THE

OCEAN OF STORY
THE
OCEAN OF STORY BEING
C. H. TAWNEY'S TRANSLATION
OF SOMADEVA'S KATHĀ SARIT SĀGARA
(OR OCEAN OF STREAMS OF STORY)
47839
NOW EDITED WITH INTRODUCTION, FRESH EXPLANATORY NOTES AND TERMINAL ESSAY
BY
N. M. PENZER, M.A., F.R.G.S., F.G.S.
MEMBER OF THE FOLK-LORE SOCIETY; FELLOW OF THE ROYAL ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE; MEMBER OF THE ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY, ETC.
AUTHOR OF "AN ANNOTATED BIBLIOGRAPHY OF SIR RICHARD FRANCIS BURTON," ETC.

IN TEN VOLUMES

VOL. II

WITH A FOREWORD BY
SIR GEORGE A. GRIERSON, K.C.I.E., PH.D., D.LITT., LL.D.

MOTILAL BANARSIDASS
DELHI :: PATNA :: VARANASI

© MOTILAL BANARSIDASS
BUNGALOW ROAD, JAWAHARNAGAR, DELHI-7
CHOWK, VARANASI (U.P.)
ASHOK RAJ PATH, PATNA (BIHAR)

INDIAN EDITION

"This has been published with the subsidy given by the Ministry of Education, Government of India."

Second Revised & Enlarged Ed. 1924
Indian Reprint 1968

Price Rs. 90.00 for the complete set of 10 Vols.

CENTRAL ARCHAEOLOGICAL LIBRARY, NEW DELHI.

A No. No 47839

Date 25.10.1969

Call No. S 88k 1 Som T P

PRINTED IN INDIA BY SHANTILAL JAIN AT SHRI JAINENDRA PRESS, BUNGALOW ROAD, JAWAHARNAGAR, DELHI-7 AND PUBLISHED BY SUNDARLAL JAIN, MOTILAL BANARSIDASS, BUNGALOW ROAD, JAWAHARNAGAR, DELHI-7.
One of the main hindrances to the development and propagation of the study of Sanskrit is the non-availability of a large number of important Sanskrit books. With a view to obviating this difficulty, the Ministry of Education has formulated a scheme of reprinting of important out-of-print books. The present book, namely, Tawney’s English translation of Katha-sarit-sagara by Soma Deva has been published under this scheme. By subsidising the present reprint it has been possible to reduce the price of the book to Rs. 90/- per set. I am sure the reprint which carries a moderate price will be welcomed by all oriental scholars and lovers of Sanskrit.

New Delhi
May 13, 1968.
FOREWORD

It is a source of great pleasure to me that, by being invited to write the Foreword to this volume, I have been given an opportunity of paying tribute to the memory of an old friend and a great scholar. If, here, I confine myself to the latter aspect of his character, it is at the same time impossible to abstain from associating with it recollections of a cordial friendship extending over more than forty years. It was in Calcutta, in 1880, that I first met Charles Henry Tawney, who was then Principal of the Sanskrit College and had already achieved a high reputation for Sanskrit learning. A warm friendship, fostered on both sides by similarity of tastes, and on my part by his ever-ready kindness and help, then sprang up, and continued unchecked from that time till his lamented death two years ago in Camberley. A master of the Sanskrit language, and widely read in other branches of knowledge, he was an ideal translator of Somadeva’s famous work, into the spirit of which he readily allowed himself to enter. The Attic salt of his fancy—a perpetual source of joy to those who were intimate with him—enabled him to reproduce the dry humour of the Sanskrit author in a sympathetic phraseology that few could equal. Whether it was such sophisms as those with which Yaugandharāyaṇa won over the simple straightforward soldier, Rumanvat, or such mock solemnity as that with which he tells the exploits of the two scapegrace rogues, Śiva and Madhava, in this translation we seem to hear the original author’s very voice. But it was not only as a capable translator that Tawney shone. A remarkably wide range of reading enabled him to adorn his work with numerous parallels taken from the legends of other countries, and that at a time when little had been done in the scientific examination of folk-lore. Since the first volume appeared in 1880 there has been a great advance in that science, and throughout the quest, up to the present day, his version of the Kathā Sarit Sāgara has been an indispensable tool in the hands of inquirers, without which much that has been discovered would still remain unknown. Now, with Mr Penzer's edition, the seed then sown by him has borne—too late, alas, to rejoice the original sower—rich and ample fruit, and, as Tawney himself would have done, we can welcome his admirable additions to the original notes, bringing Tawney's information up to date and making correction of such few mistakes as the advance of science has rendered inevitable. Besides these notes Mr Penzer has added several appendixes of really absorbing interest, in which he has summarised all the information that has up to the present time been collected regarding certain important questions connected with folk-lore and anthropology that arise in the course of editing the work. I shall refer to some of these later on, but here a general expression of appreciation cannot be omitted.

My knowledge of the subject is not sufficient to justify me in attempting to emulate Sir Richard Temple's example by giving notes on the origin and history of the many stories contained in this volume. That is a thing that I must leave to other and more capable hands; but a good part of my life was spent in fairly intimate relations with the peoples of the Ganges Valley, and I may, perhaps, be pardoned if I jot down a few disjointed reminiscences that may illuminate passages which struck me as I read through the tales and Mr Penzer's notes.

On the very first page of this volume we are told how the amorous king, Udayana of Vatsa, absorbed in the delights of his harem, neglected the responsibilities of his rule, and again, on page 55, a similar story is told of King Ādityasena of Ujjayinī. For India such stories are only too true to life. Over and over again does history tell us how kings have been destroyed, and how India has been lost, through the love of women. Somadeva tells us how, in each of the two cases mentioned by him his ministers succeeded in arousing the royal voluptuary to a sense of his kingly duties, and we have a pretty version of the same idea for modern times in the well-known story of the poet Vihārī and King Jai Singh Mirza of Ambēr, who reigned in the seventeenth century. Jai Singh had been a mighty warrior, serving the emperor with high renown, but, in an evil moment, he wedded a girl wife of surpassing beauty. He retired with her into his inner apartments, and gave orders that any person disturbing him with official business should be blown from a gun. So matters went on for a year, and ended in dire confusion, but none of the ministers dared acquaint the king. At last the poet solved the problem by composing a verse that, while ostensibly praising the beauty of the young queen, gave no uncertain hint as to the state of affairs. This he concealed among the flower petals that each day were sent into the inner apartments of the palace to form the bed of the happy couple. In the morning the paper remained stiff among the withered petals and bruised the king's body. He drew it out, read it, and at once returned to a sense of his responsibilities. He came forth, held a public court, summoned the ingenious poet and promised him a gold coin for every verse that he might bring him. As a result the kingdom was saved, and Viharī became a rich man; for he wrote seven hundred more verses that were later put together by his admirers and form that inimitable collection of miniature picture-poems known all over Northern India as the Bihārī Satsai or the "Seven Centuries of Viharī."

A sadder instance is that of the gallant Pṛithirāj, the Chauhān monarch of Delhi. He wooed and carried off by force the fair Sanjogin, daughter of Jaichand of Kanauj. In the ensuing war Jaichand, hard pressed by Pṛithirāj, called to his assistance the Musalmāns, who had already invaded India, and who had established themselves at Lahore. Lulled in the arms of Sanjogin, Pṛithirāj paid little heed to the threatening storm. When he awoke it was too late. The storm had burst in all its fury, and Pṛithirāj was defeated and slain in "The Great Battle" of A.D. 1192 at Thānesar. Sanjogin ended her life upon his funeral pyre, and Delhi became, and remained until it was captured by the English in the Mutiny, a Moslem capital.

The long story of Vidūshaka (p. 54 ff.) suggests more than one parallel with the beliefs of the Indian peasant of

¹ Bihārī Satsai, 630.
to-day. On page 57 Mr Penzer supplies an interesting note on horses in folk-lore and their devotion to their masters. The Rājpūt Lay of Ālhā is full of this. Each of the heroes possesses a horse of fairy breed that saves him in many a difficult situation. For instance, Malkhān’s mare, Kabūtrī, or “the Pigeon,” is ridden by her master in a furious battle charge. I quote Waterfield’s translation 1:

“As the lion the kine, as the wolf the sheep,
   As the schoolboy drives the ball,
So trench by trench did Malkhān leap
   With his Rājpūts following all.

‘If I gave thee barley in winter,
   And oil in time of rain,
If Parmāl stinted thee not of milk
   In thy foalhood lightsome and vain,

‘Kabūtrī, my mare, my Pigeon,
   Mine honour save this day,
And let not thy foot take a backward step
   Whilst foes uphold the fray! ’

Kabūtrī arched her brown neck free,
   And they rushed on the Chauhān men;
But, where her master dealt with three,
   The mare she smote down ten.

For with teeth she tore and her heels she flang
   That she made a passage wide,
And each howdā she passed, in air she sprang,
   That her lord might reach the side.”

In India it is natural that elephants should play a rôle similar to that of horses. In folk-lore they betray, or serve, their masters like human beings, and even converse with them in human voice. We have a striking example of this in the same Lay of Ālhā. Dāsrāj’s elephant, Pachsāwaḍ, has been carried off by his enemy, Karinghā, and years later, when Dasrāj’s sons, Ālhā and Údan, with their cousin, Malkhān, wage a war of vengeance on their father’s murderer, we find Pachsāwaḍ faithfully serving his new masters, Jambay and his son Karinghā, and aiding in the capture of Údan. On hearing the news, Devī, Dasrāj’s widow, hastens to the battle-field and accosts the elephant 1:

---

“A mother’s yearning filled her breast,
For fear she nothing shrunk;
As if were a cow her calf caressed,
She clasped Pachsāwaḍ’s trunk.

‘I reared thee up in my house from youth,
And gave thee milk good store;
O little of grace, was this thy truth,
My Údan to bind so sore?’

At her words a shame o’er Pachsāwaḍ came,
‘I was pledged to the king Jambay;
I have eaten his salt, ’twas in me no fault
I should bind thine Údan Ray.

‘Were Malkhān now to the battle seat,
He would soon set Údan free.’”

Following Pachsāwaḍ’s advice, she dispatches Malkhān to the field, and he challenges Karinghā, mounted on Pachsāwaḍ, with Údan as his prisoner, to mortal combat. Karinghā orders his Mahout to charge upon Malkhān:

“The driver laid on strokes well told,
Not a step Pachsāwaḍ went;
His trunk between his tusks he rolled,
And down on his knees he bent.

And Ālhā then with all his men
Came charging o’er the plain;
With a battle shout their swords flashed out,
Like the sweep of the hurricane.

1 P. 190.
THE OCEAN OF STORY

'Pachsāwaḍ doth play me false to-day;
   He quits the foremost line';
Karinghā's soul was troubled sore,
   And round he turned his eyne.

Then straight he bade Papīhā bring,
   And lighted down to ride;
From his courser's back did Malkhān spring,
   And sat by Īdan's side.

Īdan unbound he laid on the ground,
   And Ṛupnā Bendulā led;
Queen Devi down from her litter came,
   And worshipped Pachsāwaḍ's head.

With sandal free, so fair to see,
   She painted his frontal wide;
'Behold I entrust my sons to thee,
   Now help in this perilous tide.

'Lo, Ālhā, here thy father's beast,
   Mount up, my son, and ride':
He climbed, and stood on the painted wood
   And sat as he grasped the side.'

In this way, Pachsāwaḍ having returned to his former allegiance, the battle is resumed, and ends with the villain Karinghā's satisfactory death at the hands of Malkhān.

Again, the fatal brides of the same story of Vidūshaka (pp. 69 and 74), whose husbands die one after the other on the wedding night, have their counterpart in Kāshmirī legend of the present day. Here, however, it is a python, issuing from the princess's mouth, not a visiting Rākshasa, who kills the bridegroom. He is duly slain by the hero, who, like Vidūshaka, wins the lady for his wife, and, we hope, lives happy with her ever after.

On page 81 ff., in his note on Rāhu, the demon of eclipse,

1 Papīhā was the name of Karinghā's horse.
2 Bendulā was the name of Īdan's horse, and Ṛupnā here acts as squire.
FOREWORD

Mr Penzer tells us how, in the Indian Central Provinces, he is the deity of the sweeper caste. There can be no doubt about Rāhu being an aboriginal god, who has been borrowed by the Indo-Aryans as a demon, but who still retains his divine character among the non-Aryan, or semi-Aryan, lowest classes. In Northern India he is the god of the Dusādhs, a degraded caste, and is the object of a remarkable ceremony of fire-worship. On certain festal days a long trench is filled with burning coals, on which the devotees walk barefoot without apparently receiving any harm.¹

Cutting off the nose of an unfaithful wife, as narrated on page 88, is still practised in India. An old friend, a Civil surgeon in Bihār, told me that he had more than once sewed on the nose of an erring spouse. There is a well-authenticated story that a woman once came to a surgeon with her severed nose. There was no time to be lost, so there and then, in the bungalow verandah, he set her on a table, and laid down beside her the severed portion while he prepared the surface of the wound. A watchful crow interfered with the operation, flew down and carried off the tasty piece of flesh, so that the unfortunate patient had to go noseless for the rest of her days. The moral, of course, is that spouses should remain faithful, or else, if this is impossible, that crows should not be encouraged in the neighbourhood of Indian hospitals.

In the story of Kārttikeya (p. 101) we are told how Kāma—the Indian God of Love—was consumed by a glance of the irate Siva, but was allowed to be born again—without a body—in the minds of animate creatures. We shall see later on how the curse was removed, and how Kāma received bodily form in the shape of Kṛishṇa’s son, Pradyumna; but here I may mention that this story of his having no body seems to be an interesting example of false folk-etymology. One of his names was “Anaṅga,” which was popularly explained as an-aṅga, or “in-corporeal”; but, as Professor Konow has pointed out,² the word has probably an altogether different meaning, which can hardly be given in these pages. Popular etymology has divided it wrongly, and has thus given birth to a pretty legend that has inspired some of the most famous poetry of India.

¹ See Risley, The Tribes and Castes of Bengal, i, 254, and also page 169 of this work.
² In the Wackernagel Festschrift, p. 1 ff. The word is probably merely an intensive form derived from the root aṅj, “anoint.”

Mr Penzer, on p. 117 ff., has given an important note on nudity in magic. In India the ceremonial use of nudity is especially prevalent in the north-east, where the population is largely of Tibeto-Burman origin. For instance, in Rangpur—a Bengal district bordering on Assam—in time of drought, the women set up by night a plantain-tree in honour of a non-Aryan god named Hudum Deo, and dance round it naked, singing obscene songs.¹ Mr Penzer refers to a similar custom among the Meithei women of Manipur, who also are not of Aryan stock; and in Assam and parts of Bengal, when one person wishes to insult another, he makes himself naked before him. When I was a magistrate in Murshidabad a complainant who was angry at having failed to prove his case, met his enemies on the way home and insulted them in this manner. I shall never forget the speechless fury of these men when they came to me about it, although they had previously borne the abuse and perjury in the witness-box with unmoved faces. Perjury was a thing to be expected, and could be met in the orthodox manner by counter-perjury,—but this conduct was breaking the rules of the game. In an Assam bazaar, when two old crones fall out there is a race between them as to who can disrobe first, in order to win a battle that had begun with only wordy warfare.

The use of iron in the birth-chamber to scare away evil spirits, described by Mr Penzer (p. 166 ff.), is, I believe, universal in India. I have come across it as far north as Kashmir, where, as elsewhere, not only is iron found in the lying-in room, but the woman’s drink is water in which a piece of red-hot iron has been quenched.² This might be supposed to be a kind of rude tonic, but the superstition regarding the metal as a demon-scarer shows its true nature.

On page 192 we are told how Saktideva was swallowed

¹ See the present writer in Journ. As. Soc. Bengal, vol. xlvi, Pt. I, p. 188.
² Cf. Islâm in India, p. 23.
FOREWORD

by an enormous fish and afterwards rescued. This, as Mr Penzer shows, is a common feature in Indian stories, but the locus classicus is the tale of Krishṇa’s son, Pradyumna. We have seen above how Kāma had been consumed by Siva and condemned for ever to be bodiless. The curse being remitted, he was born again as Pradyumna. His wife Rati, who all these ages had been searching for him without success, was shortly before this born as Māyāvatī, and became the wife of a demon named Šambara. Šambara, hating Krishṇa, stole Pradyumna while yet a babe and cast him into the sea. There he was swallowed by a great fish, which was afterwards caught and came into Šambara’s kitchen. The child was found inside it and was taken care of and reared by Māyāvatī. When he grew up the pair learnt from Nārada that they were respectively Kāma and Rati, and so Pradyumna killed Šambara, and, taking Māyāvatī with him, returned to his parents. The whole story is told in detail in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa.¹

Mr Penzer has a most interesting note on the sacred cow of the Hindūs. He is inclined to look upon the Hindū veneration of this animal as dating from prehistoric times. Now it is a curious fact that, north of Kashmir, there is the important Dard tribe of Shiṅs, the members of which loathe cows. They inhabit the country round Gilgit, and once extended far to the east, into Tibet. These people are certainly of Aryan stock, but, in my opinion, are not Indo-Aryans. They probably came, independently of the great Indo-Aryan migration, into their present seat from the north, over the Pāmirs. To these people the cow, so far from being sacred, is abhorrent. This has been noted by more than one observer.² For instance, Drew says:

"They hold the cow in abhorrence; they look on it much in the same way that the ordinary Muhammadan regards the pig. They will not drink cow's milk, nor do they eat or make butter from it. Nor even will they burn cowdung, the fuel that is so commonly used in the East. Some cattle they are obliged to keep for ploughing, but they have as little as possible to do with them; when the cow calves they will put the calf to the udder by pushing it with a forked stick, and will not touch it with their hands."

¹ X, lv. See also Vishnu Purāṇa, Wilson-Hall trans., v, 73 ff.

Here we have apparently an ancient taboo among non-Indian Aryans, contrasted with the sacredness attributed to the same animal by their Indian cousins; and this leads us to the consideration that in prehistoric times, before the Indo-Aryan invasion, the still united Aryans looked upon the cow as subject to certain taboos, which developed independently on two separate lines, into the complete taboo of the Shins, and into the reverence of a sacred animal among the Indo-Aryans.

I have much more that I could write about this interesting volume, but considerations of space compel me to restrict myself to Mr Penzer's very full treatment of the legends about poison-damsels in his important Appendix III. It is curious how the different versions of the story current in widely distant parts of India agree even in small details. Mr Penzer (p. 301) quotes Barbosa's account of Mahmud of Gujarat, who was so poisonous that "when a fly touched him, as soon as it reached his flesh it withered and swelled up." We have also read on page 284 how Chunakya saved Chandragupta from a poison-damsel who had been sent to him by Rakshasa, but we are not told how he detected her poisonous character. We learn this, however, from another work written in Bihir—the Purushapariksha of the poet Vidyapati Thakkura, who flourished in the fourteenth century. He too, in chapter xx of his work, tells the story of Chunakya, and describes how he recognised the dangerous nature of the girl by noting that when flies settled on her to sip her perspiration they fell down dead.

Perhaps I may add a few instances of my personal experience regarding the effects of opium to the very interesting account given by Mr Penzer in the same appendix.
FOREWORD

Most of my Indian service was in the poppy-growing districts of Bihār, and for part of the time I was in charge of the Opium Department. I found ample evidence that among the millions of people with whom I was brought into contact the number of confirmed opium-sots was very small indeed. As for the educated classes, I have often been told that a man, after he has passed his fortieth year, should eat opium in moderation, merely to keep him in good health; and, though I have had hundreds of officials under me, I can remember only two of them who were slaves to the habit. One of these managed to do his work, if not brilliantly, at least efficiently, and lived to retire on a pension, when I lost sight of him. The other was once found asleep in his office and was threatened with dismissal. He was able to pull himself together and the offence was not repeated. As for the peasantry, every little cultivator in the opium districts kept back a small quantity of the drug, which he had to hand over to Government. This he stored at home as a family medicine, and took a little of it when he felt out of sorts. It may in fact be said that the people of Bihār, owing to generations of use, have as a body become immune to the evil effects of the drug. The evils that do arise from its use are seen in the case of its introduction among a population hitherto unaccustomed to it and, hence, not immune. Here its ravages are terrible, and total prohibition, as is the case in Burma, is the only remedy.

It will be seen, therefore, that in the case of opium there is evidence that its use through many generations makes consumers immune to its evil effects, and that the power of restricting its use within the limits of moderation appears to be an hereditary habit acquirable by an entire nationality. That this immunity, as in the case of snake-charmers' traditional immunity to cobra poison, was an observed fact familiar to the Indian mind can easily be conceived, which strengthens Mr Penzer's explanation of the origin of the legend of his poison-damsels.

I have now trespassed more than enough on Mr Penzer's kindness and on the space allotted for this Foreword.
therefore conclude with again congratulating him on his success in honouring my old friend's magnum opus by the preparation of this edition with such competent and, at the same time, such reverent hands.

_George A. Grierson._

_Camberley, Sept. 2, 1924._
CONTENTS

BOOK III: LĀVĀNAKA

CHAPTER XV

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Author's Preface</td>
<td>xxi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Invocation</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M(ain story)</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11. Story of the Clever Physician</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M. Cont.</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12. Story of the Hypocritical Ascetic</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M. Cont.</td>
<td>5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18. Story of Unmādinī</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M. Cont.</td>
<td>8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14. Story of the Loving Couple who died of Separation</td>
<td>9</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M. Cont.</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15. Story of Puṇyasena</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M. Cont.</td>
<td>11</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16. Story of Sunda and Upasunda</td>
<td>18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M. Cont.</td>
<td>14</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

CHAPTER XVI

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>M. Cont.</td>
<td>20</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17. Story of Kunti</td>
<td>23</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M. Cont.</td>
<td>24</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

CHAPTER XVII

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>M. Cont.</td>
<td>84</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18. Story of Urvaśī</td>
<td>84</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
##CHAPTER XVII—continued

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>M. Cont.</th>
<th>36</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>19. Story of Vihitasena</td>
<td>36</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M. Cont.</td>
<td>37</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20. Story of Somaprabhā</td>
<td>39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M. Cont.</td>
<td>44</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21. Story of Ahalyā</td>
<td>45</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M. Cont.</td>
<td>46</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

##CHAPTER XVIII

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>M. Cont.</th>
<th>49</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>22. Story of Vidūshaka</td>
<td>54</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M. Cont.</td>
<td>80</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

##CHAPTER XIX

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>M. Cont.</th>
<th>84</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>23. Story of Devadāsa</td>
<td>86</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M. Cont.</td>
<td>88</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

##CHAPTER XX

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>M. Cont.</th>
<th>95</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>24. Story of Phalabhūti</td>
<td>95</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24A. Kuvalayāvalī and the Witch Kālarātri</td>
<td>99</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24AA. The Birth of Kārttikeya</td>
<td>100</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24A. Kuvalayāvalī and the Witch Kālarātri</td>
<td>108</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24B. Sundaraka and the Witches</td>
<td>105</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24A. Kuvalayāvalī and the Witch Kālarātri</td>
<td>111</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24. Story of Phalabhūti</td>
<td>112</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>M. Cont.</td>
<td>115</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
CONTENTS

BOOK IV: NARAVĀHANADATTAJANANA

CHAPTER XXI

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>125</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>125</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>129</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>182</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>183</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>184</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

CHAPTER XXII

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>M. Cont.</th>
<th>27. Story of Jimūtavāhana</th>
<th>27A. Jimūtavāhana’s Adventures in a former Birth</th>
<th>27. Story of Jimūtavāhana</th>
<th>27B. The Dispute about the Colour of the Sun’s Horses</th>
<th>M. Cont.</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>187</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>188</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>141</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>150</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>150</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>158</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>156</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

CHAPTER XXIII

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>M. Cont.</th>
<th>28. Story of Sinhaparākrama</th>
<th>M. Cont.</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>159</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>160</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

BOOK V: CHATURDĀRIKĀ

CHAPTER XXIV

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Invocation</th>
<th>M. Cont.</th>
<th>29. Story of the Golden City</th>
<th>29A. Śiva and Mādhava</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>170</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>170</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>171</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>175</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
THE OCEAN OF STORY

CHAPTER XXIV—continued

| 29. Story of the Golden City | 184 |
| 29b. The Iniquity of Scandal | 185 |
| 29. Story of the Golden City | 186 |

CHAPTER XXV

| 29. Story of the Golden City | 188 |
| 29c. Aṣokadatta and Vijayadatta | 196 |
| 29. Story of the Golden City | 213 |

CHAPTER XXVI

| 29. Story of the Golden City | 217 |
| 29d. Devadatta the Gambler | 231 |
| 29. Story of the Golden City | 236 |
| M. Cont. | 288 |

APPENDIX I

| The Story of Urvaśi and Purūravas | 243 |

APPENDIX II

| Umbrellas | 261 |

APPENDIX III

| Poison-damsels | 278 |

INDEX I—Sanskrit Words and Proper Names

|  | 315 |

INDEX II—General

|  | 337 |
PREFACE

WITH the issue of this second volume of the Ocean of Story I would like to take the opportunity of thanking my many subscribers for their kind support. The appreciative and sympathetic manner in which the reviewers have received the first volume of the work has also been most encouraging.

Subscribers will be pleased to hear that great progress is being made with the subsequent volumes. Volume III is now in the press and Volume IV is well in hand.

It remains but to acknowledge the kind help I have received from so many quarters.

To Sir George Grierson is due special thanks for his most interesting and relevant Foreword. I was particularly gratified when Sir George so kindly consented to write this, as I know how pleased Mr Tawney would have been to have seen the name of his old friend connected with the present edition of his magnum opus.

Dr L. D. Barnett has again read through all my proofs, and has not only given me the advantage of his inexhaustible store of Sanskrit knowledge, but has translated afresh those passages which needed revision, owing either to improved readings in the D. text or to omissions made by Mr Tawney himself.

Mr C. Fenton has also been through the proofs from the general point of view, and his microscopic eye has detected many errors which I had passed unnoticed. In addition to which his knowledge of Central American ancient history and mythology has been particularly helpful, especially in portions of the “Poison-damsel” appendix.

xxi
THE OCEAN OF STORY

To the list of names already given in my Introduction to Volume I, I would add those of Mr H. Balfour, Professor Henri Cordier, Dr M. Gaster, Rev. A. S. Geden, Mr J. D. Gimlette, Lady Gomme, Mr R. Grant Brown, Mr F. H. Hudleston, Mr Edward Hutton, Professor Julius Jolly, Dr A. B. Keith, Dr D. B. Macdonald, Professor D. S. Margoliouth, Miss Joan Procter, Professor C. G. Seligman, and Mr P. G. Trendell.

N. M. P.

12 Clifton Hill,
St John's Wood, N.W.8,
30th September 1924.
THE

OCEAN OF STORY
BOOK III: LĀVĀNAKA

CHAPTER XV

INVOCATION

HONOUR to the Conqueror of Obstacles whose favour, I ween, even the creator\(^1\) implored, in order that he might accomplish the creation of the world without let or hindrance.

That five-arrowed God of Love conquers the world, at whose command even Śiva trembles, when he is being embraced by his beloved.

[M] Thus having obtained Vāsavadattā, that King of Vatsa gradually became most exclusively devoted to the pleasure of her society. But his prime minister Yaugandharāyaṇa, and his general Rumaṇvat, upheld day and night the burden of his empire. And once upon a time the minister Yaugandharāyaṇa, full of anxiety, brought Rumaṇvat to his house at night and said to him as follows:—“This lord of Vatsa is sprung from the Pāṇḍava race, and the whole earth is his by hereditary descent, as also the city named of the elephant.\(^2\) All these this king has abandoned, not being desirous of making conquests, and his kingdom has so become confined to this one small corner of the earth. For he certainly remains devoted to women, wine and hunting, and he has delegated to us all the duty of thinking about his kingdom. So we by our own intelligence must take such steps as that he shall obtain the empire of the whole earth, which is his by hereditary right. For, if we do this, we shall have exhibited devotion to his cause, and performed our duty as ministers; for everything is accomplished by intellect, and in proof of this listen to the following tale:—

---

\(^1\) I read dhātā for dhāstrā.

\(^2\) I.e. Hastināpura.
11. Story of the Clever Physician

Once on a time there was a king named Mahāsena, and he was attacked by another king far superior to him in power. Then the king’s ministers met together, and in order to prevent the ruin of his interests Mahāsena was persuaded by them to pay tribute to that enemy. And after he had paid tribute that haughty king was exceedingly afflicted, thinking to himself: “Why have I made submission to my enemy?” And his sorrow on that account caused an abscess to form in his vitals, and he was so pulled down by the abscess that at last he was at the point of death. Then a certain wise physician, considering that that case could not be cured by medicine, said falsely to that king: “O King, your wife is dead.” When he heard that, the king fell on the ground, and owing to the excessive violence of his grief the abscess burst of itself. And so the king recovered from his disease, and long enjoyed in the society of that queen the pleasures he desired, and conquered his enemies in his turn.¹

[M] “So, as that physician did his king a good turn by his wisdom, let us also do our king a good turn; let us gain for him the empire of the earth. And in this undertaking our

¹ Here Wilson observes: “The circumstances here related are not without analogies in fact. It is not marvellous, therefore, that we may trace them in fiction. The point of the story is the same as that of the ‘Deux Anglais à Paris,’ a Fabliau.” Webster, Duchess of Malfs, Act IV, sc. 2, tells a similar story:

“A great physician, when the Pope was sick
Of a deep melancholy, presented him
With several sorts of madmen, which wild object,
Being full of change and sport, freed him to laugh,
And so the imposthume broke.”

Cf. Henderson’s Folk-Lore of the Northern Counties, p. 131.—Reference should also be made to the Heptameron, Margaret of Navarre, nouvelle lxii, which treats of “Une femme à l’extremité qui se mit en si grosse colère, voyant son mari qui baisait sa servante, qu’elle recouvrira la santé.” For the English translation see the five-volume edition printed in 1894 for the Society of English Bibliophiles, vol. v, p. 219 et seq. The story was imitated by Noël du Fail de la Hérisse in his Contes d’Eutrapel (ch. v, “De la Goutte”), only adversary is Pradyota, the King of Magadha; for he is a foe in the rear that is always attacking us behind. So we must ask for our sovereign that pearl of princesses, his daughter, named Pādvāvatī. And by our cleverness we will conceal Vāsavadattā somewhere, and setting fire to her house, we will give out everywhere that the queen is burnt. For in no other case will the King of Magadha give his daughter to our sovereign, for when I requested him to do so on a former occasion he answered: ‘I will not give my daughter, whom I love more than myself, to the King of Vatsa, for he is passionately attached to his wife Vāsavadattā.’ Moreover, as long as the queen is alive, the King of Vatsa will not marry anyone else; but if a report is once spread that the queen is burnt, all will succeed. And when Pādvāvatī is secured, the King of Magadha will be our marriage connection, and will not attack us in the rear, but will become our ally. Then we will march to conquer the eastern quarter, and the others in due succession, so we shall obtain for the King of Vatsa all this earth. And if we only exert ourselves, this king will obtain the dominion of the earth, for long ago a divine voice predicted this.”

When Rūmāνvat heard this speech from the great minister

where the hero is called Glaume Esaun de Temiril. In Frere’s Old Deccan Days, p. 217, we read of a quarrel between a blind man and a deaf man, which got so serious that the blind man gave the deaf man a tremendous box on the ear, so violent indeed that it made the deaf man hear. The deaf man returned the blow so hard on the blind man’s face that his eyesight was immediately restored. It is unnecessary to give examples of the extraordinary cases of restoration of sight and hearing which constantly occurred in the Great War. A similar story to that in our text also occurs on p. 36 of this volume.—N.M.P.

1 This ancient kingdom corresponds to the modern districts of Patna, Gayā and Shāhābād in South Bihār. Its great importance in Indian history will be realised when we remember that it was not only the home of Buddhism and Jainism, but also the nucleus of two of the greatest of the Indian empires, the Maurya and the Gupta. Until the sixth century B.C. its capital was Girivṛaja, when its place was taken by Rājagriha, the modern Rājgrī. Further information will be found in Rhys Davids’ Buddhist India, 1905; Cunningham’s Ancient Geography of India, 1871; and the Cambridge History of India, vol. i, 1922.—N.M.P.

2 In the dramatic version (see note 1, p. 21) of this incident Pādvāvatī is described as sister of King Praydota.—N.M.P.
Yaugandharāyaṇa, he feared that the plan would cover them with ridicule, and so he said to him: "Deception practised for the sake of Padmāvatī might some day be the ruin of us both; in proof of this listen to the following tale:—

12. Story of the Hypocritical Ascetic

On the bank of the Ganges there is a city named Mā-kandikā; in that city long ago there was a certain ascetic who observed a vow of silence, and he lived on alms, and, surrounded by numerous other holy beggars, dwelt in a monastery within the precincts of a god's temple where he had taken up his abode. Once, when he entered a certain merchant's house to beg, he saw a beautiful maiden coming out with alms in her hand, and the rascal, seeing that she was wonderfully beautiful, was smitten with love, and exclaimed: "Ah! Ah! Alas!" And that merchant overheard him. Then, taking the alms he had received, he departed to his own house; and then the merchant went there and said to him in his astonishment: "Why did you to-day suddenly break your vow of silence and say what you did?" When he heard that, the ascetic said to the merchant: "This daughter of yours has inauspicious marks; when she marries, you will undoubtedly perish, wife, sons and all. So, when I saw her, I was afflicted, for you are my devoted adherent; and thus it was on your account that I broke silence and said what I did. So place this daughter of yours by night in a basket, on the top of which there must be a light, and set her adrift on the Ganges." The merchant said, "So I will," and went away; and at night he did all he had been directed to do, out of pure fear. The timid are ever unreflecting.

The hermit for his part said at that time to his own pupils: "Go to the Ganges, and when you see a basket floating along with a light on the top of it, bring it here secretly, but you must not open it, even if you hear a noise inside." They said, "We will do so," and off they went;

1 For the amazing austerities of ascetics see Vol. I, p. 79, note 1.—N.M.P.
2 See note on p. 7.—N.M.P.
THE MAID AND THE MONKEY

but before they reached the Ganges, strange to say, a certain prince went into the river to bathe. He, seeing that basket, which the merchant had thrown in, by the help of the light on it, got his servants to fetch it for him, and immediately opened it out of curiosity. And in it he saw that heart-enchanting girl, and he married her, on the spot by the gāndharva ceremony of marriage. And he set the basket adrift on the Ganges, exactly as it was before, putting a lamp on the top of it, and placing a fierce monkey inside it.

The prince having departed with that pearl of maidens, the pupils of the hermit came there in the course of their search, and saw that basket, and took it up and carried it to the hermit. Then he, being delighted, said to them: “I will take this upstairs and perform incantations with it alone, but you must lie in silence this night.” When he had said this, the ascetic took the basket to the top of the monastery and opened it, eager to behold the merchant’s daughter. And then a monkey of terrible appearance sprang out of it, and rushed upon the ascetic, like his own immoral conduct incarnate in bodily form. The monkey in its fury immediately tore off with its teeth the nose of the wicked ascetic, and his ears with its claws, as if it had been a skilful executioner; and in that state the ascetic ran downstairs, and when his pupils beheld him they could with difficulty suppress their laughter. And early next morning everybody heard the story, and laughed heartily; but the merchant was delighted, and his daughter also, as she had obtained a good husband.

