water is not created alike in value, for the undefiled water of Arêdvîvsûr is worth the whole water of the sky and earth of Khvanîras, except the Arag river, created by Aûharmazd. 27. Of trees the myrtle and date, on which model, it is said, trees were formed, are worth all the trees of Khvanîras, except the Gökârd tree\(^1\) with which they restore the dead.

28. Of mountains Mount Apârsên’s beginning is in Sagastân and end in Khûgîstân, some say it is all the mountains of Pârs, and is chief of all mountains except Albûrz. 29. Of birds K’amrûs\(^2\) is chief, who is worth all the birds in Khvanîras, except the griffon of three natures. 30. The conclusion is this, that every one who performs a great duty has then much value.

Chapter XXV.

1. On matters of religion\(^3\) it says in revelation thus: ‘The creatures of the world were created by me complete in three hundred and sixty-five days,’ that is, the six periods of the Gâhanbârs which are completed in a year. 2. It is always necessary first to count the day and afterwards the night, for first the day goes off, and then the night comes on\(^4\). 3. And from the season (gâs) of Mêdôk-shêm\(^5\),

¹ A dispute as to the meaning of this word formed no small part of the Kabîsah controversy, carried on between the leaders of the two rival sects of Parsis in Bombay about fifty years ago. Dastur Edalji Dârâbji, the high-priest of the predominant sect (who adhered to the traditional calendar of the Indian Parsis), insisted that it meant ‘solar,’ or ‘belonging to the calendar rectified for solar time by the intercalation of a month every 120 years;’ Mullâ Firûz, the high-priest of the new sect (who had adopted the calendar of the Persian Parsis, which is one month in advance of the other), asserted that the word had no connection with intercalation, but meant ‘commencing,’ or ‘pertaining to New-year’s day,’ as translated into Sanskrit, by Nêryôsang, in Mkh. XLIX, 27. Anquetil translates it either as ‘inclusive’ or ‘complete;’ Windischmann simply skips it over; and Justi translates it everywhere as ‘inclusive.’ Dastur Edalji reads the word vehîgakî or vehîgak; Nêryôsanghas vaheza; Mullâ Firûz reads náîkakîk in the Bundahis, but vehîgakîk in the Dînkarâd, where the word also occurs; Justi has náîkakîk. The meaning ‘inclusive’ suits the context in nearly all cases in the Bundahis, but not elsewhere; if it had that meaning the most probable reading would be vikhêgakîk or nikhêgakîk, ‘arising, leaping over, including.’ It is nearly always used in connection with dates or periods of time, and must be some epithet of a very general character, not only applicable to intercalary periods, but also to New-year’s day and dates in general; something like the Arabic epithet mubârak, ‘fortunate,’ so commonly used in Persian dates. Dastur Edalji compares it with Pers. bîhrâk or bîhtarâk, ‘intercalary month,’ which is probably a corruption of it; and this suggests veh, ‘good,’ as one component of the epithet. The word may be read veh-ya sakîk, ‘for reverencing the good,’ but as veh, ‘good,’ is an adjective, this would be an irregular form; a more probable reading is veh-îkakîk, ‘for anything good,’ which, when applied to a day, or any period of time, would imply that it is suitable for anything good, that is, it is ‘auspicious.’ Sometimes the word is written vehîkak, vehîkakîk, or vehîlîk; and epithets of similar forms in Pahlavi are applied by the writers of colophons to themselves, but these should be read vakhêzak or nîzîvak, ‘lowly, abject.’

  \item[2] The word \textit{kah-āft} is merely a hybrid Huzvārīs form of \textit{kahist}, 'shortest,' which occurs in the next phrase.
  \item[3] This statement must be considered merely as an approximation. The longest day is twice the length of the shortest one in latitude $49^\circ$, that is, north of Paris, Vienna, and Odessa, if the length of the day be computed from sunrise to sunset; and, if twilight be included, it is necessary to go still further north. In Ādarbīgān, the northern province of Persia, the longest day is about $14\frac{1}{2}$ hours from sunrise to sunset, and the shortest is about $9\frac{1}{2}$ hours.
  \item[4] According to this passage a hāsar of time is one hour and twenty minutes; it is the Av. hāthrā of the Farhang-i Oīm-khadūk (p. 43, ed. Hoshangji), which says, 'of twelve Hāsars is the longest day, \textit{and} the day \textit{and} night in which is the longest day are twelve of the longest Hāsars, eighteen of the medium, and twenty-four of the least—an enumeration of the several measures of the Hāsar.' For the hāsar measure of land, see Chap. XXVI.

7. As from the auspicious day Aûharmazd of the month Fravardin to the auspicious day Anîrån of the month Mitrå ¹ is the summer of seven months, so from the auspicious day Aûharmazd of the month Âvân to the auspicious month Spendarmad, on to the end of the five supplementary days ², is the winter of five months. 8. The priest fulfils the regulation (vakar) about a corpse and other things, by this calculation as to summer and winter. 9. In those seven months ³ of summer the periods (gâs) of the days and nights are five—since one celebrates the Rapitvîn—namely, the period of daybreak is Hâvan, the period of midday is Rapitvîn, the period of afternoon is Aûzêrîn, when the appearance of the stars has come into the sky ⁴ until midnight is the period of Aîbîsrûtêm, from midnight until the stars become imperceptible is the period of Aûshahîn ⁵. 10. In winter are four periods, for from daybreak till Aûzêrîn is all Hâvan, and the rest as I have said; and the reason of it is this, that the appearance ⁶ of winter is in the direction of the vernal equinox, according to the Bundahis. Later writings assert that it commemorates the creation of man.

² That is, from the first day of the eighth month to the last of the five Gâtha days, which are added to the twelfth month to complete the year of 365 days.
³ All MSS. have ‘five months’ here.
⁴ K20 has ‘when the stars have come into sight.’
⁵ The Avesta names of the five Gâhs are Hâvani, Rapithwina, Uzayêrina, Aiwisrûthrema, and Ushahina.

north, where the regions Vôrûbarst and Vôrûgarst are; the original dwelling of summer, too, is in the south, where the regions Fradadafsh and Vidradafsh are; on the day Aûharmazd of the auspicious month Ávân the winter acquires strength and enters into the world, and the spirit of Rapitvín goes from above-ground to below-ground, where the spring (khânî) of waters is, and diffuses warmth and moisture in the water, and so many roots of trees do not wither with cold and drought. 11. And on the auspicious day Átarô of the month Din the winter arrives, with much cold, at Airân-vég; and until the end, in the auspicious month Spendarmâd, winter advances through the whole world; on this account they kindle a fire everywhere on the day Átarô of the month Din, and it forms an indication that winter has come. 12. In those five months the water of springs and conduits is all warm, for Rapitvín keeps warmth and moisture there, and one does not celebrate the period of Rapitvín. 13. As the day Aûharmazd of the month Fravardin advances it diminishes the strength which winter possesses, and summer comes in from its own original dwelling, and receives strength and dominion. 14. Rapitvín comes up from below-ground, and ripens the fruit of the trees; on this account

1 See Chaps. V, 8, XI, 3. The north, being opposed to the south or midday quarter, is opposed to the midday period of Rapitvín, which, therefore, disappears as winter approaches from the north.

2 If, instead of khânî for khânîk, 'spring,' we read ahû-i, 'lord of,' the translation will be, 'so that the angel of waters may diffuse,' &c.

4 That is, warmer than the air, as it is cooler in summer.
the water of springs is cold in summer, for Raptvín is not there; and those seven months one celebrates the Rapitvín, and summer advances through the whole earth. 15. And yet in the direction of Hindústán, there where the original dwelling of summer is nearer, it is always neither cold nor hot; for in the season which is the dominion of summer, the rain always dispels most of the heat, and it does not become perceptible; in the winter rain does not fall, and the cold does not become very perceptible. 16. In the northern direction, where the preparation of winter is, it is always cold; for in the summer mostly, on account of the more oppressive winter there, it is not possible so to dispel the cold that one might make it quite warm. 17. In the middle localities the cold of winter and heat of summer both come on vehemently.

18. Again, the year dependent on the revolving moon is not equal to the computed year on this account, for the moon returns one time in twenty-nine, and one time in thirty days, and there are four

2 K2o has 'six,' and M6 'five,' instead of 'seven.'
3 This is a fairly accurate account of the effect of the monsoons over the greater part of India, as understood by a foreigner unacquainted with the different state of matters in a large portion of the Madras provinces.
4 M6 has khúrasán instead of árayís, 'preparation,' which alters the sense into 'that is, Khúrasán, of which the winter is always cold.'
5 The MSS. have the Huzvâris term for 'month,' which is sometimes used, by mistake, for 'moon.' It is doubtful which word the author intended to use here, but it is usual to count the days of a lunar month from the first actual appearance of the new moon, which usually occurs a full day after the change of the moon.
hours (zamân) more than such a one of its years; as it says, that every one deceives where they speak about the moon (or month), except when they say that it comes twice in sixty days. 19. Whoever keeps the year by the revolution of the moon mingles summer with winter and winter with summer.

20. This, too, it says, that the auspicious month Fravardîn, the month Ardavahîst, and the month Horvadad are spring; the month Tir, the month Amerôdad, and the month Shatvairô are summer; the month Mitrô, the month Âvân, and the month Atarô are autumn; the month Dîn, the month Vohûman, and the month Spendarmad are winter. 21. And the sun comes from the sign (khûr daḵ) of Aries, into which it proceeded in the beginning, back to that same place in three hundred and sixty-five days and six short times (hours), which are one year. 22. As every three months it (the sun) advances through three constellations, more or less, the moon comes, in a hundred and eighty days, back to the place out of which it travelled in the beginning.

1 Meaning, probably, that the lunar year is four hours more than twelve months of 29 and 30 days each, alternately. It should be 8 hours, 48 minutes, and 37 seconds. The sentence seems defective, but it is evident from § 21 that zamân means 'hour.'

2 That is, the lunar year being eleven days shorter than the solar one, its months are constantly retrograding through the seasons.

3 Generally written Avardâd in Pâzand, and Khurdâd in Persian.

4 The names of the months are selected from the names of the days of the month (see Chap. XXVII, 24), but are arranged in a totally different order.

1. A Hāsar\(^1\) on the ground is a Parasang of one thousand steps of the two feet. 2. A Parasang\(^2\) is a measure as much as a far-seeing man may look out, see a beast of burden, and make known that it is black or white. 3. And the measure of a man is eight medium spans\(^3\).

equinox is to be looked for in the same quarter as the new moon nearest the vernal equinox, the moon’s declination being nearly the same in both cases.

\(^1\) Av. hāthra of Vend. II, 65, VIII, 280, 287, 291, Tātār Yt. 23, 29. The statements regarding the length of a Hāsar are rather perplexing, for we are told that it ‘is like a Parasang’ (Chap. XIV, 4), that ‘the length of a Hāsar is one-fourth of a Parasang’ (Chap. XVI, 7), and that ‘a medium Hāsar on the ground, which they also call a Parasang, is a thousand steps of the two feet when walking with propriety’ (Farhang-i ʿOǐm-khadûk, ed. Hosh. p. 42). To reconcile these statements we must conclude that the Hāsar is like a Parasang merely in the sense of being a long measure of distance, that it is really the mille passus or mile of the Romans, and that it is a quarter of the actual Parasang. At the same time, as it was usual to call a Hāsar by the name of a Parasang, we are often left in doubt whether a mile or a league is meant, when a Hāsar or Parasang is mentioned. The Farhang-i ʿOǐm-khadûk (p. 41) also mentions other measures of distance, such as the taḵar (Av. taḵara) of two Hāsars, the asvāst (or aḵast) of four Hāsars, the dashmēst (Av. dakhshmaiti) of eight Hāsars, and the yōgēst (Av. yigaiasti or yugaiasti) of sixteen Hāsars.

\(^3\) Reading vitast-i miyānak instead of vitast damānak. The Farhang-i ʿOǐm-khadûk (p. 41) mentions three kinds of spans, the Av. vitasti (Vend. VIII, 243, 245, XVII, 13) of twelve finger-breadths (āṅgūst), or about 9 inches, which is a full span between the thumb and little finger (the one mentioned in the text); the Av. dīrti (Vend. XVII, 13) of ten finger-breadths, or about 7\(\frac{1}{2}\) inches, which is a span between the thumb and middle finger; and the

1. On the nature of plants it says in revelation, that, before the coming of the destroyer, vegetation had no thorn and bark about it; and, afterwards, when the destroyer came, it became coated with bark and thorny\(^1\), for antagonism mingled with every single thing; owing to that cause vegetation is also much mixed with poison, like Bis the height of hemp (kand)\(^2\), that is poisonous, for men when they eat it die.

Av. uzasti (Pahl. lâlâ-ast) of eight finger-breadths, or about 6 inches, which is a span between the thumb and fore-finger. Other measures mentioned by the same authority are the pât (Av. padha, Vend. IX, 15, 20, 29), ‘foot,’ of fourteen finger-breadths, or about 10½ inches; the gâm (Av. gâya, Vend. III, 57, &c.), ‘step,’ which in the Vendîdâd is three pât, or about 2 feet 7½ inches, ‘and in other places is said to be two frârâst’ (Av. frârâthni in Vend. VII, 76, 79, 87); so the frârâst, which is probably the distance from the neck to the extended elbow, is half a gâm, or from 15 to 16 inches. Two other measures are mentioned in Vend. VII, 79, 87, 90, IX, 8, the Av. frâbâzu, ‘fore-arm or cubit’ from elbow to finger-ends, which is about 18 inches (or it may be a half fathom); and Av. vîbâzu, which is probably the ‘fathom,’ or extent of the two arms out-stretched, from 5½ to 6 feet.

\(^1\) M6 has ‘poisonous,’ but is evidently copied from an original almost illegible in some places.

\(^2\) Perhaps ‘hemp the height of Bis’ would better express the Pahlavi words, but Bis (Napellus Moysis) is often mentioned as a poisonous plant. The phrase may also be translated ‘like Bis and tall hemp.’

plants, and a hundred thousand species among ordinary plants have grown from all these seeds of the tree opposed to harm\(^1\), the many-seeded, which has grown in the wide-formed ocean. 3. When the seeds of all these plants, with those from the primeval ox, have arisen upon it, every year the bird\(^2\) strips that tree and mingle all the seeds in the water; Tistar seizes them with the rain-water and rains them on to all regions. 4. Near to that tree, the white Hôm, the healing and undeviled, has grown at the source of the water of Arêdvîvsûr\(^3\); every one who eats it becomes immortal, and they call it the Gôkard\(^4\) tree, as it is said that Hôm is expelling death\(^5\); also in the renovation of the universe they prepare its immortality therefrom\(^6\); and it is the chief of plants\(^7\).

5. These are as many genera of plants as exist: trees and shrubs, fruit-trees, corn, flowers, aromatic herbs, salads, spices, grass, wild plants, medicinal plants, gum plants, and all producing oil, dyes, and clothing. 6. I will mention them also a second time: all whose fruit is not welcome as food of men, and are perennial (sâlvar), as the cypress, the plane, the white poplar, the box, and others of this genus, they call trees and shrubs (dâr va dirakht). 7. The produce of everything welcome as food of men, that is perennial, as the date, the myrtle, the lote-plum, the grape, the quince, the apple, the citron, the pomegranate, the peach, the fig, the walnut, the almond, and others in this genus, they call fruit (mîvak). 8. Whatever requires labour with the spade, and is perennial, they call a shrub (dirakht). 9. Whatever requires that they take its crop through labour, and its root withers away, such as wheat, barley, grain, various kinds of pulse, vetches, and others of this genus, they call corn (gûrdâk).

\(^2\) The apparently contradictory account in Chap. IX, 2, refers only to the first production of material plants from their spiritual or ideal representative. The bird here mentioned is Kamrôs (see Chaps. XIX, 15, XXIV, 29), as appears from the following passage (Mkh. LXII, 40–42): 'And the bird Kamrôs for ever sits in that vicinity; and his work is this, that he collects that seed which sheds from the tree of all seeds, which is opposed to harm, and conveys it there where Tistar seizes the water, so that Tistar may seize the water with that seed of all kinds, and may rain it on the world with the rain.'

10. Every plant with fragrant leaves, which is cultivated by the hand-labour of men, and is perennial (hamvâr), they call an aromatic herb (siparam). 11. Whatever sweet-scented blossom arises at various seasons through the hand-labour of men, or has a perennial root and blossoms in its season with new shoots and sweet-scented blossoms, as the rose, the narcissus, the jasmine, the dog-rose (nêstarûn),

1 Comparing this list with the subsequent repetition it appears probable that hamâk barâ is a corruption of aesam bôd (see §§ 19, 21), and that we ought to read 'gum plants, woods, scents, and plants for oil, dyes, and clothing.' M6 has 'oil and dyes for clothing.'

2 The kûnâr (see Chap. XV, 13).

3 The Pâz. pêhani (which is omitted in K20) is evidently a mis-reading of Pahl. pashang, 'a hoe-like spade.'

4 M6 adds Pâz. gavina (Pahl. gûnâk) to gûd gûd mungân, without altering the meaning materially.
the tulip, the colocynth (kavastik), the pandanus (kēdī), the kamba, the ox-eye (hērī), the crocus, the swallow-wort (zarda), the violet, the kārda, and others of this genus, they call a flower (gūl).

12. Everything whose sweet-scented fruit, or sweet-scented blossom, arises in its season, without the hand-labour of men, they call a wild plant (vahār or nihāl). 13. Whatever is welcome as food of cattle and beasts of burden they call grass (giyāh).

14. Whatever enters into cakes (pēs-pārakthā) they call spices (āvzārīhā). 15. Whatever is welcome in eating of bread, as torn shoots of the coriander, water-cress (kakīg), the leek, and others of this genus, they call salad (tērak). 16. Whatever is like spinning cotton, and others of this genus, they call clothing plants (gāmak).

17. Whatever lentil is greasy, as sesame, dūshdāng, hemp, zandak, and others of this genus, they call an oil-seed (rōkanō). 18. Whatever one can dye clothing with, as saffron, sapan-wood, zākava, vaha, and others of this genus, they call a dye-plant (rag).

19. Whatever root, or gum, or wood is scented, as frankincense\(^1\), var\(\text{āst}\)\(^2\), kust, sandal-wood, cardamom\(^3\), camphor, orange-scented mint, and others of this genus, they call a scent (b\(\text{ōd}\)).

20. Whatever stickiness comes out from plants\(^4\) they call gummy (z\(\text{ādak}\)). 21. The timber which proceeds from the trees, when it is either dry or wet, they call wood (k\(\text{ībā}\)). 22. Every one of all these plants which is so, they call medicinal (d\(\text{ārūk}\))\(^5\).

23. The principal fruits are of thirty kinds (k\(\text{ḥadūnak}\)), and ten species (s\(\text{ārdak}\)) of them are fit to eat inside and outside, as the fig, the apple, the quince, the citron, the grape, the mulberry, the pear, and others of this kind; ten are fit to eat outside, but not fit to eat inside, as the date, the peach, the white apricot, and others of this kind; those which are fit to eat inside, but not fit to eat outside, are the walnut, the almond, the pomegranate, the cocoa-nut\(^6\), the filbert\(^7\), the chestnut\(^8\), the pistachio nut, the var\(\text{gān}\), and whatever else of this description are very remarkable.

\(^2\) Synonymous with the Ardavahist of Chap. I, 26.

\(^3\) Anquetil, Windischmann, and Justi have 'the poppy.'

\(^4\) Mô has Pâz. lg as only the first part of the word, and Justi translates it by 'red lac,' which is not a plant. Transcribing the Pâzand into Pahlavi, perhaps the nearest probable word is rand, 'laurel.'

\(^5\) Mô has Pâz. mèrn; Anquetil has 'vine blossom,' and is followed by Windischmann and Justi, but the word is very uncertain.

\(^6\) The remainder of this chapter is lost from K20.

\(^7\) This female angel is also called Arshisang (see Chap. XXII, 4).

\(^8\) See § 4.

\(^9\) Mô leaves a blank space for the name of the flower; perhaps it is the marv-i Ardashîrân.
Anîrán has this Hôm of the angel Hôm¹, of three kinds.

On the evil-doing of Aharman and the demons it says in revelation, that the evil which the evil spirit has produced for the creation of Aûharma zd it is possible to tell by this winter⁴; and his body is that of a lizard (vazagh)⁵ whose place is filth (kâkê). 2. He does not think, nor speak, nor act for the welfare (nadûkîh) of the creatures of Aûharma zd; and his business is unmercifulness and the destruction of this welfare, so that the creatures which Aûharma zh shall increase he will destroy; and his eyesight (êashm miêisn)⁶ does not refrain from doing the creatures harm. 3. ³ Chaps. XXVIII, XXIX, and XXXI are omitted in M6 and all MSS. descended from it, whether Pahlavi or Pîzand; and, owing to the loss of a folio from K20 before any of its extant copies were written, the first quarter of Chap. XXVIII has hitherto been missing, but is here supplied (enclosed in brackets) from TD, a MS. belonging to Mobad Tahmuras DINshaw (see Introduction).

since a creature was created by us, I, who am Aûharmazd, have not rested at ease, on account of providing protection for my own creatures; and likewise not even he, the evil spirit, on account of contriving evil for the creatures.' 4. And by their devotion to witchcraft (yâtûk-dînôîh) he seduces mankind into affection for himself and disaffection to Aûharmazd¹, so that they forsake the religion of Aûharmazd, and practise that of Aharman. 5. He casts this into the thoughts of men, that this religion of Aûharmazd is nought, and it is not necessary to be steadfast in it. 6. Whoever gives that man anything, in whose law (dâd) this saying is established, then the evil spirit is propitiating by him, that is, he has acted by his pleasure.

7. The business of Akôman² is this, that he gave vile thoughts and discord to the creatures. 8. The business of the demon Andar is this, that he constrains the thoughts of the creatures from deeds of virtue, just like a leader who has well-constrained (sardâr-i khûp afsârdô); and he casts this into the thoughts of men, that it is not necessary to have the sacred shirt and thread-girdle. 9. The business of the demon Sâvar³, that is a leader of the demons, is this, that is, misgovernment, oppressive anarchy, and drunkenness. 10. The business of the demon Nâlkîyas⁴ is this, that he gives discontent to the creatures; as it says, that should this one

The demon Taprêv is he who mingles poison with plants and creatures; as it says thus: ‘Taprêv the frustrater, and Zàtrîk the maker of poison.’ 12. All those six, it is said, are arch-fiends of the demons; the rest are cooperating and confederate with them. 13. \textsuperscript{1} TD has ‘there were seven powers of Aêshm.’
\textsuperscript{2} TD has ‘six,’ which looks like an unlucky attempt to amend a correct text. Tradition tells us that only five Kayân}s reigned (see Chap. XXXIV, 7), and the Shâhnâmah also mentions Siyâwush (Pahl. Kal-Stiêvakhsh), who did not reign; but eight Kayân}s, besides Lôharâsp and Vistâsp, who were of collateral descent (see Chap. XXXI, 28), are mentioned in the Avesta, whence the author of the Bundahis would obtain much of his information (see Fravardin Yt. 132, Zamyâd Yt. 71, 74).

Kîshmak ² is he who makes disastrous (vażandak), and also causes the whirlwind ³ which passes over for disturbance. 25. The demon Varenô ⁴ is he who causes illicit intercourse, as it says thus: 'Varenô the defiling (alâî).’ 26. The demon Bûshâsp ⁵ is she who causes slothfulness; Ség is the fiend (drûg) who causes annihilation; and the demon Nîyâz is he who causes distress.

27. The demon Âz ⁶ (‘greediness’) is he who swallows everything, and when, through destitution, nothing has come he eats himself; he is that fiendishness which, although the whole wealth of the world be given up to it, does not fill up and is not satisfied; as it says, that the eye of the covetous is a noose (gamand), and in it the world is nought.

The demon of the malignant eye (sûr-khashmîh) is he who will spoil anything which men see, when they do not say 'in the name of God' (yazdân).

37. With every one of them are many demons and fiends co-operating, to specify whom a second time would be tedious; demons, too, who are furies (khashmakân), are in great multitude it is said. 38. ² Here written Aspengarôgâ, but see Chaps. VII, 12, XVII, 1. He is the Av. Spengaghra of Vend. XIX, 135, and, being a demon, is not to be confounded with the demon-worshipper, Spîngauruska, of Gôr Yt. 31, Ashi Yt. 51.
³ The 'evil spirit,' Ganrâk-maînôk, seems to be here treated as a demon distinct from Aharman, which is inconsistent with what is stated in §§ 1–6, and is contrary to general opinion. This inconsistency would indicate the possibility of this continuation of Chap. XXVIII in TD, or a portion of it, having been added by an editor in later times (although it is difficult to discover any difference of style in the language), if we did not find a similar confusion of the two names in Chap. XXX, 29, 30.
his wish is this, that is: 'Do not ask about me, and do not understand me! for if ye ask about and understand me, ye will not come after me.' 41. This, too, it says, that the evil spirit remains at the distance of a cry, even at the cry of a three-year-old cock (kûlêng), even at the cry of an ass, even at the cry of a righteous man when one strikes him involuntarily and he utters a cry. 42. The demon Kûndak is he who is the steed (bârak) of wizards.

43. Various new demons arise from the various new sins the creatures may commit, and are produced for such purposes; who make even those planets rush on which are in the celestial sphere, and they stand very numerously in the conflict. 44. Their ringleaders (kamârîkân) are those seven planets, the head and tail of Gûkîhar, and Mûspar.

1 Compare Mkh. XL, 24–28: 'The one wish that Hûrmên, the lord, desires from men is this, that "ye shall understand me (Hûrmên), since every one who shall understand me comes after me, and strives for my satisfaction." And the one wish that Ahriman desires from men is this, that "ye shall not understand me (Ahriman), since whoever shall understand me wicked, his actions proceed not after me, and, moreover, no advantage and friendship come to me from that man."

2 The sentence is rather obscure, but it seems to imply that such cries keep the evil spirit at a distance; it is, however, just possible that it means that the cry of the evil spirit can be heard as far as such cries.

4 TD has Gûk-ûhar and Mûs-parîk here, but see Chap. V, i, where these beings are included among the seven planetary leaders, and not counted in addition to them. This is another inconsistency which leads to the suspicion that this continuation of the chapter may have been written by a later hand. According to this later view, the sun and moon must be included among those malevolent orbs, the planets.
provided with a tail, which are ten. 45. And by them these ten worldly creations, that is, the sky, water, earth, vegetation, animals, metals, wind, light, fire, and mankind, are corrupted with all this vileness; and from them calamity, captivity, disease, death, and other evils and corruptions ever come to water, vegetation, and the other creations which exist in the world, owing to the fiendishness of those ten. 46. They whom I have enumerated are furnished with the assistance and crafty (afzâr-hômand) nature of Aharman.

47. Regarding the cold, dry, stony, and dark interior of mysterious (târîk dên afrâg-pêdâk) hell it says, that the darkness is fit to grasp with the hand, and the stench is fit to cut with a knife; and if they inflict the punishment of a thousand men within a single span, they (the men) think in this way, that they are alone; and the loneliness is worse than its punishment. 48. And its connection (band) is with the seven planets, be it through much cold like Saturn (Kêvân), or through much heat like Aharman; and their food is brimstone (gandak), and of succulents the lizard (va-zâgh), and other evil and wretchedness (patyân).]

1 Compare Mkh. VII, 31: 'and always their darkness is such-like as though it be possible to grasp with the hand.'

2 Compare Ardâ-Virâf-nâmâk (LIV, 5–8): 'As close as the ear to the eye, and as many as the hairs on the mane of a horse, so close and many in number, the souls of the wicked stand, but they see not, and hear no sound, one from the other; every one thinks thus, "I am alone."'

3 Or, 'with more cold than Saturn.'
Chapter XXIX.

1. On [the spiritual chieftainship of the regions of the earth] it says in revelation, that every one of those six chieftainships has one spiritual chief; as the chief of Arzah is Ashâshagahâd-ê Hvândân, the chief of Savah is Hoazarôdathhri-hanâ Parêst-yarô, the chief of Frâdâdafsh is Spîtôd-i Âûspô-sînân, [the chief of Vîdâdafsh is Aîriz-râsp Aûspô-sînân,] the chief of Vôrûbarst is Huvâsp, the chief of Vôrûgarst is Kakhrvâk. 2. Zaratûst is

1 For this chapter, which is numbered XXX by previous translators, we have to depend only on K20 and TD (see the note on the heading of Chap. XXVIII); and the words enclosed in brackets are supplied from TD, being either illegible or omitted in K20.

2 Perhaps ‘patriarchate’ or ‘episcopate’ would be a better translation of ra’dîh, and ‘patriarch’ or ‘bishop’ of ra’d, in this chapter, as the chief high-priest (dastûr-i dastûrân) and his office are evidently meant by these words.

3 Of the six other regions, distinct from this one of Khvanîras, see Chap. XI, 2–4.

4 TD has Ashashâq,hd-ê aîgh Nêvandân; both MSS. giving these names in a barbarous Pâzand form which cannot be relied on. Perhaps this Dastûr is the Av. Ashâvanghu Bivandangha of Fravardin Yt. 110.

5 TD has Hôazarôkakhhr-hanâ Parêstyrô, all in Pâzand in both MSS., except Huz. hanâ, which stands for Pâz. ê, here used for the idhâfât i. Perhaps this Dastûr is the Av. Garô-danghu Pairîstîra of Fravardin Yt. 110.

6 So in TD; K20 has Pâz. Spaitanid-i Huspâsnyân. This Dastûr is, no doubt, the Av. (gen.) Spîtôis Uspâsnaos of Fravardin Yt. 121.

7 Omitted in K20, but, no doubt, this Dastûr is the Av. Erez-râsp Uspâsnu of Fravardin Yt. 121.

8 Av. Hvaspa of Fravardin Yt. 122.

9 So in both MSS. As in the case of each of the preceding two pair of regions, two consecutive names of Dastûrs have been taken from the Fravardin Yast, it may be supposed that the names spiritual chief of the region of Khvanîras, and also of all the regions; he is chief of the world of the righteous, and it is said that the whole religion was received by them from Zaratûst 1.

3. In the region of Khvanîras are many places, from which, in this evil time of violent struggling with the adversary, a passage (vidârg) is constructed by the power of the spiritual world (mainôkîh), and one calls them the beaten tracks 2 of Khvanîras.

4. Counterparts of those other regions 3 are such places as Kangdez, the land of Saukavastân, the plain of the Arabs (Tâzikân), the plain of Pêsyânsai, the river Nâlvtâk 4, Aîrân-vêg, the enclosure (var) formed by Yim, and Kasmîr in India 5. 5. And one immortal chief acts in the government of each

1 TD has ‘Zaratûst is chief of this region of Khvanîras, and also of the whole world of the righteous; all chieftainship, also, is from Zaratûst, so that the whole religion,’ &c.

2 Justi has ‘zones, climates,’ but transcribing Pâz. habâvan âhâ back into Pahlavi we have a word which may be read khabânôhâ, pl. of khabân, ‘a trampling-place’ (comp. Pers. khabîdan). TD has khvâbônô-gâs, which has the same meaning.

3 Meaning, probably, that they resemble the six smaller regions in being isolated and difficult of access; in other words, either mythical, or independent of Iranian rule.

4 So in TD, which also omits the second, third, and fourth of these isolated territories. In K2o we might read râd va khûdâk, ‘chief and lord,’ as an epithet of Aîrân-vêg. This river must be the Nâlvtâk of Chap. XXI, 6.

5 Reading Kasmîr-i andar Hindû, but TD has Kasmîr-i andarûnô; perhaps the last word was originally andrânak, in which case we should read ‘the in-Hindû Kasmîr.’
of them; as it says, that Peshyôtanû¹ son of Vis-tâsp, whom they call Kittô-mainô², is in the country of Kangdez³; Aghrêrad⁴ son of Pashang is in the land of Saukavastân⁵, and they call him Gopatshah⁶; Parsadjâ⁷ Hvembya is in the plain of

¹ The Av. Peshôtanu of Vishtâsp Yt. 4, where he is described as free from disease and death. TD has Pêshyôk-tanû. See also Chaps. XXXI, 29, XXXII, 5.
² TD has Kittô-mâônô, and it may be doubted whether the latter portion of the name be derived from Av. mainyu, ‘spirit,’ or maunghô, ‘moon.’ The Dâdistân-i Dînik (Reply 89) calls him ‘Patsháyôtanû who is called from the Kittô-mainô (or miyanô),’ the Katru-miyan river of Chap. XX, 7, 31.
³ See § 10. TD has Kangdez-i bâmîk, ‘Kangdez the splendid.’
⁴ The Av. Aghhâratha Narava of Gôs Yt. 18, 22, Fravardin Yt. 131, Ashi Yt. 38, Zamyând Yt. 77; he is Aghhrâr, brother of Afräsiyâb, in the Shâhnâmâh; see also Chap. XXXI, 15.
⁵ TD has Pahl. Sakistân here, but Sôkapastân in § 13 (the letters ì and p being often much alike in Pahlavi writing). K2o has Páz. Sâvkavatân, Saukâvasta, and Sâvkavastân.
Pēsyânsâl¹, and he is Hvembya for this reason, because they brought him up in a hvemb (‘jar’) for fear of Khashm (‘Wrath’); [Asâm-i² Yamâhurst is in the place which they call the River Nâïvtâk]; the tree opposed to harm³ is in Aîrán-vég; Urvatad-nar⁴ son of Zaratûst is in the enclosure formed by Yim. 6. Regarding them it says, they are those who are immortal, as are Narsiš⁵ son of Vivanghâû, Tûš⁶ son of Nôdar⁷, Gîw⁸ son of Gûdarz, Ibaîraz⁹ the causer of strife, and Ashavazd son of Pourudhâkhst¹⁰; and they will all¹¹ come forth, to the immortal lords of Khvanîras, which name corresponds with the Av. Fradhâkhstî Khunîbya of Fravardin Yt. 138.

² Or it may be read Aêshm-i. This phrase occurs only in TD, but Dâd. (Reply 89) mentions ‘the Avesta Yakhmâyîṣâd, son of the same Fryânô,’ as one of the seven immortal lords of Khvanîras.
⁴ See Chap. XXXII, 5.
⁵ Or Narsâe in TD; K20 has Pâz. Narêî, but see Chap. XXXI, 3, 5.
⁶ Av. Tusa of Âbân Yt. 53, 58, and an Iranian warrior in the Shâhnâmâh.
⁷ Av. Naotara, whose descendants are mentioned in Âbân Yt. 76, 98, Fravardin Yt. 102, Râm Yt. 35.
⁸ Av. Gaêvani of Fravardin Yt. 115 is something like this name of one of the Iranian warriors in the Shâhnâmâh.
⁹ TD has Pâz. Bairazd. Perhaps it is not a name but a Pâzand corruption of Pahl. aêvarz, ‘warrior, trooper’ (traditionally); in which case we should have to read ‘the warrior who was a causer of strife.’
¹⁰ So in TD; K20 has ‘Ashavand son of Porudakhst,’ and Dâd. (Reply 89) mentions ‘Ashavazang son of Pôrûdakhstôîh’ as one of the seven immortal lords of Khvanîras. He is the Av. ‘Ashavazandgîh the Pourudhâkhstîyan’ of Âbân Yt. 72, Fravardin Yt. 112.
assistance of Sōshyans, on the production of the renovation of the universe.

7. Regarding Sām, it says, that he became immortal, but owing to his disregard of the Mazdayasian religion, a Türk whom they call Nihāg wounded him with an arrow, when he was asleep there, in the plain of Pēryānṣaī; and it had brought upon him the unnatural lethargy (būshasp) which overcame him in the midst of the heat. 8. And the glory (far) of ‘heaven stands over him for the purpose that, when Az-i Dahāk becomes unfettered (arasak), he may arise and slay him; and a myriad guardian spirits of the righteous are as a protection to him. 9. Of Dahāk, whom they call Bēvarāsp, this, too, it says, that Frēdūn when he captured Dahāk was not able to kill him, and afterwards confined him in Mount Dimāvand; when he becomes unfettered, Sām arises, and smites and slays him.

10. As to Kangdez, it is in the direction of the east, at many leagues from the bed (var) of the

1 This is not Sām, the grandfather of Rustam, but the Av. Sāma, who appears to have been an ancestor of Keresāspa (see Yas. IX, 30), called Sam, grandfather of Garasāp, in a passage interpolated in some copies of the Shāhnāmah (compare Chap. XXXI, 26, 27). Here, however, it appears from the Bahman Yast (III, 59, 60) that Keresāspa himself is meant, he being called Sāma Keresāspa in Fravardin Yt. 61, 136.

2 It can also be read Nihāv or Niyāg in K20, and Nihāv or Nīhan in TD.

3 TD has ‘as he lay in the midst of the heat.’

4 TD has ‘and the snow (vafar) has settled (nishast) over him.’

7 TD has agvar, ‘above,’ instead of min var, ‘from the bed.’
wide-formed ocean towards that side. 11. The plain of Pésyánsáí is in Kávulistán, as it says, that the most remarkable upland (bálist) in Kávulistán is where Pésyánsáí is; there it is hotter, on the more lofty elevations there is no heat. 12. Airán-vég is in the direction of Ātaró-pátakán. 13. The land of Sáukavastán is on the way from Türkistán to Kínistán, in the direction of the north. 14. [The enclosure] formed by Yím is in the middle of Pârs, in Sruvá; thus, they say, that what Yím formed (Yím-kard) is below Mount Yimakán. 15. Kasmír is in Hindústán.

CHAPTER XXX 6.

1. On the nature of the resurrection and future existence it says in revelation, that, whereas Máshya and Mâshyôt, who grew up from the earth, first fed upon water, then plants, then milk, and then meat, men also, when their time of death has come, first desist from eating meat, then milk, then from

1 Or, ‘the hottest there, through the very lofty elevation, is not heat.’
2 Pers. Ādarbigán.
3 The word var is omitted in K20.
4 TD has Pahl. Srúbák.
5 Or it may be read Damakán, but TD has Kámakán. It can hardly be Dámaghán, as that is a town and district in Khurásán; Justi also suggests the district of Gamagán in Pârs, and thinks Sruvá means ‘cypress wood,’ there being a Salvastán between Shíráz and Fasá.
6 This chapter is found in all MSS., and has been numbered XXXI by former translators.

bread, till when they shall die they always feed upon water. 2. So, likewise, in the millennium of Hûshêdar-mâh, the strength of appetite (âz) will thus diminish, when men will remain three days and nights in superabundance (sîrîh) through one taste of consecrated food. 3. Then they will desist from meat food, and eat vegetables and milk; afterwards, they abstain from milk food and abstain from vegetable food, and are feeding on water; and for ten years before Sôshyans comes they remain without food, and do not die.

4. After Sôshyans comes they prepare the raising of the dead, as it says, that Zaratûst asked of Aûharmazd thus: 'Whence does a body form again, which the wind has carried and the water conveyed (vazîd) and how does the resurrection occur?'

5. Aûharmazd answered thus: 'When through me the sky arose from the substance of the ruby, without columns, on the spiritual support of far-compassed light; when through me the earth arose, which bore the material life, and there is no

1 Reading amat, 'when', instead of mûn, 'which' (see the note on Chap. I, 7).

5 Compare Mkh. IX, 7.
6 All MSS. have min, 'out of,' but translators generally suppose it should be mûn, 'which,' as the meaning of 'brought out of material life' is by no means clear. Perhaps the two phrases might be construed together, thus: 'there is no other maintainer of the worldly creation, brought from the material life, than it.' Windischmann refers to Fravardin Yt. 9.
maintainer of the worldly creation but it; when by me the sun and moon and stars are conducted in the firmament (andār vāl) of luminous bodies; when by me corn was created so that, scattered about in the earth, it grew again and returned with increase; when by me colour\(^1\) of various kinds was created in plants; when by me fire was created in plants and other things\(^2\) without combustion; when by me a son was created and fashioned\(^3\) in the womb of a mother, and the structure (pīsak) severally of the skin, nails, blood, feet, eyes, ears, and other things was produced; when by me legs were created for the water, so that it flows away, and the cloud was created which carries the water of the world and rains there where it has a purpose; when by me the air was created which conveys in one’s eyesight, through the strength of the wind, the lowermost upwards according to its will, and one is not able to grasp it with the hand out-stretched; each one of them, when created by me, was herein more difficult than causing the resurrection, for\(^4\) it is an assistance to me in the resurrection that they exist, but when they were formed it was not forming the future out of the past\(^5\). 6. Observe that when that which was not was then produced, why is it not possible to

\(^1\) Former translators all read rag, ‘vein, pore;’ but it probably stands for rang, ‘colour, dye,’ as in Chap. XXVII, 5, r8.

\(^2\) See Chap. XVII, 1, 2.

\(^3\) Pāz. srahtīd is evidently a misreading of Pahl. sṛṣṭīd, ‘formed, shaped.’ Windischmann compares Fravardin Yt. 11, 22, 28.

\(^4\) Here kīm is the Pāzand of Huz. mamanam, ‘for to me,’ being a different word from the interrogative kīm, ‘why?’ of the next §.

produce again that which was? for at that time one will demand the bone from the spirit of earth, the blood from the water, the hair from the plants, and the life from fire, since they were delivered to them in the original creation.

7. First, the bones of Gâyômard are roused up, then those of Mâshya and Mâshyôt, then those of the rest of mankind; in the fifty-seven years of Sôshyans they prepare all the dead, and all men stand up; whoever is righteous and whoever is wicked, every human creature, they rouse up from the spot where its life departs. 8. Afterwards, when all material living beings assume again their bodies and forms, then they assign (barâ yehabûnd) them a single class. 9. Of the light accompanying (levatman) the sun, one half will be for Gâyômard, and one half will give enlightenment among the rest of men, so that the soul and body will know that this is my father, and this is my mother, and this is my brother, and this is my wife, and these are some other of my nearest relations.

10. Then is the assembly of the Sadvâstarân, where all mankind will stand at this time; in that assembly every one sees his own good deeds and his own evil deeds; and then, in that assembly, a wicked man becomes as conspicuous as a white sheep among those which are black. 11. In that

2 The phrase is obscure, and K20 omits the numeral 'one' (the idhâfat of unity); but the meaning is probably that all former distinctions of class, or caste, are abolished.
3 Windischmann suggests that it may be 'the assembly of Isadvâstar,' the eldest son of Zaratûst (see Chap. XXXII, 5); perhaps supposed to be presided over by him as the first supreme high-priest after Zaratûst's death.
assembly whatever righteous man was friend of a wicked one in the world, and the wicked man complains of him who is righteous, thus: 'Why did he not make me acquainted, when in the world, with the good deeds which he practised himself?' if he who is righteous did not inform him, then it is necessary for him to suffer shame accordingly in that assembly. 12. Afterwards, they set the righteous man apart from the wicked; and then the righteous is for heaven (gardmân), and they cast the wicked back to hell. 13. Three days and nights they inflict punishment bodily in hell, and then he beholds bodily those three days' happiness in heaven. 14. As it says that, on the day when the righteous man is parted from the wicked, the tears of every one, thereupon, run down unto his legs. 15. When, after they set apart a father from his consort (ham-bâz), a brother from his brother, and a friend from

1 In the Ardâ-Virâf-namak (Chap. LXVIII) it is related that Ardâ-Virâf saw the souls of a husband and wife, that of the husband destined for heaven, and that of the wife for hell; but the wife clung to her husband and asked why they should be separated, and he told her it was on account of her neglect of religious duties; whereupon she reproached him for not teaching and chastising her. 'And, afterwards, the man went to heaven and the woman to hell. And owing to the repentance of that woman she was in no other affliction in hell but darkness and stench. And that man sat in the midst of the righteous of heaven in shame, from not converting and not teaching the woman, who might have become virtuous in his keeping.'

2 As an aggravation of his punishment in hell. It has generally been supposed that this last phrase refers to the reward of the righteous man, but this cannot be the case unless akhar be taken in the sense of 'other,' which is unlikely; besides, beholding the happiness of others would be no reward to an Oriental mind.
his friend, they suffer, every one for his own deeds, and weep, the righteous for the wicked, and the wicked about himself; for there may be a father who is righteous and a son wicked, and there may be one brother who is righteous and one wicked. 16. Those for whose peculiar deeds it is appointed, such as Dahák and Frásiyâv of Tûr, and others of this sort, as those deserving death (marg-argânân), undergo a punishment no other men undergo; they call it 'the punishment of the three nights.'

17. Among his producers of the renovation of the universe, those righteous men of whom it is written that they are living, fifteen men and fifteen damsels, will come to the assistance of Sôshyans. 18. As Gôkihar falls in the celestial sphere from a moonbeam on to the earth, the distress of the earth becomes such-like as that of a sheep when a wolf falls upon it. 19. Afterwards, the fire and halo melt the metal of Shatvalrô, in the hills and mountains, and it remains on this earth like a river.

1 According to the Pahlavi Vend.VII, 136 (p. 96, Sp.) it appears that a person who has committed a marg-argân or mortal sin, without performing patît or renunciation of sin thereafter, remains in hell till the future existence, when he is brought out, beheaded three times for each mortal sin unrepented of, and then cast back into hell to undergo the punishment tishrâm khshafnâm ('of the three nights') before he becomes righteous; some say, however, that this punishment is not inflicted for a single mortal sin. This period of three nights' punishment is quite a different matter from the three nights' hovering of the soul about the body after death.

2 See Chap. XXIX, 5, 6. As the text stands in the MSS. it is uncertain whether the fifteen men and fifteen damsels are a portion of these righteous immortals, or an addition to them.

3 Probably a meteor (see Chap. V, r).

4 Reading khîrman; M6 has 'the fire and angel Airman (Av. Airyaman) melt the metal in the hills,' &c.
20. Then all men will pass into that melted metal and will become pure; when one is righteous, then it seems to him just as though he walks continually in warm milk; but when wicked, then it seems to him in such manner as though, in the world, he walks continually in melted metal.

21. Afterwards, with the greatest affection, all men come together, father and son and brother and friend ask one another thus: 'Where has it been these many years, and what was the judgment upon thy soul? hast thou been righteous or wicked?'

22. The first soul the body sees, it enquires of it with those words (gúft). 23. All men become of one voice and administer loud praise to Aûharmazd and the archangels.

24. Aûharmazd completes his work at that time, and the creatures become so that it is not necessary to make any effort about them; and among those by whom the dead are prepared, it is not necessary that any effort be made. 25. Sôshyans, with his assistants, performs a Yazish ceremony in preparing the dead, and they slaughter the ox Hadhayôs in that Yazish; from the fat of that ox and the white Hôm they prepare Hûsh, and give it to all men, and all men become immortal for ever and everlasting. 26. This, too, it says, that whoever has been the size of a man, they restore him then with an age of forty years; they who have been little when not dead, they restore then with an age of fifteen years; and they give every one his wife, and

1 K20 has 'have I'; probably hômanîh, 'hast thou,' was the original reading.
3 See Chap. XXVII, 4.
show him his children with the wife; so they act as now in the world, but there is no begetting of children.

27. Afterwards, Sôshyans and his assistants, by order of the creator Aûharmazd, give every man the reward and recompense suitable to his deeds; this is even the righteous existence (âıt) where it is said that they convey him to paradise (vâhist), and the heaven (garâd'mân) of Aûharmazd takes up the body (kerp) as itself requires; with that assistance he continually advances for ever and everlasting. 28. This, too, it says, that whoever has performed no worship (yâst), and has ordered no Gêtf-kharîd, and has bestowed no clothes as a righteous gift, is naked there; and he performs the worship (yâst) of Aûharmazd, and the heavenly angels provide the use of his clothing.

1 The Sad-dar Bundahîs says that by Gêtf-kharîd 'heaven is purchased in the world, and one's own place brought to hand in heaven.' The Rivâyat of Dastûr Barzû (as quoted in MS. 9 of Bombay University Parsi Collection) gives the following details in Persian: 'To celebrate Gêtf-kharîd it is necessary that two hêrbads (priests) perform the Nâbar, and with each khshnûman which they pray it is fit and necessary that both hêrbads have had the Nâbar; and the first day they recite the Nônabar yâst, and consecrate the Nônabar drôn and the Nônabar âfrîngân which they recite in each Gâh; in the Hâvan Gâh it is necessary to recite fravaranâ (as in Yas. III, 24 W. to end), ahurâhe mazdeu raëvatô (as in Aûharmazd Yt. O, to) frasastayaëka, then Yas. III, 25 W., XVII, 1–55 Sp., ashem vohû thrice, âfrînami khshathryân (as in Afrîngân I, 14, to end). The second day the Srôsh yâst and Srôsh drôn and âfrîngân are to be recited; and the third day it is necessary to recite the Sirôzah yâst, the Sirôzah drôn and âfrîngân dahmân; and it is needful to recite the second and third âfrîngân in each Gâh, and each day to consecrate the barsom and drôn afresh with seven twigs, so that it may not be ineffective.'

2 Pâz. gehân is probably a misreading of Pahl. yazdân, as
29. Afterwards, Aûharmazd seizes on the evil spirit, Vohûman on Akôman, Ashavahist on Andar, Shatvairô on Sâvar, Spendarmad on Tarômat who is Nâûnghas, Horvadat and Amerôdad on Târêv and Zârik, true-speaking on what is evil-speaking, Srôsh on Aeshm. Then two fiends remain at large, Aharman and Âz; Aûharmazd comes to the world, himself the Zôta and Srôsh the Râspî, and holds the Kûstî in his hand;

neither the spirit of the world, nor the spirit of the Gâhs is a likely phrase. It is possible, however, that maînôk gehân is a misreading of min aîvyahân, from the girdle, and we should translate as follows: and out of its girdle (that is, the kûstî of the barsom used in the ceremony) he produces the effect of his clothing.

1 Instead of vakhďûnd, ‘seize on,’ we should probably read vânend, ‘smite,’ as in the parallel passages mentioned below.

2 Compare Zamyâd Yt. 96. Each archangel (see Chap. I, 25, 26) here seizes the arch-fiend (see Chaps. I, 27, XXVIII, 7–12) who is his special opponent.

3 Here written Pâz. Inder. Compare Pahlavi Yas. XLVII, 1: ‘When among the creation, in the future existence, righteousness smites the fiend, Ashavahist smîtes Indar.’

4 Written Nâkahêd in Chap. I, 27, and Nâkîyvas in Chap. XXVIII, 10, where he is described as a distinct demon from Tarômât in XXVIII, 14.

5 Here written Târêv and Zârik.

6 Av. Sraosha, a personification of attentive hearing and obedience, who is said to watch over the world and defend it from the demons, especially at night; see Vend. XVIII, 48, 51, 70, &c., Yas. LVI, Srôsh Yt. Hâdôkht, &c.

7 See Chap. XXVIII, 15–17.

Comparing § 29 with § 30 it is not very clear whether the author of the Bundahis considered Aharman and the evil spirit as the same or different demons; compare also Chap. XXVIII, 1–6 with 40, 41.

9 See Chap. XXVIII, 27.

10 The Zôta is the chief officiating priest in all ceremonies, and the Râspî is the assistant priest.
defeated by the Kûstî¹ formula the resources of the evil spirit and Æz act most impotently, and by the passage through which he rushed into the sky² he runs back to gloom and darkness. 31. Gô̄kîhar³ burns the serpent (mâr)⁴ in the melted metal, and the stench and pollution which were in hell are burned in that metal, and it (hell) becomes quite pure. 32. He (Aûharmazd) sets the vault⁵ into which the evil spirit fled, in that metal; he brings the land of hell back for the enlargement of the world⁶; the renovation arises in the universe by his will, and the world is immortal for ever and everlasting.

33. This, too, it says, that this earth becomes an iceless⁷, slopeless plain⁸; even the mountain⁹,

² See Chap. III, 10–12.
³ See § 18 and Chap. V, 1.
⁴ Probably referring to Æz, which means both 'greediness' and 'serpent.' It is, however, possible to read 'Gô̄kîhar the serpent burns in' &c., and there can be no doubt that Gô̄kîhar is represented as a malevolent being.
⁵ Or, perhaps, 'hiding-place.' Comparing ıt z and M6 together the word seems to be ıt zom, which may be compared with Heb. דִּז 'a vault,' or Chald. נפ 'a porch;' it may, however, be ıt zom, which may be traced to נל 'to conceal.' In the old MSS. it is certainly not shôlman, 'hell,' which is an emendation due to the modern copy in Paris.
⁶ Or, 'to the prosperity of the world.'
⁷ Former translators read aûhîkhar, 'undesfiled,' but this does not suit the Pahlavi orthography so well as anhâsîr, 'iceless' (compare Pers. hasar, khâsâr, or khasâr, 'ice'); cold and ice, being produced by the evil spirit, will disappear with him.
⁸ Pâz. aûmân is a misreading of Pahl. hâmûn, so the reading is aûfîp (compare Pers. sîb) hâmûn. Mountains, being the work of the evil spirit, disappear with him.

whose summit is the support of the Kînvar bridge, they keep down, and it will not exist.