[M] “And even as the ascetic made himself ridiculous, so too may we possibly become a laughing-stock, if we employ deceit, and fail after all. For the separation of the king from Vāsavadattā involves many disadvantages.”

1 Cf. Sagas from the Far East, tale xi, pp. 123, 124. Here the crime contemplated is murder, and the ape is represented by a tiger. This story bears a certain resemblance to the termination of “Alles aus einer Erbse,” Kaden’s Unter den Olivenbäumen, p. 22. See also pp. 75 and 220 of the same collection.—In the Pentamerone of Basile (Burton, vol. i, second diversion of the third day, p. 149 et seq.) a princess is set afloat in a box and found by a king, whose wife she eventually becomes. See also Tawney’s Kathākoça, pp. 131-134.—N.M.P.

When Rumanvāt had said this to Yaugandharāyaṇa, the latter answered: “In no other way can we conduct our enterprise successfully, and if we do not undertake the enterprise, it is certain that with this self-indulgent king we shall lose even what territory we have got; and the reputation which we have acquired for statesmanship will be tarnished, and we shall cease to be spoken of as men who show loyalty to their sovereign. For when a king is one who depends on himself for success, his ministers are considered merely the instruments of his wisdom; and in the case of such monarchs you would not have much to do with their success or failures. But when a king depends on his ministers for success, it is their wisdom that achieves his ends, and if they are wanting in enterprise he must bid a long farewell to all hope of greatness.¹ But if you fear the queen’s father Chaṇḍamahāsenā, I must tell you that he and his son and the queen also will do whatever I bid them.”

When Yaugandharāyaṇa, most resolute among the resolute, had said this, Rumanvāt, whose heart dreaded some fatal blunder, again said to him: “Even a discerning prince is afflicted by the pain of being separated from a beloved woman, much more will this King of Vatsa be. In proof of what I say, listen to the following tale:—

13. Story of Unmādinī ²

Once on a time there was a king named Devasena, best of wise men, and the city of Śrāvastī was his capital. And in that city there was a wealthy merchant, and to him there was born a daughter of unparalleled beauty. And that daughter became known by the name of Unmādinī, because everyone who beheld her beauty became mad. Her father, the merchant, thought: "I must not give this daughter of mine to anyone without telling the king, or he may be angry." So he went and said to the king Devasena: "King, I have a daughter who is a very pearl; take her if she finds favour in your eyes."

¹ Literally, a handful of water, such as is offered to the Manes, is offered to Fortune. It is all over with his chance of attaining glory.

² Cf. Sicilianische Märchen, Gonzenbach, vol. i, p. 220. Liebrecht, in note 485 to page 418 of his translation of Dunlop’s History of Fiction, compares this story with one in The Thousand and One Days of a princess of Kashmir, who was so beautiful that everyone who saw her went mad, or pined away. He also mentions an Arabian tradition with respect to the Thracian sorceress Rhodope: “The Arabs believe that one of the pyramids is haunted by a guardian spirit in the shape of a beautiful woman, the mere sight of whom drives men mad.” He refers also to Thomas Moore, The Epicurean, note 6 to ch. vi, and The Adventures of Hatim Tai, translated by Duncan Forbes, p. 18.

When he heard that, the king sent some Brāhmans, his confidential ministers, saying to them: "Go and see if that maiden possesses the auspicious marks 1 or not." The

1 The interpreting of bodily marks is known as sāmudrika, and there are several works on the art. Buddha was said to have possessed thirty-two lucky marks (mahāpurushalakṣaṇa) and eighty minor marks. Thurston tells us (Ethnographic Notes in Southern India, p. 84) that among the Kurubes the bridegroom's father observes certain marks, or "curls," on the head of the proposed bride. If she has one on her forehead it is considered lucky; but the opposite is the case if one is found at the back of the head, or near the right temple.

Among the Pallis (Tamil agriculturists) a "curl" on the forehead is considered as an indication that the girl will become a widow; and one on the back of the head portends the death of the eldest brother of her husband.

The following notes on sāmudrika were kindly obtained for me from Rai Bahadur B. A. Gupta by Mr Enthoven:—

The number of horizontal lines on the forehead indicate years of longevity. If a man has two lines, he will live for forty years or so; if three, he will live for seventy-five years or so; if four, for full hundred years. If while smiling he gets a dimple or depression in his cheeks, he will be a loose character. If his chin is double and broad, he will be strong-willed. If his chin be thin and rounded, he would like to be loved by a woman. If he has very long ears, he will be licentious. If there be a deep horizontal line at the top of the nose, he would like to be authoritative. If he has five whorls at the five tips of his fingers, he will be a princeling; if all the ten fingers have that mark, he will become a sovereign. If a man has a line on the sole of his foot running between his big toe and the second toe, he will get a palanquin. A woman with the little toe overlapping the next one, or if it does not reach the earth, will be morally bad-charactered and will seek many men. If the four fingers of a man when held up against the sun show light through interstices, he is an extravagant person. On the other hand, if he has fat fingers and no interstices, he is a close-fisted man, and likely to be a miser.

As we shall see in a later volume (Chapter XLIII), Naravāhanadatta is recognised as a future emperor by special distinguishing signs "such as the peculiar freckle and other marks."—N.M.P.
ministers said, "We will do so," and went. But when they beheld that merchant's daughter, Unmādinī, love was suddenly produced in their souls, and they became utterly bewildered...When they recovered their senses, the Brāhmans said to one another: "If the king marries this maiden, he will think only of her, and will neglect the affairs of the state, and everything will go to rack and ruin; so what is the good of her?" Accordingly they went and told the king, what was not true, that the maiden had inauspicious marks.

Then the merchant gave that Unmādinī, whom the king had refused, and who in her heart felt a proud resentment at it, to the king's commander-in-chief. When she was in the house of her husband, she ascended one day to the roof, and exhibited herself to the king, who she knew would pass that way. And the moment the king beheld her, resembling a world-bewildering drug employed by the God of Love, distraction seemed to be produced within him. When he returned to his palace, and discovered that it was the same lady he had previously rejected, he was full of regret, and fell violently ill with fever. The commander-in-chief, the husband of the lady, came to him and earnestly entreated him to take her, saying: "She is a slave; she is not the lawful wife of another; or, if it seem fit, I will repudiate her in the temple, then my lord can take her for his own." But the king said to him: "I will not take unto myself another man's wife, and if you repudiate her, your righteousness will be at an end, and you will deserve punishment at my hands." When they heard that, the other ministers remained silent, and the king was gradually consumed by love's burning, and so died.¹

[M] "So that king perished, though of firm soul, being deprived of Unmādinī; but what will become of the lord of Vatsa without Vāsavadattā?" When Yaugandharāyana heard this from Rumanvat, he answered: "Affliction is bravely endured by kings who have their eyes firmly fixed on their duty. Did not Rāma, when commissioned by the gods, who were obliged to resort to that contrivance to kill Rāvaṇa, endure the pain of separation from Queen Sītā?" When he heard this, Rumanvāt said in answer: "Such as Rāma are gods; their souls can endure all things. But the thing is intolerable to men; in proof whereof listen to the following tale:—

¹ See note to next story.—N.M.P.

14. Story of the Loving Couple who died of Separation

There is on this earth a great city rich in jewels, named Mathurā. In it there lived a certain young merchant called Ilāka. And he had a dear wife whose mind was devoted to him alone. Once on a time, while he was dwelling with her, the young merchant determined to go to another country on account of the exigencies of his affairs. And that wife of his wished to go with him. For when a woman is passionately attached to anyone she cannot endure to be separated from him. And then that young merchant set out, having offered the usual preliminary prayer for success in his undertaking, and did not take with him that wife of his, though she had dressed herself for the journey. She, looking after him when he had started, with tears in her eyes, stood supporting herself against the panel of the door of the courtyard. Then, he being out of sight, she was no longer able to endure her grief;
but she was too timid to follow him. So her breath left her body. And as soon as the young merchant came to know of that, he returned, and to his horror found that dear wife of his a corpse, with pale though lovely complexion, set off by her waving locks, like the spirit of beauty that tenants the moon fallen down to earth in the day during her sleep.¹
So he took her in his arms and wept over her, and immediately the vital spirits left his body, which was on fire with the flame of grief, as if they were afraid to remain.² So that

¹ In the original it is intended to compare the locks to the spots in the ² Among the Hindus death was the tenth, and final, stage of love-sickness.

Vātsyāyāna in his Kāma Sūtra (circa A.D. 250) gives the ten stages as follows:—
(1) love of the eyes—i.e. pleasure in seeing the beloved one; (2) attraction and dwelling of the mind; (3) the birth of desire for union; (4) loss of sleep; married couple perished by mutual separation, and therefore we must take care that the king is not separated from the queen.

[M] When he had said this, Rumaṇṭvat ceased, with his mind full of apprehension, but the wise Yaugandharāyaṇa, that ocean of calm resolution, answered him: "I have arranged the whole plan, and the affairs of kings often require such steps to be taken; in proof of it hear the following tale:—

15. Story of Punyasena

There lived long ago in Ujjayinī a king named Punyasena, and once on a time a powerful sovereign came and attacked him. Then his resolute ministers, seeing that that king was hard to conquer, spread everywhere a false report that their own sovereign Punyasena was dead; and they placed him in concealment, and burnt some other man's corpse with all the ceremonies appropriate to a king, and they proposed to the hostile king through an ambassador that, as they had now no king, he should come and be their king. The hostile monarch was pleased and consented, and then the ministers

(5) emaciation; (6) total indifference to other objects; (7) loss of shame; (8) distraction and madness; (9) fainting, and (10) death.

This list was repeated in rather more detail in the Ananga-Ranga; see the Kāma Shastra Society edition, 1885, pp. 87, 88, and my Annotated Bibliography of Sir Richard Burton, pp. 161-173.

In Arabian fiction the favourite stage appears to be the ninth, and nearly every hero faints for love on the slightest provocation. There are, however, cases of death. See the Nights (Burton, vol. v, p. 134), where three unhappy people die through love of each other. Cf. also the story of "The Mad Lover" on p. 138 of the same volume. In Europe the favourite form of the motif was for one of the lovers to die naturally or unintentionally, whereupon the other would either commit suicide or die of grief—the consequence being that they were buried together in the same tomb. See, for example, Decameron, day 4, nova. 1, 5, 7, 8 and 9; Straparola, night 9, nov. 2; Bandello, part i, nov. 33; Heptameron, day 7, nov. 70. Cf. also the ballad of "Fair Margaret and Sweet William" (Percy, Reliques, iii, p. 125) and "Lord Thomas and Fair Annet" (op. cit., iii, p. 284). For numerous imitations of the tale in the Decameron, day 4, nov. 8, reference should be made to Lee, The Decameron, its Sources and Analogues, pp. 140-148.—N.M.P. assembled, accompanied by soldiers, and proceeded to storm his camp. And the enemy’s army being destroyed, Punyasena’s ministers brought him out of concealment, and having recovered their power put that hostile king to death.

[M] “Such necessities will arise in monarchs’ affairs, therefore let us resolutely accomplish this business of the king’s by spreading a report of the queen’s having been burnt.” When he heard this from Yaugandharāyaṇa, who had made up his mind, Rumaṇvat said: “If this is resolved upon, let us send for Gopālaka, the queen’s respected brother, and let us take all our measures duly, after consultation with him.” Then Yaugandharāyaṇa said, “So be it,” and Rumaṇvat allowed himself to be guided, in determining what was to be done, by the confidence which he placed in his colleague.

The next day these dexterous ministers sent off a messenger of their own to bring Gopālaka, on the pretext that his relations longed to see him. And as he had only departed before on account of urgent business, Gopālaka came at the request of the messenger, seeming like an incarnate festival. And the very day he came Yaugandharāyaṇa took him by night to his own house, together with Rumaṇvat, and there he told him of that daring scheme which he wished to undertake, all of which he had before deliberated about together with that Rumaṇvat; and Gopālaka, desiring the good of the King of Vatsa, consented to the scheme, though he knew it would bring sorrow to his sister; for the mind of good men is ever fixed upon duty.

Then Rumaṇvat again said: “All this is well planned; but when the King of Vatsa hears that his wife is burnt he will be inclined to yield up his breath, and how is he to be prevented from doing so? This is a matter which ought to be considered. For though all the usual politic expedients may advantageously be employed, the principal element of sound statecraft is the averting of misfortune.”
Then Yaugandharāyaṇa, who had reflected on everything that was to be done, said: "There need be no anxiety about this, for the queen is a princess, the younger sister of Gopālaka, and dearer to him than his life, and when the King of Vatsa sees how little afflicted Gopālaka is, he will think to himself, 'Perhaps the queen may be alive after all,' and so will be able to control his feelings. Moreover, he is of heroic disposition, and the marriage of Padmāvatī will be quickly got through, and then we can soon bring the queen out of concealment."

Then Yaugandharāyaṇa and Gopālaka and Rumaṇvat, having made up their minds to this, deliberated as follows:—"Let us adopt the artifice of going to Lāvānaka with the king and queen, for that district is a border district near the kingdom of Magadha. And because it contains admirable hunting-grounds, it will tempt the king to absent himself from the palace, so we can set the women’s apartments there on fire and carry out the plan 1 on which we have determined. And by an artifice we will take the queen and leave her in the palace of Padmāvatī, in order that Padmāvatī herself may be a witness to the queen’s virtuous behaviour in a state of concealment."

Having thus deliberated together during the night, they all, with Yaugandharāyaṇa at their head, entered the king’s palace on the next day. Then Rumaṇvat made the following representation to the king:—"O King, it is a long time since we have gone to Lāvānaka, and it is a very delightful place; moreover, you will find capital hunting-grounds there, and grass for the horses can easily be obtained. And the King of Magadha, being so near, afflicts all that district. So let us go there for the sake of defending it, as well as for our own enjoyment." And the king, when he heard this, having his mind always set on enjoyment, determined to go to Lāvānaka together with Vāsavadattā.

The next day, the journey having been decided on, and the auspicious hour having been fixed by the astrologers, suddenly the hermit Nārada came to visit the monarch.

He illuminated the region with his splendour as he

---

1 Reading yad hi.
descended from the midst of heaven, and gave a feast to the eyes of all spectators, seeming as if he were the moon come down out of affection towards his own descendants. After accepting the usual hospitable attentions, the hermit graciously gave to the king, who bowed humbly before him, a garland from the Pārijātā tree. And he congratulated the queen, by whom he was politely received, promising her that she should have a son, who should be a portion of Kāma and king of all the Vidyādhāras. And then he said to the King of Vatsa, while Yaugandharāyaṇa was standing by: "O King, the sight of your wife, Vāsavadhātā, has strangely brought something to my recollection. In old time you had for ancestors Yudhishṭhīra and his brothers. And those five had one wife between them, Draupādi by name. And she, like Vāsavadhātā, was matchless in beauty. Then, fearing that her beauty would do mischief, I said to them: 'You must avoid jealousy, for that is the seed of calamities; in proof of it listen to the following tale, which I will relate to you:

16. Story of Sunda and Upasunda

There were two brothers, Asuras by race, Sunda and Upasunda, hard to overcome, inasmuch as they surpassed

---

1 The moon was the progenitor of the Pāṇḍava race.
2 One of the five trees of Paradise.
3 See note at the end of the chapter.—N. M. P.
4 There is a certain resemblance in this story to that of Otus and Ephialtes. See Preller’s Griechische Mythologie, vol. i, p. 81. Cf. also Grohmann's Sagen aus Böhmen, p. 35.—The story of Sunda and Upasunda is found in the Mahābhārata, Book I, sections ccxi-ccxiv (see Roy’s new edition, 1920, vol. i, part iv, pp. 407-418). Here we have the tale in full, and learn how the two brothers went to the Vindhya hills to practise the severest austerities, until their power became so great that the gods grew alarmed. All their schemes to tempt the brothers from their asceticism failed. Finally Brahmā asks the brothers what boon it is they want. They demand knowledge of all weapons and powers of illusion, to be endued with great strength, to assume any form at will, and finally to be immortal. All these demands are granted except the latter, which was denied them because they had performed their great penances only to subdue the three worlds. They are, however, allowed to name some form of death which would practically amount to their being immortal. Thinking it an absolute impossibility for two such loving brothers the three worlds in valour. And Brahmā, wishing to destroy them, gave an order to Viśvakarman,¹ and had constructed a heavenly woman named Tilottamā, in order to behold whose beauty even Śiva truly became four-faced, so as to look four ways at once, while she was devoutly circumambulating him. She, by the order of Brahmā, went to Sunda and Upasunda, while they were in the garden of Kailāsa, in order to seduce them. And both those two Asuras, distracted with love, seized the fair one at the same time by both her arms the moment they saw her near them. And as they were dragging her off in mutual opposition, they soon came to blows, and both of them were destroyed. To whom is not the attractive object called woman the cause of misfortune?

[Ｍ] “‘And you, though many, have one love, Draupadi, therefore you must without fail avoid quarrelling about her. And by my advice always observe this rule with respect to her. When she is with the eldest, she must be considered a mother by the youngest; and when she is with the youngest, she must be considered a daughter-in-law by the eldest.’

to quarrel with each other, they say: “Let us have no fear [of death] then from any created thing, mobile or immobile, in the three worlds, except only from each other.” At first all goes well—from the brothers’ point of view. They subdue the gods, extirpate the Brähman caste, and lead a life of luxury and voluptuousness.

In their misery the Rishis and Siddhas implore Brahmā to aid them. It is at this point that he calls upon the divine architect, Viśvakarman, to construct the celestial maiden, as related in the Ocean of Story. The story is repeated in chapter cxxi, where the two brothers are called Ghaṇṭa and Nighaṇṭa. Here they are described as Dānavas who were trying to impede Prajāpati in his work of creation. The dénouement of this version is weakened by the fact that there are two beautiful things created.

Stories of hostile brothers are of quite common occurrence in Sanskrit literature. See Pārśvanātha, iv, 53 et seq., and vi, 280 et seq.; Dharmakalpadruma, ii, and the story of “The Two Brothers” in Schiefner and Ralston’s Tibetan Tales, p. 279. Bloomfield (Life and Stories of Pārśvanātha, pp. 15, 16) gives short extracts from the above.—N.M.P.

¹ The architect or artist of the gods.
NĀRADA’S ADVICE

Your ancestors, O King, accepted that speech of mine with unanimous consent, having their minds fixed on salutary counsels. And they were my friends, and it is through love for them that I have come to visit you here, King of Vatsa; therefore I give you this advice. Do you follow the counsel of your ministers, as they followed mine, and in a short time you will gain great success. For some time you will suffer grief, but you must not be too much distressed about it, for it will end in happiness.”

After the hermit Nārada, so clever in indirectly intimating future prosperity, had said this duly to the King of Vatsa, he immediately disappeared. And then Yaugandharāyana and all the other ministers, auguring from the speech of that great hermit that the scheme they had in view was about to succeed, became exceedingly zealous about carrying it into effect.
NOTE ON POLYANDRY

For the sake of readers who are unacquainted with the plot of the world’s greatest epic I may, perhaps, be excused for beginning this note with a very brief outline of the events in the first book of the Mahābhārata, which has already been so often quoted in Volume I.

The Mahābhārata, meaning “great poem relating to the Bharatas,” consists of eighteen parvams, or books, made up of about 400,000 verses of eight and eleven syllables each.

The outline of the story up to the polyandrous marriage of Draupadī, mentioned in our text, is as follows:—

There once lived in the country of the Bharatas, in the city of Hastināpura (about sixty miles north-east of the modern Delhi), two princes named Dhṛitarāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu. Their uncle, Bhīṣma, governed the kingdom until they came of age. Legally the eldest brother, Dhṛitarāṣṭra, should have ruled, but he was born blind and so his younger brother took his place. There was also a third brother named Vidura, but as his mother was only a Śūdra woman he could not succeed. Dhṛitarāṣṭra married Gāndhāri, the daughter of King Subala of Gāndhāra.

Pāṇḍu had two wives, Pṛithā, or Kuntī, and Mādri, daughter of the King of Mādra. After a series of most successful campaigns Pāṇḍu retired with his wives to the Himālayas, leaving the reins of government in the hands of his blind brother, and his uncle Bhīṣma as regent.

Both brothers had sons by supernatural birth. Dhṛitarāṣṭra had a hundred sons, called Kauravas, or Kuru princes, while Pāṇḍu had but five—three from Kuntī, named Yudhishṭhira, Bhīma and Arjuna, and two from Mādri, who were twins, Nakula and Sahadeva.

While the five princes were still but children, their father Pāṇḍu died as the result of the fulfilment of a curse. On hearing of this misfortune Dhṛitarāṣṭra took his brother’s wives and children under his care, and brought up the latter with his own hundred sons. Owing to the general superiority in all feats of strength of the Pāṇḍu princes, inordinate jealousy of their cousins finally led to Arjuna and his brothers leaving Hastināpura. They lived at Ekācakrā, disguised as mendicant Brāhmans. From there they went to the Court of King Drupada, whose beautiful daughter Draupadī was about to hold her svayamvara (marriage by choice). Only the man who could perform a certain great feat in archery could win her. All Dhṛitarāṣṭra’s sons tried and failed, and Arjuna alone succeeded in fulfilling the conditions of the contest.

We now come to the incident which is supposed to have caused the polyandrous marriage of Draupadī.

The five Pāṇḍus returned to their mother with Draupadī, and she, thinking they had merely brought back alms, called out from within the house: “Share the gift between you.” This command of a parent was law, and accordingly Arjuna informed Drupada that he and his four brothers were going to have his daughter in common. The king was taken aback, and begged the brothers not to commit an act that was sinful and opposed both to usage and the Vedas. At this juncture the illustrious Rishi Vyāsa appears and, by relating the supernatural history of both the Pāṇḍus and Draupādī herself, shows that in reality the five Pāṇḍus originated in a single divine being. Thus the proposed marriage was not really polyandrous, and so could be consummated without breach of propriety or transgression against the sacred Vedas. Examples of similar marriages in the past are quoted, and finally the marriage takes place.

This brings us to the consideration of the practice of polyandry, which is the subject of this note.

From the above story it is clear that the practice was regarded with disfavour by the Aryans. If it did occur, it was necessary to explain it away, or to prove that it was not a true case of polyandry. In fact the practice can be described as non-Aryan. It was certainly non-Vedic, and was strongly opposed by the Brāhmans.

On the other hand, it was not denounced in the Sūtras, though we must not infer from this that the Pāṇḍus lived before they were composed.

Polyandry was practised by both the Tibetans and Dravidians, and this fact has often been brought forward to explain the reference to the polyandrous marriage in the Mahābhārata. It has been suggested that, as the Pāṇḍus were themselves a northern hill tribe or family, probably they were really polyandrous, and needed no excuse. The Pāṇḍavas were of the Kshatriya caste and enjoyed the lowest forms of marriage sanctioned by Manu; thus they would have little scruple in imitating the practices of the peoples they conquered, especially as the number of their own women was bound to be very limited. The subject is an interesting one, especially when we remember that in modern times the practice is almost entirely confined to the Indian Empire and Tibet.

In speaking of any form of human marriage it is as well to explain the exact scope of the terms employed. For instance, the word polygamy is now used as a generic term to include all forms of marriage which are non-monogamic, and not merely that form in which a single husband has more than one wife.

There are three distinct forms of polygamy:

1. Polygyny, where one man has more than one wife.
2. Polyandry, where one woman has more than one husband.
3. Communal- or group-marriage, in which there is more than one husband and more than one wife in a single household.

In a true case of polyandry, therefore, the woman must be married to more than one husband, and not merely have one husband and several lovers. In India it is not so easy as it may appear to ascertain whether a woman is properly married or not. We have already seen that in various localities dēvadāsis are married (Vol. I, App. IV) to idols, knives, drums, etc., and in making up their statistical tables, reporters of the Census of India were in considerable doubt as to how to classify them.

Among the Nairs or Nāyars of Travancore, Cochin and Malabar, marriage may mean either the formal ceremony of tying a tilī round the neck of a girl, known as tālikaṭṭu; or the ceremony of actual alliance as husband and wife, known as sambandham.
THE OCEAN OF STORY

For an interesting account of polyandry in Malabar, reference should be made to M. Longworth Dames’ translation of the Book of Duarte Barbosa, published for the Hakluyt Society, 1918, 1921, vol. ii, pp. 40, 40n3, 42, 42n1, 43, 59, 59n2, 60, 61n4. The passages are most ably annotated by Dames, and many useful references are given.

Although polyandry can be described as non-existent among the Nāyars of to-day (except perhaps in certain remote country parts), its prevalence has been repeatedly testified by travellers and missionaries from the fifteenth century onwards. The two distinct marriage ceremonies have always existed, but the significance of the second has apparently greatly changed. The tālikaṭṭu took place (and still does) before the girl attains puberty, and the āṭāli is tied by a mock bridegroom. The second ceremony was a kind of official leave for the girl to cohabit with any Brāhman or Nāyar she chose.
Such men were in no way related; consequently this system of polyandry, if so it can be called, is known as non-fraternal.

The more usual variety of polyandry is that in which the woman marries the head of a family of brothers, the younger ones sharing the marital rights.
This “fraternal polyandry” is still found widely disseminated in Tibet and the neighbouring Himalayan regions, as well as among the Todas of the Nilgiri hills. Full references and adequate accounts of polyandry in these regions, as well as evidence from the Pacific Islands, and isolated cases in Africa and elsewhere, have been collected and admirably presented by Westermarck in his History of Human Marriage, fifth edition, 1921, vol. iii, chapters xxix and xxx.

Thus there is no need for repetition here. It will suffice to enumerate briefly the different suggestions put forward to explain polyandry and to add any fresh reference of importance.

We will take fraternal polyandry first. The most usual explanation given is excess of males over females. This has been found to exist in most localities where polyandry occurs—viz. Siberia, Turkestan, Tibet, Mongolia, North and Central Bhutan, on the Sikkim-Bengal frontier, among the Todas and in Coorg in South India. It has also been noticed in the New Hebrides, the Bismarck Archipelago, the Hawaiian Islands and New Caledonia.

Some of the other possible causes of polyandry may be looked for in the factors which have produced this shortage of women.

For the 1921 Census of India the following causes of the low proportion of females to males in the Indian Empire were suggested as a basis for inquiry:—

1. Infanticide.
5. Hard treatment accorded to women, especially widows.

The reports showed that the two commonest causes of paucity of females were Nos. 3 and 4. Infanticide was rare, although its practice in former times in such provinces as the Panjāb and Bombay may still have effect in the low female birth-rate.

In Eastern Bengal and the Central India Agency the hard life of the women has also to be taken into account, while in Travancore, where the women are well cared for both before and after marriage, the sole cause of the excess of males is that their mortality is increasingly small.

There are, however, other reasons for a general scarcity of women, which are not at first apparent. For instance, polygyny of the richer classes may lead to polyandry among the poorer families. In many countries a wife is an expensive luxury, and consequently the brothers club together to meet the cost.

There are still other factors to be considered. Polyandry of the fraternal variety strengthens family ties, and keeps the property intact.

Among the pastoral tribes of Tibet and Southern India a man will wander for months on end with his flocks, leaving his brothers and co-husbands in charge of their common wife.

When considering non-fraternal polyandry none of these factors applies, and we have to look for other reasons to explain the practice as formerly found among the Nāyars.

It cannot be said that they are in a stage of development only a little further advanced than promiscuity, because, on the contrary, they are considerably more highly civilised than the neighbouring castes who do not practise polyandry.

The explanation probably lies in the history of the Nāyars. They were originally a military caste, and as such adhered to a system of polity incompatible with the then existing marriage state. The men never lived in the same houses as the women with whom they consorted, and inheritance ran through the mother. Burton, in his first published work, Goa and the Blue Mountains, 1851, p. 218 et seq., drew attention to this very point: “The domestic ties, always inconvenient to a strictly military population, were thereby [the Brahmaic adoption of the Matriarchal inheritance] conveniently weakened, and the wealth, dignity and unbroken unity of interests were preserved for generations unimpaired in great and powerful families, which, had the property been divided among the several branches, according to the general practice of Hinduism, would soon have lost their weight and influence. As it was unnecessary that a woman should be removed from her home, or introduced into a strange family, the eldest nephew on the sister’s side, when he became the senior male member of the household, succeeded, as a matter of course, to the rights, property and dignity of Karnovun [head of the house].”

For other suggested origins of the non-fraternal polyandry reference should be made to Westermarck, op. cit., vol. iii, pp. 198-206.

In conclusion, I would quote a short passage from his summary on p. 206:

“To explain in full why certain factors in some cases give rise to polyandry and in other cases not is as impossible as it often is to say exactly why one people is monogamous and another people polygynous. But, generally speaking, there can be little doubt that the main reason why polyandry is not more commonly practised is the natural desire in most men to be in exclusive possession of their wives.”—N.M.P.
CHAPTER XVI

THEN Yaugandharāyaṇa and the other ministers [M] managed to conduct the King of Vatsa with his beloved, by the above-mentioned stratagem, to Lāvānaka. The king arrived at that place, which, by the roar of the host echoing through it, seemed, as it were, to proclaim that the ministers’ object would be successfully attained. And the King of Magadha, when he heard that the lord of Vatsa had arrived there with a large following, trembled, anticipating attack. But he, being wise, sent an ambassador to Yaugandharāyaṇa, and that excellent minister, well versed in his duties, received him gladly. The King of Vatsa, for his part, while staying in that place, ranged every day the wide-extended forest for the sake of sport.

One day, the king having gone to hunt, the wise Yaugandharāyaṇa, accompanied by Gopālaka, having arranged what was to be done, and taking with him also Rumanvat and Vasantaka, went secretly to the Queen Vāsavadattā, who bowed at their approach. There he used various representations to persuade her to assist in furthering the king’s interests, though she had been previously informed of the whole affair by her brother. And she agreed to the proposal, though it inflicted on her the pain of separation. What, indeed, is there which women of good family, who are attached to their husbands, will not endure? Thereupon the skilful Yaugandharāyaṇa made her assume the appearance of a Brāhman woman, having given her a charm which enabled her to change her shape. And he made Vasantaka one-eyed, and like a Brāhman boy, and as for himself, he in the same way assumed the appearance of an old Brāhman. Then that mighty-minded one took the queen, after she had assumed that appearance, and, accompanied by Vasantaka, set out leisurely for the town of Magadha. And so Vāsavadattā left her house and went in bodily presence along the road, though she wandered in spirit to her husband. Then Rumaṇvat burned her pavilion with fire, and exclaimed aloud: “Alas! alas! the queen and Vasantaka are burnt.”¹ And so in that place there arose to heaven at the same time flames and lamentation; the flames gradually subsided; not so the sound of weeping.

Then Yaugandharāyaṇa, with Vāsavadattā and Vasantaka, reached the city of the King of Magadha, and seeing the Princess Padmāvatī in the garden he went up to her with those two, though the guards tried to prevent him. And Padmāvatī, when she saw the Queen Vāsavadattā in the dress of a Brāhmaṇ woman, fell in love with her at first sight. The princess ordered the guards to desist from their opposition, and had Yaugandharāyaṇa, who was disguised as a Brāhmaṇ, conducted into her presence. And she addressed to him this question: “Great Brāhmaṇ, who is this girl you have with you, and why are you come?” And he answered her: “Princess, this is my daughter, Āvantikā by name, and her husband, being addicted to vice,² has deserted her and fled somewhere or other. So I will leave her in your care, illustrious lady, while I go and find her husband and bring him back, which will be in a short time. And let this one-eyed boy, her brother, remain here near her, in order that she may not be grieved at having to remain alone.” He said this to the princess, and she granted his request, and, taking leave of the queen, the good minister quickly returned to Lāvānaka.

² This is literally true. The king was addicted to the śyāsana, or vice, of hunting.

Then Padmāvatī took with her Vāsavadattā, who was passing under the name of Āvantikā, and Vasantaka, who accompanied her in the form of a one-eyed boy; and showing her excellent disposition by her kind reception and affectionate treatment of them, entered her splendidly adorned palace; and there Vāsavadattā, seeing Sītā in the history of Rāma represented upon the painted walls, was enabled to bear her own sorrow. And Padmāvatī perceived that Vāsavadattā was a person of very high rank, by her shape, her delicate softness, the graceful manner in which she sat down and ate, and also by the smell of her body, which was fragrant as the blue lotus, and so she entertained her with luxurious comfort to her heart’s content, even such as she enjoyed herself. And she thought to herself: “Surely she is some distinguished person remaining here in concealment; did not Draupadī remain concealed in the palace of the King of Virāṭa?” Then Vāsavadattā, out of regard to the princess, made for her unfading garlands and forehead-streaks, as the

1 The painting would represent Sītā in a cave in Lāṅkā guarded by female demons. She had been abducted by Rāvana, and, on her refusing to become his wife, had been confined in the cave, where she was patiently waiting for Rāma to rescue her. See Book III of the Rāmāyaṇa. —N.M.P.

2 The seclusion of ladies of high rank and the continual use of cosmetics after the bath would doubtless give a perfume to the skin which would require continued disuse to entirely eradicate. At a Brāhman wedding the bride is only allowed to use scented soaps provided they contain no animal fats. —N.M.P.

3 We are told in the text that Vāsavadattā had learned this art from the King of Vatsa. It will be remembered that he, in his turn, had acquired the art from the snake Vasunemi, whom he had rescued from a Śavara (see Vol. I, p. 100). The reference, therefore, must be to the tikīti, or spangles worn by Hindu women of good caste, and not merely to the tilaka, or caste marks, already mentioned in Vol. I, p. 69 and 69a.

The name tikīti is derived from tikā, which means a mark on the forehead made in an initiation ceremony. The basis of the tikīti is vermillion, which is smeared on lac-clay, while above it a piece of mica or glass is attached as an additional ornament.

Russell describes them, and gives a plate of twenty-four specimens in King of Vatsa had previously taught her; and Padmāvatī’s mother, seeing her adorned with them, asked her privately who had made those garlands and streaks. Then Padmāvatī said to her: “There is dwelling here in my house a certain lady of the name of Āvantikā; she made all these for me.” When her mother heard that she said to her: “Then, my daughter, she is not a woman: she is some goddess, since she possesses such knowledge; gods and also hermits remain in the houses of good people for the sake of deluding them, and in proof of this listen to the following anecdote:—

17. Story of Kuntī

There was once a king named Kuntibhoja; and a hermit of the name of Dūrvāsas, who was exceedingly fond of deluding people, came and stayed in his palace. He colour in his Tribes and Castes of the Central Provinces (vol. iv, pp. 106-110). He says that the ākli is worn in the Hindustāni districts and not in the south. Women from Rājputāna, such as the Mārwāri Bañias and Bañjāras, wear large spangles set in gold, with a border of jewels as well, if they can afford it. Thus it will be seen that considerable art in making and designing ākli can be achieved.

The ākli forms part of the sohāg or lucky trousseau. It is made chiefly by the Lakheras and Patwas in the Jubbulpore, Betūl, Raipur and Saugor districts of the Central Provinces. It is affixed to the girl’s forehead at her marriage and is worn until her husband’s death. It appears that sometimes unmarried girls also wear small ornamental spangles. Another constituent of the sohāg is sindūr, or vermilion, which is not usually worn if a ākli has already been affixed. The reason for this is that, as we have seen above, the basis of the ākli is vermilion. Thus we can look upon the ākli as a later development of the smear of vermilion. In some cases the bride and bridegroom mark each other with red lead, while the custom of mixing or exchanging blood prevails among certain Bengal tribes. It is interesting to note that in Brittany the bridegroom sucks a drop of blood from an incision made below the bride’s left breast (see F. C. Conybeare, “A Brittany Marriage Custom,” Folk-Lore, vol. xviii, p. 448, 1907).

Evidence seems to point to the fact that all these uses of vermilion or red lead are later survivals of the original blood rite by which a woman was received into her husband’s clan. This explanation has not, however, found universal acceptance, and Westermarck (History of Human Marriage, vol. iii, pp. 446-448) considers that the colour red is used in marriage rites in circumstances which do not allow us to presume that the use of it is the survival of an earlier practice of using human blood. Although he does not advance proof to the contrary, he gives a large number of useful references to articles commissioned his own daughter Kunti to attend upon the hermit, and she diligently waited upon him. And one day he, wishing to prove her, said to her: "Cook boiled rice with milk and sugar quickly while I bathe, and then I will come and eat it." The sage said this and bathed quickly, and then he came to eat it, and Kunti brought him the vessel full of that food; and then the hermit, knowing that it was almost red-hot with the heated rice, and seeing that she could not hold it in her hands, cast a look at the back of Kunti, and she, perceiving what was passing in the hermit's mind, placed the vessel on her back; then he ate to his heart's content, while Kunti's back was being burned, and because, though she was terribly burnt, she stood without being at all discomposed, the hermit was much pleased with her conduct, and after he had eaten granted her a boon.

[M] "So the hermit remained there, and in the same way this Avantikā, who is now staying in your palace, is some on the use of red in wedding rites. I hope to include a note on the colour red in a later volume.

In conclusion I would quote from the writings of W. Crooke. In a paper on the "Hill Tribes of the Central Indian Hills" (Journ. Anth. Inst., 1899, p. 240 et seq.), he mentions a case of marriage by capture in which a Bhuyār girl wrestles with a youth as he applies vermilion to her hair. After discussing other modes of marriage he says: "More obvious still is the motive of the blood covenant. Here we can observe the stages of the degradation of custom from the use of blood drawn from the little finger of the husband which is mixed with betel and eaten by the bride among some of the Bengal tribes (Risley, Tribes and Castes of Bengal, ii, pp. 189, 201). The next stage comes among the Kurmis, where the blood is mixed with lac dye. Lastly come the rites, common to all these tribes, by which the bridegroom, often in secrecy, covered by a sheet, rubs vermilion on the parting of the girl's hair, and the women relations smear their toes with lac dye—all palpable degradations of the original blood rite. That the rite is sacramental is clearly shown by the fact that the widow after her husband's death solemnly washes off the red from her hair or flings the little box in which she keeps the colouring matter into running water."

The whole subject is very interesting, and opens up a field for much anthropological research.—N.M.P.

1 I read hastagrahāyogyaṃ for the āhastagrahāyogyaṃ of Dr Brockhaus.
distinguished person; therefore endeavour to conciliate her." When she heard this from the mouth of her mother, Padmāvatī showed the utmost consideration for Vāsavadattā, who was living disguised in her palace. And Vāsavadattā for her part, being separated from her lord, remained there pale with bereavement, like a lotus in the night. But the various boyish grimaces which Vasantaka exhibited, again and again called a smile into her face.

In the meanwhile the King of Vatsa, who had wandered away into very distant hunting-grounds, returned late in the evening to Lāvānaka. And there he saw the women’s apartments reduced to ashes by fire, and heard from his ministers that the queen was burnt, with Vasantaka. And when he heard it, he fell on the ground, and he was robbed of his senses by unconsciousness, that seemed to desire to remove the painful sense of grief. But in a moment he came to himself, and was burnt with sorrow in his heart, as if penetrated with the fire that strove to consume the image of the queen imprinted there.

Then overpowered with sorrow he lamented, and thought of nothing but suicide; but a moment after he began to reflect, calling to mind the following prediction:—"From this queen shall be born a son who shall reign over all the Vidyādhāras. This is what the hermit Nārada told me, and it cannot be false. Moreover, that same hermit warned me that I should have sorrow for some time. And the affliction of Gopālaka seems to be but light. Besides, I cannot detect any excessive grief in Yaugandharāyaṇa and the other ministers, therefore I suspect the queen may possibly be alive. But the ministers may in this matter have employed a certain amount of politic artifice, therefore I may some day be reunited with the queen. So I see an end to this affliction."

1 The flower closes when the sun sets.
2 To keep up his character as a Brāhman boy.
3 I read dāhaishipā.
4 This suspicion of Udayana seems to rather weaken the plot. In the Śapna-vāsavadatta the king is made to believe that not only Vāsavadattā but also Yaugandharāyaṇa have been burnt to death. Thus the dénouement is considerably strengthened.—N.M.P.
Thus reflecting, and being exhorted by his ministers, the king established in his heart self-control. And Gopālaka sent off a private messenger immediately, without anyone’s knowing of it, to his sister, to comfort her, with an exact report of the state of affairs. Such being the situation in Lāvānaka, the spies of the King of Magadha, who were there, went off to him and told him all. The king, who was ever ready to seize the opportune moment, when he heard this, was once more anxious to give to the King of Vatsa his daughter Padmāvatī, who had before been asked in marriage by his ministers. Then he communicated his wishes with respect to this matter to the King of Vatsa, and also to Yaugandharāyaṇa. And by the advice of Yaugandharāyaṇa the King of Vatsa accepted the proposal, thinking to himself that perhaps this was the very reason why the queen had been concealed.

Then Yaugandharāyaṇa quickly ascertained an auspicious moment, and sent to the sovereign of Magadha an ambassador, with an answer to his proposal, which ran as follows:—“Thy desire is approved by us, so on the seventh day from this the King of Vatsa will arrive at thy court to marry Padmāvatī, in order that he may quickly forget Vāsavadattā.” This was the message which the great minister sent to that king. And that ambassador conveyed it to the King of Magadha, who received him joyfully.

Then the lord of Magadha made such preparations for the joyful occasion of the marriage as were in accordance with his love for his daughter, his own desire and his wealth; and Padmāvatī was delighted at hearing that she had obtained the bridegroom she desired; but when Vāsavadattā heard that news she was depressed in spirit. That intelligence, when it reached her ear, changed the colour of her face, and assisted the transformation effected by her disguise. But Vasantaka said: “In this way an enemy will be turned into a friend, and your husband will not be alienated from you.” This speech of Vasantaka’s consoled her like a confidante, and enabled her to bear up.

Then the discreet lady again prepared for Padmāvatī unfading garlands and forehead-streaks, both of heavenly beauty, as her marriage was now nigh at hand; and when the seventh day from that arrived, the monarch of Vatsa actually came there with his troops, accompanied by his ministers, to marry her. How could he, in his state of bereavement, have ever thought of undertaking such a thing, if he had not hoped in that way to recover the queen? And the King of Magadha immediately came with great delight to meet him (who was a feast to the eyes of the king's subjects), as the sea advances to meet the rising moon.

Then the monarch of Vatsa entered that city of the King of Magadha, and at the same time great joy entered the minds of the citizens on every side. There the women beheld him fascinating the mind, though his frame was attenuated from bereavement, looking like the God of Love deprived of his wife Rati.

Then the King of Vatsa entered the palace of the lord of Magadha, and proceeded to the chamber prepared for the marriage ceremony, which was full of women whose husbands were still alive. In that chamber he beheld Padmāvatī adorned for the wedding, surpassing with the full moon of her face the circle of the full moon. And seeing that she had garlands and forehead-streaks such as he himself only could make, the king could not help wondering where she got them. Then he ascended the raised platform of the altar, and his taking her hand there was a commencement of his taking the tribute of the whole earth. The smoke of the altar dimmed his eyes with tears, as supposing that he could not bear to witness the ceremony, since he loved Vāsavadattā so much. Then the face of Padmāvatī, reddened with circumambulating the fire, appeared as if full of anger on account of her perceiving what was passing in her husband's mind.

When the ceremony of marriage was completed, the King of Vatsa let the hand of Padmāvatī quit his, but he never even for a moment allowed the image of Vāsavadattā to be absent from his heart. Then the King of Magadha gave him jewels in such abundance that the earth seemed to be deprived

---

1 This applies also to the God of Love, who bewilders the mind.
2 Kara means "hand," and also "tribute."
of her gems, they all having been extracted. And Yaugandharāyaṇa, calling the fire to witness on that occasion, made the King of Magadha undertake never to injure his master. So that festive scene proceeded, with the distribution of garments and ornaments, with the songs of excellent minstrels and the dancing of dancing-girls. In the meanwhile Vāsavadattā remained unobserved, hoping for the glory of her husband, appearing to be asleep, like the beauty of the moon in the day.

Then the King of Vatsa went to the women’s apartments, and the skilful Yaugandharāyaṇa, being afraid that he would see the queen, and that so the whole secret would be divulged, said to the sovereign of Magadhā: "Prince, this very day the King of Vatsa will set forth from thy house." The King of Magadhā consented to it, and then the minister made the very same announcement to the King of Vatsa, and he also approved of it.

Then the King of Vatsa set out from that place, after his attendants had eaten and drunk, together with his ministers, escorting his bride Padmāvatī. And Vāsavadattā, ascending a comfortable carriage sent by Padmāvatī, with its great horses also put at her disposal by her, went secretly in the rear of the army, making the transformed Vasantaka precede her. At last the King of Vatsa reached Lāvānaka, and entered his own house, together with his bride, but thought all the time only of the Queen Vāsavadattā. The queen also arrived, and entered the house of Gopālaka at night, making the chamberlains wait round it. There she saw her brother Gopālaka, who showed her great attention, and she embraced his neck, weeping, while his eyes filled with tears; and at that moment arrived Yaugandharāyaṇa, true to his previous agreement, together with Rumanvat, and the queen showed him all due courtesy.

---

1 I read eva for eva.
2 It seems unnecessary to add "with its great horses," and this is explained by the reading of the Durgāprasād text, where we find tan mahattara-kaṭṭī instead of tanmahātura-gaṭṭī, thus meaning that attendants of high rank were put at her disposal. See Speyer, "Studies about the Kathāsaritsaṅgara," Verh. Kon. Akad. Weten. Amt., viii, No. 5, 1908, p. 97.
THE REUNION

And while he was engaged in dispelling the queen’s grief, caused by the great effort she had made and her separation from her husband, those chamberlains repaired to Pādmāvatī and said: “Queen, Āvantikā has arrived, but she has in a strange way dismissed us, and gone to the house of Prince Gopālaka.” When Pādmāvatī heard that representation from her chamberlains she was alarmed, and in the presence of the King of Vatsa answered them: “Go and say to Āvantikā: ‘The queen says: ‘You are a deposit in my hands, so what business have you where you are? Come where I am.’’”

When they heard that they departed, and the king asked Pādmāvatī in private who made for her the unfading garlands and forehead-streaks. Then she said: “It is all the product of the great artistic skill of the lady named Āvantikā, who was deposited in my house by a certain Brāhman.”

No sooner did the king hear that than he went off to the house of Gopālaka, thinking that surely Vāsavadattā would be there. And he entered the house, at the door of which eunuchs were standing, and within which were the queen, Gopālaka, the two ministers and Vasantaka. There he saw Vāsavadattā returned from banishment, like the orb of the moon freed from its eclipse. Then he fell on the earth delirious with the poison of grief, and trembling was produced in the heart of Vāsavadattā. Then she too fell on the earth with limbs pale from separation, and lamented aloud, blaming her own conduct. And that couple, afflicted with grief, lamented so that even the face of Yāugandharāyaṇa was washed with tears.

And then Pādmāvatī too heard that wailing, which seemed so little suited to the occasion, and came in a state of bewilderment to the place whence it proceeded. And gradually finding out the truth with respect to the king and Vāsavadattā, she was reduced to the same state; for good women are affectionate and tender-hearted. And Vāsavadattā frequently exclaimed with tears: “What profit is there in my life that causes only sorrow to my husband?" Then the calm Yaugandharāyaṇa said to the King of Vatsa: "King, I have done all this in order to make you universal emperor, by marrying you to the daughter of the sovereign of Magadha, and the queen is not in the slightest degree to blame; moreover this, her rival wife, is witness to her good behaviour during her absence from you."

1 Reading taddevārasthitamahattaram as one word.—I shall give a long note on Indian eunuchs in a later volume (Chapter XXXIII).—N.M.P.

Thereupon Padmāvatī, whose mind was free from jealousy, said: "I am ready to enter the fire on the spot to prove her innocence." And the king said: "I am in fault, as it was for my sake that the queen endured this great affliction." And Vāsavadattā, having firmly resolved, said: "I must enter the fire to clear from suspicion the mind of the king."

Then the wise Yaugandharāyaṇa, best of right-acting men, rinsed his mouth, with his face towards the east, and spoke a blameless speech: "If I have been a benefactor to this king, and if the queen is free from stain, speak, ye guardians of the world; if it is not so, I will part from my body."¹ Thus he spoke and ceased, and this heavenly utterance was heard: "Happy art thou, O King, that hast for minister Yaugandharāyaṇa, and for wife Vāsavadattā, who in a former birth was a goddess; not the slightest blame attaches to her." Having uttered this the Voice ceased.

All who were present, when they heard that sound, which resounded through all the regions, delightful as the deep thunder roar at the first coming of the rain-clouds, having endured affliction for a long time, lifted up their hands² and plainly imitated peafowl in their joy. Moreover, the King of Vatsa and Gopālaka praised that proceeding of Yaugandharāyaṇa's, and the former already considered that the whole earth was subject to him. Then that king, possessing those two wives, whose affection was every day increased by living with him, like joy and tranquillity come to visit him in bodily form, was in a state of supreme felicity.

¹ See note at the end of this chapter.—N.M.P.
² Here the Durgāprasād text reads utkandharāṇa ca suciram, etc., meaning "with uplifted necks," which is more in keeping with the rest of the simile than "with uplifted hands."—N.M.P.
NOTES ON THE “ACT OF TRUTH” MOTIF IN FOLK-LORE

“If I have been a benefactor to this king, and if the queen is free from stain, speak, ye guardians of the world; if it is not so, I will part from my body” (p. 30).

This is a good example of the “act of truth” motif, to which reference has already be made in Vol. I, pp. 166, 167. As I stated on p. 166, I intend (in a note to Chapter XXXVI) giving examples of the various uses to which the motif can be put, and the numerous ways in which it can be introduced. I shall, therefore, confine myself here to explaining the meaning of the motif and the religious significance attached to the act.

Truth has been regarded all over the world and in all ages as irresistible, as something possessing a power which even gods cannot spurn, and from which the wicked shrink in terror. The deities of the Jew, the Christian and the Mohammedan are regarded as acting in accordance with truth—one might almost say as being the personification of truth in its widest sense. No wonder, then, that the utterance of a simple truth was considered sufficiently powerful to cause miracles to take place. For instance, we read in 2 Kings i, 10-12: “And Elijah answered and said to the captain of fifty, If I be a man of God, then let fire come down from heaven, and consume thee and thy fifty. And there came down fire from heaven, and consumed him and his fifty.”

It lies at the background of the magic art of primitive peoples and is still used in some form or other among the most civilised countries. We have all heard a man in expressing surprise, or in making a resolution, begin with the words “as sure as my name’s so-and-so . . .” This is a form of oath introduced by a statement of absolute truth, thus lending power to what follows.

It is obvious what a useful motif the “act of truth” can become in the hands of the story-teller. The hero or heroine is in a tight corner and suddenly, as a deus ex machina, an “act of truth” saves the situation. It is as sudden and unexpected as the use of the dohada motif (see Vol. I, pp. 221-228) when a woman suddenly demands some jewel, fruit or animal, which at once starts an entirely fresh series of adventures, when the dutiful husband sets out on his journeys to procure the desired article.

The word sachchakiriyā, or simply kiriya, is used to express an “act of truth” in Pali, but satyādhishthanām (“truth-command”) and satyavādyā (“truth-utterance”) are also found. For fuller details see Burlingame, Journ. Roy. Asiatic. Soc., July 1917, p. 429 et seq., to whose article I am indebted for much of the information contained in my notes on this motif.

Owing to the omnipotence of truth we are not surprised to find that a direct appeal to its great power is not a casual action, but a formality of considerable religious importance. In the present text of the Ocean of Story we read that Yaugandharāyaṇa “rinsed his mouth, with his face towards the east, and spoke a blameless speech.” Thus before making his sachchakiriyā he performed distinct religious acts—firstly he turns in the direction in which all Brāhmans turn at sunrise, read the Vedas and make their daily offerings, and secondly he undergoes a form of purification. He is then in a fit state to invoke the great power of truth to his aid.

The actual form of the act differs considerably—thus in one instance, when the Buddha was in a previous existence as a quail, before making his “act of truth,” he ponders deeply on the Buddhas of the past and their great powers and achievements. In another instance a king and queen, wishing to cross rivers dryshod, meditate on the virtues of the Buddha, the Law and the Order. Numerous other examples could be given. There is no necessity for the truth to refer to good actions, qualities or resolutions. It can, on the contrary, have reference to the very opposite. A man may affirm he is a liar and a scoundrel of the deepest dye, a woman may state she is the lowest kind of prostitute—it matters not, as long as it is the absolute truth—and as a result their power will be temporarily as great as the mightiest king or most righteous Brähman.

The locus classicus of the “act of truth” is one of the dialogues of King Milinda and the Buddhist sage Nāgasena (Milindapañha, 119-123). The king inquires whether Nāgasena’s statement that Śivi received Heavenly Eyes is not inconsistent with the Scriptural statement that the Heavenly Eye cannot be produced after the destruction of the physical cause. Nāgasena explains that it was the power of truth that caused the restoration of Śivi’s eyesight, and continues as follows:—

“But, your Majesty, is there such a thing in the world as Truth, by which truth-speakers perform an Act of Truth?—Yes, reverend sir, there is in the world such a thing as Truth. By Truth, reverend Nāgasena, truth-speakers perform an Act of Truth, and by this means cause rain, extinguish fire, counteract poison, and do all manner of other things besides that have to be done.

—Well then, your Majesty, the two statements are perfectly consistent and harmonious. King Śivi received Heavenly Eyes by the power of Youth: by the power of Truth, your Majesty, on no other basis, is the Heavenly Eye produced; the Truth alone was in this case the basis for the production of the Heavenly Eye.

“The case was precisely the same, your Majesty, as when accomplished persons recite a Truth, saying, ‘Let a mighty cloud send down rain’; and immediately upon their recitation of the Truth, a mighty cloud sends down rain. Your Majesty, is there stored up in the sky any cause of rain, by which the mighty cloud sends down rain?—Of course not, reverend sir; the Truth alone is in this case the cause whereby the mighty cloud sends down rain. —In precisely the same manner, your Majesty, no ordinary cause operated in the case in question; the Truth alone was in that case the basis for the production of the Heavenly Eye.

“It was precisely the same, your Majesty, as when accomplished persons recite a Truth, saying, ‘Let the mighty mass of flaring, flaming fire turn back’; and immediately upon their recitation of the Truth, the mighty mass of flaring, flaming fire turns back. . . . It was precisely the same as when accomplished persons recite a Truth, saying, ‘Let the deadly poison become an antidote’; and immediately upon their recitation of the Truth the deadly poison becomes an antidote. Your Majesty, is there stored up in this deadly poison any cause whereby it immediately becomes an antidote?—Of course not, reverend sir; the Truth alone is in this case the cause of the immediate counteraction of the deadly poison.—In precisely the same manner, your Majesty, in the case of King Śivi, the Truth alone, to the exclusion of any ordinary cause, was the basis for the production of the Heavenly Eye” (Burlingame’s translation, pp. 437, 438 of Journ. Roy. As. Soc., op. cit.).

In conclusion Nāgasena gives instances of the “act of truth” causing the ocean to roll back, and a river to flow backwards.—N.M.P.
CHAPTER XVII

The next day the King of Vatsa, sitting in private [M] with Vāsavadattā and Padmāvatī, engaged in a festive banquet, sent for Yuagandharāyana, Gopālaka, Rumaṇvāt and Vasantaka, and had much confidential conversation with them. Then the king, in the hearing of them all, told the following tale, with reference to the subject of his separation from his beloved:—

18. Story of Urvasī ¹

Once on a time there was a king of the name of Purūravas, who was a devoted worshipper of Vishnu; he traversed heaven as well as earth without opposition, and one day, as he was sauntering in Nandana, the garden of the gods, a certain Apsaras of the name of Urvasī, who was a second stupefying weapon ² in the hands of Love, cast an eye upon him. The moment she beheld him, the sight so completely robbed her of her senses that she alarmed the timid minds of Rambhā and her other friends. The king too, when he saw that torrent of the nectar of beauty, was quite faint with thirst, because he could not obtain possession of her. Then Vishnu, who knoweth all, dwelling in the sea of milk, gave the following command to Nārada, an excellent hermit, who came to visit him: “O divine sage, ³ the King Purūravas, at present abiding in the garden of Nandana, having had his mind captivated by Urvasī, remains incapable of bearing the pain of separation from his love. Therefore go, O hermit, and, informing Indra as from me, cause that Urvasī to be ¹ This interesting story, dating back to Rig-Veda days, is fully treated in Appendix I of this volume, see pp. 245-259.—N.M.P.

² This, with the water weapon, and that of whirlwind, is mentioned in the Rāmāyana and the Utrara Rāma Charita.
³ Or Devarshi, belonging to the highest class of Rishis or patriarchal saints.
quickly given to the king.” Having received this order from Vishṇu, Nārada undertook to execute it, and going to Purūravas, who was in the state described, roused him from his lethargy and said to him: “Rise up, O King; for thy sake I am sent here by Vishṇu, for that god does not neglect the sufferings of those who are unfeignedly devoted to him.” With these words, the hermit Nārada cheered up Purūravas, and then went with him into the presence of the king of the gods.

Then he communicated the order of Vishṇu to Indra, who received it with reverent mind, and so the hermit caused Urvaśī to be given to Purūravas. That gift of Urvaśī deprived the inhabitants of heaven of life, but it was to Urvaśī herself an elixir to restore her to life. Then Purūravas returned with her to the earth, exhibiting to the eyes of mortals the wonderful spectacle of a heavenly bride. Thenceforth those two, Urvaśī and that king, remained, so to speak, fastened together by the leash of gazing on one another, so that they were unable to separate. One day Purūravas went to heaven, invited by Indra to assist him, as a war had arisen between him and the Dānavas. In that war the King of the Asuras, named Māyādhara, was slain, and accordingly Indra held a great feast, at which all the nymphs of heaven displayed their skill.¹ And on that occasion Purūravas, when he saw the nymph Rambhā performing a dramatic dance called chalīta,² with the teacher Tumburu standing by her, laughed. Then Rambhā said to him sarcastically: “I suppose, mortal, you know this heavenly dance, do you not?” Purūravas answered: “From associating with Urvaśī, I know dances which even your teacher Tumburu does not know.” When Tumburu heard that, he laid this curse on him in his wrath: “Mayest thou be separated from Urvaśī until thou propitiate Kṛishṇa.” When he heard that curse, Purūravas went and told Urvaśī what had happened to him, which was terrible as “a thunderbolt from the blue.” Immediately some Gandharvas swooped down, without the king seeing them, and carried off Urvasī, whither he knew not. Then Purūravas, knowing that the calamity was due to that curse, went and performed penance to appease Viṣṇu in the hermitage of Badarikā.

¹ Durgāprasād reads pranṛtta instead of pravṛtta, thus the translation would be: “where the Apsarases executed their dances.”—N.M.P.
² This dance is mentioned in Act I of the Mālavikāgnimitra.

But Urvasī, remaining in the country of the Gandharvas, afflicted at her separation, was as void of sense as if she had been dead, asleep, or a mere picture. She kept herself alive with hoping for the end of the curse, but it is wonderful that she did not lose her hold on life, while she remained like the female chakravāka during the night, the appointed time of her separation from the male bird. And Purūravas propitiated Viṣṇu by that penance, and, owing to Viṣṇu having been gratified, the Gandharvas surrendered Urvasī to him. So that king, reunited to the nymph whom he had recovered at the termination of the curse, enjoyed heavenly pleasures, though living upon earth.

[M] The king stopped speaking, and Vāsavadattā felt an emotion of shame at having endured separation, when she heard of the attachment of Urvasī to her husband.

Then Yaugandharāyaṇa, seeing that the queen was abashed at having been indirectly reproved by her husband, said, in order to make him feel in his turn ¹: “King, listen to this tale, if you have not already heard it:

19. Story of Vihitasena

There is on this earth a city of the name of Timirā, the dwelling of the Goddess of Prosperity; in it there was a famous king named Vihitasena; he had a wife named Tejovatī, a very goddess upon earth. That king was ever hanging on her neck, devoted to her embraces, and could not even bear that his body should be for a short time scratched with the coat of mail. And once there came upon the king ¹ The Durgāprasād text makes better sense: “in order to dispel that thought from her mind . . .” See Speyer, op. cit., pp. 97-98.—N.M.P.

SAVED BY SHOCK

a lingering fever with diminishing intensity; and the physicians forbade him to continue in the queen’s society. But when he was excluded from the society of the queen, there was engendered in his heart a disease not to be reached by medicine or treatment. The physicians told the ministers in private that the disease might relieve itself by fear or the stroke of some affliction. The ministers reflected: “How can we produce fear in that brave king, who did not tremble when an enormous snake once fell on his back, who was not confused when a hostile army penetrated into his harem? It is useless thinking of devices to produce fear; what are we ministers to do with the king?” Thus the ministers reflected, and after deliberating with the queen, concealed her, and said to the king: “The queen is dead.” While the king was tortured with that exceeding grief, in his agitation that disease in his heart relieved itself. ¹ When the king had got over the pain of the illness, the ministers restored to him that great queen, who seemed like a second gift of ease, and the king valued her highly as the saviour of his life, and as too wise to bear anger against her afterwards for concealing herself.

[M] “For it is care for a husband’s interests that entitles a king’s wife to the name of queen; by mere compliance with a husband’s whims the name of queen is not obtained. And discharging the duty of minister means undivided attention to the burden of the king’s affairs, but the compliance with a king’s passing fancies is the characteristic of a mere courtier. Accordingly we made this effort in order to come to terms with your enemy, the King of Magadha, and with a view to your conquering the whole earth. So it is not the case that the queen, who, through love for you, endured intolerable separation, has done you a wrong; on the contrary she has conferred on you a great benefit.”

When the King of Vatsa heard this true speech of his prime minister, he thought that he himself was in the wrong, and was quite satisfied. And he said: "I know this well enough, that the queen, like Policy incarnate in bodily form, acting under your inspiration, has bestowed upon me the dominion of the earth. But that unbecoming speech which I uttered was due to excessive affection. How can people whose minds are blinded with love bring themselves to deliberate calmly?" 1 With such conversation that King of Vatsa brought the day and the queen’s eclipse of shame to an end.

¹ Literally, “broke.” The ṣrāḍhi or disease must have been of the nature of an abscess.

On the next day a messenger sent by the King of Magadha, who had discovered the real state of the case, came to the sovereign of Vatsa, and said to him as from his master: "We have been deceived by thy ministers, therefore take such steps as that the world may not henceforth be to us a place of misery."

When he heard that, the king showed all honour to the messenger, and sent him to Padmāvatī to take his answer from her. She, for her part, being altogether devoted to Vāsavadattā, had an interview with the ambassador in her presence. For humility is an unfailing characteristic of good women. The ambassador delivered her father’s message: "My daughter, you have been married by an artifice, and your husband is attached to another, thus it has come to pass that I reap in misery the fruit of being the father of a daughter." But Padmāvatī thus answered him: "Say to my father from me here: 'What need of grief? For my husband is very indulgent to me, and the Queen Vāsavadattā is my affectionate sister, so my father must not be angry with my husband, unless he wishes to break his own plighted faith and my heart at the same time.'"

When this becoming answer had been given by Padmāvatī, the Queen Vāsavadattā hospitably entertained the ambassador and then sent him away. When the ambassador had departed, Padmāvatī remained somewhat depressed with regret, calling to mind her father’s house. Then Vāsavadattā ordered Vasantaka to amuse her, and he came near, and with that object proceeded to tell the following tale:—

1 "Amare et sapere vix deo conceditur" (Publius Syrus).
20. Story of Somaprabhā

There is a city, the ornament of the earth, called Pāṭaliputra,¹ and in it there was a great merchant named Dharmagupta. He had a wife named Chandraprabhā, and she once on a time became pregnant, and brought forth a daughter beautiful in all her limbs. That girl, the moment she was born, illuminated the chamber with her beauty, spoke distinctly,² and got up and sat down. Then Dharmagupta, ¹ This great city (the modern Patna) was built about 482 B.C., and became the capital of Aśoka, the first emperor of India (274-236 B.C.). It was known at this time as Pāṭaliputta, which the Greek ambassador, Megasthenes, corrupted to Palibothra. As the great Buddhist centre, Aśoka enriched the city with magnificent temples and works of art of every kind. Its foundation is ascribed by Buddhists to Kālāsoka, although nothing definite can be said on this point.

The most curious fact connected with Pāṭaliputra is that from the seventh to eighteenth centuries A.D. its site seems to have been entirely lost, and many fantastic tales arose about its early history. One of these crept into the pages of Somadeva, as we have already seen (Vol. I, p. 18 et seq.).

In 1878 the Government Archaeological Survey of India reported that Pāṭaliputra must have stood near the modern Patna, but have been long since swept away by the Ganges. This theory, however, was disproved in 1898 by the discovery of extensive ruins at Patna by Waddell and Spooner. The meaning of Pāṭaliputra is still uncertain. It is said to signify the “city of flowers,” but this is the meaning of Kusumapura, another name for Pāṭaliputra. (See the story of Harasvāmin in Book V, Chapter XXIV, and the twenty-second vampire story in Chapter XCVI of the Ocean of Story.) Waddell considers it to mean simply the “son of Pāṭali,” from the old seaport at the mouth of the Indus. See D. B. Spooner, “The Zoroastrian Period of Indian History,” Journ. Roy. As. Soc., 1915, p. 63 et seq.; L. A. Waddell, Discovery of the Lost Site of Pāṭaliputra, 1892; and Report on the Excavations of Pāṭaliputra (Patna), 1903.—N.M.P.

² Liebrecht in an essay on some modern Greek songs (Zur Volkskunde, p. 211) gives numerous stories of children who spoke shortly after birth. It appears to have been generally considered an evil omen. Cf. the “Romance of Merlin” (Dunlop’s History of Fiction, p. 146). See also Baring Gould’s Curious Myths of the Middle Ages (new edition, 1869), p. 170. In a startling announcement of the birth of Antichrist which appeared in 1623, purporting to come from the brothers of the Order of St John, the following passage occurs:—“The child is dusky, has pleasant mouth and eyes, teeth pointed like those of a cat, ears large, stature by no means exceeding that of other children; the said child, incontinent on his birth, walked and talked perfectly well.” —See Crooke, “The Legends of Krishṇa,” Folk-Lore, Vol. xi, 1900, p. 10.—N.M.P.
seeing that the women in the lying-in chamber were astonished and terrified, went there himself in a state of alarm. And immediately he asked that girl in secret, bowing before her humbly: "Adorable one, who art thou that art thus become incarnate in my family?" She answered him: "Thou must not give me in marriage to anyone; as long as I remain in thy house, father, I am a blessing to thee; what profit is there in inquiring further?" When she said this to him, Dharmagupta was frightened, and he concealed her in his house, giving out abroad that she was dead.

Then that girl, whose name was Somaprabhā, gradually grew up with human body, but celestial splendour of beauty. And one day a young merchant, of the name of Guhachandra, beheld her, as she was standing upon the top of her palace, looking on with delight at the celebration of the spring festival; she clung like a creeper of love round his heart, so that he was, as it were, faint,¹ and with difficulty got home to his house. There he was tortured with the pain of love, and when his parents persistently importuned him to tell them the cause of his distress, he informed them by the mouth of a friend.

Then his father, whose name was Guhasena, out of love for his son, went to the house of Dharmagupta to ask him to give his daughter in marriage to Guhachandra. Then Dharmagupta put off Guhasena when he made the request, desiring to obtain a daughter-in-law, and said to him: "The fact is, my daughter is out of her mind."² Considering that he meant by that to refuse to give his daughter, Guhasena returned home, and there he beheld his son prostrate by the fever of love, and thus reflected: "I will persuade the king to move in this matter, for I have before this conferred an obligation on him, and he will cause that maiden to be given to my son, who is at the point of death." Having thus determined, the merchant went and presented to the king a splendid jewel, and made known to him his desire. The king, for his part, being well disposed towards him, commissioned the head of the police to assist him, with whom he went to the house of Dharmagupta, and surrounded it on all sides with troops,\(^1\) so that Dharmagupta’s throat was choked with tears, as he expected utter ruin.

¹ In the Durgāprasād text we find that he was faint "because his heart was hit, as it were, by love's arrow."—N.M.P.

² It seems curious that, after publicly declaring that his daughter died at birth, he should now say she was alive, but mad. The Durgāprasād text reads kuto and mūḍhetai instead of 'arthato and mūḍhā 'iti, making the meaning, "Whence can I have a daughter, fool!" which makes much better sense, and is, moreover, more in accordance with the rest of the tale.—N.M.P.

Then Somaprabhā said to Dharmagupta: “Give me in marriage, my father; let not calamity befall you on my account; but I must never be treated as a wife\(^2\) by my husband, and this agreement you must make in express terms with my future father-in-law.” When his daughter had said this to him, Dharmagupta agreed to give her in marriage, after stipulating that she should not be treated as a wife\(^3\); and Guhasena, with inward laughter, agreed to the condition, thinking to himself: “Only let my son be once married.” Then Guhachandra, the son of Guhasena, went to his own house, taking with him his bride Somaprabhā. And in the evening his father said to him: “My son, treat her as a wife, for who abstains from the society of his own wife?”\(^4\)

When she heard that, the bride Somaprabhā looked angrily at her father-in-law, and whirled round her threatening forefinger, as it were the decree of death. When he saw that finger of his daughter-in-law, the breath of that merchant immediately left him, and fear came upon all besides. But Guhachandra, when his father was dead, thought to himself: “The goddess of death has entered into my house as a wife.” And thenceforth he avoided the society of that wife, though she remained in his house, and so observed a vow difficult as that of standing on the edge of a sword. And being inly consumed by that grief, losing his taste for all enjoyment, he made a vow and feasted Brāhmans every day. And that wife of his, of heavenly beauty, observing strict silence, used always to give a fee to those Brāhmans after they had eaten.