Chapter XXXI

1. Hôshyang² was son of Fravâk, son of Siyâmkak³, son of Mâshya⁴, son of Gâyûmârd. [2. Takhmôrup⁵ was son of Vivanghâû⁶, son of Yanghad⁷, son of Hôshyang. 3. Yim,]⁸ Takhmôrup, Spîtûr⁹, and Narsih⁠¹⁰, whom they also call ‘the Rashñû of Kînô⁠¹¹,'

¹ For this chapter, which is numbered XXXII by previous translators, we have to depend only on K²⁰, TD, and K²⁰b (a fragment evidently derived from the same original as K²⁰ and M⁶, but through some independent line of descent).
² So in K²⁰, but usually Hôshâng (see Chaps. XV, 28, XXXIV, 3, 4).
³ See Chap. XV, 25, 30.
⁴ See Chaps. XV, 2–24, 30, XXXIV, 3.
⁵ Av. Takhmô-urupa of Râm Yt. 11, Zamyâd Yt. 28, Âsîn Zarat. 2; written Tâkhmôrûp in TD, which is the only MS. in which the passage enclosed in brackets is found, the omission of which by K²⁰ was suspected by Windischmann (Zoroastriëche Studien, p. 199). This king is the Tahmûras of the Shâhnâmâh. See also Chaps. XVII, 4, XXXIV, 4.
⁶ Av. Vivanghau of Yas. IX, 11, 20, XXXII, 8, Vend. II, 8, 28, 94, Fravardin Yt. 130, Zamyâd Yt. 35.
⁷ As this Pâzand name or title begins with a medîal y, its initial vowel is probably omitted (see p. 141, note 8).
⁸ Av. Yîma or Yima khshaîta of Vend. II, &c., the Jamshêd of the Shâhnâmâh (see Chaps. XVII, 5, XXXIV, 4).
⁹ Av. Spîtûra of Zamyâd Yt. 46.
¹⁰ Here written Nârsî in K²⁰ and K²⁰b, and Nôshî in TD; but see § 5 and Chap. XXIX, 6. Windischmann suggests that he may be the Av. Aoshnâra purû-ûrâ of Fravardin Yt. 131, Âf. Zarat. 2.
¹¹ An epithet equivalent to ‘the Minos of China;' Rashnû being the angel of justice, who is said to weigh the meritorious deeds of were all brothers. 4. From Yim and Yimak, who was his sister, was born a pair, man and woman, and they became husband and wife together; Mīrak the Āspiyyān and Ztiyānak Zardāhim were their names, and the lineage went on. 5. Spīṯūr was he who, with Dahāk, cut up Yim; Nārsīh lived then also, whom they call Nēsr-gyāvān; they say that such destiny (gādman) is allotted to him, that he shall pass every day in troubles, and shall make all food purified and pure.

6. Dahāk was son of Khrūṭāsp, son of Zāṅtgāv, the departed soul against its sins. Neither word is, however, quite certain, as rashnāk may stand for rasnīk, ‘spear,’ and has also been translated by ‘light’ and ‘hero;’ Kīnō, moreover, was probably not China, but Samarkand (see Chaps. XII. 13, 22, XV. 29).

1 See Chap. XXIII, 1.
2 Av.Āṭhwāna of Ābān. Yt. 33, Gōs Yt. 13, Fravardīn Yt. 131, Zamyād Yt. 36, &c., where it is the family name of Thraētaona, who is said to be a son of Āṭhwyā in Yas. IX, 23, 24. In the text this name seems to be used rather as a title than a patronymic, and in § 7 it appears to be a family surname.
3 As stated in Zamyād Yt. 46.
4 Here written Nārsāk in K20 and K20b, and Nōsīh in TD.
5 TD has ‘together,’ instead of ‘then.’
6 So in K20, but K20b has Narst-gyāvān, and TD has Nōsīh-vīyāvānīk (or nīyāzānīk). Perhaps we may assume the epithet to have been nēgīr-vīyāvānīk (or nīyāzānīk), ‘one with a bewildering (or long) glance.’
7 Justi supposes this clause of the sentence refers to Yim and the disease which attacked his hand. If this be the case it may be translated as follows: ‘they say aḡhash is produced on his hand (gādman), so that,’ &c.; aḡhash being a disease, or evil, mentioned in Vend. XX, 14, 20, 24; compare Chap. XXVIII, 33.
8 Or Az-i Dahāk, the Av. Asī Dahāka, ‘destructive serpent,’ of Yas. IX, 25, Vend. I, 69, Ābān Yt. 29, 34, Bahrām Yt. 40. Zamyād Yt. 46–50. A name applied to a foreign dynasty (probably Semitic) personified as a single king, which conquered the dominions of Yim (see Chap. XXXIV, 5).
son of Viraśang, son of Tāz, son of Fravāk, son of Styākmak; by his mother Dahāk was of Udaī, son of Bayak, son of Tambayak, son of Owokhm, son of Pairi-urvaēśm, son of Gadwithw, son of Drūgāskān, son of the evil spirit.

7. Frēdūn the Āspiyan 7 was son of Pūr-tōrā 8 the Āspiyan, son of Sōk-tōrā 9 the Āspiyan, son of Bōrtōrā the Āspiyan, son of Styāk-tōrā the Āspiyan, son of Spēd-tōrā the Āspiyan, son of Gēfar-tōrā the Āspiyan, son of Ramak-tōrā the Āspiyan, son of

1 For the last three names, see Chap. XV, 25, 28.
2 Pahl. Aūd in TD; compare ‘the demon Uda’ of Chap. XXVIII, 19. The following two names look like ‘fear’ and ‘gloom-fear’, both appropriate names for demons.
3 TD has Pāz. Owōikh; compare Av. aōiwra, ‘a species of nightmare’, observing that r and ṭ are often written alike in Pahlavi.
4 TD and K20b have Pāz. Pairi-urva-urvaēsm, and K20 has Pai-urvaēsm.
5 TD has Pāz. Gawithw.
6 So in TD, but K20 has Pāz. Druž-i ayaskā, and K20b has Drug-i ayaskā. It corresponds to Av. drugaska in Vend. XIX, 139, Vistāsp Yt. 26. This genealogy appears to trace Dahāk’s maternal descent through a series of demons.
7 Av. Thraetaona, son of Āthwyā, but generally called ‘the Āthwyānian’, who slew the destructive serpent (aši dahāka), see Yas. IX, 24, 25, Vend. I, 69, Ābān Yt. 33, 61, Gōs Yt. 13, Fravardin Yt. 131, Bahram Yt. 40, Rām Yt. 23, Ashi Yt. 33, Zamyād Yt. 36, 92, Āf. Zarat. 2. In the Shāhnāmah he is called Ferēdūn son of Abtīn.
8 This name is omitted in K20, but occurs in the other two MSS.; it is a Huzvāris hybrid equivalent to Pāz. Pūr-gau and Av. Pourugau, which is a title of an Āthwyānian in Āf. Zarat. 4, Vistāsp Yt. 2. This genealogy consists almost entirely of such hybrid names, which have a very artificial appearance, though suitable enough for a race of herdsmen, meaning, as they severally do, ‘one with abundant oxen, with useful oxen, with the brown ox, with the black ox, with the white ox, with the fat ox, and with a herd of oxen.’
9 So in TD, but the other two MSS. have Styāk-tōrā, which is probably wrong, as the same name occurs again in this genealogy.
Vanfragheshn⁷ the Āspiyan, son of Yim, son of Vivanghāu; as these, apart from the Āspiyan Pūrtôrā, were ten generations, they every one lived a hundred years, which becomes one thousand years; those thousand years were the evil reign of Dahāk. 8. By the Āspiyan Pūrtôrā was begotten Frēdûn, who exacted vengeance for Yim; together with him² also were the sons Barmayûn and Katayûn, but Frēdûn was fuller of glory than they.

9. By Frēdûn three sons were begotten, Salm and Tûg³ and Aīrīk⁴; and by Aīrīk one son and one pair⁴ were begotten; the names of the couple of sons were Vāntār and Anastokh⁵, and the name of the daughter was Gūzak⁶. 10. Salm and Tûg slew them all, Aīrīk and his happy sons, but Frēdûn kept the daughter in concealment, and from that daughter a daughter was born⁷; they became aware of it, and the mother was slain by them. 11. Frēdûn provided for the daughter⁸, also in concealment, for

² TD has 'as well as him.' K20b omits most of this sentence by mistake.
³ These sons, as Windischmann observes, are not mentioned in the extant Avesta, but their Avesta names, Sairīma, Tūrya or Tūra, and Airya or Airyu, may be gathered from the names of the countries over which they are supposed to have ruled (see Fravardin Yt. 143).
⁴ TD has 'two sons and one daughter.'
⁵ TD has Anītār and Anastabō.
⁶ Or Gūgak, in TD; the other MSS. have Pāz. Ganga here, but Gūzak in § 14; it is identical with the name of Hōshyān's sister and wife in Chap. XV, 28. In the Pāzand Gāmāsp-nāmah the name of Frēdūn's daughter is written Vīrak.
⁷ Reading min zak dūkht dūkht-ī zād, as in K20b and TD; some uncertainty arises here from the words dūkht, 'daughter,' and dvād, 'pair,' being written alike in Pahlavi.
⁸ TD has bartman, 'daughter,' indicating that the word in K20 must be read dūkht, and not dvād, 'pair.'
ten generations, when Mānūš-i Khūrshēd-vinīk was born from his mother, [so called because, as he was born, some of] the light of the sun (khūrshēd) fell upon his nose (vinīk). 12. From Mānūš-i Khūrshēd-vinīk and his sister 2 was Mānūš-khūrnar, and from Mānūš-khūrnar [and his sister] was Mānūškīhar born, 3 by whom Salm and Tūg were slain in revenge for Airīk. 13. By Mānūškīhar were Fris, Nōdar 5, and Dūrāsrōb 6 begotten.

14. Just as Mānūškīhar was of Mānūš-khūrnar, of Mānūš-khūrnāk 7, who was Mām-sozak 8, of Airāk, of Thritak, of Bitak, of Frazūsak, of Zūsak 9, of Fragūzak, of Gūzak, of Airīk, of Frēdūn, so Frāstīyāv 10 was

1 The phrase in brackets occurs only in TD; and the whole passage from ‘vinīk’ to ‘sun’ is omitted in K20, evidently by mistake.

2 TD has ‘from Mānūš and his sister,’ and K20 has ‘from Mānūš-hūkīhar and Mānūš-khūrshēd.’

3 The words in brackets occur only in TD, and K20 has ‘from Mānūš-khūrnar also was Mānūš-khūrnāk, from Mānūš-khūrnāk was Mānūškīhar born,’ but this introduction of an extra generation is not confirmed by the list of names in §14. The term khūrnak (or khūrnak) seems to be merely a transcript of the Avesta word of which khūrshēd-vinīk, ‘sun-nose,’ is a translation. The other term khūrnar can also be read khūrvar, but K20 has Pāz. khvanar. Mānūškīhar is the Av. Manusāithra of Fravardin Yt. 131, where he is styled the Airyavan, or descendant of Airyu (Airīk).

4 TD has ‘and vengeance exacted for Airīk.’

5 See Chap. XXIX, 6.

6 Pāz. Durāsrō, but the Pahlavi form, given in the text, occurs in §31 and Chap. XXXII, 1 in TD, which MS. omits this § by mistake.

7 The same as Mānūš-i khūrshēd-vinīk, as noted above.

8 This Pāzand epithet seems to mean ‘mother-burning,’ and may have some connection with the legend mentioned in §11.

9 TD has mūn am Gūgak, ‘whose mother was Gūgak.’

10 Av. Frangrasyan, the Tūryan, of Yas. XI, 21, Âbān Yt. 41, of Pashang, of Zaēsm, of Tūrak, of Spaēnyasp, of Dūrōshasp, of Tūg, of Frēdūn. 15. He (Frāsīyāv) as well as Karsēvaz, whom they call Kadān, and Aghrērād were all three brothers.

[16] Pashang and Visak were both brothers. 17. By Visak were Pīrān, Hūmān, Sān, and other brothers begotten. 18. By Frāsīyāv were Frasp-i Kūr, Sān, Shēdak, and other sons begotten; and Vispān-fryā, from whom Kāt-Khūsrōb was born, was daughter of Frāsīyāv, and was of the same mother with Frasp-i Kūr. 19. From Frasp-i Kūr were Sūrāk, Astūrk, and other children; and by them were Khvāst-atrikht, Yazdān-atrikht, Yazdān-sarād, Frēh-khūrd, Lā-vaḥāk, and others begotten, a recital of whom would be tedious.

20. By Aghrērād was Gōpatshah begotten. 21. When Frāsīyāv made Mānūshāhr, with the Iranians, captive in the mountain-range (gar) of Padashkh-

Gōr Yt. 18, 22, Ashi Yt. 38, 42, Zamyād Yt. 56–63, 82, 93; called Afrāsiyāb in the Shāhnāmah.

1 Zādām in the Shāhnāmah.

2 Garsāvaz in the Shāhnāmah.

4 See Chap. XXIX, 5.

5 The remainder of this chapter is found only in TD.

6 Pīrān Visah is Afrāsiyāb’s chief general in the Shāhnāmah, and Hūmān and Pīlsam are his brothers.

7 This name is very ambiguous in Pahlavi, as it can be read many other ways.

8 Shēdah in the Shāhnāmah.

9 She is called Farangīs in the Shāhnāmah.

10 The reading of several of these names is more or less uncertain, but the object of the author is evidently to apply opprobrious epithets to all the male descendants of Afrāsiyāb.

11 TD has Gōpat-malkā here, as also in Chap. XXIX, 5, where it is said to be a title of Aghrērād (always written Agrērād in TD).
vår\textsuperscript{1}, and scattered ruin and want among them, Aghrērad begged a favour of God (yazdān), and he obtained the benefit that the army and champions of the Iranians were saved by him from that distress. 22. Frāşliyāv slew Aghrērad for that fault; and Aghrērad, as his recompense, begat such a son as Gōpatshah.

23. Aūzōbō the Tūhmāspian\textsuperscript{2}, Kanak-i Barzist, Arawisanasp, and Vaētand-i Rāghanīd were the three sons and the daughter of Agāimavak\textsuperscript{3}, the son of Nōdar, son of Mānūšētar, who begat Aūzōbō. 24. Kavād\textsuperscript{4} was a child in a waist-cloth (kuspūd'); they abandoned him on a river, and he froze upon the door-sills (kavādakān); Aūzōbō perceived and took him, brought him up, and settled the name of the trembling child.

25. By Kavād was Kaft-Aptīvēh begotten; by Kaft-Aptīvēh were Kaft-Arsh, Kaft-Vyārsh, Kaft-Pisān, and Kaft-Kāūs begotten; by Kaft Kāūs was Siyāvakhsh begotten; by Siyāvakhsh was Kaft-Khūsrō\textsuperscript{5}.

\textsuperscript{1} The mountains south of the Caspian (see Chap. XII, 17).
\textsuperscript{2} Av. Uzava Tūmāspana of Fravardin Yt. 131, called Zav, or Zāb, son of Taimāsp, in the Shāhnāmah.
\textsuperscript{3} None of these names, which TD gives in Pāzand, are to be found in the portion of the Avesta yet extant.
\textsuperscript{4} Av. Kavi Kavāta of Fravardin Yt. 132, Zamyād Yt. 71, called Kaft-Qubād in the Shāhnāmah. There appears to be an attempt, in the text, to derive his name from the ‘door-sill’, on which he is said to have been found.
\textsuperscript{5} The Avesta names of these seven other Kayāns are, respectively, Kavi Alpi-vanghu, Kavi Arshan, Kavi Byārshān, Kavi Pisānangh, Kavi Usadhan, Kavi Šyāvarshān, and Kavi Husravangh (see Fravardin Yt. 132, Zamyād Yt. 71, 74); omitting the third, they are called, respectively, Amīn, Arīs, Pasīn, Kaft-Kāvūs, Siyāvush, and Kaft-Khūsrō in the Shāhnāmah. TD, omitting the first letter, has Šānō for Pisān; it also writes Kaft-Kāvūks and Kaft-Khūsrōvī.
26. Keresâsp¹ and Aûrvakhsh² were both brothers. 27. Athrat³ was son of Sâhm, son of Tûrak, son of Spânyasp, son of Dûrôshasp⁴, son of Tûg, son of Frêdûn. 28. Lôharâsp⁵ was son of Aûzâv⁶, son of Mânûs, son of Kal-Pisîn⁷, son of Kal-Aplîvêh, son of Kal-Kavâd. 29. By Kal-Lôharâsp were Vîstâsp, Zarîr⁸, and other brothers begunnt; by Vîstâsp were Spend-dâd⁹ and Pêshyotanû¹⁰ begunnt; and by Spend-dâd were Vohûman¹¹, Atarô-tarsah, Mîtrô-tarsah, and others begunnt.

30. Artakhshatar descendant of Pâpâk—of whom his mother was daughter—was son of Sâsân¹², son of

¹ Av. Keresâspa of Yas. IX, 31, 36, 39, Vend. I, 36, Âbân Yt. 37, Fravardin Yt. 61, 136, Râm Yt. 27, Zamyâd Yt. 38–44, Âf. Zarat. 3; he is called Garraasp in the Shâhnâmah.
² Av. Urvâkhshaya of Yas. IX, 31, Râm Yt. 28, Âf. Zarat. 3. These brothers were sons of Thrita or Athrat, mentioned in the next §.
³ Av. Thrita of the Sâma race (see Yas. IX, 30, Vend. XX, 11) and father of Keresâspa, whose genealogy is given in a passage interpolated in some copies of the Shâhnâmah as follows: Garrasp, Atrat, Sam, Tûrkg, Sîdasb, Tûr, Jamshêd.
⁴ Written Dûrôshap in TD, both here and in § 14.
⁵ Av. Auvrad-aspa of Âbân Yt. 105, Vîstasp Yt. 34, 46, called Luhrâsp in the Shâhnâmah.
⁶ Reading doubtfu.
⁷ Written Ka-Pisîn here, but he is the same person as Ka-Pisân of § 25; the latter part of the name is written both Pisananagh and Pisina in the Avesta.
⁸ Probably Zargar (being Av. Zairvairi of Âbân Yt. 112, 117, Fravardin Yt. 101), but called Zarîr in the Shâhnâmah.
⁹ Av. Spentô-dâta of Fravardin Yt. 102. Vîstasp Yt. 25, called Isfendiyâr in the Shâhnâmah.
¹⁰ See Chaps. XXIX, 5, XXXII, 5.
¹¹ Called Bahman in the Shâhnâmah, and Ardshîr the Kayânian in Bahman Yt. II, 17; the successor of his grandfather Vîstasp (see Chap. XXXIV, 8).
¹² The text is rather obscure, but the Kârmâmâk of Ardshîr-i Pâpakân states clearly that Ardshîr was son of Sâsân by the Vēh-āśfrīd and 1 Zarir, son of Sāsān, son of Artakhshatar who was the said Vohūman son of Spend-dād.

31. The mother of Kaī-Apisēh was Farhank, daughter of him who is exalted on the heavenly path, Uravad-gāi-frāst, son of Rāk, son of Dūrāsrōb, son of Mānūskihar. 32. This, too, it says, that the glory of Frēdūn settled on the root of a reed (kanyā) in the wide-formed ocean; and Nōktargā, through sorcery, formed a cow for tillage, and begat children there; three years he carried the reeds there, and gave them to the cow, until the glory went on to the cow; he brought the cow, milked her milk, and gave it to his three sons; as their walking was on hoofs, the glory did not go to the sons, but to Farhank. 33. Nōktargā wished to injure Farhank, but Farhank went with the glory away from daughter of Pāpak, a tributary ruler of Pārs under Ardavân, the last of the Askāniyān monarchs.

1 So in the Pahlavi text, which therefore makes Vēh-āśfrīd a woman’s name (like Pers. Beh-āśfrīn); but this is doubtful, as the MSS. often confound va, ‘and,’ and i, ‘son of.’

2 In the Shāhnāmah Farhang is mother of Kaī-Kāvūs. The Pahlavi name can also be read Farānak, the name of the mother of Ferīdūn in the Shāhnāmah.

3 Pāz. vidharg-āfrāstaka, which looks more like an epithet than a name.

4 Or, perhaps, ‘Uravad-gā son of Frāst.’

5 The divine glory which was supposed to accompany all legitimate sovereigns of Iran, from the time of Hōshyang even to that of the Sasanian dynasty; it is the Av. hvarēnangh of the Zamyād Yast, and is said to have fled to the ocean for refuge during the reign of foreign dynasties and wicked kings (see Âbān Yt. 42, Zamyād Yt. 51, 56, 59, 62).

6 The last syllable is so written, in Pāzand, in § 33.

7 Reading hangođanō, ‘to injure,’ instead of khungdanō, which may mean ‘to embrace;’ the difference between the two words being merely the letter f.
the fierce (tīb) father, and made a vow (pātya-stāk) thus: 'I will give my first son to Aūshbām.' 34. Then Aūshbām saved her from the father; and the first son, Kaī-Apivēh, she bore and gave to Aūshbām, was a hero associating with Aūshbām, and travelled in Aūshbām's company.

35. The mother of Aūzōbō was the daughter of Nāmūn the wizard, when Nāmak was with Frāstyāv.

36. And, moreover, together with those begotten by Sām were six children in pairs, male and female; the name of one was Damnāk, of one Khūsrōv, and of one Mārgandāk, and the name of each man and woman together was one. 37. And the name of one besides them was Dastān; he was considered more eminent than they, and Sagānsīh and the southern quarter were given to him; and Avar-shatrō and the governorship were given by him to Avarnak.

38. Of Avar-shatrō this is said, that it is the district of Avarnak, and they offered blessings to Srōsh and Ardavahist in succession; on this account is their possession of horses and possession of arms; and on account of firm religion, purity, and manifest joy, good estimation and extensive fame are greatly

1 This name means 'the dawn;' perhaps it may be identified with Av. Usinemangh or Usenemangh of Fravardin Yt. 113, 140, whose wife Freni may possibly be the Farhank (or Frānak) of the text.
2 So in TD, but it is probably only a variant of Nāmūn.
3 The grandfather of Rustam (see § 41). In the Avesta he is usually called Sāma Keresāspa with the title Nairimanau; while in the Shāhnāmah Sām is son of Nārīmān.
4 Another name for Zāl, the father of Rustam, in the Shāhnāmah.
5 The same as Sagastān.
6 Or, perhaps, 'the upper district.'
among them. 39. To Damnak the governorship of Asturistan was given; sovereignty and arranging the law of sovereignty, wilfulness and the stubborn defects they would bring, were among them. 40. To Sparnak the governorship of Spahan was given; to Khusrav the governorship of Rai was given; to Margandak the kingdom, forest settlements, and mountain settlements of Padashkhvargar were given; where they travel nomadically, and there are the forming of sheep-folds, prolificness, easy procreation, and continual triumph over enemies. 41. From Dastan proceeded Rudastam and Huzavak.

XXXI, 1, 2, 7, 14, to Gâyômard, as follows: Pûrushaspô son of Paltirasp, and Arâspô son of Paltirasp, Urvandasp, Haêkâdasp, Kîkhshnus, Paêtirasp, Hardûn, Harîdár, Spitêmânô, Vâdist, Nayazem, Ragîm, Dûrâsrîb, Mânûskîhar sovereign of Iran, Mânûs-khûnr, Mânûs-khûrnâk, Nêryôsang, Varsêt-dîn, Vîzak, Airyak, Aïthritak, Ibitak, Frâžisak, Zîarak, Frasizak, Izak, Aîrê, Frêdîn lord of Khvanîras, Pûr-tôrâ the Æspîkân, Nêvak-tôrâ the Æspîkân, Sôg-tôrâ the Æspîkân, Gêfar-tôrâ the Æspîkân, Vanôi-fravîn the Æspîkân, Yîm lord of the seven regions, Vîvanghâû, Ayanghâû, Ananghâû, Takhmôrûp, Hôshâng the Pêrdûû, lord of the seven regions, Fravak, Styamak, Mashyô who was Mashyûk, Gâyômard the first man, and father of all mankind in the material world.'

\(^9\) These daughters are the Av. Freni, Thriti, and Pouru-kîsta of Fravardin Yt. 139; the last is also mentioned in Yas. LII, 3.

\(^10\) The following is a summary of the Persian descriptions of the five kinds of marriage, as given in the Rivâyats:—

A pâdshâh ('ruling, or privileged') wife is when a man marries, with the parents' consent, an unbetrothed maiden out of a family, and she and her children remain his in both worlds.

A yūkān or ayūk (‘only child’) wife is an only child, married with the parents’ consent, and her first child belongs to them; after its birth she becomes a pādshāh wife. She is entitled to one-third of her parents’ property for giving up the child.

A satar (‘adopted’) wife is when a man over fifteen years of age dies childless and unmarried, and his relatives provide a maiden with a dowry, and marry her to another man; when half her children belong to the dead man, and half to the living, and she herself is the dead man’s wife in the other world.

A kākar or kākār (‘serving’) wife is a widow who marries again; if she had no children by her first husband she is acting as a satar wife, and half her children by her second husband belong to her first one; and she herself, in any case, belongs to her first husband in the other world.

A khūḍ-sarāf or khūḍ-sarāf (‘self-disposing’) wife is one who marries without her parents’ consent; she inherits no property from her parents until her eldest son has given her as a pādshāh wife to his father.

1 Instead of this sentence the Vagarkard-i Dīnīk (pp. 21, 22) has the following, which appears to rest upon a misinterpretation of the text:—

‘And Zaratūst the righteous had three wives; all three were in the lifetime of Zaratūst, and all three wives were living throughout the lifetime of Zaratūst; the name of one was Hvov, of the second Urvig, of the third Arnig-baredā. And from Urvig, who was a privileged wife, four children were born; one was the son Isad-vāstar, and the three daughters, namely, Frēn, Sṛītak, and Pōrušīst; these four were from Urvig. And from the wife Arnig-baredā two sons were born, one Aūrvart-nar, and the second Khūrshīd-kīhār; and Arnig-baredā was a serving wife, and the name of the former husband of Arnig-baredā was Mitrō-ayār. And from Hvov, who was a privileged wife, were three sons, namely, Hūshēdar, Hūshēdar-māh, and Sōshāns, as it says,’ &c. (as in § 8).

This, too, one knows, that three sons of Zarâtûst, namely, Hûshêdar, Hûshêdar-mâh ¹, and Sôshyans ², were from Hvôv ³; as it says, that Zarâtûst went near unto Hvôv three times, and each time the seed went to the ground; the angel Nêryôsang ⁴ received the brilliance and strength of that seed, delivered it with care to the angel Anâtîd ⁵, and in time will blend it with a mother. 9. ¹ This chapter is found only in TD, where it forms a continuation of the preceding, and affords a means (see §§ 10, 11) for determining the age of the recension of the text contained in that MS. As nearly all the names are written in Pahlavi letters, the pronunciation of many of them is merely a matter of guess.

⁹ Compare Av. Fryânâ of Yas. XLV, 12.

1 This is probably a semi-Huzvāris form of Frashōstar.
2 Perhaps this name should be read along with the next one, so as to give the single Pāzand name Skinas or Skivas.
3 See Chap. XXXII, 1, for the last three generations. According to this genealogy Atarōpād-i Māraspendān was the twenty-third in descent from Mānūšēgar, whereas his contemporary, Bahak (§ 1), was twenty-second in descent from the same.
4 No doubt Mānūšēgar is meant; if not, we must read Mānūš-dūnāmīk in connection with § 5.
5 Here written Nōdar, but see Chaps. XXIX, 6, XXXI, 13.
6 Here written Mard-vēh, but see § 8.
7 Here written Aē-vūkht, but see § 8; it may be Vis-būkht, or Vēs-būkht.
8 The text is amīdar mūnas li agas zerkhūnd Hūmōi dūkht-i Freh-māh-īk aharōb vūkht (dūkht?). We might perhaps read ‘Freh-māh son of Kahārōb-būkht,’ but it seems more probable that §§ 7, 8 should be connected, and that the meaning intended is that Hūmāt was daughter of Freh-māh (of a certain family) and of Pūyīn-shād (of another family); she was also the mother of the editor of that recension of the Bundahir which is contained in TD; but who was his father? The singularly unnecessary repetition of the genealogy of the two brothers, Mitro-akāvīd and Pūyīn-shād, in §§ 6, 8, leads to the suspicion that if the latter

9. All the other Mōbads who have been renowned in the empire (khūdāyth) were from the same family it is said, and were of this race of Mānūš-kīthar. 10. Those Mōbads, likewise, who now exist are all from the same family they assert, and I, too, they boast, whom they call 'the administration of perfect rectitude' (Dādakīh-i Ashūvahistō). 11. Yūdān-Yim son of Vāhrām-shād, son of Zarātūst, Ātarō-pād son of Māraspand, son of Zād-sparham.

were his mother's father, the former was probably his own father or grandfather. Unfortunately the text makes no clear statement on the subject, and § 10 affords further material for guessing otherwise at his name and connections.

1 Compare Chap. XXXII, 4.
2 Reading va līk laband-i karītūnd.
3 This looks more like a complimentary title than a name, and if the editor of the TD recension of the Bundāhīs were the son or grandson of Mitrō-akāvīd (§ 6) we have no means of ascertaining his name; but if he were not descended from Mitrō-akāvīd it is possible that §§ 10, 11 should be read together, and that he was the son of Yūdān-Yim. Now we know, from the heading and colophon of the ninety-two questions and answers on religious subjects which are usually called the Dādīstān-i Dīnīk, and from the colophons of other writings which usually accompany that work, that those answers were composed and certain epistles were written by Mānūš-kīthar, son of Yūdān-Yim, who was high-priest of Pārs and Kirmān in A.Y. 250 (A.D. 881), and apparently a more important personage than his (probably younger) brother Zād-sparham, who is mentioned in § 11 as one of the priests contemporary with the editor of the TD recension. If this editor, therefore, were a son of Yūdān-Yim (which is a possible interpretation of the text) he was most probably this same Mānūš-kīthar, author of the Dādīstān-i Dīnīk (see the Introduction. § 4).

4 The last name is very probably superfluous, Zād-sparham.
having been written twice most likely by mistake. This Āтарō-pād son of Māraspend was probably the one mentioned in the following extract from the old Persian Rivāyat MS., No. 8 of the collection in the Indian Office Library at London (fol. 142 a):—

‘The book Dīnkard which the dastūrs of the religion and the ancients have compiled, likewise the blessed Ādarbād son of Mah-rasend, son of Asavahist of the people of the good religion, in the year three hundred of Yazdagard Shahryār, collected some of the more essential mysteries of the religion as instruction, and of these he formed this book.’ That is, he was the last editor of the Dīnkard, which seems to have remained unrevised since his time, as the present copies have descended from the MS. preserved by his family and first copied in A.Y. 369.

1 Zād-sparham was brother of the author of the Dādistān-i Dīnk;
he was high-priest at Sīrkān in the south, and evidently had access to the Bundahis, of part of which he wrote a paraphrase (see Appendix). His name is usually written Zād-sparam.

2 In the history of the Dīnkard, given at the end of its third book (see Introd. to Farhang-i Oʿīm-khadūk, p. xxxiv), we are told as follows:—

‘After that, the well-meaning Ātarō-pād son of Hēmīd, who was the leader of the people of the good religion, compiled, with the assistance of God, through inquiry, investigation, and much trouble, a new means of producing remembrance of the Mazdayasnian religion.’ He did this, we are further told, by collecting all the decaying literature and perishing traditions into a work ‘like the great original Dīnkard, of a thousand chapters’ (mānāk-i zak rābā būn Dīnō-kartō 1000-darakō). We thus learn from external sources that the group of contemporary priests, mentioned in the text, was actively employed (about A.D. 900) in an attempted revival of the religious literature of the Mazdayasnians, to which we owe either the revision or compilation of such works as the Dīnkard, Dādistān-i Dīnk, and Bundahis.
CHAPTER XXXIV

o. On the reckoning of the years

1. Time was for twelve thousand years; and it says in revelation, that three thousand years was the duration of the spiritual state, where the creatures were unthinking, unmoving, and intangible; and three thousand years was the duration of Gayòmard, with the ox, in the world. 2. As this was six thousand years the series of millennium reigns of Cancer, Leo, and Virgo had elapsed, because it was six thousand years when the millennium reign came to Libra, the adversary rushed in, and Gayòmard lived thirty years in tribulation. 3. After the thirty years Mashya and Mashyot grew up; it was fifty years while they were not wife and husband, and they were ninety-three years together as wife and husband till the time when Hoshyang came.

4. Hoshyang was forty years, Takhmòrup thirty years, Yim till his glory departed six hundred and sixteen years and six months, and after that he was a hundred years in concealment. 5. Then the millennium¹ reign came to Scorpio, and Dahâk² ruled a thousand years. 6. After the millennium reign came to Sagittarius, Frêdûn³ reigned five hundred years; in the same five hundred years of Frêdûn were the twelve years of Afrîk; Mânûškihar⁴ was a hundred and twenty years, and in the same reign of Mânûškihar, when he was in the mountain fastness (dûshkhrâr-gar)⁵, were the twelve years of Frâslâyâv; Zôb⁶ the Tûhmâspian was five years.

7. XXXI, 29, 30, where he is said to have been also called Artakhshatar, which seems to identify him with Artaxerxes Longimanus and his successors down to Artaxerxes Mnemon; so that Hûmâf may perhaps be identified with Parysatis, and Dârâf Kîhar-âsrâdân with Artaxerxes Ochus, as Dârâf Dârâyân must be

2 Sikandar-i Arûmâk, that is, Alexander the Roman (of the eastern or Greek empire), as Pahlavi writers assume.

3 This period is nearly two centuries too short.

4 The actual period of Sasanian rule was 425 years (A.D. 226–651). According to the figures given in the text, the tenth millennium, ruled by Capricornus, must have terminated in the fourth year of the last king, Yazdakard. This agrees substantially with the Bahman Yast, which makes the millennium of Zaratûst expire some time after the reign of Khûsrû Nôshîrvân; probably in the time of Khûsrû Parviz, or some forty years earlier than the fourth year of Yazdakard. According to the text we must now be near the end of the first quarter of the twelfth and last millennium.

They call these memoranda and writings the Selections (kīdakīhā) of Zâd-sparam, son of Yûdân-Yim.

CHAPTER I.

0. In propitiation of the creator Aûharmazd and all the angels—who are the whole of the heavenly and earthly sacred beings (yâzdân)—are the sayings of Herbad Zâd-sparam, son of Yûdân-Yim, who is of the south¹, about the meeting of the beneficent spirit and the evil spirit.

1. It is in scripture thus declared, that light was above and darkness below, and between those two was open space. 2. Aûharmazd was in the light, and Aharman in the darkness²; Aûharmazd was aware of the existence of Aharman and of his coming for strife; Aharman was not aware of the existence of light and of Aûharmazd³. 3. It happened to Aharman, in the gloom and darkness, that he was walking humbly (frō-tanû) on the borders, and meditating other things he came up to the top, and a ray of light was seen by him; and because of its antagonistic nature to him he strove that he might reach it, so that it might also be within his absolute power. 4. And as he came forth to the boundary, accompanied by certain others¹, Aûharmazd came forth to the struggle for keeping Aharman away from His territory; and He did it through pure words, confounding witchcraft, and cast him back to the gloom.

³ Or 'of the light of Aûharmazd' (compare Bund. I, 8, 9).

5. For protection from the fiend (drûg) the spirits rushed in, the spirits of the sky, water, earth, plants, animals, mankind, and fire He had appointed, and they maintained it (the protection) three thousand years. 6. Aharman, also, ever collected means in the gloom; and at the end of the three thousand years he, came back to the boundary, blustered (patistâd), and exclaimed thus: ‘I will smite thee, I will smite the creatures which thou thinkest have produced fame for thee—thou who art the beneficent spirit—I will destroy everything about them.’

7. Aûharmazd answered thus: ‘Thou art not a doer of everything, O fiend²!’

8. And, again, Aharman retorted thus: ‘I will seduce all material life into disaffection to thee and affection to myself³.’

9. Aûharmazd perceived, through the spirit of wisdom, thus: ‘Even the blustering of Aharman is capable of performance, if I do not allow disunion

(lā barīnīnam) during a period of struggle.' 10. And he demanded of him a period for friendship 1, for it was seen by him that Aharman does not rely upon the intervention of any vigorous ones, and the existence of a period is obtaining the benefit of the mutual friendship and just arrangement of both; and he formed it into three periods, each period being three millenniums. 11. Aharman relied upon it, and Aūharmazd perceived that, though it is not possible to have Aharman sent down, ever when he wants he goes back to his own requisite, which is darkness; and from the poison which is much diffused endless strife arises 2.

12. And after the period was appointed by him, he brought forward the Ahūnavar formula 3; and in his Ahūnavar these 4 kinds of benefit were shown:—

13. The first is that, of all things, that is proper which is something declared as the will of Aūharmazd; so that, whereas that is proper which is declared the will of Aūharmazd, where anything exists which is not within the will of Aūharmazd, it is created injurious from the beginning, a sin of a distinct nature. 14. The second is this, that whoever shall do that which is the will of Aūharmazd, his reward and recompense are his own; and of him who shall not do that which is the will of Aūharmazd, the punishment at the bridge 5 owing thereto

2 Or 'the poison of the serpent, which is much diffused, becomes endless strife.'
4 The word ān, 'those,' however, is probably a miswriting of the cipher for 'three.'

is his own; which is shown from this formula; and the reward of doers of good works, the punishment of sinners, and the tales of heaven and hell are from it. 15. Thirdly, it is shown that the sovereignty of Aûhrmazd increases that which is for the poor, and adversity is removed; by which it is shown that there are treasures for the needy one, and treasures are to be his friends; as the intelligent creations are to the unintelligent, so also are the treasures of a wealthy person to a needy one, treasures liberally given which are his own. 16. And the creatures of the trained hand of Aûhrmazd are contending and angry (âr dîk), one with the other, as the renovation of the universe must occur through these three things. 17. That is, first, true religiousness in oneself, and reliance upon a man's original hold on the truly glad tidings (nav-barhâm), that Aûhrmazd is all goodness without vileness, and his will is a will altogether excellent; and Aharman is all vileness without goodness. 18. Secondly, hope of the reward and recompense of good works, serious fear of the bridge and the punishment of crime, strenuous perseverance in good works, and abstaining from sin. 19. Thirdly, the existence of the mutual assistance of the creatures, or along with and owing to mutual assistance, their collective warfare; it is the triumph of warfare over the enemy which is one's own renovation.

1 The MS. has hûman, 'well-meditating,' instead of denman, 'this;' but the two words are much alike in Pahlavi writing.
2 This commentary on the Ahûnavar, or Yathâ-ahû-vairyô formula, is rather clumsily interpolated by Zâd-spam, and is much more elaborate than the usual Pahlavi translation and explanation of this formula, which may be translated as follows:—
20. By this formula he (Aharman) was confounded, and he fell back to the gloom; and Aûhrarmazd produced the creatures bodily for the world; first, the sky; the second, water; the third, earth; the fourth, plants; the fifth, animals; the sixth, mankind. 21. Fire was in all, diffused originally through the six substances, of which it was as much the confiner of each single substance in which it was established, it is said, as an eyelid when they lay one down upon the other.

22. Three thousand years the creatures were possessed of bodies and not walking on their navels; and the sun, moon, and stars stood still. 23. In the mischievous incursion, at the end of the period, Aûhrarmazd observed thus: 'What advantage is there from the creation of a creature, although thirstless, which is unmoving or mischievous?'

'As is the will of the living spirit (as is the will of Aûhrarmazd) so should be the pastor (so excellent should he be) owing to whatsoever are the duties and good works of righteousness (the duties and good works should be as excellent as the will of Aûhrarmazd). Whose is the gift of good thought (that is, the reward and recompense good thought gives, it gives also unto him) which among living spirits is the work of Aûhrarmazd (that is, they would do that which Aûhrarmazd requires); there are some who say it is thus: Whose gift is through good thought (that is, the reward and recompense which they will give to good thought, they would give also unto him); Åtarô-pâd son of Zaratûst said that by the gift of good thought, when among living spirits, they comprehend the doing of deeds. The sovereignty is for Aûhrarmazd (that is, the sovereignty which is his, Aûhrarmazd has kept with advantage), who gives necessaries [or comfort, or clothing] to the poor (that is, they would make intercession for them).

Additional phrases are sometimes inserted, and some words altered, but the above is the usual form of this commentary.

And in aid of the celestial sphere he produced the creature Time (zôrvân)\(^1\); and Time is unrestricted, so that he made the creatures of Aûharmazd moving, distinct from the motion of Aharman's creatures, for the shedders of perfume (bôti-dâdân) were standing one opposite to the other while emitting it. 25. And, observantly of the end, he brought forward to Aharman a means out of himself, the property of darkness, with which the extreme limits (virûnakô) of Time were connected by him, an envelope (pôstô) of the black-pated and ash-coloured kind. 26. And in bringing it forward he spoke thus: 'Through their weapons the co-operation of the serpent (azô) dies away, and this which is thine, indeed thy own daughter, dies through religion; and if at the end of nine thousand years, as it is said and written, is a time of upheaval (madam kârdânô), she is upheaved, not ended.'

27. At the same time Aharman came from accompanying Time out to the front, out to the star station; the connection of the sky with the star station was open, which showed, since it hung down into empty space, the strong communication of the lights and glooms, the place of strife in which is the pursuit of both. 28. And having darkness with himself he brought it into the sky, and left the sky so to gloom that the internal deficiency in the sky extends as much as one-third\(^2\) over the star station.

\(^1\) This is the Av. zrvâna akarana, 'boundless time or antiquity,' of Vend. XIX, 33, 44. He is a personification of duration and age, and is here distinctly stated to be a creature of Aûharmazd. This throws some doubt upon the statements of Armenian writers, who assert that the two spirits sprang from Zrvâna.

Chapter II.

1. On the coming in of Aharman to the creatures it is thus declared in revelation, that in the month Fravardin and the day Aūharmazd, at noon, he came forth to the frontier of the sky. 2. The sky sees him and, on account of his nature, fears as much as a sheep trembles at a wolf; and Aharman came on, scorching and burning into it. 3. Then he came to the water which was arranged below the earth, and darkness without an eyelid was brought on by him; and he came on, through the middle of the earth, as a snake all-leaping comes on out of a hole; and he stayed within the whole earth. 4. The passage where he came on is his own, the way to hell, through which the demons make the wicked run.

5. Afterwards, he came to a tree, such as was of a single root; the height of which was several feet, and it was without branches and without bark, juicy and sweet; and to keep the strength of all kinds of trees in its race, it was in the vicinity of the middle of the earth; and at the self-same time it became quite withered.

6. Afterwards, he came to the ox, the sole-created, as it stood as high as Gāyōmard on the

4 The primeval ox, or first-created representative of animals, as Gāyōmard was of mankind; from which two representatives all mankind and animals are said to have been afterwards developed. There seems to have been some doubt as to the sex of this mythological ox; here it is distinctly stated to have been a female, but from Bund. X, 1, 2, XIV, 3, it would appear to have been a male, and this seems to be admitted by Dād-sparam himself, in Chap. IX, 7.
bank of the water of Dâttih in the middle of the earth; and its distance from Gâyômard being as much as its own height, it was also distant from the bank of the water of Dâttih by the same measure; and it was a female, white and brilliant as the moon.

7. As the adversary came upon it Aûharmazd gave it a narcotic, which is also called 'bang,' to eat, and to rub the 'bang' before the eye, so that the annoyance from the assault of crimes may be less; it became lean and ill, and fell upon its right breast trembling.

8. Before the advance to Gâyômard, who was then about one-third the height of Zaratust, and was brilliant as the sun, Aûharmazd forms, from the sweat on the man, a figure of fifteen years, radiant and tall, and sends it on to Gâyômard; and he also brings his sweat on to him as long as one Yathâ-ahû-vairyô is being recited. 9. When he issued from the sweat, and raised his eyes, he saw the world when it was dark as night; on the whole earth were the snake, the scorpion, the lizard (vazak), and noxious creatures of many kinds; and so the other kinds of quadrupeds stood among the

2 This is a misunderstanding of the corresponding phrase in Buhd. III, 18. The narcotic here mentioned is usually prepared from the hemp plant, and is well known in India and the neighbouring countries.
3 See Bund. IV, 1.
4 The word which, as it stands in the MS., looks like hômanâe, is here taken as a transposition of min khvâe, in accordance with Bund. III, 19; but it may be a variant of anumâe, 'embryo,' in which case the translation should be, 'forms an embryo into the shape of a man of fifteen years.'

reptiles; every approach of the whole earth was as though not as much as a needle’s point remained, in which there was no rush of noxious creatures. 10. There were the coming of a planetary star into planetary conjunction, and the moon and planets at sixes and sevens; many dark forms with the face and curls of Aš-i Dahák suffered punishment in company with certain non-Iranians; and he was amazed at calling the wicked out from the righteous.

11. Lastly, he (Aharman) came up to the fire, and mingled darkness and smoke with it.

CHAPTER III.

1. And Gōsūrvan, as she was herself the soul of the primeval ox, when the ox passed away, came out from the ox, even as the soul from the body of the dead, and kept up the clamour of a cry to Aūharmazd in such fashion as that of an army, a thousand strong, when they cry out together. 2. And Aūharmazd, in order to be much more able to keep watch over the mingled creatures than in front of Gāyōmarā, went from the earth up to the sky. 3. And Gōsūrvan continually went after him crying, and she kept up the cry thus: ‘With whom may the guardianship over the creatures be left by thee?’

CHAPTER IV.

1. This was the highest predominance of Aharman, for he came on, with all the strength which he had, for the disfigurement of the creatures; and he took as much as one-third of the base of the sky\(^1\), in a downward direction, into a confined and captive state, so that it was all dark and apart from the light, for it was itself, at the coming of the adversary, his enemy among the struggles for creation. 2. And this is opposing the renovation of the universe, for the greatest of all the other means of the fiend, when he has come in, are of like origin and strength this day, in the sleep\(^2\) of the renovation, as on that when the enemy, who is fettered on coming in, is kept back.

3. Amid all this struggling were mingled the instigations of Aharman, crying thus: 'My victory has come completely, for the sky is split and disfigured by me with gloom and darkness, and taken by me as a stronghold; water is disfigured by me, and the earth, injured by darkness, is pierced by me; vegetation is withered by me, the ox is put to death by me, Gâyômard is made ill by me, and opposed to those revolving\(^3\) are the glooms and planets arranged by me; no one has remained for me to take and pervert in combat except Aûharmazd, and of the earth there is only one man, who is alone, what is he able to do?'

4. And he sends Astô-vidâd\(^4\) upon him with the thousand decrepitudes (âzvârânô) and diseases

1 Compare Bund. III, 11. The involved style of Zâd-sparam is particularly conspicuous in this chapter.

2 The word seems to be khvâpîsnô.

3 Meaning probably the zodiacal signs, but the word is doubtful, being spelt vardîsnânô instead of vardîsnânô. A very small alteration would change it into varôîsnânô, ‘believers,’ but there were no earthly believers at the time alluded to.

which are his own, sicknesses of various kinds, so that they may make him ill and cause death. 5. Gâyômard was not secured by them, and the reason was because it was a decree of appointing Time (zôrvânô) in the beginning of the coming in of Aharman, that: ‘Up to thirty winters I appoint Gâyômard unto brilliance and preservation of life.’

6. And his manifestation in the celestial sphere was through the forgiveness of criminals and instigators of confusion by his good works, and for that reason no opportunity was obtained by them during the extent of thirty years.

7. For in the beginning it was so appointed that the star Jupiter (Aûharmazd) was life towards the creatures, not through its own nature, but on account of its being within the control (band) of the luminaries; and Saturn (Kêvân) was death towards the creatures. 8. Both were in their supremacy (bâlist) at the beginning of the crea-

1 These luminaries are the fixed stars, especially the signs of the zodiac, to whose protection the good creation is committed (see Bund. II, 0–4); whereas Jupiter and all other planets are supposed to be, by nature, disturbers of the creation, being employed by Aharman for that purpose (see Mkh. VIII, 17–21, XII, 7–10, XXIV, 8, XXXVIII, 5).

2 The most obvious meaning of bâlist is ‘greatest altitude,’ and this is quite applicable to Jupiter when it attains its highest northern declination on entering Cancer, but it is not applicable to Saturn in Libra, when it has only its mean altitude. At the vernal equinox, however, which was the time of the beginning mentioned in the text, when Aharman invaded the creation (see Chap. II, 1), Libra is in opposition to the sun, and Saturn in Libra would be at its nearest approach to the earth, and would, therefore, attain its maximum brightness; while Jupiter in Cancer would be at its greatest altitude and shining with four-fifths of its maximum brightness. Both planets, therefore, were near their most conspicuous position (which would seem to be the meaning of bâlist tasures, as Jupiter was in Cancer on rising, that which is also called Gîvân ('living')\(^1\), for it is the place in which life is bestowed upon it; and Saturn was in Libra, in the great subterranean, so that its own venom and deadliness became more evident and more dominant thereby. 9. And it was when both shall not be supreme \textit{that} Gâyömard was to complete his own life, which is the thirty years\(^2\) Saturn came not again to supremacy, that is, to Libra. 10. And at the time when Saturn came into Libra, Jupiter was in Capricornus\(^3\), on account of whose own lowness\(^4\), and the victory of Saturn over Jupiter, Gâyömard suffered through those very defects which came and are to continue advancing, the continuance of that disfigurement which Ahriman can bring upon the creatures of Aûharmazd.

\(^1\) This reading suits the context best, but the name can also be read Snahan, and in many other ways. It may possibly be the tenth lunar mansion, whose name is read Nahm in Bund. II, 3, by Pâzand writers, and which corresponds to the latter part of Cancer.

\(^2\) Saturn revolves round the sun in about 29 years and 167 days, so it cannot return into opposition to the sun (or to its maximum brightness), at or near the vernal equinox, in less than thirty years.

\(^3\) That is, while Saturn performs one revolution round the sun, Jupiter performs two and a half, which is very nearly correct, as Jupiter revolves round the sun in about 11 years and 315 days. Therefore, when the supposed deadly influence of Saturn has returned to its maximum, the supposed reviving influence of Jupiter is at its minimum, owing to the small altitude of Capricornus, and no longer counterbalances the destructive power of Saturn.

\(^4\) There seems to be no other reasonable translation, but the MS. has lâ instead of râî, and nîskasp instead of nîstv.
Chapter V.

1. When in like manner, and equally oppressively, as his (Aūharmazd's) creatures were disfigured, then through that same deterioration his own great glory was exhibited; for as he came within the sky he maintains the spirit of the sky, like an intrepid warrior who has put on metal armour; and the sky in its fortress spoke these hasty, deceitful words to Aharman, thus: 'Now when thou shalt have come in I will not let thee back;' and it obstructed him until Aūharmazd prepared another rampart, that is stronger, around the sky, which is called 'righteous understanding' (ašhōk ākāsīh). 2. And he arranged the guardian spirits of the righteous who are warriors around that rampart, mounted on horses and spear in hand, in such manner as the hair on the head; and they acquired the appearance of prison guards who watch a prison from outside, and would not surrender the outer boundaries to an enemy descended from the inside.

3. Immediately, Aharman endeavours that he may go back to his own complete darkness, but he found no passage; and he recapitulated, with seeming misgiving, his fears of the worthiness which is to arise at the appearance of the renovation of the universe at the end of the nine thousand years.

4. As it is said in the Gāthas, thus: 'So also spirits have come to the body of Gāyōmand. What-the evil spirit, that is: So that I may utterly destroy water, together with him rushed in, on the horse Cancer, he who is the most watery Tistar; the equally watery one, that is called Avrak, gave forth a cloud and went down in the day; that is âspji’s old MS. of the Yasna in Bombay, very nearly as closely as Spiegel’s edition does. It appears, therefore, that Dād-spāram used the same Pahlavi translation of the Yasna as the Parsis do at the present day.

1 The MS. here omits the words ‘through this purpose,’ by mistake.

2 The word ārdik, which Dād-spāram uses instead of the kharak, ‘conflict,’ of Bund. V., 6, VI, 1, &c., may be connected with Pers. ārd, ‘anger.’

declared as the movement of the first-comers of the creatures. 2. Cancer became a zodiacal constellation (akhtar); it is the fourth constellation of the zodiac for this reason, because the month Tir is the fourth month of the year 1.

3. And as Tistar begged for assistance, Vohuman and Hom are therefore co-operating with him in command, Burg of the waters and the water in mutual aid, and the righteous guardian spirits in keeping the peace. 4. He was converted into three forms, which are the form of a man, the form of a bull, and the form of a horse; and each form was distinguished in brilliance for ten nights, and lets its rain fall on the night for the destruction of noxious creatures. 5. The drops became each separately like a great bowl in which water is drawn; and as to that on which they are driven, they kill all the noxious creatures except the reptiles 2, who entered into the muddiness of the earth.

6. Afterwards, the wind spirit, in the form of a man, became manifest on the earth; radiant and tall he had a kind of wooden boot (mukvao-ae-i Darin) on his feet; and as when the life shall stir the body, the body is advancing with like vigour, so that spirit of the wind stirs forth the inner nature of the atmospheric wind, the wind pertaining to the whole earth is forth, and the water in its grasp is flung out from it to the sides of the earth, and its wide-formed ocean arose therefrom.

7. It (the ocean) keeps one-third of this earth 3.

and among its contents are a thousand sources and fountains, such as are called lakes (var); a thousand water-fountains, whose water is from the ocean, come up from the lakes and are poured forth into it. 8. And the size of some of all the lakes and all the fountains of water is as much as a fast rider on an Arab horse, who continually compasses and canters around them, will attain in forty days, which is 1900 long leagues (parasang-i akarîk), each league being at least 20,000 feet.

9. And after the noxious creatures died, and the poison therefrom was mixed up in the earth, in order to utterly destroy that poison, Tîstar went down into the ocean; and Apāôsh, the demon, hastened to meet him, and at the alarm of the first contest Tîstar was in terror (pard). 10. And he applied unto Aûharmazd, who brought such power unto Tîstar as arises through propitiation and praise and invoking by name, and they call forth such power unto Tîstar as that of ten vigorous horses, ten vigorous camels, ten vigorous bulls, ten mountains when hurled, and ten single-stream rivers when together. 11. And without alarm he drove out Apāôsh, the demon, and kept him away from the sources of the ocean.

and made it rain down \(^1\) much more prodigiously, for destruction, drops as large as men's heads and bulls'. heads, great and small. 13. And in that cloud and rain were the chastisement and beating which Tīstar and the fire Vāzist inflicted on the opposition of Apāôsh; the all-deciding (vispô-vîktr) fire Vāzist struck down with a club of fire, all-deciding among the malevolent (kēbarânô).