---

\(^1\) More literally, “blockaded his house with troops and his throat with tears.”—The Durgāprāśād text reads asubhiḥ, “with his breath.”—N.M.P.

\(^2\) Literally, “I must never be bedded by my husband.”—N.M.P.

\(^3\) Literally, “bedded.”—N.M.P.

\(^4\) Literally, “put this bride to bed, for who will not lie with his wife.”—N.M.P.
One day an aged Brähman, who had come to be fed, beheld her exciting the wonder of the world by her dower of beauty; then the Brähman, full of curiosity, secretly asked Guhachandra: "Tell me who this young wife of yours is." Then Guhachandra, being importuned by that Brähman, told him with afflicted mind her whole story. When he heard it, the excellent Brähman, full of compassion, gave him a charm for appeasing the fire, in order that he might obtain his desire. Accordingly, while Guhachandra was in secret muttering that charm, there appeared to him a Brähman from the midst of the fire. And that god of fire in the shape of a Brähman said to him, as he lay prostrate at his feet: "To-day I will eat in thy house, and I will remain there during the night. And after I have shown thee the truth with respect to thy wife, I will accomplish thy desire." When he had said this to Guhachandra, the Brähman entered his house. There he ate like the other Brähmans, and lay down at night near Guhachandra for one watch of the night only, such was his unwearying zeal. And at this period of the night Somaprabhā, the wife of Guhachandra, went out of the house of her husband, all the inmates of which were asleep. At that moment the Brähman woke up Guhachandra, and said to him: "Come, see what thy wife is doing."

And by magic power he gave Guhachandra and himself the shape of bees, and going out he showed him that wife of his, who had issued from the house. And that fair one went a long distance outside the city, and the Brähman with Guhachandra followed her. Thereupon Guhachandra saw before him a Nyagrodha tree of wide extent, beautiful with its shady stem, and under it he heard a heavenly sound of singing, sweet with strains floating on the air, accompanied with the music of the lyre and the flute. And on the trunk

---

1 So in the twenty-first of Miss Stokes' Indian Fairy Tales the fakir changes the king's son into a fly. Cf. also Veckenstedt's Wendische Sagen, p. 127.
2 Ficus Indica. Such a tree is said to have sheltered an army. Its branches take root and form a natural cloister. Cf. Milton's Paradise Lost, Book IX, line 1000 et seq.
of the tree he saw a heavenly maiden,¹ like his wife in appearance, seated on a splendid throne, eclipsing by her beauty the moonbeam, fanned with white chowries, like the goddess presiding over the treasure of all the moon’s beauty. And then Guhachandra saw his wife ascend that very tree and sit down beside that lady, occupying half of her throne. While he was contemplating those two heavenly maidens of equal beauty sitting together, it seemed to him as if that night were lighted by three moons.²

Then he, full of curiosity, thought for a moment: “Can this be sleep or delusion? But away with both these suppositions! This is the expanding of the blossom from the bud of association with the wise, which springs on the tree of right conduct, and this blossom gives promise of the appropriate fruit.” While he was thus reflecting at his leisure, those two celestial maidens, after eating food suited for such as they were, drank heavenly wine. Then the wife of Guhachandra said to the second heavenly maiden: “To-day some glorious Brāhman has arrived in our house, for which reason, my sister, my heart is alarmed and I must go.” In these words she took leave of that other heavenly maiden and descended from the tree. When Guhachandra and the Brāhman saw that, they returned in front of her, still preserving the form of bees, and arrived in the house by night before she did. And afterwards arrived that heavenly maiden, the wife of Guhachandra, and she entered the house without being observed. Then that Brāhman of his own accord said to Guhachandra: “You have had ocular proof that your wife is divine and not human, and you have to-day seen her sister, who is also divine; and how do you suppose that a heavenly nymph can desire the society of a man? So I will give you a charm to be written up over her door, and I will also teach you an artifice to be employed outside the house, which must increase the force of the charm. A fire burns even without being fanned, but much more when a strong current of air is brought to bear on it; in the same way a charm will produce the desired effect unaided, but much more readily when assisted by an artifice."

¹ Grimm in his Teutonic Mythology (translation by Stallybrass, p. 121, note) connects the description of wonderful maidens sitting inside hollow trees, or perched on the boughs, with tree-worship. See also Grohmann’s Sagen aus Böhmen, p. 41.

² For the illuminating power of female beauty see note 3 to the first tale in Miss Stokes’ collection, where parallels are cited from the folk-lore of Europe and Asia.

When he had said this, the excellent Brähman gave a charm to Guhachandra, and instructed him in the artifice, and then vanished in the dawn. Guhachandra for his part wrote it up over the door of his wife's apartment, and in the evening had recourse to the following stratagem calculated to excite her affection. He dressed himself splendidly and went and conversed with a certain courtesan before her eyes. When she saw this, the heavenly maiden, being jealous, called to him with voice set free by the charm, and asked him who that woman was. He answered her falsely: "She is a courtesan who has taken a fancy to me, and I shall go and pay her a visit\(^1\) to-day." Then she looked at him askance with wrinkled brows, and, lifting up her veil with her left hand,\(^2\) said to him: "Ah! I see: this is why you are dressed up so grandly; do not go to her, what have you to do with her? Lie with me, for I am your wife." When he had thus been implored by her, agitated with excitement, as if she were possessed, though that evil demon which held her had been expelled by the charm, he was in a state of ecstatic joy, and he immediately entered into her chamber with her, and enjoyed, though a mortal, celestial happiness not conceived of in imagination. Having thus obtained her as a loving wife, conciliated by the magic power of the charm, who abandoned for him her celestial rank, Guhachandra lived happily ever after.

[M] "Thus heavenly nymphs, who have been cast down by some curse, live as wives in the houses of righteous men,

---

1 Literally, "I go to her house."—N.M.P.

2 Reading nirñyā (as in the Durgāprasad text) instead of vidñyā we get much better sense—"retaining him with her left hand."—N.M.P.
as a reward for their good deeds, such as acts of devotion and charity.\(^1\) For the honouring of gods and Brāhmans is considered the wishing-cow\(^2\) of the good. For what is not obtained by that? All the other politic expediens, known as conciliation and so on, are mere adjuncts.\(^3\) But evil actions are the chief cause of even heavenly beings, born in a very lofty station, falling from their high estate, as a hurricane is the cause of the falling of blossoms.” When he had said this to the princess, Vasantaka continued: “Hear moreover what happened to Ahalyā:

21. Story of Ahalyā\(^4\)

Once upon a time there was a great hermit named Gautama, who knew the past, the present and the future. And he had a wife named Ahalyā, who in beauty surpassed the nymphs of heaven. One day Indra, in love with her beauty, tempted her in secret; for the mind of rulers, blinded with power, runs towards unlawful objects.

And she in her folly encouraged that husband of Śachī, being the slave of her passions; but the hermit Gautama

---

\(^1\) The Durgāprasād reading differs slightly and means “sacrifices, acts of charity and the like.” See Špeyer, op. cit., p. 99.—N.M.P.

\(^2\) Kāmadhenu means a cow granting all desires; such a cow is said to have belonged to the sage Vaśishṭa.

\(^3\) Conciliation, bribery, sowing dissension, and war.

\(^4\) There are several versions of this tale. One of them in the Rāmāyaṇa (see Griffith’s metrical translation, vol. i, 1870, pp. 211-216) describes Ahalyā as being herself deceived, as Indra takes the form of her husband. Another story is that Indra was assisted in his designs by Soma (the moon), who, disguised as a cock, crowed at midnight. The unsuspecting Gautama left his bed and started his early morning devotions, while Indra immediately took his place. The morals of Indra were never above suspicion, but by the time of the Epics he had degenerated into nothing more than a “debonair debauchee.” In the Vedic age he is a god of the people, the champion of the fighting man, a kind of Hindu Zeus. For the gradual changing and explanation of the attributes of Indra see L. D. Barnett, Hindu Gods and Heroes, “Wisdom of the East” Series, 1922, pp. 26-34, 74, etc. See also Bloomfield, Vedic Concordance, under “Ahāleyāśī,” p. 150; ditto, Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., vol. lvi, p. 7; V. Fausböll, Indian Mythology according to the Mahābhārata, 1903, pp. 88-92; and A. A. Macdonell, A History of Sanskrit Literature, 1909, pp. 84-87, etc.—N.M.P.
found out the intrigue by his superhuman power, and arrived upon the scene. And Indra immediately assumed, out of fear, the form of a cat. Then Gautama said to Ahalyā: "Who is here?" She answered her husband ambiguously in the Prakrit dialect: "Here forsooth is a cat"—so managing to preserve verbal truth. Then Gautama said, laughing: "It is quite true that your lover is here"—and he inflicted on her a curse, but ordained that it should terminate, because she had showed some regard for truth. The curse ran as follows:—"Harlot,\(^2\) take for a long time the nature of a stone, until thou behold Rāma wandering in the forest." And Gautama at the same time inflicted on the god Indra the following curse:—"A thousand pictures of that which thou has desired shall be upon thy body, but when thou shalt behold Tilottamā, a heavenly nymph, whom Viśvakarman shall make, they shall turn into a thousand eyes." When he had pronounced this curse, the hermit returned to his austerities according to his desire, but Ahalyā for her part assumed the awful condition of a stone.\(^3\) And Indra immediately had his body covered with representations of the female pudenda\(^4\); for to whom is not immorality a cause of humiliation?

[M] "So true is it that every man's evil actions always bear fruit in himself, for whatever seed a man sows, of that he reaps the fruit. Therefore persons of noble character never desire that which is disagreeable to their neighbours, for this is the invariable observance of the good, prescribed

---

1 The Prakrit word majjāo means "a cat" and also "my lover."
2 Literally, "woman of bad character."—N.M.P.
3 For numerous references to stone metamorphoses see Chauvin, Bibliographie des Ouvrages Arabes, vi, 58.—N.M.P.
4 In some accounts Gautama repented of his curse and himself turned the marks into a thousand eyes. Another legend states that Indra obtained his numerous eyes in his eagerness to see as much as possible of the wonderful Tilottamā. We have already seen how Śiva became four-faced owing to the same cause (p. 14). Here the two stories seem rather muddled.—N.M.P.
by divine law. And you two were sister goddesses in a former birth, but you have been degraded in consequence of a curse, and accordingly your hearts are free from strife and bent on doing one another good turns."

When they heard this from Vasantaka, Vāsavadattā and Padmāvatī dismissed from their hearts even the smallest remnants of mutual jealousy. But the Queen Vāsavadattā made her husband equally the property of both, and acted as kindly to Padmāvatī as if she were herself, desiring her welfare.

When the King of Magadha heard of that so great generosity of hers from the messengers sent by Padmāvatī, he was much pleased. So on the next day the minister Yaugandharāyaṇa came up to the King of Vatsa in the presence of the queen, the others also standing by, and said: "Why do we not go now to Kauśāmbi, my prince, in order to begin our enterprise, for we know that there is nothing to be feared from the King of Magadha, even though he has been deceived? For he has been completely gained over by means of the negotiation termed 'Giving of a daughter': and how could he make war and so abandon his daughter, whom he loves more than life? He must keep his word; moreover he has not been deceived by you; I did it all myself; and it does not displease him; indeed I have learned from my spies that he will not act in a hostile way, and it was for this very purpose that we remained here for these days."

While Yaugandharāyaṇa, who had accomplished the task he had in hand, was speaking thus, a messenger belonging to the King of Magadha arrived there, and entered into the palace immediately, being announced by the warden, and after he had done obeisance he sat down, and said to the King of Vatsa: "The King of Magadha is delighted with the intelligence sent by the Queen Padmāvatī, and he now sends this message to your Highness: 'What need is there of many words? I have heard all, and I am pleased with thee. Therefore do the thing for the sake of which this beginning has been made; we submit ourselves.'" The King of Vatsa joyfully received this clear speech of the messenger, resembling the blossom of the tree of policy planted by Yaugandharāyaṇa. Then he brought Padmāvatī with the queen and, after he had bestowed a present upon the messenger, he dismissed him with honour.

Then a messenger from Chaṇḍamahāsena also arrived, and, after entering, he bowed before the king, according to custom, and said to him: "O King, his Majesty Chaṇḍamahāsena, who understands the secrets of policy, has learnt the state of thy affairs and delighted sends this message: 'Your Majesty's excellence is plainly declared by this one fact, that you have Yaugandharāyaṇa for your minister; what need of further speeches? Blessed too is Vāsavādattā, who, through devotion to you, has done a deed which makes us exalt our head for ever among the good; moreover Padmāvatī is not separated from Vāsavādattā in my regard, for the two have one heart; therefore quickly exert yourself.'"

When the King of Vatsa heard this speech of his father-in-law's messenger, joy suddenly arose in his heart, and his exceeding warmth of affection for the queen was increased, and also the great respect which he felt for his excellent minister. Then the king, together with the queens, entertained the messenger according to the laws of hospitality, in joyful excitement of mind, and sent him away pleased; and as he was bent on commencing his enterprise, he determined, after deliberating with his ministers, on returning to Kauśāmbī.
CHAPTER XVIII

So on the next day the King of Vatsa set out from Lāvānaka for Kauśāmbī, accompanied by his wives and his ministers, and as he advanced shouts broke forth from his forces, that filled the plains like the waters of the ocean overflowing out of due time. An image would be furnished of that king advancing on his mighty elephant, if the sun were to journey in the heaven accompanied by the eastern mountain. That king, shaded with his white umbrella, showed as if waited upon by the moon, delighted at having outdone the splendour of the sun. While he towered resplendent above them all, the chiefs circled around him, like the planets in their orbits around the polar star. And those queens, mounted on a female elephant that followed his, shone like the Earth Goddess and the Goddess of Fortune accompanying him out of affection in visible shape. The earth, that lay in his path, dinted with the edges of the hoofs of the troops of his prancing steeds, seemed to bear the prints of loving nails, as if it had been enjoyed by the king.

In this style progressing, the King of Vatsa, being continually praised by his minstrels, reached in a few days the city of Kauśāmbī, in which the people kept holiday. The city was resplendent on that occasion, her lord having returned from sojournings abroad. She was clothed in the red silk of banners, round windows were her expanded eyes,

1 For full details of the history and significance of the umbrella see Appendix II, pp. 263-272—N.M.P.
3 Vātsyāyana devotes a whole chapter in his Kāma Śūtra (Book II, ch. iv) to love-scratching with the finger-nails. He describes eight distinct varieties of scratches, and lists the desirable qualities in finger-nails. As this work is hard to obtain I shall give certain extracts in a note to the “Story of King Sinhāksha” in Book X, Chapter LXVI.—N.M.P.
4 The word pati here means king and husband.
the full pitchers in the space in front of the gates were her two swelling breasts, the joyous shouts of the crowd were her cheerful conversation, and white palaces her smile.¹ So, accompanied by his two wives, the king entered the city, and the ladies of the town were much delighted at beholding him. The heaven was filled with hundreds of faces of fair ones standing on charming palaces, as if with the soldiers of the moon² that was surpassed in beauty by the faces of the queens, having come to pay their respects. And other women, established at the windows, looking with unwinking eyes,³ seemed like heavenly nymphs in aerial chariots, that had come there out of curiosity. Other women, with their long-lashed eyes closely applied to the lattice of the windows, made, so to speak, cages of arrows to confine love. The eager eye of one woman, expanded with desire to behold the king, came, so to speak, to the side of her ear,⁴ that did not perceive him, in order to inform it. The rapidly heaving breasts of another, who had run up hastily, seemed to want to leap out of her bodice⁵ with ardour to behold him. The necklace of another lady was broken with her excitement, and the pearl beads seemed like teardrops of joy falling from her heart. Some women, beholding Vāsavadātā and remembering the former

¹ A smile is always white according to the Hindu poetic canons.
² The countenances of the fair ones were like moons.
³ There should be a mark of elision before nimishekshapāh.
⁴ The eyes of Hindu ladies are said to reach to their ears. I read tadākhyaṭum for tadākhyātaṃ with a MS. in the Sanskrit College, kindly lent me by the Librarian with the consent of the Principal.—See the introductory part of Appendix II ("Collyrium and Kohl") to the Ocean of Story, Vol. I, p. 211 et seq.—N.M.P.
⁵ This is the angia or angiyā worn by the Hindu and Mohammedan women of the north. It is really nothing more than a breast-cloth, being short, tight and usually sleeveless. It is tied behind with strings or ribbons. In Western India it is known as a chōlī, and differs from the angiyā in that it buttons up in front. In Kashmir the kūrtā, a kind of blouse open at the front, is worn instead of the angiyā. Young married women sometimes wear both the kūrtā and angiyā. The Pathān women have two varieties of kūrtās: a coloured and decorated one worn by unmarried girls, and a more sombre one adopted by married women.

Other terms for this bodice are mahrman' and sinaband (breast-cover).—N.M.P.
report of her having been burned, said as if with anxiety: "If the fire were to do her an injury at Lāvānaka, then the sun might as well diffuse over the world darkness, which is alien to his nature." Another lady, beholding Padmāvatī, said to her companions: "I am glad to see that the queen is not put to shame by her fellow-wife, who seems like her friend." And others beholding those two queens, and throwing over them garlands of eyes expanded with joy so as to resemble blue lotuses, said to one another: "Surely Śiva and Vishṇu have not beheld the beauty of these two, otherwise how could they regard with much respect their consorts Umā and Śrī?"

In this way feasting the eyes of the population, the King of Vatsa with the queens entered his own palace, after performing auspicious ceremonies. Such as is the splendour of a lotus-pool in windy weather, or of the sea when the moon is rising, such was at that period the wonderful splendour of the king's palace. And in a moment it was filled with the presents which the feudatories offered to procure good luck, and which foreshadowed the coming in of offerings from innumerable kings. And so the King of Vatsa, after honouring the chiefs, entered with great festivity the inner apartments, at the same time finding his way to the heart of everyone present. And there he remained between the two queens, like the God of Love between Rati and Priti, and spent the rest of the day in drinking and other enjoyments.

The next day, when he was sitting in the hall of assembly accompanied by his ministers, a certain Brāhmaṇ came and cried out at the door: "Protection for the Brāhmaṇs, O King! Certain wicked herdsman have cut off my son's foot in the forest without any reason." When he heard that, the king immediately had two or three herdsman seized and brought before him, and proceeded to question them. Then they gave the following answer:—"O King, being herdsman we roam in the wilderness, and there we have among us a herdsman named Devasena, and he sits in a certain place in

---

1 The Durgāprasād text (in future this will be referred to as the D. text) reads prabhāte, "at daybreak," instead of pravāte, "in windy weather."—N.M.F.
2 Love and Affection, the wives of Kāmadeva, the Hindu Cupid.
the forest on a stone seat, and says to us, 'I am your king,' and gives us orders. And not a man among us disobeys his orders. Thus, O King, that herdsman rules supreme in the wood. Now to-day the son of this Brāhman came that way, and did not do obeisance to the herdsman king, and when we, by the order of the king, said to him, 'Depart not without doing thy reverence,' the young fellow pushed us aside, and went off laughing, in spite of the admonition. Then the herdsman king commanded us to punish the contumacious boy by cutting off his foot. So we, O King, ran after him, and cut off his foot; what man of our humble degree is able to disobey the command of a ruler?" When the herdsmen had made this representation to the king, the wise Yaugandharāyana, after thinking it over, said to him in private: "Certainly that place must contain treasure, on the strength of which a mere herdsman has such influence.\(^1\) So let us go there." When his minister had said this to him, the king made those herdsmen show him the way, and went to that place in the forest with his soldiers and his attendants.

And while, after the ground had been examined, peasants were digging there, a Yaksha, in stature like a mountain, rose up from beneath it, and said: "O King, this treasure, which I have so long guarded, belongs to thee, as having been buried by thy forefathers, therefore take possession of it." After he had said this to the king, and accepted his worship, the Yaksha disappeared, and a great treasure was displayed in the excavation. And from it was extracted a valuable throne studded with jewels,\(^2\) for in the time of prosperity a long series of happy and fortunate events takes place. The lord of Vatsa took away the whole treasure from the spot in high glee, and after chastising those herdsmen returned to his own city. There the people saw that golden throne brought by the king, which seemed, with the streams of rays issuing from its blood-red jewels, to foretell\(^1\) the king's forceful conquest of all the regions, and which, with its pearls fixed on the end of projecting silver spikes, seemed to show its teeth as if laughing again and again when it considered the astonishing intellect of the king's ministers\(^2\); and they expressed their joy in a charming manner, by striking drums of rejoicing, so that they sent forth their glad sounds. The ministers too rejoiced exceedingly, making certain of the king's triumph; for prosperous events happening at the very commencement of an enterprise portend its final success. Then the sky was filled with flags resembling flashes of lightning, and the king like a cloud rained gold on his dependents.

\(^1\) So the mouse in the Paśchalantra possesses power by means of a treasure (Benfey's Paśchalantra, vol. i, p. 320; vol. ii, p. 178). The story is found also in Chapter LXI of this work. Cf. also Sagas from the Far East, pp. 257; 263. The same idea is found in Jātaka, No. 39, p. 322, of Rhys Davids' translation, and in Jātaka, No. 257, vol. ii, p. 297, of Fausböll's edition.

\(^2\) Cf. Sagas from the Far East, p. 263.
THE KING PREPARES FOR CONQUEST

And this day having been spent in feasting, on the morrow Yaugandharāyaṇa, wishing to know the mind of the king of Vatsa, said to him: "O King, ascend and adorn that great throne, which thou hast obtained by inheritance from thy ancestors." But the king said: "Surely it is only after conquering all the regions that I can gain glory by ascending that throne, which those famous ancestors of mine mounted after conquering the earth. Not till I have subdued this widely gemmed earth, bounded by the main, will I ascend the great jewelled throne of my ancestors."\(^3\) Saying this, the king did not mount the throne as yet. For men of high birth possess genuine loftiness of spirit.

Thereupon Yaugandharāyaṇa being delighted said to him in private: "Bravo, my King! So make first an attempt to conquer the eastern region." When he heard that, the king eagerly asked his minister: "When there are other cardinal points, why do kings first march towards the East?" When Yaugandharāyaṇa heard this, he said to him again: "The North, O King, though rich, is defiled by intercourse with barbarians; and the West is not honoured as being the cause of the setting of the sun and other heavenly bodies;

\(^1\) I read darāyat.

\(^2\) Sati is a misprint for mati—Böhtlingk and Roth, s.v.

\(^3\) In the D. text the dialogue of śl. 52-54 is divided somewhat differently. See Speyer, op. cit., p. 99.—N.M.P.
and the South is seen to be neighboured by Rākshasas and inhabited by the God of Death; but in the eastern quarter the sun rises, over the East presides Indra, and towards the East flows the Ganges, therefore the East is preferred.\textsuperscript{1} Moreover among the countries situated between the Vindhyā and Himālaya mountains, the country laved by the waters of the Ganges is considered most excellent. Therefore monarchs who desire success march first towards the East, and dwell, moreover, in the land visited by the river of the gods.\textsuperscript{2} For your ancestors also conquered the regions by beginning with the East, and made their dwelling in Hastinā-pura on the banks of the Ganges; but Satānika repaired to Kauśāmbi on account of its delightful situation, seeing that empire depended upon valour, and situation had nothing to do with it."

When he had said this, Yaugandharāyaṇa stopped speaking; and the king out of his great regard for heroic exploits said: "It is true that dwelling in any prescribed country is not the cause of empire in this world, for to men of brave disposition their own valour is the only cause of success. For a brave man by himself without any support obtains prosperity. Have you never heard, \textit{à propos} of this, the tale of the brave man?" Having said this, the lord of Vatsa, on the entreaty of his ministers, again began to speak, and related in the presence of the queens the following wonderful story:—

22. \textit{Story of Vidūshaka}

In the city of Ujjayinī, which is celebrated throughout the earth, there was in former days a king named Ādityasena. He was a treasure-house of valour, and on account of his sole supremacy his war chariot, like that of the sun,\textsuperscript{3} was not im-

\textsuperscript{1} For a good general article on orientation see T. D. Atkinson, "Points of the Compass," Hastings' Ency. Rel. Eth., vol. x, pp. 73-88. For the extent to which the subject enters into the life of a Brāhman see Mrs Stevenson's \textit{The Rites of the Twice-born}, Oxford, 1920.—N.M.P.

\textsuperscript{2} \textit{i.e.} the Ganges.

\textsuperscript{3} In Sanskrit pratāpa the word translated "valour" also means "heat," and chakra may refer to the wheels of the chariot and the orb of the sun, so that there is a pun all through.
peded anywhere. When his lofty umbrella, gleaming white like snow, illuminated the firmament, other kings free from heat depressed theirs. He was the receptacle of the jewels produced over the surface of the whole earth, as the sea is the receptacle of waters. Once on a time he was encamped with his army on the banks of the Ganges, where he had come for some reason or other. There a certain rich merchant of the country, named Gunaavartman, came to the king, bringing a gem of maidens as a present, and sent this message by the mouth of the warden: "This maiden, though the gem of the three worlds, has been born in my house, and I cannot give her to anyone else; only your Highness is fit to be the husband of such a girl." Then Gunaavartman entered and showed his daughter to the king. The king, when he beheld that maiden, Tejasvati by name, illuminating with her brightness the quarters of the heavens, like the flame of the rays from the jewels in the temple of the God of Love, was all enveloped with the radiance of her beauty and fell in love with her, and, as if heated with the fire of passion, began to dissolve in drops of sweat. So he at once accepted her, who was fit for the rank of head queen, and, being highly delighted, made Gunaavartman equal to himself in honour.

Then, having married his dear Tejasvati, the king thought all his objects in life accomplished, and went with her to Ujjayini. There the king fixed his gaze so exclusively on her face that he could not see the affairs of his kingdom, though they were of great importance. And his ear being, so to speak, riveted on her musical discourse, could not be attracted by the cries of his distressed subjects. The king entered into his harem for a long time and never left it, but the fever of fear left the hearts of his enemies. And after some time there was born to the king, by the Queen Tejasvati, a girl, welcomed by all. And there arose in his heart the desire of conquest, which was equally welcome to his subjects. That girl of exceeding beauty, who made the three worlds seem worthless as stubble, excited him in joy, and desire of conquest excited his valour. Then that King Adityasena set out one day from Ujjayini to attack a certain contemptuous chieftain; and he made that Queen Tejasvatī go with him mounted on an elephant, as if she were the protecting goddess of the host. And he mounted an admirable horse, that in spirit and fury resembled a torrent,¹ tall like a moving mountain, with a curl on its breast, and a girth. It seemed to imitate, with its feet raised as high as its mouth, the going of Garuḍa,² which it had seen in the heaven, rivalling its own swiftness; and it lifted up its head and seemed with fearless eye to measure the earth, as if thinking: "What shall be the limit of my speed?"

1 See Appendix II, pp. 263-272.—N.M.P.

And after the king had gone a little way he came to a level piece of ground, and put his horse to its utmost speed to show it off to Tejasvatī. That horse, on being struck with his heel, went off rapidly, like an arrow impelled from a catapult, in some unknown direction, so that it became invisible to the eyes of men. The soldiers, when they saw that take place, were bewildered, and horsemen galloped in a thousand directions after the king, who was run away with by his horse, but could not overtake him. Thereupon the ministers with the soldiers, fearing some calamity, in their anxiety took with them the weeping queen and returned to Ujjayinī; there they remained with gates closed and ramparts guarded, seeking for news of the king, having cheered up the citizens.

In the meanwhile the king was carried by the horse in an instant to the impassable forest of the Vindhya hills, haunted by horrible lions.³ Then the horse happened to stand still, and the king was immediately distracted with bewilderment, as the great forest made it impossible for him to know whereabouts he was. Seeing no other way out of his difficulties, who knew what the horse had been in a former birth, he got down from his saddle and, prostrating himself before the excellent horse, said to him: "Thou art a god; a creature like thee should not commit treason against his lord; so I look upon thee as my protector; take me by a pleasant path." When the horse heard that, he was full of regret, remembering his former birth, and mentally acceded to the king’s request; for excellent horses are divine beings. Then the king mounted again, and the horse set out by a road bordered with clear cool lakes, that took away the fatigue of the journey; and by evening the splendid horse had taken the king another hundred yojanas and brought him near Ujjayini.

¹ More literally, "a torrent of pride and kicking."—The D. text differs, and can be translated, "sweating from (ardour and) pride."—N.M.P.
² See note in Ocean of Story, Vol. I, pp. 103-105.—N.M.P.
³ See Ocean of Story, Vol. I, p. 67n.—N.M.P.

As the Sun, beholding his horses, though seven in number, excelled by this courser’s speed, had sunk, as it were through shame, into the ravines of the western mountain, and as the darkness was diffused abroad, the wise horse, seeing that the gates of Ujjayini were closed, and that the burning-place outside the gates was terrible at that time, carried the king for shelter to a concealed monastery of Brähmans, that was situated in a lonely place outside the walls. And the King Adityasena, seeing that that monastery was a fit place to spend the night in, as his horse was tired, attempted to enter it. But the Brähmans who dwelt there opposed his entrance, saying that he must be some keeper of a cemetery or some thief. And out they poured in quarrelsome mood, with savage gestures, for Brähmans who live by chanting the Śāma Veda are the home of timidity, boorishness and ill temper.

1 Grimm in his Teutonic Mythology (translation by Stallybrass, p. 392) remarks: “One principal mark to know heroes by is their possessing intelligent horses, and conversing with them. The touching conversation of Achilles with his Xanthos and Balios finds a complete parallel in the beautiful Karling legend of Bayard.” (This is most pathetically told in Simrock’s Deutsche Volksbücher, vol. ii, “Die Heimonskinder,” see especially p. 54.) Grimm proceeds to cite many other instances from European literature. See also note 3 to the twentieth story in Miss Stokes’ collection, and the remarks in Bernhard Schmidt’s Griechische Märchen, p. 257.—Owing to the great value of war horses among the early Aryans we find them an object of worship from Vedic days. See Rūg-Veda, iv, 33. For notes on horse-worship and horse-sacrifice see Crooke, Folk-Lore of Northern India, vol. ii, pp. 204-208 and the numerous references given on those pages. When horses were first introduced to the Central American Indians by the Spaniards, they were regarded as supernatural beings and worshipped as such. For the horse in mythology see Negelein in Teutonia, ii; de Gubernatis, Zoological Mythology, vol. i, pp. 290-296 and 380-385; Pauly-Wissowa, under “Aberglaube,” p. 76; and Crooke, “Some Notes on Homeric Folk-Lore,” Folk-Lore, vol. xix, 1908, p. 65.—N.M.P.

2 See Ocean of Story, Vol. I, p. 3n1.—N.M.P.

3 The keeper of a burning or burial ground would be impure.
While they were clamouring, a virtuous Brāhman named Vidūṣhaka, the bravest of the brave, came out from that monastery. He was a young man distinguished for strength of arm, who had propitiated the Fire by his austerities, and obtained a splendid sword from that divinity, which he had only to think of and it came to him.¹ That resolute youth Vidūṣhaka, seeing that king of distinguished bearing, who had arrived by night, thought to himself that he was some god in disguise. And the well-disposed youth pushed away all those other Brāhmans, and bowing humbly before the king, caused him to enter the monastery. And when he had rested, and had the dust of the journey washed off by female slaves, Vidūṣhaka prepared for him suitable food. And he took the saddle off that excellent horse of his, and relieved its fatigue by giving it grass and other fodder. And after he had made a bed for the wearied king, he said to him: “My lord, I will guard your person, so sleep in peace.” And while the king slept that Brāhman kept watch the whole night at the door with the sword of the Fire God in his hand, that came to him on his thinking of it.

And on the morrow early Vidūṣhaka, without receiving any orders, of his own accord saddled the horse for the king as soon as he awoke. The king for his part took leave of him, and mounting his horse entered the city of Ujjayinī, beheld afar off by the people bewildered with joy. And the moment he entered, his subjects approached him with a confused hum of delight at his return. The king accompanied by his ministers entered the palace, and great anxiety left the breast of the Queen Tejasvatī. Immediately grief seemed to be swept away from the city by the rows of silken flags displayed out of joy, which waved in the wind; and the queen made high festival until the end of the day, until such time as the people of the city and the sun were red as ¹ This summoning by thought is found many times in the Ocean of Story. It is, however, a supernatural being who is usually thus summoned. Readers will remember that Vararuchi had made a friend of a Rākshasa who appeared on thought (Vol. I, p. 50). In the Nights the jinn is summoned by the rubbing of a magic article, such as a lamp, ring, etc., or less frequently by burning hair (contagious magic). See Chauvin, Bibliographie des Ouvrages Arabes, v, 5.—N.M.P.

THE EVIL RESULTS OF SUDDEN WEALTH

vermilion. And the next day the King Ādityasena had Vidūshaka summoned from the monastery, with all the other Brāhmans. And as soon as he had made known what took place in the night, he gave his benefactor Vidūshaka a thousand villages. And the grateful king also gave that Brāhman an umbrella and an elephant and appointed him his domestic chaplain, so that he was beheld with great interest by the people. So Vidūshaka then became equal to a chieftain; for how can a benefit conferred on great persons fail of bearing fruit?

And the noble-minded Vidūshaka shared all those villages which he had received from the king with the Brāhmans who lived in the monastery. And he remained in the court of the king in attendance upon him, enjoying, together with the other Brāhmans, the income of those villages. But as time went on those other Brāhmans began striving each of them to be chief, and made no account of Vidūshaka, being intoxicated with the pride of wealth. Dwelling in separate parties, seven in one place, with their mutual rivalries they oppressed the villages like malignant planets. Vidūshaka regarded their excesses with scornful indifference; for men of firm mind rightly treat with contempt men of little soul.

Once upon a time a Brāhman of the name of Chakradhara, who was naturally stern, seeing them engaged in wrangling, came up to them. Chakradhara, though he was one-eyed, was keen-sighted enough in deciding what was right in other men’s affairs, and though a hunchback, was straightforward enough in speech. He said to them: "While you were living by begging you obtained this windfall, you rascals; then why do you ruin the villages with your mutual intolerance? It is all the fault of Vidūshaka, who has permitted you to act thus; so you may be certain that in a short time you will again have to roam about begging. For a situation in which there is no head, and everyone has to shift for himself by his own wits as chance directs, is better than one of disunion under many heads, in which all affairs go to rack and ruin. So take my advice and appoint one firm man as your head, if you desire unshaken prosperity, which can only be ensured by a capable governor." On hearing that, every one of them desired the headship for himself; thereupon Chakradhara after reflection again said to those fools: "As you are so addicted to mutual rivalry I propose to you a basis of agreement. In the neighbouring cemetery three robbers have been executed by impalement; whoever is daring enough to cut off the noses of those three by night, and to bring them here, he shall be your head; for courage merits command."