14. Ten days and nights there was rain, and its darting \(^2\) was the shooting of the noxious creatures; afterwards, the wind drove it to the shore of the wide-formed ocean, and it is portioned out into three, and three seas arose from it; they are called the Pūttik, the Kamīrīd, and the Gēhân-bûn \(^3\). 15. Of these the Pūttik itself is salt water, in which is a flow and ebb \(^4\); and the control of its flow and ebb is connected with the moon, and by its continual rotation, in coming up and going down, that of the moon is manifested. 16. The wide-formed ocean stands forth on the south side as to (pavan) Albûrz \(^5\), and the Pūttik stands contiguous to it, and amidst it is the gulf (var) of Satavēs, whose connection is with Satavēs, which is the southern quarter. 17. In the activity of the sea, and in the increase and decrease of the moon, whose circuit is the whole of Iran, are the flow and ebb; of the curving tails in front of the moon two issue forth, and have an abode in Satavês; one is the up-drag and one the down-drag; through the up-drag occurs the flood, and through the down-drag occurs the ebb. 18. And Satavês itself is a gulf (var) and side arm of the wide-formed ocean, for it drives back the impurity and turbidness which come from the salt sea, when they are continually going into the wide-formed ocean, with a mighty high wind, while that which is clear through purity goes into the Arêdvisûr sources of the wide-formed ocean. 19. Besides these four there are the small seas.

20. And, afterwards, there were made to flow from Albûrz, out of its northern border, two rivers, which were the Arvand—that is, the Digrût, and the flow

1 This is even a more mechanical theory of the tides than that detailed in Bund. XIII, 13. Whether the 'curving tails' (gâgâk dûnbak) are the 'horns' of the crescent moon is uncertain.

5 Said to be twenty-three in number in Bund. XIII, 6.

6 Bund. VII, 15, 16, XX, 1.

This appears to be a later identification of the Arag, Arang, or Arêng river of Bund. XX with the Tigris, under its name Arvand, which is also found in the Bahman Yaršt (III, 21, 38) and the Âfrin of the Seven Ameshâspends (§ 9). The Bundahis (XX, 8) seems to connect the Arag (Araxes?) with the Oxus and Nile, and describes the Digrût or Tigris as a distinct river (Bund. XX, 12). This difference is one of the indications of the Bundahis having been so old a book in the time of Zâd-sparam that he sometimes misunderstood its meaning, which could hardly have been the case if it had been written by one of his contemporaries. As the Persian empire has several times included part of Egypt, the Nile must have then been well known to the Persians as the great western river of their world. The last time they had possession of part of Egypt was, for about half a century, in the reigns of Khusrô of that river was to those of the setting sun (val frôd-yeh ev undânô)—and the Vêh¹ was the river of the first-comers to the sun; formed as two horns they went on to the ocean. 21. After them eighteen² great rivers came out from the same Albûrz; and these twenty rivers, whose source is in Albûrz, go down into the earth, and arrive in Khvanîras.

22. Afterwards, two fountains of the sea are opened out for the earth³, which are called the Kêkast⁴—a lake which has no cold wind, and on whose shore rests the triumphant fire Gûnaspa⁵—and, secondly, the Sôvar⁶ which casts on its shores all turbidness, and keeps its own salt lake clear and pure, for it is like the semblance of an eye which casts out to its edges every ache and every impurity; and on account of its depth it is not reached to the bottom, for it goes into the ocean; and in its vicinity rests the beneficial fire Bûrzûn-Mitrô⁷.

23. And this was the second contest, which was with the water.

the star station, in two hundred years up to the moon station, two hundred years up to the sun station, and two hundred years up to the sky. 7. After Alburz the Aparsêh mountain is the greatest, as it is also called the Avar-rôyasn (‘up-growth’) mountain, whose beginning is in Sagastân and its end unto Pârs and to Kûnîstân.

8. This, too, is declared, that after the great rain in the beginning of the creation, and the wind’s sweeping away the water to the ocean, the earth is in seven portions a little above it, as the compact earth, after the rain, is torn up by the noise and wind in various places. 9. One portion, moreover, as much as one-half the whole earth, is in the middle, and in each of the six portions around is as much as Sagastân; moreover, as much as Sagastân is the measure of what is called a kêshvar (‘region’) for the reason that one was defined from the other by a kêsh (‘furrow’). 10. The middle one is Khvanîras, of which Pârs is the centre, and those six regions are like a coronet (avîsar) around it. 11. One part of the wide-formed ocean wound around it, among those six regions; the sea and forest seized upon the south side, and a lofty mountain grew up on the north, so that they might become separate, one from the other, and imperceptible.

12. This is the third contest, about the earth.

CHAPTER VIII.

1. As he (Aharman) came forthly to the plants—which have struggled (kūkhshī-āītō) against him with the whole vegetation—because the vegetation was quite dry, Amerōdad, by whom the essence of the world's vegetation was seized upon, pounded it up small, and mixed it up with the rain-water of Tīstar. 2. After the rain the whole earth is discerned sprouting, and ten thousand special species and a hundred thousand additional species (levatman sardakō) so grew as if there were a species of every kind; and those ten thousand species are provided for keeping away the ten thousand diseases.

3. Afterwards, the seed was taken up from those hundred thousand species of plants, and from the collection of seed the tree of all germs, amid the wide-formed ocean, was produced, from which all species of plants continually grow. 4. And the griffon bird (sēnō mūrūvō) has his resting-place upon it; when he wanders forth from within it, he scatters the dry seed into the water, and it is rained back to the earth with the rain.

5. And in its vicinity the tree was produced which is the white Hōm, the counteractor of decrepitude,

4 In Bund. IX, 4, the MSS. have '120,000,' which is probably wrong, as Bund. XXVII, 2, agrees with the text above.
5 The MS. has barā instead of pavan, a blunder due probably to some copyist reading the Huzvāris in Persian, in which language bih (= barā) and bah (= pavan) are written alike. In Pāzand they are usually written be and pa, respectively.

CHAPTER IX.

1. As he (Aharman) came fifthly to cattle—which struggled against him with all the animals—and likewise as the primeval ox passed away, from the nature of the vegetable principle it possessed, fifty-five species of grain and twelve species of medicinal plants grew from its various members; and forasmuch as they should see from which member each one proceeds, it is declared in the Dāmdād Nāsk. 2. And every plant grown from a member...

2 The MS. has ‘fifty-seven’ in ciphers, but Bund. X, 1, XIV, 1, XXVII, 2, have ‘fifty-five’ in words.
3 This was the fourth nask or ‘book’ of the complete Mazdayasian literature, according to the Dīnkard, which gives a very short and superficial account of its contents. But, according to the Dīnī-vagarkard and the Rivāyats of Kāmāh Bahrah, Narfīn Hōshang, and Barzū Qiyāmu-d-dīn, it was the fifth nask, and was called Dvâzdah-hâmâst (or homâst). For its contents, as given by the Dīnī-vagarkard, see Haug’s Essays, p. 127. The Rivāyat of Kāmāh Bahrah, which has a few more words than the other Rivāyats, gives the following account (for the Persian text of which, see ‘Fragmens relatifs à la religion de Zoroastre,’ par Olshausen et Jules Mohl):

Of the fifth the name is Dvâzdah-homâst, and the interpretation of this is “the book about help” (dar īmdâd, but this is probably a corruption of dāmdâd). And this book has thirty-two sections (kardah) that the divine and omnipotent creator sent down, in remembrance of the beginning of the creatures of the superior world and inferior world, and it is a description of the whole of them and of that which God, the most holy and omnipotent, mentioned about the sky, earth, and water, vegetation and... promotes that member, as it is said that there where the ox scattered its marrow on to the earth, grain afterwards grew up, corn and sesame, vetches and peas; so sesame, on account of its marrow quality, is itself a great thing for developing marrow. 3.
And it is also said that from the blood is the vine, a great vegetable thing—as wine itself is blood—for more befriending the sound quality of the blood.
4. And it is said that from the nose is the pulse (māys or māsah) which is called dōnak, and was a variety of sesame (samagā), and it is for other noses.

fire, man and quadrupeds, grazing and flying animals, and what he produced for their advantage and use, and the like. Secondly, the resurrection and heavenly path, the gathering and dispersion, and the nature of the circumstances of the resurrection, as regards the virtuous and evil-doers, through the weight of every action they perform for good and evil.'

This description corresponds very closely with what the Bun-dahis must have been, before the addition of the genealogical and chronological chapters at the end; and Dād-sparam mentions in his text here, and again in § 16, particulars regarding the Dāmdād which also occur in the Bundahīs (XIV, 2, 14–18, 21–24). There can be very little doubt, therefore, that the Bundahīs was originally a translation of the Dāmdād, though probably abridged; and the text translated in this volume is certainly a further abridgment of the original Bundahīs, or Zand-ākās. Whether the Avesta text of the Dāmdād was still in existence in the time of Dād-sparam is uncertain, as he would apply the name to the Pahlavi text. At the present time it is very unusual for a copyist to write the Pahlavi text without its Avesta, when the latter exists, but this may not always have been the case.

Forth from there it produced for Aitrân-vêg, first, two oxen, a pair, male and female\(^4\), and, afterwards, other species, until the completion of the 282 species\(^5\); and they were discernible as far as two long leagues on the earth. 9. Quadrupeds walked forth on the land, fish swam in the water, and birds flew in the atmosphere; in every two, at the time good eating is enjoyed, a longing (âv-dahân) arose therefrom, and pregnancy and birth.

and birds flying in the atmosphere. 11. Then, into five classes, that is, the quadruped which is round-hoofed, the double-hoofed, the five-clawed, the bird, and the fish, whose dwellings are in five places, and which are called aquatic, burrowing, oviparous, wide-travelling, and suitable for grazing. 12. The aquatic are fish and every beast of burden, cattle, wild beast, dog, and bird which enters the water; the burrowing are the marten (samür) and musk animals, and all other dwellers and movers in holes; the oviparous are birds of every kind; the wide-travelling sprang away for help, and are also those of a like kind; those suitable for grazing are whatever are kept grazing in a flock.

13. And, afterwards, they were divided into genera, as the round-hoofed are one, which is all called 'horse;' the double-hoofed are many, as the camel and ox, the sheep and goat, and others double-hoofed; the five-clawed are the dog, hare, musk animals, marten, and others; then are the birds, and then the fish. 14. And then they were divided into species, as eight species of horse, two species of camel, ten species of ox, five species of sheep, five species of goat, ten of the dog, five of the hare, eight of the marten, eight of the musk animals, 110 of the birds, and ten of the fish; some are counted for the pigs, and with all those declared and all those undeclared there were, at first, 282 species; and with the species within species there were a thousand varieties.

1 Bund. XIV, 8–12.
2 Bund. XIV, 13–23, 26, 27.
3 Bund. XIV, 17 says 'fifteen,' which is probably correct.
4 Only 181 species are detailed or 'declared' here.
15. The birds are distributed\(^1\) into eight groups (ristakô), and from that which is largest to that which is smallest they are so spread about as when a man, who is sowing grain, first scatters abroad that of heavy weight, then that which is middling, and afterwards that which is small.

16. And of the whole of the species, as enumerated a second time in the Dâmdâd Nask\(^2\), and written by me in the manuscript (nipîk) of ‘the summary enumeration of races’\(^3\)—this is a lordly\(^4\) summary—the matter which is shown is, about the species of horses, the first is the Arab, and the chief of them\(^5\) is white and yellow-eared, and secondly the Persian, the mule, the ass, the wild ass, the water-horse, and others. 17. Of the camel there are specially two, that for the plain, and the mountain one which is double-humped. 18. Among the species of ox are the white, mud-coloured, red, yellow, black, and dappled, the elk, the buffalo, the camel-leopard\(^6\), the ox-fish, and others. 19. Among sheep are those having tails and those which are tailless, also the wether and the Kûrisk which, because of its trampling the hills, its great horn, and also being suitable

Among martens are the white ermine, the black marten, the squirrel, the beaver (khaz), and others. 22. Of musk animals with a bag, one is the Bish-musk—which eats the Bish poison and does not die through it, and it is created for the great advantage that it should eat the Bish, and less of it should succeed in poisoning the creatures—and one is a musk animal of a black colour which they desired (āyūftō) who were bitten by the fanged serpent—as the serpent of the mountain water-courses (makō) is called—which is numerous on the river-banks; one throws the same unto it for food, which it eats, and then the serpent enters its body, when his serpent, at the time this happens, feeds upon the same belly in which the serpent is, and he will become clear from that malady. 23. Among birds two were produced of a different character from the rest, and those are the griffon bird and the bat, which have teeth in the mouth, and suckle their young with animal milk from the teat.

1 This appears to be the meaning here of amat zak garsakō, but the whole sentence is a fair sample of Dād-sparam's most involved style of writing. By feeding the black musk animal with snakes the effect of a snake-bite, experienced by the feeder, is supposed to be neutralized.

mutually adapted³; and its middle, on which a glory came, through their like stature⁴, was such that it

Aûharmazed created. 5. This is that glory for which man is, indeed, created, as it is thus said in revela-

² The MS. has Mashâî Mashâyê, but see Bund. XV, 6. The Avesta forms were probably mashya mashyôî (or mashyê), which some part of the Avesta which is no longer extant. Pâzand writers have found it easy to read Mashyanî instead of Mashyoût.

likely to be the original reading than the ham-badînva hamp-dasak of Bund. XV, 2, is doubtful. The last epithet here might also be read ham-sabîk, ‘having the same shirt,’ but this is an improbable meaning.

accordance with Bund. XV, 3, would be preferable to the ham-

And Aûharmazd spoke thus: 'The glory was created by me before; afterwards, for him who is created, the glory is given a body so that it may produce activity, and its body is created only for activity.' 6. And, afterwards, they changed from the shape of a plant into the shape of man, and the glory went spiritually into them.

Chapter XI.

1. As he (Ahurman) came seventhly to fire, which was all together against him, the fire separated into five kinds, which are called the Propitious, the Good diffuser, the Aûrvâzîst, the Vâzîst, and the Supremely-benefiting. 2. And it produced the Propitious fire itself in heaven (gârômân); its manifestation is in the fire which is burning on the earth, and its propitiousness is this, that all the kinds are of its nature. 3. The Good diffuser is that which is in men and animals, and its business consists in the digestion of the food, the sleeping of the body, and the brightening of the eyes. 4. The Aûrvâzîst is that which is in plants, in whose seed it is formed, and its business consists in piercing the earth, warming the chilled water\(^1\) and producing the qualities and fragrance of plants and blossoms therefrom, and elaborating the ripened produce into many fruits. 5. And the Vâzîst is that which has its motion in a cloud, and its business consists in destroying the atmospheric gloom and darkness, and making the thickness of the atmosphere fine and propitious in quality, sifting the hail, moderately warming the water which the cloud holds, and making sultry weather showery. 6. The Supremely-benefiting, like the sky, is that glory whose lodgment is in the Behrânê fire\(^2\), as the master of the house is over the house, and whose propitious power arises from the growing brightness of the fire, the blazing forth in\(^3\) the purity of the place, the praise of God (yazdânô), and the practice of good works. 7. And its business is that it struggles with the spiritual fiend, it watches the forms of the witches—who walk up from the river\(^4\), wear woven clothing, disturb the luminaries by the concealment of stench, and by witchcraft injure the creatures—and the occurrences of destruction, burning, and celebration of witchcraft, especially at night; being an assistant of Srôsh the righteous.

1 The old word nismô, 'soul' (see Bund. XV, 3, 4), has become corrupted here (by the omission of the initial stroke) into gadmân, 'glory.' This corruption may be due either to Dâd-sparam not understanding the word (in which case the Bundahîs must have been an old book in his time), or else to some later copyist confounding the old word for 'soul' with the better-known 'glory' of the Iranian sovereigns.

2 Bund. XV, 5.

3 Bund. XVII, 1. Three of the Avesta names are here translated, the first two being the Spênîst and Vohu-frîân, which are the fifth and second in the Bundahîs, and the fifth being the Berezi-savang, which is the first in the Bundahîs.

8. And in the beginning of the creation\(^1\) the whole earth was delivered over into the guardianship of the sublime Frōbak fire, the mighty Gūnasp fire, and the beneficial Bûrzin-Mitrō fire\(^2\), which are like priest, warrior, and husbandman. 9. The place of the fire Frōbak was formed on the Gadman-hōmand (‘glorious’) mountain in Khvārīzem\(^3\), the fire Gūnasp was on the Asnavand mountain in Ātarō-pātakān, and the fire Bûrzin-Mitrō on the Rēvand mountain which is in the Ridge of Vistāsp, and its material manifestation in the world was the most complete.

10. In the reign of Hōshāng\(^4\), when men were continually going forth to the other regions (kēsh-var) on the ox Srūvō\(^5\), one night, half-way, while admiring the fires, the fire-stands which were prepared in three places on the back of the ox, \textit{and} in which the fire was, fell into the sea, and the substance of that one great fire \textit{which} was manifest, is divided into three; \textit{and} they established \textit{it} on the three fire-stands, and it became itself three glories whose lodgments are in the Frōbak fire, the Gūnasp fire, and the Bûrzin-Mitrō\(^6\).

\(^{6}\) The remainder of ‘the sayings of Zād-sparam, about the meeting of the beneficent spirit \textit{and} the evil spirit,’ have no special reference to the Bundahīs. They treat of the following matters:---

The coming of the religion, beginning in the time of Frāsīyān and Mānūškīhar, with an anecdote of Kāĕť-ūs and the hero Srtō (Av. Thrita). The manifestation of the glory of Zaratūst before his birth. The begetting of Zaratûst through the drinking of hâm-juice and cow’s milk infused, respectively, with his guardian spirit and glory, as declared in the manuscript on ‘the guidance of worship.’ The connection of Zaratûst with Aûharmazd, traced back through his genealogy as far as Gâyômarz. The persistent endeavours of the fiends to destroy Zaratûst at the time of his birth, and how they were frustrated. His receiving the religion from Aûharmazd, with another anecdote of Kâî-ûs and Srîtô, and of Zaratûst’s exclamation on coming into the world. The enmity borne to him by five brothers of the Karapân family, and how it was frustrated; his own four brothers, and some of his wonderful deeds. The worthiness of his righteousness; his compassionate and liberal nature; his giving up worldly desires; his pity; his good selection of a wife; and what is most edifying for the soul. What occurred when he was thirty years old, and his being conducted by the archangel Vohûman to the assembly of the spirits. The questions asked by Zaratûst, and Aûharmazd’s replies thereto. The seven questions he asked of the seven archangels in seven different places, in the course of one winter. [Westergaard’s MS. K.35 ends in the middle of the second of these questions.] The five dispositions of priests, and the ten admonitions. The three preservatives of religion, with particulars about the Gâthas and the connection of the Ahunavar with the Nasks. Zaratûst’s obtaining one disciple, Mêdryôk-mâh, in the first ten years, and the acceptance of the religion by Vistâsp two years afterwards.

The second of the writings of Zûd-spâram consists of his ‘sayings about the formation of men out of body, life, and soul;’ and the third (which is imperfect in all known MSS.) contains his ‘sayings about producing the renovation of the universe.’

CHAPTER I.

O. May the gratification of the creator Aûhar-mazd, the beneficent, the developer, the splendid, and glorious, and the benediction of the archangels, which constitute the pure, good religion of the Mazdayasnians, be vigour of body, long life, and prosperous wealth for him whose writing I am.

1. As it is declared by the Stûdgar Nakkh that

1 Or, possibly, 'for whom I am written,' the meaning of mûn yektîbûnîhêm being not quite clear. In fact, the construction of the whole of this initial benediction is rather obscure.

2 It is possible that this is to be read in connection with Chap. II, 1, with the meaning that 'as it is declared by the Stûdgar Nakk that Zaratûst asked for immortality from Aûhar-mazd, so in the Vohûman Yast commentary it is declared that he asked for it a second time.' This introductory chapter is altogether omitted in both the Pâz. MSS. which have been examined, but it is given in the Pers. version. It is also omitted in the epitome of the Bahman Yast contained in the Dabistân (see Shea's translation, vol. i. pp. 264-271).

3 This was the first nask or 'book' of the complete Mazdayas-nian literature, according to the Dînkard, which calls it Sûdkar; but according to the Dînî-vagarkard and the Rivâyats it was the second nask, called Stûdgar or Istûdgar. For its contents, as given by the Dînî-vagarkard (which agrees with the account in the Rivâyats), see Haug's Essays, p. 126. In the Dînkard, besides a short description of this Nask, given in the eighth book, there is also a detailed account of the contents of each of its fargarâs, or chapters, occupying twenty-five quarto pages of twenty-two lines each, in the ninth book. From this detailed statement it appears Zarathush asked for immortality from Aûharmazd, then Aûharmazd displayed the omniscient wisdom to Zarathush, and through it he beheld the root of a tree, on which were four branches, one golden, one of silver, one of steel, and one was mixed up with iron. 2. Thereupon he reflected in this way, that this was seen in a dream, and when he awoke from sleep Zarathush spoke thus: 'Lord of the spirits and earthly existences! it appears that I saw the root of a tree, on which were four branches.'

3. Aûharmazd spoke to Zarathush the Spitâmân thus: 'That root of a tree which thou sawest, and those four branches, are the four periods which will that the passage mentioned here, in the text, constituted the seventh fargard of the Nask, the contents of which are detailed as follows:—

'The seventh fargard, Tâ-ve-ratô (Av. tâ ve urvâtâ, Yas. XXXI, 1), is about the exhibition to Zarathush of the nature of the four periods in the Zarathushian millennium (haçangrôk zim, "thousand winters"). First, the golden, that in which Aûharmazd displayed the religion to Zarathush. Second, the silver, that in which Vîstasp received the religion from Zarathush. Third, the steel, the period within which the organizer of righteousness, Âtarô-pâd son of Mârspend, was born. Fourth, the period mingled with iron is this, in which is much propagation of the authority of the apostate and other villains (sarîtarânô), along with destruction of the reign of religion, the weakening of every kind of goodness and virtue, and the departure of honour and wisdom from the countries of Iran. In the same period is a recital of the many perplexities and torments of the period for that desire (girâyth) of the life of the good which consists in seemliness. Perfect is the excellence of righteousness (Av. ashem vohû vahistem astî, Yas. XXVII. 14, W.).'

If this be a correct account of the contents of this fargard, the writer was evidently consulting a Pahlavi version of the Nask, composed during the later Sasanian times.

1 Generally understood to mean 'descendant of Spitama,' who was his ancestor in the ninth generation (see Bund. XXXII, 1).
come. 4. That of gold is when I and thou converse, and King Vistâsp shall accept the religion, and shall demolish the figures of the demons, but they themselves remain for concealed proceedings. 5. And that of silver is the reign of Ardakhshir² the Kayân king (Kâ¹ shah), and that of steel is the reign of the glorified (anôshak-rûbân) Khûsrô son of Kêvâd³, and that which was mixed with iron is the evil sovereignty of the demons with dishevelled hair⁴ of the race of Wrath⁵, and when it is the end of the tenth hundredth winter (satô zim) of thy millennium, O Zaratût the Spitâmân!⁶

² See, Chap. II, 17.

that, during this time, the accursed Mazdik son of Bāmdād, who is opposed to the religion, comes into notice, and is to cause disturbance among those in the religion of God. (yazdān). 7. And he, the glorified one, summoned Khūsrō son of Māh-dād and Dād-Aūharmazd of Nishāpūr, who were high-priests of Ātarō-pātakān, and Ātarō-frōbtāg the undeceitful (akadbā), Ātarō-pād, Ātarō-Mitrō, and Bakht-āfrīd to his presence, and he demanded of them a promise, thus: 'Do not keep these Yasts in concealment, and do not teach the commentary except among your relations.' 8. And they made the promise unto Khūsrō.

CHAPTER II.

1. In the Vohuiman Yāst commentary (zand) it is declared that Zaratūst asked for immortality from

1 That is, Khusrō Nūshirvān. As the names of his priests and councillors stand in K 20 they can hardly be otherwise distributed than they are in the text, but the correctness of the MS. is open to suspicion. Dād-Aūharmazd was a commentator who is quoted in Chap. III, 16, and in the Pahl. Yas. XI, 22; Ātarō-frōbtāg was another commentator mentioned in Sls. I, 3; and Ātarō-pād and Bakht-āfrīd are names well known in Pahlavi literature, the former having been borne by more than one individual (see Sls. I, 3, 4).

2 The Pers. version says nothing about this promise, but states that Khūsrō sent a message to the accursed Mazdak, requiring him to reply to the questions of this priestly assembly on pain of death, to which he assented, and he was asked ten religious questions, but was unable to answer one; so the king put him to death immediately.

3 A similar prohibition, addressed to Zaratūst, as regards the Avesta text, is actually found in the Horvadād Yt. 10.

4 This seems to imply that this text is not the commentary
Aûharmazd a second time, and spoke thus: 'I am Zaratûst, more righteous and more efficient among these thy creatures, O creator! when thou shalt make me immortal, as the tree opposed to harm, and Gôpatshah, Gôst-i Fryân, and Kîtrûk-miyân son of Vistâsp, who is Pêshyûtanû, were made. When thou shalt make me immortal they in thy good religion will believe that the upholder of religion, who receives from Aûharmazd his pure and good religion of the Mazdayasnians, will become immortal; then those men will believe in thy good religion.'

3. Aûharmazd spoke thus: 'When I shall make thee immortal, O Zaratûst the Spêtâmân! then Tûr-i Brâdarvash the Karap will become immortal, and itself, but merely an epitome of it. The Pâz. MSS. which have been examined, begin with this chapter.

1 Or, 'when I shall become,' the verb is omitted by mistake in K20.

2 Three of these immortals are mentioned in Bund. XXIX, 5, and Gôst-i Fryân is included in a similar enumeration in Dâd. (Reply 89). The tale of Gôst-i Fryân (Av. Yûstô yô Fryananâm, of Ābân Yt. 81 and Fravardûn Yt. 120) has been published with 'The Book of Arûd-Virâf,' ed. Hoshangji and Haug.

3 Or, 'became;' most of this verb is torn off in K20.

4 The verb is placed before its nominative in the Pahlavi text, both here and in most similar sentences, which is an imitation of the Avesta, due probably to the text being originally translated from an Avesta book now lost, or, at any rate, to its author's wish that it might appear to be so translated. In such cases of inverted construction, when the verb is in a past tense, the Pahlavi idiom often requires a pronominal suffix, corresponding to the nominative, to be added to the first word in the sentence; thus, gûftûs Aûharmazd, or afas gûft Aûharmazd, does not mean 'Aûharmazd spoke to him (or said it),' but merely 'Aûharmazd spoke' (lit. 'it was said by him, Aûharmazd').

5 According to an untranslated passage in the Selections of Zâd-sparam, mentioned in the note on p. 187, this is the name of when Tûr-i Brâdarvash the Karap shall become immortal the resurrection and future existence are not possible.'

4. Zarâtûst seemed uneasy about it in his mind; and Aûharmazd, through the wisdom of omniscience, knew what was thought by Zarâtûst the Spîtâmân with the righteous spirit, and he took hold of Zarâtûst's hand. 5. And he, Aûharmazd the propitious spirit, creator of the material world, the righteous one, even he put the omniscient wisdom, in the shape of water, on the hand of Zarâtûst, and said to him thus: 'Devour it.'

one of the five brothers in the Karapân family of sorcerers, who were enemies of Zarâtûst during his childhood. Their names, as written in SZS., may be read as follows, 'Brâdarvakhsh, Brâdrîyînûsh, Tûr Brâgrêsh, Azânû, and Nasm,' and the first is also called 'Tûr-i Brâdarvakhsh; they are described as descendants of the sister of Manûshîhar. In the seventh book of the Dînkard a wizard, who endeavours to injure Zarâtûst in his childhood, is called 'Tûr-i Brâdrîk-rêsî, the Karapû, and was probably the third brother, whose name (thus corrected) indicates brâhmrî-raëshâ as its Avesta form. Karap or Karapân in all these passages is evidently the name of a family or caste, probably the Av. karapanâ which Haug translates by 'performers of (idolatrous) sacrificial rites,' in connection with Sans. kalpa, 'ceremonial ritual' (see Haug's Essays, pp. 289-291).

1 Kzo has 'among the spirits;' the word mâñîshîn having become mâñôkân by the insertion of an extra stroke.

2 Reading afas instead of minas (Huz. of agas, 'from or by him,' which is written with the same letters as afas; 'and by him'), not only here, but also in §§ 5, 7, 9. The copyist of Kzo was evidently not aware that afas is a conjunctive form, but confounded it with the prepositional form agas, as most Parsis and some European scholars do still. The Sasanian inscriptions confirm the reading afas for the conjunctive form; and Nêryôsang, the learned Parsi translator of Pahlavi texts' into Pâzand and Sanskrit some four centuries ago, was aware of the difference between the two forms, as he transcribes them correctly into Pâz. vas and azas.
6. And Zaratūst devoured some of it; thereby the omniscient wisdom was intermingled with Zaratūst, and seven days and nights Zaratūst was in the wisdom of Aûharmazd. 7. And Zaratūst beheld the men and cattle in the seven regions of the earth, where the many fibres of hair of every one are, and whereunto the end of each fibre holds on the back. 8. And he beheld whatever trees and shrubs there were, and how many roots of plants were in the earth of Spendarmad, where and how they had grown, and where they were mingled.

9. And the seventh day and night he (Aûharmazd) took back the omniscient wisdom from Zaratūst, and Zaratūst reflected in this way, that I have seen it in a pleasant dream produced by Aûharmazd, and I am not surfeited with the dream.

10. And he took both hands, rubbed his body (karp) again, and spoke thus: 'I have slept a long time, and am not surfeited with this pleasant dream produced by Aûharmazd.'

11. Aûharmazd said to the righteous Zaratūst thus: 'What was seen in the pleasant dream produced by Aûharmazd?'

12. Zaratūst spoke thus: 'O Aûharmazd, propitious spirit! creator of the material world, righteous creator! I have seen a celebrity (khuni'd) with much wealth, whose soul, infamous in the body, was hungry (gurs)² and jaundiced and in hell, and he did not seem to me exalted; and I saw a beggar with no wealth and helpless, and his soul was thriving (farþth) in paradise, and he seemed to me exalted.

15. Aûharmazd spoke thus: 'O Zaratûst the Spitâmân! this is what I say beforehand, the one tree which thou sawest is the world which I, Aûharmazd, created; and those seven branches thou sawest are the seven periods which will come. 16. And that which was golden is the reign of King Vistâsp, when I and thou converse about religion, and Vistâsp shall accept that religion and shall demolish the figures of the demons, and the demons desist from demonstration into concealed proceedings; Aharman and the demons rush back to darkness, and care for water, fire, plants, and the earth of Spendarma is becomes apparent. 17. And that which was of copper is the reign of the Askānian king, who removes from the world

2 Contracted here into Spendâd, as it is also in Bund. XXXIV, 8 in the old MSS. This name of the king is corrupted into Bahman son of Isfendiyâr in the Shâhnamah.

3 This brazen age is evidently out of its proper chronological order. The Pâzand and Persian versions correct this blunder by describing the copper age before the brazen one here, but they place the brazen branch before the copper one in § 14, so it is doubtful how the text stood originally.

4 Artakhshatar son of Pâpak and Shahpūhar son of Artakhshatar are the Sasanian forms of the names of the first two monarchs (A.D. 226-271) of the Sasanian dynasty, whose reigns constitute this brazen age.

5 Literally, ‘deliverance from sin’ or ‘salvation’ by one’s own good works, and, therefore, not in a Christian sense.

successors of Alexander were subdued in Persia by Ask (Arsaces I), who defeated Seleucus Callinicus about B.C. 236. But the third book of the \textit{Dînkard} (in a passage quoted by Haug in his Essay on the Pahlavi Language) mentions Valkhar (Vologeses) the Askânian as collecting the Avesta and Zand, and encouraging the Mazda-yasian religion. This Valkhar was probably Vologeses I, a contemporary of Nero, as shown by Darmesteter in the introduction to his translation of the Vendidad.

\textsuperscript{1} I am indebted to Professor J. Darmesteter for pointing out that Nêryôsang, in his Sanskrit translation of Yas. IX, 75, explains Kalariyâkâh as 'those whose faith is the Christian religion;' the original Pahlavi word in the oldest MSS. is Kilisâyâkî, altogether a misunderstanding of the Avesta name Keresâni, which it translates, but sufficiently near the name in our text to warrant the assumption that Nêryôsang would have translated Kilisyâkîh by 'Christianity;' literally it means 'ecclesiasticism, or the church religion' (from Pers. kilisyâ, Gr. ἱεραλησία). Akandgar is probably a miswriting of Alaksandar or Sikandar; though Darmesteter suggests that Skandgar (Av. skendar-kara, Pers. sikhandgar), 'causer of destruction,' would be an appropriate punning title for Alexander from a Persian point of view. The anachronisms involved in making Alexander the Great a Christian, conquered by an Askânian king, are not more startling than the usual Pahlavi statement that he was a Roman. To a Persian in Sasanian times Alexander was the representative of an invading enemy which had come from the countries occupied, in those times, by the eastern empire of the Christian Romans, which enemy had been subdued in Persia by the Askânian dynasty; and such information would naturally lead to the anachronisms just mentioned. The name Kilisyâkîh is again used, in Chap. III, 3, 5, 8, to denote some Christian enemy.

His doctrine appears to have been extreme socialism built upon a Mazdayasnian foundation. He was put to death by Khûsrû I, as hinted in the text. It is remarkable that none of the successors of Khûsrû Nôshîrvân are mentioned in the Bahman Yast, so that a Parsi, who even did not believe in the verbal inspiration of the book, might possibly consider the remainder of it as strictly prophetical.

In fact, hardly any of the numerous details which follow, except their long-continued rule, apply exclusively to Muhammadians. It appears, moreover, from § 50 and Chap. III, 8, that these demons are intended for Tûrks, that is, invaders from Turkistân, who would naturally come from the east into Persia.

Spitâmân!—the reign of Wrath with infuriate spear¹ and the demon with dishevelled hair, of the race of Wrath,—the meanest slaves walk forth with the authority of nobles of the land; and the religious, who wear sacred thread-girdles on the waist, are then not able to perform their ablation (pâdītyâvīh), for in those last times dead matter and bodily refuse become so abundant, that one who shall set step to step walks upon dead matter; or when he washes in the barashnûm ceremony, and puts down a foot from the stone seat (magh)², he walks on dead matter; or when he arranges the sacred twigs (bare-sôm) and consecrates the sacred cakes (drônô) in their corpse-chamber (nasât katak)³ it is allowable.

37. Or, in those last times, it becomes allowable to perform a ceremonial (yāzīn) with two men, so that this religion may not come to nothing and collapse¹; there will be only one in a hundred, in a thousand, in a myriad, who believes in this religion, and even he does nothing of it though it be a duty²; and the fire of Vāhrām, which will come to nothing and collapse, falls off from a thousand to one care-taker, and even he does not supply it properly with firewood and incense; or when a man, who has performed worship and does not know the Nīrangistān³ ('code of religious formulas'), shall kindle it with good intentions, it is allowable.

And a dark cloud makes the whole sky night, and the hot wind and the cold wind arrive, and bring along fruit and seed of corn, even the rain in its proper time; and it does not rain, and that which rains also rains more noxious creatures than water; and the water of rivers and springs will diminish, and there will be no increase. 43. And even those men of the good religion, who have reverenced the good religion of the Mazdayasians, proceed in conformity with (bar-hamakō rūbīsn) those ways and customs, and do not believe their own religion. 47. And the noble, great, and charitable, who are the virtuous of their own country and locality, will depart from their own original place and family as idolatrous; through want they beg something from the ignoble and vile, and come to poverty and helplessness; through them nine in ten of these men will perish in the northern quarter.

6 Very little reliance can be placed upon the details of this sentence, but it is difficult to make any other complete and consistent translation. Darmesteter suggests the reading hēnū, 'army,' but another possible reading is Khyōn (Av. Huyaona), the old name

The sovereignty will come from those leathern-belted ones\(^4\) and Arabs (Tázígân) and Rúmans to them, and they will be so misgoverning that when they kill a righteous man who is virtuous and a fly, it is all one\(^5\) in their eyes. 51. And the security, fame, and prosperity, the country and families, the wealth and handiwork, the streams, rivers, and springs of Iran, and of those of the good religion, come to those non-Iranians; and the army and standards of the frontiers come to them, and a rule with a craving for wrath advances in the world. 52. And their eyes of avarice are not sated with wealth, and they form hoards of the world’s wealth, and conceal them underground; and through wickedness they commit sodomy, hold much intercourse with menstruous women, and practise many unnatural lusts.

55. So Aûharmazd spoke to Zaratûst the Spîtâmân thus: 'Enquire fully and learn by heart thoroughly! teach it by Zand, Pâzand, and explanation! tell it to the priests and disciples who speak forth in the world, and those who are not aware of the hundred winters, tell it then to them! so that, for the hope of a future existence, and for the preservation of their own souls, they may remove the trouble, evil, and oppression which those of other religions cause in the ceremonies of religion (dtîndî yîsnân). 56. And, moreover, I tell thee this, O Zaratûst the Spîtâmân! that whoever, in that time, appeals for the body is not able to save the soul, for he is as it were fat, and his soul is hungry and lean in hell; whoever appeals for the soul, his body is hungry and lean through the misery of the world, and destitute, and his soul is fat in heaven.'

57. Zaratûst enquired of Aûharmazd thus: 'O Aûharmazd, propitious spirit! creator of the material world who art righteous!'—He is Aûharmazd through righteous invocation, and the rest through

58. Aūharmazd said to Zaratūst thus: 'Of the best men is he who, in that perplexing time, wears the sacred thread-girdle on the waist, and celebrates religious rites with the sacred twigs, though not as in the reign of King Vistāsp. 59. Whoever in that perplexing time recites Itā-ād-yazam (Av. ithā ād yazamādē, Yas.Vand XXXVII) and one Ashem-vohū, and has learned it by heart, is as though, in the reign of King Vistāsp, it were a Dvāzdah-hōmāst with holy-water (zōhar). 60. 5 For the following explanation of the various kinds of hōmāst I am indebted to Dastūr Jāmāspji Minochiharji Jāmāsp-Âsā-nā of Bombay:

There are four kinds of hōmāst recited by priests for the atonement of any sin that may have been committed by a woman during menstruation, after her purification:

1. Hōmāst consists of prayers recited for 144 days, in honour of the twelve following angels: Aūharmazd, Tistar, Khūrhshēd, Māh, Ābān, Ādar, Khurdād, Amerdād, Spendarmad, Bād, Srōsh, and Ardā-fravash. Each angel, in turn, is reverenced for twelve days successively, with one Yasna each day.

2. Khādūk-hōmāst, 'one hōmāst,' differs from the last merely in adding a Vendidad-every twelfth day, to be recited in the Ushwhomever prayer is offered up, and the Gâthahymns are chanted, it is as though the whole ritual had been recited, and the Gâthahymns consecrated by him in the reign of King Vistâsp. 61. The most perfectly righteous of the righteous is he who remains in the good religion of the Mazdayasnians, and continues the religious practice of next-of-kin marriage in his family.'

62. Aûharmazd said to the righteous Zaratüst: 'In these nine thousand years which I, Aûharmazd, created, mankind become most perplexed in that perplexing time; for in the evil reigns of Az-i Dahâk and Frâstiyâv of Tûr mankind, in those perplexing times, were living better and living more ahin Gâh (12 P. M. to 6 A. M.) in honour of the angel whose propitiation ends that day.

3. Dah-hômâst, 'ten hômâsts,' differs from the preceding merely in having a Vendidad, in addition to the Yasna, every day.

4. Dvâzdaemon hômâst, 'twelve hômâsts,' are prayers recited for 264 days in honour of twenty-two angels, namely, the twelve aforesaid and the following ten: Bahman, Ardibahist, Shahrivar, Mihir, Bahrâm, Râm, Dîn, Rashnû, Gôs, and Åstân. Each angel, in turn, is reverenced as in the last.

The celebration of hômâst costs 350 rûpîs, that of khaðukhômâst 422 rûpîs, that of dah-hômâst 1000 rûpîs, and that of dvâzdaemon hômâst 2000 rûpîs; but the first and third are now no longer used. The merit obtained by having such recitations performed is equivalent to 1000 tanâpûhars for each Yasna, 10,000 for each Visparad, and 70,000 for each Vendidad recited. A tanâpûhar is now considered as a weight of 1200 dirhams, with which serious sins and works of considerable merit are estimated; originally it must have meant a sin which was 'inexpiable' by ordinary good works, and, conversely, any extraordinary good work which was just sufficient to efface such a sin.

The amount of merit attaching to such recitations is variously stated in different books, and when recited with holy-water (that is, with all their ceremonial rites) they are said to be usually a hundred times as meritorious as when recited without it.
numerously, and their disturbance by Aharman and the demons was less. 63. For in their evil reigns, within the countries of Iran, there were not seven towns which were desolate as they will be when it is the end of thy millennium, O Zarathust the Spitama! for all the towns of Iran will be ploughed up by their horses' hoofs, and their banners will reach unto Padashkhvargar, and they will carry away the sovereignty of the seat of the religion I approve from there; and their destruction comes from that place, O Zarathust the Spitama! this is what I foretell.'

64. Whoever of those existing, thus, with reverence unto the good, performs much worship for Aúharmazd, Aúharmazd, aware of it through righteousness, gives him whatsoever Aúharmazd is aware of through righteousness, as remuneration and reward of duty and good works, and such members of

The version here given contains a few verbal deviations from that given in the Yasna, but none of any importance. The Avesta text of this formula is as follows:—
   Yexhê hátilm āad, yêsné paiî vanghô mazdau ahurô vaethâ, ashâd hakâ, yeunghâmê, tüsêta teuskâ yazamaidê.

   'Of whatever male of the existences, therefore, Ahuramazda was better cognizant, through righteousness in worship, and of whatever females, both those males and those females we reverence.'
the congregation, males and females, I reverence; and the archangels, who are also male and female, they are good.

CHAPTER III.

1. Zaratûst enquired of Aûharmazd thus: 'O Aûharmazd, propitious spirit! creator of the material world, righteous one! whence do they restore this good religion of the Mazdayasnians? and by what means will they destroy these demons with dishevelled hair, of the race of Wrath? 2. O creator! grant me death! and grant my favoured ones death! that they may not live in that perplexing time; grant them exemplary living! that they may not prepare wickedness and the way to hell.'

3. Aûharmazd spoke thus: 'O Zaratûst the Spítâmân! after the ill-omened sovereignty of those of the race of Wrath there is a fiend, Shêdâspîh of the Kilisyâkîh, from the countries of Salmân;' Mâh-

2 Literally, 'black-marked,' or possibly, 'black standard.'
3 The Pâz. MSS. add, 'the leathern-belted Türks,' that is, people of Turkistân.
4 This fiend appears to be a personification of Christianity or 'ecclesiasticism' (Kilisyâkîh, see Chap. II, 19), and the writer seems to place his appearance some time in the middle ages, probably before the end of the thirteenth century (see the note on § 44). Darmesteter suggests that Shêdâsp may have been intended as a modern counterpart of Bêvarâp (Az-i Dahûk), the ancient tyrant; and that this Christian invasion may be a reminiscence of the crusades.
5 I have formerly read Mûsulmân instead of min Salmân, and hence concluded that the text must have been written long

They have the red banner of the fiend Shêdâspîh of Kilisyâkth, and they hasten much their progress to these countries of Iran which I, Aûharmazd, created, up to the bank of the Arvand, some have said the Frât river, ‘unto the Greeks (Yûnân) dwelling in Asûristân;’ they are Greeks by strict reckoning, after the Muhammadan conquest of Persia; but this reading is irreconcileable with the context. The position of Salmân (Av. Sairîma) is defined by Bund. XX, 12, which places the sources of the Tigris in that country.

3 Here written Arang, Arand, or Arvad, but as it is Arvând in §§ 21, 38, that reading seems preferable, the difference between the two names in Pahlavi being merely a single stroke. The Arvand is the Tigris, and the Arang probably the Araxes (see SZS. VI, 20, Bund. XX, 8).

they may use it anew, and the fire may become shining in these countries of Iran which I, Aûhar-mazd, created. 11. For when one shall be able to save his own life, he has then no recollection of wife, child, and wealth, that they may not live, in that perplexing time, 0 Zaratûst! yet the day when the hundredth winter becomes the end of thy millenium, which is that of Zaratûst, is so that nothing wicked may go from this millennium into that millennium 1.

with the word kîthra, which means both pêdâk, 'clear,' and * tôkhmak*, 'originating,' but to express the latter meaning he used the synonym mâyakûk, which can be written exactly like mâhîk. Owing to the involved character of this section it is not very clear in English, but it is still more obscure in the Pahlavi text, in which the whole of this clause about the fire is inserted parenthetically after the first mention of *Padashkhvâr*gar.

1 This last clause may be read several ways, and it is by no means easy to ascertain clearly the chronological order of the events which are jumbled together in this last chapter. But it would appear that Zaratûst's millennium was to end at a time when the religion was undisturbed, and just before the incursion of the demons or idolators, the details of which have been given in Chap. II, 22–III, 11, and which is the first event of Hûshêdar's millennium (see § 13). Now according to Bund. XXXIV, 7–9, the interval from 'the coming of the religion,' in the reign of Kafr-Vistâsp, to the end of the Sasanian monarchy was $90 + 112 + 30 + 12 + 14 + 14 + 284 + 460 = 1016$ years. If by 'the coming of the religion' be meant the time when Zaratûst received it, as he was then thirty years old, he must have been born 1046 years before the end of the Sasanian monarchy (A.D. 651), and the end of his millennium must have been in A.D. 605, the sixteenth year of Khûsrî Parviz, when the Sasanian power was near its maximum, and only a score of years before it began suddenly to collapse. This close coincidence indicates that the writer of the Bahman Yast must have adopted the same incorrect chronology as is found in the Bundâhir. If, however, 'the coming of the religion' mean its acceptance by Vistâsp, which occurred in Zaratûst's fortieth or

It is when he comes to his conference with me, Aûharmazd, O Zaratûst the Spîtâmân!’ that in the direction of Kînistân, it is said—some have said among the Hindus—‘is born a prince (kaî); it is his father, a prince of the Kayân race, approaches the forty-second year, his birth must have been ten or twelve years earlier, and his millennium must have ended A.D. 593–595. But according to the imperfect chronology of Bund. XXXIV the tenth millennium of the world, that of Capricornus, commenced with ‘the coming of the religion,’ and ended, therefore, in A.D. 635, the fourth year of Yazdakard, the last Sasanian king, when the Muhammadans were just preparing for their first invasion; so the millennium of Aquarius is very nearly coincident with that of Hûshêdar, and may probably be intended to represent it. It appears, therefore, that the millennium of Hûshêdar is altogether past, having extended from A.D. 593–635 to A.D. 1593–1635.

Quite innumerable are the champions, furnished with arms and with banners displayed; some have said from Sagastân, Pârs, and Khûrâsân, some have said from the lake of Padashkhvârgar, some have said from the Hîrâtts and Kôhistân, some have said from Taparistân; and from those directions every supplicant for a child comes into view. 20. It is concerning the displayed banners and very numerous army, which were the armed men, champions, and soldiers from the countries of Iran at Padashkhvârgar—whom I told thee that they call both Kurd and Karmân—it is declared its native inhabitants, being Mumbaî. The locality mentioned in the text is evidently to be sought on the banks of the Oxus near Bukhârâ; the Oxus having been sometimes considered the upper course of the Arag, and sometimes that of the Veh (see Bund. XX, 22, note 5). It is hardly probable that either Bâmî (Balkh) or Bâmiyân would be changed into Bambô, and the only exact representative of this name appears to be Bamm, a town about 120 miles S. E. of Kirmân; this is quite a different locality from that mentioned in the text, but it is hazardous to set bounds to the want of geographical knowledge displayed by some of the Pahlavi commentators.

23. ‘When it is the end of the time, O Zaratūst the Spītāmān! those enemies will be as much destroyed as the root of a shrub when it is in the night on which a cold winter arrives, and in this night it sheds its leaves; and they will reinstate these countries of Iran which I, Aūharmazd, created.

24. ‘And with speed rushes the evil spirit, with the vilest races of demons and Wrath with infuriate spear, and comes on to the support and assistance of those demon-worshippers and miscreations of wrath, O Zaratūst the Spītāmān! 25. And I, the creator Aūharmazd, send Nēryōsang the angel and Srōsh the righteous unto Kangdez, which the illustrious Siyāvakhsh formed, and to Kītrō-mīyān, the glory of the Kayāns, the just restorer of the religion, to speak thus: “Walk forth, O illustrious Pēshyōtanû! to these countries of Iran which I, Aūharmazd, created; consecrate the fire and waters for the Hādōkht and Dvāzdah-hōmāst!

1 Compare, ‘and at the time of the end’ (Dan. xi. 40). The writer appears to be here finally passing from a description of the past into speculations as to the future, which he has hitherto only casually indulged in.

little about its contents (see Haug's Essays, pp. 133, 134). The Dînkard, in its eighth book, gives the following account of this Nask:—

'The Hâdôkht as it exists has three divisions among its 133 sections. The first has thirteen (twelve?) sections, treatises upon the nature of the recital of the Ahunavart, which is the spiritual benefit from chanting it aloud, and whatever is on the same subject. Admonition about selecting and keeping a spiritual and worldly high-priest, performing every duty as to the high-priest, and maintaining even those of various high-priests. On the twenty-one chieftainships of the spirits in Aûharmazd, and of the worldly existences in Zaratûst, among which are the worship of God and the management of the devout. On the duty requisite in each of the five different periods of the day and night, and the fate at the celestial bridge of him who shall be zealous in the celebration of the season-festivals; he who does not provide the preparations for the feast of the season-festivals, and who is yet efficient in the other worship of God. On how to consider, and what to do with, a leader of the high-priest class and a man of the inferior classes; he who atones for unimportant sin, and he who does not atone even for that which is important, and whatever is on the same subject. On the apparatus with which ploughed land (?) is prepared. On the manifestation of virtuous manhood, and the merit and advantage from uttering good words for blessing the eating and drinking of food and drink, and rebuking the inward talk of the demons. On the recitations at the five periods of the day, and the ceremonial invocation by name of many angels, each separately, and great information on the same subject; the worthiness of a man restrained by authority, the giving of life and body to the angels the good rulers, and their examination and satisfaction; the blessing and winning words which are most successful in carrying off the affliction which proceeds from a fiend. On all-pleasing creativeness and omniscience, and all precedence (?), leadership, foresight (?), worthy liberalitv, virtue (?), and every proper cause and effect of righteousness; the individuality of righteousness, the opposition to the demons of Aûharmazd's opinion, and also much other information in the same section.

'The middle division has 102 sections, treatises on spiritual and worldly diligence, the leadership of the diligent, and their mighty
26. 'And Néryôsang proceeds, with Srôsh the righteous, from the good Kakád-i-Dáittik to Kangdez, which the illustrious Styávakhsh formed, and cries out from it thus: "Walk forth, O illustrious Pêshyôtanû! O Kîtrô-mîyân son of Vistásp, glory of the Kayáns, just restorer of the religion! walk forth to these countries of Iran which I, Aûharmazd, created! restore again the throne of sovereignty of the religion!"

27. 'Those spirits move on, and they propitiate them; with holy-water the illustrious Pêshyôtanû celebrates the Dvázdah-hômâst, with a hundred and fifty righteous who are disciples of Pêshyôtanû, in black marten fur, and they have garments as it were of the good spirit. 28. They walk up with the words: "Hûmat, hûkht, hûvarst," and consecrate means, all former deeds of righteousness; righteousness kindling the resolution is the reward of merit, each for each, and is adapted by it for that of which it is said that it is the Hâdôkht which is the maintaining of righteousness, so that they may make righteousness more abiding in the body of a man.

' The last division has nineteen sections of trusty remedies, that is, remedies whose utterance aloud by the faithful is a chief resource among the creatures of God; also the nature of sayings full of humility, well-favoured, most select, and adapted for that of which it is said that I reverence that chief, the excellent and eminent Hâdôkht, of which they trust in the sustaining strength of every word of Zaratûst. Perfect is the excellence of righteousness (Av. ashem vohû vahístem astî).'

According to tradition three chapters of this Nask are still extant, being the Yast fragments XXI, XXII of Westergaard's edition of the Avesta Texts; but they do not correspond to any part of the description in the Dînkard. For a description of Dvázdah-hômâst see Chap. II, 59.

the fire of the waters; with the illustrious Hādōkht they bless me, Aūharmazd, with the archangels; and after that it demolishes one-third of the opposition. 29. And the illustrious Pēshyōtanū walks forth, with the hundred and fifty men who wear black marten fur, and they celebrate the rituals (yasnān) of the Gadman-hōmand ("glorious") fire, which they call the Rōshanō-kerp ("luminous form")¹, which is established at the appointed place (dātō-gās), the triumphant ritual of the Frōbā fire, Horvadad, and Amerōdad, and the ceremonial (yazsīn) with his priestly co-operation; they arrange and pray over the sacred twigs; and the ritual of Horvadad and Amerōdad, in the chapter of the code of religious formulas (nīrangistān)² demolishes three-thirds of the opposition. 30. Pēshyō-tanū son of Vistāsp walks forth, with the assistance of the Frōbā fire, the fire Gūsnāsp, and the fire Būreṁ-Mitrō³, to the great idol-temples, the abode of the demons⁴; and the wicked evil spirit, Wrath with infuriate spear⁵, and all demons and fiends, evil races and wizards, arrive at the deepest abyss of hell; and those idol-temples are extirpated by the exertions of the illustrious Pēshyōtanū.

31. 'And I, the creator Aūharmazd, come to Mount Hūkāiryād⁶ with the archangels, and I issue

Mîtrô of the vast cattle-pastures, Srôsh the vigorous, Rashn the just, Vâhrâm the mighty, Åstâd the victorious, and the glory of the religion of the Mazda-yasnians, the stimulator of religious formulas (nîrang), the arranger of the world, proceed to the assistance of the illustrious Pêshyôtanû, through the order of which I, the creator, have just written.

33. ‘Out of the demons of gloomy race the evil spirit cries to Mîtrô of the vast cattle-pastures thus: “Stay above in truth, thou Mîtrô of the vast cattle-pastures!”