---

1 Probably the people sprinkled one another with red powder, as at the Holi festival.——For a description of this see Crooke, "The Holi: A Vernal Festival of the Hindus," Folk-Lore, vol. xxv, 1914, pp. 55-83.—N.M.P.

2 See Appendix II, pp. 263-272.—N.M.P.

When Chakradhara made this proposal to the Brähmans, Vidūshaka, who was standing near, said to them: "Do this; what is there to be afraid of?" Then the Brähmans said to him: "We are not bold enough to do it; let whoever is able do it, and we will abide by the agreement." Then Vidūshaka said: "Well, I will do it. I will cut off the noses of those robbers by night and bring them from the cemetery." Then those fools, thinking the task a difficult one, said to him: "If you do this you shall be our lord; we make this agreement." When they had pronounced this agreement, and night had set in, Vidūshaka took leave of those Brähmans and went to the cemetery. So the hero entered the cemetery, awful as his own undertaking, with the sword of the Fire God, that came with a thought, as his only companion. And in the middle of that cemetery, where the cries of vultures and jackals were swelled by the screams of witches and the flames

---

1 The D. text perhaps makes better sense: "better, indeed, is a state without a ruler, so that their prosperity merely depends on Fate, than one with many discordant rulers, which entails the scattering of all their wealth." See Speyer, op. cit., p. 100.—N.M.P.

2 So in Grimm's Märchen, "Von einem der auszog das Fürchten zu lernen," the youth is recommended to sit under the gallows where seven men have been executed. Cf. also the story of "The Shroud" in Ralston's Russian Folk-Tales, p. 307.—Cf. also the extraordinary tale of Bellephoron in Apuleius' Golden Ass, ch. xi.—N.M.P.

3 Literally, "we consider ourselves bound by this word." See Speyer, op. cit., p. 100.—N.M.P.
of the funeral pyres were reinforced by the fires in the mouths of the fire-breathing demons, he beheld those impaled men with their faces turned up, as if through fear of having their noses cut off. And when he approached them those three, being tenanted by demons, struck him with their fists; and he for his part slashed them in return with his sword, for Fear has not learned to bestir herself in the breast of the resolute. Accordingly the corpses ceased to be convulsed

1 Cf. Ralston’s account of the vampire as represented in the Skazkas: "It is as a vitalised corpse that the visitor from the other world comes to trouble mankind, often subject to human appetites, constantly endowed with more than human strength and malignity" (Ralston’s Russian Folk-Tales, p. 306). The belief that the dead rose from the tomb in the form of vampires appears to have existed in Chaldea and Babylon. Lenormant observes in his Chaldean Magic and Sorcery (English translation, p. 37): “In a fragment of the Mythological epéie which is traced upon a tablet in the British Museum, and relates the descent of Ishtar into Hades, we are told that the goddess, when she arrived at the doors of the infernal regions, called to the porter whose duty it was to open them, saying:

‘Porter, open thy door;
Open thy door that I may enter.
If thou dost not open the door, and if I cannot enter,
I will attack the door, I will break down its bars,
I will attack the enclosure, I will leap over its fences by force;
I will cause the dead to rise and devour the living,
I will give the dead power over the living.’”

The same belief appears also to have existed in Egypt. The same author observes (p. 92): “These formulæ also kept the body from becoming, during its separation from the soul, the prey of some wicked spirit which would enter, reanimate, and cause it to rise again in the form of a vampire. For, according to the Egyptian belief, the possessing spirits, and the spectres which frightened or tormented the living, were but the souls of the condemned returning to earth, before undergoing the annihilation of the ‘second death.’” — Another version of the above translation of the attempt of Ishtar to get into Aralû (Sheol or Hades) is to be found in Morris Jastrow’s The Religion of Babylonia and Assyria, 1898, pp. 568-569. There are seven doors, and at each Ishtar is forced to abandon some portion of her clothing and ornaments, until finally she is entirely naked. This is symbolic of the gradual decay of vegetation (see Jastrow, op. cit., p. 570). The whole reference, however, although very interesting, has little to do with vampires. For these see R. Campbell Thompson, The Devils and Evil Spirits of Babylonia, 1903-1904, which contains numerous Babylonian and Assyrian incantations against vampires; while for Indian vampires and other evil spirits see W. Crooke, “Demons and Spirits (Indian),” Hastings’ Ency. Rel. Eth., vol. iv, pp. 601-608. — N.M.P.
with demons, and then the successful hero cut off their noses and brought them away, binding them up in his garment.

And as he was returning he beheld in that cemetery a religious mendicant sitting on a corpse muttering charms, and through curiosity to have the amusement of seeing what he was doing he stood concealed behind that mendicant. In a moment the corpse under the mendicant gave forth a hissing sound, and flames issued from its mouth, and from its navel mustard-seeds. And then the mendicant took the mustard-seeds, and rising up struck the corpse with the flat of his hand, and the corpse, which was tenanted by a mighty demon, stood up, and then that mendicant mounted ¹ on its shoulder and began to depart at a rapid rate, and Vidūṣhaka silently followed him unobserved, and after he had gone a short distance Vidūṣhaka saw an empty temple with an image of Durgā in it. Then the mendicant got down from the shoulder of the demon, and entered the inner shrine of the temple, while the demon fell flat on the earth. But Vidūṣhaka was present also, contriving to watch the mendicant, unperceived by him. The mendicant worshipped the goddess there and offered the following prayer:—“If thou art pleased with me, O Goddess, grant me the desired boon. If not, I will propitiate thee with the sacrifice of myself.” When the mendicant, intoxicated with the success of his powerful spells, said this, a voice coming from the inner shrine thus addressed the mendicant: “Bring here the maiden daughter of King Ādityasena, and offer her as a sacrifice, then thou shalt obtain thy desire.” When the mendicant heard this he went out, and striking once more with his hand the demon,² who hissed at the blow, made him stand upright. And, mounting on the shoulder of the demon, from whose mouth issued flames of fire, he flew away through the air to bring the princess.

Vidūṣhaka seeing all this from his place of concealment

¹ Cf. the way in which the witch treats the corpse of her son in the sixth book of the Ἐθιοπικὰ of Heliodorus, ch. xiv, and Lucan’s Pharsalia, Book VI, ll. 754-757.

² I.e. the corpse tenanted by the Vetāla or demon.—See Ocean of Story, Appendix I, Vol. I, p. 206; and Sir Richard Temple’s Foreword to Vol. I, p. xxv.—N.M.P. thought to himself: "What! shall he slay the king's daughter while I am alive? I will remain here until the scoundrel returns." Having formed this resolve, Vidūshaka remained there in concealment. But the mendicant entered the female apartments of the palace through the window, and found the king's daughter asleep, as it was night. And he returned, all clothed in darkness, through the air, bringing with him the princess, who illuminated with her beauty the region, as Rāhu\(^1\) carries off a digit of the moon. And bearing along with him that princess, who exclaimed in her grief,
"Alas! my father! Alas! my mother!" he descended from the sky into that very temple of the goddess. And then, dismissing the demon, he entered with that pearl of maidens into the inner shrine of the goddess, and while he was preparing to slay the princess there Vidūshaka came in with his sword drawn. He said to the mendicant: "Villain!
Do you wish to smite a jasmine flower with a thunderbolt, in that you desire to employ a weapon against this tender form?" And then he seized the trembling mendicant by the hair, and cut off his head.
And he consoled the princess, distracted by fear, who clung to him closely as she began to recognise him.

And then the hero thought: "How can I manage during the night to convey this princess from this place to the harem?" Then a voice from the air addressed him: "Hear this, O Vidūshaka! The mendicant whom thou hast slain had in his power a great demon and some grains of mustard-seed. Thence arose his desire to be ruler of the earth and marry the daughters of kings, and so the fool has this day been baffled. Therefore, thou hero, take those mustard-seeds, in order that for this night only thou mayest be enabled to travel through the air." Thus the aerial voice addressed the delighted Vidūshaka; for even the gods often take such a hero under their protection. Then he took in his hand those grains of mustard-seed from the corner of the mendicant's robe, and the princess in his arms.

And while he was setting out from that temple of the goddess another voice sounded in the air: "Thou must

\(^1\) See note at the end of this chapter.—N.M.P.
return to this very temple of the goddess at the end of a month; thou must not forget this, O hero!" When he heard this, Vidūshaka said: "I will do so"—and by the favour of the goddess he immediately flew up into the air,\textsuperscript{1} bearing with him the princess. And flying through the air he quickly placed that princess in her private apartments, and said to her after she had recovered her spirits: "Tomorrow morning I shall not be able to fly through the air, and so all men will see me going out, so I must depart now."

When he said this to her, the maiden, being alarmed, answered him: "When you are gone, this breath of mine will leave my body, overcome with fear. Therefore do not depart, great-souled hero; once more save my life; for the good make it their business from their birth to carry out every task they have undertaken."

When the brave Vidūshaka heard that he reflected: "If I go and leave this maiden she may possibly die of fear; and then what kind of loyalty to my sovereign shall I have exhibited?" Thinking thus he remained all night in those female apartments, and he gradually dropped off to sleep, wearied with toil and watching. But the princess in her terror passed the night without sleeping; and even when the morning came she did not wake up the sleeping Vidūshaka,\textsuperscript{2} as her mind was made tender by love, and she said to herself: "Let him rest a little longer." Then the servants of the harem came in and saw him, and in a state of consternation they went and told the king. The king for his part sent the warder to discover the truth, and he entering beheld Vidūshaka there. And he heard the whole story from the mouth of the princess, and went and repeated it all to the king. And the king, knowing the excellent character of Vidūshaka, was immediately bewildered, wondering what it could mean. And he had Vidūshaka brought from his daughter's apartment, escorted all the way by her soul, which followed him out of affection.

\textsuperscript{1} This art has always been regarded in Hindu mythology as the mark of dignity and a necessary adjunct to kingship. See A. M. Hocart, "Flying through the Air," \textit{Ind. Ant.}, vol. lii, 1923, pp. 80-82.—N.M.P.

\textsuperscript{2} Cf. Simrock's \textit{Deutsche Volksbücher}, vol. iii, p. 399.
And when he arrived, the king asked him what had taken place, and Vidūshaka told him the whole story from the beginning, and showed him the noses of the robbers fastened up in the end of his garment, and the mustard-seeds which had been in the possession of the mendicant, different from those found on earth. The high-minded monarch suspected that Vidūshaka’s story was true from these circumstances, so he had all the Brāhmans of the monastery brought before him, together with Chakradhara, and asked about the original cause of the whole matter. And he went in person to the cemetery and saw those men with their noses cut off, and that base mendicant with his neck severed, and then he reposed complete confidence in, and was much pleased with, the skillful and successful Vidūshaka, who had saved his daughter’s life. And he gave him his own daughter on the spot. What do generous men withhold when pleased with their benefactors? Surely the Goddess of Prosperity,1 out of love for the lotus, dwelt in the hand of the princess, since Vidūshaka obtained great good fortune after he had received it in the marriage ceremony.

Then Vidūshaka, enjoying a distinguished reputation, and engaged in attending upon the sovereign, lived with that beloved wife in the palace of King Ādityasena. Then as the days went on, once upon a time the princess, impelled by some supernatural power, said at night to Vidūshaka: “My lord, you remember that when you were in the temple of the goddess a divine voice said to you: ‘Come here at the end of a month.’ Today is the last day of the month and you have forgotten it.” When his beloved said this to him, Vidūshaka was delighted, and recalled it to mind, and said to his wife: “Well remembered on thy part, fair one! But I had forgotten it.” And then he embraced her by way of reward.

And then, while she was asleep, he left the women’s

1 Lakshmi or Śrī, the Goddess of Prosperity, appeared after the Churning of the Ocean with a lotus in her hand. According to another story she is said to have appeared at the Creation floating on the expanded leaves of a lotus-flower. The hand of a lady is often compared to a lotus.
apartments by night, and in high spirits he went armed with his sword to the temple of the goddess; then he exclaimed outside: "I, Vidūshaka, am arrived." And he heard this speech uttered by someone inside: "Come in, Vidūshaka." Thereupon he entered and beheld a heavenly palace, and inside it a lady of heavenly beauty with a heavenly retinue, dispelling with her brightness the darkness, like a night set on fire, looking as if she were the medicine to restore to life the God of Love consumed with the fire of the wrath of Siva. He, wondering what it could all mean, was joyfully received by her in person, with a welcome full of affection and great respect. And when he had sat down and had gained confidence from seeing her affection, he became eager to understand the real nature of the adventure, and she said to him: "I am a maiden of the Vidyādhara race, of high descent, and my name is Bhadrā, and as I was roaming about at my will I saw you here on that occasion. And as my mind was attracted by your virtues, I uttered at that time that voice which seemed to come from someone invisible, in order that you might return. And to-day I bewildered the princess by employing my magic skill, so that under my impulse she revived your remembrance of this matter, and for your sake I am here, and so, handsome hero, I surrender myself to you; marry me." The noble Vidūshaka, when the Vidyādhari Bhadrā addressed him in this style, agreed that moment, and married her by the gāndharva ceremony. Then he remained in that very place, having obtained celestial joys, the fruits of his own valour, living with that beloved wife.

Meanwhile the princess woke up when the night came to an end, and not seeing her husband, was immediately plunged in despair. So she got up and went with tottering steps to her mother, all trembling, with her eyes flooded with gushing tears. And she told her mother that her husband had gone away somewhere in the night, and was full of self-reproach, fearing that she had been guilty of some fault. Then her mother was distracted owing to her love for her daughter, and so in course of time the king heard of it, and came there, and fell into a state of the utmost anxiety. When his daughter said to him, “I know my husband has gone to the temple of the goddess outside the cemetery,” the king went there in person. But he was not able to find Vidūshaka there, in spite of all his searching, for he was concealed by virtue of the magic science of the Vidyādharī. Then the king returned, and his daughter in despair determined to leave the body, but while she was thus minded some wise man came to her and said this to her: “Do not fear any misfortune, for that husband of thine is living in the enjoyment of heavenly felicity, and will return to thee shortly.” When she heard that, the princess retained her life, which was kept in her by the hope of her husband’s return, that had taken deep root in her heart.
THE FRUITLESS SEARCH

Then, while Vidūshaka was living there, a certain friend of his beloved, named Yogesvarī, came to Bhadrā, and said to her in secret: “My friend, the Vidyādharas are angry with you because you live with a man, and they seek to do you an injury; therefore leave this place. There is a city called Kārkotaka on the shore of the eastern sea, and beyond that there is a sanctifying stream named Sītodā, and after you cross that, there is a great mountain named Udaya, the land of the Siddhas, which the Vidyādharas may not invade; go there immediately, and do not be anxious about the beloved mortal whom you leave here, for before you start you can tell all this to him, so that he shall be able afterwards to journey there with speed.” When her friend said this to her, Bhadrā was overcome with fear, and though attached

1 Udaya is a Sanskrit word meaning “rising,” “appearance,” and then as the eastern mountain behind which the sun was supposed to rise. Writing to me on the subject the Rev. A. S. Geden says that in this sense compounded words like udayagiri, udayaparvata, “eastern mountain,” were probably more common than the simple term udaya, and he does not remember the word being found with this meaning in the Vedas. It does not play a conspicuous part in Hindu classical mythology, and is, of course, distinct from Meru, the world mountain, and Mandara, the mountain used at the Churning of the Ocean. The myth would seem to have arisen in the Himalayan country, or behind the Hindu Kush, where the sun did actually appear behind a mountain in the east. It could hardly have suggested itself on a dead plain like that of the Ganges. See Böhlingk and Roth.—N.M.P.

2 I.e. semi-divine beings supposed to be of great purity and holiness.— See Vol. I, Appendix I, p. 204.—N.M.P. to Vidūshaka, she consented to do as her friend advised. So she told her scheme to Vidūshaka, and providently gave him her ring, and then disappeared at the close of the night. And Vidūshaka immediately found himself in the empty temple of the goddess, in which he had been before, and no Bhadrā and no palace. Remembering the delusion produced by Bhadrā’s magic skill, and beholding the ring, Vidūshaka was overpowered by a paroxysm of despair and wonder. And remembering her speech as if it were a dream, he reflected: “Before she left, she assigned as a place of meeting the mountain of the sun-rising; so I must quickly go there to find her; but if I am seen by the people in this state, the king will not let me go: so I will employ a stratagem in this matter, in order that I may accomplish my object.”

So reflecting, the wise man assumed another appearance, and went out from that temple with tattered clothes, begrimed with dust, exclaiming: “Ah, Bhadrā! Ah, Bhadrā!” And immediately the people who lived in that place, beholding him, raised a shout: “Here is Vidūshaka found!” And the king hearing of it came out from his palace in person, and seeing Vidūshaka in such a state, conducting himself like a madman, he laid hold on him and took him back to his palace. When he was there, whatever his servants and connections, who were full of affection, said to him he answered only by exclaiming: “Ah, Bhadrā! Ah, Bhadrā!” And when he was anointed with unguents prescribed by the physicians, he immediately defiled his body with much cinder-dust; and the food which the princess out of love offered to him with her own hands he instantly threw down and trampled underfoot. And in this condition Vidūshaka remained there some days, without taking interest in anything, tearing his own clothes, and playing the madman. And Ādityasena thought to himself: “His condition is past cure, so what is the use of torturing him? He may perhaps die, and then I shall be guilty of the death of a Brāhman, whereas if he roams about at his will he may possibly recover in course of time.” So he let him go.

Then the hero Vidūshaka, being allowed to roam where he liked, set out the next day at his leisure to find Bhadrā, taking with him the ring. And as he journeyed on day by day towards the East, he at last reached a city named Pauṇḍravardhana, which lay in his way as he travelled on; there he entered the house of a certain aged Brāhma woman, saying to her: “Mother, I wish to stop here one night.” And she gave him a lodging and entertained him, and shortly after she approached him, full of inward sorrow, and said to him: “My son, I hereby give thee all this house, therefore receive it, since I cannot now live any longer.” He, astonished, said to her: “Why do you speak thus?” Then she said: “Listen, I will tell you the whole story,” and so continued as follows:—

“My son, in this city there is a king named Devasena, and to him there was born a daughter, the ornament of the earth. The affectionate king said, ‘I have with difficulty obtained this one daughter,’ so he gave her the name of Duḥkhalabdhipa. In course of time, when she had grown up, the king gave her in marriage to the King of Kachchhapā, whom he had brought to his own palace. The King of Kachchhapā entered at night the private apartments of his bride, and died the very first time he entered them. Then the king, much distressed, again gave his daughter in marriage to another king; he also perished in the same way: and when through fear of the same fate other kings did not wish to marry her, the king gave this order to his general: ‘You must bring a man in turn from every single house in this country, so that one shall be supplied every day, and he must be a Brāhma or a Kshatriya. And after you have brought the man, you must cause him to enter by night into

1 General Cunningham identifies Pauṇḍravardhana with the modern Pubna.

2 There is a curious parallel to this story in Tārānātha’s History of Buddhism, translated into German by Schiefner, p. 203. Here a Rākshasi assumes the form of a former king’s wife, and kills all the subjects, one after another, as fast as they are elected to the royal dignity.

3 Compare the apocryphal Book of Tobit. See p. 30 of Lenormant’s Chaldæan Magic and Sorcery, English translation.
the apartment of my daughter; let us see how many will perish in this way, and how long it will go on. Whoever escapes shall afterwards become her husband; for it is impossible to bar the course of Fate, whose dispensations are mysterious.’ The general having received this order from the king, brings a man every day in turn from every house in this city, and in this way hundreds of men have met their death in the apartment of the princess. Now I, whose merits in a former life must have been deficient, have one son here; his turn has to-day arrived to go to the palace to meet his death; and I being deprived of him must to-morrow enter the fire. Therefore, while I am still alive, I give to you, a worthy object, all my house with my own hand, in order that my lot may not again be unfortunate in my next birth.”

When she had said this, the resolute Vidūshaka answered: “If this is the whole matter, do not be despondent, mother. I will go there to-day: let your only son live. And do not feel any commiseration with regard to me, so as to say to yourself, ‘Why should I be the cause of this man’s death?’ for owing to the magical power which I possess I run no risk by going there.” When Vidūshaka had said this, that Brāhman woman said to him: “Then you must be some god come here as a reward for my virtue, so cause me, my son, to recover life, and yourself to gain felicity.” When she had expressed her approval of his project in these words, he went in the evening to the apartment of the princess, together with a servant appointed by the general to conduct him. There he beheld the princess flushed with the pride of youth, like a creeper weighed down with the burden of its abundant flowers that had not yet been gathered. Accord-

1 As the word bhāviṣyati is future, the addition of pascāt (afterwards) seems unnecessary. It is, moreover, not found in the D. text, which is rendered by Speyer: “who survives in this (trial) shall become her husband.” —N.M.P.

2 For reference to such tales of the Perseus and Andromeda type see Frazer, Pausanias, vol. ix, 26, 27; I. V. Zingerle, Kinder- und Hausmärchen aus Tirol, Nos. 8, 21, 35, pp. 35 et seq., 100 et seq., and 178 et seq.; G. F. Abbott, Macedonian Folk-Lore, p. 270 et seq.; and especially E. S. Hartland, The Legend of Perseus, 1894-1896.—N.M.P.
ingly, when night came, the princess went to her bed, and Vidūshaka remained awake in her apartment, holding in his hand the sword of the Fire God, which came to him with a thought, saying to himself: "I will find out who it is that slays men here." And when people were all asleep, he saw a terrible Rākshasa coming from the side of the apartment where the entrance was, having first opened the door; and the Rākshasa, standing at the entrance, stretched forward into the room an arm, which had been the swift wand of Death to hundreds of men. But Vidūshaka, in wrath springing forward, cut off suddenly the arm of the Rākshasa with one stroke of his sword. And the Rākshasa immediately fled away through fear of his exceeding valour, with the loss of one arm, never again to return. When the princess awoke, she saw the severed arm lying there, and she was terrified, delighted, and astonished at the same time. And in the morning the King Devasena saw the arm of the Rākshasa, which had fallen down after it was cut off, lying at the door of his daughter's apartments; in this way Vidūshaka—as if to say, "Henceforth no other men must enter here"—fastened the door as it were with a long bar. Accordingly the delighted king gave to Vidūshaka, who possessed this divine power, his daughter and much wealth; and Vidūshaka dwelt there some days with this fair one, as if with prosperity incarnate in bodily form.

But one day he left the princess while asleep, and set out at night in haste to find his Bhadrā. And the princess in the morning was afflicted at not seeing him, but she was comforted by her father with the hope of his return. Vidūshaka, journeying on day by day, at last reached the city of Tāmraliptā, not far from the eastern sea. There he joined himself to a certain merchant, named Skandhadāsa, who desired to cross the sea. In his company, embarking on a ship laden

1 Ralston in his Russian Folk-Tales, p. 270, compares this incident with one in a Polish story, and in the Russian story of "The Witch Girl." In both the arm of the destroyer is cut off.

2 I read iva; the arm was the long bar, and the whole passage is an instance of the rhetorical figure called utpreksa.

3 A better reading is Skandadāsa, with the D. text.—N.M.P.
with much wealth belonging to the merchant, he set out on the ocean path. Then that ship was stopped suddenly when it had reached the middle of the ocean, as if it were held by something. And when it did not move, though the sea was propitiated with jewels,¹ that merchant Skandhadāsa being grieved, said this: "Whosoever releases this ship of mine which is detained, to him I will give half my own wealth and my daughter." The resolute-souled Vidūshaka, when he heard that, said: "I will descend into the water of the sea and search it, and I will set free in a moment this ship of yours which is stopped: but you must support me by ropes fastened round my body. And the moment the ship is set free, you must draw me up out of the midst of the sea by the supporting ropes."

The merchant welcomed this speech with a promise to do what he asked, and the steersmen bound ropes under his armpits. Supported in that way, Vidūshaka descended in the sea; a brave man never desponds when the moment for action has arrived. So taking in his hand the sword of the Fire God, that came to him with a thought, the hero descended into the midst of the sea under the ship. And there he saw a giant asleep, and he saw that the ship was stopped by his leg. So he immediately cut off his leg with his sword, and at once the ship moved on freed from its impediment.² When the wicked merchant saw that, he cut the ropes by which Vidūshaka was supported, through desire to save the wealth he had promised him, and went swiftly to the other shore of the ocean, vast as his own avarice, in the ship which had thus been set free. Vidūshaka for his part, being in the midst of the sea with the supporting ropes cut, rose to the surface, and seeing how matters stood he calmly reflected for a moment: "Why did the merchant do this? Surely in this case the proverb is applicable: 'Ungrateful men blinded by desire of gain cannot see a benefit.' Well, it is now high time for me to display intrepidity, for if courage fails, even a small calamity cannot be overcome."

¹ For collected evidence of sacrifices to water-spirits see Frazer, Golden Bough, vol. ii, pp. 155-170.—N.M.P.

² Cf. the freeing of Argo by Hercules cutting off Pallair's arm in the Togail Troi, ed. Stokes, p. 67.

Thus he reflected on that occasion, and then he got astride on the leg which he had cut off from the giant sleeping in the water, and by its help he crossed the sea, as if with a boat, paddling with his hands; for even destiny takes the part of men of distinguished valour. Then a voice from heaven addressed that mighty hero who had come across the ocean, as Hanumān did for the sake of Rāma 1: "Bravo, Vidūshaka! Bravo! Who except thee is a man of valour? I am pleased with this courage of thine: therefore hear this. Thou hast reached a desolate coast here, but from this thou shalt arrive in seven days at the city of Kārkoṭaka; then thou shalt pluck up fresh spirits, and journeying quickly from that place, thou shalt obtain thy desire. But I am the Fire, the consumer of the oblations to gods and the spirits of deceased ancestors, whom thou didst before propitiate: and owing to my favour thou shalt feel neither hunger nor thirst—therefore go prosperously and confidently." Having thus spoken, the voice ceased.

And Vidūshaka, when he heard that, bowed, adoring the Fire God, and set forth in high spirits, and on the seventh day he reached the city of Kārkoṭaka. And there he entered a monastery, inhabited by many noble Brāhmans from various lands, who were noted for hospitality. It was a wealthy foundation of the king of that place, Āryavarman, and had annexed to it beautiful temples all made of gold. There all of the Brāhmans welcomed him, and one Brāhman took the guest to his chamber, and provided him with a bath, with food and with clothing. And while he was living in the monastery, he heard this proclamation being made by beat of drum 2 in the evening: "Whatever Brāhman or Kshatriya wishes to-morrow morning to marry the king's daughter, let him spend a night in her chamber."

When he heard that, he suspected the real reason, and being always fond of daring adventures, he desired immediately

---

1 There is probably a pun here. Rāmārham may mean "for the sake of a fair one."

2 See the note on the uses of the drum, Vol. I, p. 118a².—N.M.P.
to go to the apartment of the princess. Thereupon the Brāhmans of the monastery said to him: "Brāhman, do not be guilty of rashness. The apartment of the princess is not rightly so called, rather is it the open mouth of death,¹ for whoever enters it at night does not escape alive, and many daring men have thus met their death there." In spite of what these Brāhmans told him, Vidūshaka would not take their advice,² but went to the palace of the king with his servants.

There the King Āryavarman, when he saw him, welcomed him in person, and at night he entered the apartment of the king's daughter, looking like the sun entering the fire. And he beheld that princess, who seemed by her appearance to be attached to him, for she looked at him with tearful eye, and a sad look expressive of the grief produced by utter despair. And he remained awake there all night gazing intently, holding in his hand the sword of the Fire God, that came to him with a thought. And suddenly he beheld at the entrance a very terrible Rākshasa, extending his left hand because his right had been cut off. And when he saw him, he said to himself: "Here is that very Rākshasa whose arm I cut off in the city of Paundravardhana. So I will not strike at his arm again, lest he should escape me and depart as before, and for this reason it is better for me to kill him." Thus reflecting, Vidūshaka ran forward and seized his hair, and was preparing to cut off his head when suddenly the Rākshasa in extreme terror said to him. "Do not slay me; you are brave, therefore show mercy." Vidūshaka let him go, and said: "Who are you, and what are you about here?" Then the Rākshasa, being thus questioned by the hero, continued: "My name is Yamadanshtra, and I had two daughters—this is one, and she who lives in Paundravardhana is another. And Śiva favoured me by laying on me this command: 'Thou must save the two princesses from marrying anyone who is not a hero.' While thus engaged I first had an arm cut off at Paundravardhana, and now I have been conquered by you here, so this duty of mine is accomplished."

¹ I read na tad for tatra with a MS. in the Sanskrit College.
² Here there is a pun on Ananga, a name of Kāma, the Hindu Cupid.
THE LAND OF THE SIDDHAS

When Vidūshaka heard this he laughed, and said to him in reply: "It was I that cut off your arm in Pauṇḍravardhana." The Rākshasa answered: "Then you must be a portion of some divinity, not a mere man. I think it was for your sake that Siva did me the honour of laying that command upon me. So henceforth I consider you my friend, and when you call me to mind I will appear to you to ensure your success even in difficulties." In these words the Rākshasa Yama-danshṭra out of friendship chose him as a sworn brother, and when Vidūshaka accepted his proposal, disappeared. Vidūshaka, for his part, was commended for his valour by the princess, and spent the night there in high spirits; and in the morning the king, hearing of the incident and highly pleased, gave him his daughter as the conspicuous banner of his valour, together with much wealth. Vidūshaka lived there some nights with her, as if with the Goddess of Prosperity, bound so firmly by his virtue\(^1\) that she could not move a step. But one night he went off of his own accord from that place, longing for his beloved Bhadrā; for who that has tasted heavenly joys can take pleasure in any other?

And after he had left the town he called to mind that Rākshasa, and said to him, who appeared the moment he called him to mind, and made him a bow: "My friend, I must go to the land of the Siddhas on the eastern mountain for the sake of the Vidyādhari named Bhadrā, so do you take me there." The Rākshasa said: "Very good." So he ascended his shoulder, and travelled in that night over sixty yojanas of difficult country\(^2\); and in the morning he crossed the Śītodā, a river that cannot be crossed by mortals, and without effort reached the border of the land of the Siddhas.\(^3\) The Rākshasa said to him: "Here is the blessed mountain, called the mountain of the rising sun, in front of you, but I cannot set foot upon it, as it is the home of the Siddhas."

Then the Rākshasa, being dismissed by him, departed, and there Vidūshaka beheld a delightful lake; and he sat down

---

\(^1\) Here there is a pun. The word guṇa also means "rope."

\(^2\) For stories of transportation through the air see Wirt Sikes, British Goblins, p. 157 et seq.

\(^3\) See Vol. I, Appendix I, p. 204.—N.M.P.
on the bank of that lake, beautiful with the faces of full-blown lotuses, which, as it were, uttered a welcome to him with the hum of roaming bees. And there he saw unmistakable footsteps as of women, seeming to say to him: "This is the path to the house of your beloved." While he was thinking to himself, "Mortals cannot set foot on this mountain, therefore I had better stop here a moment and see whose footsteps these are," there came to the lake to draw water many beautiful women with golden pitchers in their hands. So he asked the women, after they had filled their pitchers with water, in a courteous manner. "For whom are you taking this water?" And those women said to him: "Excellent sir, a Vidyādhārī of the name of Bhadrā is dwelling on this mountain; this water is for her to bathe in."

Wonderful to say, Providence, seeming to be pleased with resolute men who attempt mighty enterprises, makes all things subserve their ends. For one of these women suddenly said to Vidūśhaka: "Noble sir, please lift this pitcher on to my shoulder." He consented, and when he lifted the pitcher on to her shoulder the discreet man put into it the jewelled ring he had before received from Bhadrā,¹ and then he sat down again on the bank of that lake, while those women went with the water to the house of Bhadrā. And while they were pouring over Bhadrā the water of ablution, her ring fell into her lap. When Bhadrā saw it she recognised it, and asked those friends of hers whether they had seen any stranger about. And they gave her this answer: "We saw a young mortal on the banks of the lake, and he lifted this pitcher for us." Then Bhadrā said: "Go and make him bathe and adorn himself, and quickly bring him here, for he is my husband, who has arrived in this country."

¹ Cf. the way in which Torello informs his wife of his presence in Boccaccio’s Decameron, tenth day, nov. ix. The novels of the tenth day must be derived from Indian, and probably Buddhistic, sources. There is a Buddhistic vein in all of them. A striking parallel to the fifth novel of the tenth day will be found farther on in this work. Cf. also for the incident of the ring Thorpe’s Yule-tide Stories, p. 167. See also the story of "Heinrich der Löwe," Simrock’s Deutsche Volksbücher, vol. i, pp. 21, 22; Waldau’s Böhmishe Märchen, pp. 365, 432; Coelho’s Contos Populares Portuguezes, p. 76; Prym and Socin’s Syrische Märchen, p. 72, and Ralston’s Tibetan Tales, Introduction, pp. xlix and l.——

When Bhadrā had said this, her companions went and told Vidūshaka the state of the case, and after he had bathed, brought him into her presence. And when he arrived he saw, after long separation, Bhadrā, who was eagerly expecting him, like the ripe blooming fruit of the tree of his own valour in visible form: she for her part rose up when she saw him, and offering him the argha,1 so to speak, by sprinkling him with her tears of joy, she fastened her twining arms round his neck like a garland. When they embraced one another the long-accumulated affection2 seemed to ooze from their limbs in the form of sweat, owing to excessive pressure. Then they sat down, and never satisfied with gazing at one another, they both, as it were, endured the agony of longing multiplied a hundredfold. Bhadrā then said to Vidūshaka: "How did you come to this land?" And he thereupon gave her this answer: "Supported by affection for thee, I came here enduring many risks to my life; what else can I say, fair one?" When she heard that, seeing that his love was excessive, as it

This "declaring presence" motif, as it might be called, is sometimes mixed up with other motifs; thus it appears in the well-known cycle of tales where the hero is given various tasks to perform before he can gain his bride, and must pick out the girl from a number exactly alike. It is sometimes an animal that helps, or the girl herself makes some sign. Readers will remember the well-known story of "Nala and Damayanti" in the Mahābhārata; but of this more later.—N.M.P.

1 An oblation to gods, or venerable men, of rice, dūrva grass, flowers, etc., with water, or of water only in a small boat-shaped vessel.

2 Sneha means "oil," and also "affection."
caused him to disregard his own life, Bhadrā said to him who through affection had endured the utmost: "My husband, I care not for my friends, nor my magic powers; you are my life, and I am your slave, my lord, bought by you with your virtues." Then Vidūshaka said: "Then come with me to live in Ujjayinī, my beloved, leaving all this heavenly joy." Bhadrā immediately accepted his proposal, and gave up all her magic gifts (which departed from her the moment she formed that resolution) with no more regret than if they had been straw. Then Vidūshaka rested with her there during that night, being waited on by her friend Yogēśvarī, and in the morning the successful hero descended with her from the mountain of the sunrise, and again called to mind the Rākshasa Yamadanshtra; the Rākshasa came the moment he was thought of, and Vidūshaka told him the direction of the journey he had to take, and then ascended his shoulder, having previously placed Bhadrā there. She too endured patiently to be placed on the shoulder of a very loathsome Rākshasa. What will not women do when mastered by affection?