34. ‘And then Mîtrô of the vast cattle-pastures cries thus: “Of these nine thousand years’ support, which during its beginning produced Dahâk of evil religion, Frâsîyâv of Tûr, and Alexander the Rûman, the period of one thousand years of those leathern-belted demons with dishevelled hair is a more than moderate reign to produce.”

35. ‘The wicked evil spirit becomes confounded when he heard this; Mîtrô of the vast cattle-pastures will smite Wrath of the infuriate spear with

1 The fact that the angel Vâhrâm goes in his spiritual form to the assistance of Pêshyôtanû, rather militates against the idea that he also goes in the form of Vâhrâm the Vargâvand.

2 This verb is omitted by mistake in K.20.

3 Literally, ‘arrive at the writing.’

4 Or, ‘stand up with honesty!’

5 The latter two names are here written Frâsîv and Alasandar.

6 From this it appears that the writer expected the evil reign of the unbelievers to last a thousand years, that is, till the end of Hûshêdar’s millennium, about A.D. 1593-1635, which corresponds very closely with the reign of the great Shâh ’Abbâs.
stupification; and the wicked evil spirit flees, with the miscreations and evil progeny he flees back to the darkest recess of hell. 36. And Mitrô of the vast cattle-pastures cries to the illustrious Pêshyô-tanû thus: “Extirpate and utterly destroy the idol-temples, the abode of the demons! proceed to these countries of Iran which I, Aûhar Mazda, created! restore again the throne of sovereignty of the religion over the wicked! when they see thee they will be terrified.”

37. ‘And the illustrious Pêshyô-tanû advances, and the fire Frôbâ, the fire Gûsnasp, and the triumphant fire Bûrzân-Mitrô will smite the fiend of excessive strength; he will extirpate the idol-temples that are the abode of demons; and they celebrate the ceremonial (yazîn), arrange the sacred twigs, solemnize the Dvâzdah-hômâst, and praise me, Aûhar Mazda, with the archangels; this is what I foretell. 38. The illustrious Pêshyô-tanû walks forth to these countries of Iran which I, Aûhar Mazda, created, to the Arvand and Vêh river; when the wicked see him they will be terrified, those of the progeny of gloom and those not worthy.

39. ‘And regarding that Vâhrâm the Vargâvand it is declared that he comes forth in full glory, fixes upon Vandîd-khîm (“a curbed temper”), and having intrusted him with the seat of mobadship of the 3 Probably a title of Pêshyô-tanû; a more obvious translation would be, ‘restrains a curbed temper, and is intrusted,’ &c., but it is hardly probable that the warrior prince Vâhrâm could become a priest. It is Vâhrâm’s business to restore the empire, leaving Pêshyô-tanû to restore the religion.

mobads\(^1\), and the seat of true explanation of the religion, he restores again these countries of Iran which I, Aûharmazd, created; and he drives\(^2\) away from the world covetousness, want, hatred, wrath, lust, envy, and wickedness. 40. And the wolf period goes away, and the sheep period comes on; they establish the fire Frôbâ, the fire Gûsnâsp, and the fire Bûrzân-Mitrô again at their proper places, and they will properly supply the firewood and incense; and the wicked evil spirit becomes confounded and unconscious; with the demons and the progeny of gloom. 41. And so the illustrious Pêshyôtanû speaks thus: "Let the demon be destroyed, and the witch be destroyed! let the fiendishness and vileness of the demons be destroyed! and let the gloomy progeny of the demons be destroyed! The glory\(^3\) of the religion of the Mazdayasnians prospers, and let it prosper! let the family\(^4\) of the liberal and just, who are doers of good deeds, prosper! and let the throne of the religion and sovereignty have a good restorer!" 42. Forth comes the illustrious Pêshyôtanû, forth he comes with a hundred and fifty men of the disciples who wear black marten fur, and they take the throne of their own religion and sovereignty.

43. Aûharmazd said to Zaratûst the Spitâmân: 'This is what I foretell, when it is the end of thy millennium it is the beginning of that of Hûshèdar\(^5\).

46. 'The sun with the swift horse stands still ten

(§ 13) for the purpose of mentioning some of his actions, and making the chronology of his millennium rather more clear. Nothing is said here about his miraculous birth, the details of which are given in the seventh book of the Dînkard very much as they are found in the Persian Rivâyats. The Dînkard states that thirty years before the end of Zarâtûst's millennium a young maiden bathing in certain water, and drinking it, becomes pregnant through the long-preserved seed of Zarâtûst (see Bund. XXXII, 8, 9), and subsequently gives birth to Ḥūshêdar.

¹ There seems to be no other rational way of understanding this number than by supposing that it represents the date of Ḥūshêdar's birth, counting from the beginning of Zarâtûst's millennium. According to this view Ḥūshêdar was to be born in the six hundredth year of his own millennium, and not at its beginning, as § 13 seems to imply, nor nearly thirty years earlier, as the Dînkard asserts. As the beginning of his millennium may be fixed about A.D. 593–635 (see note on § 11), the writer must have expected him to be born about A.D. 1193–1235; a time which was probably far in the future when he was writing. And as Vâhrâm the Vargâvand was to be born when Ḥūshêdar was thirty years of age (compare §§ 14, 44), and was to march into Iran at the age of thirty (§ 17), the great conflict of the nations (§§ 8, 19–22) was expected to begin about A.D. 1253–1295, and to continue till near the end of the millennium, about A.D. 1593–1635, when Pêshyâtânû was expected to appear (§ 51) and to restore the 'good' religion (§§ 26, 37, 42). An enthusiastic Parsi interpreter of prophecy might urge that though this period did not witness any revival of his religion, it did witness a restoration of the Persian empire under Shâh 'Abbâs, and also the first beginning of British power in India, which has been so great a benefit to the scanty remnant of his fellow-countrymen.

days and nights; and when this happens all the people of the world abide by the good religion of the Mazdayasnians. 47. Mitrô of the vast cattle-pastures cries to Hûshêdar, son of Zaratûst, thus: “O Hûshêdar, restorer of the true religion! cry to the sun with the swift horse thus: ‘Move on!’ for it is dark in the regions of Arzâh and Savâh, Frada-fsh and Vîdadafsh, Vûrûbarst and Vûrûgarst, and the illustrious Khvanîras.”

48. ‘Hûshêdar son of Zaratûst cries, to the sun he cries, thus: “Move on!” 49. The sun with the swift horse moves on, and Vargâvand and all mankind fully believe in the good religion of the Mazdayasnians.’

50. Aûharmazd spoke thus: ‘O Zaratûst the Spîtâmân! this is what I foretell, that this one brings the creatures back to their proper state. 51. When it is near the end of the millennium Pêshyôtanû son of Vistasp comes into notice, who is a Kayân that advances triumphantly; and those enemies who relied upon fiendishness, such as the Türk, Arab, and Rûman, and the vile ones who control the Iranian sovereign with insolence and oppression and enmity to the sovereignty, destroy the fire and make the religion weak; and they convey their power and success to him and every one who accepts the law and religion willingly; if he

1 The seven regions of the earth (see Bund. XI, 2, 3).
2 It is just possible to read, ‘the sun with the swift horse, the splendid, moves on, and all mankind fully believe,’ &c. But if the reading in the text be correct it effectually disposes of the idea of Vâhrâm being an incarnation of the angel, as an angel would require no miracle to make him believe in the religion.

accept it unwillingly the law and religion ever destroy him till it is the end of the whole millennium.

52. ‘And, afterwards, when the millennium of Hûshêdar-mâh comes, through Hûshêdar-mâh the creatures become more progressive, and he utterly destroys the fiend of serpent origin; and Pêshyôtanû son of Vistasp becomes, in like manner, high-priest and primate (rad) of the world. 53. In that millennium of Hûshêdar-mâh mankind become so versed in medicine, and keep and bring physic and remedies so much in use, that when they are confessedly at the point of death they do not thereupon die, nor when they smite and slay them with the sword and knife.

54. ‘Afterwards, one begs a gift of any description out of the allowance of heretics, and owing to depravity and heresy they do not give it. 55. And Aharman rises through that spite on to the moun-

2 See Bund. XXXII, 8. The name is written Khûrshêd-mâh in K. The Dînkard gives the same account of the miraculous birth of Hûshêdar-mâh as of the first Hûshêdar (see note on § 43); it also repeats the legend of the sun standing still, but for the longer period of twenty days; all which details are also found in the Persian Rivâyats.

56. ‘After that apostate shouts like this, and because of it, Aız-i Dahâk stands up before him, but, through fear of the likeness of Frêdûn in the body of Frêdûn, he does not first remove those fetters and stake from his trunk until Aharman removes them. 57. And the vigour of Aız-i Dahâk increases, the fetters being removed from his trunk, and his impetuosity remains; he swallows down the apostate on the spot, and rushing into the world to perpetrate sin, he commits innumerable grievous sins; he swallows down one-third of mankind, cattle, sheep, and other creatures of Aûharmazd; he smites the water, fire, and vegetation, and commits grievous sin.

58. ‘And, afterwards, the water, fire, and vegetation stand before Aûharmazd the lord in lamentation, and make this complaint: “Make Frêdûn alive again! so that he may destroy Aız-i Dahâk; for if thou, O Aûharmazd! dost not do this, we cannot

PART I.—The Original Treatise.

CHAPTER I.

o. In the name of God (yazdân) and the good creation may there be the good health, long life, and abundant wealth of all the good and the right-doers specially for him whose writing I am ¹.

1. As revealed by the Avesta, it is said in the Vendidad ² that these seven degrees (pâyak) of sin

² Referring to Vend. IV, 54–114, where seven classes of assault and their respective punishments are detailed. In our text eight classes of sin are named, although only seven degrees are mentioned; the second and third classes being apparently arranged together, as one degree of sin in § 2. Or the inconsistency may have arisen from the addition of the farmân, a class of sin or crime not mentioned in the Vendidad, unless, indeed, it be the farmân spôkhtanô, 'neglect of commandment' (referring probably to priest's commands), of Pahl. Vend. VI, 15. The other seven classes are thus described in Pahl. Vend. IV, 54–57, 79, 85, 93, 99, 106:

'By the man whose weapon (or blow) is upraised for striking a man, that which is his Âgerept is thus implanted in him. When it has moved forward—that is, he makes it advance—it is thus his Avôirîst, that is, Avôirîst is implanted in him and the Âgerept merges into it, some say that it does not exist. When he comes on to him with thoughts of malice—that is, he places a hand upon him—it is thus his Aredûs, that is, Aredûs is implanted in him and the Avôirîst merges into it, some say that it does not exist. At the fifth Aredûs the man even becomes a Tanâpûhar; things at are mentioned in revelation, which are Farmân, Ágerept, Ávôirist\textsuperscript{1}; Aredûs, Khôr, Bâzât, Yât, and Tanâpûhar\textsuperscript{2}. 2. A Farmân is the weight of four sunrise (avar-khûrshêd\textsuperscript{th} and in the forenoon (kâišt\textsuperscript{th}=kâst\textsuperscript{th}) are no more apart. . . . Whoever inflicts the Aredûs blow on a man \textit{it is} one-fifth of a wound (rêsh). . . . Whoever inflicts that which is a cruel Khôr (‘hurt’) on a man \textit{it is} one-fourth of a wound. . . . Whoever inflicts that which is a bleeding Khôr on a man \textit{it is} one-third of a wound. . . . Whoever shall give a man a bone-breaking Khôr \textit{it is} half a wound. . . . Whoever strikes a man the blow \textit{which puts him} out of consciousness shall give a whole wound.

This description does not mention Bâzât and Yât, unless they be the two severer kinds of Khôr; but Bâzât occurs in Pahl.Vend. IV, 115, V, 107, XIII, 38, though Yât seems not to be mentioned in the Vendidad. Aredûs occurs again in Pahl. Vend. III, 151, and Khôr in Pahl. Vend. III, 48, XIII, 38, and Yas. LVI, iv, 2.

\textsuperscript{2} Five of these names are merely slight alterations of the Av. Ægerepta, ayaorîsta, aredûs, hvarâ, and tanuperetha (pere- tôtanu or peshôtanu). The last seven degrees are also noticed in a very obscure passage in Farh. Okh. pp. 36, 37 (correcting the text from the old MSS. M6 and K20) as follows:—

‘Ágerept, “seized,” is that when they shall take up a weapon for smiting an innocent person; Ávôirist, “turning,” is that when one turns the weapon upon an innocent person; when through sinfulness one lays the weapon on a sinner the name is Aredûs; for whatever reaches the source of life the name is Khôr; one explains Bâzât as “smiting,” and Yât as “going to,” and the soul of man ought to be withstanding, as a counterstroke is the penalty for a Yât when it has been so much away from the abode of life. In like manner Ágerept, Ávôirist, Aredûs, Khôr, Bâzât, and Yât are also called good works, which are performed in like proportions, and are called by the names of weights and measures in the same manner. Of peshôtanu tanûm paîryêité the meaning is a Tanâpûhar; as they call a good work of three hundred a Tanâpûhar, on account of the three hundred like proportions of the same kind, the meaning of its name, Tanâpûhar, thereupon enters into sin. . . . A Khôr is just that description of wound from which stirs, and each stir is four dirhams (gūgan)\(^1\); of Āgerept and Avōirtst that which is least is a scourging (tāzānō), and the amount of them which was specially that which is most is said to be one dirham\(^2\); an Aredūs is thirty stirs\(^3\); a Khōr is sixty stirs; a Bāzāt is ninety stirs; a Yāt is a hundred and eighty stirs; and a Tanāpūhar is three hundred stirs\(^4\).

the blood comes, irrespective of where, how, how much, and where-with it is inflicted; it is that which is a wound from the beginning, and that which will result therefrom.

The application of this scale of offences is, however, not confined to these particular forms of assault, but has been extended (since the Avesta was compiled) to all classes of sins, and also to the good works which are supposed to counterbalance them.

1 The dirham has been variously estimated, at different times, as a weight of forty-five to sixty-seven grains, but perhaps fifty grains may be taken as the meaning of the text, and the stir may, therefore, be estimated at 200 grains. The Greeks used both these weights, which they called ḍrakmū and στατηρ.

2 The amounts of these first three degrees of sin are differently stated in other places (see Chaps. XI, 2, XVI, 1–3, 5). It is difficult to understand why the amounts of Āgerept and Avōirtst should here be stated as less than that of Farmān, and some Parsis, therefore, read vēhaast (as an irregular form of vīst, ‘twenty’) instead of vēs-ast, ‘is most,’ so that they may translate the amount as ‘twenty dirhams,’ but to obtain this result they would have to make further alterations in the Pahlavi text. In a passage quoted by Spiegel (in his Traditionelle Literatur der Parsen, p. 88) from the Rivāyat-MS. P12, in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris, it is stated that Farmān is seven stirs, Āgerept twelve stirs, and Avōirtst fifteen stirs. Another Rivāyat makes the Farmān eight stirs.

3 All MSS. have Aredūs si 30, ‘an Aredūs is thirty (30),’ leaving it doubtful whether dirhams or stirs are meant; and the same mode of writing is adopted in Chap. XI, 2.

4 All authorities agree about the amounts of the last five degrees of sin. These amounts are the supposed weights of the several sins in the golden scales of the angel Rashnū (see AV. V, 5), when the soul is called to account, for its actions during life, after the third night after death (see Mkh. II, 114–122). Its sins are supposed to be then weighed against its good works, which are estimated by the same scale of degrees (see the passage already quoted from Farh. Okh. in p. 240, note 2), and it is sent direct to heaven, or hell, or an intermediate place, according as the good works or sins preponderate, or are both equal. In the Avesta of the Vendidad, however, whence these degrees are derived, we find them forming merely a graduated scale of assaults, extending from first lifting the hand to smite even unto manslaughter; and for each of these seven degrees of assault a scale of temporal punishments is prescribed, according to the number of times the offence has been committed. These punishments consist of a uniform series of lashes with a horse-whip or scourge, extending from a minimum of five lashes to a maximum of two hundred (see Vend. IV, 58–114); each degree of assault commencing at a different point on the scale of punishments for the first offence, and gradually rising through the scale with each repetition of the offence, so that the more aggravated assaults attain the maximum punishment by means of a smaller number of repetitions. Thus, the punishments prescribed for Āgerepta, from the first to the eighth offence, are 5, 10, 15, 30, 50, 70, 90, and 200 lashes respectively; those for Ava-oirsta, from the first to the seventh offence, extend on the same scale from 10 to 200 lashes; those for Aredus, from the first to the sixth offence, are from 15 to 200 lashes; those for a bruised hurt (kvara), from the first to the fifth offence, are from 30 to 200 lashes; those for a bleeding hurt, from the first to the fourth offence, are from 50 to 200 lashes; those for a bone-breaking hurt, from the first to the third offence, are from 70 to 200 lashes; and those for a hurt depriving of consciousness or life, for the first and second offences, are 90 and 200 lashes. The maximum punishment of 200 lashes is prescribed only when the previous offences have not been atoned for, and it is to be inflicted in all such cases, however few or trivial the previous assaults have been.

Âatarô Âûharmazdân.

\(^4\) This commentator is mentioned in Chaps. II, 56, 74, 80, 118, 119, III, 13, VI, 4, 5; also in Pahl.Vend. III, 64, 69, 151, IV, 6, sake of the last of the future apostles and sons of Zaratûst (see Bund. XXXII, 8), and his name is often written Sôshân and read Saoshyôs or Sôsyôs by Pâzand writers.

\(^5\) This commentator is mentioned once in the Nîrangistân, and may probably be the Šatarô-frôbâg of B. Yt. I, 7; compare also Nûsaît Bûrê Mîtrô, the name of another commentator, in Chap.
VIII, 18.

\(^6\) This commentator is mentioned in Chaps. II, 1, 11, 12, 89, V,
5, 6; also in Pahl. Vend. III, 151, V, 6, 58, 107, VIII, 48, 110, IX, 132, XIII, 99, XIV, 37, and four times in the Nîrangistân.
His name is sometimes written Mêdyôk-mâh or Mûâdôt-k-mâh, and he was a namesake of Zaratûst’s cousin and first disciple (see Bund. XXXII, 2, 3). The Vâgârkard-i Dinik professes to have been compiled by Mêdyôk-mâh, but there appear to have been several priests of this name (see Bund. XXXIII, 1).

\(^8\) This commentator is mentioned in Chaps. II, 2, 64, 73, 88, of Sôshyans. 4. And all those of the primitive faith rely upon these six\(^1\) teachings, and there are some who rely more weakly and some more strongly upon some of them.

\(^1\) Both MSS. have 'three,' although four teachings and six commentators are mentioned in the previous section, and a fifth 'teaching' is mentioned in Chap. II, 2. The original reading was more probably 'six' than 'four,' as a Pahlavi 'six' requires merely the omission of a cipher to become 'three,' whereas a Pahlavi 'four' must be altered to produce the same blunder.

CHAPTER II.

1. For in the third fargard (‘chapter’) of the Vendidad of Mêdôk-mâh it is declared that when life is resigned without effort, at the time when the life departs, when a dog is tied to his foot, even then the Nasûs rushes upon it, and afterwards, when seen by it, the Nasûs is destroyed by it. 2. This is where it is stated which is the dog which destroys the Nasûs, the shepherd’s dog, the village-dog, the blood-hound, the slender hound, and the rûkûnîk;

the Nîrangistân. It must, however, be observed that the reading of some of these names is very uncertain.

1 Alluding probably to Mêdôk-mâh’s complete commentary on the Vendidad (now no longer extant), as the commentary on Pahl. Vend. III, 48, which treats of Sag-dîd or dog-gaze, does not mention Mêdôk-mâh or any of the details described here in the text; these details, however, are to be found in Pahl. Vend. VII, 4.

2 Reading amat barâ zûr gân dâd. This phrase occurs only in Mô (as a marginal note) and in the text of its descendants. Assuming that barâ may be a miswriting of pavan (see p. 176, note 5), we might read amat pavan zûr shûyâd, ‘when he shall wash with holy-water.’

3 The ‘corruption’ which is supposed to enter a corpse shortly after death, whence it issues in the form of a fiend and seizes upon any one who touches the corpse, unless it has been destroyed, or driven away, by the gaze of a dog, as mentioned in the text (compare Vend. VIII, 38–48). The carcase of a dog is considered equally contagious with the corpse of a human being, and when the fiend of corruption (Nasûs or Nas of Bund. XXVIII, 29) has seized upon any one, it can be driven out only by a long and troublesome form of purification described in Vend. VIII, 111–228, IX, 4–117.

4 This statement is now to be found in Pahl. vend. VII, 4.

5 See Bund. XIV, 19. The Persian Rivâyats of Kâmâh Bahrah and Kâmâh Kâmân (quoted in Bzg) describe these dogs as ‘the shepherd’s dog, the house-dog, the strange or tame (gharîb) dog, and the puppy.’

6 Probably the Av. sukûrûna of Vend. V, 100, XIII, 48, which and as to the rūkūnīk there have been divers opinions, as Vand-Aūharmazd\(^1\) asserted, from the teaching of Afarg, that it does not destroy it. 3. The dog destroys the Nasūs at the time when it sees the flesh, and when it sees the hair or nails it does not destroy it\(^2\). 4. A blind dog also destroys it at the time when it places a paw\(^3\) on the corpse; and when it places it upon the hair or nails it does not destroy it\(^4\). 5. The birds which destroy the Nasūs are three: the mountain kite, the black crow, and the vulture\(^5\); the bird, moreover, destroys it at the time when its shadow falls upon it; when it sees it in the water, a mirror, or a looking-glass, it does not destroy it\(^6\).

is translated by hūkar or hūkūr in the Pahlavi version. This fifth kind of dog is called ‘the blind (kūr) dog’ in the Persian Rivāyats; but Pahl. Vend. VII, 4 asserts that ‘Sōshāns said the rūkūnīk also destroys it,’ and then speaks of the blind dog as in § 4.

\(^1\) See the note on Chap. I, 4.

\(^2\) This is also stated in Pahl. Vend. III, 138.

\(^3\) See Pahl. Vend. VII, 4.

\(^4\) The Persian Rivāyats say this is because the Nasūs is concealed beneath the hair and nails (compare Vend. VII, 70).

\(^5\) These are the birds ‘created for devouring dead matter’ (see Bund. XIX, 25). Pahl. Vend. VII, 4 substitutes an eagle (dālman) for the vulture.

\(^6\) This sentence is probably defective, as the last clause evidently refers to the dog’s gaze (see Pahl. Vend. III, 138), and not to the bird’s shadow; the rule, however, is applicable to both. Thus the Persian Rivāyats state that if the bird’s shadow falls upon the hair or the nails of the corpse, or if the bird’s shadow, or the dog’s gaze falls upon a corpse in the water, or upon its reflection in a mirror, the Nasūs is not destroyed. Dastūr Jāmāspji is of opinion that the utility of the bird’s shadow is intended to apply only to cases of death in uninhabited places, where a dog is not procurable. As all three birds are such as feed upon corpses, it seems probable that the rule as to their utility was intended to pre-
6. Vand-Aûharmazd said, where a pregnant woman is to be carried by two men\(^1\), both are to be cleansed by the Bareshnûm ceremony\(^2\), and the head of the corpse, when they carry it away, is to be set towards the Dakhma\(^3\). 7. And on account of contamination vent any neglect of corpses found in wild places, where some of these birds would be sure to approach and let their shadows fall upon the dead; after which the finder of the corpse would suppose that the Nasûr was destroyed or driven away, and the corpse safer to approach.

\(^1\) This is an exceptional case, when not more than two men are available; the usual custom (see Chap. X, 10) is to employ four men and two dogs (double the usual number) in disposing of the corpse of a pregnant woman, on account of the double risk of contamination, owing to the Nasûr, or fiend of corruption, having seized upon two corpses at once. In consequence of the exceptional nature of the case, the mode of purification is also exceptional.

\(^2\) A long purification ceremony lasting nine nights, and described in Vend. IX, 1-145. Its name, according to Dastûr Hoshangji, is derived from the first word of the instructions for sprinkling the unclean person, which commence (Vend. IX, 48) as follows: Bare-shnûm hê vaghâthânem paitî-hîn-kôis, 'sprinkle in front on the top of his head.' As it is usual to quote chapters by their initial words, the initial word of these instructions for the ceremony became a name for the ceremony itself.

\(^3\) The building in which the dead are finally deposited; here called by its Huzvâris name, khazân. The Dakhmas used by the Parsis in India are like low circular towers in external appearance, and consist of a high wall enclosing a larger or smaller circular space which is open to the sky. The only opening in the wall is a small doorway, closed with an iron door. In the centre of the circular area is a circular well a few feet in depth, and the space around it is paved so as to slope gently downwards from the enclosing wall to the brink of the well. This paved annular area is divided (by shallow gutters grooved into its surface) into spaces, each large enough for one corpse to be laid upon it, with the head towards the wall and the feet towards the well. These spaces are arranged in two or more concentric rings around the well, and the gutters (which isolate each space on all four sides) drain into the two are not to be carried at one time, and two by one person are not proper; one dog and one person are proper. 8. Every one who understands the care of a corpse is proper; two boys of eight years old, who understand the care, are proper; a woman free from menstruation, or free from dead well. After a sufficient time has elapsed the dry bones are said to be thrown into the well, and when the well is full the Dakhma ought to be finally closed, and another one brought into use. These Dakhmas are erected upon some dry and barren spot, remote from habitations and water; upon the summit of a hill, if possible, as prescribed in Vend.VI, 93, and usually more than a mile from the town. In Bombay the town has gradually approached the Dakhmas, and to some extent surrounded them, but has been kept away from their immediate vicinity by the judicious measures of influential Parsis, who have acquired all the neighbouring land, and refrain from building on it. The reason for thus exposing their dead to the sun and carnivorous birds is that the Parsis consider fire, water, and earth too sacred to be defiled by corpses; and they have less consideration for the air. Next to burning, the Parsi mode of disposing of the dead is the most rapid and effectual, as it avoids most of the concentrated evils which must accumulate in crowded cemeteries in the course of time, and which require ages to dissipate. As it is, most of the offensive effluvium in the immediate vicinity of a Dakhma arises not from direct contamination of the air, but indirectly through the ground, which becomes polluted, in the course of time, by impure filtrations.

Dastûr Jâmâspji prefers reading patôšak, and thinks it means 'necessity,' as in cases where two deaths occur nearly simultaneously in the same house, when both corpses cannot be removed the same day. Such a meaning might suit this passage, but the word occurs again, in § 33 and Chap. IX, 7, where it can refer only to 'contamination,' and the etymology of paďvîšak (Av. paitâ + vish) is plain enough.

That is, when two persons cannot be found to carry a corpse, one can do it alone, provided he holds a dog by a string. This course is adopted, Dastûr Jâmâspji says, when a person happens to die in a place where only one Parsi is available.
matter, or a man, with a woman or a child of eight years old, is proper.

9. It is not to be carried all covered up, for that is burying the corpse; to carry it in the rain is worthy of death. 10. When clouds have been around, it is allowable to carry it away from the house; and when rain sets in upon the road it is not allowable to carry it back to the house; but when it is before a veranda (dāhlīz) one should put it down there; that is allowable when he who owns the veranda is apprehensive, and when he does not allow it inside; and, afterwards, it is to be carried away to its place, and when the water stands the height of a javelin (nīzak) inside, one puts it down and brings it away yet again. 11. Mēdōk-māh says that there should be a shelter (var) one should

1 In the terms aṣa-dashtānō and aṣa-nasāf the compound aṣa is written in an obsolete manner, both in M6 and K20. The meaning of the text is that either or both of the corpse-carriers may be any Parsi man, woman, or child who understands the proper precautions. Compare Pahl. Vend. VIII, 28.

2 K20 has ‘when curved it is not to be carried.’

3 That is, it is a mortal sin to allow rain to fall upon a corpse before it is deposited in the Dakhma.

4 Or ‘withheld,’ or ‘continuous,’ according as we compare hāmūn with Pers. āman (āmān), ambān, or hāmān.

5 Inside the Dakhma apparently. The meaning seems to be, that when the Dakhma is flooded the corpse is to be laid down in some dry place in its vicinity until the flood has abated. But according to Pahl. Vend. VIII, 17, it is allowable to throw the corpse in when the Dakhma is full of water.

6 See Chaps. I, 3, II, 1. Here, again, the quotation must be from his complete commentary, as it is not extant in the present Pahlavi Vendidad.

7 From Av. var, ‘to cover, to shelter;’ compare Pers. gullah, ‘a bower or shed.’ Nowadays the Parsees have a permanent shelter near the Dakhma. Pahl. Vend. VIII, 17 says, ‘to carry fasten above that place, and it would make it dry below; one should place the corpse under that shelter, and they may take the shelter and bring it away.

12. From the fifth fargard of the Vendidad of Medok-mâh they state thus, that at the place where one's life goes forth, when he shall die upon a cloth, and a hair or a limb remains upon the bedplace and the ground, the ground conveys the pollution, even not originating with itself (ahambûnik), in like manner down unto the water. 13. And when he is on a bedstead, and its legs are not connected with the ground, when a hair or a limb remains behind on the bedstead, it does not convey the pollution down. 14. When he shall die on a plastered floor the plaster is polluted, and when they dig up that plaster and spread it again afterwards, it is clean. 15. When he shall die on a stone, and the stone is connected with the ground, the stone will become clean, along with the ground, in the length of a year; and when they dig up the place, the stone being polluted is to be washed at the time. 16. When a stone is connected with the ground, or is separated, and one shall die upon it, so much space of the stone as the corpse occupied is polluted.

1 Or, 'it would make it very dry,' if we read awîr, 'very,' instead of agîr, 'below;' these two words being written alike in Pahlavi.
2 Quoting again from his lost commentary.
3 Or, perhaps, 'floor.'
4 This translation is somewhat doubtful, but the text seems to imply that the ground is polluted as deep as it contains no water.
5 K20 has had, 'the stone is all polluted, and will become clean at the time when they dig it up, the stone is all polluted, in so when they shall leave it, in the length of a year it will become clean along with the ground; and when they dig it up, the stone is all polluted, and is to be washed at the time; when the stone is not made even with the ground, above the ground the stone is all polluted, and is to be washed at the time.

17. Dung-fuel and ashes, when the limbs of a menstruous woman come upon them, are both polluted; and the salt and lime for washing her shift (kartak-shûf) are to be treated just like stone.¹

18. If one shall die on a terrace roof (bân),² when one of his limbs, or a hair, remains behind at the edge of the roof, the roof is polluted for the size of the body as far as the water; and they should carry down all the sacred twigs (baresôm)³ in the house, from the place where the pollution is, until there are thirty steps of three feet⁴ to the sacred twigs, so that the sacred twigs may not be polluted; and when his hair or limb has not come to the eaves (parakân) the roof is polluted to the bottom (tôhîk).

19. And when one shall die on a rîtâ, it is polluted much space as the corpse occupied it is polluted; but the additional matter seems to be struck out. Something analogous to the details in this paragraph will be found in Pahl. Vend. VI, 9.

² Or ‘an upper floor;’ Pahl. Vend. VI, 9 has, ‘when he shall die on an upper floor, when nothing of him remains behind at the partitions (pardoqân), the floor is polluted as far as the balcony (ásqûp) and the balcony alone is clean; when anything of him remains behind at the partitions, the floor is polluted as far as the balcony, the ground is polluted as far as the water, about the balcony alone it is not clear.’
³ See note on Chap. III, 32.
⁴ The gâm, ‘step,’ being 2 feet 7½ inches (see note on Bund. XXVI, 3) these thirty steps are about 79 English feet.
⁵ Meaning uncertain; the word looks like Huzvâris, but it is possible to read rîd-aê instead of rîtâ-i.
for the size of the body as far as the water; in the length of a year it will become clean along with the ground. 20. A built bridge is liable just like a terrace roof. 21. When one shall die on the terrace roof of a trellised apartment (varam), that is also liable just like a terrace roof. 22. When he shall die in a trellised apartment, when one of his limbs, or a hair, does not remain on the borders (parakân), it does not convey the pollution down, but when any of him remains behind it conveys it down; it is allowable when they dig it up¹, and one also spreads it again afterwards, and it is clean.

23. When one shall die by strangulation and a rope in a crowd, when there is no fear of his falling down they should not carry him down; and when there is a fear of his falling down, when that fear is as regards one side of him, they should carry him down on that side; and when he has fallen down they should carry him down in such place as he has fallen. 24. When one is seated upright and shall die, when there is fear of his falling on one side they should carry him down on that one side, and when there is fear on all four sides, then on all four sides; and when he has fallen down they should carry him down in such place as he has fallen ².

25. And when one shall die on a tree, when its

And when the bark of the tree is withered, when there is fear of it and when there is no fear of it, they should carry it down. 27. When he shall die on a branch of a tree which is green, when there is no fear of his falling off they should not carry him down. 28. And when there is fear of it, or it is a branch of a withered tree, when also, a hair originating with him, or a limb, remains behind on the particular tree, they should carry down the whole of the body. 29. And when one shall die inside, in the wine in the jar, if not even a hair or a curl originating with him remains behind on the jar, the wine is polluted and the jar not polluted. 32. When it is

2 The object of these rules is likewise to prevent the risk of the corpse defiling more of the ground than is absolutely necessary by falling upon it, as it might do by the breaking of a dead branch.

3 Nasât (Av. nasu) means not only a corpse or carcase of a human being, dog, or other animal of the good creation, but also any portion of such corpse or carcase; that is, solid 'dead matter' in general, as distinguished from dirt or refuse from the living body, or any liquid exudation from a corpse or carcase, which is called hîkhar (Av. hikhra).

4 Pahl. Vend. VI, 9 states, that 'when one shall die on a jar of wine, the jar is useless, and the wine becomes just as though its a jar in which there is oil, and dead matter (nāsāf), from outside of it, remains behind on it, this is even as though it remains inside it, because the oil comes outside and goes back to the inside, and both are polluted, the jar and the oil; and even on making the jar dry it is not fit to put anything in.

33. When a serpent (garzak) is in a jar in which there is wine, both are useless and polluted, for it makes them contaminated (padvīshak). 34. And when corn shall be in it, the jar is polluted and the corn clean; and when nothing originating with the serpent inside the jar remains behind on the jar, so much of the corn as includes the serpent, and upon which the touch (māli.sn) of the serpent has gone—because the touch of the serpent’s seed might be the death of one—is to be taken out and to be thrown away. 35. And when hair or dead matter, even not originating with the serpent, remains behind on the jar, the jar is polluted, but is serviceable (shāyad) on making it dry.

36. Brick, earth, and mortar are separated by course (ravi.sn) had been within three steps of the corpse. And when he shall die in the wine, when nothing of him remains behind on the jar, the jar is proper on making it dry’ (or, perhaps, ‘the jar is fit for bran-flour’).

1 Or ‘clarified butter;’ in this case the ‘jar’ is probably a globular vessel, or carboy, made of hide, through which the oil, or liquid butter, penetrates so far as to keep the outer surface greasy, which accounts for the remark about the oil passing in and out. Such vessels, called dabar, are commonly used for oil and liquid butter in India.

2 Assuming that khūškar stands for khūš-kar, as it does in Pahl.Vend. VI, 71; otherwise we should have to read thus: ‘and the jar is not even fit to put any bran-flour in.’

3 Again assuming as in § 32; otherwise we must read thus: ‘but is fit for bran-flour (khūškar).’
their own substance (pavan mindavam-i nafs-man), and are connected with the ground; being separated by their own substance is this, that so much space as dead matter¹ comes upon is polluted; being connected with the ground is this, that they would convey the pollution down unto the water. 37. Dung-fuel, ashes, flour, and other powdered things are connected with their own substance, and are separated from the ground; being connected with their own substance is this, that when dead matter comes upon them the whole of them is polluted; and being separated from the ground is this, that when dead matter comes upon them it does not make the ground polluted².

38. At a house in which the sacred ceremony (yazisn) is prepared, and a dog or a person passes³ away in it, the first business to be done is this, that the fire is to be preserved from harm; moreover, if it be only possible to carry the fire so that they would carry it away within three steps of the corpse⁴, even then it is to be carried away, and the

² That is, these substances communicate the contamination throughout their own substance, but not down to the ground.
⁴ Under ordinary circumstances fire must not be brought within thirty steps, or about 79 English feet, of a corpse (see Vend. VIII, wall is not to be cut. 39. Rōshan said that an earthen one is to be cut into, but a mortar one is not to be cut; below and above no account is taken of damaging (bōdōzēdīh) the wall. 40. To bring the fire within the three steps from the corpse is a Tanāpūhar sin; and when exudation happens to the corpse, it is worthy of death. 41. The prepared food in that house is all useless, and that which is not prepared is usable in the length of nine nights.

1 The name of a commentator, or commentary, often quoted in Pahlavi translations (see the note on Chap. I, 4).

2 Literally, ‘destroying the consciousness,’ or ‘injuring the existence.’ Bōdōzēd or bōdyōzad is a particular kind of sin which appears to consist chiefly of the ill-treatment of animals and injury of useful property. It is mentioned in Pahl. Yas. XXIX, 1b, Pahl. Vend. V, 107, XIII, 38, Farh. Okh. pp. 32, 33; and in some editions of the Khurdah Avesta it is defined as selling stolen men or animals into misery, or one’s own domestic cattle to the butcher, also spoiling and tearing up good clothing, or wasting and spoiling good food.

3 The meaning is, that if it became necessary to break through the wall in order to remove the fire unpolluted, the sin committed through damaging the wall will not be punished either in this world or the next.

4 That is, nearer than three steps, which is considered to be the minimum distance at which any degree of purity can be maintained.

5 A marg-argân sin, on committing which the sinner is required to place his life at the disposal of the high-priest (see Chap. VIII, 2, 5, 6, 21). It is usually considered equivalent to fifteen Tanāpūhars (see Chap. I, 1, 2).
or a month. 42. Clothing also in like manner, except that which one wears on the body; that, even in that time, is not clean, since it remains in use. 43. And the holy-water (zôhar), too, which is taken and remains in that place, is to be carried away immediately to the water; also the sacred milk (gîv) and butter (gum) in like manner. 44. Of the prayer clothing Vand-Aûharmazd said that it is usable in the length of nine nights or a month; the writer (dâpfr) said that it is when they perform the washing of hands, and wash it thoroughly, it will become clean at the time.

45. If in a house there are three rooms (gunañak), and one shall die in the entrance place (dargâs), if it be so that they may set the door open, and the corpse comes to this side, only this side is polluted; and if the corpse comes to that side, only that side is polluted; when it comes to both sides at once (aēvāk), only the entrance place is polluted alone, both the dwelling-rooms (khānak) are clean.

2 Av. zaôthra; this holy-water is consecrated by the priest reciting certain prayers while holding the empty metal cups in his hands, while filling them with water, and after filling them (see Haug’s Essays, p. 397).

3 The Av. gâus gîvyâ, ‘product of the living cow,’ which is kept in a metal saucer during the ceremonies, and used for sprinkling the sacred twigs (baresôm), and for mixing with the holy-water and Hôm-juice in the mortar (see Haug’s Essays, pp. 403, 405, 406).

4 Compare Pers. êûm, ‘fat;’ it is the Av. gâus hudhau, ‘product of the well-yielding cow,’ a small piece of which is placed upon one of the sacred pancakes, or wafers (drôn), during the ceremonies (see Haug’s Essays, pp. 396, 407).

46. And the vault of the sacred fires¹ alone does not become polluted.

47. If one shall die in a wild spot (vāskar), prepared food which is within three steps is all useless, and beyond four steps it is not polluted. 48. Prepared food is this, such as bread, boiled and roast meat, and prepared broth².

49. And the ashes (var) of the sacred fire³ become in a measure polluted.

50. Should they carry in the fire into that house in which the length of nine nights or a month is requisite for becoming clean, there is a sin of one Tanāpūhar⁴ through carrying it in, and one Tanāpūhar through kindling it; and every trifling creature (khūr or khul) which shall die and shall remain causes a sin of one Tanāpūhar. 51. Also through carrying water in, there is a sin of one Farmān; and to pour water on the place where any one’s life departs is a sin of one Tanāpūhar, and to pour it on a different place is a sin of one Yāt. 52. And to undergo ablution in the unclean house is all non-ablution. 53. And whoever goes into it needlessly, his body and clothes are to be every time thoroughly washed, and his sin is one Tanâpûhar; and when he goes in needfully it is neither good work nor sin.

⁴ See Chap. I, 1, 2 for the degrees of sin mentioned in §§ 50, 51, 53.

54. And this pollution is all in the sharp account (tâkhak amâr) when the life departs; the only thing which amounts to polluting is contact with the flesh, and even with the hair and nails. 55. Of the contact which is stated in the Avesta, the account is that it is from one side, and it ever cleaves to one; the curse (gaśîn) which is stated in the Avesta advances from all four sides. 56. Sôshyans said it is, until its exhibition to a dog, just as it becomes at the time when its life departs; a priest, a

1 That is, the ceremonial ablation (pâdiyâvîh), or washing, with water, the hands and arms up to the elbows, the face as far as behind the ears, and the feet up to the ankles, whilst a certain form of prayer is recited (see AV. p. 148, note).

2 Here again, as in § 38, the strict letter of the law is relaxed in case of necessity.

3 Meaning, apparently, that any pollution is taken into account, as a sin, in the investigation the soul has to undergo upon entering the other world. Much of this paragraph will be found in Pahl. Vend. V, 107.

4 Referring to Vend. V, 82–107, which gives an account of the number of persons through whom the pollution of a corpse or carcase will pass, which is in proportion to the importance of the dead individual. The statement here made is that the infection, passing from one to the other, enters each person only on one side, but the demon of corruption attacks them on all sides.

5 Meaning, probably, the Nasûs, or demon of corruption (see § 1), who is said to rush upon all those polluted as detailed in Vend. V, 82–107.

7 That is, until seen by the dog the corpse remains pervaded by the demon of corruption and hazardous to approach (see §§ 1–4).
warrior, and a husbandman are no use, for merely a dog is stated. 57. Kūshtanō-būgēd\textsuperscript{1} said the account is at the time when its life departs; and that which Kūshtanō-būgēd specially said is, ‘when anything is inside it (the place) the pollution is as far as to the place where that thing stands.’ 58. When a dog, or a goat, or a pig is requisite (dārvāi)\textsuperscript{2} it is proper, for the pollution does not attack further there; and the pollution of a child in the womb is along with the mother.

59. The direct pollution of a hedgehog\textsuperscript{3} cleaves to one, and not the indirect pollution. 60. Direct pollution (hamrēd)\textsuperscript{4} is that when the body is in contact with a corpse, and indirect pollution (paft-

\textsuperscript{1} See Chap. I, 4, note. This name is nearly always written Kushtanō-būgēd in Sls. in K20 and M6; it is not mentioned in Pahl. Vend. V, 107, although the details here quoted are there given in part.

\textsuperscript{2} The meaning is not quite clear, but this sentence is probably to be read in connection with the preceding one, as implying that where such domestic animals are kept they can be used for stopping the infection, as effectually as any inanimate object. The pig is here mentioned as a common domestic animal, but Parsis have long since adopted the prejudices of Hindus and Muhammadans as regards the uncleanliness of the pig.

rêd) is that when¹ one is in contact with him who touched the corpse; and from contact with him who is the eleventh² indirect pollution cleaves to one in the same manner. 61. The indirect pollution of an ape³ and a menstruous woman, not acting the same way, remains. 62. The shepherd's dog, and likewise the village-dog, and others also of the like kind carry contamination to eight⁴; and when they shall carry the carcase down on the ground the place⁵ is clean immediately; and that, too, which dies on a balcony (āskūp), until they shall carry it down to the bottom, is polluted for the length of a year.

63. Whoever brings dead matter (nasāi) on any person is worthy of death; he is thrice worthy of ¹ Reading amat, 'when,' instead of mūn, 'which' (see note to Bund. I, 7).

death\(^1\) at the time when a dog has not seen the corpse (nasát); and if through negligence of appliances and means (kār va tābānō) he disturbs it, and disturbs it by touching it, he knows that it is a sin worthy of death; and for a corpse that a dog has seen, and one that a dog has not seen, the accountability is to be understood to be as much\(^2\), and for the death and sickness\(^3\) of a feeble man and a powerful one. 64. Afarg has said there is no account of appliances and means\(^4\), for it is not allowable to commit a sin worthy of death in cases of death and sickness.

65. When they move a corpse which a dog has not seen with a thousand men, even then the bodies of the whole number are polluted\(^5\), and are to be washed for them with ceremony (pāsak)\(^6\). 66. And for that which a dog has seen, except that one only when a man shall move it all\(^7\) by touching it, his washing is then not to be with ceremony. 67. And when he is in contact and does not move it, he is to be washed with bull’s urine and water. 68. And

\(^1\) That is, he has committed a sin equivalent to three mortal sins (marg-argān).

\(^2\) Reading ves as equivalent to vēs.

\(^3\) Reading rākh tākh (compare Pers. rakhtah, ‘sick, wounded’).

\(^4\) This opinion of Afarg (see Chap. I, 3) is also quoted in Pahl. Vend. III, 48.

\(^5\) This statement is repeated in Chap. X, 33.

\(^6\) That is, with the Bareshnīm ceremony.

\(^7\) This exception (which is repeated in §§ 68, 71) seems to imply that §§ 66, 68, 71 refer to the collection of any fragments of a corpse found in the wilderness, or in water; and the exemption from the troublesome purification ceremony in such cases, is probably intended to encourage people to undertake the disagreeable duty of attending to such fragments.
when he shall move with a stake (dâr) a corpse which a dog has not seen, except that one only when he shall move it all, the washing for him is not to be with ceremony.

69. And when a man shall move a corpse, which a dog has not seen, by the hand of another man, he who moves it by the hand of a man, and he also whose own hand's strength does it are polluted in the bodies of both; and it is the root of a Tanâpûhar ² sin for him himself and of a Tanâpûhar for the other one, for this reason, because his own body and that also of the other are both made polluted through sinfulness. 70. And when there is not in him, nor even originating with him (ahambûnik), the strength of him whose own hand it is, it is just as though he would move it (the corpse) with a stake ³; and he who held it in the way of contact with his hand is to be washed with ceremony; and it is the root of a Tanâpûhar sin for him whose own hand it is, and of a Khôr ⁴ for himself. 71. When he shall move a corpse by the hand of a man, and the corpse is of those which a dog has seen—except that one only when he shall move it all— the washing for him is not to be with ceremony.

² See Chap. I, 1, 2. A sin is figuratively said to take root in the body, when it has to be eradicated, or figuratively dug up.
³ See § 68. If he employs another man to move the corpse merely because he is physically unable to do it himself, he escapes with less pollution than when he is able to do the work himself; but the man employed suffers the same in both cases.
⁴ See Chap. I, 1, 2.
72. When one is going by a place at night, and comes back there on the morrow, and a corpse lies there, and he does not know whether the evil (dûs) was there when he came by, or not, it is to be considered by him that it was not there.

73. Of a flock in which is a sheep by whom dead matter is eaten, of a forest in which is a tree with which dead matter is mingled, and of a firewood-stand (aesamdân) in which is a stick of firewood with which grease is mingled, Afarg said that it is not proper to make the flock and the forest fruitful, and the firewood is useless.

74. About a door on which a corpse impinges; as to the door of a town and city they have been of the same opinion, that it is to be discarded by his comrades (hamkâr); as to a door which is mostly closed (badtûm) they have been of different opinions,

1 Literally, ‘when I came by;’ the usual Persian idiom in such phrases.

2 This statement of Afarg’s, so far as it relates to greasy firewood, will be found in Pahl. Vend. V, i 4.

3 Or, ‘by the community.’ The same rule is mentioned in Pahl. Vend. V, i 4.

4 There is some uncertainty about this word. It is not the Pers. badtûm, ‘worst, vilest,’ because that is written vadtûm or vâtûm in Pahlavi; besides, the rule must apply to other than the vilest doors, otherwise it would not harmonize with § 75. It is not a miswriting of nîtûm, ‘lowest, most debased,’ for the same reason, and because it occurs elsewhere. It is not a miswriting of bêtman, a possible variant of bêtâ, ‘a house’ (although ‘a house-door’ would suit the context very well), because it occurs also in Pahl. Vend. V, i 4, XI, i 0, in which latter place it is clearly an adjective partially translating Av. bêndvô. And it would be hazardous to connect it with Pers. bîdûn, ‘outside,’ which seems merely a corruption or misreading of birûn. The view taken here is that badtûm stands for bandtûm, ‘most shut up,’ the nasal being often dropped in Pahlavi, as in sag for sang, ‘stone,’ &c.
Gōgōsasp\(^1\) said that discarding it by his comrades is likewise proper, and Ṣōshyans said that it is not proper; and as to other doors they have been of the same opinion, that it is not proper. 75. The door of one’s own chief apartment (shah-gās) is fit for that of the place for menstruation (dastān-istān), and that of the place for menstruation is fit for that of the depository for the dead (khazānō)\(^2\), and that of the depository of the dead is not fit for any purpose whatever\(^3\); that of the more pleasant is fit for that of the more grievous.

76. Any one who, through sinfulness, throws a corpse into the water, is worthy of death on the spot\(^4\); when he throws only one it is one sin worthy of death, and when he throws ten at one time it is then one sin worthy of death; when he throws them separately it is a sin worthy of death for each one. 77. Of the water, into which one throws dead matter, the extent of pollution is three steps of three feet in the water advancing; nine steps of three feet in the water passed over, and six steps of three feet in the water alongside\(^5\); six steps of three feet in the depth of the water, and three steps of three feet in the water pouring over the dead matter are polluted as regards the depth\(^6\). 78. When it is thrown into the midst of a great standing water, in like manner, the proportion it comes is ever as much as it goes, and is the proportion of it they should always carry away with the dead matter. 79. And when a man comes forth, and a corpse lies in the water, when he is able to bring it out, and it is not an injury to him, it is not allowable to abandon it except when he brings it out. 80. Sôshyans said that, when it is an injury, it is allowable when he does not bring it out; and when it is not an injury, and he does not bring it, his sin is a Tanâpûhar. 81. Kûshitanô-bûged said that even in case of injury it is not allowable to abandon it, except when he brings it out; when he does not bring it he is worthy of death. 82. And Gôgôsasp said that it is even in case of injury not allowable, except when he brings it out; and when, in case of injury, he does not bring it out his sin is a Tanâpûhar; and when it is no injury to him, and he does not bring it, he is worthy of death.

83. And when he shall wish to bring it his clothing is to be laid aside, for it makes the clothing

1 The sentence is obscure, but this seems to be the meaning; that is, when a corpse or any dead matter is thrown into a pond or tank, the pollution extends sixteen feet from it in all directions; and that quantity of water ought to be drawn off, in order to purify the tank (see Vend. VI, 65–71). As the corpse, in nearly all cases, must be either at the bottom or on the surface, the quantity of polluted water to be drawn off must be a hemispherical mass sixteen feet in radius, or about forty-eight tons of water.

2 See Pahl. Vend. VI, 64, where it states that bringing it out is a good work of one Tanâpûhar, and leaving it is a sin of the same amount.

3 See Chap. I, 3.

4 Reading amat, 'when', instead of mûn, 'which' (see Bund. I, 7, note).

polluted, and whatever he is first able and best able to bring is to be brought out by him. 84. When, too, he is able to bring it out through the breadth of the water, then also it is to be brought out so; and when he is not able, it is to be brought out through the length of the water; and showing it to a dog and the two men are not to be waited for.

85. And it is to be carried by him so much away from the neighbourhood of the water that, when he puts it down, the water which comes out dropping from the corpse does not reach back to the water; for when the water which comes out from the corpse reaches continuously back to the water he is worthy of death; and after that (min zak frâg) it is to be shown to a dog, and it is to be carried away by two men. 86. And when he wishes to throw it out from the water, Mard-bûd said it is allowable to throw it out thus, so that the water of the dripping corpse does not reach continuously back to the water; Rôshan said it would be allowable to throw it out far.

87. To drag it over the water is allowable, to grasp and relinquish it is not allowable; and when it is possible to act so that he may convey it from a great water to a small water, when the water is

1 So that less water may be polluted by the corpse taking the shortest route through it; but if that be impossible it must come out quickly, at any rate.

2 That is, the otherwise indispensable dog's gaze and two bearers must be dispensed with, if not at hand, in order to save time, until the corpse is out of the water (see § 85).

3 It might be, 'there was a man who said,' but Mard-bûd occurs in the Nîrangistân as the name of a commentator (see Chap. I, 4, note).

4 See Pahl. Vend. VI, 64 for this prohibition.
connected it is allowable, and when separated it is not allowable. 88. Afarg said it is allowable to drag it below through the water, but to drag it over is not allowable, for this has come on the water as a danger, and that has not come on it as a danger. 89. Mêdôk-mâh said it is allowable to drag it above, but to drag it below is not allowable, for the danger has gone out across the water, and the danger is not now to be brought upon it; and on that which is below, on which the danger has not come, the danger will at last arrive.

90. When he goes into the water he is to go into it with this idea, that 'should there be many below, then I will even bring all;' for whoever goes in not with this idea, and shall disturb any other one which lies there, will become polluted. 91. And if the corpse be heavy and it is not possible to bring it out by one person; and he goes out with this idea, that 'I will go and prepare means, and bring this corpse out of the water;' and when through sinfulness he does not go back his body is polluted and worthy of

92. When the corpse is so decomposed (pūdāk), when it is thus necessary to bring it out, that he must cut off various fragments, even after he cuts them off they are to be brought out; and for every fragment his hands and knife are to be washed with bull’s urine (gōmēz), and with dust and moisture (nambō) they are clean\(^1\). 93. And they are to be torn off\(^2\) by him, and for every single fragment which he brings out his good work is one Tanāpūhar

\(^2\) Or ‘twisted off,’ the Huz. neskhuṭanō must be traced to Chald. nēṭ to pluck out, to tear away, and seems to have a similar meaning in Pahlavi; its Pāz. equivalent vīkhtanō (Av. vig) ought to be compared rather with Pers. kīkhtan, ‘to bruise or break,’ than with bēkhtan or pēkhtan, ‘to twist.’

\(^3\) This negative is omitted in M6 by mistake.

\(^4\) Compare Pahl. Vend. VII, 32.

\(^5\) Or ‘go to pieces,’ that this is the meaning of vishūpēnd appears clearly from Pahl. Vend. VII, 123, but a Persian gloss in the modern MS. M9 explains it as ‘deposit fragments from the beak of a bird,’ meaning, of course, fragments of dead matter dropped by a carrion bird.

97. The clothing which is to be washed for the six-months' period is such as is declared in the Avesta. 98. If the clothing be leathern it is to be thoroughly washed three times with bull's urine (gōmēz), every time to be made quite dry with dust, and to be thoroughly washed three times with water, and to be laid out three months in a place to be viewed by the sun; and then it is proper for an unclean person (armest) who has not performed

1 Khshvās-māugōk is merely a corruption of the Av. khshvas maunghō, 'six months,' of Vend. VII, 36, where this form of cleansing is thus described: 'If (the clothing) be woven, they should wash it out six times with bull's urine, they should scour it six times with earth, they should wash it out six times with water, they should fumigate it six months at the window of the house.'

2 See Pahl. Vend. VII, 32.

4 See Vend. VII, 35.

5 A Persian gloss defines armēst as 'a woman who has brought forth a dead child,' and this is the general opinion; but that seems to be only a particular example of an unclean person who would be included under the general term armēst, for according to Pahl. Vend. IX, 133, 137, 141 a man when only partially purified must remain apart in the place for the armēst (Av. airima, compare Sans. il or rif) for a certain time. Nēryōsang, in his Sanskrit translation of Mkh. (XXXVII, 36, XXXIX, 40, LI, 7), explains armēst as 'lame, crippled, immobility;' it also means 'stagnant,' when applied to water; and its primitive signification was, probably, 'most stationary,' an appropriate term for such unclean persons as are required to remain in a particular place apart from all others, as well as for helpless cripples, and insane persons under restraint (see Chap. VI, 1). The meaning 'most polluted' would hardly apply to tank water.
worship, or it is proper for a menstruous woman. 99. Other clothing, when hair is on it, is liable just like woven cloth (tadak); all the washing of wool, floss silk, silk, hair, and camel’s hair is just like that of woven cloth; and woven clothing is to be washed six times.

100. Wool which is connected together, when one part is twisted over another, and a corpse rests upon it, is all polluted on account of the connection; and when fleece (mēsh) rests upon fleece, then so much space as the corpse rests upon is polluted.

101. When one shall die upon a rich carpet (būp) when the carpet is on a coarse rug (namad) and is made connected, the rug and carpet are both polluted, and when separated the rug is clean. 102. When several cushions are heaped (niḳid) one upon the other, and are not made connected, and dead matter comes upon them, they have been unanimous that only that one is polluted on which the dead matter came. 103. A cushion together with wool is liable just like a carpet with a rug.

104. Of several cushions which are tied down together, when dead matter comes to the tie, both are polluted, the cord and the cushions; and when the dead matter comes to a cushion, and does not come to the tie, the cushions are all polluted on account of the connection, and the tie is clean.

1 Pahl. Vend. VII, 35 says ‘when a single hair is on it.’
2 As mentioned in a note on § 95.
3 Literally, ‘impinges.’ Here, as in many other places, ‘dead matter’ may be read instead of ‘corpse,’ as nasāf means both or either of them.
4 That is, laid upon wool.
5 See § 101.
105. A pregnant woman who devours dead matter through sinfulness is polluted and worthy of death, and there is no washing for her\(^1\); and as for the child, when it has become acquainted with duties (pisak-shinâs), ashes\(^2\) and bull's urine are for its eating and for its washing. 106. As for a child who is born of solitary carriers of the dead\(^3\), although its father and mother may both have devoured dead matter through sinfulness, that which is born is clean on the spot, for it does not become polluted by birth.

107. Rôshan\(^4\) said that every one, who, through sinfulness, has become polluted by means of dead matter, is worthy of death, and his polluted body never becomes clean; for this one is more wretched than the fox which one throws into the water living, and in the water it will die. 108. One worthy of death never becomes clean; and a solitary carrier of the dead is to be kept at thirty steps from ceremonial ablution (pâdîyâvth).

109. Whichsoever of the animal species has eaten their dead matter\(^5\), its milk, dung, hair, and wool are polluted the length of a year; and if pregnant when it has eaten it, the young one has also eaten it, and the young one is clean after the length of a year from being born of the mother. 110. When a male which has eaten it mounts a female, the female is not polluted. 111. When dead matter is eaten by it, and even while it is not digested it shall die, it is liable just like a leathern bag (anbân) in which is dead matter.

112. Gold, when dead matter comes upon it, is to be once thoroughly washed with bull’s urine (gômêz), to be once made quite dry with dust, and to be once thoroughly washed with water, and it is clean. 113. Silver is to be twice thoroughly washed with bull’s urine, and to be made quite dry with dust, and is to be twice thoroughly washed with water, and it is clean. 114. And iron, in like manner, three times, steel four times, and stone six times. 115. Afarg said: ‘Should it be quicksilver (âvgînâk) it is liable just like gold, and amber (kahrupâi) just like stone, and all jewels just like iron.’ 116. The pearl (mûrvârîd), amber, the

1 The purification here detailed is prescribed for golden vessels in Vend. VII, 186.
2 This is the purification prescribed for silver vessels in Vend. VII, 74 W.; it is found in the Vendidad Sândah, but is omitted (evidently by mistake) in the Vendidad with Pahlavi translation, and has, therefore, been omitted in Spiegel’s edition of the texts. By this accidental omission in the MSS. silver is connected with the purification for stone (see § 114).
3 See Vend. VII, 75 W., much of which is omitted in the Vendidad with Pahlavi translation, and in Spiegel’s edition (see the preceding note), the sixfold washing of stone being erroneously applied to silver (see Vend. VII, 187 Sp.), owing to this omission of the intervening text. It appears from this section that the Av. haosafna, which has usually been translated as ‘copper,’ was understood to be pûlâvd, ‘steel,’ by the Pahlavi translators.
4 Or ‘a mirror’ (Pers. âbgînâh), but the word is evidently used for a metal in SZS. X, 2, and very likely here also.
5 Most of the substances mentioned in §§ 115, 116 are detailed in Pahl. Vend. VII, 188, where it is stated that ‘as to the pearl there have been different opinions, some say that it is liable just like gold, some say that it is just like the other jewels, and some say that there is no washing for it.’
ruby (yâkând) gem, the turquoise, the agate (shāpak), coral-stone (vasadîn sag), bone, and other substances (gôhar) which are not particularly mentioned, are to be washed just like wood; and when they are taken into use there is no washing, and when they are not taken their washing is once. 117. Of earthen and horn articles there is no washing; and of other substances which are not taken for use the washing is once, and they are declared out of use.

118. Firewood, when green, is to be cut off the length of a span (vitast), one by one, as many sticks as there are—and when dry one span and two finger-breadths—and is to be deposited in some place the length of a year, and water is not to be dropped upon it; and it is drawn out after the length of a year; Sôshyans said that it is proper as firewood for ordinary fires, and Kûshtanô-bûgêd said that it is just as declared in the Avesta: \footnote{This is doubtful; the word can be read pîrûnak, and has the Pers. gloss pîrûzah, 'turquoise,' in some MSS. If read pîlînak it might perhaps be taken for 'ivory.' But in Pahl. Vend. VII, 188 it is vasarîn ð, 'snowy,' and the reading there seems to be 'jet-black and snow-white stone-coral;' so here the original meaning may have been 'snow-white-and-jet-black coral-stone.'}

\footnote{That is, one-sixth longer than when green, the vitast being twelve finger-breadths, or nine inches (see Bund. XXVI, 3, note). The purification of firewood, here prescribed, is simply drying it for a year in short lengths; but Vend. VII, 72–82 requires it also to be sprinkled once with water, and to be cut into longer pieces.}

washed one, even then, is proper in dried clothing.}

119. About corn they have been unanimous that so much space is polluted as the dead matter comes upon; and of that which is lowered into pits, or is wanted to be so, and of that which is scattered (afšid) at such a place there are different opinions; Sōshyans said: ‘Should it be of such a place it is polluted as much as the dead matter has come upon it;’ and Gōgōsasp said: ‘Should it be so it is all polluted, and the straw is all polluted.’

120. A walnut, through its mode of connection, is all polluted, and the washing of both its shell and kernel (pōst va mazg) is just like that of wood.

121. A pomegranate also is of such nature as a walnut. 122. As to the date, when its stalk is not connected the date is polluted and the stalk and stone (āstak) are clean; the washing of the date is just like that of corn; and when it is touched upon the stalk, when the stalk, stone, and date are connected, the whole is polluted; as to the date when not connected with the stalk, and touched at the

1 Something similar is said in Pahl. Vend. VI, 71.
2 According to Vend. VII, 83–93 polluted corn and fodder are to be treated like polluted firewood, but to be cut into pieces of about double the length.
3 Reading dēn gōpān farōstak; the practice of storing corn in dry pits underground is common in the East and in some parts of Europe. In Pahl. Vend. VII, 93 it is dēn gōpān āvist, ‘concealed in pits.’
4 See Chap. I, 3.
5 Pahl. Vend. VII, 93 classes the almond with the walnut as a connected fruit, and the date with the pomegranate as a separated one.
6 The word is kūrāpak or kūrāsak, but its meaning is doubtful.
stalk, the date is clean, and the washing of the stone is just like that of wood. 123. The pomegranate, citron, quince, apple, pear, and other fruit, when in bearing and the rind (pazâvīnō) is perceptible on it, when dead matter comes upon it there is no pollution of it; and when the rind (pazâmisnō) is not perceptible on it, its washing is just like that of corn; and rind is ever with the citron 1. 124. For meat, butter, milk, cheese, and preserves (rikār) there is no washing 2.

Chapter III.

1. The clothing of a menstruous woman which they shall take new for her use is polluted, and that which is in use is not polluted 3. 2. When a bed-chamber (shâd-aūrvân) is overspread, and a carpet (bûp) is laid upon it and a cushion on the two 4, and

1 Pahl. Vend. VII, 93 says, 'fruit whose rind (pazâv) exists is also just like that in a pod (kûvak), and for that which does not remain in a rind, when pollution shall come upon it, there is no cleansing whatever. Afarg said that there is ever a rind (pazâvīnō) with the citron.'

2 Pahl. Vend. VII, 93 says, 'for everything separated there is a washing, except meat and milk.' Articles for which there is no washing cannot be purified.

3 Pahl. Vend. XVI, 5 says, 'when in the place she remains in for the purpose, she does not make the clothing she wears on her body polluted, it remains for use within the place.' The meaning is, probably, that clothing already set apart for the purpose does not become further polluted, so as to be unfit for her use. It appears also (Pahl. Vend. XVI, 5) that on the spot where menstruation first appears, not even the twigs uplifted in the sacred ceremony are polluted, unless the circumstances are abnormal.

4 This phrase, about the carpet and cushion, is omitted in K20 by mistake.
a woman sits upon it and menstruation occurs, when she puts a foot from the cushion on to the carpet, and from the carpet out into the bed-chamber, the carpet and bed-chamber are both polluted, for they are taken newly for her use, but of the cushion there is no pollution for this reason, because it is in use. 3. And when she sits on the cushion so that she shall have both the carpet and cushion in use, the bed-chamber is polluted by itself; and when all three shall be in use there is no pollution whatever.

4. Just as she knows that it is menstruation, in the place she is in for the purpose, first the necklace, then the ear-rings, then the head-fillet (kambār), and then the outer garments (gâmak) are to be put off by her. 5. When in the place she remains in for the purpose, even though she may remain a very long time for that purpose, yet then the outer garments are clean, and there is no need of leather covering and leather shoes.

6. When she knows for certain (aēvar) that it is menstruation, until the complete changing (gûharîdanô) of all her garments, and she shall have sat down in the place for menstruation, a prayer is to

1 §§ 2, 3 are merely corollaries from § 1.
2 Or, possibly, 'on the spot she is in on the occasion;' although it would appear from § 5 that the place referred to is the dashtânîstân, or place of retirement for the unclean.
3 Reading mārk va salmîhā, but both reading and meaning are doubtful. The first word may be muskō, 'musk,' and the other can be read sharîgāh, but, if so, the construction of the sentence is defective, as it stands in the MSS.
4 The dashtânîstân, a comfortless room or cell provided in every Parsi house for unclean persons to retire to, where they can see neither sun, moon, stars, fire, water, sacred vessels, nor righteous men; it ought to be fifteen steps (39½ feet) from fire, be retained \textit{inwardly} \textsuperscript{1}. 7. When worship is celebrated a prayer is to be retained \textit{inwardly}, and should menstruation occur the prayer is to be spoken out by her. 8. When in speaking \textit{out} the prayer should menstruation occur, both afterwards, when the time was certain (avīgūmān), and now \textit{she} is certain \textsuperscript{3}. 9. When she retains a prayer \textit{inwardly}, and a call of nature arises, there is no need for her to speak \textit{out} the prayer, for the formula for the call is to be spoken by her \textsuperscript{4}.

10. Hands sprinkled in \textit{ceremonial} ablution (pādīyāv), when a menstruous woman sees them, become quite unclean (apādīyāv) by \textit{her} look \textsuperscript{6}, and even when she looks hastily, and does not see the \textit{sacred} twigs (baresām), it is the same. 11. And \textit{on} the subject of a house (khānak-ī bābā), when a menstruous \textit{woman} is above \textit{in} it, and the \textit{sacred} twigs \textit{water}, and the sacred twigs, and three steps (8 feet) from righteous men (see § 33 and Vend. XVI, 1-10).

\textsuperscript{1} This kind of prayer (Av. vāk, ‘a word or phrase,’ Pahl. vāg, Pers. bāz) is a short formula, the beginning of which is to be muttered in a kind of whisper, or (according to the Pahlavi idiom) it ‘is to be taken’ and ‘retained’ inwardly (as a protection while eating, praying, or performing other necessary acts) by strictly abstaining from all conversation, until the completion of the act, when the prayer or vāg ‘is to be spoken out,’ that is, the conclusion of the formula is to be uttered aloud, and the person is then free to speak as he likes. Different formulas are used on different occasions.

\textsuperscript{4} The meaning is, however, uncertain.

\textsuperscript{6} See Pahl. Vend. XVI, 10.

12. Prepared food which is within three steps of a menstruous woman is polluted by her, and food which she delivers up (barā pardāzēd) from her morning meal (kāsht) is not fit for the evening meal (sām), nor that which she delivers up from her evening meal for the morning meal; it is not fit even for the same woman\(^2\); and water which is within three steps of her, when they shall put it into a pail (dūbal) or ablution-vessel (pāḍīyāvdān), and shall do it without handling (ayadman), is fit for the hands in ceremonial ablution. 13. When she touches the bedding\(^3\) and garments of any one, Sōshyans\(^4\) said that so much space is to be washed with bull’s urine (gōmēz) and water; her bedding which touches the bedding of any one does not make it polluted.

14. A menstruous woman who becomes clean in three nights is not to be washed till the fifth day; from the fifth day onwards to the ninth day, when-

\(^1\) Pahl. Vend. XVI, 10 says, ‘everything, when at the right distance, is proper, except only that one case, when uncleanness is above and cleanliness also right below; although it be even much below, yet it is not proper.’ In such a case the prescribed distance of fifteen steps is not sufficient; therefore, the dashtānistān should be on the ground floor, not over an underground water-tank, nor within fifteen steps of the water in such a tank.

\(^2\) Or, possibly, ham nēšman may mean ‘a companion woman,’ when two or more are secluded at the same time. Pahl. Vend. XVI, 17 says, ‘food delivered up by a menstruous woman is of no use whatever, it is not proper; in parīs free from pollution (gāvīdzāsnō), in those likewise it is not proper;’ the reading gāvīd-vasnō (proposed by Dastūr Hoshangji) is, however, doubtful.

16. A menstrual woman when she has sat one month as menstrual, and becomes clean on the thirtieth day, when at the very same time she became quite clean she also becomes again menstrual, her depletion (tīhīk) is from its beginning, and till the fifth day washing is not allowable. 17. When she has become free

1 See Pahl. Vend. XVI, 22. The Hebrew law (Lev. xv. 19) prescribes a fixed period of seven days, except in abnormal cases.

2 The same period of seclusion as appointed by the Hebrew law, after the birth of a man child (see Lev. xii. 2–4). The Avesta law (Vend. V, 135–159) prescribes only twelve nights' seclusion, divided into two periods of three and nine nights respectively, as the Hebrew woman's seclusion is divided into periods of seven and thirty-three days.

3 The substance of §§ 16, 17 is given in Pahl. Vend. XVI, 22, but in language even more obscure than here. The washing mentioned here is merely for the first menstruation; that for the second one being prescribed in § 18.
from the second menstruation she is not in cleanliness \textit{for} nine days \textit{and} nights,—these days \textit{and} nights are for watching,—\textit{and} then \textit{she} is to be washed; when the nine days \textit{and} nights are completed, on the same day washing is good\textsuperscript{1}.

19. Of leucorrhœa ($k\text{i}h\text{h}a\text{r}a\text{k}$)\textsuperscript{2}, when it \textit{has} quite changed colour, that which comes on before \textit{and} also that which is after menstruation, the pollution is just like \textit{that of} menstruation.

20. When she \textit{has} become so completely clean from menstruation that her washing may be as usual (da\textsuperscript{s}t\text{o}barag hâe), she does not make the \textit{sacred} twigs (ba\text{r}es\text{o}m), \textit{nor} even other things, polluted \textit{when} beyond three steps.

21. On account of severe cold it is allowable \textit{for her} to sit out towards\textsuperscript{3} the fire; and while she washes a prayer (vâg) is to be taken \textit{inwardly} by her\textsuperscript{4}, and the washing of her hands, except with bull's urine (gômêz), is not proper till \textit{then}; and when \textit{they are} washed by her, two hundred noxious creatures are to be destroyed by her as atonement for sin.

22. A woman who goes beyond the period of menstruation\textsuperscript{5}, and, afterwards, sees \textit{she} is polluted, when her pregnancy is certain—except when her miscarriage (nasāt yehevûntanō) is evident—is then to be washed with bull’s urine and water; when her pregnancy is not certain she is to be considered as menstruous. 23. Some say, moreover, that when miscarriage is certainly manifest she is, meanwhile, to be considered as menstruous. 24. Some say that when she is doubtful about the miscarriage she is to be washed with ceremony.

\textsuperscript{3} Da$t\text{urd}$ Jâmâspji reads val bavan-i åtåsh, 'to the part of the fire.' From what follows it would seem doubtful whether this distant approach to the fire is allowable until she is ready for washing.

25. And for any one who comes in contact with a menstruous woman, or with the person whom it is necessary to wash with water and bull’s urine, it is the root of a sin of sixty stirs. 26. And for whomever knowingly has sexual intercourse with a menstruous woman it is the root of a sin of fifteen Tanāpûhars and sixty stirs.

27. Of a menstruous woman who sees a fire the sin is one Farmân, and when she goes within three steps it is one Tanāpûhar, and when she puts a hand on the fire itself it is a sin of fifteen Tanāpûhars; and in like manner as to the ashes and water goblet. 28. When she looks at water it is a

4. That is, the sin is a Khôr (see Chap. I, 2).
5. According to the Avesta (Vend. XV, 23, 24) he becomes a peshōtanu (Pahl. tanāpûhar). The Hebrew law (Lev. xv, 24) makes him unclean for seven days.
6. See Chap. I, 2. That it was sinful for her to look at fire, even in Avesta times, appears from Vend. XVI, 8.
7. Literally, ‘on the body of the fire.’
8. That lihûsāyā means ‘ashes’ appears from Pahl. Vend. V, 150; literally it is Huzvâris for ‘clothing or covering,’ and is so used in Pahl. Vend. VI, 106, VII, 122. Metaphorically, ashes are the clothing of the fire.

sin of one Farmân; when she sits in water it is a sin of fifteen Tanâpûhars; and when through disobedience she walks out in the rain every single drop is a sin of fifteen Tanâpûhars for her. 29. And the sun and other luminaries are not to be looked at by her, and animals and plants are not to be looked at by her, and conversation with a righteous man is not to be held by her; for a fiend so violent is that fiend of menstruation\(^1\), that, where another fiend does not smite anything with a look (akhsh), it smites with a look.

30. As to a house\(^2\) in which is a menstruous woman, the fire of that house is not to be kindled; food which is delivered up from before a menstruous woman is not proper for the same woman\(^3\). 31. A tray-cloth (khvânô gâmak) which stands before her, when it is not in contact with her, is not polluted; a table-napkin (pataškhûr) when apart from her thigh, and contact does not occur, is proper\(^4\).

32. When one\(^5\) wishes to consecrate the sacred cakes (drôn)\(^6\), when one holds up the sacred twigs should be read gôbarak for gâv-bar, ‘bull’s produce,’ referring to the bull’s urine which, with ashes, is prescribed (Vend. V, 148) as the first food for a woman after miscarriage.

\(^1\) The demoness Geh (see Bund. III, 3–9).

\(^2\) By khânak, ‘house, abode,’ must here be understood merely the woman’s place of seclusion. K20 inserts âtás dên after mûn, which renders it possible (by assuming another preposition) to translate as follows: ‘As to a house in which is a fire, the fire in that house is not to be kindled by a menstruous woman.’

\(^3\) See § 12.

\(^4\) Fit to use again.

\(^5\) Perhaps we should read ‘she’ throughout this section, as a woman can perform these rites among women (see Chap. X, 35).

Pâz. writers) is a small round pancake or wafer of unleavened bread, about the size of the palm of the hand. It is made of wheaten flour and water, with a little clarified butter, and is flexible. A drôn is converted into a frasast by marking it on one side, before frying, with nine superficial cuts (in three rows of three each) made with a finger-nail while thrice repeating the words humat hûkht huvârst, 'well-thought, well-said, well-done,' one word to each of the nine cuts. Any drôn or frasast that is torn must not be used in any ceremony. In the drôn ceremony two drôns are placed separately by the priest upon a very low table before him, on its left side, the nearer one having a small piece of butter (gâus hudhâu) upon it; two frasasts are similarly placed upon its right-hand side, the farther one having a pomegranate twig (urvarâm) upon it; and between this and the farther drôn an egg is placed. The sacred twigs (baresôm) must also be present on their stand to the left of the priest, and a fire or lamp must stand opposite him, on the other side of the table. The priest recites a certain formula of consecration (chiefly Yas. III, r–VIII, 9), during which he uplifts the sacred twigs, and mentions the name of the angel, or of the guardian spirit of a deceased person, in whose honour the ceremony is performed. After consecration, pieces are broken off the drôns by the officiating priest, and are eaten by himself and those present, beginning with the priests (see Haug's Essays, pp. 396, 407, 408, AV. p. 147).

1 The baresôm (Av. baresma) consists of a number of slender rods or tâf (Pahl. tâk), formerly twigs of some particular trees, but now thin metal wires are generally used. The number of these twigs varies according to the nature of the ceremony, but is usually from five to thirty-three. These twigs are laid upon the crescent-shaped tops of two adjacent metal stands, each called a mâh-rû, 'moon-face,' and both together forming the baresôm-dân or 'twig-stand.' The baresôm is prepared for the sacred rites by the recital of certain prayers by the officiating priest, during which he washes the twigs with water, and ties them together with a kûstîk or girdle formed of six thread-like ribbons split out of a leaflet of the date-palm and twisted together; this girdle, being
33. And during her menstruation she is to be so seated that, from her body, there are fifteen steps of three feet to water, fifteen steps to fire, fifteen steps to the sacred twigs, and three steps to a righteous man. 34. And her food is to be carried forth in iron or leaden vessels; and the person (valman) who shall carry forth the food stands at three steps away from her. 35. When worship is celebrated, every time at the dedication (shnûmanê) of the consecration of sacred cakes (drôn yast) it is to be uttered aloud by her; some say the Ithâ and Ashem-vohû.

CHAPTER IV.

1. A sacred thread-girdle (kûstîk), should it be made of silk (parvand), is not proper; the hair (pashm) of a hairy goat and a hairy camel is passed twice round the twigs, is secured with a right-handed and left-handed knot on one side, and is then passed round a third time and secured with a similar double knot on the other side, exactly as the kûstîk or sacred thread-girdle is secured round the waist of a Parsi man or woman (see Haug’s Essays, pp. 396–399).

1 See Vend. XVI, 9, 10. All the ceremonial apparatus must be kept as far removed as the sacred twigs.

2 See Vend. XVI, 11–14, which states that the food is to be carried forth on iron, lead, or the basest metal.

3 This is the time when the name of the angel or spirit is mentioned, in whose honour the cakes are consecrated (see § 32, note on drôn, and Chap. VII, 8).

4 The Ithâ is Yas. V (so called from its first word), which forms a part of the drôn yast or formula of consecration (see § 32, note on drôn). The Ashem-vohû is probably that in Yas. VIII, 9, which concludes the consecration. The same details are given in Pahl. Vend. XVI, 17. These prayers also form a portion of all ceremonial worship, including the Yasîn.

¹ Literally, 'width,' that is, extra width, or slackness round the waist, as the girdle sits very loosely over a loose shirt; or, as the text implies, the slackness ought to admit three fingers together, projecting edgeways from the waist. After tying it so loosely, any unnecessary length of string may be cut off, when the girdle is put on for the first time. The necessary looseness is again mentioned in Chap. X, 1.

² Literally, 'extreme to extreme,' rôêsmân-â-rôêsmân being Huzvâris for sarâsâr.

³ That is, has begun the prayer formula (requisite while tying on the girdle) with a bâz or muttered prayer (see Chap. III, 6, note).

⁴ The meaning appears to be that he must not tie the girdle a second time without recommencing the prayer formula.

⁵ This word, aîêbyâêghânî, is chiefly a transcript from the Avesta name of the kûstîk or girdle, aiwayneghana. Probably garments in general are meant.

⁶ Perhaps dârfîn may mean cloth of bark, hemp, or flax here.

⁷ The sacred shirt, worn by Parsees of both sexes (young children excepted) in India, is a very loose tunic of white muslin, with very short loose sleeves covering part of the upper arm. It is called sadaro (Pers. sudarah) in Gugarâtî, and shapîk (Pers. shabî)
from each side, from the neck to the skirt (parîk); and as to the length before and behind, as much as is proper to cover up is good. 6. So much length and breadth, when it is double or thickened, are not proper; when on the separation (dûrmânak) of the two folds one remains clothed on one side, both when he wears the girdle (kûstîk), and when he does not wear the girdle, even then it is not undress (vishâdakîh).

7. When a shirt of one fold is put on, and the skirt has concealed both sides, the girdle is tied over it, and it is proper. 8. When two shirts are put on, and they shall tie the girdle over that which is above, then it is for him a root of the sin owing to running about uncovered.

9. By a man and woman, until fifteen years of age, there is no committal of the sin of running about uncovered; and the sin of unseasonable

1 Assuming that aítabarîd stands for astabarîd; the Huz. aít being substituted for the Pâz. aít. The text appears to refer to lined or stuffed shirts, such as would be very suitable for the cold winters of Persia, like the clothing padded with cotton wool used by natives of the cooler parts of India in the cold season.

2 That is, the degree of nakedness which is sinful (see §§ 8–10).

3 K20 has lâ, 'not,' instead of râţ, 'owing to;' this would reverse the meaning of the sentence, but it is not the usual place for the negative particle.

4 This sin is called vishâd-dûbârisnîh; it is mentioned in Pahl. Vend., V, 16, VII, 48, but not described there. The usual definition of the sin is 'walking about without the sacred thread-girdle;' and it is generally classed with the two other Parsi sins of 'walking with one boot' and 'making water on foot' (see AV. XXV, 5, 6); sometimes a fourth Parsi sin, 'unseasonable chatter,' is associated with them, as in the text, but this is supposed to be punished in a different manner in hell (see AV. XXIII).

5 Indicating that it is not absolutely necessary to wear the sacred thread-girdle till one is fifteen years old (see Chap. X, 13).
chatter arises after fifteen years of age. The sin of running about uncovered, as far as three steps, is a Farmân each step; at the fourth step it is a Tanâpûhar sin.

11. A girdle to which there is no fringe is proper; and when they shall tie a woman’s ringlet (gurs) it is not proper.

12. Walking with one boot as far as four steps is

1 This sin is called drâyân-gûyînîh, literally, ‘eagerness for chattering,’ and consists in talking while eating, praying, or at any other time when a prayer (vâg) has been taken inwardly and is not yet spoken out; many details regarding it are given in the next chapter. The sin consists in breaking the spell, or destroying the effect, of the vâg.

2 This is modified by Chap. V, 1, 2.

3 See Chap. I, 1, 2. These particulars are deduced by the Pahlavi commentator from Vend. XVIII, 115, which refers, however, to a special case of going without girdle and shirt. He says (Pahl. Vend. XVIII, 116), ‘so that as far as the fourth step it is not more than (af) a Srôshô-karanâm, and at the fourth step it amounts to the root of a Tanâpûhar within him; some say that he is within what is allowed him in going three steps. When he walks on very many steps it is also not more than a Tanâpûhar, and when he stops again it is counted from the starting-point’ (compare § 12).

4 Probably referring to the possibility of tying the girdle over a woman’s hair, when hanging loose down to her waist. The present custom among Parsi women in India is to cover up the whole of their hair with a white handkerchief tied closely over the head; but whether this is an ancient custom is uncertain.

5 This sin, which is mentioned in Bund. XXVIII, 13, is called aê-mûk-dûbâri.tînîh or khadû-mûk-dûbâri.tînîh, literally, ‘running in one boot,’ and is usually so understood, but how there can be any risk of the committal of so inconvenient an offence is not explained. Dastûr Hoshangji thinks that aê-mûk, ‘one boot,’ was formerly written avî-mûk, ‘without boots;’ and no doubt avî is sometimes written exactly like khadû, ‘one,’ (indicating, possibly, a phonetic change of avî into agvi). Perhaps, however, the word alludes to the Persian practice of wearing an outer boot a Tanâpûhar sin, when with one \(^1\) movement; and after the fourth step as much as one shall walk is a Tanâpûhar; and when he sits down and walks on the sin is the same that it would be from his starting-point (bûnth); and there were some who said it is a Tanâpûhar for each league (parasang).

13. At night, when they lie down, the shirt and girdle are to be worn, for they are more protecting for the body, and good for the soul. 14. When they lie down with the shirt and girdle, before sleep one shall utter one Ashem-vohû \(^2\), and with every coming and going of the breath (vayô) is a good work of three Srôshô-karanâms \(^3\); and if in that

(mûk) over an inner one of thinner leather, when walking out of doors; so that the sin of ‘running in one pair of boots’ would be something equivalent to walking out in one’s stockings; and this seems all the more probable from the separate account of walking ‘without boots or stockings,’ avîmûgak, given in Chap. X, 12. But whatever may have been the original meaning of the word, Parsis nowadays understand that it forbids their walking without shoes; this should be recollected by any European official in India who fancies that Parsis ought to take off their shoes in his presence, as by insisting on such a practice he is compelling them to commit what they believe to be a serious sin.

\(^1\) Assuming that hanâ, ‘this,’ stands for aè, ‘one’ (see p. 218, note 3). The amount of sinfulness in walking improperly shod appears to be deduced from that incurred by walking improperly dressed (see § 10).

\(^2\) See Bund. XX, 2. The same details are given in Chap. X, 24.

\(^3\) The Av. sraoshô-karana appears to have been a scourge with which offenders were lashed by the assistant priests (see Vend. III, 125, 129, IV, 38, &c.), and a Srôshô-karanâm was, therefore, originally one lash with a scourge. As the gravity of an offence was measured by the number of lashes administered, when this term was transferred from the temporal to the spiritual gravity of sin, it was considered as the unit of weight by which sins were estimated; and, by a further process of reasoning, the good works sleep decease occurs, his renunciation of sin is accomplished.

Chapter V.

1. Of unseasonable chatter that of children of five years of age has no root; and from five years till seven years, when one is under the tuition of his necessary for counterbalancing sins were estimated by the same unit of weight. Regarding the amount of a Sróshó-karānām there is much uncertainty; according to Chap. XVI, 5 and Pahl. Vend. VI, 15 it is the same as a Farmān, and this appears to be the case also from a comparison of § 10 with Pahl. Vend. XVIII, 116 (see note on § 10); but according to Chap. XI, 2 it is half a Farmān, and the Farmān is also probably the degree meant by the frequent mention of three Sróshó-karānām as the least weight of sin or good works that will turn the scale in which the soul’s actions are weighed after death (see Chap. VI, 3). This uncertainty may perhaps have arisen from a āe, ‘one,’ and the cipher 3 being often written alike in Pahlavi. But, besides this uncertainty, there is some discordance between the various accounts of the actual weight of a Sróshó-karānām, as may be seen in Chaps. X, 24, XI, 2, XVI, 5. As a weight the Sróshó-karānām is not often mentioned in the Pahlavi Vendidad, for wherever it translates the Av. sraoshó-karanā it means ‘lashes with a scourge;’ but the weight of one Sróshó-karānām is mentioned in Pahl. Vend. VI, 15, three Sróshó-karānāms in IV, 142, VII, 136, XVII, II, XVIII, 55, 116, and five Sróshó-karānāms in XVI, 8.

1 Patítikīh, ‘the dropping’ or renunciation of sin, is effected by confessing serious offences to a high-priest, and also by the recitation of a particular formula called the Patit, in which every imaginable sin is mentioned with a declaration of repentance of any such sins as the reciter may have committed. The priest ordains such atonement as he thinks necessary, but the remission of the sins depends upon the after performance of the atonement and the effectual determination to avoid such sins in future (see Chap. VIII, 1, 2, 8).

2 See Chap. IV, 9.
father and innocent\(^1\), it has no root in him, and when sinful it has root in the father\(^2\). 2. And from eight years till they are man and woman of fifteen years, if even one is innocent during the performance of the ritual (yastõ), but is able to say its Ithå and Ashêm-vohû\(^3\), and does not say them, it is the root of unseasonable chatter for him; and when he is able to perform his ritual by heart (narm), and says only the Ithå and Ashem-vohû, some have said that such is as when his ritual is not performed and there is no offering (yastõfrïd), and some have said that it is not unseasonable chatter.

3. Unseasonable chatter may occur at every ceremonial (yazïsnô); for him who has performed the ritual it is a Tanâpûhar sin\(^5\); for him who has not performed the ritual it is less, some have said three Srôshô-karanâms\(^6\). 4. The measure of unseasonable chatter is a Tanâpûhar sin; this is where every ceremony, or every morsel, or every drop of urine is not completed\(^7\). 5. Of the unseasonable chatter of

\(^2\) Because the father is supposed to be responsible, in the next world, for the sins of the child, even as he will profit by its good works (see Chaps. X, 22, XII, 15).

\(^3\) See Chap. III, 35.

\(^4\) Inattention to prayers evinced by improper silence is thus put upon the same footing as inattention evinced by improper talking. This portion of the sentence is omitted in K20.

\(^5\) See Chap. I, 1, 2. It is a greater sin in the officiating priests than in the other persons present at the ceremony.

\(^6\) Probably a Farmân sin (see Chap. IV, 14, note).

\(^7\) Referring to the three principal occasions when a prayer (våg) is taken inwardly and retained until the completion of the action; during which time it is unlawful to say anything but the prescribed prayers (see Chap. III, 6, note).
him who has not performed the ritual Afarg⁠¹ said this degree is slighter; Mêdôk-mâh⁠¹ said both are alike, and he spoke further of this, since for him who has not performed the ritual, and does not attend to⁠² saying its Ithâ and Ashem-vohû, it is more severe than for him who has performed the ritual, and does not attend to consecrating its sacred cake (drôn). 6. Mêdôk-mâh said that it (the ceremonial)⁢³ does not become Gê tô-kharîd⁣⁴; Afarg said that it amounts to an offering (yastôfrîd)⁤⁵ for every one, except for that person who knows the ritual by heart, and through sinful will not perform it; and it becomes his at the time when, during his life and by his command, it is recited with this intention, namely: 'I wish to do it, my faith (astôbânth) is in the religion.'⁶

7. The deaf and dumb when it is not possible for him to say an Ashem does not commit unseasonable chatter⁷; and when it is possible for him to say an Ashem he shall three times say of it, 'Ashem, ashem, ashem;' and if it be possible for him to say

⁵ The MSS. have merely stôfrîd, which differs from the foregoing gê tô-kharîd only in one Pahlavi letter, so we should probably read the same word in both cases, but which of them it ought to be is uncertain.
⁷ By omitting to say it (see § 2). This clause of the sentence is omitted in Kəo.
'ithā' and 'ashem-vohū' it is well, and when it is only possible for him to say 'ithā' it matters not.

CHAPTER VI.

1. The deaf and dumb and helpless (armēst), though of unblemished conduct and proper disposition, is incapable of doing good works, and from the time when he is born till the time when he shall die, all the duty and good works which they may perform in the world become his property (nafs-man) as much as his even by whom they are performed; some say that it is thus: as much as they belong to Zaratūst. 2. Though he does not do the good works not really originating with (ahambūniķ) him, and does not commit the sin not really originating with him, it is better than though he were able to do the good works not really originating with him, and should not do them; but should commit the sin not really originating with him; when, afterwards, he passes away, and then also comes to his account as to sin and good works, when the good works not really originating with him are more he is in heaven (vahist), when the sin

1 That is, any one barely able to speak must repeat so much of the indispensable prayers as he is able to pronounce, otherwise he will commit sin.

2 That is, any one compelled to remain stationary or secluded, owing to bodily or mental infirmity (see Chap. II, 98); an idiot, or insane person, is probably meant here.

3 This comment seems to imply that its writer was translating from an Avesta text, and here met with a word which some persons thought contained a reference to Zaratūst, but which he first translated so as to suit the context; perhaps Av. zarazdāiti may be suggested.
not really originating with him is more he is in hell; and when both are equal he is among the ever-stationary (hamistakân)\(^1\). 3. When the good works are three Srôshô-karanâms\(^2\) more than the sins: he is in heaven (vahist), when the good works are one Tanápûhar more he attains to the best existence (pahlûm ahvân)\(^3\), when his ceremony (yast) is per-

\(^1\) That is, he is treated, with regard to the actions merely imputed to him, precisely as all others are with regard to their own actions. With reference to the hamistakân, Ardâ-Vitrâf states (AV.VI, 2, 5–12) that on his journey to the other world he saw the souls of several people who remain in the same position, and he was informed that they call this the place of the Hamis-takân (“those ever-stationary”), and these souls remain in this place till the future existence; and they are the souls of those people whose good works and sin were equal. Speak out to the worldlings thus: “Consider not the easier good works with avarice and vexation! for every one whose good works are three Srôshô-karanâms more than his sin is for heaven, they whose sin is more are for hell, they in whom both are equal remain among these Hamistakân till the future existence.” And their punishment is cold or heat from the changing of the atmosphere; and they have no other adversity.”

\(^2\) Probably equivalent to a Farmân sin (see Chaps, I, 1, 2, IV, 14, note).

\(^3\) This appears to be another name for Garôdmân, ‘the abode of song,’ which is the highest heaven, or dwelling of Aûharmazd. The lower heaven is here called Vahist, which is a general term for heaven in general. AV.VII–X, XVII, 27, and Mkh. VII, 9–12, 20, 21 describe four grades in heaven and four in hell, besides the intermediate neutral position of the Hamistakân (AV. VI, Mkh. VII, 18, 19). The four grades of heaven, proceeding upwards, are Hûmat for good thoughts in the station of the stars, Hûkht for good words in the station of the moon, Hûvarst for good deeds in the station of the sun, and Garôdmân where Aûharmazd dwells (Vend. XIX, 121). And the four grades of hell, proceeding downwards, are Dûs-hûmat for evil thoughts, Dûs-hûkht for evil words, Dûs-hûvarst for evil deeds, and the darkest hell (Vend. XIX, 147) where the evil spirit dwells. The pahlûm ahvân of best existence it is not necessary to perform the ceremony, for when his good works are one Tanâ-pûhar more than the sin he attains to the best existence, and no account is taken of performing his ceremony; because in the heavenly existence (garôdmânîkîh) it is not necessary to perform a ceremony, for an excess of good works must attain Garôdmân. 5. As Sôshyans said, in heaven (vahîst) he who is below is elevated to him who is above; and it says thus: ‘Happy indeed art thou, O man! who art in any way near unto that imperishable existence.’

6. Kûshtanô-bûgêd said that an infidel (ak-dînô) when his good works are one Tanâpûhar more than his sin, is saved from hell.

the text is merely the Pahlavi form of Av. vahîstem ahûm (Vend. VII, r33, XVIII, 69, XIX, r20, Yas. IX, 64), whence the term vahîst (Pers. bâhist) is also derived.

1 That is, when his surviving relatives have performed the proper religious ceremonies after his death.

8 See Chap. I, 3.

5 Reading aê, ‘one,’ and supposing that this Päz. form has been substituted for an original Huz. khandûk, ‘one.’ This supposition being necessary to account for the aê preceding its noun, instead of following it; and without it we ought to read ‘three’ instead of ‘one,’ which seems, however, hardly reconcilable with the context (but compare Pahl. Vend. VII, r36). This is an instance of the ambiguity occasioned by aê, ‘one,’ and the cipher 3 being often written alike in Pahlavi, as already noticed in p. 289, note 3. The word might also be taken as the conditional verbal form aê, ‘shall be,’ but in that case it is likewise misplaced.

4 See note on pâhlûm ahvân in § 3.

6 A somewhat similar exclamation to that in Vend. VII, r36.

7 That is, one of another religion; not an apostate, nor an atheist.
7. Of a pure law (dād') are we of the good religion, and we are of the primitive faith; of a mixed law are those of the Sinîk congregation; of a vile

1 It is not easy to identify this Sinîk vaskardih, but Professor J. Darmesteter suggests that the term may have been applied to the Manicheans settled in eastern Turkistân and western China, whence they may have been called Sinîk (the country of the Sênî, Av. Sâîni, being identified with Kînîstân or China in Bund. XV, 29, because Tsîn is the Arabic name of the latter). This is confirmed, to some extent, by a passage in the Dînkard (see Dastûr Pêshôtân's edition of the Pahlavi text, p. 27), where three foreign religions are mentioned, that of the Jews from Arûm, that of the Messiah from the west, and that of Mânî from Turkistân. Darmesteter further points out the following passages in Barbier de Meynard's French translation of Mas'âdû, which show that the Manicheans had considerable influence in eastern Turkistân as late as A.D. 944:—

(Meynard, I, 268): '... the Turks, the Khuzûg, and the Taghazghaz, who occupy the town of Kûsân, situated between Khurâsân and China, and who are now (A.D. 944) the most valiant, most powerful, and best governed of all the Turkish races and tribes. Their kings bear the title of īrkhân. ("sub-khân?") and they alone, among all these nations, profess the religion of Mânî.'

Again, after stating that the Chinese were at first Samanians (Buddhists), it is added (Meynard, II, 258): 'Their kingdom is contiguous to that of the Taghazghaz, who, as we have said above, are Manicheans, and proclaim the simultaneous existence of the two principles of light and darkness. These people were living in simplicity, and in a faith like that of the Turkish races, when there turned up among them a demon of the dualist sect, who showed them, in tempting language, two opposing principles in everything that exists in the world, such as life and death, health and sickness, riches and poverty, light and darkness, union and separation, connection and severance, rising and setting, existence and non-existence, night and day, &c. Then, he spoke to them of the various ailments which afflict rational beings, animals, children, idiots, and madmen; and he added that God could not be responsible for this evil, which was in distressing contradiction to the excellence which distinguishes his works, and that he was

CHAPTER VII.

1. The morning sun it is necessary to reverence (yastanô) till midday, and that of midday it is necessary to reverence till the afternoon time, and that of the afternoon time it is necessary to reverence till night\(^3\); whenever one is quite prepared above any such imputation. By these quibbles, and others like them, he carried away their minds, and made them adopt his errors.'

The tenets of the Manicheans ought, no doubt, to have been considered by the Zoroastrians as a mixture of truth and error, just as those of the Sinîk congregation are represented to be in our text; but such tenets being an heretical offshoot of Zoroastrianism, it argues unusual liberality in the priests if they preferred Manicheans to Christians, that is, heretics to infidels.

Kâo has altered sinîk vasÎrâdîh into nisînîk (or vidînîk) siÎkaftîh, which appears to be an attempt to bring the words within the limits of the writer's knowledge, without paying much attention to their collective meaning.

\(^1\) A sect which (according to its name) probably adhered to a certain heretical interpretation (zand) in preference to the orthodox Avesta and Zand. Nêryôsang, in his Sanskrit version of Mkh. XXXVI, 16, explains a Zandik as one who 'thinks well of Aharman and the demons.'

\(^2\) Unless this paragraph be a continuation of the quotation from Kûshtanô-bûgêd's commentary, which seems unlikely, its contents have an important bearing upon the age of the Shâyast lâ-shâyast. As it does not mention Muhammadanism by name it could hardly have been written after the fall of the Sasanian dynasty, when that new faith had become much more important, in Persia, than those of the Christians and Jews.

\(^3\) Referring to the recitation of the Khûrshêd Nyâyir, or 'salutation of the sun,' which should be performed thrice a day, in the Hâvan, Rapîtvin, and Aûzêrin Gâhs, or periods of the day (see for activity (khvēskārth), and shall then do reverence, it is proper. 2. And when anything of that happens which indicates when it is not proper to wash the hands, and about this he considers that when he does not reverence the sun it will stop; at the time previous to that in which it occurs the sun is to be fully reverenced by him, and, afterwards, when his hands are washed, it is to be reverenced again; and when he does not reverence it, except when innocent through not reverencing it, then it becomes irreverence (lā yast) of the sun for him.

3. As to the sun it is better when one reverences it every time at the proper period (pavan gās-i nafsman); when he does not reverence it for once it is a sin of thirty stirs. 4. Reverencing the sun is every time a good work of one Tanāpūhar; and so of the moon and fire in like manner. 5. When on account of cloudiness the sun is not visible (pēdāk), and one shall reverence it, it is proper.

Bund. XXV, 9); a few sentences in the Nyāyis, or formula of salutation, are altered to suit the particular Gāh in which it is recited.

1 K2O has, 'it will protect it;' having read netrūnēd instead of ketrūnēd in its original. To pray with unwashed hands would be sinful (see Pahl. Vend. XIX, 84).

2 That is, except when the omission is to avoid a worse evil, as in the instance just mentioned.

5 Or, perhaps, 'it does not become a Khūrshēd Yast ('a formula of praise in honour of the sun') for him.' This Yast forms a part of the Nyāyis.

4 That is, an Aredūr sin (see Chap. I, 2). M6 has, 'when he does not reverence it again.'

6 That is, a good work sufficient to counterbalance a Tanāpūhar sin, which puts the performance of a Nyāyis on the same footing as the consecration of a sacred cake or drōn (see Chap. XVI, 6).

6 The moon and fire have each a separate Nyāyis.
6. And while one does not reverence the sun, the good works which they do that day are not their own; some say that of the good works which they do within the law (dâd) of the good religion he has no share. 7. While they do not wash dirty hands any good work which they do is not their own, for while one does not utterly destroy corruption (nasûs) there is no coming of the angels to his body, and when there is no coming of the angels to his body he has no steadfastness in the religion, and when he has no steadfastness in the religion no good work whatever reaches unto him.

8. When one wishes to perform the propitiation (shnûman)² of fire, it is allowable to perform one ‘âthrû’ by itself, and, when two and the ‘mad vis-spaëibyô âterebîyô,’ these three are thus the propitiation everywhere³; some say that it would be proper to perform it while allowable, except that of the heterodox.

¹ That is, the demon of corruption, who is supposed to enter and reside in all filth of the nature of dead matter, until expelled or destroyed by cleansing.

² A shnûman or khshnûmanô (Av. khshnûman) is a short formula of praise, reciting all the usual titles of the spirit intended to be propitiated by it, and is used for dedicating the prayers or ceremony specially to his service (see Chaps. III, 35, X, 2, XIV; 3). The propitiatory formulas for the thirty angels and archangels who preside over the days of the month constitute the Sîrôzah, or form of prayer ‘relating to the thirty days.’

³ The propitiation of fire (as given in Sîrôz, I, 9, Ûtar Nyâyîr
5, 6) consists of five sentences, each beginning with the word âthrû, ‘of the fire,’ and the last sentence also contains the words mad vispaëibyô âterebîyô, ‘with all fires.’ The meaning of the text appears to be that it is allowable to use only one of these sentences (probably the last), but if two are used besides the last they are amply sufficient for practical purposes.
9. Whoever shall extinguish a fire, by him ten fires are to be gathered together, by him ten punishments are to be endured, by him ten ants are to be destroyed, and by him holy-water (zahar) is to be presented to the sacred fire (atâs-i Vâhrâm).

Chapter VIII.

1. Sin which affects accusers is to be atoned for (vigârisn) among the accusers, and that relating to

2 The ant being a creature of the evil spirit, on account of its carrying away corn.
3 Vinâs-i hamêmâlân, 'sin relating to adversaries.' Sins appear to be divided into two great classes, hamêmâl and rûbânîk. A hamêmâl sin seems to be any secular offence which injures some person or animal who, thereupon, becomes a hamêmâl, 'accuser' (Av. hameretha, 'opponent,' Yas. LVI, x, 10), and who must first be satisfied by atonement, before confession to the high-priest, or renunciation of sin, can be of any avail for removing the sin (compare Matthew v. 23-26). The Rivâyats assert that if a person dies without atoning for a hamêmâl sin, his soul will be stopped at the Kinvad bridge (see Bund. XII, 7) on its way to the other world, and kept in a state of torment until the arrival of the 'accuser,' and after he is satisfied the sinner's soul will be disposed of, in the usual manner, according to the balance of its good and bad actions. It is also probable that only a man of 'the good religion,' or an animal of the good creation, can be an 'accuser.' A rûbânîk sin, on the other hand, seems to be one which affects only the sinner's own soul, and for which the high-priest can prescribe a sufficient atonement. It is doubtful, however, whether the Parsis nowadays have any very clear notions of the exact distinction between these two classes of sins, although aware of their names, which are mentioned in their Patit, or renunciation of sin. The explanations given in some editions of their Khurda Avesta, or prayer-book, are confined to mentioning certain special instances of each class of sin; thus, the soul is to be atoned for among the high-priests (radân), and when they do whatever the high-priests of the religion command the sin will depart, and the good works which they may thenceforth do will attain completion (avaspôrik). 2. The sin of him who is worthy of death (marg-argân) is to be confessed (garzisnô) unto the high-priests, and he is to deliver up his body¹; except to the high-priests he is not to deliver up his body.

3. On account of the dexterity (farhâng) of horsemen it is not their business to hunt (nakhkîr kardanô); and it is not allowable for any one else to hunt for game, except for him whose wealth is less than three hundred stîrs².

² This section, intended to preserve game for the poor, is evidently out of place here, as it has no connection with the context. With reference to the property qualification for hunting, it appears, from a passage in the Persian MS. M5 about the proper dowry for a privileged wife, that 2000 dirhams of silver were worth 2300 rûpîs, and that 2 dirhams were 2½ tolas; this was written in A.D. 1723, when neither the rûpî nor the tola were of uniform amount, though now the rûpî is exactly a tola weight of silver. As the stîr was four dirhams (see Chap. I, 2), three hundred stîrs would have been 1380 rûpîs or 1350 tolas of silver, according to the standards mentioned in M5; so that hunting was intended to be confined to those whose property was less than 1350-1380 rûpîs; but how
4. The ceremonial worship (yāzīsn) of those worthy of death, which they do not perform by way of renunciation of sin, is the ceremonial which is demon worship; and when the officiating priest (aērpat) does not know it the merit (kirfak) of the ceremonial goes to the store (gāng) of the angels, and they give the enjoyment which arises from that merit in the spiritual existence to the soul of that person who has at once (aēvāk) become righteous in mind.

5. When the mortal sinner (marg-arqānō) has delivered his body and wealth at once to the high-priests, and engages mentally in renunciation as to the sin which has occurred, and the high-priests give him their decision (dastōbarīh) as to duty and good works, the duty and good works which were before performed by him come back to him; and when they inflict punishment for three nights, he does not enter hell. 6. And if the high-priest orders the cutting off of his head he is righteous on the spot, and the three nights' (satūth) ceremony is to be celebrated for him, and the account of the this limitation is to be reconciled with the fact that hunting was a favourite pursuit of kings and nobles does not appear, unless it be considered as a sacerdotal protest against that practice.

1 That is, in those cases when they do not have the yāzīsn performed as an atonement for sin, by order of the high-priest after confession.

2 This appears to refer to temporal punishment, inflicted by order of the high-priest, for the purpose of saving him from the 'punishment of the three nights' in the other world, mentioned in Bund. XXX, 16.

3 Reading pavan gīnāk; but Mē marks the phrase as pavan dīnāk (for dīnā), 'through the decree,' which is probably an error.
three nights (satūth) does not affect him. 7. And if he does not engage in renunciation he is in hell till the future existence; and in his future body they will bring him from hell, and for every mortal sin they will cut off his head once, and the last time they will make him alive again, and will inflict (numāyend) three nights’ severe punishment.

8. However a man engages in renunciation of sin the duty of his state of renunciation (patīth) is to be engaged therein openly and mentally in renunciation; the duty of openness is this, that the sin which he knows has assailed him, is to be specially confessed (barā gōbisnō) by him; and the mental duty is this, that he engages in renunciation with this thought, that ‘henceforth I will not commit sin.’

9. And that which occurs before the renunciation, except pious alms, it is well for him not to be overlooked by him, and not to be kept secret by him; for when he shall overlook, or shall keep secret, about sin committed, it becomes for him as much, some say, as three Srôshô-karanâms\textsuperscript{1}; some say that when he keeps secret about a sin of three Srôshô-karanâms he is worthy of death; some say much otherwise.\textsuperscript{2} 10. Ätarô-pâd son of Zaratûst\textsuperscript{3} had remarked (pêdâkînd) to a disciple, about this duty, thus: ‘Conform to the renunciation of sin!’ and one\textsuperscript{4} time a secret was kept by him, and he ordered him thus: ‘Henceforth be thou never apparent in this duty!’ and after that he looked upon the supplication (avakhshîth) and much repentance of that disciple, and even then he did not become the high-priest (dastôbar) over him.