So Vidūshaka, mounted on the Rākshasa, set out with his beloved, and again reached the city of Kārkotaka; and there men beheld him with fear, inspired by the sight of the Rākshasa; and when he saw King Āryavarman he demanded from him his daughter; and after receiving that princess surrendered by her father, whom he had won with his arm, he set forth from that city in the same style, mounted on the Rākshasa. And after he had gone some distance he found that wicked merchant on the shore of the sea who long ago cut the ropes when he had been thrown into the sea. And he took, together with his wealth, his daughter, whom he had before won as a reward for setting free the ship in the sea. And he considered the depriving that villain of his wealth as equivalent to putting him to death; for grovelling souls often value their hoards more than their life. Then mounted on the Rākshasa as on a chariot, taking with him that daughter of the merchant, he flew up into the heaven with the princess and Bhadrā, and journeying through the air he crossed the ocean, which like his valour was full of boisterous impetuosity, exhibiting it to his fair ones.¹ And he again reached the city of Paunḍravardhana, beheld with astonishment by all as he rode on a Rākshasa. There he greeted his wife, the daughter of Devasena, who had long desired his arrival, whom he had won by the defeat of the Rākshasa; and though her father tried to detain him, yet longing for his native land, he took her also with him and set out for Ujjayinī. And owing to the speed of the Rākshasa he soon reached that city, which appeared like his satisfaction at beholding his home, exhibited in visible form. There Vidūshaka was seen by the people, perched on the top of that huge Rākshasa, whose vast frame was illuminated by the beauty of his wives seated on his shoulder, as the moon² rising over the eastern mountain with gleaming herbs on its summit. The people being astonished and terrified, his father-in-law the King Ādityasena came to hear of it, and went out from the city. But Vidūshaka, when he saw him, quickly descended from the Rākshasa, and after prostrating himself approached the king; the king too welcomed him. Then Vidūshaka caused all his wives to come down from the shoulder of the Rākshasa, and released him to wander where he would. And after that Rākshasa had departed, Vidūshaka, accompanied by his wives, entered the king’s palace together with the king his father-in-law. There he delighted by his arrival that first wife of his, the daughter of that king, who suffered a long regret for his absence. And when the king said to him, “How did you obtain these wives, and who is that Rākshasa?” he told him the whole story.

1 The D. text edits kāthāyatamschāt, thus meaning "at hearing this, her affection came to its highest pitch."—N.M.P.
THE TRIUMPHANT RETURN

Then that king, pleased with his son-in-law’s valour, and knowing what it was expedient to do, gave him half his

¹ Sattva when applied to the ocean probably means “monsters.” So the whole compound would mean “in which was conspicuous the fury of gambling monsters.” The pun defies translation.
² I read auskhadhe. The Rākshasa is compared to the mountain, Vidūshaka to the moon, his wives to the gleaming herbs.
kingdom; and immediately Vidūshaka, though a Brāhman, became a monarch, with a lofty white umbrella and chowries waving on both sides of him. And then the city of Ujjayinī was joyful, full of the sound of festive drums and music, uttering shouts of delight. Thus he obtained the mighty rank of a king, and gradually conquered the whole earth, so that his foot was worshipped by all kings, and with Bhadrā for his consort he long lived in happiness with those wives of his, who were content, having abandoned jealousy. Thus resolute men, when Fortune favours them, find their own valour a great and successful stupefying charm that forcibly draws towards them prosperity.

[M] When they heard from the mouth of the King of Vatsa this varied tale\(^1\) full of marvellous incident, all his ministers sitting by his side and his two wives experienced excessive delight.

---

\(^1\) Thorpe in his Yule-tide Stories remarks that the story of Vidūshaka somewhat resembles in its ground-plot the tale of the “Beautiful Palace East of the Sun and North of the Earth.” With the latter he also compares the story of Śaktivega in the fifth book of the Kathā Sarit Sāgara. (See the Table of Contents of Thorpe’s Yule-tide Stories, p. xi.) Cf. also Sicilianische Märchen, vol. ii, p. 1, and for the cutting off of the giant’s arm, p. 50.—Numerous stories from all parts of Europe bearing a certain similarity to that in our text will be found in G. H. Gerould’s The Grateful Dead, Folk-Lore Society, 1908, pp. 44-75.

For some inexplicable reason Gerould heads the chapter “The Grateful Dead and the Poison Maiden,” when not one of the stories have anything to do with poison maidens. The women in question merely have snakes, dragons, etc. (which have caused the death of many husbands), extracted by magic or divine aid. He should have called this sub-motif “Possessed Women,” as he originally did on page 26 of the same volume, or else some such title as “The Fatal Bride,” “The Wedding of Death.”

For the connection of snakes and poisoned women, see Appendix III, pp. 306, 307 of this volume.—N.M.P.
NOTE ON RĀHU AND ECLIPSES

Rāhu was the Asura (see Vol. I, pp. 197-200) who, disguised as a god at the Churning of the Ocean (see Vol. I, pp. $1n$, $3n^2$, $55n^4$ and 202), obtained possession of some of the Amṛita and proceeded to drink it in order to become immortal. Sūrya and Soma (the sun and moon), however, noticed what was going on, and immediately told Nārāyaṇa (Vishṇu), who instantly cut off Rāhu’s head with his discus. As the head contained Amṛita it became immortal and came to represent the ascending nodes of the moon’s orbit. The body of Rāhu, according to the Purānic notion, was called Ketu, and represented the descending nodes. It also became the progenitor of the whole tribe of meteors and comets. Not having obtained his wish to become completely immortal, Rāhu naturally bore a grudge against Sūrya and Soma, and, whenever he gets the opportunity, he tries to swallow them. His shadow is thus thrown on the intended victim, and so are caused what we call the eclipses!

The interesting point about this myth is that the origin appears to be unknown. As E. J. Thomas has mentioned (Hastings’ Ency. Rel. Eth., “Sun, Moon and Stars (Buddhist),” vol. xii, p. 72), the story is not early Buddhist, nor even ancient Hindu. Although it occurs in the Mahābhārata (I, xix), it is not found in the account of the Churning of the Ocean in the Vishṇu Purāṇa. Is it, then, Aryan or non-Aryan? An eclipse of the sun or moon has everywhere been regarded with dread, and in many parts of the world its advent still gives rise to a variety of rites, some of a threatening and others of a propitiatory nature. The usual explanatory myth resembles that described above, at least as far as the idea of the sun or moon being devoured is concerned. It is an animal or demon who is trying to eat up the sun or moon, hence it is necessary to frighten it away by terrifying noises.

In China and Assam gongs are sounded for this purpose, while more primitive peoples scream, hit their cooking utensils and fire pistols, and among the Senecis of Eastern Peru lighted arrows are shot at the intruder. It is interesting to notice that in the Confucian classic Tsun Tai (“Springs and Autumnns”) the word for “eclipse” is the same as that for “eat.” Among the Tlaxcalans of Mexico matters became very serious during an eclipse. The phenomenon was thought to be caused by a fight between the sun and moon, and in order to appease them red-skinned people were sacrificed to the sun and albinos to the moon.

The Peruvians (and at one period the Mexicans also) considered that, owing to a former kindness rendered it, dogs were held in high esteem by the moon. Accordingly when an eclipse of the moon occurred, they beat all the dogs, so that the moon, angry at this treatment of her friends, would immediately uncover her face.

Another primitive idea is that the light of the sun and moon has gone out, and consequently a fire or torches lit during the eclipse will persuade the luminary to smile upon the world once more.

VOL. II.
As in China, the Hindus see a hare in the moon in place of our "man" (see Ocean of Story, Vol. I, p. 109n). The Todas of the Nilgiri Hills imagine that during an eclipse of the moon a snake is devouring the hare. They fast until the eclipse is over and shout out to frighten away the snake (see Rivers, The Todas, p. 593).

In the Central Provinces it is believed that Rāhu was either a sweeper or the deity of the sweepers; thus the Mehtar caste of scavengers collect alms during an eclipse, as it is thought that Rāhu will be thus appeased and loose his hold on the luminaries. Similarly the Teli, or oil-pressers caste of the Chhattisgarh and Nagpur divisions, believe that the sun owes the sweeper a debt which he refuses to pay. The sweeper, however, is not to be put off easily and sits dharnā at the sun's door. This is obvious, for his dark shadow can be seen quite clearly. In time the debt is paid and the sweeper departs.

In Bombay, J. J. Modi (see reference below) was told the following as the usual explanation of an eclipse.

Rāma, on his return from the defeat of Rāvana in Laṅkā, gave a feast to his victorious army. Mahādeva (Śiva) and Pārvatī were serving the meals. Presently Mahādeva drew the attention of Pārvatī to the presence of a low-caste Māng boy (a caste who act as village musicians and castrate bullocks, the women serving as midwives) in the assembly, and asked her to be careful, and to serve him the meals from a distance. But as soon as Rāma saw the Māng he slew him for daring to mar the sacredness of the feast by his impure presence. The mother of the slain boy took up the head, placed it in a basket and tried in vain to resuscitate it with fresh water. With the basket containing the head of her lost son, she went to the gods and goddesses begging for her meals. In turn she still goes to the sun and moon, threatening to touch them if her request is not granted, thus desecrating their sacred character. It is the shadow of her basket that causes the eclipse, and so it is to remove this Māng woman, this important creditor, that people are asked to give offerings to the luminaries and alms to the Māng caste.

An eclipse is always of evil omen, and is regarded rather like an evil eye from whose influence everything should be protected. The wise housewife (says Crooke, op. cit., vol. i, pp. 21, 22), when an eclipse is announced, takes a leaf of the Tulasī or sacred basil, and sprinkling Ganges water on it, puts the leaf in the jars containing the drinking water for the use of the family and the cooked food, and thus keeps them pure while the eclipse is going on. Confectioners, who are obliged to keep large quantities of cooked food ready, relieve themselves and their customers from the taboo by keeping some of the sacred kūṣa or dūb grass in their vessels when an eclipse is expected. A pregnant woman will do no work during an eclipse, as otherwise she believes that her child would be deformed, and the deformity is supposed to bear some relation to the work which is being done by her at the time. Thus, if she were to sew anything, the baby would have a hole in its flesh, generally near the ear; if she cut anything, the child would have a hare-lip. On the same principle the horns of pregnant cattle are smeared with red paint during an eclipse, because red is a colour abhorred by demons. While the eclipse is going on, drinking water, eating food, and all household business, as well as the worship of the gods, are all prohibited. No respectable Hindu will at such a time sleep on a bedstead or lie down to rest, and he will give alms in barley or copper coins to relieve the pain of the suffering luminaries.

An eclipse is an important event among modern Hindus, and considerable ritual is carried out in every Brāhmaṇ household (see Mrs Stevenson, The Rites of the Twice-born, p. 352). For further information on the superstitions of eclipses reference should be made to E. B. Tylor, Primitive Culture, vol. i, pp. 288, 328 et seq., and 356; W. Crooke, Folk-Lore of Northern India, vol. i, pp. 18-23; Jivanji Jamshedji Modi, "A few Ancient Beliefs about the Eclipse and a few Superstitions based on these Beliefs," Journ. Anth. Soc. Bomb., vol. iii, 1894, pp. 346-360; Frazer, Golden Bough, vol. i, pp. 311, 312; vol. x, pp. 70, 162n; Russell, Tribes and Castes of the Central Provinces, vol. iv, pp. 232, 550; W. D. Wallis, "Prodigies and Portents," Hastings' Ency. Rel. Eth., vol. x, pp. 368, 369, and the numerous authors on "Sun, Moon and Stars" in ditto vol. xii, pp. 48-103.—N.M.P.
CHAPTER XIX

THEN Yaugandharāyaṇa said to the King of Vatsa:

"King, it is known that you possess the favour of destiny, as well as courage; and I also have taken some trouble about the right course of policy to be pursued in this matter: therefore carry out as soon as possible your plan of conquering the regions." When his chief minister had said this to him, the King of Vatsa answered: "Admitting that this is true, nevertheless the accomplishment of auspicious undertakings is always attended with difficulties, accordingly I will with this object propitiate Siva by austerities, for without his favour how can I obtain what I desire?" When they heard that, his ministers approved of his performing austerities, as the chiefs of the monkeys did in the case of Rāma, when he was intent upon building a bridge over the ocean.¹

¹ This well-known incident occurs in the sixth book of the Rāmāyaṇa, known as the Yuddha-kāṇḍa ("Battle Section"). Rāma, having concluded an alliance with Sugrīva, king of the monkeys, is advised by him to build a bridge from the mainland to Lankā (Ceylon), where the Rākṣasa, Rāvana, is holding Sītā (Rāma’s wife) captive.

Accordingly a huge army of monkeys assembles on the seashore. Vibhishana, Rāvana’s brother, advises the surrender of Sītā, but is insulted by Rāvana. He thereupon joins Rāma and advises him to propitiate the God of the Sea, before starting building the bridge. This is done, and then, tearing up rocks and trees, the multitude of monkeys construct a bridge across the straits. A fearful battle ensues, Rāvana is killed, and after Sītā has proved her purity she is joyfully received back by Rāma.

Thus the Hindus have given the name Rāma’s Bridge (Rāmasetu) to the row of islands and sandbanks stretching from the island of Manaar, near the north-west coast of Ceylon, to the island of Rāmeśvarman, just off the Indian mainland. It is a famous place of pilgrimage, and contains a wonderful carved temple, 700 ft. long, with pillared corridors.

The English name Adam’s Bridge is in all probability adopted from the Arabs, who regard Ceylon as the place of Adam’s exile after he had been driven from Eden. The well-known depression on Adam’s Peak, the most prominent, though not the largest, mountain in Ceylon, is considered to
And after the king had fasted for three nights, engaged in austerities with the queens and the ministers, Śiva said to him in a dream: "I am satisfied with thee, therefore rise up; thou shalt obtain an unimpeded triumph, and thou shalt soon have a son who shall be king of all the Vidyādharas." Then the king woke up, with all his fatigue removed by the favour of Śiva, like the new moon increased by the rays of the sun. And in the morning he delighted his ministers by telling them that dream, and the two queens, tender as flowers, who were worn out by the fasting they had endured to fulfil the vow. And they were refreshed by the description of his dream, well worthy of being drunk in with the ears, and its effect was like that of medicine,¹ for it restored their strength.

The king obtained by his austerities a power equal to that of his ancestors, and his wives obtained the saintly renown of matrons devoted to their husband. But on the morrow, when the feast at the end of the fast was celebrated, and the citizens were beside themselves with joy, Yaugandharāyāna thus addressed the king: "You are fortunate, O King, in that the holy Śiva is so well disposed towards you, so proceed now to conquer your enemies, and then enjoy the prosperity won by your arm. For when prosperity is acquired by a king’s own virtues it remains fixed in his family, for blessings acquired by the virtues of the owners are never lost. And for this reason it was that that treasure long buried in the ground, which had been accumulated by your ancestors and then lost, was recovered by you. Moreover with reference to this matter hear the following tale:—

be Adam’s footprint by the Mohammedans, Buddha’s footprint by the Buddhists, Śiva’s by the Brāhmans, while the claims of the Portuguese Christians are divided between St Thomas and the eunuch of Candace, Queen of Ethiopia.

For further information on this subject reference should be made to T. W. Rhys Davids’ "Adam’s Peak," Hastings’ Ency. Rel. Eth., vol. i, pp. 87, 88, with the references given; Yule and Cordier, Marco Polo (1908), vol. ii, pp. 321, 322, 328n, and Cathay and the Way Thither, vol. i, pp. 171, 172, vol. iii, pp. 233, 242.—N.M.P.

¹ Perhaps we should read svādauslagha, “sweet medicine.”
23. Story of Devadāsa

Long ago there was in the city of Pātaliputra a certain merchant’s son, sprung from a rich family, and his name was Devadāsa. And he married a wife from the city of Paunḍravardhana, the daughter of some rich merchant. When his father died, Devadāsa became, in course of time, addicted to vice, and lost all his wealth at play. And then his wife’s father came and took away to his own house in Paunḍravardhana his daughter, who was distressed by poverty and the other hardships of her lot. Gradually the husband began to be afflicted by his misfortunes, and wishing to be set up in his business, he came to Paunḍravardhana to ask his father-in-law to lend him the capital which he required. And having arrived in the evening at the city of Paunḍravardhana, seeing that he was begrimed with dust and in tattered garments, he thought to himself: “How can I enter my father-in-law’s house in this state? In truth for a proud man death is preferable to exhibiting poverty before one’s relations.” Thus reflecting, he went into the market-place, and remained outside a certain shop during the night, crouching with contracted body, like the lotus which is folded at night. And immediately he saw a certain young merchant open the door of that shop and enter it. And a moment after he saw a woman come with noiseless step to that same place, and rapidly enter. And while he fixed his eyes on the interior of the shop, in which a light was burning, he recognised in that woman his own wife. Then Devadāsa seeing that wife of his repairing to another man, and bolting the door, being smitten with the thunderbolt of grief, thought to himself: “A man deprived of wealth loses even his own body, how then can he hope to retain the affections of a woman? For women have fickleness implanted in their nature by an invariable law, like the flashes of lightning. So here I have an instance of the misfortunes which befall men who fall into the sea of vice, and of the behaviour of an independent woman who lives in her father’s house.”

1 As we shall see in the note on p. 88n1, this was considered in the Rig-Veda quite sufficient for the wife to turn to another man.—N.M.P.
Thus he reflected as he stood outside, and he seemed to himself to hear his wife confidentially conversing with her lover. So he applied his ear to the door, and that wicked woman was at that moment saying in secret to the merchant, her paramour: "Listen; as I am so fond of you, I will today tell you a secret: my husband long ago had a great-grandfather named Viravarman; in the courtyard of his house he secretly buried in the ground four jars of gold, one jar in each of the four corners. And he then informed one of his wives of that fact, and his wife at the time of her death told her daughter-in-law, she told it to her daughter-in-law, who was my mother-in-law, and my mother-in-law told it to me. So this is an oral tradition in my husband's family, descending through the mothers-in-law. But I did not tell it to my husband though he is poor, for he is odious to me as being addicted to gambling, but you are above all dear to me. So go to my husband's town and buy the house from him with money, and after you have obtained that gold come here and live happily with me."

When the merchant, her paramour, heard this from that treacherous woman, he was much pleased with her, thinking that he had obtained a treasure without any trouble. Devadāsa, for his part, who was outside, bore henceforth the hope of wealth, so to speak, riveted in his heart with those piercing words of his wicked wife. So he went thence quickly to the city of Pāṭaliputra, and after reaching his house he took that treasure and appropriated it. Then that merchant, who was in secret the paramour of his wife, arrived in that country on pretence of trading, but in reality eager to obtain the treasure. So he bought that house from Devadāsa, who made it over to him for a large sum of money. Then Devadāsa set up another home, and cunningly brought back that wife of his from the house of his father-in-law. When this had been done, that wicked merchant, who was the lover of his wife, not having obtained the treasure, came and said to him: "This house of yours is old and I do not like it; so give me back my money and take back your own house."

Thus he demanded, and Devadāsa refused, and being engaged in a violent altercation, they both went before the king. In his presence Devadāsa poured forth the whole story of his wife, painful to him as venom concealed in his breast. Then the king had his wife summoned, and after ascertaining the truth of the case he punished that adulterous merchant with the loss of all his property. Devadāsa for his part cut off the nose of that wicked wife, and married another, and then lived happily in his native city on the treasure he had obtained.

[M] "Thus treasure obtained by virtuous methods is continued to a man's posterity, but treasure of another kind is as easily melted away as a flake of snow when the rain begins to fall. Therefore a man should endeavour to obtain wealth by lawful methods, but a king especially, since wealth is the root of the tree of empire. So honour all your ministers according to custom, in order that you may obtain success, and then accomplish the conquest of the regions, so as to gain opulence in addition to virtue. For out of regard to the fact that you are allied by marriage with your two powerful fathers-in-law, few kings will oppose you; most will join you. However, this King of Benares named Brahmadatta is always your enemy; therefore conquer him first; when he is

1 In the oldest historical period of India there was no word for "adultery"; yet its occurrence is distinctly proved, if proof be needed among a highly developed culture like the Aryan, by various passages in the Rig-Veda. One in particular is of special interest here as it shows that the adultery of a woman whose husband gambled was of quite ordinary occurrence. The passage is in verse 4 of the didactic poem Rig-Veda, x, 34: "Others lay hands on the wife of the man who abandons himself to the dice."

The method of punishment mentioned in our text is found in other places besides India; thus in Mexico the woman had her nose and ears cut off, and was stoned to death (see A. de Herrera, West Indies, vol. iv, p. 388, and W. Prescott, Peru, p. 21). Every conceivable form of punishment imaginable has been employed in different parts of the world. For full details reference should be made to the numerous articles on "Adultery" in Hastings' Ency. Rel. Eth., vol. i, pp. 122-137. Among the Pāḍhi caste of Central India, the punishment for adultery in either sex consists in cutting off a piece of the left ear with a razor. See Russell, Tribes and Castes of the Central Provinces, vol. iv, p. 364; Ronaldshay, India, a Bird's-Eye View, 1924, p. 46, and cf. Flinders Petrie, "Assyrian and Hittite Society," Ancient Egypt, March 1924, p. 23 et seq.—N.M.P. conquered, conquer the eastern quarter and gradually all the quarters, and exalt the glory of the race of Paṇḍu gleaming white like a lotus."

When his chief minister said this to him, the King of Vatsa consented, eager for conquest, and ordered his subjects to prepare for the expedition; and he gave the sovereignty of the country of Videha to his brother-in-law Gopālaka, by way of reward for his assistance, thereby showing his knowledge of policy; and he gave to Sinhavarman, the brother of Padmāvatī, who came to his assistance with his forces, the land of Chedi, treating him with great respect; and the monarch summoned Pulindaka, the friendly King of the Bhillas, who filled the quarters with his hordes, as the rainy season fills them with clouds; and while the preparation for the expedition was going on in the great king’s territories a strange anxiety was produced in the heart of his enemies; but Yaugandharāyaṇa first sent spies to Benares to find out the proceedings of King Brahmadatta; then on an auspicious day, being cheered with omens portending victory, the King of Vatsa first marched against Brahmadatta in the eastern quarter, having mounted a tall victorious elephant, with a lofty umbrella on its back, as a furious lion ascends a mountain with one tree in full bloom on it.

And his expedition was facilitated by the autumn, which arrived as a harbinger of good fortune, and showed him an easy path, across rivers flowing with diminished volume, and he filled the face of the land with his shouting forces, so as to produce the appearance of a sudden rainy season without clouds; and then the cardinal points, resounding with the echoes of the roaring of his host, seemed to be telling one another their fears of his coming, and his horses, collecting the brightness of the sun on their golden trappings, moved along, followed, as it were, by the fire pleased with the purification of his army.

2 I read ardhaḥ.
3 A MS. in the Sanskrit College reads sambhavaḥ for the sampadah of Dr Brockhaus' text.
4 Lustratio exercitus; waving lights formed part of the ceremony.
And his elephants with their ears like white chowries, and with streams of ichor flowing from their temples reddened by being mixed with vermillion, appeared, as he marched along, like the sons of the mountains, streaked with the white clouds of autumn, and pouring down streams of water coloured with red mineral, sent by the parent hills, in their fear, to join his expedition. And the dust from the earth concealed the brightness of the sun, as if thinking that the king could not endure the effulgent splendour of rivals. And the two queens followed the king step by step on the way, like the Goddess of Fame, and the Fortune of Victory, attracted by his politic virtues.\(^1\) The silk of his host’s banners, tossed to and fro in the wind, seemed to say to his enemies: “Bend in submission, or flee.” Thus he marched, beholding the districts full of blown white lotuses, like the uplifted hoods of the serpent Sesa\(^2\) terrified with fear of the destruction of the world.

In the meanwhile those spies, commissioned by Yaugandharāyana, assuming the vows of skull-bearing worshippers of Śiva,\(^3\) reached the city of Benares. And one of them, who was acquainted with the art of juggling, exhibiting his skill, assumed the part of teacher, and the others passed themselves off as his pupils. And they celebrated that pretended teacher, who subsisted on alms, from place to place, saying: “This master of ours is acquainted with past, present and future.” Whatever that sage predicted, in the way of fires and so on, to those who came to consult him about the future, his pupils took care to bring about secretly; so he became famous. He gained complete ascendancy over the mind of a certain Rājpūt courtier there, a favourite of the king, who was won over by this mean skill of the teacher. And when the war with the King of Vatsa came on, the King Brahmadatta began to consult him by the agency of the Rājpūt, so that he learnt the secrets of the government.

\(^1\) It also means “drawing cords.”

\(^2\) He is sometimes represented as bearing the entire world on one of his heads.—See Vol. I, p. 109a².—N.M.P.

\(^3\) The Śaiva mendicants have ten classes, known collectively as Daśnāmis, “ten names.” Among other more respectable orders are included the Aghorī, a sect of ascetics who follow the most vile practices imaginable. They are also known by the name of Kāpālikā or Kapālādhārīn (Skr. kāpāla, “a skull,” dhārīn, “carrying”). For fuller details see H. W. Barrow, “Aghoris and Aghorapanthis,” Journ. Anth. Soc. Bomb., vol. iii, No. 4, 1893, pp. 197-251; W. Crooke, “Aghorī,” Hastings’ Ency. Rel. Eth., vol. i, pp. 210-213. The connection of skulls with the worship of Śiva has already occurred in the Ocean of Story (Vol. I, p. 5, 5n).—N.M.P.

Then the minister of Brahmadatta, Yogakaraṇḍaka, laid snares in the path of the King of Vatsa as he advanced. He tainted, by means of poison and other deleterious substances, the trees, flowering creepers, water and grass all along the line of march. And he sent poison damsels as dancing-girls among the enemy’s host, and he also dispatched nocturnal assassins into their midst. But that spy, who had assumed the character of a prophet, found all this out, and then quickly informed Yaugandharāyaṇa of it by means of his companions. Yaugandharāyaṇa for his part, when he found it out, purified at every step along the line of march the poisoned grass, water, and so on, by means of corrective antidotes, and forbade in the camp the society of strange women, and with the help of Rumaṇvat he captured and put to death those assassins. When he heard of that, Brahmadatta, having found all his stratagems fail, came to the conclusion that the King of Vatsa, who filled with his forces the whole country, was hard to overcome. After deliberating and sending an ambassador, he came in person to the King of Vatsa, who was encamped near, placing his clasped hands upon his head in token of submission.

The King of Vatsa for his part, when the King of Benares came to him, bringing a present, received him with respect and kindness; for heroes love submission. He being thus subdued, that mighty king went on pacifying the East, making the yielding bend, but extirpating the obstinate, as the wind treats the trees, until he reached the eastern ocean, rolling with quivering waves, as it were, trembling with terror on account of the Ganges having been conquered. On its extreme shore he set up a pillar of victory, looking like the king of the serpents emerging from the world below to crave immunity for Pāṭāla. Then the people of Kalinga submitted and paid tribute, and acted as the king’s guides, so that the renown of that renowned one ascended the mountain of Mahendra. Having conquered a forest of kings by means of his elephants, which seemed like the peaks of the Vindhya come to him terrified at the conquest of Mahendra, he went to the southern quarter. There he made his enemies cease their threatening murmurs and take to the mountains, strengthless and pale, treating them as the season of autumn treats the clouds.

1 For a detailed account of poison damsels, etc., see Appendix III at the end of this volume.—N.M.P.

The Kāverī being crossed by him in his victorious onset, and the glory of the king of the Chola race being surpassed, were befouled at the same time. He no longer allowed the Muralas to exalt their heads, for they were completely beaten down by tributes imposed on them. Though his elephants drank the waters of the Godāvari divided into

1 Jayastambha. Wilson remarks that the erection of these columns is often alluded to by Hindu writers, and explains the characters of the solitary columns which are sometimes met with, as the Lāṭ at Delhi, the pillars at Allahābād, Bubbal, etc.

2 Kalinga is usually described as extending from Orissa to Drāviḍa or below Madras, the coast of the Northern Circars. It appears, however, to be sometimes the Delta of the Ganges. It was known to the ancients as Regio Calingarum, and is familiar to the natives of the Eastern Archipelago by the name of Kling (Wilson).

3 The clouds are niḥsāra, void of substance, as being no longer heavy with rain. The thunder ceases in the autumn.

4 Chōla was the sovereignty of the western part of the peninsula on the Carnatic, extending southwards to Tanjore, where it was bounded by the Pāṇḍyan kingdom. It appears to have been the Regio Soretanum of Ptolemy, and the Chōla maṇḍala, or district, furnishes the modern appellation of the Coromandel coast (Wilson, Essays, p. 241n).

5 Murala is another name for Kerala, now Malabar (Hall). Wilson identifies it with the Curula of Ptolemy.—Barnett, however, considers this very dubious—N.M.P.

6 By kānta and kuceṇu being separated in the Brockhaus text, Tawney misunderstood the whole phrase. The D. text reads it as one word, the translation being: “Not only did he not allow the Muralas to keep their heads high, he abated also the elevation of the women’s breasts beaten down by their own hands (in mourning over their killed relations).” See Speyer, op. cit., p. 102.—N.M.P.
seven streams, they seemed to discharge them again sevenfold in the form of ichor. Then the king crossed the Revā and reached Ujjayinī, and entered the city, being made by King Chaṇḍamahāsena to precede him. And there he became the target of the amorous sidelong glances of the ladies of Mālava, who shine with twofold beauty by loosening their braided hair and wearing garlands; and he remained there in great comfort, hospitably entertained by his father-in-law, so that he even forgot the long-regretted enjoyments of his native land. And Vāsavādattā was continually at her parent’s side, remembering her childhood, seeming despondent even in her happiness.

The King Chaṇḍamahāsena was as much delighted at meeting Padmāvati as he was at meeting again his own daughter. But after he had rested some days, the delighted King of Vatsa, reinforced by the troops of his father-in-law, marched towards the western region; his curved sword¹ was surely the smoke of the fire of his valour, since it dimmed with gushing tears the eyes of the women of Lāṭa; the mountain of Mandara, when its woods were broken through by his elephants, seemed to tremble lest he should root it up to churn the sea.² Surely he was a splendid luminary excelling the sun and other orbs, since in his victorious career he enjoyed a glorious rising even in the western quarter. Then he went to Alakā, distinguished by the presence of Kuvera, displaying its beauties before him—that is to say, to the quarter made lovely by the smile of Kailāsa—and having subdued the King of Sindh, at the head of his cavalry he destroyed the Mlechchhas as Rāma destroyed the Rākshasas at the head of the army of monkeys; the cavalry squadrons of the Turushkas³ were broken on the masses of his elephants, as the waves of the agitated sea on the woods that line the seashore. The august hero received the tribute of his foes, and cut off the head of the wicked King of the Pārasīkas\(^1\) as Vishṇu did that of Rāhu.\(^2\) His glory, after he had inflicted a defeat on the Hūnas,\(^3\) made the four quarters resound, and poured down the Himalaya like a second Ganges. When the hosts of the monarch, whose enemies were still from fear, were shouting, a hostile answer was heard only in the hollows of the rocks. It is not strange that then the King of Kāmarūpa,\(^4\) bending before him with head deprived of the umbrella,\(^5\) was without shade and also without brightness. Then that sovereign returned, followed by elephants presented by the King of Kāmarūpa, resembling moving rocks made over to him by the mountains by way of tribute.

¹ Or perhaps more literally “creep-er-like sword.” Probably the expression means “flexible, well-tempered sword,” as Professor Nilmāni Mukhopādhyāya has suggested to me.
² It has been employed for this purpose by the gods and Asuras. Lāṭa = the Larice of Ptolemy (Wilson).—i.e. Gujarāt. See Cambridge History of India, vol. i, p. 606.
³ Turks, the Indo-scythae of the ancients (Wilson).

Having thus conquered the earth, the King of Vatsa with his attendants reached the city of Magadha, the father of Pādmāvatī. But the King of Magadha, when he arrived with the queens, was as joyous as the God of Love when the moon illuminates the night. Vāsava-dattā, who had lived with him before without being recognised, was now made known to him, and he considered her deserving of the highest regard.

Then that victorious King of Vatsa, having been honoured by the King of Magadha with his whole city, followed by the minds of all the people which pursued him out of affection, having swallowed the surface of the earth with his mighty army, returned to Lāvānaka in his own dominions.

---

1 Persians.
2 See note on p. 81.—N.M.P.
3 Perhaps the Huns.
4 The western portion of Assam (Wilson).
5 See Appendix II, pp. 263-272.—N.M.P.
CHAPTER XX

THEN the King of Vatsa, while encamped in Lāvānaka [M] to rest his army, said in secret to Yaugandharāyaṇa: "Through your sagacity I have conquered all the kings upon the earth, and they being won over by politic devices will not conspire against me. But this King of Benares, Brahmadatta, is an ill-conditioned fellow, and he alone, I think, will plot against me; what confidence can be reposed in the wicked-minded?" Then Yaugandharāyaṇa, being spoken to in this strain by the king, answered: "O King, Brahmadatta will not plot against you again, for when he was conquered and submitted, you showed him great consideration; and what sensible man will injure one who treats him well? Whoever does, will find that it turns out unfortunately for himself, and on this point listen to what I am going to say; I will tell you a tale.

24. Story of Phalabhūti

There was once on a time in the land of Padma an excellent Brāhmaṇa of high renown, named Agnidatta, who lived on a grant of land given by the king. He had born to him two sons, the elder named Somadatta, and the second Vaiśvānaradatta. The elder of them was of fine person, but ignorant, and ill-conducted, but the second was sagacious, well-conducted, and fond of study. And those two after they were married, and their father had died, divided that royal grant and the rest of his possessions between them, each taking half; and the younger of the two was honoured by the king, but the elder, Somadatta, who was of unsteady character, remained a husbandman.

One day a Brāhmaṇa, who had been a friend of his father's, seeing him engaged in conversation with some Śūdras, thus addressed him: "Though you are the son of Agnidatta, you behave like a Śūdra, you blockhead, and you are not ashamed, though you see your own brother in favour with the king.” Somadatta, when he heard that, flew into a passion, and, forgetting the respect due to the old man, ran upon him, and gave him a kick. Then the Brāhman, enraged on account of the kick, immediately called on some other Brāhmans to bear witness to it, and went and complained to the king. The king sent out soldiers to take Somadatta prisoner, but they, when they went out, were slain by his friends, who had taken up arms. Then the king sent out a second force, and captured Somadatta, and blinded by wrath ordered him to be impaled. Then that Brāhman, as he was being lifted on to the stake, suddenly fell to the ground, as if he were flung down by somebody. And those executioners, when preparing to lift him on again, became blind, for the Fates protect one who is destined to be prosperous.