1 That is, the usual ceremonies after death are not to be withheld in this world, and his soul is able to pass through the usual investigation, as to his sins and good works, on its way to the other world, without delay. This period of three nights (satūth, ‘the triplet’), which Pāzand writers miscall sedōs or sadis, is the time during which the soul is supposed to hover about the body, before finally departing for the other world (see Mkh. II, 114, 158–160, AV. IV, 9–14, XVII, 2–9).

11. The rule is\textsuperscript{5} this, that of those who would be proper for this priestly duty (dastôbarîth), that person is proper who is perfect in (narm) the commentary (zand) of the law, and the punishment of sin is easy for him, and he has controlled himself; some say thus: ‘By whom a course of priestly studies (aêrpatastân) is performed.’ 12. And the punishment of sin being easy for him, and his having controlled himself are proper; and when, in danger before a menstruous woman, he engages in renunciation it is proper.

\textsuperscript{2} Or ‘many other things.’
\textsuperscript{3} This Ätarô-pâd-i Zaratûstân is mentioned in a manuscript about 500 years old, belonging to Qastûr Jâmâspji, in Bombay, as having lived for 160 years, and having been supreme high-priest for ninety years: he is also mentioned in the sixth book of the Dînkard. He may, possibly, have been the Ätarô-pâd mentioned in B. Yt. I, 7, but it is hazardous to identify an individual by a single name so common as Ätarô-pâd used to be.
\textsuperscript{4} Reading aê, ‘one,’ instead of hanâ, ‘this’ (see p. 218, note 3).
\textsuperscript{5} Assuming that the word ãfnak has been omitted at the beginning of this section (see Chap. X, 1).
13. Néryōsang\textsuperscript{1} said thus: 'Thou deemest it most surprising that, of the renunciation of sin with energy, whatever may be its efficacy, they have been so much of the same\textsuperscript{2} opinion, so that whenever they perform renunciation, however they perform it, and before whomever they perform it, whenever a sin is not even mentally originating with one\textsuperscript{3} a renunciation should be performed by him; and when very many mortal sins (margin:\textsuperscript{4} argân) are committed by him, and he engages mentally in renunciation of every one separately, he is not on the way to hell, owing to his renunciation; and if there be one of which he is not in renunciation the way to hell\textsuperscript{5} is not closed to him, for he does not rely upon the beneficence (sûd) of Aûharmazd, and it is allowable to appoint a priestly retribution (rãd tôgîsn) to fully atone for it, and when thou appointest a priestly retribution for it, and dost not fully atone, it is allowable to inflict it justly and strongly (drûbô).

14. When his sin is committed against (dên)

\textsuperscript{1} This cannot be the learned Parsi translator of several Pahlavi texts into Sanskrit, who bore the same name, and is supposed to have lived in the fifteenth century. Being quoted in the Pahlavi Vendidad (see Chap. I, 4, note) he must have been one of the old commentators.

\textsuperscript{3} This applies to all cases of merely imputed sin, such as those committed by children, which are imputed to the father, and for which he is spiritually, as well as temporally, responsible.

accusers¹ it will be necessary to act so that the head of the family (mirak) shall not become evil-minded²; and shall not divorce the wife from matrimony, and they shall not bring³ him on unto him; before his accusers he is to be engaged in renunciation, and when not, he is to be engaged in renunciation of the sin before the high-priests (radân), and it will become debts, and debt does not make a man wicked⁴; its effect is this, that in the future existence they may quite forsake him, and this becomes a great shame, and they disturb (kâvend) his enjoyment. 15. As to the sin which affects the accusers, when the female has atoned for it, its stem (pâyak) is atoned for; some say that the stem (pâyakghth) has no root; some say that it is just like a tree whose leaves wither away.

16. Sin relating to the soul⁵, when one engages in renunciation, stays away from him; when it shall be fully atoned for it is well, and when he does not fully atone they will make him righteous by the three nights’ (satûth) punishment. 17. Kûshtanô-bûgêd⁶ said that even that which affects accusers, when one engages in renunciation, stays away from him.

² Reading dûsmînân instead of the unmeaning dûsmîyân of the MSS.
³ Reading yâîtyûnâ instead of the unmeaning yâîtam of the MSS; a being often written very much like m in Pahlavi.
⁴ This clause about the hamêmâl sin becoming a debt, to be settled with the ‘accuser,’ either here or hereafter, is taken from Pahl. Vend. III, 15r.
⁵ That is, rûbânîk-sin (see § 1, note).
18. Nōsāī Būrz-Mitrō 1 spoke these three sayings, that is, ‘Next-of-kin marriage will extirpate mortal sins (margin-argānān), and the sacred twigs when their ablution is such as renders them improper for firewood, and a man when his wife becomes pregnant by him.’

19. Whoever commits a sin against (dēn) water, and kills a lizard, or other noxious water-creature, has atoned for it; also when thou atonest to (dēn) fire for that against water it is proper, and when thou atonest to water for that against fire it is proper; some say that even a scorpion is proper to be killed. 20. And when a sin of one Tanâpūhar 3 is committed by him, and he shall consecrate a sacred cake (drōn), or shall accomplish a good work of one Tanâpūhar 4, it has atoned for it.

21. When he has committed a mortal sin (margin-argān), and engages mentally in renunciation, and the high-priest (ra'd) knows that, though he ought to give up his body, he will not give it up, it is allowable when he shall kill him; that is, because he relies upon the beneficence (sād) of Aūharmazd. 22. Moreover, from the rule (man k) ‘yazemna 5 kad nā hakad’ (‘through being worshipped what then at once,’ &c.) it is evident, and it becomes his through ceremonial ablution of the hands; it amounts to a whole quarry (kânô) of good works, and the worship of God (yazîsn-i yazdânô) is to be performed for him. 23. Ātarō-pâd son of Mâras pend said that it is always necessary to be more diligent in performing one’s worship of God at the time that many mortal sins are committed; all sins being admissible into renunciation, when thou shalt atone by complete self-sacrifice (pûr-gân-dâdîhâ), and when one engages in renunciation of the sin from its root, he becomes free from the sin in renunciation of which sin he engaged; for Aûhar mazd will not leave his own creatures unto the evil spirit, unless on the path of non-renunciation.

CHAPTER IX.

1. The greater Hâsar is one part in twelve parts of the day and night, and the lesser Hâsar is one part in eighteen parts.

1 It seems that the execution of the sinner after repentance is here considered as furnishing him with a store of good works, so that it is allowable to perform such ceremonies for him, after death, as are usually performed for righteous men; the reason being given in § 23. The end of this section and beginning of the next are omitted in K20.

2 Whether the prime minister of Shápûr II, or the last editor of the Dînkard (see Bund. XXXIII, 3, 11), is not clear.

3 The Hâsar is not only a measure of distance (see Bund. XXVI, 1), but also a measure of time (see Bund. XXV, 5). According to the text here the greater Hâsar must be two hours, and the lesser Hâsar (which is not mentioned in M6) must be one hour and twenty minutes. But Farh. Okh. (p. 43) says, ‘dvâdasang-hâthrem asti aghrem ayare, “of twelve Hâsars is the
2. The priest (āsrūk) who passes away in idolatry (aūzdàyakîh) thou hast considered as desolate (vîrân); and there is a high-priest (dastôbar) who is of a different opinion, there is one who says he is as a non-Iranian (anâîrân) country. 3. It is declared that, when a supreme high-priest (zaratûstudûm) passes away in idolatry, an apostate (aharmôk) will be born in that dwelling, and a rumour of this calamity is uttered by that supreme high-priest.

4. In order to be steadfast in the good religion it is to be discussed with priests and high-priests, and when one does not discuss it is proper that he do not teach it.

longest day;" the day and night in which is the longest day are twelve of the greatest Hâsars, eighteen of the medium, and twenty-four of the least;" according to which statement there are three kinds of Hâsar, that are respectively equivalent to two hours, one hour and twenty minutes, and one hour. As the longest day is said (Bund. XXV, 4) to be twice the length of the shortest day, and the greatest Hâsar is twice the length of the least one, it may be conjectured that the Hâsar varied with the length of the day, being a subdivision (one-eighth) of the time the sun was above the horizon; this would account for the greatest and least Hâsars, which are one-eighth of the longest and shortest days, respectively; but it does not account for the medium Hâsar, which is not a mean between the two extremes, but one-ninth (instead of one-eighth) of the mean day of twelve hours. If the Hâsar of distance were really a Parasang, as is sometimes stated, the connection between it and the Hâsar of time would be obvious, as the average Hâsar of one hour and twenty minutes is just the time requisite for walking a Parasang, which seems indeed to be stated in Farh. Okh. p. 42.

1 Or it may be 'passes over into idolatry.'
2 Kâo has girân, 'grievous.'
3 That is, he reads anâîrân instead of vîrân in the foregoing statement.
4 Or, perhaps, 'this calamity is at once announced.'
5. The ceremonial worship (yāsīn) which they perform in a fire-temple\(^1\), when not done aright, does not reach unto the demons; but that which they perform in other places, when they do not perform it aright, does reach unto the demons; for there is no medium in worship, it reaches either unto the angels or unto the demons. 6. Of a man who has relinquished a bad habit, and through his good capabilities engages in renunciation of sin\(^2\), the good work advances unto the future existence.

7. Any one who shall die in a vessel (kaštīk) it is allowable, for fear of contamination (paḍvīshak), to throw into the water; some say that the water itself is the receptacle for the dead (khazānīh).

8. This, too, is declared: 'When in the dark it is not allowable to eat food; for the demons and fiends seize upon one-third of the wisdom and glory of him who eats food in the dark;' and it is declared by that passage (gīnāk) which Aūharmazd spoke to Zaratūst, thus: 'After the departure of the light let him not devour, with unwashed hands, the water and vegetables of Horvadād and Amerōdād\(^3\); for if after the departure of the light thou devourest, with unwashed hands, the water and vegetables of Horvadād and Amerōdād, the fiend seizes away from thee two-thirds of the existing original wisdom.

1 This passage does not appear to be now extant in the Avesta.
2 This was the sixth nask or 'book' of the complete Mazda-yasian literature, according to the Dinkard, which calls it Pâz or Pâzag; but according to the Dinâ-vâgârâd and the Rivâyats it was the seventh nask, called Pâgam. For its contents, as given by the Dinâ-vâgârâd, see Haug's Essays, pp. 128, 129. The following is a short summary of the account of it given in the eighth book of the Dinkard (that published in the Pahl-Pâz. Glossary, pp. 184, 185, being taken from the fifteenth nask, whose contents were mixed up with those of the seventh through the abstraction of several folios from the Iranian MS. of the Dinkard before M13, or any other copy, was written in India):—

The Pâz (or Pâzag) is about the lawful slaughtering of animals in the ceremonial rites of fire and water at the season-festivals; also where, when, and how the festivals are to be celebrated, their advantages, and the duties of the officiating priests. The rotation of days, months, and years, summer and winter, the ten days at the end of the winter, when the guardian spirits visit the world, and the ceremonies to be then performed. The time for gathering medicinal plants. The retribution necessary for the various sins affecting the soul, the advantage of providing for such retribution, and the harm from not providing it. The thirty-three principal chiefs of the spiritual and worldly existences. The miracles of great good works, and the heinous sinfulness of apostasy. How far a wife can give away her husband's property, and when it is lawful for him to recover it. Whither winter flees when summer comes on, and where summer goes when winter comes on. The amount of disaster (vôighn) in one century, and the duration of everything connected with such disaster. The summer and winter months, the names of the twelve months, their meaning, and the angels they are devoted to; also the thirty days of the month, and the five Gâtha days at the end of the year, when the guardian spirits are to be reverenced.

The fifth fargard, quoted in the text, was probably that portion of the Nask which described the duties of the officiating priests.
teristics of four kinds of worship of the celestial beings (yazdân) :—one is that whose Avesta is correct, but the man is bad; the second is that whose Avesta is faulty (zîfânô)\textsuperscript{1}, but the man is good; the third is that whose Avesta is correct, and the man is good; and the fourth is that whose Avesta is faulty and the man is bad. 10. That whose Avesta is correct, but the man bad, the archangels will approach and will listen to, but do not accept; that whose Avesta is faulty, but the man good, the archangels and angels\textsuperscript{2} will approach, but do not listen to, and will accept; that whose Avesta is correct, and the man good, the archangels and angels will approach, will come to, will listen to, and will accept; that whose Avesta is faulty, and the man bad, they do not approach, do not listen to, and do not accept.

11. In every ceremonial (yazisnô), at the beginning of the ceremony\textsuperscript{3}, and the beginning of the sacred-cake consecration (drôn)\textsuperscript{4}, the angels and guardian spirits of the righteous are to be invited to the ceremony. 12. When they invoke the angels they will accept the ceremony, and when they do \textsuperscript{1} K2o has hûzvân, ‘tongue, speech,’ for zîfân, ‘faulty’ (compare Pers. zîf, ‘sin’), in all occurrences of the word.

\textsuperscript{3} That is, shortly before beginning the regular recitation of the Yasna, the angels, in whose honour the ceremony is being performed, are invited to approach by reciting their proper Khshnûmans, or propitiatory formulas (see Chap. VII, 8, and Haug’s Essays, p. 404).

\textsuperscript{4} This begins with Yas. III, 1, and the spirits are to be invited by adding their proper Khshnûmans to those contained in Yas. III, 3–20 (see Haug’s Essays, p. 408).
not invoke them, all the guardian spirits of the righteous are to be invoked at the beginning of 'staomi'; and when not, they watch until the words 'frashô-karethrâm saoshyantâm,' and when they shall invoke them there they will accept the ceremony; and when not, they will watch until the words 'vispau fravashayô ashaonâm yazamaidê,' and when they shall invoke them there they will accept the ceremony; and when not, they will watch until the words 'tauskâ yazamaidê,' and when they invoke them at the threefold 'ashem vohû' and the word 'dâmanâm,' at the twice-told 'aokhtô-nâmanô,' the 'ashâd hakâ,' or the 'yâtumanahê gasaiti.'

1 This may be at the 'staomi' of Yas. XII, 6, which is recited before the Yasna is commenced; but K2o alters the meaning (by inserting the relative particle) into 'they are to be invoked at "staomi," the beginning of "all the guardian spirits of the righteous" (Yas. XXVI, 1).' 2 Yas. XXVI, 20.
3 Yas. XXVI, 34.
4 K2o has, 'shall not invoke,' and 'will not accept.'
5 The concluding words of the yêśhê hâtâm formula, probably of that one at the end of Yas. XXVII, just preceding the recital of the Gâthas, up to which time the spirits wait, but, if not invoked, they are then supposed to ascend, away from the ceremony, as mentioned in the text.
6 K2o has, 'when they do not invoke them.'
7 Yas. VIII, 10; which is preceded by a thrice-told 'ashem vohû,' at which the officiating priest tastes the sacred cake, being the end of the Drôn ceremony (see Haug's Essays, pp. 404, 408).
8 Yas. XXII, 33 (§§ 14–33 being recited twice). At this point the officiating priest brings out the mortar for pounding the Hôm twigs (see Haug's Essays, p. 405); Yas. XXII being called the beginning of the Hômâst in the Vîstâsp Yast Sâdah.
9 Yas. XXIV, 30, when the officiating priest turns the mortar right side upwards.
10 Yas. VIII, 9, which is practically the same place as the threefold 'ashem vohû' before mentioned.
they will accept\(^1\); and when not, they go up the height of a spear (nɪzak) and will remain. \(^{13}\) And they speak thus: ‘This man does not understand that it will be necessary even for him\(^2\) to go from the world, and our prayer (a pɪstān) is for reminding men; it is not \textit{that} our uneasiness \textit{arises} from this, that we are in want of their ceremony, but our uneasiness \textit{arises} from this, that when they do not reverence and do not invoke us, when evil comes upon them it is not possible for us to keep it away.’

\(^{14}\) ‘O creator! how much is the duration in life of him who is dead?’ And Aūharmazd spoke thus: ‘As much as the wing of a fly, O Zaratūst the Spīṭmān! or as much as the hearing a wing unto a sightless one\(^3\).’

\(^1\) K\(2\)o has, ‘they will not accept.’

\(^2\) Literally, ‘for me,’ which seems to refer to the man, and not to the spirits.

\(^3\) This appears to be the complete translation of the Avesta sentence partially quoted in Pahl. Vend. VIII, 64: ‘yathā makhshyaun perenem, yatha vā perenahē;’ &c. The last clause is doubtful; the reading adopted here is k\(\text{i}\)and zak\(-\)i shina vā\(\text{k}^\prime\) par andarg avēn\(\text{a}k\), as nothing more satisfactory suggests itself; it might also be translated by ‘as much as the sound of a wing in the invisible.’

\(^4\) Reading ā\(\text{n}^\prime\)ak; Pāzand writers convert it into yak, which can, however, have the same meaning, though they evidently take the word to be Huz. khd\(\text{ā}k\), ‘one,’ which is written precisely like ā\(\text{n}^\prime\)ak in Pahlavi characters. Most of the miscellaneous statements, contained in the latter part of Sls., commence with this phrase.

\textsuperscript{6} This was the fifteenth nask or 'book' of the complete Mazdayasian literature, according to the Dînkard, which calls it Nikâdûm; but according to the Dînî-vagarkard and the Rivâyats it was the sixteenth nask, called Niyûrum. For its contents, as given by the Dînî-vagarkard, see Haug's Essays, p. 132. The following is a brief summary of the account of it given in the eighth book of the Dînkard, where it occupies twenty-five quarto pages of that work.

The beginning of the law (dâd) is the Nîkâdûm of thirty fargards. The section Patkâr-raidân (the arbitrator's code) is about umpires and arbitration, contracts by words of four kinds and by signs of six kinds; and twelve sorts of arbitrators are described in four sub-sections, according as they decide by hearing or seeing, and with regard to women and children, foreigners and bery, and a wall falls in upon him, it is his destroyer; when a man strikes at him he is his adversary, and both are in sinfulness; when he is going to perform the worship of God (yazīnō-i yazdānō) both of them are in innocence.

4. The rule is this, that when a woman becomes pregnant, as long as it is possible, the fire is to be maintained most carefully in the dwelling, because it is declared in the Spend Nask that towards those worthy of death. The second section, Zadamistān (‘the assault code’), is a treatise on assault and the consequences of assault, pain, blood, and unconsciousness; on blows and conflicts, man with man, women with women, and child with child, with their proper penalties; also the murder of slaves and children. The third section, Rēshīstān (‘the accuser’s code’), is a treatise on various kinds of wounds and their characteristics. The fourth section, Hamēmālistān (‘the accuser’s code’), is a treatise on accusation and false accusation of various specified crimes, on lying and slander, the care of pregnant women, impenitence and various offences against priests and disciples, remitting penalties, abetting and assisting criminals, mediation, punishment of children, smiting foreigners, murder, medical treatment, and many other things (see Pahl.-Pāz. Glossary, p. 184, where they are erroneously ascribed to the Pāzōn Nask, owing to the defective text of the MS. M13). The fifth section contained twenty-four treatises on miscellaneous subjects connected with crime and sin (see Pahl.-Pāz. Glossary, pp. 184, 185).

1 This was the thirteenth nask or ‘book’ of the complete Mazdaean literature, according to all authorities, but is called Sfend in the Rivāyats. For its contents, as given by the Dīnī-vagarkard, see Haug’s Essays, pp. 131, 132. The following is a summary of the short account of it given in the eighth book of the Dinkard:

The Spend is a treatise on the origin and combination of the existence, guardian spirit, and glory of Zaratūst; on his generation and birth; on the coming of the two spirits, the good one to sustain, and the bad one to destroy him, and the victory of the good Dûkdâv\textsuperscript{1}, the mother of Zaratûst, when she was pregnant with Zaratûst, \textit{for} three nights, every night a leader (khûdâ)\textsuperscript{2} with a hundred and fifty\textsuperscript{3} demons rushed for the destruction of Zaratûst, \textit{but} owing to the existence of the fire in the dwelling they knew no means of accomplishing \textit{it}.

5. The rule is this, that they have a tank (môg) for the disciples, when they are going to perform the worship of God, \textit{and} are sprinkling the stone \textit{seat} (magôk)\textsuperscript{4}; and lest they should make a wet \textit{place} by that sprinkling through taking \textit{water} out from it, it is to be done sitting; for in the Vend\-id\-dad\textsuperscript{5} the high-priests \textit{have} taught, about making spirit; on his going, at thirty years of age, to confer with Aûharmazd, and his seven conferences in ten years; on the seven questions he proposed to the archangels on those occasions; on the conveyance of the omniscient wisdom into him, showing him heaven and hell, and the intermediate place of those \textit{ever-stationary}, the account taken of sin and good works, the future existence, and the fate of the religion on earth till the renovation of the universe, with the coming of his future sons, the last three apostles.

\textsuperscript{1} The Pâz. Dughdâ of Bund. XXXII, \textit{xt} would indicate Pahl. Dûkdân, but the Dînkard has Dûkdâîbô and Dûkdâûbag (pointing to Av. Dughdhavan), and the Persian forms are Dughdû and Dughdâvîh. Here the name is Dûkdâvô, which is transposed into Dûkdâv in Chap. XII, \textit{xi}; it must have meant either \textit{‘milk-maid’} or \textit{‘sucklel’} originally.

\textsuperscript{2} K\textit{t} has \textit{sêdû}, \textit{‘a demon,} and in Chap. XII, \textit{ili}, where this section is repeated, the word can be read either \textit{sêdû}, \textit{‘a demon,} or shâh, \textit{‘a king or ruler;} \textit{of course \textit{‘an arch-fiend’} is meant.}

\textsuperscript{4} Or magh, on which they squat in the purification ceremony (see B. Yt. II, \textit{xt}).

\textsuperscript{5} Referring probably to Pahl. Vend. XVIII, \textit{xt}; the ground is not to be wetted further than the length of the fore-part of the foot beyond the toes, that is, not more than \textit{a hand’s breadth}; this water when standing on foot\(^1\), that the measure it refers to applies to everything else, not even of a like origin; by him who makes water the Avesta\(^2\) for making water is to be uttered, and then it is the root of a Tanāpūhar sin\(^3\) for him, and when he does not utter it he is more grievously sinful.

6. The rule is this, that to recite the Gāthas over those passed away is not to be considered as beneficial, since it is not proper to recite the three Hās\(^4\) which are the beginning of the Aūstūvat Gātha whenever one is on the road; whenever one recites them over a man in the house they are healing.

7. The rule is this, that in the night wine and aromatic herbs (sparam) and anything like food are not to be cast away towards the north quarter, because a fiend\(^5\) will become pregnant; and when one casts them away one Yathā-ahû-vairyô\(^6\) is to be uttered.

\(^1\) This is a sin which is usually classed with ‘running about uncovered’ and ‘walking with one boot’ (see Chap. IV, 8, note).

\(^2\) This Avesta is prescribed in Vend. XVIII, 97, and is still in constant use; it consists of three Ashem-vohûs (see Bund. XX, 2), two Humatanāms (Yas. XXXV, 4–6), three Hukhsathrōtemâis (Yas. XXXV, 13–15), four Ahunavars (see Bund. I, 21), and one Yēnhek-hātâm (see B.Yt. II, 64).

\(^3\) See Chap. I, 1, 2.

\(^4\) The three chapters (Yas. XLII–XLIV) which begin the Ustavaiti Gātha (Yas. XLII–XLV).

\(^5\) A drûg, or fiend, is usually considered as a female demon (see Vend. XVIII, 70–77); and the demons are supposed to come from the north, where they congregate on the summit of Aresûr, at the gates of hell (see Vend. XIX, 1, 140, 142, Bund. XII, 8).

\(^6\) See Bund. I, 21. This statement is repeated in Chap. XII, 18.
8. The rule is this, that reverential should be the abstinence from unlawfully slaughtering of any species of animals; for in the Stûdgar Nask\(^1\) it is said, concerning those who have unlawfully slaughtered animals, the punishment is such that each hair of those animals becomes like a sharp dagger (têkh), and he who is unlawfully a slaughterer is slain. 9. Of animals, the slaughtering of the lamb, the goat (vahîk), the ploughing ox, the war-horse, the hare, the bat (êiharâz), the cock or bird of Vohûman, and the magpie (kâskînak) bird, and of birds that of the kite, eagle (hûmât), and swallow is most to be abstained from.

10. A pregnant woman who passes away is not to be carried away by less than four men\(^2\), who are at it constantly with united strength; for with other corpses, after a dog’s gaze, when they carry them along by two men with united strength, they do not become polluted; but for a pregnant woman two dogs are necessary, to whose united power she is to be exposed; and they carry her along by four men with united strength, and they do not become polluted; but when they carry her along by two men they are to be washed with ceremony (pîsak)\(^3\).

11. The rule is this, that when they beg forgiveness for a person (mardûm) who has passed away,

\(^1\) See B.Yt. I, 1. The passage here referred to is probably one in the middle of the seventeenth fargard of this Nask, which is mentioned as follows, in the ninth book of the Dinkard: ‘And this too, namely, those who unlawfully slay sheep and cattle, which diminishes their life and glory.’

\(^2\) This is the usual custom, while that mentioned in Chap. II, 6 is the exceptional case, mentioned at the end of this section, which necessitates extraordinary purification.

\(^3\) That is, with the Bareshnûm ceremony (see Chap. II, 6).
such a prayer is more significant when one says thus:
'Whenever a trespass (vinâs) of mine has occurred against him, you will take account of it along with those of his which have occurred against me, and the trespasses have passed away one through the other; any further trespasses of his which have occurred against me are then made a righteous gift by me.'

12. The rule is this, that one should not walk without boots; and his advantage therefrom is even this, that when a boot (mûgak) is on his foot, and he puts the foot upon dead matter, and does not disturb the dead matter, he does not become polluted; when a boot is not on his foot, and he puts the foot upon dead matter, and does not disturb it, he is polluted, except when he knows for certain (aëvar) that a dog has seen it, or if not it is to be considered as not seen by a dog.

13. The rule is this, as revealed in the Dûbâsrûgêd Nask, where a day in the year is indicated,

1 That is, I pardon them in charity.
2 Or, perhaps, 'without stockings,' avîmûgak; this seems to be something different from the sin of aë-mûk-dûbârînîh, 'running in one boot' (see Chap. IV, 12).
3 Without these words, which do not exist in the MSS., the sentence seems to have no clear meaning.
4 And, therefore, still containing the Nastûs, or fiend of corruption, who will enter into any one who merely touches the dead matter, without disturbing it, and can be driven out only by the tedious and troublesome Bareshnûm ceremony.
5 This was the sixteenth nask or 'book' of the complete Maz-dayansîan literature, according to the Dînkard, which calls it Dûbâsrûgêd or Dûbâsrûd; but according to the Dînî-vagarkard, which calls it Dvâsrûzd, and the Rivâyats, which call it Dvâsrûgad, Dvâsrûngad, or Dvâsrûb, it was the eighteenth nask. For its contents, as given by the Dînî-vagarkard, see Haug's Essays, pp. 132, 133. The following is a brief summary of the account of it given that the sacred thread-girdle of every one who shall be one day more than fourteen years and three months old is to be tied on—it is better so than when he remains unto fifteen years, and then ties on the girdle—who is more cared for, that way, than a five-months' child\(^1\), on whom they should put it in the womb of its mother.

14. The rule is this, that when one retains a prayer inwardly\(^2\), and wind shall come from below, or wind shall come from the mouth, it is all one\(^3\).

in the eighth book of the Dīnkard, which occupies ten quarto pages of that work:—

Of the first eighteen sections of the Dūbāsrūga the first is a treatise on thieves, their arrest, imprisonment, and punishment, with the various kinds of robbery; the second section is about the irresponsibility of a father for the crimes of a grown-up son, and of a husband for those of a separated wife, about the time for instructing children, and when they first become responsible for sin; the crime of giving weapons to women, children, and foreigners, about warriors plundering, the various kinds of judges and their duties, and offences against accusers. Of the twelve next sections one, called Pasūs-hōrvistān (‘the shepherd’s dog code’), is about shepherd’s dogs, their duties and rights. Of the last thirty-five sections the first, called Stōristān (‘the beast of burden code’), is about the sin, affecting the soul, of unlawfully beating and wounding cattle and beasts of burden, birds and fish; the second section, Ārgistān (‘the value code’), is a treatise on the value of animate and inanimate objects; the third section, Anīstāristān (‘the warrior code’), is a treatise on warriors, arms, armies, generals, battles, plunder, &c.; the fourth section is about warm baths, fires, clothing, winter stores, reaping fodder and corn, &c.

The passage mentioned in the text was probably in that part of the second section which referred to the responsibility of children. The words from ‘as revealed’ to ‘indicated’ are omitted in K20.

\(^1\) K20 has ‘nine-months’ child.’
\(^2\) See Chap. III, 6.
\(^3\) Literally, ‘both are one;’ that is, in either case the spell of the vāg or prayer is broken.
15. Also this, that ten women are necessary for affording assistance to a woman who is in labour: five women for directing the making of the cradle (gaváarak), one woman should be opposite the left shoulder, and one to hold the right shoulder, one woman to throw a hand on her neck, one woman to hold her waist, and one woman, when the infant shall be born, to take it up and cut the navel cord, and to make the fire blaze. 16. Three days and three nights no one is to pass between the fire and the child, nor to show the child to a sinful man or woman; they are to triturate a little sulphur in the sap (mayá) of a plant, and to smear it over the child; and the first food to give it is Hôm-juice (paráhôm) and aloes (shapyár).

17. The rule is this, that in case any one shall beat an innocent man, until the pain shall cease it becomes every day the root of a Tanápûhar sin for him.

18. The rule is this, that when in a country they trust a false judge, and keep him among their superiors, owing to the sin and breach of faith which that judge commits; the clouds and rain, in that country, are deficient, a portion (bavan) of the deliciousness, fatness, wholesomeness, and milk of the cattle and goats diminishes, and many children become destroyed in the mother’s womb.

19. The rule is this, that a man, when he does not wed a wife, does not become worthy of death; but when a woman does not wed a husband it

1 Literally, ‘make the fire high.’
2 See Chap. I, 1, 2.
3 Most of these evils are also ascribed (see B. Yt. II, 41–43) to neglect of the precautions prescribed with regard to hair-cuttings.
amounts to a sin worthy of death; because for a woman there is no offspring except by intercourse with men, and no lineage proceeds from her; but for a man without a wife, when he shall recite the Avesta, as it is mentioned in the Vendidad\(^1\), there may be a lineage which proceeds onwards to the future existence.

20. The rule is this, that a toothpick is to be cut out clear of bark (pôšt pák)\(^2\), for the high-priests have taught that when one's toothpick—made for the mouth with the bark—shall fall, and when a pregnant woman puts a foot upon it, she is apprehensive about its being dead matter\(^3\).

21. The rule is this, that in accepting the child of a handmaid (kakar)\(^4\) discrimination is to be exercised; for in the fourteenth of the Nask Hûspâram\(^5\)

\(^1\) This reference is probably to the circumstances detailed in Vend. XVIII, 99–112, but the Pahlavi commentary on §§ III, 112 of that passage is missing in all MSS. The Avesta to be recited in such cases is precisely the same as that detailed in a note on § 5.

\(^2\) This translation is in accordance with the seventeenth chapter of the prose Sad-dar Bûndahís, or 'Bûndahís of a hundred chapters,' a Pâzand work of later times; but the text here might be translated 'cut out of clean skin,' and in Chap. XII, 13, where the statement is repeated, the word used is also ambiguous.

\(^3\) The Sad-dar Bûndahís says, 'the fear arises that the infant may come to harm.' This section and the three which follow are repeated in Chap. XII, 13–16.

\(^4\) This might mean a kakar, or 'serving' wife (see Bund. XXXII, 6), but the further details given in Chap. XII, 14, where this statement is repeated, make it more probable that a concubine is meant.

\(^5\) As this was the seventeenth nask or 'book' of the complete Mazdayasnian literature, according to all authorities, it is probable that the word 'fourteenth,' in the text here, refers to some particular chapter or fargard, most likely to the last group of fourteen the high-priests have taught thus: ‘My son is suitable also as thy son, but my daughter is not suitable also as thy daughter.’

sections, mentioned below, in the summary of its contents; and this is confirmed by another reference in Chap. XII, 7. This nask is called Aspâram in the Rivâyats, and Aspârûm in the Dînâ-vagarkard; for its contents, as given by the latter, see Haug’s Essays, p. 133. The following is a brief summary of the account of it given in the eighth book of the Dînkard, where it occupies sixteen quarto pages of that work:—

Of the first thirty sections of the Hûspâram, one is the Aêrpa-tistân (‘the priest’s code’), a treatise on priestly studies, priests, disciples, and their five dispositions. One section is the Nîran-gistân (‘religious formula code’), a treatise on the formulas of worship, the Avesta to be recited by the officiating priests twice, thrice, and four times, the five periods of the day and their proper ceremonies, the season-festivals, the sacred girdle and shirt, cutting the sacred twigs, reverencing water, the families of Zarâtûst, Hvôv, and Vîstâsp, &c. One section is the Gôharî-kistân (‘quality code’), a treatise on nobility and superiority, buying and selling, cattle, slaves, servants, and other property, houses where men or dogs have been sick, dealings with foreigners, &c. And other sections are about appropriating the property of others, obedient and disobedient wives, foreign wives, advantages of male and female offspring, breeding of cattle, treatment of labourers and children, the evil eye, judges, the origin and cultivation of corn, the degrees of crime and punishment, &c. Of the next twenty sections, one is about the treatment of furious cattle and mad dogs, and the damage they may do. One section on the means of accumulating wealth, the giving of sons and daughters in marriage, the goodness of charity and evil of waste, the five best actions and the five worst, unlawful felling of trees, the sin of burying the dead, &c. And one section on the begetting, birth, and treatment of children. Of the last fourteen sections, one is a treatise, in six fargârs, on the ownership of property and disputes about it, on one’s own family, acquiring wife and children, adoption, &c. And a section of seven fargârs, at the end, is a treatise on the sufferings of men, women, children, and dogs, on the connection of owner and herds, priest and disciple, on various offences and sins, spiritual and worldly healing, physic and physicians, astrology,
22. The rule is this, that one perseveres much in the begetting of offspring, for the acquisition of abundance of good works at once; because, in the Nihâdûm Nask\(^1\), the high-priests have taught that the duty and good works which a son performs are as much the father's as though they had been done by his own hand; and in the Dâmdâd Nask\(^2\) it is revealed thus: 'Likewise, too, the good works, in like measure, which come into the father's possession.'

23. The rule is this, that they shall give to the worthy as much of anything as is proper for eating and accumulating; because in the Nihâdûm Nask\(^3\) the high-priests have taught thus: 'A man gives a hungry one bread, and it is too much, yet all the good works, which he shall perform through that superabundance, become as much his who gave it as though they had been done by his own hand.'

24. The rule is this, where one lies down, in circumstances of propriety and innocence, one Ashemvo[hû is to be uttered\(^4\), and in like manner when he

the proper feeding of cattle, horses, sheep, goats, and pigs, the duty of a frontier governor during a foreign invasion, &c.

The passage mentioned in the text was probably in that portion of the last group of fourteen sections which treated of wives, children, and adoption.

\(^1\) See § 3; the passage mentioned here cannot be traced in the account of this Nask given in the Dînkard.

\(^2\) See SZS. IX, 1. The passage here quoted cannot be traced in any of the short accounts of the contents of this Nask. This section is repeated, with a few verbal alterations, in Chap. XII, 15.

\(^3\) See § 3; the passage here quoted is also not to be traced in the account of this Nask given in the Dînkard. This section is repeated, with a few verbal alterations, in Chap. XII, 16.

\(^4\) Compare Chap. IV, 14, where much the same is stated as what occurs in this section.
gets up well; when he does so, every single drawing of the breath (vayô) becomes a good work of three Srôshô-karanâms, that is, a weight of ten dirhams of the full weight of four mads.\(^1\)

25. The rule is this, that when an action or an opinion comes forward, and one does not know whether it be a sin or a good work, when possible it is to be abandoned and not executed by him; as it says in the Sakâdûm Nask\(^2\) that Zaratûst has

\(^1\) Reading i mæd-\(4\), instead of va maz-\(4\); the word mæd (see Pahl.-Pâz. Glossary, p. 21) being Huz. for the dâng or quarter-dirham. The amount of the Srôshô-karanâm, as deduced from this statement, differs from those given in Chaps. XI, 2, XVI, 5, and must be awkwardly fractional, unless the sentence be altered into 10 gâgan sang nêm zîs pûr sang yehevûnêd, 'a weight of ten dirhams and a half, which is its full weight,' in which case one Srôshô-karanâm would be 3\(\frac{1}{2}\) dirhams, as in Chap. XVI, 5.

\(^2\) This was the eighteenth nask or 'book' of the complete Mazdayasian literature, according to the Dînkard; but according to the Dînî-vagarkard and the Rivayats it was the nineteenth nask, called Askârûm or Askâram. For its contents, as given by the Dînî-vagarkard, see Haug’s Essays, p. 133. The following is a brief summary of the account of it given in the eighth book of the Dînkard, where it occupies twenty quarto pages of that work:

Of the first thirty sections of the Sakâdûm one is a treatise on the necessity of obedience and understanding the laws, on newborn infants and their proper treatment, on the care of fire and sharp-pointed things, on race-courses, the use of water, salt and sweet, warm and cold, flowing and stagnant, &c. One section is the Hašdâkânistân ('annoyances code'), a treatise on irritating words and ill-treatment of living creatures and trees, the finding of buried treasure at various depths and in different places, &c. And one section is the Zîyânakistân ('damage code'), a treatise on damage to animate and inanimate objects. Of the last twenty-two sections, one is the Vakhshistân ('increase code'), a treatise on the progress of growth, breeding of cattle and other animals, pleadings regarding debts, growth of corn, &c. One section is the Varistân ('ordeal code'), a treatise on the detection of witchcraft by ordeal, by heat and cold, &c. One section on asking assistance not provided about everything whatever, but three times it has been done by Zaratūst about this duty, that is, so that the Avesta and Zand, when one has learned it thoroughly by heart, is for recitation, and is not to be mumbled (gūyisnō), for in mumbling (gūdanō) the parts of the Ahunavar are more chattering. 26. As it says in the Bagh Nask and rewarding it, on the unjust judge and the sagacious one, on daughters given in marriage by mothers and brothers, on the disobedient son, &c. And one section on the spirits of the earthly existences, the merit of killing noxious water-creatures, the animal world proceeding from the primeval ox, the evil spirit not to be worshipped, and much other advice.

The passage mentioned in the text appears to have been in the first section of this Nask, as the Dīnkard says it treated, among other matters, 'about a man's examining an action before doing it, and when he does not know whether it be a sin or a good work, when possible, he is to set it aside and not to do it.' But nothing is said there about Zaratūst, and what is said here seems to have very little connection with the 'rule' laid down in this section.

1 Literally, 'made it quite easy.'
2 Literally, 'not to be devoured or gnawed.'
3 The formula commencing with the words Yathâ ahu vaiyō (see Bund. I, 21); its parts or bag hâ are the phrases into which it may be divided (see Yas. XIX, 4, 6, 9, 12).
4 Reading draham, 'more clamorous or chattering,' but the word is ambiguous, as it may be darraktar, 'more rending,' or girâftar, 'more weighty, more threatening,' &c.
5 M6 has Bak. This was the third nask or 'book' of the complete Mazdayasnic literature, according to the Dīnkard, which calls it Bakō; but according to the Dīnī-vagarkard and the Rivāyats it was the fourth nask. For its contents, as given by the Dīnī-vagarkard, see Haug's Essays, p. 127. In the Dīnkard, besides a very brief account of it, in the eighth book, which states that it was a treatise on the recitation of the revealed texts, there is, in the ninth book, a long description of the contents of each of its twenty-two fargards, occupying fifty quarto pages in the MSS. of the Dīnkard. From this it appears that the passage quoted in our text probably occurred in the first thus: "Whoever shall mutter, O Zaratuṣṭ! my allotment of the Ahunavar—that is, shall softly take it inwardly—and shall let it escape again—that is, shall utter it aloud—so much as a half, or one-third, or one-fourth, or one-fifth, his soul will I shield, I who am Aūharmazd, from the best existence—that is, I will keep it away—by so much of an interval as the width of this earth.'

27. The rule is this, that one is to proceed with great deliberation when he does not know whether it be a sin or a good work, that is, it is not to be done.

28. The rule is this, that an opinion (andāṣak) of anything is to be formed through consultation fargard. It also occurs, in nearly the same words, in Pahl. Yas. XIX, 12–15, and as Yas. XIX is called 'the beginning of the Bakān' in some MSS., it is possible that the three Hās (Yas. XIX–XXI) which relate to the three short Avesta formulas are really the first three fargards of the Bagh Nask, which are said to have treated of the same subjects.

1 The text is corrupted into min zak-i li, Zaratuṣṭ! bēstārīh-i min Ahunavar drūgīst, which might be translated, in connection with the following phrase, thus: 'Of my vexation, O Zaratuṣṭ! from the Ahunavar, the most fiendish is that one shall softly take it,' &c. But very slight alterations of the Pahlavi letters (in accordance with Pahl. Yas. XIX, 12) convert min into mūn, bēstārīh into bākh-tārīh, and drūgīst into dren̄gād. Instead of 'allotment of the Ahunavar' we might read 'predestination, or providence, from the Ahunavar;' because the Pahlavi translator, by using the word bākh-tārīh or bakhtārīh, appears to have understood the Av. bagha in its sense of 'divinity, providence,' rather than in that of 'part, portion.'

2 Reading rānīnēd or râhōnēd. The Pahlavi translator seems to think the sin consists in breaking the spell of the vâg-or inward prayer (see Chap. III, 6) by speaking part of it aloud; but the original Avesta of this passage attributes the sin to obscuring the meaning by imperfect recitation.
with the good; even so it is revealed in the Kidrast Nask that Spendarmad spoke to Mānūškihar thus: ‘Even the swiftest horse requires the whip (tāzā-

1 This was the twelfth nask or ‘book’ of the complete Mazdayasian literature, according to the Dīndar, which calls it Kidrastō or Kidrōstō; but according to the Dīnf-vagarkard and the Rivāyats it was the fourteenth nask called Girast. For its contents, as given by the Dīnf-vagarkard, see Haug’s Essays, p. 131. The following is a summary of the short account of it given in the eighth book of the Dīndar:—

The Kidrōstō is a treatise on the race of man; how Aūharmazd produced the first man, Gāyōmard, how the first pair, Mashya and Mashyōt, arose, with their progeny, till the region of Khvāndras was full, when they supplied the six surrounding regions, till they filled and cultivated the whole world. The Pērōdān dynasty of Hōshāng, Tākhmōrūpō, and Yim, the evil reign of Dahāk, descended from Tāz, the brother of Hōshāng and father of the Arabs, then Frēdūn who divided Khvāndras between his three sons, Salm, Tūg, and Afrik, who married the daughters of Pātsrōbō (compare Pahl. Vend. XX, 4) king of the Arabs, then Mānūškihar, descendant (nāpō) of Afrik, the penal reign of Frāṣiyār ruler of Tūrān, then Aūzōbō the Tūmāspian, descendant of Mānūškihar, then Kai-Kavād and the penal reign of Karsāspō. The Kayānian dynasty of Kāt-Us, Kai-Khūsrōb son of Sīyāvakhsh, with many tales of the specially famous races of Iran, Tūrān, and Salmān, even to the reigns of Kai-Lōharasp and Kai-Vistāsp. The apostle Zaratūst, and the progress of time and events from the reign of Frēdūn till Zaratūst’s conference with Aūharmazd. The race of Mānūškihar, Nōdār, and others. Avarēshtrabau’s (see Fravardīn Yt. 106) father, Ātarō-pād son of Māraspend. On future events and the reign of the renovation of the universe; the origin of the knowledge of occupation, and the care and industry of the period; the great acquaintance of mankind with the putting aside of injury from the adversary, the preservation of the body, and the deliverance of the soul, both before and after the time of Zaratūst.

As Mānūškihar is several times mentioned there are several places in this Nask where the statement, quoted in the text as a saying of Spendarmad, the female archangel who has special charge of the earth (see Chap. XV, 5, 20–24, and Bund. I, 26), may have occurred.
nak), the sharpest steel knife requires the whetstone (afsán), and the wisest man requires counsel (hampúrsth).

29. The rule is this, that when one laughs outright (barâ khandèd) the Avesta and Zand are not to be mumbled, for the wisdom of Aûharmazd is omniscient, and good works are a great exercise of liberality, but an extreme abstinence from producing irritation (hangtdâr-dahîsníh); because in the Ra-tûtstâtîth Nask 1 many harsh things are said about the severe punishment of producers of irritation, in the spiritual existence.

30. The rule is this, that as there may be some even of those of the good religion who, through unacquaintance with the religion, when a female fowl crows in the manner of a cock, will kill the

1 This was the seventh nask or 'book' of the complete Mazdayasian literature, according to the Dînkard, which calls it Ratûtstâtîf; but according to the Dînî-vagarkard and the Rivâyats it was the eighth nask called Ratustâtî. For its contents, as given by the Dînî-vagarkard, see Haug's Essays, p. 129. The following is a summary of the short account of it given in the eighth book of the Dînkard:

The Ratûtstâtîf is a treatise on indispensable religious practices, the reason of the worthiness and superexcellence in a purifying priest, and how to distinguish worthiness and superexcellence from unworthiness, in the priesthood of each of the seven regions of the earth; on the indication and manifestation of an assemblage of the archangels, the formulas and means to be employed in reverencing the angels, the position and duties of the two officiating priests in the ceremonies, and all the business of the orderers of ceremonies, with their various duties; on the greatness and voluntariness of good works, the kinds of voluntariness, and the proximity of Aûharmazd to the thoughts, words, and deeds of the material world.

It is uncertain under which of these heads the passage mentioned in the text may have occurred.
fowl, so those of the primitive faith\(^1\) have said that there may be mischief (vināstārth) from wizards in that dwelling, which the cock is incapable of keeping away, and the female fowl makes that noise for the assistance of the cock\(^2\), especially when the bringing of another cock into that dwelling is necessary.

31. The rule is this, that when one sees a hedgehog, then along with it\(^3\) a place in the plain, free from danger, is to be preserved; for in the Vendidad\(^4\) the high-priests have taught that it is when the hedgehog every day voids urine into an ant’s nest that a thousand ants will die.

32. The rule is this, that in the Vendidad\(^5\) seven kinds of things are mentioned, and when they are the cause of a man’s death, until the forthcoming period of the day (gās-i levīn) comes on, contami-

\(^2\) The cock is considered to be an opponent of demons and wizards (see Bund. XIX, 33), and to warn men against the seductions of the demoness of lethargy (see Vend. XVIII, 33–42, 52).

\(^3\) Assuming that levatman val means levatman valman, but the reading ‘he takes it back to (lakhvār val) the plain,’ which occurs in the repetition of this section in Chap. XII, 20, seems preferable.

\(^4\) The details which follow are to be found in Bund. XIX, 28, but they appear to be no longer extant in the Pahlavi Vendidad; though the hedgehog is called ‘the slayer of the thousands of the evil spirit,’ in Vend. XIII, 5, of which passage the statement in our text seems to be an illustration. The ant is considered noxious.

\(^5\) Vend. VII, 5, 6, where, however, eight modes of death are mentioned, which delay the arrival of the Nāsūr, or fiend of corruption, till the next period of the day; these are when the person has been killed by a dog, a wolf, a wizard, anxiety, falling into a pit, the hand of man as sentenced by law, illegal violence, or strangulation. In all other cases it is supposed that the fiend of corruption enters the corpse immediately after death (see Vend. VII, 2–4).
nation (nisrûst)\(^1\) does not rush upon him; and for this reason, this, too, is well for the good, that is, to show a dog rightly again a previous corpse in the forthcoming period of the day.\(^2\)

33. The rule is this, that by those who attend to a corpse among the pure it is then to be shown to a dog very observant of the corpse; for when even a thousand persons shall carry away a corpse which a dog has not seen, they are all polluted.\(^3\)

34. The rule is this, that meat, when there is stench or decomposition not even originating with it, is not to be prayed over; and the sacred cake (drôn) and butter (gâûs-dâk) which are hairy are also not to be prayed over.\(^4\)

35. A woman is fit for priestly duty (zôtîh) among women, and when she is consecrating the sacred

2 In order that there may be no risk of the fiend of corruption having entered the corpse after it was first exhibited to a dog.
3 This statement has been already made in Chap. II, 65.
4 That is, it is not to be used in any religious ceremony. Small pieces of meat are consecrated, along with the sacred cakes, in the Drôn and Âfrîngân ceremonies at certain festivals.
5 So in K\textsuperscript{2}oa; but M6 has, 'the sacred cake they present, even that is not to be prayed over.' Although M6 is more carefully written than K\textsuperscript{2}oa, it seems to have been copied from an original which was hardly legible in some places, of which this is one. The presence of a hair in the cake or butter would render it useless for religious purposes.
6 But only for some of the minor priestly offices, such as consecrating the sacred cake. According to Avesta passages, quoted in the Nîrângistân, any man who is not a Tanâpûhar sinner can perform certain priestly duties for virtuous men, and any woman who is not seeble-minded (kasu-khrathwa) can perform them for children.
7 M6 has, 'when she does not consecrate.'
cake (drôn), and one Ashem-vohû 1 is uttered by her, she puts the sacred twigs (baresôm) back on the twig-stand, brings them away, and the utterance of another one is good; when she says it is not expedient to do it with attention before a meal, it is proper. 36. The sacred cake of a disreputable woman is not to be consecrated, but is to be rendered ineligible (avigînakô).

37. When one places a thing before the fire observantly, and does not see the splendour itself, 'tava âthrô' 2 is not to be said.

38. At night, when 3 one lies down, the hands are to be thoroughly washed. 39. That which comes from a menstruous woman to any one, or to anything, is all to be thoroughly washed with bull's urine (gômêz) and water. 4

[40. The rule is this, as Åtarô-pâd son of Māraqpend 5 said when every one passed away:—'The mouth-veil 6 and also the clothing are to be well

1 See Bund. XX, 2; it is rather doubtful whether we should read 'one' or 'two.'

2 These Avesta words, meaning 'for thee, the fire,' are used when presenting anything to the fire, such as firewood and incense (see Yas. VII, 3, XXII, 10, 22, &c.)

3 Reading amat, 'when,' instead of mûn, 'who' (see Bund. I, 7, note).

4 Here ends the original Shâyast lâ-shâyast. § 40 is found only in M6, and is evidently a later addition to that MS. by another hand. Then follows the Farhang-i Olm-khadûk, both in M6 and K2o; this is an old Avesta-Pahlavi Glossary which has no connection with Sls., although it may be of the same age, as it quotes many Avesta sentences which are no longer extant elsewhere, and amongst others passages from the Nihâdûm Nask (see Sls. X, 3) and the commentary of Afarg (see Sls. I, 3).

PART II.—A Supplementary Treatise. 1

CHAPTER XI.

1. The degrees of sin are these ², such as a Farmân, Srōshô-karanâm, Ågerept, Åvilrist, Aredûs, Khôr, Bázât, Yât, and Tanâpûhar, and I will mention each of them a second time. 2. A Farmân is the weight of three dirhams of four mads; ³ pieces of white cotton cloth, hanging loosely from the bridge of the nose to at least two inches below the mouth, and tied with two strings at the back of the head. It must be worn by a priest whenever he approaches the sacred fire, so as to prevent his breath from contaminating the fire. On certain occasions a layman has to use a substitute for the penôm by screening his mouth and nose with a portion of his muslin shirt. ³ (Haug's Essays, p. 243, note 1; see also Pahl.Vend. XVIII, 1-4.)

1 This second part is evidently by another writer, for he not only repeats several passages (Chaps. XI, 1, 2, XII, 11, 13-16, 18, 20), which are given in the first part, but he also writes generally in a less simple style. In some MSS. of Sls.alone, such as M9, the second part immediately follows the first, as in this translation; indicating that it has been accepted as a part of the same work. But in M6 the two parts are separated by the Farh. Okh., occupying twenty folios; and in K20 there is an interval of ninety-two folios, containing the Farh. Okh., Bund., B. Yt., and several other texts.

² §§ 1, 2 are a repetition of Chap. I, 1, 2, with a few variations. The number of degrees is here raised to nine by the addition of the Srōshô-karanâm (see Chap. X, 24), which is written Srōshakaranâm in both these sections.

³ Reading i mad-4, instead of va m-4; the mad being a quarter-dirham (see Chap. X, 24, note); or we can read 'weight and quantity (mâyah) of three dirhams.' The amount of the Farmân
Srōshô-karanâm is one dirham and two mads; three Srōshô-karanâms are the weight of four dirhams and two mads\(^1\); an Âgerept is thirty-three stîrs\(^2\); an Âtvrist is the weight of thirty-three dirhams; an Aredûs is thirty stîrs\(^3\); a Khôr is sixty stîrs; a Bâsâl is ninety stîrs; a Yât is a hundred and eighty stîrs, and a Tanâpûhar is three hundred stîrs.

3. Every one ought to be unhesitating and unanimous about this, that righteousness is the one thing, and heaven (ga:rôdêmân)\(^4\) the one place, which is good, and contentment the one thing more comfortable.

4. When a sheep\(^5\) is slaughtered and divided, its meat-offering (gâvûs-dâk)\(^6\) is to be thus presented:—the tongue, jaw, and left eye are the

\(^1\) That is, one Srōshô-karanâm is one dirham and a half, and three of them, therefore, are four dirhams and a half; the mad being a quarter-dirham. This computation differs considerably from the amounts stated in Chaps. X, 24, XVI, 5, but corresponds better with the supposition (see Chap. IV, 14, note) that a Srōshô-karanâm is one-third of a Farmân.

\(^2\) Both this amount and the next are evidently wrong, and no doubt the Pahlavi ciphers have been corrupted. Chap. XVI, 5 gives 'sixteen' and 'twenty-five' stîrs, which are probably correct, though the computation in Chap. I, 2 is very different.

\(^3\) Written Aredûs 30 sî, 'an Aredûs is 30 (thirty),' as in Chap. I, 2; with which also all the remaining amounts correspond.

\(^4\) See note on pählûm ahvân in Chap. VI, 3.

\(^6\) Av. gâus hudhau, which is generally represented by a small piece of butter placed upon one of the sacred cakes; but on certain occasions small pieces of meat are used. The object of this section is to point out what part of the animal is suitable for use in a ceremony dedicated to any one of the angels, or spirits, mentioned.
angel Hôm's\(^1\) own; the neck is Ashavahist's\(^2\) own; the head is the angel Vâê's\(^3\) own; the right shoulder (arm) is Ardvîsûr's\(^4\); the left is Drvâsp's\(^5\); the right thigh (hakht) is for the guardian spirit\(^6\) of Vistâsp, and the left for the guardian spirit of Gâmâsp\(^7\); the back is for the supreme chief\(^8\); the loin is the spirits' own; the belly is Spendarmad's\(^9\); the testicles\(^10\) are for the star Vanand\(^11\); the kidneys are

\(^1\) Av. haoma, the angel of the Hôm plant (see Yas. IX–XI, Bund. XVIII, r–3, XXVII, 4, 24), the juice of which is used in ceremonial worship by the Parsis.

\(^2\) The same as Ardvâvahist (see Bund. I, 26).

\(^3\) Mô has 'Râm' as a gloss; he is the Vayô of the Râm Yt., 'the good Vaê' of Mkh. II, 115, who assists the righteous souls in their progress to the other world; his name, Râm, is given to the twenty-first day of the Parsi month (see Chap. XXII, 21).

\(^4\) Av. Ardvî sûra of the Âbân Yt., a title of Anâhita, the female angel of the waters (see Bund. XXXII, 8). This title is written Arêdvîsûr in the Bundahîs, and applied to the source of pure water (Bund. XIII); while the name Âvân, 'waters,' is given to the eighth month and the tenth day of each month in the Parsi year.

\(^5\) Av. Drvâspa of the Gôs Yt., the name of the female angel of cattle, called Gôsûrvan in Bund. IV; her alternative name, Gôs, is given to the fourteenth day of the Parsi month.

\(^6\) The word fravash-i, 'the guardian spirit of,' is evidently omitted here, as it occurs with the next name. For Vistâsp, see Bund. XXXI, 29, XXXIV, 7.

\(^7\) Av. Gâmâspa of Yas. XIII, 24, XLV, 17, XLVIII, 9, L, 18, Âbân Yt. 68, &c., the prime minister of Vistâsp.

\(^8\) Ratpôk berêzaď stands for the Av. rathwô berezatô of Yas. I, 46, &c., a 'supreme chief' who is often associated with the chiefs of the various subdivisions of time, and seems to be Ahirmazd himself (see Yas. LVI, i, 10).

\(^9\) The female archangel who has charge of the earth (see Chap. XV, 5, 20–24, and Bund. I, 26).

\(^10\) The word gûnd has here, in most MSS., the usual Persian gloss dâhâti, 'mouth' (see Bund. XIX, r), which is a very improbable meaning in this place.

\(^11\) Probably Fomalhaut (see Bund. II, 7, note).
Haptôtring’s\(^1\); the ventricle (nask\(\text{a}dakö)\(^2\) is for the guardian spirit of priests; the lungs are for the guardian spirit of warriors; the liver is for compassion and sustenance\(^3\) of the poor; the spleen is Mânsarspend’s\(^4\); the fore-legs (bâzâf) are for the waters; the heart is for the fires; the entrail fat is Arđât-fravard’s\(^5\); the tail-bone (dunb-gazakö) is for the guardian spirit of Zaratûst the Spîtâmân\(^6\); the tail (dunb\(\text{a}k) is for Vâd\(^7\) the righteous; the right eye is in the share of the moon\(^8\); and any\(^9\) that may be left over from those is for the other archangels. 5: There have been those who may have spoken about protection, and there have been those who may have done so about meat-offerings; whoever has spoken about protection is such as has

\(^2\) Translating in accordance with the Persian gloss \(\text{š}ustah,\) given in the modern MS. M\(\text{g}\); but nas-k\(\text{a}dakö may perhaps mean ‘the womb.’\)
\(^3\) Reading sar-\(\text{š}yisnö, ‘maturity,’ the usual equivalent of Av. thraosta (see Yas. XXXIV, 3), and not srâyisnö, ‘chanting.’
\(^4\) Av. m\(\text{a}\)thra spenta, ‘the beneficent sayings, or holy word,’ of which this angel is a personification; his name is often corrupted into Mahraspand or Mâraspend, and is given to the twenty-ninth day of the Parsi month (see Chap. XXII, 29).
\(^5\) A personification of the Av. ashaonâm fravashayö, ‘guardian angels of the righteous’ (see Fravardin Yt. I, &c.), whence the first month, and the nineteenth day of each month, in the Parsi year, are called Fravardin.
\(^6\) This clause and the next are omitted in K\(\text{z}\).
\(^7\) The angel of the wind, whose name is given to the twenty-second day of the Parsi month (see Chap. XXII, 22).
\(^8\) Or its angel, Mâh, whose name is given to the twelfth day of the Parsi month.
\(^9\) M\(\text{g}\) has va a\(\text{š}-\)maman=va a\(\text{š}\)k (Pers. f\(\text{a}k, ‘any’); K\(\text{z}\) has kîlîmaman, ‘whatever,’ and omits the words ‘may be left over’ and ‘other.’
spoken well, and whoever has spoken about meat-offerings has not spoken everything which is noteworthy. 6. When one shall offer up what pertains to one (khadûkag) on account of another it is proper; except the tongue, jaw, and left eye, for those are the angel Hôm's own is manifest from the passage: 'Hizvâm frêrenaod', &c.

Chapter XII.

1. The rule is this, that when one's form of worship (yâst) is performed, and it is not possible for him to prepare it, the practice of those of the primitive faith is, when the girdle (afpiyâung) is twined about a sacred twig-bundle (baresôm) of seven twigs (tâk), to consecrate a sacred cake (drônô) thrice, which becomes his form of worship that is performed one degree better through the sacred cake; and of the merit of a threefold consecration

---

1 Meaning, apparently, that to pray for protection as a favour is better than to pray for it as a return for an offering.
2 K2o has 'shall give up.'
3 It is doubtful if this passage can be found in the extant Avesta; but a passage of similar meaning, and containing the words frêrenaod and hizvô, occurs in Yas. XI, 16, which states that 'the righteous father, Ahuramazda, produced for me, Haoma, as a Draona, the two jaws, with the tongue and the left eye;' and it then proceeds (Yas. XI, 17–19) to curse any one 'who shall deprive me of that Draona, or shall himself enjoy, or shall give away what the righteous Ahuramazda gave me, the two jaws, with the tongue and the left eye.'
of the sacred cake the high-priests have specially taught, in the Hûspâram Nask\textsuperscript{1}, that it is as much as that of a lesser form of worship.

2. The rule is this, that he who is himself more acquainted with religion is he who considers him who is more acquainted with religion than himself as high-priest, and considers him as high-priest\textsuperscript{2} so that he may not destroy the bridge of the soul\textsuperscript{3}; as it says in the Sakâdûm Nask\textsuperscript{4} that no one of them, that is an inattentive (aśrûshdâr) man who has no high-priest, attains to the best existence\textsuperscript{5}, not though his recitations—should be so many that they have made his duty and good works as much as the verdure (sapdak) of the plants when it shoots forth in spring, the verdure which Aûharmazd has given abundantly.

3. The rule is this, that they keep a fire\textsuperscript{6} in the house, because, from not keeping the fire properly, there arise less pregnancy of women and a weeping (āv-dīdanō) for the loss of strength (tanû) of men\textsuperscript{7}; and the chilled charcoal (angîst) and the rest which are without advantage (bar) are to be

\textsuperscript{2} K\textcopyright omitted this repetition.

\textsuperscript{3} That is, may not render the passage of his soul to heaven, over the Kînva'd bridge (see Bund. XII, 7), impossible, owing to the sin of arrogance in this world.

\textsuperscript{4} See Chap. X, 25; the passage alluded to was probably at the beginning of the Nask, which treated of ‘the reward of the precepts of religion, and the bridge of the destroyers of good preceptors, adapted to their destruction.’

\textsuperscript{5} See Chap. VI, 3.

carried away from the fire; and in the Spend Nask \(^1\) it is revealed that a fire, when they shall make it quite clean from its chilled charcoal, has as much comfort as a man whose clothing they should make clean.

4. The rule is this, that when any one passes away it is proper to render useless \(^2\) as much as the smallest mouth-veil \(^3\), for it says in the Vendidad \(^4\) that 'if even those Mazdayasnians should leave on him who is dead, in parting with him, as much as that which a damsel would leave in parting with the food-bowl (padmânakô)—that is, a bag (anbânakô-hanâ) \(^5\)—the decree is this, that it is a Tanâ-

\(^1\) See Chap. X, 4; the passage mentioned was probably in that part of the Nask which described the protection afforded by the fire to the new-born Zaratârt.

\(^2\) Probably a negative is omitted, or akârînâdânô should be translated 'to make no use of.'

\(^3\) See Chap. X, 40. K20 has 'garment.'

\(^4\) Always written Vadîkdâd in this second part of Sls., except in Chap. XIII, 7; whereas in the first part it is written in its uncorrupted form Gavîd-dêf-dâd or Gavîd-sêdâ-dâd, 'the law opposed to the demons.' The passage here quoted is Pahl. Vend. V, 171, 172, with one or two verbal variations.

\(^5\) Standing for anbânak-aê, which is corrupted in the Vendidad MSS. into the unintelligible form anđanakô-r, so that this old quotation throws a rather unexpected light upon a passage in the Vendidad which translators would be almost certain to misunderstand. The allusion is to the bags used by a menstruous woman, when eating, to prevent contamination of the food. The Persian Rivâyats state that three bags (kîsâh) are made of two thicknesses of strong linen, one bag to wear on each hand, and the third, which is larger, to hold the metal food-bowl and water-goblet. After thoroughly washing her hands and face, she puts the two bags on her hands, taking care that they do not touch her food, or clothes, or any other part of her body. She then feeds herself with a metal spoon, which must not touch her nose; and when the meal
5. The rule is this, that when any one passes away, after keeping fasting the three nights, still the presentation of holy-water (zôhar) to the fire is to be performed, which is the presenting of the holy-water to the nearest fire; for in the Dâmdâd Nask it is revealed that when they sever (te-brûnd) the consciousness of men it goes out to the nearest fire, then out to the stars, then out to the is finished the food-bowl and water-goblet are placed on the large bag, and the two smaller bags inside it, till wanted again.

1 See Chap. I, 1, 2.

2 This passage does not appear to be now extant in the Vendidad, and it is possible to read Nask Dâd instead of Vadikdâd. The Dâdî or Dâdak Nask was the eleventh nask or 'book' of the complete Mazdayasnian literature, according to the Dînkard, which merely says that its 'Avesta and Zend are not communicated to us by the high-priest.' According to the Dînî-vagarkard, which calls it Khûstô, and the Rivâyats, which call it Khast, it was the twelfth Nask, and they give its contents in more detail than usual (see Hang's Essays, pp. 130, 131).

3 Meaning that the dead require no clothing, as their future bodies will be clothed out of the garments they have given away in charity. The resemblance of this statement to that contained in Bund. XXX, 28, which must have been abridged from the Dâmndâd Nask (see Szs. IX, 1), renders it possible that it may have been taken from that Nask.

4 No fresh meat is to be cooked or eaten for the first three days after a death in the house, according to the Sad-dar Bundahîr, LXXVIII (compare Chap. XVII, 1-3).

5 See Szs. IX, 1. The passage here quoted may perhaps be found in the complete text of the Bundahîr, as given in TD (Chap. 37; see Introduction, p. xxxvii).
moon, and then out to the sun; and it is needful that the nearest fire, which is that to which it has come out, should become stronger (zôr-hômând-tar).

6. The rule is this, that they should not leave a nail-paring unprayed over (ânâfsûdak), for if it be not prayed over (afsând) it turns into the arms and equipments of the Mâzanân demons; this is explicitly shown in the Vendidad.

7. The rule is this, that the labour of child-birth is not to be accomplished at night, except while with the light of a fire, or the stars and moon, upon it; for great opposition is connected with it, and in the twentieth of the Hûspâram Nask it is shown that over the soul of him who works in the dark there is more predominance of the evil spirit.

8. The rule is this, that they should allow the egg and other food for those gifts and favours of the

1 A righteous soul is supposed to step out first to the star station, then to the moon station, and then to the sun station, on its way to Garûdmân, the highest heaven; but if its righteousness is imperfect it has to stop at one of these three stations, which are the three lower grades of heaven (see note on pâhlûm ahvân, Chap. VI, 3).

2 Or ‘more provided with zôr,’ which may mean ‘holy-water,’ as the two words zôr and zôhar are occasionally confounded.

3 Or, perhaps, ‘if they shall not pray over it.’

4 See Bund. III, 29, XIX, 19, 20.

5 Vend. XVII, 29.

6 Barman-zerkhûnînîn may also mean ‘begetting a son.’

7 See Chap. X, 21. The word ‘twentieth’ appears to refer to the second group of twenty sections, one of which treated of the begetting, birth, and treatment of children.

8 Referring to the egg, drôns, frasasts, and gâus hudhâu or ‘meat-offering’ (which may be either butter or meat, see Chap. XI, 4) that are used in the drôn ceremony, or consecration of the sacred cakes (see note on drôn, Chap. III, 32). The object of sovereign moon (mâh-i khûdât) and the other angels; if so, it is to be allowed by them thus: ‘I will consecrate so much food for such an angel,’ and not thus: ‘One sacred cake (drônô) in so much food.’ 9. And the reason of it is this, that they who shall allow thus: ‘One sacred cake out of so much food,’ and of which it is one thing less, even though one shall consecrate it many times, still then he has not repaid; and they who should allow thus: ‘I will consecrate so much food for such an angel,’ though one shall reverence him with many sacred cakes, it is proper. 10. And in the twenty-two sections of the Sakâdûm Nask¹ grievous things are shown about those who do not make offerings (aûstôfrîd) unto the angels.

11. The rule is this, that when a woman becomes pregnant, as long as it is possible, a fire one cares for well is to be maintained in the house, because it is revealed ² in the Spend Nask that to Dûkdâv³, the mother of Zaratûst, when she was pregnant with Zaratûst, for three nights, every night a leader (shâh)⁴ with a hundred and fifty demons came for the destruction of Zaratûst, and yet, owing to the existence of the fire in the dwelling, they knew no means for it.

² Mô has ‘the fire of Aûharmazd is to be fully maintained, and it is revealed,’ &c. This section is a repetition of Chap. X, 4, with a few variations.

⁴ Or it may be read sêdâ, ‘a daemon’ meaning ‘an arch-fiend.’
12. The rule is this, where a child is born, during three days, for protection from demons, wizards, and witches, a fire is to be made at night until daylight, and is to be maintained there in the day, and pure incense is to be put upon it, as is revealed in the thirtieth of the Sakādūm Nask.

13. The rule is this, that from a toothpick the bark is to be well cut off, for there are some of those of the primitive faith who have said that, when they shall make it for the teeth with the bark on, and they throw it away, a pregnant woman, who puts a foot upon it, is doubtful about its being dead matter.

14. The rule is this, that it is well if any one of those who have their handmaid (kākar) in cohabitation (zanṭh), and offspring is born of her, shall accept all those who are male as sons; but those who are female are no advantage, because an adopted son (sāṭr) is requisite, and in the fourteenth of the Hūspāram Nask the high-priests

2 §§ 13–16 are a repetition of Chap. X, 20–23, with a few variations.

3 The word appears to be tōpō or tūfō, which would rather mean ‘scum’ or ‘gum’ (see Bund. XXVII, 19); unless it be considered a miswriting of tōgō or tōzō, which would mean ‘thin bark’ or ‘bast.’ It can also be read tūpar, ‘a leather bag,’ and the sentence can be so translated as to imply that a toothpick should be cut out of a leather bag, an alternative similar to that suggested by the text of Chap. X, 20.

have taught thus: 'My son is suitable also as thy son, but my daughter is not suitable also as thy daughter; and there are many who do not appoint an adopted son with this idea, that: 'The child of a handmaid may be accepted by us as a son.'

15. The rule is this, that one is to persevere much in the begetting of offspring, since it is for the acquisition of many good works at once; because in the Spend and Nihådûm Nasks the high-priests have taught that the duty and good works which a son performs are as much the father's as though they had been done by his own hand; and in the Dâmdâd Nask it is revealed thus: 'Likewise, too, the good works, in like manner, which come to the father as his own.'

16. The rule is this, that what they shall give to the worthy is as much as is proper and beyond, for eating and accumulating; because in the Nihådûm Nask the high-priests have taught thus: 'When a man gives bread to a man, even though that man has too much bread, all the good works, which he shall perform through that superabundance, become as much his who gave it as though they had been done by his own hand.'

17. The rule is this, that in the night water is not to be drawn\(^1\) from a well, as in the Bāg-yasnô\(^2\) notice is given about the uncleanness (ayosdâsarîh) of well-water at night.

18. The rule is this, that in the night anything eatable is not to be cast away to the north, because a fiend \textit{will} become pregnant; and when it is cast away one Yathâ-ahû-vairyô\(^3\) is to be uttered. 19. Those of the primitive faith\(^4\) who \textit{used} to act more orthodoxically (hû-rastakthâtar), when food \textit{was} eaten by them in the night, for the sake of preservation from sin owing to the coming of strainings \textit{and} sprinklings on to the ground, directed a man to chant the Ahunavar\(^5\) from the beginning of the feast

\(^2\) Probably the Bakân-yastô is meant, which was the fourteenth nask or ‘book’ of the complete Mazdayasian literature, according to the Dînkard; but according to the Dînî-vagarkard and the Rivâyats it was the fifteenth nask, called Baghân-yast. For its contents, as given by the Dînî-vagarkard, see Haug’s Essays, p. 132. The following is the account of it given in the eighth book of the Dînkard:

‘The Bakân-yastô is a treatise, first, on the worship (yastô) of Aûharmazd, the most pre-eminent of divinities (bakân âvartâm), and, secondly, the worship of the angels of the other invisible and visible worldly existences, out of whom are even the names of the days, and the glory, power, triumph, and miraculousness of their life also is extreme; the angels who are invoked by name in their worship, and the attention \textit{and} salutation \textit{due} to them; the worthiness \textit{and} dispensation of favour for worshippers, \textit{and} the business of their many separate recitations unto the angels; the business of unlimited acquaintance with knowledge about the promoters of the treasures of the period, unto whom the creator Aûharmazd \textit{is} to intrust them, \textit{and} they remain to cause industry. Perfect is the excellence of righteousness.’

(myazd) unto the end, more especially at the feast of the season-festivals; as it says in the Hádökht Nask¹, that of the sayings which are spoken out the Ahunavar is that which is most triumphant.

20. The rule is this, that when one sees a hedgehog he takes it back to the plain, and its own place is to be preserved free from danger; for in the Vendidad the high-priests have taught, that every day, when the hedgehog voids urine into an ant’s nest, a thousand ants will die².

21. The rule is this, that some who are of the good religion say, where one is washing his face, one Ashem-vohû³ is always to be uttered, and that Ashem-vohû is to be uttered before the washing; for when he utters it while washing his face, he is doubtful (var-hômánd) about the water coming to his mouth.

22. The rule is this, that they select from the purifiers⁴—when their business (mindavam) is as important (rabâ) as purity and impurity—him with whom the control⁵ of ablution (pâdiyâvth)⁶ and non-ablution is connected; they select him especially

⁴ The yôzdâsarân, ‘purifiers’ (Av. yaozâthrya), are those priests who retain so much of the purifying effect of the Bareshnûm ceremony (see Chap. II, 6) as to be able to assist in purifying others by means of the same ceremony. When that effect has passed away a priest can no longer perform the sacred rites, until he has again undergone the nine nights’ purification of the Bareshnûm.

with regard to the good disposition and truthful speaking of the man, and to the particular work; and on account of his being in innocence he is to be considered more righteous. 23. As in the Vendidad it says, about the two shares of righteousness, how one should tell that he is 'a righteous man, O Zaratûst the Spîtâmân! who is a purifier, who should be a speaker that speaks truly, an enquirer of the sacred texts—that is, he has performed his ritual (yast)—a righteous one who specially understands purification from the religion of the Mazdayas- nians, that is, he understands its religious formulas (nîrang).' 24. When it is so that the control of their ablution is connected with him, so that they consider what pertains to the purifying bowl (zak-i tâstîk) as his, and ever abstain from it, though the angels hear and consider them as clean, and they select for him those who consecrate the water and bull's urine (gômëz) on account of their control of purification (yôsdâsarkarîh), and it is to be performed very observantly by the consecrators at the place which is to be measured with a measure and very exactly (khûptar). 25. And the purifier is so much the better when washed again, and when it is by some one through whose periodic (zamânîk)

2 Referring to the Bareshnûm-gâh, or place prepared for the Bareshnûm ceremony of purification with bull's urine and water, which are handed to the person undergoing purification by an officiating priest (see Chap. II, 6). The place is marked out with furrows in the ground, and furnished with stones (maugh) to squat upon during the ablutions (see B. Yt. II, 36). The construction of this paragraph is very obscure in many places, and its proper division into sentences is, therefore, uncertain.
care he is thus done; for in the periodic interval many secret\(^1\) kinds of pollution are produced. 26. Of the celebrators of the Vendidad the good are they who shall again perform the Navash\(\tilde{a}\)dar rite\(^2\); for, on account of the same nicety (n\(\tilde{a}\)z\(\tilde{u}\)k\(\tilde{h}\)) which is written above by me, and on account of much also that is secret, which has happened and mostly arises about it, there is no harm from performing it. 27: And any one of those who shall receive the water and bull’s urine it is very important to wash beforehand (pavan p\(\tilde{e}\)s)\(^3\); because, if there be impurity about him\(^4\), and he puts a hand to the cup (g\(\tilde{a}\)m\(\tilde{a}\)k), the water, and the bull’s urine, they are unclean (ap\(\tilde{a}\)d\(\tilde{a}\)v\(\tilde{o}\))\(^5\); when it is so that there be some one, when so, it is better that they always wash his eyelids (m\(\tilde{a}\)yak. g\(\tilde{a}\)s), and to wash them by the clean is good.

28. The rule is this, that thou shouldst not consider even any one hopeless (an\(\tilde{a}\)tm\(\tilde{e}\)d) of heaven,

\(^1\) Reading n\(\tilde{h}\)\(\tilde{a}\)n, but we might perhaps read ‘causes (vah\(\tilde{a}\)n) of pollution of many kinds.’ The meaning of the section is, that it is necessary for the purifying priest to maintain his own purity by frequently undergoing the Bareshn\(\tilde{u}\)m ceremony himself.

\(^2\) Y\(\ast\)-i Navash\(\tilde{a}\)dar in all MSS., but the latter word is most probably a corruption of Av. navakhshapara, ‘a period of nine nights,’ for which length of time the Bareshn\(\tilde{u}\)m ceremony must be continued (see Vend. IX, 144, XIX, 80). The ‘Navash\(\tilde{a}\)dar rite’ is, therefore, ‘the ceremony of the nine nights,’ which should be frequently undergone by the priests who celebrate the Vendidad ceremonial.

\(^3\) M6 has pavan p\(\tilde{e}\)rik, ‘with ceremony.’

\(^4\) M6 has ‘them.’

\(^5\) M6 has ‘one knows it is unto the cup and bull’s urine;’ but as M6 was evidently copied from a MS. already nearly illegible in some places, it is generally safer to follow K\(2\)o, except when M6 supplies words omitted by the more careless writer of K\(2\)o.
and they should not set their minds steadfastly on hell; thereby much sinfulness for which there is a desire would be undesirable, because there is nothing which is a sin in my religion for which there is no retribution, as it says in the Gāthas \[1\] thus:—‘Of those who are aware that thou art, O Āuḥarmazd! is even he who is infamous (rāspakō); and they know the punishment of him even who is very sinful.’ 29.
And as to him even who is a very sinful person, through the desire of good works which is entertained by him, there then comes more fully to him the joy of a soul newly worthy (nuk shāyaḍ); as in the Spend Nāšk\[3\] it was shown to Zaratūst about one man, that all his limbs were in torment, and one foot was outside; and Zaratūst enquired of Āuḥarmazd about the reason of it; and Āuḥarmazd said that he was a man, Davāns\[4\] by name; he was ruler over thirty-three districts, and he never practised

Pahl. Yas. XXXII, 7.

\[2\] M\[6\] has merely ‘through the good works which are practised by him;’ but K\[2\]\[0\] has ‘r hamak’ inserted at this point, which seems to indicate the existence of the nearly identical Pahlavi letters kâmak, ‘desire,’ in the original from which it was copied.

\[3\] See Chap. X, 4. The passage here quoted was no doubt contained in that part of the Nāšk which treated of the exhibition of heaven and hell to Zaratūst, which must have been very similar to the Arād-Vīrāf-nāmak, in which most of the details of this story about Davāns are given (see AV. XXXII).

\[4\] This is, no doubt, the Av. davās of Yas. XXXI, 10, which may be translated ‘hypocrite.’ The Pahlavi translation of the line in which the word occurs is thus rendered in Haug’s Essays (p. 351): ‘Āuḥarmazd does not allot to him who is an idler, the infidel who is any hypocrite (davās) in the sacred recitations. In the good religion it is asserted that even as much reward as they give to the hypocrite they do not give to the infidel.’

30. The rule is this, that when a man has performed his form of worship (yāst), and his wife has not performed it, it is extremely necessary to perform the suitable form of worship, or to order a Gētō-kharīd¹, so that they may become such as are works³; when one does not perform them, and the time is manifest to him, and when he shall set them aside to perform them out of the proper time, they shall go to the bridge⁴ as sin; the ceremonies which go to the bridge are these, and in the Hūspāram

Nask⁵ it says that they are the non-celebration of

² See B. Yt. III, 25; but the passage here quoted is not clearly indicated in the accounts we have of the contents of this Nask.
³ The distinction between these ceremonies and those whose values as good works are given in Chap. XVI, 6, appears to be that any omission in performing these five at their proper times amounts to an absolute sin, whereas the others are not so indispenable.
⁴ That is, they will be taken into account at the judgment on the soul's actions at the Kinvād bridge (see Bund. XII, 7).

32. The rule is this, that at every one of these three things, which come through hungry living, that is, sneezing, yawning, and sighing, one is to speak out a Yathâ-ahû-vairyô and one Ashem-vohû⁶; and also when one hears the sneezing of any one, to speak in like manner is so considered as an action of the good⁷; and in the Stûdgar Nask⁷ it says thus: "What prepares sneezing? that is, through what process (kâr) does it come?" And Aûharmazd said thus: "Hungry living, O Zarathûst! because the remedy for its existence is the Ahunavar, O Zarathûst! and righteousness⁸."

⁷ See B. Yt. I, 1. The passage here quoted is not to be traced in any of the accounts of this Nask.
⁸ 'The Ahunavar and praise of righteousness' would be a Pahlavi equivalent for 'the Yathâ-ahû-vairyô and Ashem-vohû.'
⁹ That is, the mystical meaning or influence supposed to attach to various parts of the ancient hymns, or to the manner in which they are chanted. The term Gâtha or 'hymn' (Pahl. gâs) is applied, in this chapter, not only to the five Gâthas properly so called, but also to the Yasna of seven chapters, and apparently to represent\textsuperscript{1} the Fravarânê (Yas. XI, end) of the preliminary ritual (pêš nîrang) and the rotation of these three Hâs (‘chapters’), the Fravarânê, Frastuyê, and Āstuyê—Fravarânê being the beginning of the Fravarânê\textsuperscript{2} which extends as far as fras-astayaêka\textsuperscript{3}, frastuyê\textsuperscript{4}, the beginning of the Fras-tuyê (Yas. XII, 1–XIII, 26) which extends up to the Āstuyê, and āstuyê\textsuperscript{5}, the beginning of the Āstaothwanem\textsuperscript{6} (Yas. XIII, 27–XIV, end) which extends as far as āstaothwanemkâ daêñayau Mâzdayas- nois—also represent the Visâi-ve-ameshâ-spentâ (Yas. XV), which is the beginning of the Stôtân-yasnô (‘the ritual of praising’)\textsuperscript{7}, and these three Hâs of the Baghâm (Yas. XIX–XXI).

2. In the exposition (kashîdak) and through the other portions of the Yasna written in the Gâtha dialect of the Avesta.

\textsuperscript{1} This appears to be the meaning, but the construction of this section is altogether very obscure, and the text is more or less corrupt in all MSS. In the celebration of the Yasna or Yasim the officiating priest tastes the Hôm juice during the recitation of Yas. XI (see Haug’s Essays, p. 404), and shortly afterwards he commences the preliminary prayers mentioned in the text.

\textsuperscript{2} Both K2o and M6 have Frerân in Pâzand.

\textsuperscript{3} Both K2o and M6 omit the initial f.

\textsuperscript{4} M6 has āstuyê.

\textsuperscript{5} M6 omits this word.

\textsuperscript{6} This is the Avesta name of the Hâ or chapter consisting of Yas. XIII, 27–XIV, 19; as Fraoreti is the name of the preceding Hâ, consisting of Yas. XII, 1–XIII, 26.

\textsuperscript{7} Probably consisting of the three Hâs, Yas. XV–XVII; in which case, the meaning seems to be that the three Ashem-vohûs, at the beginning of this preliminary ritual, are symbolical of each of the three triplets of chapters which follow them; first, of the Fravarânê, Fraoreti, and Āstaothwanem chapters; secondly, of the three chapters of the Stôtân-yasnô; and thirdly, of those of the Baghân Vast.
evidence of revelation (dīnā) the wise of those of the primitive faith\(^1\) have thus said, that a man of fifteen years\(^2\), and a son and brother of Mazdayas-nians—when he confesses his failings (māndak) to the high-priests (radān), and they shall bring him the whip and scourge\(^3\), and these five Gāthas\(^4\) are chanted and the good waters consecrated by him, and the whole of the renewed-birth ceremony (navīdzādīh)\(^5\) is performed by him—becomes a mature youth and not a child, and a share of the prayers of initiation (nāpar) and of the fires is to be given over to him\(^6\); and when thus much is not performed by him, a share is not to be given. 3. These five\(^7\) Gāthas are made up from the body of a righteous man.

\(^1\) See Chap. I, 3.

\(^2\) Referring to one about to become a priest.

\(^3\) The Av. astra and sraoshō-karana of Vend. IV, 38–114, &c., which were formerly used for the temporal punishment of sinners. Whether they are here brought to the neophyte as a token of his admission to the priesthood, or are administered to him as a punishment for his offences, is not quite clear.

\(^4\) The five Gāthas are the Ahunavaiti (Yas. XXVIII–XXXIV), the Ustavaiti (Yas. XLII–XLV), the Spentā-mainyū (Yas. XLVI– XLIX), the Vohū-khshathra (Yas. L), and the Vahistōisi (Yas.
LII); these collections of hymns are thus named from the words with which each of them commences, excepting the first, which derives its name from the Ahunavar (see Bund. I, 21) which is written in the same metre.

\(^5\) This is the Pahlavi form of the Parsi navazūdī, a term applied to the whole initiatory ceremonial of a nōnābar, or newly initiated priest; the term evidently implies that the ceremony is considered somewhat in the light of 'regeneration.'

\(^6\) That is, he can take his part in the regular priestly duties, including the initiation of other neophytes.

\(^7\) Both K20 and M6 have four in ciphers, which can hardly be right; the sentence is clear enough, but the idea of its writer is rather obscure.
4. Ahyā-yāsā (Yas. XXVIII), Khshmaibyā (Yas. XXIX), and Ad-tā-vakhshyā (Yas. XXX) have, severally, eleven stanzas (vakēst), because eleven things move spiritually within the bodies of men, as life, consciousness, religion, soul, guardian spirit, thought, word, deed, seeing, smelling, and hearing; and the bodies of men and other creatures are formed of water, fire, and wind.

5. Ashem-Ahurem-mazdām (Visp. XV) is to be recited three times before the coming of Hūshēdar, Hūshēdar-māh, and Sōshyans; and when they also recite the chapter (hād) well, and by line (gās) and stanza, those apostles are present, and the

1 These first three chapters of the Ahunavaiti collection of hymns are here supposed to symbolize the three material elements, whose union distinguishes a man's body from inorganic substances; while the eleven stanzas, which each of these chapters contains, symbolize the eleven immaterial existences said to be contained in the same body.

2 This is doubtful, as no verb is expressed, and the word bār, 'time,' is struck out in Mō, so it is possible to read 'the three foremost' of the Ashem-Ahurem-mazdām are the coming of Hūshēdar,' &c. The 'three foremost' (3 levīnōg) would be a possible Pahlavi translation of the Av. tisrō pāoiryō and tisrā pāoirya of Visp. XV, 4–6, instead of the actual 'three first' (3-i fractūm), as may be seen from Pahl. Visp. VIII, 17, 20; where both pēs (= levīnō) and fractūm are used indifferently for Av. pāoiryō. At any rate the idea embodied in the text is that these 'three first' have some reference to the three future apostles of the Parsi religion (see Bund. XXXII. 8, B. Yt. III, 13, 44, 52, 62). In fact, however, they seem to refer to the first three chapters of the Ahunavaiti Gātha, immediately after which this chapter (Visp. XV) is recited in the full Parsi ritual; the phrase being rendered in the Pahlavi translation thus:—'I reverence the three first by not speaking out, that is, I do not say anything during them, and not wearing out, that is, I do not doze away during them.'

3 K20 has 'arrive early.'
country becomes more flourishing and more dom in the world.

6. The twenty-two stanzas of Tā-ve-urvātā (Yas. XXXI) are the twenty-two judgments (dādistān) of which it speaks in the Hādōkht Nāsk⁠¹ thus:—

‘Anaomō manan'hē daya vispāi kva, kva parō?’ (‘where are they to be produced beyond every thought? and where before?’) ‘Lodging in the judge, that while he has twenty-two judgments he may be more just;'—so that when they pray the Tā-ve-urvātā chapter well, and recite it by line and stanza, the judges possess those twenty-two judgments more correctly, and judiciousness is more lodging in them.

7. The sixteen stanzas of the Hvaētumaithi chap-tor (Yas. XXXII)² are lodging in warriors, so that it becomes possible, during their good protection, to force the enemy away from those sixteen countries which the Vendidad³ mentions in its first fargard.

² This Hā, which begins with the words aḥvākā hvaētus, is not called by its initial words, as the preceding chapters are, but has this special name (see the prayers at the end of it) derived from its second word, and which is corrupted in Pāhlavi into Khvētmanō.

³ Here written Gavīd-sēdā-dād as in Sls. Part I, and not Vadīkdąd as in other parts of Sls. Part II (see § 19 and Chap. XII, 4, 6, 20, 23, 26). Vend. I contains an account of the sixteen
8. The fourteen stanzas of Yathâ-âis (Yas. XXXIII) are for this reason, because seven archangels are more diligent in activity for the spirit, and seven archangels for the world, so that they may attain 'to heaven, the home (mêhônô) of Aû-harmazd, the home of the archangels, the home of those righteous ones,' avi garô-nmânem, maê-thanem Ahurahê mazdâu, maêthanem ame-shanâm spentanâm, maêthanem anyaêshâm ashaonâm. The three repetitions (dânar) of Ye-sevistô (Yas. XXXIII, 11) and the holding up of the holy-water (zôhar) at these repetitions, are for the four classes, and for this reason at Ahurâi mazdâi and ashemkâ frâdad the holy-water is 'best of regions and countries' where the Iranian power and religion extended at an early date.

1 The seven archangels besides their spiritual duties have severally charge of the seven worldly existences, man, animals, fire, metal, earth, water, and plants (see § 14 and Chap. XV). But perhaps we should read 'angels,' as they are often mentioned as 'the angels of the spiritual and worldly existences.'

2 This quotation, of which the Pahlavi translation is first given, and then the Avesta text, is from Vend. XIX, 107.

3 This stanza is recited thrice, and about the same time the officiating priest strains the Hûm juice, and prepares to pour holy-water into the mortar in which the Hûm twigs were pounded (see Hâug's Essays, pp. 402, 406).

4 Or 'professions' of the community, of which there were originally only three, the priest, warrior, and husbandman; but at a later date the artizan was added. Both K20 and M6 have 'four classes,' but this is inconsistent with the 'three repetitions.' The Avesta generally knows only three classes, but four are mentioned in the Baghân Yast (Yas. XIX, 46).

5 That is, probably, at the words Ahurô mazdauskâ in the first line, and ashemkâ frâdad in the second line of the stanza; but this is doubtful, as the MSS. give the words corruptly, in a mixture of Av. and Pahl., as follows: pavan Ahurâi mazdâi ahârayih-i dadôth.
to be held level with the heart of him who is the officiating priest (zōt), and at sraotâ it is to be held level with the arm of him who is the officiating priest, so that while the warriors are in battle with foreigners (anâîrân) they may be fuller of breath (vayô-gîrtar), and the husbandmen stronger-armed in the tillage and cultivation of the world.

10. The fifteen stanzas of Yā-skyathathanâ (Yas. XXXIV) are for this reason, because it is given for the destruction of those fifteen fiends who are disclosed in the medical part (bêshâz) of the Hádôkht Nask. 11. The four repetitions (bâr) of Mazdâ-ad-môî (Yas. XXXIV, 15) are for the right coming on of the share of these five chieftainships (ra'dîh), the house-ruler, the village-ruler, the tribe-ruler, the province-ruler, and the supreme Zarâtûst.

12. The two repetitions of Ahyâ-yâsâ (Yas. XXVIII, 1) are for this reason, that the sovereign (dahyûpat) may not at once seize body, conscious-

3 In the last division of that Nask (see B. Yt. III, 25, note).
4 This last stanza of the Ahunavaiti Gàtha is recited four times.
5 See Yas. XIX, 50–52. The last of these rulers must have been the supreme pontiff or patriarch of the province, and in the province of Ragha (Rages or Raî, near Teheran) he was both temporal and spiritual ruler.
6 This first stanza of the Ahunavaiti Gàtha is recited twice, not only in its proper place (as the first stanza of each chapter is, in the Gàthas), but also at the end of every chapter of the Ahunavaiti Gàtha, while the officiating priest sprinkles the sacred twigs with the sacred milk or gâus gîvya, ‘living-cow produce’ (see Haug’s Essays, pp. 405, 406).
ness, and soul. 13. Those four Yathâ-ahû-vairyôs of the first Gâthâ¹ are for this reason, that is, so that inferiors may become more tolerant of the commands of superiors, and good thoughts, good words, and good deeds be more domesticated (mâh-mântar) in the world, and the fiend more powerless (apâdakhshâhtar).

14. In short (a ê-mar)², Ahyâ-yâsâ is as (pavan)³ Aûharmazd and the righteous man, Khshmaibyâ as Vohûman and cattle, Ad-tâ-vakhshyâ as Ardavahist and fire, Tâ-ve-urvâtâ as Shatvairô⁴ and metal, the Hvaêtumaithi as the Gâthâ of Spandarmad and the earth, Yathâ-âis as Horvadad and water, and Yâ-skyaothanâ as Amerôdad and plants.

15. The progress which is in⁵ the Ahunavaiti Gâthâ the house-rulers should carry on; that which is in the Ustavaiti Gâthâ the village-rulers should carry on; that which is in the Spentâ-mainyô⁶ Gâthâ the tribe-rulers should carry on; that which is in the Vohû-khshathra Gâthâ the province-rulers should carry on; that which is in the Vahistô-isti Gâthâ the supreme Zaratûsts should carry on; and

² Or 'to sum up.'
³ It is not quite clear how pavan, 'in, on, with, by, through, as, for,' &c., should be translated in each clause of this section; but the intention is evidently to compare the seven chapters of the Ahunavaiti Gâthâ with the seven archangels and the seven earthly creations which they severally protect (see Chap. XV).
⁴ Here written Shatîvar.

that which is in the Yasna, which is the place of righteous blessing\textsuperscript{1}, these four classes themselves should carry on.

16. Of the Yasna of seven chapters (Yas. XXXV–XLI, 17) the beginning section (kārdakō) has nine stanzas; and its beginning\textsuperscript{2} is Humatanām (Yas. XXXV, 4), and its end is Humatanām (Yas. XLI, 17 suppl.)

17. The six stanzas of Ahyā-thwā-āthrō (Yas. XXXVI) are owing to the six hot ordeals (var) which, in the Hūspāram ṇask\textsuperscript{3}, are effected by kāthrayām āthrāiām\textsuperscript{4}.

18. The five stanzas of Ithā-ād-yazamaidē (Yas. XXXVII) are thanksgiving and praise for the production of the good creations by Aūharmazd.

19. The five stanzas of Imām-āad-zām (Yas. XXXVIII) are owing to those five comforts and five discomforts of the earth, which, it is declared in the third fargard in the Vendidad\textsuperscript{5}, are accomplished

\textsuperscript{1} That is, the Yasna of seven chapters (Yas. XXXV–XLI), which is called simply 'the Yasna' in this chapter. This last clause, which is omitted in M6, connects these later hymns with the four classes of the community (see § 9), just as the five older hymns are connected with the five chiefs of the community (see § 11) in the former clauses. This section may be a translation from the Avesta, as the verbs precede their nominatives.

\textsuperscript{5} Here written Vandīkddād (see § 7). The passage here cited is not a quotation, but only a brief summary of Vend. III, 1–37; and appears to have been derived direct from the Avesta, without the assistance of the Pahlavi version, as several words differ from that translation.
thus:—‘The first comfort of the earth is from the land on which a righteous man walks forth; the second is when they shall make the dwelling of the good and fires upon it; the third is when they sow corn upon it, and shall take heed of dead matter; the fourth is when all beasts of burden are born upon it; the fifth is when every beast of burden is on it; and its first discomfort is from the Arezûr ridge and the gate of hell; the second is when they dig it up for a dead body; the third is when one constructs a depository for the dead (khazân) upon it; the fourth is from the holes of its noxious creatures; the fifth is when they shall forsake a man in affliction (vardakîh) upon it, who is righteous.’

20. The five stanzas of Ithâ (Yas. XXXIX) are just as those which go before.

21. The four stanzas of Âhû-ad-paiti (Yas. XL) are about the benefit (arg-hûmandîh) which is on account of water, earth, plants, and animals.

22. The six stanzas of Stûtû-garô (Yas. XLI, i–17), the two repetitions of Humatanâm (Yas. XXXV, 4–6), and the three repetitions of Hukhsathrôtemâi (Yas. XXXV, 13–15) are on account of the existence of the sons of Zaratûst.

1 The verb is probably omitted by mistake, and we ought to read ‘voids urine upon it,’ in accordance with Vend. III, 20.
2 See Bund. XII, 8.
3 Reading kalênûnd (Pers. kalandånd), as Vend. III, 27 refers to burial of the dead, and the same idea might be obtained, more fancifully, by reading kilênûnd, ‘they turn to clay’ (compare Pers. gil, ‘clay’); but the most obvious reading is karênûnd, ‘they cut,’ and as the sentence stands it would imply that ‘they cut up its dead.’
4 See Chap. II, 6.

23. The two repetitions of Ashahyā-āad-sairī<sup>1</sup> (Yas. XXXV, 22, 23) are for the laudation of righteousness and the destruction of the fiend. 24. The two repetitions of Yēnḥē-hātām<sup>2</sup> are for the laudation of Aūharmazd and the archangels, and the destruction of the evil spirit and the miscreations (vishū dakān). 25. The two repetitions of<sup>3</sup> Thwōi-stoatarasaśā (Yas. XLI, 12–14) are for the laudation of ceremonial worship (yaṣīnā) and the sacred feast (māzd).

26. The two repetitions of Ātaremka (Visp. XIX, 1–8)<sup>4</sup> are for the laudation of the Frōbāk fire and the fire Vāzist<sup>5</sup>.

27. Of the sixteen stanzas of the Ustavaiti chapter (Yas. XLII)<sup>6</sup> it is related just as about the Hvaētu-maithi chapter<sup>7</sup>.

Yasna-are here intended all to refer to the same subject, but no other subject is mentioned for the two former. Having completed the enumeration of the sections of the Yasna of seven chapters, the writer is now proceeding to notice those passages which are recited more than once in the performance of the ritual.

<sup>5</sup> The Frōbāk is the oldest sacred fire on earth, and the Vāzist is the lightning (see Bund. XVII, 1, 5, SZS, XI, 5, 8–10).

<sup>6</sup> The first chapter of the Ustavaiti Gātha (see § 2, note 4), so called from its first word uṣṭā.

28. The twenty stanzas of Tad-thwâ-peresâ (Yas.
XLIII) are the twenty judgments (dâdistân) between the beneficent spirit and the evil spirit; and for this reason they should every time utter Tad-thwâ-peresâ again, because they should utter the original judgment again, and the twentieth time the evil spirit becomes confounded.

29. The eleven stanzas of Ad-fravakhshyâ (Yas.
XLIV) are made up from the six chieftainships and the five accomplishments (farhâng) owing to religion; one is thus, not to do unto others all that which is not well for one's self; the second is to understand fully what is well-done and not well-done;
the third is to turn from the vile and their conversation (andarag-gûftanô); the fourth is to confess one's failings to the high-priests, and let them bring the whip; the fifth is not to neglect the season-festivals at their proper hour (dën hâsar), nor the other things which go to the bridge; and the six chieft-tainships are not his property who has not these Ahurâ! 'that I shall ask thee, tell it me right, O Ahura!') is repeated at the beginning of each of the first nineteen stanzas, and the first stanza being recited twice (as in all chapters of the Gâthas) these words are recited twenty times before the last stanza is reached. The phrases 'and for this reason' and 'because they should utter the original judgment again' are omitted in M6.

2 These cannot be the same 'chieftainships' (radîh) as those mentioned in § 11, of which there are only five; but perhaps they are the spiritual chieftainships, or primacies, of the six other regions of the earth (see Bund. XXIX, 1).

30. The nineteen stanzas of Kām-nemōi-zām (Yas. XLII, 1)\(^6\) are, one as a retention and embrace of Aūharmazd, and one as a destruction of the fiends; and Usta-Ahūrem-mazdām (Visp. XXI, 1–5)\(^7\) in like manner.

33. Spentā-mainyū (Yas. XLVI) has six stanzas, Yēzd-adāīs (Yas. XLVII) twelve stanzas, Ad-ma-yavā (Yas. XLVIII) twelve stanzas, and Kad-mōi-urvā (Yas. XLIX) eleven stanzas. 34. The Spentā-mainyū Gāthā is a Gāthā of four chapters\(^8\), and

\(^3\) It seems probable that the Pahlavi writer has here confounded Spandamät, ‘the beneficent spirit,’ with the archangel Spendarmad who has special charge of the earth; their names being even more alike in Pahlavi than in English, though corrupted from the distinct Avesta forms spenta mainyu and spenta ârmaiti, respectively.

\(^1\) After the two recitations of Visp. XXIII, 1-9 there follow Vend. XV, XVI, and Visp. XXIII, 10, and then Visp. XXIV, 1-12 is recited twice, in the full Parsi ritual, followed by Visp. XXV.

\(^2\) Some words are evidently lost here; M6 has m followed by a blank space, and K20 has madam, ‘on.’ It is not quite certain whether the things mentioned are to be reckoned as four, five, or six; but assuming they are five, it is possible that the four things missing in the text are the four remaining chieftainships (see § 11), the rulerships of the house, village, tribe, and province lodged in the rulers of the same, respectively.

\(^3\) Which stanza has five lines, and is, therefore, here considered symbolic of the ruling monarch, or pontiff.

\(^4\) This Avesta passage does not appear to be extant elsewhere, and its Pahlavi translation, given in the text, is not quite correct; it would be better thus: ‘through the “blessing of the holy” four times every night;’ dahma āfriti (Pahl. dāhmān āfrīnō, ‘blessing of the holy’) is the technical name of Yas. LIX.

The two repetitions of Vahistâ-\textit{istis} (Yas. LII, 1)\(^2\) are, one for the laudation of sovereigns, and one for the laudation of peace (pâdmân).

46. The two repetitions of Vahistem-Ahurermazdâm (Visp. XXVI)\(^3\) are, one for the laudation of Aûharmazd and the archangels, and one for the destruction of the fiends. 47. of the Gāthas, taught as pertaining to the Gāthas (gāsāṇik kāst).

50. The beginning of the Gāthas is Ahyā-yāsā (Yas. XXVIII, 1), and their end is drigavē vaiyō (Yas. LII, 9, end); and there are 278 stanzas, 1016 lines, 5567 words (vākak), 9999 mārīk, and 16,554 khūrdak. 51. For the lines and stanzas of the Gāthas were collected by us, and were:—one hundred stanzas of the Ahunavaiti Gātha (Yas. XXVIII—XXXIV), of which each stanza is three lines; forty stanzas of the Yasna of seven chapters (Yas. XXXV—of Visp. I, 28, II, 30, Yas. LVI, ix, 6, LVIII, 13. Whether the remainder of Yas. LVII is to be considered as pertaining to the Gāthas is uncertain; it is recited in seven sections by the assistant priest, each section from a different position; these seven positions being the stations of the seven assistant priests who are supposed to be present spiritually, and to be arranged three on each side, and one at the south end, of the ceremonial area, while the chief officiating priest occupies the north end (see Haug’s Essays, p. 332).

1 The numbers of the stanzas and lines are correct, as may be seen from the details given in § 51. Regarding the words there is the uncertainty as to what constitutes a compound word, but, taking each compound in Westergaard’s edition of the texts as a single word, the total number of words in the 1016 lines is about 6147; and this could be reduced to 5567 only by omitting the Yasna of seven chapters, and somewhat relaxing the rule as to compound words. The meaning of the last two terms, mārīk and khūrdak, is doubtful, but they are certainly not syllables and letters, as the number of syllables exceeds 13,000. In other places (see Bund. I, 21) mārīk usually means ‘a word,’ but that meaning is expressed by the term vākak here. If the number 9999 be correct, mārīk must signify some particular class of syllable which would include about three-fourths of the whole number of syllables. It may be noted, however, that Zād-sparam, in the particulars he gives about the Gāthas (see SZS. XI, 10, note 6), states the number of mārīk at 6666. The khūrdak or ‘small’ things are probably the consonants. of which each stanza is three lines; sixty-six stanzas of the Ustavaiti Gāthā (Yas. XLII–XLV), of which each stanza is five lines, except Haēkād-aspā (Yas. XLV, 15), for that one is four lines; forty-one stanzas of the Spentâ-mainyû Gāthā (Yas. XLVI–XLIX), of which each stanza is four lines; twenty-two stanzas of the Vohû-khshathra (Yas. L), of which each stanza is three lines; and nine stanzas of the Vahistōīsti (Yas. LII), of which each stanza is four lines, except Ithā-i (Yas. LII, 6), for that one is a stanza of five;—the amount of the foregoing is 278 stanzas.

CHAPTER XIV.

1. May it be in the name of God (yazdān) and the good creation!

2. When they consecrate a sacred cake (drōndō), and it becomes demon worship, what and how many things are not proper?

1 All MSS. have ‘four,’ and then add the exception about Ithā-i to the account of this Gāthā, instead of mentioning it in the details of the Vahistōīsti, which blunder is here corrected.

2 Reading kadmon yehevûnisnō, but the latter word, with part of the ciphers which follow, is torn away in K20, and in M6 it is written so as to resemble the Avesta letters gnn gnn, which are unintelligible, though something like Pahl. yehevuinisnō; there can, however, be little doubt as to the general meaning of the phrase.

3 The number of lines is easily computed from the same details, as follows:—300 + 120 + 329 + 164 + 66 + 37 = 1016 lines, as stated in § 50, and as they still exist in the Gāthā texts.

4 This chapter is also found in L15, fols. i–4, and a Pāzand version of §§ 1–3 exists in L22, fols. 126, 127, and L7, fols. 78, 79.

The decision is this:—Whoever knowingly consecrates a sacred cake with unpurified sacred twigs (baresm-i apâdiyâv)\(^1\), or with a twig-bundle the number of whose twigs (tâk) is too many or too few, or of another plant not proper for sacred twigs; or holds the end of the twig-bundle to the north\(^2\) and utters the Avesta attentively; or whoever consecrates with efficacy unawares, it is not to be considered as uttered by him. 3. Nor by him who advertently or inadvertently takes a taste (kâshnik), not from the sacred cake with the butter (gâûs-dâê)\(^3\), but from the frasast; or takes the prayer (vâg)\(^4\) inwardly regarding that cake (drônô) before the officiating priest (zôt) takes a taste from the same cake; or shall utter the length of a stanza in excess, and does not again make a beginning of the consecration of the sacred cake; or takes up the mony, for any ceremony, which is too imperfect for acceptance by the celestial beings, is supposed to be appropriated by the demons, as performed for their benefit (see Chap. IX, 5). Demon worship is a term also applied to many other evil actions which are supposed to give the demons special power over the perpetrator of them.

\(^1\) See Chap. III, 32, note.

\(^2\) The supposed direction of the demons (see Chaps. X, 7, XII, 18). When praying, a Parsi must face either the sun, or a fire or lamp; and when the direction of the sun is doubtful, or when it is nearly overhead, he must face to the south, even when he is in so low a latitude that the sun may be somewhat to the north of him.

\(^3\) Which usually takes the place of the meat-offering mentioned in Chap. XI, 4–6, and is placed upon one of the cakes on the left side of the table during consecration, while the frasasts are the cakes on the right-hand side of the table (see Chap. III, 32, note).

4. This is how it is when the period of the day (gâs)\(^2\) is retained, and how it should be when one may relinquish it; that is, when even one of the stars created by Aûharmazd is apparent, it is retained, and when not it is relinquished. 5. It is Vand-Aûharmazd\(^3\) who said that when, besides Tîstar, Vanand, or Satavês\(^4\), one of the zodiacal stars (akhtarîk) is apparent, it is retained, and when not it is relinquished. 6. There have been some who said that when, besides one of those three, three zodiacal stars are apparent, it is retained, and when not it is relinquished\(^5\).