The king, as soon as he heard of the occurrence, was pleased, and being entreated by the younger brother, spared the life of Somadatta; then Somadatta, having escaped death, desired to go to another land with his wife on account of the insulting treatment of the king, and when his relations in a body disapproved of his departure, he determined to live without the half of the king’s grant, which he resigned; then, finding no other means of support, he desired to practise husbandry, and went to the forest on a lucky day to find a piece of ground suitable for it. There he found a promising piece of ground, from which it seemed likely that an abundant crop could be produced, and in the middle of it he saw an Aśvattha tree of great size. Desiring ground fit for cultivation, and seeing that tree to be cool like the rainy season, as it kept off the rays of the sun with its auspicious thick shade, he was much delighted. He said: “I am a faithful votary of that being, whoever he may be, that presides over this tree,” and walking round the tree so as to keep it on his

1 For the worship of trees and tree-spirits, see Grimm’s Teutonic Mythology, p. 75 et seq., and Tylor’s Primitive Culture, vol. ii, p. 196 et seq.——Besides the references already given in Vol. I, p. 144n1, see also Sidney Hartland, Legend of Perseus, 1895, vol. ii, pp. 175-231; Crooke, Popular Religion of Northern India, vol. ii, pp. 83-121; Westermarck, Origin and Development of right, he bowed before it. Then he yoked a pair of bullocks, and recited a prayer for success, and after making an oblation to that tree, he began to plough there. And he remained under that tree night and day, and his wife always brought him his meals there. And in course of time, when the corn was ripe, that piece of ground was, as fate would have it, unexpectedly plundered by the troops of a hostile kingdom. Then the hostile force having departed, the courageous man, though his corn was destroyed, comforted his weeping wife, gave her the little that remained, and after making an offering as before, remained in the same place, under the same tree. For that is the character of resolute men, that their perseverance is increased by misfortune.

Then one night, when he was sleepless from anxiety and alone, a voice came out from that Aśvattha tree: "O Somadatta, I am pleased with thee, therefore go to the kingdom of a king named Ādityaprabha in the land of Śrikaṇṭha; continually repeat at the door of that king (after reciting the form of words used at the evening oblation to Agni) the following sentence:—

'I am Phalabhūti by name, a Brāhmaṇa, hear what I say: he who does good will obtain good, and he who does evil will obtain evil'; by repeating this thou shalt obtain great prosperity; and now learn from me the form of words used at the evening oblation to Agni; I am a Yaksha." Having said this, and having immediately taught him by his power the form of words used in the evening oblation, the voice in the tree ceased.

And the next morning the wise Somadatta set out with his wife, having received the name of Phalabhūti by imposition of the Yaksha, and after crossing various forests, uneven and labyrinthine as his own calamities, he reached the land of Śrikaṇṭha. There he recited at the king's door the form of words used at the evening oblation, and then he announced, as he had been directed, his name as Phalabhūti, and uttered the following speech, which excited the curiosity of the people:—"The doer of good will obtain good, but the doer of evil, evil." And after he had said this frequently, the King Ādityaprabha, being full of curiosity, caused Phalabhūti to be brought into the palace, and he entered, and over and over again repeated that same speech in the presence of the king. That made the king and all his courtiers laugh. And the king and his chiefs gave him garments and ornaments, and also villages, for the amusement of great men is not without fruit; and so Phalabhūti, having been originally poor, immediately obtained by the favour of the Guhyaka\(^1\) wealth bestowed by the king; and by continually reciting the words mentioned above he became a special favourite of the monarch; for the regal mind loves diversion. And gradually he attained to a position of love and respect in the palace, in the kingdom, and in the female apartments, as being beloved by the king.

---

1 See Vol. I, pp. 190-193.—N.M.P.

2 I here read dūrāsāḥ for the dūrāsāḥ of Dr Brockhaus' text. It must be a misprint. A MS. in the Sanskrit College reads dūrāsāḥ.

One day that King Ādityaprabha returned from hunting in the forest, and quickly entered his harem\(^2\); his suspicions were aroused by the confusion of the warders, and when he entered, he saw the queen named Kuvalayāvalī engaged in worshipping the gods, stark naked\(^3\) with her hair standing on end, and her eyes half closed, with a large patch of red lead upon her forehead, with her lips trembling in muttering charms, in the midst of a great circle\(^4\) strewed with various coloured powders,

---

1 The Guhyakas are demigods, attendants upon Kuvera and guardians of his wealth.—See Vol. I, Appendix I, p. 203.—N.M.P.
2 See note, p. 162.—N.M.P.
3 Literally, "having the cardinal points as her only garment."—For nudity in ritual and magic see Note 1 at the end of this chapter.—N.M.P.
4 For the circle see Henry VI, Part II, Act i, sc. 4, line 25, and Henry V, Act v, sc. 2, line 420: "If you would conjure . . . you must make a circle." See also Ralston's Russian Folk-Tales, p. 272; Veckenstedt's Wendische Sagen, pp. 292, 302, 308. See also Wirt Sikes, British Goblins, pp. 200, 201; Henderson's Northern Folk-Lore, p. 19; Bartsch's Sagen, München und Gebräuche aus Meklenburg, vol. i, pp. 128, 213. Prof. Jebb, in his notes on Theophrastus' "Superstitious Man," observes: "The object of all those ceremonies, in which the offerings were carried round the person or place to be purified, was to trace a charmed circle within which the powers of evil should not after offering a horrible oblation of blood, spirits and human flesh. She for her part, when the king entered, in her confusion seized her garments, and when questioned by him immediately answered, after craving pardon for what she had done: "I have gone through this ceremony in order that you might obtain prosperity, and now, my lord, listen to the way in which I learnt these rites, and the secret of my magic skill.

24A. Kuvalayāvalī and the Witch Kālarātri

Long ago, when I was living in my father's house, I was thus addressed, while enjoying myself in the garden during the spring festival, by my friends who met me there: "There is in this pleasure-garden an image of Gāñēśa, the god of gods, in the middle of an arbour made of trees, and that image grants boons, and its power has been tested. Approach with devout faith that granter of petitions, and worship him, in order that you may soon obtain without difficulty a suitable husband." When I heard that, I asked my friends in my ignorance: "What! do maidens obtain husbands by come." Cf. also Grössler's Sagen aus der Grafschaft Mansfeld, p. 217; Brand's Popular Antiquities, vol. iii, p. 56; Grohmann's Sagen aus Böhmen, p. 226. — In his Popular Religion and Folk-Lore of Northern India (vol. i, pp. 108, 142; vol. ii, p. 41) W. Crooke gives details of the circle among the Hindus. For the magic circle in Babylonia, Assyria and adjacent countries see R. Campbell Thompson, Semitic Magic, 1908, pp. lx et. seq., 102, 123, 165, 204 and 207. The numerous medieval references in the works of William of Auvergne, Roger Bacon, Raymond Lull, Peter of Abano, etc., are all to be found in Thorndike, A History of Magic and Experimental Science, 1923. (See the General Index in each volume under "Circle, magic.") For a comprehensive article on the whole subject reference should be made to A. E. Crawley, "Magical Circle," Hastings' Ency. Rel. Eth., vol. viii, pp. 321-324. I would also draw the attention of readers to the exhaustive series of articles on "Magic" by a large number of eminent scholars in the same volume (pp. 245-321).

It appears that the use of the magical circle is really twofold. Firstly it serves as a protective barrier to the dead and dying, and also round a house, subsequently giving rise to the superstitions connected with wedding rings, bangles, etc. Secondly it appears in black magic as a kind of magical vantage ground in which the "operator" is himself safe and to which he can compel the presence of evil spirits. The circle also denotes finality and continuity. It commands every point of the compass and can be regarded as an inner concentric circle of the horizon itself. All these points are made quite clear worshipping Gaṇeśa?" Then they answered me: "Why do you ask such a question? Without worshipping him no one obtains any success in this world; and in proof of it we will give you an instance of his power. Listen." Saying this, my friends told me the following tale:—

244A. The Birth of Kārttikeya

Long ago, when Indra, oppressed by Tāraka, was desirous of obtaining a son from Śiva to act as general of the gods, and the God of Love had been consumed,¹ Gaurī by performing austerities sought and gained as a husband the three-eyed god, who was engaged in a very long and terrible course of mortification. Then she desired the obtaining of a son, and the return to life of the God of Love, but she did not remember to worship Gaṇeśa in order to gain her end. So, when his beloved asked that her desire should be granted, Śiva said to her: "My dear goddess, the God of Love was born long ago from the mind of Brahmā, and no sooner was he born than he said in his insolence: ‘Whom shall I make mad (kan darpayāmi)?’ So Brahmā called him Kandarpa, and said to him: ‘Since thou art very confident, my son, avoid attacking Śiva only, lest thou receive death from him.’ Though the creator gave him this warning, the ill-disposed god came to trouble my austerities, therefore he was burned up by me, and he cannot be created again with his body.² If we look through the voluminous literature on the subject. There is, however, one further point I would mention. The circle is not only a safe place to be in when "conjuring," but often acts as a prison from which escape is impossible. Thus in J. H. Bridges, Opus Maius of Roger Bacon, vol. ii, p. 208, we read: "Moreover, there are numerous things which kill every venomous animal by the slightest contact; and if a circle is drawn about such animals with objects of this sort [herbs, stones, metals, etc.] they cannot get out, but die without having been touched." Cf. with this the curious story of the magic circle made of dittany juice as told in Appendix III of this volume, p. 295. In Chapter XXXVII we shall come across a great circle made of ashes, where I shall add a further note.—N.M.P.

¹ I.e. by the fire of Śiva’s eye.
² Perhaps we ought to read sadehavya. I find this reading in a MS. lent to me by the Librarian of the Sanskrit College with the kind permission of the Principal.
AGNI IS ENTRUSTED WITH A DELICATE MISSION

But I will create by my power a son from you, for I do not require the might of love in order to have offspring as mortals do."

While the god, whose ensign is a bull, was saying this to Pārvatī, Brahmā accompanied by Indra appeared before him; and when he had been praised by them, and entreated to bring about the destruction of the Asura Tāraka, Śiva consented to beget on the goddess a son of his body. And, at their entreaty, he consented that the God of Love should be born without body in the minds of animate creatures, to prevent the destruction of created beings. And he gave permission to love to inflame his own mind; pleased with that, the creator went away and Pārvatī was delighted.

Some days after this, Śiva in privacy pursued the sport of love with Umā. When there was no end to his amorous play, though centuries passed by, the triple world trembled at the friction thereof. Then from fear of the world perishing, the gods, by order of Brahmā, called to mind Agni in order to stop Śiva’s amorous play. Agni, for his part, the moment they called him to mind, thinking that the foe of the God of Love was irresistible, and afraid to interfere, fled from the gods and entered the water; but the frogs, being burned by his heat, told the gods, who were searching for him, that he was in the water; then Agni by his curse immediately made the speech of the frogs thenceforth inarticulate, and again disappearing fled to a paradise tree. There the gods found him, concealed in the trunk of the tree, in the form of a snail, for he was betrayed by the elephants and parrots, and he appeared to them. And after making by a curse the tongues of the parrots and the elephants incapable of clear utterance, he promised to do what the gods requested, having been praised by them. So he went to Śiva and by his heat stopped Śiva from his amorous play, and after inclining humbly before him, through fear of being cursed, he informed him of the commission the gods had given him. Śiva, in his turn, as the impulse arose in him, deposited his seed in the fire. Neither the Fire nor Umā was able to bear this. The goddess, distracted with anger and grief, said: "I have not obtained a son from you after all"; and Śiva said to her: "An obstacle has arisen in this matter, because you neglected to worship Gaṇeśa, the Lord of Obstacles; therefore adore him now in order that a son may speedily be born to us in the fire."

1 I.e. Śiva.

2 The correct reading here is mandara, "paradise" tree; Tawney originally had "place of refuge."—N.M.P.

When thus addressed by Śiva, the goddess worshipped Gaṇeśa, and the fire became pregnant with that germ of Śiva. Then, bearing that embryo of Śiva, the fire shone even in the day as if the sun had entered into it. And then it discharged into the Ganges the germ difficult to bear, and the Gaṇas, by the order of Śiva, placed it in a sacrificial cavity on Mount Meru. There that germ was watched by the Gaṇas, Śiva’s attendants, and after a thousand years had developed it, it became a boy with six faces.\(^1\) Then, drinking milk with his six mouths from the breasts of the six Kṛttikās\(^2\) appointed by Gaurī to nurse him, the boy grew big in a few days. In the meanwhile, the king of the gods, overcome by the Asura Tāraka, fled to the difficult peaks of Mount Meru, abandoning the field of battle. And the gods, together with the Rishis, went to the six-mouthed Kārttikeya for protection, and he, defending the god, remained surrounded by them. When Indra heard that, he was troubled, considering that his kingdom was taken from him, and being jealous he went and made war upon Kārttikeya. But from the body of Kārttikeya, when struck by the thunderbolt of Indra, there sprang two sons called Śakha and Viśākha, both of incomparable might.

Then Śiva came to his offspring Kārttikeya, who exceeded Indra in might, and forbade him and his two sons to fight, and rebuked him in the following words:—"Thou wast born in order that thou mightest slay Tāraka and protect the realm of Indra, therefore do thy own duty." Then Indra was delighted, and immediately bowed before him, and commenced the ceremony of consecrating by ablutions

---

\(^1\) Cf. with this wild legend a similar one in the first book of the Rāmāyaṇa. Tawney omitted some details here in the translation. They have now been added from the D. text by Dr Barnett.—N.M.P.

\(^2\) I.e. the six Pleiades.
Kārttikeya as general of his forces. But when he himself lifted the pitcher for that purpose, his arm became stiff, wherefore he was despondent, but Siva said to him: "Thou didst not worship the elephant-faced god when thou desiredst a general; it was for this reason that thou hast met with this obstacle, therefore adore him now." Indra, when he heard that, did so, and his arm was set free, and he duly performed the joyful ceremony of consecrating the general. And, not long after, the general slew the Asura Tāraka, and the gods rejoiced at having accomplished their object, and Gauri at having obtained a son. So, princess, you see even the gods are not successful without honouring Gaṇeśa, therefore adore him when you desire a blessing.

24A. Kuvalayāvalī and the Witch Kālarātri

After hearing this from my companions, I went, my husband, and worshipped an image of Gaṇeśa that stood in a lonely part of the garden, and after I had finished the worship I suddenly saw that those companions of mine had flown up by their own power and were disporting themselves in the fields of the air; when I saw that, out of curiosity I called them and made them come down from the heaven, and when I asked them about the nature of their magic power, they immediately gave me this answer: "These are the magic powers of witches' spells, and they are due to the eating of human flesh, and our teacher in this is a Brāhman woman known by the name of Kālarātri." When my companions said this to me, I, being desirous of acquiring the power of a woman that can fly in the air, but afraid of eating human flesh, was for a time in a state of hesitation; then, eager to possess that power, I said to those friends of mine: "Cause me also to be instructed in this science." And immediately they went and brought, in accordance with my request, Kālarātri, who was of repulsive appearance. Her eyebrows met,¹ she had dull eyes, a depressed flat nose,

¹ Mr Tylor (in his Primitive Culture, vol. ii, p. 176), speaking of Slavonian superstition, says: "A man whose eyebrows meet as if his soul were taking flight to enter some other body, may be marked by this sign either as a werewolf or a vampire." In Icelandic Sagas a man with meeting eyebrows large cheeks, widely parted lips, projecting teeth, a long neck, pendulous breasts, a large belly, and broad expanded feet. She appeared as if the creator had made her as a specimen of his skill in producing ugliness.¹ When I fell at her feet, after bathing and worshipping Gaṇeṣa, she made me take off my clothes and perform, standing in a circle, a horrible ceremony in honour of Śiva in his terrific form, and after she had sprinkled me with water she gave me various spells known to her, and human flesh to eat that had been offered in sacrifice to the gods; so, after I had eaten man's flesh and had received the various spells, I immediately flew up, naked as I was, into the heaven with my friends, and after I had amused myself, I descended from the heaven by command of my teacher, and I, the princess, went to my own apartments. Thus even in my girlhood I became one of the society of witches,² and in our meetings we devoured the

is said to be a werewolf. The same idea holds in Denmark, also in Germany, whilst in Greece it is a sign that a man is a Brukolak or vampire (note by Baring-Gould in Henderson's Folk-Lore of the Northern Counties). The same idea is found in Bohemia, see Grohmann's Sagen aus Böhmen, p. 210. Cf. Grimm's Irische Märchen, p. cviii.—See Tawney's original note on this subject in Ind. Ant., vol. vii, 1878, p. 87. We have already seen (Vol. I, p. 214) that the Persians considered joined eyebrows beautiful. The Arabs held the same views, and we read in the Nights (Burton, vol. i, p. 227; vol. iii, p. 164; vol. viii, p. 206) of "high-bosomed maids and of an equal age, with black eyes and cheeks like the rose, joined eyebrows and looks languorous" and "she had eyes koḥd with nature's dye and joined eyebrows, a mouth as it were Solomon's seal and lips and teeth bright with pearls' and coral's ight."—N.M.P.

¹ The D. text reads nayanaṇanavāntolkā as one of the epithets, "casting forth flames out of her eyes and mouth." The Arab story-tellers have equally lucid descriptions of old hags and witches. Thus in the Nights (Burton, vol. ii, p. 238) we read: "Now this accursed old woman was a witch of the witches, past mistress in sorcery and deception; wanton and wily, deboshed and deceptive; with foul breath, red eyelids, yellow cheeks, dull-brown face, eyes bleared, mangy body, hair grizzled, back humped, skin withered and wan, and nostrils which ever ran." Similarly in vol. viii, p. 86, Hasan meets a "grizzled old woman, blue-eyed [unlucky] and big-nosed, a calamity of calamities, the foulest of all created things, with face pock-marked and eyebrows bald, gap-toothed and chap-fallen, with hair hoary, nose running and mouth slavering . . . ."—N.M.P.

² These magical rides in the air remind us of the orgies held by witches on the Brocken mountain in the Harz on Walpurgis night (1st May). Readers bodies of many men. But listen, King, to a story which is a digression from my main tale.

24B. Sundaraka and the Witches

That Kālarātri had for husband a Brāhman of the name of Vishṇusvāmin, and he, being an instructor in that country, taught many pupils who came from different lands, as he was skilful in the exposition of the Vedas. And among his pupils he had one young man of the name of Sundaraka, the beauty of whose person was set off by his excellent character. One day the teacher’s wife Kālarātri being love-sick secretly courted him, her husband having gone away to some place or other. Truly Kāma makes great sport with ugly people as his laughing-stocks, in that she, not considering her own appearance, fell in love with Sundaraka. But he, though tempted, detested with his whole soul the crime; however women may misbehave, the mind of the good is not to be shaken.

Then, he having departed, Kālarātri in a rage tore her own body with bites and scratches, and she remained weeping,\(^1\) with dress and locks disordered, until the teacher Vishṇusvāmin entered the house. And when he had entered she said to him: “Look, my lord, to this state has Sundaraka reduced me, endeavouring to gain possession of me by force.” \(^2\) As soon as the teacher heard that, he was inflamed with anger; for confidence in women robs even wise men of their power of reflection; and when Sundaraka returned home at night he ran upon him, and he and his pupils kicked him, and struck him with fists and sticks; moreover, when he was senseless

---

1 I read ṛṣṭa for ṛṣu.
2 See Note 2 at the end of this chapter.—N.M.P.
with the blows, he ordered his pupils to fling him out in the road by night, without regard to his safety; and they did so.

Then Sundaraka was gradually restored to consciousness by the cool night breeze, and seeing himself thus outraged he reflected: "Alas! the instigation of a woman troubles the minds even of those men whose souls are not under the dominion of passion, as a storm disturbs the repose of lakes which are not reached by dust.¹ This is why that teacher of mine, in the excess of his anger, though old and wise, was so inconsiderate as to treat me so cruelly. But the fact is, lust and wrath are appointed in the dispensation of fate, from the very birth even of wise Brāhmans, to be the two bolts on the door of their salvation.² For were not the sages long ago angry with Śiva in the devadāru wood, being afraid that their wives would go astray? And they did not know that he was a god, as he had assumed the appearance of a Buddhist mendicant, with the intention of showing Umā that even Rishis do not possess self-restraint. But after they had cursed him, they discovered that he was the ruling god that shakes the three worlds, and they fled to him for protection. So it appears that even hermits injure others when beguiled by the six faults that are enemies of man,³ lust, wrath and their crew, much more so Brāhmans learned in the Vedas."

Thinking thus, Sundaraka, from fear of robbers during the night, climbed up and took shelter in a neighbouring cow-house. And while he was crouching unobserved in a corner of that cow-house, Kālarātrī came into it with a drawn sword in her hand,⁴ terrible from the hissing she uttered, with wind and flames issuing from her mouth and eyes, accompanied by a crowd of witches. Then the terrified Sundaraka, beholding Kālarātrī arriving in such a guise, called to mind the spells that drive away Rākshasas, and bewildered by

¹ Rajas in Sanskrit means "dust" and also "passion."
² I.e. immaturity from future births.
³ I.e. desire, wrath, covetousness, bewilderment, pride and envy.
⁴ Cf. the Ἁθιοπικα of Heliodorus, Book VII, ch. xv, where the witch is armed with a sword during her incantations; and Homer's Odyssey, xi, 48. See also for the magic virtues of steel, Liebrecht, Zur Volkskunde, pp. 312, 313.
these spells Kālarātri did not see him crouching secretly in a corner, with his limbs drawn together from fear. Then Kālarātri with her friends recited the spells that enable witches to fly, and they flew up into the air, cow-house and all.

And Sundaraka heard the spell and remembered it ¹;

¹ See Veckenstedt's Wendische Sagen, p. 289, where a young man overhears a spell with similar results. See also Bartsch's Sagen, Märchen und Gebräuche aus Meklenburg, vol. i, p. 115.—This well-known motif has already occurred in the Ocean of Story (Vol. I, p. 48), where Vararuchi discovers why the fish laughed by overhearing the conversation of a female Rākshasa. I gave a few analogues in a short note (p. 48n²) and will add some more in a note in Vol. III, Chapter XXIX. I shall, therefore, chiefly confine myself here to a brief discussion of the origin of the motif with special reference to the art of learning the languages of animals.

That birds and beasts have a language of their own which can sometimes be understood by human beings is a most natural and universal motif of folktales. All manner of ways in which this great gift can be obtained have suggested themselves to the story-teller. It is sometimes given as a reward for some kind service rendered to an animal, it may be acquired by the aid of magic, it can be a boon from a god, or the hero may be actually born with the power. Primitive minds have always credited animals with great wisdom and understanding, and as possessing important secrets which can only be discovered if the language is understood. Stories have, therefore, naturally arisen to explain how the hero acquired this most useful gift.

The language of birds enters into folk-lore much more than the language of beasts. This is not to be wondered at, owing, I think, to the simple fact that a bird can get to inaccessible places much more easily than a beast. Thus the bird can fly to a magic island, to an enchanted tree or a hidden cave—it can perch on the window-sill of a room and see and hear what goes on inside. In fact it becomes a most useful Deus ex machina to the story-teller. The English expression "a little bird told me" contains the same idea. Cf. Eccles. x, 20.

But to return to the motif of overhearing. A bird or beast meets his mate and proceeds to tell his most recent adventures—what strange place he has visited, what rare jewel he has found, or the latest scandal from the palace in the neighbouring city. The hero in nearly all cases happens to be hiding or sleeping in the tree on which the birds perch or under which the animals are resting.

In other cases it is supernatural beings who converse—Rākshasas, giants, vampires, etc. Sometimes they give away a secret which is fatal to themselves—a snake will tell his companion what is the only way he could be killed, and, of course, the hero takes the tip at the earliest opportunity, usually securing some hidden jewel or gold.

The above gives, roughly, the usual uses to which this motif is put. The origin of the idea can perhaps be traced to homoeopathic or imitative magic. Thus but Kālarātri with the cow-house quickly flew through the air to Ujjayinī: there she made it descend by a spell in a garden of herbs, and went and sported in the cemetery among the witches; and immediately Sundaraka, being hungry, went down into the garden of herbs and made a meal on some roots which he dug up, and after he had allayed the pangs of hunger, and returned to the cow-house, Kālarātri came back in the middle of the night from her meeting. Then she got up into the cow-house, and, just as before, she flew through the air with her pupils by the power of her magic, and returned home in the night. And after she had replaced the cow-house, which she made use of as a vehicle, in its original situation, and had dismissed those followers of

if you wish to acquire a certain quality of an animal all you have to do is to kill it and eat it, and, ipso facto, the particular quality of your victim becomes yours. In a widely distributed number of stories the eating of a snake imparts the power of understanding the language of birds and beasts. The exact reason for this is not clear unless it is because the snake (or dragon) is often considered as half-way between a beast and a bird. It is interesting to note that Pliny (Hist. Nat., x, 137; xxix, 72) reports Democritus to have said that serpents were generated from the mixed blood of certain birds, and that in consequence anyone who ate a serpent would acquire the power to understand the bird language. In describing the "Dragons of India," Apollonius of Tyana (iii, 9) says that the Indians eat the dragon’s heart and liver in order to be able to understand the language and thoughts of animals. During his sojourn among the Arab tribes he is said to have mastered this great art and to have listened to the birds, as these predict the future (i, 20). See Thorndike, A History of Magic and Experimental Science, vol. i, p. 261. For other examples of the use of the snake to give the power of understanding the language of birds see J. A. Maculloch, The Childhood of Fiction, p. 41; Frazer, Golden Bough, vol. viii, p. 146.

At times (see for instance Tawney’s Prabandhacintāmaṇi, p. 174) it is an ordinary human conversation that is overheard, but I would not include these examples under this motif (as does Bloomfield, Life and Stories of Pārśvanātha, p. 185), as such an ordinary and commonplace occurrence ceases to have the same degree of interest and importance as the overheard conversation of the animal world. As we shall see in my note in Chapter XXIX, the motif of overhearing is found in the Mahābhārata, the Jātakas, Pośchatantra, Kathākoṇa, Parisūkhaparvan and numerous collections of Indian tales—such as those by Temple, Frere, Steel, Day, etc. For further references see Clouston, Popular Tales and Fictions, vol. i, pp. 242-248; ditto, A Group of Eastern Romances and Stories, pp. 505, 510; Chauvin, Bibliographie des Ouvrages Arabes, v, p. 180, and G. Nicasio, "Le credenze religiose delle popolazioni rurali dell’alte valle del Taveri," in Lores, vol. i (1912), p. 169.—N.M.P.
hers, she entered her sleeping apartment. And Sundaraka, having thus passed through that night, astonished at the troubles he had undergone, in the morning left the cow-house and went to his friends; there he related what had happened to him, and, though desirous of going to some other country, he was comforted by those friends and took up his abode among them, and leaving the dwelling of his teacher, and taking his meals in the almshouse for Brāhmans, he lived there, enjoying himself at will in the society of his friends.

One day Kālarātri, having gone out to buy some necessaries for her house, saw Sundaraka in the market. And being once more love-sick, she went up to him and said to him a second time: "Sundaraka, enjoy me even now, for my life depends on you." When she said this to him, the virtuous Sundaraka said to her: "Do not speak thus, it is not right; you are my mother, as being the wife of my teacher." Then Kālarātri said: "If you know what is right, then grant me my life, for what righteousness is greater than the saving of life?" Then Sundaraka said: "Mother, do not entertain this wish, for what righteousness can there be in approaching the bed of my preceptor?" Thus repulsed by him, and threatening him in her wrath, she went home, after tearing her upper garment with her own hand, and showing the garment to her husband, she said to him: "Look, Sundaraka ran upon me and tore this garment of mine in this fashion." So her husband went in his anger and stopped Sundaraka's supply of food at the almshouse, by saying that he was a felon who deserved death. Then Sundaraka in disgust, being desirous of leaving that country, and knowing the spell for flying up into the air which he had learnt in the cow-house, but being conscious that he had forgotten, after hearing it, the spell for descending from the sky, which he had been taught there also, again went in the night to that deserted cow-house, and while he was there Kālarātri came as before, and flying up in the cow-house in the same way as on the former occasion, travelled through the air to Ujjayini, and having made the cow-house descend by a spell in the garden of herbs, went again to the cemetry to perform her nightly ceremonies.

1 See note on p. 201n3 of this volume.—N.M.P.
2 See Note 2 at the end of this chapter.—N.M.P.

And Sundaraka heard that spell again, but failed again to retain it; for how can magic practices be thoroughly learnt without explanation by a teacher? Then he ate some roots there, and put some others in the cow-house to take away with him, and remained there as before; then Kālarātri came, and climbing up into the cow-house, flew through the air by night, and stopping the vehicle, entered her house. In the morning Sundaraka also left that house, and taking the roots with him he went to the market in order to procure money with which to purchase food. And while he was selling them there some servants of the king, who were natives of Mālava, took them away without paying for them, seeing that they were the produce of their own country. Then he began to remonstrate angrily, so they manacled him, and took him before the king on a charge of throwing stones at them, and his friends followed him. Those villains said to the king: "This man, when we asked him how he managed continually to bring roots from Mālava and sell them in Ujjayini, would not give us any answer; on the contrary he threw stones at us."

When the king heard this, he asked about that marvel: then his friends said: "If he is placed on the palace with us, he will explain the whole wonder, but not otherwise." The king consented, and Sundaraka was placed on the palace, whereupon by the help of the spell he suddenly flew up into the heaven with the palace. And travelling on it with his friends, he gradually reached Prayāga, and being now weary, he saw a certain king bathing there, and after stopping the palace there, he plunged from the heaven into the Ganges, and, beheld with wonder by all, he approached that king. The king, inclining before him, said to him: "Who art thou, and why hast thou descended from heaven?" Sundaraka answered: “I am an attendant of the god Śiva, named Murajaka, and by his command I have come to thee desiring human pleasures.” When the king heard this, he supposed it was true, and gave him a city, rich in corn, filled with jewels, with women and all the insignia of rank. Then Sundaraka entered that city and flew up into the heaven with his followers, and for a long time roamed about at will, free from poverty. Lying on a golden bed, and fanned with chowries by beautiful women, he enjoyed happiness like that of Indra. Then once on a time a Siddha, that roamed in the air, with whom he had struck up a friendship, gave him a spell for descending from the air, and Sundaraka, having become possessed of this spell enabling him to come down to earth, descended from the sky-path in his own city of Kanyākubja.

1 I read tan tād.

2 Called more usually by English people Allāhābād.—Prayāga means "the place of sacrifice," while Allāhābād, "abode of Allāh," was the name given to the place by Akbar in 1572. For further details see Cunningham, Archaeological Reports, vol. i, p. 296 et seq.—N.M.P.

Then the king, hearing that he had come down from heaven, possessed of full prosperity, with a city, went in person to meet him out of curiosity, and Sundaraka, when recognised and questioned, knowing what to say on all occasions, informed the king of all his own adventures brought about by Kālarātri. Then the king sent for Kālarātri and questioned her, and she fearlessly confessed her improper conduct; and the king was angry, and made up his mind to cut off her ears, but she, when seized, disappeared before the eyes of all the spectators. Then the king forbade her to live in his kingdom, and Sundaraka, having been honourably treated by him, returned to the air.

24A. Kuvalayāvalī and the Witch Kālarātri

Having said this to her husband, the King Ādityaprabha, the Queen Kuvalayāvalī went on to say: “King, such magic powers, produced by the spells of witches, do exist, and this thing happened in my father’s kingdom, and it is famous in the world, and, as I told you at first, I am a pupil of Kālarātri’s, but because I am devoted to my husband I possess greater power even than she did. And to-day you saw me just at the time when I had performed ceremonies to ensure your welfare, and was endeavouring to attract by a spell a man to offer as a victim. So do you enter now into our practice, and set your foot on the head of all kings, conquering them by magic power.”

24. Story of Phalabhūti

When he heard this proposal, the king at first rejected it, saying: “What propriety is there in a king connecting himself with the eating of human flesh, the practice of witches?” But when the queen was bent on committing suicide, he consented; for how can men who are attracted by the objects of passion remain in the good path? Then she made him enter into the circle previously consecrated, and said to the king after he had taken an oath. “I attempted to draw hither as a victim that Brāhman named Phalabhūti, who is so intimate with you, but drawing him hither is a difficult task, so it is the best way to initiate some cook in our rites, that he may himself slay him and cook him. And you must not feel any compunction about it, because by eating a sacrificial offering of his flesh, after the ceremonies are complete, the enchantment will be perfect, for he is a Brāhman of the highest caste.”

When his beloved said this to him, the king, though afraid of the sin, a second time consented. Alas! terrible is compliance with women! Then that royal couple had the cook summoned, whose name was Sāhasika, and after encouraging him, and initiating him, they both said to him: “Whoever comes to you to-morrow morning and says, ‘The king and queen will eat together to-day, so get some food ready quickly,’ him you must slay, and make for us secretly a savoury dish of his flesh.” When the cook heard this, he consented, and went to his own house. And the next morning, when Phalabhūti arrived, the king said to him: “Go and tell the cook Sāhasika in the kitchen: ‘The king together with the queen will eat to-day a savoury mess, therefore prepare as soon as possible a splendid dish.'" Phalabhūti said, "I will do so," and went out.

1 From the days of the ancient Egyptians it was customary for kings to dabble in magic, and the magicians of Pharaoh often had Pharaoh himself as a pupil. See Maspero, Popular Stories of Ancient Egypt, p. 1. In a note he says: “Even as late as the time of the Renaissance a prince was more highly regarded because he was a sorcerer. For example, in the Weisskunig one finds the young Maximilian of Austria instructed by his ecclesiastical preceptors not only in the secrets of white magic, but of black.”—N.M.P.

When he was outside, the prince whose name was Chandra-prabha came to him, and said: "Have made for me this very day with this gold a pair of earrings, like those you had made before for my noble father." When the prince said this, Phalabhūti, in order to please him, went that moment, as he was commissioned, to get the earrings made, and the prince readily went with the king's message, which Phalabhūti told him, alone to the kitchen. When he got there and told the king's message, the cook Sāhasika, true to his agreement, immediately killed him with a knife, and made a dish of his flesh, which the king and queen, after performing their ceremonies, ate, not knowing the truth.\footnote{This incident reminds one of Schiller's ballad: "Der Gang nach dem Eisenhammer" (Benfey, Paichatantra, vol. i, p. 320). The story of Fridolin in Schiller's ballad is identical with the story of Fulgentius which is found in the English Gesta Romanorum (see Bohn's Gesta Romanorum, Introduction, p. 1). Douce says that the story is found in Scott's Tales from the Arabic and Persian, p. 58, and in the Contes Déserts or Miracles of the Virgin (Le Grand, Fabliaux, v, 74). Mr Collier states upon the authority of M. Boettiger that Schiller founded his ballad upon an Alsatian tradition which he heard at Mannheim. Cf also the eighthieth of the Sicilianische Mährchen, which ends with these words: "Wer gutes thuX, wird gutes erhalten." There is a certain resemblance in this story to that of Equitan in Marie's Lais. See Ellis's Early English Metrical Romances, pp. 46 and 47. It also resembles the story of Lalitāngā in the Kathākoça (see my translation, p. 166), and the conclusion of the story of Damannaka (pp. 178, 174). The story of Fridolin is also found in Schöppner's Sagenbuch der Bayerischen Lande, vol. i, p. 204. ——}

As Tawney mentions above, the incident in our story appears in the Contes Déserts. The title of this tale is: "D'un Roi qui voulut faire brûler le fils de son Seneschal." It was adapted in the Italian Cento Novelle Antiche, No. 68, where the plot is cleverly worked out. An envious knight advises one of the king's favourites, of whom he is jealous, to hold his head farther back when serving the king, who, he says, objects to his unpleasant breath. The knight then tells the king that his favourite page acts in this way to avoid his breath. The enraged monarch orders his kilnman to throw the first man who brings him a message into the furnace. The page is immediately dispatched, but passing a monastery, goes in to listen to Mass. The knight now sets out to see if his plan has worked, and arrives at the kiln before the page, where he pays the penalty of his wickedness.