\(^{2}\) See Bund. XXV, 9. The text appears to refer to the transition from the Ushahina to the Hâvani Gâh at daybreak; and as certain portions of the prayers are varied according to the period of the day, it is very necessary to know precisely when each period commences, so as to avoid vitiating the whole ceremonial by the use of a wrong prayer.

\(^{3}\) See Chap. I, 4, note.

\(^{4}\) Three of the leading stars, probably Sirius, Fomalhaut, and Antares (see Bund. II, 7).

\(^{5}\) This chapter is followed (in both the old MSS. M6 and K20) by the Pahlavi text of the Patît-i Khûd, or renunciation of one’s own sin, a translation of which will be found in Bleeck’s English version of the Avesta, London, 1864, III, pp. 159–162, derived from Spiegel’s German translation of the Pâzand text. This translation is fairly correct on the whole, although some passages might be improved, thus (p. 162), instead of ‘all sins which may attack the character of man [or] have attacked my character, if I, on account of much death, have not recognised the death,’ &c., we should read ‘of all sins which may become the lot of men, and have become my lot, on account of whose excessive number I do not know the number,’ &c.
PART III.—Appendix

CHAPTER XV

1. It is revealed by a passage of the Avesta that Zaratüst, seated before Aûharmazd, always wanted information (vâk) from him; and he spoke to Aûharmazd thus: 'Thy head, hands, feet, hair, face, and tongue are in my eyes just like those even which are my own, and you have the clothing men have; give me a hand, so that I may grasp thy hand.'

2. Aûharmazd said thus: 'I am an intangible spirit; it is not possible to grasp my hand.'

3. Zaratüst spoke thus: 'Thou art intangible, and Vohûman, Ardâvahist, Shatvalrô, Spendarmaô, Horvadad, and Amerôdad are intangible, and when I depart from thy presence, and do not see thee nor even them—since of the person whom I see and worship there is something—should thou and the seven archangels be worshipped by me, or not?'

1 This Appendix consists of a number of fragments found in the old MS. M6, and of somewhat the same character as the Shâyast lâ-shâyast, but they have no claim to be considered as a portion of that work. Excepting Chaps. XVIII, XIX, XXI, they are not found in the other old MS. K20, and beyond the fact that they must be more than five centuries old their age is quite uncertain, though some of them are probably older than others.

2 Written Shatrôisvar throughout this chapter; these six (see Bund. I, 26) with Aûharmazd himself, are the seven archangels.

3 Reading mûn, 'whom,' instead of amat, 'when' (see Bund. I, 7, note).

5 Zaratüst is doubtful whether he ought to worship beings of
4. Aûharmazd said thus: ‘They should be; I tell thee, O Zaratûst the Spîtâmân! that each individual of us has produced his own one creation (dâyak) for the world, by means of which they may set going in its body, in the world, that activity which they would exercise in the spiritual existence. 5. In the world that which is mine, who am Aûharmazd, is the righteous man, of Vohûman are the cattle, of Ardavahist is the fire, of Shatvaîrô is the metal, of Spendarmad are the earth and virtuous woman, of Hôrvadad is the water, and of Amerôdad is the vegetation. 6. Whoever has learned the care of all these seven, acts and pleases well, his soul never comes into the possession of Aharman and the demons; when he has exercised his care of them, he has exercised his care of the seven archangels, and ought to teach all mankind in the world.

7. ‘Whoever wishes to propitiate Aûharmazd in the world, wishes to promote the things of Aûharmazd; and whoever he be, with whom Aûharmazd ever is in every place (gâs), it is necessary that he should propitiate the righteous man, in whatever whose existence he had had no tangible evidence, when he no longer saw them; fearing, perhaps, that they might have been mere dreams or optical illusions. But he is told that each of these spiritual beings is the protector of one class of worldly existences, and that the proper treatment of these existences is a man’s best means of reverencing the spiritual beings interested in their welfare.

1 Or ‘taught,’ for the verb has both meanings.
2 Or ‘at all times;’ it is always doubtful whether gâs means ‘time’ or ‘place.’
has happened and whatever occurs to him, and should act for his happiness, and afford him protection from the vile. 8. Since the righteous man is a counterpart of Aûharmazd the lord, and when the righteous man acts it is caused by him who is Aûharmazd, whoever propitiates the righteous man, his fame and welfare exist a long time in the world, and the splendour of Aûharmazd and pleasure and joy become his own in heaven (vahist).

9. ‘Whoever wishes to propitiate Vohûman in the world, and wishes to act for his happiness, is he who wishes to promote the things of Vohûman; and it is necessary for him, so that Vohûman may be ever with him, that he should propitiate, at every place (gâs) and time, the well-yielding (hûdhâk) cattle, in whatever has happened and whatever occurs, and should act for their happiness; and in the terrible days and the hurried times (gâs) which befall them, he should afford them protection from the oppressive and idle. 10. He should not give them as a bribe to a man who is a wicked tyrant, but should keep them in a pleasant and warm locality and place (gâs); and in summer he should provide them a store of straw and corn, so that it be not necessary to keep them on the pastures (kârak) in winter; and he should not deliver them up for this purpose, that is, “So that I may give them up to the vile,” because it is necessary to give to the good; and he should not drive them apart from their young, and should not put the young apart from their milk. 11. Since they are counterparts of him (Vohûman) himself in the world, the well-yielding cattle, whoever propitiates those which are well-yielding cattle his fame subsists in the world, and the splendour of Aûharmazd becomes his own in the best existence.

12. ‘Whoever wishes to propitiate Ardâvahist in the world is he who wishes to promote his things; and it is necessary for him, so that Ardâvahist may be with him at every place (gâs) and time, that he should propitiate the fire of Aûharmazd, in whatever has happened and whatever occurs, and should act for its happiness; he should not put upon it wood, incense, and holy-water which are stolen and extorted, and he should not cook at it a ration (bâhar) which is violently extorted from men. 13. For it is a counterpart of him (Ardâvahist) himself in the world, the fire of Aûharmazd; and whoever propitiates those which are fires of Aûharmazd his fame subsists in the world, and the splendour of Aûharmazd becomes his own in heaven.

14. ‘Whoever wishes to propitiate Shatvalrô in the world, and wishes to act for his happiness, is he who wishes to promote the things of Shatvalrô; and whoever he be, it is necessary, so that Shatvalrô may be with him at every place and time, that he should propitiate melted metal at every place and time. 15. And the propitiation of melted metal is this, that he shall practise habits (ââyînô) of the

1 See Chap. VI, 3.

2 Holy-water is not put upon the fire, for that would be sinful, but it is presented to the fire, and the outside of the fire-place is sprinkled or washed with it (see Haug’s Essays, p. 403). The ‘fire of Aûharmazd’ means any fire, whether sacred or used for household purposes.

3 The word may be read either aîyên or asîn (Av. âyân, âhan, or âhîn), which is usually translated ‘iron,’ but also means ‘metal’ generally, as it certainly does here, and very probably likewise in B. Yt. I, 5, II, 14, 22.
heart so unsullied and pure that, when they shall drop melted metal upon it, it does not burn. 16. And Áтаропād son of Māraspend\(^1\) even acted in this priestly fashion (dastōbarīh), so that the melted metal, when they drop it upon the region (khānō) of his pure heart, becomes as pleasant to him as though they were milking milk upon it. 17. When they drop it upon the region of the heart of the wicked and sinners, it burns, and they die. 18. And one should not commit sin with metal, and with its burning; and should not give gold and silver to the vile. 19. For it is a counterpart of Shatvalrō himself in the world for him, and since he propitiates those which are melted metals, his fame subsists in the world, and the splendour of Aūharmazd becomes his own in heaven.

20. ‘Whoever wishes to propitiate Spendarmad in the world, wishes to promote the things of Spendarmad; and whoever he be, it is necessary, so that Spendarmad may be with him, that he should propitiate, at every place and time, the earth and virtuous woman, in whatever has happened and in whatever occurs, and should act for their happiness. 21. For when he does not spread out (barā là vēshēd) this earth, and it does not separate one piece from another, his body also will not be always living upon it at every place and time. 22. On account of the lodgment of Spendarmad in the earth, when a robber, violent and worthy of death, and wives who are disrespectful to their husbands walk about in sinfulness in the world, and their husbands are active and virtuous, it becomes much distressed (zanōtk). 23. This, too, is declared, that, whenever this earth becomes distressed (zanīk), it is most so at the time when sinners worthy of death are most; for it is declared, when sinners worthy of death walk upon it, its pain and uneasiness become as distressing (dūskhār) to it as the dead son on her bosom to a mother; and the lodgment of Spendarmad in the earth is little in that place whereon sinners worthy of death walk. 24. And her happiness arises from that place when they shall perform tillage and cultivation on it, and a virtuous son is born upon it, and they rear cattle upon it; and it is so one’s fame subsists in the world, and the splendour of Aūharmazd becomes one’s own in heaven.

25. ‘Whoever wishes to propitiate Horvadad and Amerōdad in the world, whereas that is necessary which promotes their things, whoever he be it is necessary that he should propitiate, at every place and time, the water and vegetation of Horvadad and Amerōdad, in whatever has happened and in

1 Meaning that the earth must be tilled in order to support its inhabitants, but there is some doubt as to the exact wording of the translation.

2 Spendarmad is a female archangel; perhaps, however, the earth is meant here, as it is said to be most pleased by the existence of fire-temples, dwellings of righteous people, cultivation, stables, and pastures (see Vend. III, 1–20).
whatever occurs, and should seize upon those who consume and steal water and vegetation\(^1\). 26. And he should not act oppressively, he should not walk the world in sinfulness, and should not bring bodily refuse (ḥıkhar), dead matter (nasâl)\(^2\), or any other pollution to water; he should not destroy vegetation unlawfully, and should not give fruit to the idle and vile. 27. For when he commits sin against water and vegetation, even when it is committed against merely a single twig of it, and he has not atoned for it, when\(^3\) he departs from the world the spirits of all the plants in the world stand up high in front of that man, and do not let him go to heaven. 28. And when he has committed sin against water, even when it is committed against a single drop of it, and he has not atoned for it, that also stands up as high as the plants stood, and does not let him go to heaven. 29. Since they are counterparts of Horvadad and Amerōdad themselves, the water and vegetation, whoever propitiates those which be water and vegetation, his fame subsists in the world, and a share of the splendour of Aûharmazd becomes his in heaven.'

30. Aûharmazd said this also to Zaratûst, namely:

1 Reading mûn, 'who,' instead of amat, 'when,' and dûgend, 'they steal,' instead of dûgd (perhaps for dûgak, 'thievish'); and supposing the verb to be vakhdûnêd, 'takes, seizes,' and not vâdûnêd, 'makes, acts.' If the reverse be assumed, the translation would be thus: 'should act for their happiness. When they consume water and vegetation he should not act thievishly and oppressively.'

2 For the meaning of hıkhar and nasâl, see note on Chap. II, 30.

3 Reading amat, 'when,' instead of mûn, 'who' (see Bund. I, 7, note).
CHAPTER XV, 26–XVI, 2.

My will and pleasure is that the observance and propitiation of these seven archangels shall be as I have told thee; and do thou, too, speak thus unto men, so that they may commit no sin and may not become wicked, and the splendour of Aûharmazd may become their own in heaven.

31. Completed in peace, pleasure, and joy.

CHAPTER XVI.

0. In the name of God (yazdân) I write a paragraph (babâ) where the sins which are as it were small are mentioned one by one.

1. The least sin is a Farmân; and a Farmân is three coins of five annas, some say three coins. 2. An Âgerept is, as regards whatever weapon (snês) men strike with in the world, whenever the weapon is taken in hand; and taken up by any one four finger-breadths from the ground it is the root of an

1 This is the most usual concluding phrase of short Pahlavi texts, and indicates that this account of the best mode of propitiating the archangels is to be considered as a separate text. It is followed in M6 by the paragraphs which constitute the next two chapters.

2 Reading 3 nûmâf-i 5 ânak, but this is uncertain, and if correct must have been written in India, as the anna is an Indian coin worth nearly three halfpence. The coin of five-annas was probably a dirham, as the dirham being about fifty grains of silver (see note on gûgan in Chap. I, 2), and the rûpî having formerly been less than 180 grains in Gugarât, the former would be nearly five-sixteenths of the latter, that is, five annas. It may, therefore, be assumed that the amount of the Farmân is here taken at three dirhams, as in Chap. XI, 2; but in § 5 it appears to be 3½ dirhams, and in Chap. I, 2 as much as sixteen dirhams.

8 See Chap. II, 69, note.
Ágerept for him; and the retribution and punishment for an Ágerept should be fifty-three dirhams (gûgan). 3. When the weapon turns downwards it is the root of an Ávôtrist for him, and his sentence (dinâ) is to be changed; his retribution and punishment should be seventy-three dirhams, which is when anything further occurs. 4. When he shall lay the weapon on any one it is the root of an Aredûs for him, and his retribution and punishment are thirty stîrs; if the wound thereby made by him be one-fifth of a span (dist) it is no root of an Aredûs for him, and his retribution and punishment are the same thirty stîrs.

5. I write the degrees of sin:—A Srôshô-karanâm is three coins and a half, a Farmân is a Srôshô-karanâm, an Ágerept is sixteen stîrs, an Ávôtrist is twenty-five stîrs, an Aredûs is thirty, a Khôr is sixty, a Bâzât is ninety, a Yât is a hundred and eighty, and a Tanâpûhar is three hundred.

6. The good works which are in the ceremonial.

1 Ñ 5 says sixteen stîrs, which, if equivalent to these fifty-three dirhams, would imply $3\frac{5}{14}$ dirhams to the stîr, instead of four as usually stated (see Chap. I, 2). The amounts mentioned in Chaps. I, 2, XI, 2 are very different.

2 Ñ 5 says twenty-five stîrs, which, at $3\frac{5}{14}$ dirhams to the stîr (as in the case of Ágerept), would be very nearly eighty-three dirhams, which is probably the number we ought to read in the text, and also, possibly, in Chap. XI, 2.

3 The dist is a span of ten finger-breadths (about 7$\frac{1}{2}$ inches) between the thumb and middle finger (see Bund. XXVI, 3, note).

4 See Chap. IV, 14, note. Comparing the amount here mentioned with that of the Farmân in Ñ 1, the Srôshô-karanâm, which is here made equal to the Farmân, appears to amount to $3\frac{5}{14}$ dirhams, which agrees very nearly with the statement in Chap. X, 24, but differs from that in Chap. XI, 2.

5 For similar scales of degrees, see Chaps. I, 2, XI, 2.
worship of the sacred beings (yazîn-i yazdân):—
Consecrating a sacred cake (drôn)\(^1\) is a good work of one Tanâpûhar\(^2\); a form of worship (yâst)\(^3\) is a hundred Tanâpûhars; a Visparad\(^4\) is a thousand Tanâpûhars; a Dû-hômást\(^5\) is ten thousand; a Dvâzdhâ-hômást is a hundred thousand, and the merit (kîrfak) of every one which is performed with holy-water is said to be a hundred to one; a Hâd-ûkht\(^6\) is two thousand Tanâpûhars, and with holy-water it becomes a hundred to one\(^7\).

\(^{1}\) See Chap. III, 32. The Persian Rivâyats explain that this is when the proper ritual is merely recited, without using the sacred twigs and other ceremonial apparatus; when the twigs are used the merit is ten times as great.

\(^{2}\) That is, sufficient to counterbalance a Tanâpûhar sin (see Chap. I, 1, 2).

\(^{3}\) A Yâst is a formula of praise in honour of some particular angel; when recited with all the accessories of sacred twigs and other ceremonial apparatus, the merit is ten times as great as is mentioned in the text.

\(^{4}\) The Visparad service includes the Yasna, and when performed with the use of the sacred twigs, holy-water, and other ceremonial apparatus the merit is ten times as great as here stated; some authorities say it is a hundred times as great.

\(^{5}\) This kind of Hômást is not mentioned in Dastûr Jâmâspji’s explanation of this species of religious service (see B. Yt. II, 59, note); it occurs, however, in the Nfrangistân as a distinct kind, though called merely Hômást-in the Persian Rivâyats.

\(^{6}\) See B. Yt. III, 25.

\(^{7}\) The merits of other prayers and ceremonies are detailed in the Persian Rivâyats; thus, that of the ordinary recital of a Vendidad (which includes both Yasna and Visparad) is sixty thousand Tanâpûhars, and when with sacred twigs and holy-water it is a hundred thousand; that of the recital of any Nyâyis (see Chap. VII, 4), or of taking and retaining a prayer (vâg, see Chap. III, 6) inwardly, is one Tanâpûhar.
CHAPTER XVII.

1. This, too, Zaratust asked of Aûharmazd, that is: ‘Which is the time when one must not eat meat?’

2. Aûharmazd gave a reply thus: ‘In a house when a person shall die, until three nights are completed, nothing whatever of meat is to be placed on a sacred cake (drôn) therein and in its vicinity; but these, such as milk, cheese, fruit, eggs, and preserves, are to be placed; and nothing whatever of meat is to be eaten by his relations. 3. In all the three days it is necessary to perform the ceremonial (yazisn) of Srôsh for this reason, because Srôsh will be able to save his soul from the hands of the demons for the three days; and when one con-

1 Reading va hamgôshak, the latter word being apparently used in a parallel passage in Pahl. Vend. VIII, 64 in old MSS.; this reading is, however, somewhat doubtful here, and perhaps we ought to read ‘on a sacred cake in that roofed place (pavan zak vâmkînîh);’ the last word being a possible term for ‘roofing’ as it stands, though it may be a miswriting of vâmpôs (Pers. bâmpôs, ‘roofing’).

2 The Parsis, nowadays (Dastûr Hoshangji says), do not cook for three days under a roof where a death has occurred, but obtain food from their neighbours and friends; but if the cookroom be under a separate roof, as often happens in India, they have no objection to cooking there.

3 The soul is supposed to hover about the body for the first three nights after death, during which time it has to rely upon the angel Srôsh (see Bund. XXX, 29) for protection from the demons, which the angel, it is presumed, will afford more efficiently if properly propitiated by the surviving relatives. At the third dawn after death (that is, the dawn of the fourth day inclusive of the day of death) the soul is supposed to depart finally for the other world (see AV. IV, 8–36, XVII, 5–27).
stantly performs a ceremonial at every period (gâs)\(^1\) in the three days it is as good as though they should celebrate the whole religious ritual (hamâk dinô) at one time. 4. And after the third night, at dawn, one is to consecrate three sacred cakes (drûn), one for Rashnû and Ûstâd, the second for Vâe the good\(^2\), and the third for the righteous guardian spirit (ardîât fravard); and clothing\(^3\) is to be placed upon the sacred cake of the righteous guardian spirit. 5. For the fourth day it is allowable to slaughter a sheep, \(\text{and}\) the fourth day the ceremonial (yazîn) of the righteous guardian spirit is to be performed; and afterwards are the tenth-day, the monthly, and, then, the annual ceremonies; and the first monthly is exactly on the thirtieth day, and the annual on the particular day\(^5\). 6. When he

\(^1\) These periods of the day are five in summer, and four in winter (see Bund. XXV, 9, 10).

\(^2\) The usual name of the angel Râm (the Vayu of Râm Yê,) who, with the angels Rashnû and Ûstâd, is supposed to be stationed at the Kinvad bridge, where the soul has to give an account of its actions during life shortly after the dawn following the third night after death (see AV. V, 3, CI, 21, note, Mkh. II, 115).

\(^3\) This clothing must be new and good, and is supposed to be supplied to the spirit to prevent its appearing unclothed in the other world, where the clothing of the soul is said to be formed ‘out of almsgivings’ (Chap. XII, 4); to fulfil which condition the clothes provided are presented to the officiating priests (see Saddar Bundâhis LXXXVII).

\(^5\) That is, on the exact anniversary of the death; the sentence is rather obscure, but this appears to be the meaning. With regard to the ceremonies after a death, the Persian Rivâyats give more details, which may be summarized as follows:—On each of the first three days a Srôsh Yast is performed and a Srôsh Drôn consecrated (see Chap. III, 32, note). On the third night, in the middle of the Aiwisrûthrem Gâh (dusk to midnight), a renunciashall die at a place distant from that where the information arrives, when the three days' ceremonies (satūth) are celebrated at that place where he shall die if it is well, when not, their celebration is to be at this place, and from the time when the information arrives, until three nights are completed, it is necessary to perform the ceremonial of Srōsh, and after three days and nights it is necessary to perform the ceremonial of the righteous guardian spirit.'

7. In one place it is declared, that of him whose begetting is owing to the demons, of him who commits sodomy, and of him who performs the religious rites (dinā) of apostasy, of none of the three do tion of sin is performed in the house of the deceased; and in the Ushahin Gāh (midnight to dawn) four Drōns are consecrated, one dedicated to the good Vāḥ (Nā-ī veh), one to Rashn and Āstād, one to Srōsh, and one to the righteous (ashān), and in front of the last are placed new and clean clothes with fruit, but without an egg. On the fourth day, at sunrise, the Dahmān Āfrīngān (Yas. LIX) is recited, and then the Khurshēd and Mīhir Nyāyīs, after which the people in the house can first eat fresh-cooked meat. During the fourth day also the Yast of the righteous is performed, and the Drōn of the righteous is consecrated; and the same again on the tenth day, together with the recitation of the Dahmān Āfrīngān. On the thirtieth day the Šrōzah (praise of the thirty days) is to be celebrated, with the dedication to the thirty days; thirty-three beans (lāvak) and thirty-three eggs, with fruit, being placed in front of the Drōn, which is consecrated in the presence of fire; and, afterwards, the assistant priest consecrates a Drōn for Srōsh. The next day the chief priest consecrates a Drōn for the righteous; a suit of clothes and fruit being placed in front of the Drōn. And each day a Yast of the righteous is performed, a Drōn of the righteous is consecrated, and an Āfrīngān recited. On the same day every month the same Yast, Drōn, and Āfrīngān are celebrated; a priest also undergoes the Bareshnum for the deceased, a Gēt-kharīd (see Bund. XXX, 28) is performed, and three Vendidads dedicated to Srōsh. On each day at the end of a year the Šrōzah Yast is performed, and a Drōn they restore the dead, for this reason, because he whose begetting is owing to the demons is himself a demon, and the soul of him who commits sodomy will become a demon, and the soul of him who performs the religious rites of apostasy will become a darting snake.

8. This, too, is revealed by the Avesta, that Aûharmazd spoke thus: ‘Give ye up the persons of all men, with the submissiveness of worshippers, to that man to whom the whole Avesta and Zend is easy, so that he may make you acquainted with duties and good works; because men go to hell for this reason, when they do not submit their persons to priestly control (aêrpatistân), and do not become acquainted with duties and good works.’

9. Query:—There is an action which, according to the Avesta, is not good for a person to do, and the sentence of ‘worthy of death’ is set upon it; for one’s better preservation is one not to do that action, dedicated to the thirty days is consecrated, thirty-three beans being placed, with one Drôn, one Frasast (see Chap. III, 32, note), one pentagonal Drôn as the sun, one crescent-shaped as the moon, thirty-three eggs, and fruit, in front of the Drôn, which is consecrated in the presence of fire; afterwards, the assistant priest consecrates a Drôn for Srôsh, and recites the Dahmân Aêríngân, and the next day the chief priest consecrates a Drôn for the righteous, a suit of clothes being placed before the Drôn, and recites the Dahmân Aêríngân.

10. The answer is this, that when they act well for their better preservation there is no fear, on account of acting well, but one is not to forsake that, too, though it be not goodness; a forsaken duty is very bad, for a contempt of it enters into one.

11. This, too, is declared, that Zaratûst enquired of Aûharmazd thus: ‘From what place do these people rise again? from that place where they first went into their mothers, or from that place where the mothers have given them birth, or from that place where their bodies happen to be (aûftéd)?’

12. Aûharmazd gave a reply thus: ‘Not from that place where they have gone into their mothers, nor from that place where they have been born from their mothers, nor from that place where their bodies and flesh happen to be, for they rise from that place where the life went out from their bodies.’

13. And this, too, he asked, that is: ‘Whence do they raise, him again who is suspended from anything, and shall die in the air?’

14. The reply was: ‘From that place where his bones and flesh first fall to the ground; hence, except when he shall die on a divan (gâs) or a bed (vistarg), before they carry him away, whatever it is, a fragment ¹ is to be taken and to be laid across his limbs; for when the usage is not so, they raise him again from that place where his body arrives at the ground.'

'15. Completed in peace, pleasure, and joy².

1. It is said in revelation that Aēshm ⁴ rushed into the presence of Aharman ⁵, and exclaimed thus: 'I will not go into the world, because Aûharmazd, the lord, has produced three things in the world, to which it is not possible for me to do anything whatever.'

2. Aharman exclaimed thus: 'Say which are those three things.'

3. Aēshm exclaimed thus: 'The season-festival

¹ See Bund. XXV, 1, 3, 6. The six Gâhanbârs or season-festivals are held, respectively, on the 45th, 105th, 180th, 210th, 290th, and 365th days of the Parsi year. An explanation of the cause of the inequality of these intervals has been proposed by Mr. Khurshedji Rustamji Cama, which is well worthy of attention, and appears to have been first published in 1867 in Nos. 7 and 8 of his Zartostî Abhyas. His view is that the mediæval Zoroastrians, beginning their year at the vernal equinox (Bund. XXV, 6, i3, 21), recognised originally only two seasons, a summer of seven months and a winter of five (Bund. XXV, 7), and they held a festival, not only at the end of each season, that is, on the 210th and 365th days of their year, but also in the middle of each season, that is, on the 105th and 290th days of their year. That these two latter were mid-season festivals is proved by their Avesta names, Maidhyôshema and Maidhyôairyâ, beginning with the word maidhya, 'middle.' Later on, the Zoroastrians divided their year into four equal seasons, spring, summer, autumn, and winter (Bund. XXV, 20), and without interfering with their old festivals, they would, no doubt, have wished to celebrate the end and middle of each of their new seasons. The ends of these four seasons occur on the 90th, 180th, 270th, and 365th days of the year, and their mid-points are the 45th, 135th, 225th, and 320th days; but the Zoroastrians already held a festival on the 365th day, and celebrated midsummer and midwinter (the 135th and 320th days of their new calendar) on the 105th and 290th days of their year, and they would consider the 90th, 225th, and 270th days too close to their old festivals of the 105th, 210th, and 290th days to allow of the former being held as new festivals; so that they would have only the midspring festival, on the 45th day, and that of the end of summer, on the 180th day, to add to their old festivals. It may be objected that the end of summer was already celebrated on the 210th day, and, for this reason, it is more probable that the festivals were intended to celebrate the beginnings and mid-points of the seasons, rather than their ends and mid-points. According to this view, the six season-festivals were intended, respectively, to celebrate midspring, midsummer, the beginning of autumn, the beginning of winter, midwinter, and the beginning of spring. That they were also intended to commemorate, respectively, the
4. Aharman exclaimed thus: 'Enter into the season-festival! if one of those present shall steal a single thing the season-festival is violated, and the affair is in accordance with thy wish; enter into the sacred feast if only one of those present shall chatter the sacred feast is violated, and the affair is in accordance with thy wish; but avoid next-of-kin marriage! because I do not know a remedy for it; for whoever has gone four times near to it will not become parted from the possession of Aûharmazd and the archangels.'

creations of the sky, water, earth, vegetation, animals, and man, is a belief of later times, derived probably from a foreign source.

1 Reading pavan, 'with,' instead of barâ, 'beyond,' as in the next clause of the sentence (see p. 176, note 5).

2 By the sacred feast is meant the consecration of sacred cakes, with meat-offerings and the recital of the Âfrîngâns or blessings (see Chaps. III, 32, XI, 4).

3 By next-of-kin marriage Parsis nowadays understand the marriage of first cousins, which they consider a specially righteous act; and the passages in Pahlavi texts, which appear to approve of marriages between brother and sister, father and daughter, and mother and son, they explain as referring to the practices of heretics (see Dastûr Pêshôtan’s English translation of the Dînkard, p. 96, note). How far this explanation may be correct has not been ascertained, for the passages in question are rather obscure, and have not been thoroughly examined. But it is quite conceivable that the Parsi priesthood, about the time of the Muhammadan conquest (when the practice of next-of-kin marriage was most extolled), were anxious to prevent marriages with strangers, in order to hinder conversions to the foreign faith; and that they may, therefore, have extended the range of marriage among near relations beyond the limits now approved by their descendants.

4 The object of this chapter is evidently to extol the religious merit of next-of-kin marriage. A Persian version of the passage, contained in M5, fols. 54, 55, adds the following details: 'Therefore it is necessary to understand, that the chief next-of-kin marriage is that of a sister's daughter and brother's son; a medium

1. The Yathâ-ahû-vairyô formulas that are necessary in each place, and how they are to be spoken in performing anything.

2. One by him who goes forth to an assembly, or before grandees and chieftains, or on any business; or when he goes to ask for what he wants (val khvâhaftso); also when he quits any business; in each of these situations he is to say only one formula, so that his business may proceed more promptly.

next-of-kin marriage is that of a brother’s son and a younger (dîgar) brother’s daughter, or of a sister’s son and a younger sister’s daughter; and inferior to a medium next-of-kin marriage is that of a sister’s son and a younger brother’s daughter. It is necessary to know that any person who contracts a next-of-kin marriage, if his soul be fî for hell, will arrive among the ever-stationary (see Chap. VI, 2), if it is one of the ever-stationary it will arrive at heaven. Another particular is to be added; if any one, in departing, settles and strives for the next-of-kin marriage betrothal (paîvand) of a next brother it is a good work of a thousand Tanâpûhars; if any one strives to break off a next-of-kin marriage betrothal he is worthy of death.

1 See Bund. I, 21.

2 It appears from the ninth book of the Dînkard, that the contents of this chapter are derived from the first fargard of the Sûdkar Nask (see B. Yt. I, 1, note). The account given by the Dînkard contains fewer details, but, so far as it goes, it is in accordance with our text, except that it seems to transfer the object of § 10 to § 12, and removes the objects of §§ 12, 13 one step onwards; it also adds ‘going on a bridge’ to § 2. The Persian Rivâtay of Bahman Pûngyah gives further details, as will be mentioned in the notes below.

3 The Persian Rivâtay adds to these occasions, when he goes on the water, or a river, or goes to borrow, or to ask repayment of a loan, or goes out from his house, or comes into it.
3. That a blessing (āfrīnū) may be more benedictory, for this reason one utters two formulas; for there are two kinds of blessing, one is that which is in the thoughts ¹, and one is that which is in words.

4. Four are for coming out more thankfully when at a season-festival ².

5. Five by him who goes to atone for sin, in order to expel the fiend; because it is necessary to undergo punishment by the decision (dastōbarīh) of these five persons, the house-ruler, the village-ruler, the tribe-ruler ³, the province-ruler, and the supreme Zaratāst; and five Ashem-vohūs ⁴ are to be uttered by him at the end.

6. Six by him who goes to seek power, and to battle, so that he may be more successful.

² K20 substitutes for val, ‘at,’ the following mutilated phrase: [... aṃhau khshapō kadārkāf pavan kadārkāf] madam vazlūnēd rádīh-i; the portion in brackets being evidently a fragment from the Hādokht Srōsh Yt. 5 with Pahlavi translation (a passage which treats of the efficacy of reciting the Yathā-ahūvaityō). If this fragment be not merely a marginal gloss, which has crept into the text by mistake, we must translate the whole section as follows: ‘Four are for the more thankful coming out of the liberalty of a season-festival, when the passage, “on that day nor on that night comes there anything whatever on any one,” goes on.’ The Dīnkaḍ has merely: ‘Four by him who is at the invovation of the chiefs of creation and the celebration of a season-festival.’ The Persian Rivāyats omit the section altogether.

⁴ See Bund. XX, 2. These are to be recited after the punishment is over.
7. Seven by him who goes to perform the worship of God (yazdân), so that the archangels may come more forward¹ at the worship.

8. Eight by him who goes to perform the ceremonial of the righteous guardian spirit.

9. Nine by him who goes to sow corn; these he utters for this reason, because the corn will ripen (ras̄d) in nine months, and so that the corn may come forward he will make the mischief of the noxious creatures less².

10. Ten by him who goes to seek a wife, so that the presents may be favourable for the purpose.

11. Ten by him who wishes to allow the male access to beasts of burden and cattle, so that it may be more procreative³.

12. Eleven by him who goes to the lofty mountains, so that the glory of mountains and hills may bless him and be friendly⁴.

13. Twelve by him who goes to the low districts, so that the glory of that country and district may bless him and be friendly⁵.

14. Thirteen by him who shall become pathless; at that same place he shall utter them; or by him

³ Instead of §§ 10, 11 the Persian Rivâyats have buying quadrupeds, and driving pegs into the ground for picketing them.

⁵ The Persian Rivâyats add going up hills, mounting anything lofty, going on a bridge, and losing one’s way.
who shall pass over a bridge and a river, so that the spirit of that water may bless him; because the Yathâ-ahû-vaîryô is greater and more successful than everything in the Avesta as to all rivers, all wholesomeness, and all protection.

15. Religion is as connected with the Yathâ-ahû-vaîryô as the hair is more connected with the glory of the face; any one, indeed, would dread (sa mâd) to separate hairiness and the glory of the face.

Chapter XX.

1. In one place it is declared that it is said by revelation (dînô) that a man is to go as much as possible (kand vê-s-ast) to the abode of fires, and the salutation (nîyâyîsnô) of fire is to be performed with reverence; because three times every day the archangels form an assembly in the abode of fires, and shed good works and righteousness there; and then the good works and righteousness, which are shed there, become more lodged in the body of him who goes much thither, and performs many salutations of fire with reverence.

1 The Persian Rivâyats substitute going to and entering a city or town; they also add twenty-one recitations on setting out on a journey, so that the angel Bahrâm may grant a safe arrival.

2 The contents of this chapter conclude the MS. Mô; a few lines even having been lost at the end of that MS., though preserved in some of its older copies. A more modern copy, in the MS. No. 121 of the Ouseley collection in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, contains §§ 4–17, appended to the Bundahis. Complete Pâzand versions, derived from Mô, occur in L7 and L22, immediately following the Pâzand of Chap. XVIII.

3 The fire-temple.

4 That is, the Âtâr Nyâyîs is to be recited.
2. This, too, that the nature of wisdom is just like fire; for, in this world, there is nothing which shall become so complete as that thing which is made with wisdom; and every fire, too, that they kindle and one sees from far, makes manifest what is safe and uninjured (aträkht); whatever is safe in fire is safe for ever, and whatever is uninjured in fire is uninjured for ever.

3. This, too, that a disposition in which is no wisdom is such-like as a clear, unsullied (anāhûk) fountain which is choked (bastô) and never goes into use; and the disposition with which there is wisdom is such-like as a clear, unsullied fountain, over which an industrious man stands and takes it into use; cultivation restrains it, and it gives crops (bar) to the world.

4. This, too, that these three things are to be done by men, to force the demon of corruption (nasûs)¹ far away from the body, to be steadfast in the religion, and to perform good works. 5. To force the demon of corruption far away from the body is this, that before the sun has come up one is to wash the hands² and face with bull’s urine and water; to be steadfast in the religion is this, that one is to reverence the sun³; and to perform good works is this, that one is to destroy several noxious creatures.

6. This, too, that the three greatest concerns of men are these, to make him who is an enemy a friend, to make him who is wicked righteous, and to make him who is ignorant learned. 7. To make an enemy a friend is this, that out of the worldly wealth one has before him he keeps a friend in mind; to make a wicked one righteous is this, that from the sin, whereby he becomes wicked, one turns him away; and to make an ignorant one learned is this, that one is to manage himself so that he who is ignorant may learn of him.

8. This, too, that the walks of men are to be directed chiefly to these three places, to the abode of the well-informed, to the abode of the good, and to the abode of fires. 9. To the abode of the well-informed, that so one may become wiser, and religion be more lodged in one's person; to the abode of the good for this reason, that so, among good and evil, he may thereby renounce the evil and carry home the good; and to the abode of fires for this reason, that so the spiritual fiend may turn away from him.

10. This, too, that he whose actions are for the soul, the world is then his own, and the spiritual existence more his own; and he whose actions are for the body, the spiritual existence has him at pleasure, and they snatch the world from him compulsorily.

11. This, too, that Bakht-âfrîd said, that every Gâtha (gâsân) of Âûharmazd has been an opposition of the one adversary, and the renunciation of sin (patitik) for the opposition of every fiend.

12. This, too, that, regarding the world, anxiety is not to be suffered, it is not to be considered as anything whatever, and is not to be let slip from the hand. 13. Anxiety is not to be suffered for this reason, because that which is ordained will happen; it is not to be considered as anything whatever for this reason, because should it be expedient it is necessary to abandon it; and it is not to be let slip from the hand for this reason, because it is proper, in the world, to provide a spiritual existence for oneself.

14. This, too, that the best thing is truth, and the worst thing is deceit; and there is he who speaks true and thereby becomes wicked, and there is he who speaks false and thereby becomes righteous.

15. This, too, that fire is not to be extinguished, for this is a sin; and there is he who extinguishes it, and is good.

16. This, too, is declared, that nothing is to be given to the vile; and there is he by whom the best and most pleasant ragout (khūrdik) is to be given to the vile.

17. On these, too, is the attention of men to be fixed, because there is a remedy for everything but death, a hope for everything but wickedness, everything will lapse except righteousness, it is possible

3 M6 ends at this point, the next folio being lost. The remainder of the chapter has been recovered from a copy in Bombay, checked by the Páz. MSS. L7 and L22, all of which must have to manage everything but temper (gôhar), and it is possible for everything to change but divine providence (bakô-bakhtô).

18. This, too, is declared, that Frêdûn¹ wished to slay Az-i Dahâk², but Aûharmazd spoke thus: 'Do not slay him now, for the earth will become full of noxious creatures.'

CHAPTER XXI.³

1. I write the indication of the midday shadow; may it be fortunate!

2. Should the sun come⁴ into Cancer the shadow is one foot of the man, at the fifteenth degree of Cancer it is one foot; when the sun is at Leo it is been derived from M6 before it lost its last folio; whereas the MS. No. 121 of the Ouseley collection at Oxford, which ends at the same point, must have been written after the folio was lost.

² See Bund. XXIX, 9, XXXI, 6, B. Yt. III, 55-6r.
³ The contents of this chapter, regarding the lengths of midday and afternoon shadows, immediately follow a tale of Gôst-i Fryânô, which is appended to the book of Ardâ-Vîrâl’s journey to the other world, both in M6 and K20. As will be seen from the notes, these details about shadows were probably compiled at Yazd in Persia, as they are suitable only for that latitude.

⁴ Reading âyad-ae (a very rare form), or it may be intended for hîmanâe, 'should it be,' but it is written in both MSS. exactly like the two ciphers for the numeral 5. Mullâ Fîrûz in his Avûze Dîm, p. 279 seq., takes 5 khêdûk pâf as implying that the shadow is under the sole of the foot, or the sun overhead; but neither this reading, nor the more literal 'one-fifth of a foot,' can be reconciled with the other measures; though if we take 5 as standing for pangak, 'the five toes or sole,' we might translate as follows: 'When the sun is at Cancer, the shadow is the sole of one foot of the man.'
one foot and a half, at the fifteenth of Leo it is two feet; when the sun is at Virgo it is two and a half, at the fifteenth of Virgo it is three feet and a half; at Libra it is four feet and a half, at the fifteenth of Libra it is five feet and a half; at Scorpio it is six feet and a half, at the fifteenth of Scorpio it is seven feet and a half; at Sagittarius it is eight feet and a half, at the fifteenth of Sagittarius it is nine feet and a half; at Capricornus it is ten feet, at the fifteenth of Capricornus it is nine feet and a half; at Aquarius it is eight feet and a half, at the fifteenth of Aquarius it is seven feet and a half; at Pisces it is six feet and a half, at the fifteenth of Pisces it is five feet and a half; at Aries it is four feet and a half, at the fifteenth of Aries it is three feet and a half; at Taurus it is two feet and a half, at the fifteenth of Taurus it is two feet; at Gemini it is one foot and a half, at the fifteenth of Gemini it is one foot.

1 K20 has 'three' by mistake.
2 M6 omits 'and a half' by mistake.
3 K20 has 'six' by mistake.
4 Both MSS. omit one cipher, and have only 'six,' but the shadow must be the same here as at the fifteenth of Sagittarius.
5 Both MSS. have 'seven,' which is clearly wrong.

It is obvious that, as the length of a man's shadow depends upon the height of the sun, each of these observations of his noonday shadow determines the altitude of the sun at noon, and is, therefore, a rude observation for finding the latitude of the place, provided we know the ratio of a man's foot to his stature. According to Bund. XXVI, 3 a man's stature is eight spans (vitast), and according to Farh. Okh. p. 41 a vitast is twelve finger-breadths, and a foot is fourteen (see Bund. XXVI, 3, note), so that a man's stature of eight spans is equivalent to 6$\frac{3}{4}$ feet. Assuming this to have been the ratio adopted by the observer, supposing the obliquity of the ecliptic to have been 23° 35' (as
3. The midday shadow is written¹, may its end be good!

4. I write the indication of the Aûzêrîn (afternoon)² period of the day; may it be well and fortunate by the help of God (yazdân)!

5. When the day is at a maximum (pavan afzûnô), and the sun comes unto the head³ of Cancer, and one's shadow becomes six feet and two parts⁴, he makes it the Aûzêrîn period (gâs). 6.

was about A.D. 1000), and calculating the latitude from each of the thirteen different lengths of shadow, the mean result is 32° 1′ north latitude, which is precisely the position assigned to Yazd (the head-quarters of the small remnant of Zoroastrians in Persia) on some English maps, though some foreign maps place it 15′ or 20′ farther south. With regard to the rough nature of this mode of observation it may be remarked that, as the lengths of the shadows are noted only to half a foot, there is a possible error of a quarter-foot in any of them; this would produce a possible error of 2° 4 in the midsummer observation of latitude, and of 39′ in the midwinter one; or a mean possible error of 1° 22′ in any of the observations; so that the possible error in the mean of thirteen observations is probably not more than 6′, and the probable error is even less, provided the data have been assumed correctly.

³ The word sar, ‘head,’ usually means ‘the end,’ but it must be here taken as ‘the beginning;’ perhaps, because the zodiacal signs are supposed to come head foremost.

⁴ What portion of a foot is meant by bâhâr, ‘part,’ is doubtful. It can hardly be a quarter, because ‘two quarters’ would be too clumsy a term for ‘a half.’ But it appears from §§ 5–7 that the shadow, necessary to constitute the Aûzêrîn period, is taken as increasing uniformly from six feet and two parts to fourteen feet and two parts, an increase of eight feet in six months, or exactly one foot and one-third per month, as stated in the text. And, deducting this monthly increase of one foot and one-third from the seven and a half feet shadow at the end of the first month, we have six feet and one-sixth remaining for the shadow at the
Every thirty days it always increases one foot \textit{and} one-third, therefore about every ten days the reckoning is always half a foot\textsuperscript{1}, \textit{and when} the sun is at the head of Leo the shadow is seven\textsuperscript{2} feet \textit{and} a half. 7. In this series every zodiacal constellation is treated alike, and the months alike, until the sun comes unto the head of Capricornus, \textit{and} the shadow becomes fourteen feet and two parts. 8. In Capricornus it diminishes again a foot \textit{and} one-third\textsuperscript{3}; \textit{and from there} where it turns back, because of the decrease of the night and increase of the day, it always diminishes one foot \textit{and} one-third every one of the months, \textit{and} about every ten days the reckoning is always half a foot, until it comes back to six feet and two parts; every zodiacal constellation being treated alike, and the months alike\textsuperscript{4}.

\textsuperscript{1} Meaning that the increase of shadow is to be taken into account as soon as it amounts to half a foot, that is, about every ten days. Practically, half a foot would be added on the tenth and twentieth days, and the remaining one-third of a foot at the end of the month.

\textsuperscript{2} Both MSS. have ‘eight,’ but this would be inconsistent with the context, as it is impossible that ‘six feet and two parts’ can become ‘eight feet and a half’ by the addition of ‘one foot and one-third;’ whatever may be the value of the ‘two parts’ of a foot.

\textsuperscript{4} This mode of determining the beginning of the afternoon period is not so clumsy as it appears, as it keeps the length of that period exceedingly uniform for the six winter months with some increase in the summer time. In latitude 32° north, where the longest day is about 13 hours 56 minutes, and the shortest is 10 hours 4 minutes, these observations of a man’s shadow make the afternoon period begin about 3½ hours before sunset at mid-
CHAPTER XXII

1. May Aûharmazd give thee the august rank and throne of a champion!

2. May Vohûman give thee wisdom! may the benefit of knowing Vohûman be good thought, and mayest thou be acting well, that is, saving the soul!

3. May Ardahist, the beautiful, give thee understanding and intellect!

4. May Shatvairô grant thee wealth from every generous one!

5. May Spendarmad grant thee praise through the seed of thy body! may she give thee as wife a woman from the race of the great!

6. May Horvadad grant thee plenty and prosperity!

7. May Amerôdad grant thee herds of four-footed beasts!

summer, diminishing to $2\frac{3}{4}$ hours at the autumnal equinox, and then remaining very nearly constant till the vernal equinox.

These last two chapters are found written upon some folios which have been added to the beginning of Mô; but, though not belonging to that MS. originally, they are still very old. The first of these two chapters has not been found elsewhere; it is an elaborate benediction, in which the writer calls down, upon some one, a series of blessings from each of the thirty archangels and angels whose names are given to the days of the Parsi month in the order in which they here stand (compare the same names in Bund. XXVII, 24).

2 The meaning of the word pâdrôg or pâdrang (which occurs also in §§ 12, 26, and appears to be a title) may be guessed from the following passage in the Yâdkârô-i Zarîrân, or Vištâsp-shâh-nâmâk: Pavan har râm va pâdrasm-i lak pîrôg va vêh pâdrôg sem yâityûñî-æ, 'in every attack and counter-attack of thine mayest thou bring away the title of conqueror and good champion!'

3 The reading is uncertain.
8. May Dinô always secure thee the support of the creator Aûharmazd!

9. May the light of the sublime Âtarô hold thy throne in heaven!

10. May Âvân grant thee wealth from every generous one!

11. May Khûr hold thee without mystery and doubt among the great and thy compeers (hambudîkân!)

12. May Mâh give thee an assistant, who is the assistant of champions!

13. May Tistar hold thee a traveller in the countries of the seven regions!

14. Gôûrvan the archangel is the protection of four-footed beasts.

15. May Dinô always remain for thee as the support of the creator Aûharmazd!

16. May Mitrô be thy judge, who shall wish thy existence to be vigorous!

17. May Srôsh the righteous, the smiter of demons, keep greed, wrath, and want far from thee! may he destroy them, and may he not seize thee as unjust!

18. May Rashnû be thy conductor to the resplendent heaven!

1 This verb is doubtful; here and in § 23 it is netrûnâd, 'may she guard,' but in § 15 it is ketrûnâd, 'may she remain.'

2 Bûrs Êtarô, 'the sublime fire,' seems to be a personification of the fire. Berezi-savang of Bund. XVII, 1, 3, the Supremely-benefiting of SZS. XI, 1, 6.

3 She is usually called an angel. Either the verb is omitted in this section, or it is not a blessing; and the same may be said of §§ 20, 25.

22. May Vâd bring thee peace from the resplendent heaven!

23. May Dînô always secure thee the support of the creator Aûharmazd!

24. May Dînô become thy guest in thy home and dwelling!

25. Arshisang, the beautiful, is the resplendent glory of the Kayâns.

27. May Âsmân bless thee with all skill and wealth!

instead of yehevûnâd, in which case we should have 'give thee a passport.'

1 The meaning of khvâpar (Av. hûpapara) is by no means certain; it is an epithet of Aûharmazd, angels, and spirits, and is then often assumed to mean 'protecting,' but it is also a term applied to the earth and offspring; perhaps 'self-sustaining' would suit both its etymology and its various applications best, but the root par has many other meanings.

2 That is, two great cycles. It is usual for the copyists of Pahlavi MSS. to wish, in their colophons, that the persons for whom the MSS. are written, whether themselves or others, may retain the MSS. for a hundred and fifty years before leaving them to their children; which period is mentioned because it is supposed to constitute a great cycle of the moon and planets.

3 Written drûd instead of drûd.

29. May Māraspend hold thee a throne in the resplendent heaven!
30. May Anirān the immortal, with every kind of all wealth, become thy desire! the horses of God (yazdān)¹ who shall come that he may go, and thou mayest obtain a victory.
31. May destiny give thee a helper! he is the guardian of the celestial sphere for all these archangels whose names I have brought forward; may he be thy helper at all times, in every good work and duty!
32. Homage to Srit² the teacher! may he live long! may he be prosperous in the land! may his be every pleasure and joy, and every glory of the Kayāns, through the will of the persistent Aûharmazd!

Chapter XXIII.

0. In the name of God and the good creation be health³!

1. Aûharmazd is more creative, Vohûman is more

¹ Both nouns are in the plural, and both verbs in the singular. Anirān is a personification of Av. anaghrā raokau, 'the beginningless lights,' or fixed stars (which, however, are said to have been created by Aûharmazd in Bund. II, 1), and these stars appear to have been considered as horses of the angels (Bund. VI, 3, SZS. VI, 1). There are several uncertain phrases in §§ 30–32.
² This would appear to be the name of the person to whom the benediction is addressed, as it can hardly be meant for the ancient hero Thrīta, the Athrat of Bund. XXXI, 27, and the Sritō of SZS. XI, 10, note.

embellished 1, Ardavahist is more brilliant 2, Shat-vaṭrō is more exalted 3, Spendarmad 4 is more fruitful 4, Horvadad 5 is moister 5, Amerōdade 6 is fatter 6.
2. Dīn-pa-Ātarō is just like Aūharmazd 7, Ātarō is hotter 8, Āvān is more golden 9, Khūr is more observant 10, Māh is more protective 11, Tīr is more liberal, Gōs is swifter. 12. 3. Dīn 13-pa-Mitrō is just like Aūh-armazd, Mitro is more judicial, Srōsh is more vigorous, Rashn is more just, Fravārān is more powerful, Vāhrām is more victorious, Rām is more pleasing, Vād is more fragrant. 4. Dīn-pa-Dīnō is just like Aūharmazd, Dīnō is more valuable, Ard 14 is more beautiful, Āstād is purer, Āsmān is more lofty, Zamyād is more conclusive, Māraspend is more thirty angels and archangels, are extant; one in M6, which has lost §§ 3–5, and the other in a very old MS. in the library of the high-priest of the Parsees at Bombay. This latter, being complete, is here taken as the text, while the variations of M6, which occur in nearly every epithet, are given in the notes. Which version is the oldest can hardly be ascertained with certainty from the state of the MSS. M6 omits this opening benediction.

1 M6 has ‘more nimble.’
2 M6 has ‘more discriminative.’
3 M6 has ‘more active.’
4 M6 has ‘more complete.’
5 M6 has ‘fatter.’
6 M6 has ‘more fruitful.’
7 M6 has ‘Dīnō is more desirous.’
8 M6 has ‘more heating.’
9 Referring perhaps to the golden channels (Bund. XIII, 4, 5) through which the water of Arēdvīvīsūr (a title of the angel Āvān, ‘waters’) is supposed to flow. M6 has ‘more glittering.’
10 M6 has ‘more embellished.’
11 M6 has varpāntar, the meaning of which is uncertain.
12 M6 has ‘more listening.’
13 The version in M6 ends here; the next folio being lost.
14 The same as Arshisang (see Bund. XXII, 4). conveying the religion, Anîrân is the extreme of exertion and listening.

5. May it be completed in peace and pleasure!

1 The reading of both these nouns is uncertain. The days of the Parsi month, which bear the names of these thirty angels, are divided, it will be observed, into four nearly equal divisions, resembling weeks, which are here separated in §§ 1-4. The first weekly period begins with a day dedicated to Aûharmazd, and called by his own name; and each of the three other weekly periods also begins with a day dedicated to Aûharmazd, but called by the name of Dîn, 'religion,' with the name of the following day added as a cognomen. The first week, therefore, consists of the day Aûharmazd followed by six days named after the six archangels respectively (see Bund. I, 23, 26). The second week consists of the day Dîn-with-Âtarô followed by six days named after the angels of fire, waters, the sun, the moon, Mercury, and the primeval ox. The third week consists of the day Dîn-with-Mîtrô followed by seven days named after the angels of solar light, obedience, and justice, the guardian spirits, and the angels of victory, pleasure, and wind. And the fourth week consists of the day Dîn-with-Dînô followed by seven days named after the angels of religion, righteousness, rectitude, the sky, the earth, the liturgy, and the fixed stars.
INDEX.
OBSERVATIONS.

1. The references in this index are to the pages of the introduction, and to the chapters and sections of the translations; the chapters being denoted by the larger ciphers.

2. References to passages which contain special information are given in parentheses.

3. Though different forms of the same name may occur in the translations, only one form is usually given in the index, to which the references to all forms are attached; except when the forms differ so much as to require to be widely separated in the index.

4. Pahlavi forms are always given in preference to Pāzand and Persian, when only one is mentioned; but where only a Pāzand form occurs it is printed in italics, as Pāzand orthography is usually corrupt. In all such italicised names any letters, which would elsewhere be italic, are printed in roman type.

5. Abbreviations used are:—Av. for Avesta word; Bd. for Bundahis; Byt. for Bahman Yast; ch. for chapter of Visparad; com. for commentator and commentary; Gug. for Gugarati; Huz. for Huzvâris; Int. for Introduction; lun. man. for lunar mansion; m. for mountain; meas. for measure; n for foot-note; Pahl. for Pahlavi; Pâz. for Pāzand; Pers. for Persian; r. for river; Sl. for Shâyast lâ-shâyast; trans. for translation; wt. for weight; zod. for zodiacal constellation; Zs. for Selections of Zâd-sparam.