The story is also found in a work of Walter Mapes of the twelfth and after spending that night in remorse, the next morning the king saw Phalabhūti arrive with the earrings in his hand. So, being bewildered, he questioned him about the earrings immediately; and when Phalabhūti had told him his story, the king fell on the earth, and cried out, "Alas, my son!" blaming the queen and himself; and when his ministers questioned him, he told them the whole story, and repeated what Phalabhūti had said every day: "The doer of good will obtain good, and the doer of evil, evil.' Often the harm that one wishes to do to another, recoils on oneself, as century. It was printed and annotated by Thomas Wright, _De Nugis Curialium_ (1850), Camden Society. It reappears in the _Liber de Donis of Étienne de Bourbon_ (thirteenth century); John of Bromyard's _Summa Pradictantium_ (fourteenth century); the _Dialogus Creaturarum of Niclaus Pergamenus, etc._ Reference should be made to Clouton, _Popular Tales and Fictions_, vol. ii, pp. 444, 445, whence these latter have been taken.

The Arabic form of the story is found in the _Book of Sindibad_, Clouton's edition, pp. 137-141 (see also pp. 292, 293). Here a sultan adopts an abandoned infant who is given the name of Ahmed. When grown up he discovers by chance one day that the favourite concubine has a slave as lover. He does not report the matter, but the guilty woman is afraid, and feigning to have been raped by Ahmed, calls upon the sultan for a suitable punishment to be inflicted. The executioner is told to behead the first man who says to him: "Hast thou performed the business?" Ahmed is told to ask this question in a certain house. On the way he meets a group of slaves, and among them is the concubine's lover. He tries to delay Ahmed in order to get him into trouble with the king, and finally agrees to take the message himself—with the usual result.

Two similar tales occur in C. Vernieux, _Indian Tales and Anecdotes_, Calcutta, 1873. In the second of these it is a letter, and not a message, which is used as the instrument of death.

As already mentioned in Vol. I, p. 52n1, "the letter of death" _motif_ is a _lieu commun_ in folk-lore. It has been referred to by various names, such as the "Uriah letter," "Bellerophon letter," and "Mutalammis letter" _motif_, according as to which the particular author took as the standard example—the Biblical, Greek or Arabic.

I think, however, that a general term, such as that suggested above, is preferable. As compared with the "letter of death," examples of the "message of death" are rare, but they are, of course, only different varieties of the same _motif_. I shall discuss this _motif_ at greater length at the end of Chapter XLII, where a good example of the "letter of death" occurs.

The incident of innocently eating the flesh or heart of a loved one is well known from the story in Boccaccio, day 4, _nov_. 10. For full details see Lee, _The Decameron, its Sources and Analogues_, pp. 152-156.—N.M.P.
THE KING ASCENDS THE THRONE

a ball thrown against a wall rebounding frequently; thus we, wicked ones, desiring to slay a Brāhman, have brought about our own son's death, and devoured his flesh.”

After the king had said this, and informed his ministers, who stood with their faces fixed on the earth, of the whole transaction, and after he had anointed that very Phalabhūti as king in his place, he made a distribution of alms, and then, having no son, entered the fire with his wife to purify himself from guilt, though already consumed by the fire of remorse: and Phalabhūti, having obtained the royal dignity, ruled the earth; thus good or evil done by a man is made to return upon himself.

[M] Having related the above tale in the presence of the King of Vatsa, Yaugandharāyaṇa again said to that king: “If Brahmadatta therefore were to plot against you, O great King, who, after conquering him, treated him kindly, he ought to be slain.” When the chief minister had said this to him, the King of Vatsa approved of it, and rising up went to perform the duties of the day, and the day following he set out from Lāvānaka to go to his own city Kauśāmbī, having accomplished his objects in effecting the conquest of the regions. In course of time the lord of earth, accompanied by his retinue, reached his own city, which seemed to be dancing with delight, imitating with banners uplifted the taper arms of the dancing-girl. So he entered the city, producing at every step, in the lotus garden composed of the eyes of the women of the city, the effect of the rising of a breeze. And the king entered his palace, sung by minstrels, praised by bards, and worshipped by kings.

Then the monarch of Vatsa laid his commands on the kings of every land, who bowed before him, and triumphantly ascended that throne, the heirloom of his race, which he had found long ago in the deposit of treasure. And the heaven was filled with the combined high and deep echoes of the sound of the drums, which accompanied the auspicious ceremonies on that occasion, like simultaneous shouts of applause uttered by the guardians of the world, each in his several quarter, being delighted with the prime minister of the King of Vatsa. Then the monarch, who was free from avarice, distributed to the Brāhmans all kinds of wealth acquired by the conquest of the world, and, after great festivities, satisfied the desires of the company of kings and of his own ministers.

1 Literally, “creeper-like.”

Then in that city filled with the noise of drums resembling the thunder of the clouds, while the king was raining benefits on the fields according to each man's desert, the people, expecting great fruit in the form of corn, kept high festival in every house. Having thus conquered the world, that victorious king devolved on Rumaṇvat and Yaugandharāyaṇa the burden of his realm, and lived at ease there with Vāsavadattā and Padmāvatī. So he, being praised by excellent bards, seated between those two queens as if they were the goddesses of Fame and Fortune, enjoyed the rising of the moon, white as his own glory, and continually drank wine as he had swallowed the might of his foes.

1 There is a double meaning here: kṣetra means "fit recipients" as well as "field." The king no doubt distributed corn.—The point is obscured by Tawney's translation. The poet uses as a term for "king" the word narendra, "Indra of men"; so the words mean that "the king (narendra) pours forth benefits upon worthy objects (kṣetras) with beating of drums, as the god Indra pours forth rain upon the fields (kṣetras) amidst the thunders of the clouds" (Barnett).—N.M.P.
NOTE 1.—NUDITY IN MAGIC RITUAL

In many forms of black magic nudity appears to be an essential factor. The reason for this is hard to explain, and many suggestions have been put forward.

The most probable are:

1. Dread of pollution which may arise during a rite, and so spoil the incantation.

2. Clothes used in a sacred or magical rite become taboo and cannot be used again.

3. In order to do abnormal things successfully, the state of the operator should also be abnormal; hence nudity is a great asset.

4. Complete nudity represents total submission to the spirit power whose aid is needed in the particular rite to be carried out.

5. Nudity is supposed to shock the spirits and so force them to grant the desired aid.

6. The belief in the apotropaic powers attributed to the sexual organs.

As will be readily seen, it would be little short of pure guess-work in most cases to pick out a nudity rite and definitely assign to it one or other of the above explanations. We can only be certain of the true reason when actions accompanying the ritual make it obvious. For instance, in many countries ceremonies to obtain rain are often carried out in a state of complete nudity. Here the reasons seem to be twofold. In the first place, as the nature of the rite is usually to produce rain, by drenching the body with water, or standing up to the neck in water, it is obvious that any clothes would be ruined. Secondly, if other methods have failed it is necessary to give the Rain God a shock, to make him up, to arouse his pity or to make him give what is wanted through fear. Thus some unusual and curious sight would be bound to arrest his attention. A few examples will help to explain these points.

On the principles of homoeopathic or imitative magic, various methods to produce rain after a drought are employed in many parts of the world. After prayers and sacrifices have proved ineffective, other means are tried. Thus in the Rumanian village of Ploska both girls and women go naked at night to the boundaries of the village, and pour water on the ground, in the hope that the sky will do likewise. Similarly in Serbia a girl is stripped and covered in grass, flowers and herbs. She is then conducted, dancing and singing, to every house, where she has a pail of water thrown over her (Frazer, Golden Bough, vol. i, pp. 248, 278). In other cases nude women have recourse to a ploughing rite to procure rain. Thus in Russia they draw a furrow round the village, and bury at the juncture a cock, a cat and a dog. The cat is sacred, and the dog is considered a demonic character, so both sides are thus conciliated (Conway, Demonology, vol. i, p. p. 267). In Chunär, Mirzapur district, after the drought in 1892 had continued a long time, the following ceremony was performed secretly:—‘Between the hours of nine and ten p.m. a barber’s wife went from door to door and invited all the women to join in ploughing. They all collected in a field from which all males were excluded. Three women from a cultivator’s family stripped off all their clothes; two were yoked to a plough like oxen, and a third held the handle. They then began to imitate the operation of ploughing. The woman who had the plough in her hand shouted: ‘O Mother Earth! bring parched grain, water and chaff. Our bellies are bursting to pieces from hunger and thirst.’ Then the landlord and village accountant approached them and laid down some grain, water and chaff in the field. The women then dressed and went home” (North Indian Notes and Queries, vol. i, p. 210). Cf. Russell, Tribes and Castes of the Central Provinces, vol. iii, p. 563.

In a district of Transylvania the girls take off all their clothes and, led by an older woman, who is also naked, steal a barrow and carry it across the fields to a brook, where they set it afloat. They then sit on the barrow, keeping a tiny flame burning on each corner of it for an hour. Then they leave the barrow in the water and return home (Frazer, op. cit., p. 282, where other examples are also given).

Volleyes of abuse and curses often accompany these rites; thus, when rain fails, the Meitheis of Manipur, headed by their Rājā, strip off all their clothes, and stand cursing each other in the streets of Imphāl, the capital town, while women strip themselves at night and throw rice-pounders into the river (T. C. Hodson, The Meitheis, p. 108. See also A. E. Crawley, “Dress,” Hastings’ Ency. Rel. Eth., vol. v, p. 60).

Nudity also enters into fertility-rites practised by women. In the Panjāb on a Sunday or Tuesday night, or during the Divālī, or Feast of Lights, a barren woman desiring a child sits on a stool, which is then lowered down a well. After divesting herself of her clothes and bathing, she is drawn up again and performs the Chaukipāṁna ceremony with incantations taught by a wizard. Should there be any difficulty about descending the well, the ceremony is performed beneath a sacred pipal or fig-tree. It is believed that, after such a ceremony is performed, the well runs dry and the tree withers, the Mana of both having been exhausted during the rite (Census Report, Panjāb, 1901, vol. i, p. 164. For another version see Panjāb Notes and Queries, vol. iv, p. 58). Crooke records an interesting rite, also from the Panjāb, performed during the Divālī (‘The Divālī, the Lamp Festival of the Hindus,” Folk-Lore, vol. xxxiv, Dec. 1923, p. 276. This was a posthumous publication). On the Amāvas, or no-moon night, barren women, and those who have lost several children, go to a place where four roads meet, strip themselves naked, and cover a piece of ground with the leaves of five “royal” trees, the pipal (ficus religiosa), the bar (ficus indica), the siras (acacia speciosa), and the ām or mango. On this they lay a black bead representing the demigod Rāma, and, sitting down, bathe from pitchers containing water drawn from five wells, one in each of the four quarters of the town or village, and one outside it in the direction of the north-east. The water is poured from the pitchers into a vessel with a hole in the bottom, from which it is allowed to drop all over the women’s bodies. The well from which the water has been drawn for this purpose is supposed to lose its fertilising power and runs dry.
Magical powers of healing disease are often practised in a state of nudity. In the Sirsā district a man can cure a horse attacked by a fit by taking off all his clothes and striking the animal seven times with his shoe on its forehead. In the Jālandhar district paralysis in cattle is cured by a man stripping himself naked and walking round the animal with a wisp of burning straw in his hand. The Orāon tribe supplies many instances of similar practices. At the time of the rice harvest they practise a solemn rite for driving fleas out of the village, in the course of which young men strip off their clothes, bathe, wrap themselves in rice-straw, and march round the houses, where they receive doles of food (W. Crooke, "Nudity in India in Custom and Ritual," Journ. Anth. Inst., vol. xliv, 1919, p. 248. See the whole paper for numerous other references, only a few of which are quoted in this note).

Semi-nudity has always been regarded by Brāhmans as a mark of respect when in a holy place or before superiors. Thus they bare their bodies in the more sacred precincts of a temple or in the presence of the Mahārāja. This is still observed at the Darbārs of H.H. the Mahārāja of Mysore (see Crooke, Journ. Anth. Inst., vol. xlii, p. 288).

In circumambulating the Kaaba at Mecca pilgrims at one time used to either strip or borrow other clothes, as their own would become taboo owing to contact with the sacred place or function (W. Robertson Smith, Lectures on the Religion of the Semites, 2nd edition, p. 481).

From the above examples we can see that there is a distinct mystic significance attached to the naked body, an uncanny power which can be utilised for the purposes of producing rain, procuring offspring, etc. But as is the case with all power, it can also be used for less praiseworthy purposes. It can be employed for acquiring magical properties, to gain control over a person or a spirit. Thus, in Gujarāt, to obtain control over a spirit, the Hindu exorcist goes to a burial-ground alone at midnight on the dark fourteenth day of Aso (October), unearths the body of a low-caste Hindu, and bathes in the river. After bathing, while still naked, he carries the body within a circle cut with a knife or formed by sprinkling a line of water; then he goes on muttering charms, and evil spirits of all kinds congrege round him (Bombay Gazetteer, vol. ix, part i, p. 418).

A strange story is told in the United Provinces of a noted witch, known as Lonā or Nonā Chamārin, a woman of the caste of leather-dressers. One day all the village women were transplanting rice, and it was noticed that Lonā could do as much work as all her companions put together. So they watched her, and when she thought she was unobserved she stripped off her clothes, muttered some spells, and throwing a bundle of seedlings into the air, each settled down into its proper hole (Crooke, Tribes and Castes of the North-West Provinces and Oudh, vol. ii, p. 171).

Finally there is the question of the apotropaic power of the sexual organs themselves to be considered. Hartland points out (see his article, "Phallism," Hastings' Ency. Rel. Eth., vol. ix, p. 830) that as the great instruments of reproduction, and consequently the enemies of sterility and death, the sexual organs are in many countries exhibited and employed, actually and by symbol —i.e. magically—to counteract the depredations of mortality. Furthermore, they are regarded as having prophylactic virtue against all sorts of evil influences. Hence their common use of priapic figures and ithyphallic statues. In his article quoted above, Hartland gives numerous references and examples, some of which we have already noticed.

NOTE 2.—WOMEN WHOSE LOVE IS SCORNED

As is only natural, the motif of the revenge of a woman whose love has been scorned enters into nearly every collection of stories in the world. It is, moreover, not only in fiction that we have records of such happenings. Apart from Joseph and Potiphar’s wife, we read (Paulin Paris, Étude sur les différents Textes, imprimés et manuscrits, du Roman des Sept Sages), of Fausta, second wife of Constantine the Great, who caused the death of Crispus, son of his first wife, and also of Lucinian, son of Lucinius, by similar false accusations. Then there was the case of Asoka, the great Buddhist Emperor of India (274-237 B.C.). After the death of his first wife, named (according to the Ceylon records) Asandhimitra, he married one of her attendants, Tishyarakshita, and made her his chief wife. She had fallen in love with Asoka’s eldest son and heir (by another wife), Kusala, Viceroy of Taxila. He rejected her advances, however, and was shortly sent abroad to put down a revolt. The Emperor became ill in his son’s absence and decided to recall Kusala and set him on the throne. Tishyarakshita, seeing what this would mean for her, managed to cure the Emperor herself, obtaining in return the favour of exercising regal power for seven days. She immediately has Kusala’s eyes put out, but later the blind son comes to the court disguised as a lute-player, and the queen is burnt. (See Benfey, Orient und Occident, vol. iii, p. 177; Cambridge History of India, vol. i, p. 500; Przyluski, “La Légende de l’Empereur Asoka,” Annales du Musée Guimet, vol. xxxiii, 1923, chap. iv, “Avadana de Kusala,” p. 281-295.)

Both the above stories appear in W. A. Clouston’s Book of Sindibad, pp. xxvii, xxix, to which we shall refer again later.

In Greek legend we have the stories of Hippolytus and his stepmother Phaedra; Phineus and his sons with their mother-in-law; Bellerophon and Anteia, wife of Prætus; and Peleus and Astydameia (called Hippolyte in Horace, Odes, iii, 7, 17), wife of Acastus.

The oldest tale of this nature comes from Egypt, and was current in Thebes towards the end of the XIXth Dynasty. It is known as “The Story of the Two Brothers,” and has already been referred to (Vol. I, pp. 129, 130) in connection with the “External Soul” motif. I take the following from Maspero’s Popular Stories of Ancient Egypt. It forms the first story in his excellently annotated collection, and is preceded by a full bibliography.

The two brothers Anupu and Batti lived in the same house. Anupu, the elder brother, was married and owned the house, while Batti did all the field work and slept with the cows each night. One day both brothers were in the fields and Anupu sent Batti to the village to get seed. He asks Anupu’s wife for it; she is dressing her hair and tells him to take it. He shoulders five measures of the seed, which exhibition of strength at once rouses her admiration.

"And her heart went out to him as one desires a young man. She arose, she laid hold on him, she said to him: 'Come, let us lie together for the space of one hour. If thou wilt grant me this, in faith I will make thee two beauteous garments.' The youth became like a cheetah of the south in hot rage, because of the evil suggestion she had made to him, and she was frightened exceedingly, exceedingly. He spake to her, saying; 'But in truth thou art to me as a mother, and thy husband is to me as a father, and he who is my elder, it is he who enables me to live. Ah! this horrible thing that thou hast said to me, do not say it to me again, and for me I shall tell it to no one; I shall not let it escape from my mouth for anyone.' He took up his burden and went to the fields. When he reached his elder brother they set to work at their labour."

That evening Anupu's wife tore her garments, rubbed fat on her body to look like bruises and told her husband, who was the first to get home, that his brother had reduced her to this condition. Accordingly Anupu prepares to slay Bañë and awaits his arrival behind the stable door. The cows, however, warn Bañë of his impending fate, and he flies with all his might. We then get the earliest example of the "Magical Impediments" motif—a sheet of water full of crocodiles separates the two brothers, and after waiting till the next morning Bañë tells his brother the whole truth, and castrates himself on the spot.

"The elder brother cursed his heart exceedingly, exceedingly, and he remained there and wept over him. He leapt, but he could not pass over to the bank where his younger brother was, because of the crocodiles. His younger brother called to him, saying: 'Thus whilst thou didst imagine an evil action, thou didst not recall one of the good actions or even one of the things that I did for thee. Ah! go to thy house, and do thou thyself care for thy cattle, for I shall not live longer in the place where thou art—I go to the Vale of the Acacia.'"

Anupu is overcome, and returning home kills his wife and throws her to the dogs.

Turning to India, we find examples of the motif occur very frequently. See, for instance, the story of "Pāla und Gōpāla," translated by J. Hertel, Indische Erzählter, vol. vii, 1922, pp. 64-68.

In his Book of Sindibād (pp. xxx, xxxi) Clouston cites two examples from H. H. Wilson, Descriptive Catalogue of the Mackenzie Collection of Oriental MSS., etc., 1828.

"In a Telugu palm-leaf manuscript entitled Sārangdhara Charita, the hero, Sārangdhara, is the son of Rājamahendra, King of Rājamahendri, whose stepmother Chitrānī falls in love with him. He rejects her advances, on which she accuses him to the king of attempting to violate her, and the king orders him to have his feet cut off, and to be exposed in the forest to wild beasts. There a voice from heaven proclaims that the prince in his former life was Jayanta, minister of Dhaval Chandra, who, being envious of Sumanta, one of his colleagues, contrived to hide the slippers of Sumanta under the bed of the queen. The king, finding them and ascertaining whose they were, commanded Sumanta to be exposed to wild beasts after having his legs and hands cut off; in retribution of which Jayanta, now Sarangdhara, suffers the like mutilation. He acknowledges the justice of the sentence, and his wounds are healed by a Yogi. A voice from heaven apprises the king of the innocence of his son, and he takes Sarangdhara back and puts Chitrangi to death. Sarangdhara adopts a religious life. In the Tamil version, when the prince has been mutilated and cast into the jungle, his dead mother's lamentations are heard by the Siddhas, who restore the prince's limbs, and a voice from heaven apprises the king of Chitrangi's guilt. Again: In the Kumara Rama Charita, Ratnangi, one of the wives of Raja Kampil, became enamoured of Kumara Rama, his youngest son, and importuned him to gratify her desires. Finding him inexorable, her love was changed to hatred, and she complained to Kampil that Rama had attempted her chastity. Kampil in a rage ordered Rama to be put to death instantly, with his four chief leaders. The minister Bachapa, however, secreted Rama and his friends in his palace, and decapitating five ordinary criminals, produced their heads to the rajah as those of his intended victims. Kampil soon repented of his haste, and the prince's death was the subject of universal sorrow. After some time Rama reappeared, and the Princess Ratnangi, on hearing of this, hanged herself, by which Kampil was satisfied of the innocence of his son."

The motif is also found in the Mahapaduma Jataka (see Cambridge Edition, vol. iv, p. 116, No. 472), and Bloomfield, Life and Stories of Pṛṣṭhanātha, pp. 64, 85, 146, 199. On the latter page a preliminary bibliography of the motif is given, which includes references to the Mahabharata, Katha Sarit Sagar, Jataka, Kathapradaka, etc., besides the collections of Ralston, Steel and Temple, and Clouston. One of the references is to Ralston's Tibetan Tales, p. 206. In this story the mother of Utpalavarnā seduces her own son-in-law and he conspires with her desires. A maid discloses the matter and Utpalavarnā leaves the house. I would not include such examples under this motif. Bloomfield, however, divides it into three forms: the woman tempts, and the man rejects; the woman out of hatred [or fear] pretends that a man has made overtures to her, so as to get him into trouble; and the woman tempts and the man succumbs. The whole point of the motif is, I feel, the refusal of the man and the consequent intended revenge of the woman. Thus, whereas the first variety is the only true example of the motif, the second also may be included, but the third seems quite beside the point—the most important incident of the motif being missing.

Both Persian and Arabic fiction abound in examples of the motif. The best-known collection is that entitled The Book of Sindibad, or the Story of the King, his Son, the Damsel and the Seven Vazirs. For further details of its history, etc., reference should be made to Comparetti's Ricerche intorno al Libro di Sindibad, translated by H. C. Coote for the Folk-Lore Society, 1882; The Book of Sindibad, W. A. Clouston, privately printed, 1884; and V. Chauvin, Bibliographie des Ouvrages Arabes, viii, Syntipas.

The frame-story in every case is based on the motif here under consideration. A brief outline is as follows:—
After numerous failures to teach the only son of the king, the sage Sindibād finally succeeds in under six months. He then discovers that the prince is threatened with loss of life if he speaks a single word during the next seven days. Nevertheless, he goes to his father, who is anxious to test his newly acquired knowledge. To all the king’s questions he answers not a word. At this juncture one of the king’s harem, who is secretly enamoured of the prince, enters the audience-chamber and asks leave to try privately to induce the prince to speak. On leave being given she tells him of her love, and offers to poison the king. The prince flies from her in horror. The girl, fearing exposure, tears her clothes, scratches her face and in this condition returns to the king, stating that the prince, only pretending to be dumb, has attempted to rape her, and has suggested poisoning the king. The king orders the executioner to cut off his son’s head. There are seven vazirs at the court and they determine to do what they can to prolong the carrying out of this hasty sentence, hoping in time to establish the prince’s innocence. Accordingly the First Vazir tells a story showing the deceit of women, with the result that the king waives in his decision. The guilty woman, however, now relates a tale exemplifying the deceits of man. The Second Vazir thereupon retaliates. These alternate stories continue till all the Vazirs have spoken. By this time the unlucky seven days have passed and the innocence of the prince is established, as he can now safely speak and give the real facts of the case.

The collection also appears in the Nights (see Burton, vol. vi, p. 127), under the title, “The Craft and Malice of Women.” In the Persian Bakhtiyār Nāma it is the vazirs (ten in number) who urge the death of the accused man, and it is he himself who tells the stories. It also appears in the Nights (Burton, Supp., vol. i, p. 55 et seq.) as “The Ten Wazirs: or, the History of King Āzādbakht and his Son.” In Supp., vol. ii, pp. 295, 296, Clouston writes a note on the story. The plot, however, differs from the other similar collections, not only because of the fact stated above, but also because the son, in a state of drunkenness, wanders into the queen’s bedroom and falls asleep on the bed, to be later discovered by the royal couple. The king refuses to believe that she knows nothing about the matter and the jealous ten vazirs do all they can to bring about the prince’s death. Closely allied to these is the Tamil Alakeswara Kathā (see H. H. Wilson, Descriptive Catalogue of the Mackenzie Collection of MSS., etc., vol. i, p. 220). In the Turkish version, however, the plot follows the Arabic, and it is the prince’s mother-in-law who tempts his virtue. His horoscope shows that his life is in danger for forty days (not seven, as in the other versions) and forty vazirs tell stories. See E. J. W. Gibb, The History of the Forty Vezirs, 1886. The work is very popular in Turkey, where it is known as, Qirq Vezir Tārikhi. The original Turkish translation is said to have been made by one Sheykhaḥ-zāda, and the title of the work to have been Hikāyetu-Erba’īna-Sabāhīn ve Mesā—i.e. The Story of the Forty Morns and Eves.

There are two other occurrences of the “scorned love of women” in the Nights.
The first of these is in the long "Tale of Kamar al-Zaman" (Burton, vol. iii, p. 314). The two brothers, Amjad and As'ad, are tempted to incest by each other's mother. On being repulsed they shut themselves up in the harem, and tell the king that his two sons have raped them and they refuse to come out until their two hearts are brought to them. The enraged monarch gives the necessary order, but the pitying treasurer, whose duty it is to kill the brothers, takes back to the king two vials of a lion's blood which the brothers chance to slay. Later the repentant father finds the original letters written by the queens in his sons' clothes. After numerous adventures Amjad and As'ad meet their father (vol. iv, p. 27), and marry two beautiful women they met during their wanderings, and all is well "till there overtook them the Destroyer of delights, and the Sunderer of societies; and Allah knoweth all things!"

The second tale is that of the "History of Gharib and his Brother Ajib" (vol. vii, p. 88). Queen Jan Shah is suddenly called out as her prisoner, Gharib, had broken her idol and slain her men. She immediately goes to the temple and (like Anupu's wife in the Egyptian tale) on seeing the great strength of Gharib "her heart was drowned in the love of him and she said to herself: 'I have no need of the idol and care for naught save this Gharib, that he may lie in my bosom the rest of my life.'" On his refusal he is turned into an ape by her magic, and kept carefully in a closet. After two years he pretends by signs to agree to her wishes, and is accordingly restored to his original shape. That evening, he seizes her by the neck, breaks it and so kills her.

The first of the above stories is common in Kashmir; see, e.g., Stein and Grierson, "Tale of a King," Hatim's Tales, 1923, pp. 45-57; and Knowles, Folk-Tales of Kashmir, pp. 166, 423.

Thus we see that, in order for a story to be classified under the heading of this motif, the woman must make the suggestion, be repulsed, and seek revenge. This is the natural sequence of events which has proved so popular in every part of the East, whence it has travelled slowly westward. An interesting point to notice is that it can be traced from East to West in the same collection of stories—that of the Sindibad Nâma cycle, for besides the various versions already mentioned (see also Vol. I, p. 170) it is found in the French Dolophathos, the English Seven Wise Masters, and numerous other versions.—N.M.P.
BOOK IV
NARAVĀHANADATTAJANANA

CHAPTER XXI

INVOCATION

VICTORY to the Conqueror of Obstacles,¹ who marks with a line, like the parting of the hair, the principal mountains ² by the mighty fanning of his ear-flaps, pointing out, as it were, a path of success!

[M] Then Udayana, the King of Vatsa, remaining in Kauśāmbi, enjoyed the conquered earth which was under one umbrella ³; and the happy monarch devolved the care of his empire upon Yaugandharāyaṇa and Rumanvat, and addicted himself to pleasure only in the society of Vasantaka. Himself playing on the lute, in the company of the queens Vāsavadattā and Padmāvatī, he was engaged in a perpetual concert. While the notes of his lyre were married to the soft sweet song of the queens, the rapid movement of his executing finger alone indicated the difference of the sounds. And while the roof of the palace was white with moonlight as with his own glory, he drank wine in plenteous streams, as he had swallowed the pride of his enemies ⁴; beautiful women brought him, as he sat retired, in vessels of gold, wine flaming with rosy glow,⁵ as it were the water of his appointment as ruler in the empire of love; he divided between the two

¹ I.e. Gaṇeśa, who has an elephant’s head.
² Seven principal mountains are supposed to exist in each Varsha, or division of a continent.
³ See Appendix II, pp. 263-272.—N.M.P.
⁴ There is a reference here to the mada, or ichor, which exudes from an elephant’s temples when in rut.
⁵ Rāga also means “passion.”

125
queens the cordial liquor, red, delicious and pellucid, in which danced the reflection of their faces; as he did his own heart, impassioned, enraptured and transparent, in which the same image was found.

His eyes were never sated with resting on the faces of those queens, which had the eyebrows arched, andblushed with the rosy hue of love, though envy and anger were far from them. The scene of his banquet, filled with many crystal goblets of wine, gleamed like a lake of white lotuses tinged red with the rising sun. And occasionally, accompanied by huntsmen, clad in a vest of dark green as the palāsa tree, he ranged, bow and arrows in hand, the forest full of wild beasts, which was of the same colour as himself. He slew with arrows herds of wild boars besmeared with mud, as the sun disperses with its dense rays the masses of darkness; when he ran towards them the antelopes, fleeing in terror, seemed like the sidelong glances of the quarters previously conquered by him.

And when he slew the buffaloes, the ground, red with blood, looked like a bed of red lotuses come to thank him humbly for delivering it from the goring of their horns. When the lions too were transfixed by his javelins falling in their open mouths, and their lives issued from them with a suppressed roar, he was delighted. In that wood he employed dogs in the ravines and nets in the glades; this was the method of his pursuit of the chase, in which he relied only upon his own resources.

While he was thus engaged in his pleasant enjoyments, one day the hermit Nārada came to him as he was in the hall of audience, diffusing a halo with the radiance of his body, like the sun, the orb of heaven, descending therefrom out of love for the Solar dynasty. The king welcomed him, inclining before him again and again, and the sage stood a moment as if pleased and said to that king: "Listen, O King; I will tell you a story in a few words. You had an ancestor once, a king of the name of Pāṇḍu; he like you had two noble wives; one wife of the mighty prince was named Kuntī and the other Madri. That Pāṇḍu conquered this sea-engirdled earth, and was very prosperous, and being addicted to the vice of hunting, he went one day to the forest. There he let fly an arrow and slew a hermit of the name Nārada condemns the Vice of Arindama, who was sporting with his wife in the form of a deer. That hermit abandoned that deer-form, and with his breath struggling in his throat cursed that Pāṇḍu, who in his despair had flung away his bow: ‘Since I have been slain while sporting at will by thee, inconsiderate one, thou also shalt die in the embraces of thy wife.’ Having been thus cursed, Pāṇḍu, through fear of its effect, abandoned the desire of enjoyment, and accompanied by his wives lived in a tranquil grove of ascetic quietism. While he was there, one day, impelled by that curse, he suddenly approached his beloved Madri, and died. So you may rest assured that the occupation called hunting is a madness of kings, for other kings have been done to death by it, even as the various deer they have slain. For how can hunting produce benign results, since the genius of hunting is like a female Rākshasa, roaring horribly, intent on raw flesh, defiled with dust, with upstanding hair and lances for teeth. Therefore give up that useless exertion, the sport of hunting; wild elephants and their slayers are exposed to the same risk of losing their lives. And you, who are ordained for prosperity, are dear to me on account of my friendship with your ancestors, so hear how you are to have a son who is to be a portion of the God of Love.

1 The quarters are often conceived of as women.

1 For an outline of this story as related in the Mahābhārata see p. 16.
—N.M.P.

2 In the eighteenth tale of the Gesta Romanorum Julian is led into trouble by pursuing a deer. The animal turns round and says to him: “Thou who pursuest me so fiercely shalt be the destruction of thy parents.” See also Bernhard Schmidt’s Griechische Märchen, p. 38: “A popular ballad referring to the story of Digenes gives him a life of 800 years, and represents his death as due to his killing a hind that had on its shoulder the image of the Virgin Mary, a legend the foundation of which is possibly a recollection of the old mythological story of the hind of Artemis killed by Agamemnon” [Sophocles’ Electra, 568]. In the “Romance of Doolin of Mayence,” Guyon kills a hermit by mistake for a deer (Liebrecht’s translation of Dunlop’s History of Fiction, p. 138). See also De Gubernatis, Zoological Mythology, pp. 84-86; —and W. Crooke, Popular Religion and Folk-Lore of Northern India, vol. ii, p. 238.—N.M.P.
"Long ago, when Rati worshipped Śiva with praises in order to effect the restoration of Kāma’s body, Śiva, being pleased, told her this secret in few words: ‘This Gaurī, desiring a son, shall descend to earth with a part of herself, and, after propitiating me, shall give birth to an incarnation of Kāma.’ Accordingly, King, the goddess has been born in the form of this Vāsavadattā, daughter of Chaṇḍamahāsena, and she has become your queen. So she, having propitiated Śiva, shall give birth to a son who shall be a portion of Kāma, and shall become the emperor of all the Vidyādharas.”

By this speech the Rishi Nārada, whose words command respect, gave back to the king the earth which he had offered him as a present, and then disappeared. When he had departed, the King of Vatsa, in company with Vāsavadattā, in whom had arisen the desire of obtaining a son, spent the day in thinking about it.

The next day the chief warder, called Nityodita, came to the lord of Vatsa while he was in the hall of assembly and said to him: “A certain distressed Brāhmaṇ woman, accompanied by two children, is standing at the door, O King, desiring to see your Highness.” When the king heard this, he permitted her to enter, and so that Brāhmaṇ woman entered, thin, pale and begrimed, distressed by the tearing of her clothes and wounding of her self-respect, carrying in her bosom two children looking like Misery and Poverty. After she had made the proper obeisance she said to the king: “I am a Brāhmaṇ woman of good caste, reduced to such poverty. As fate would have it, I gave birth to these two boys at the same time, and I have no milk for them, O King, without food. Therefore I have come, in my misery and helplessness, for protection to the king, who is kind to all who fly to him for protection; now my lord the king must determine what my lot is to be.”

When the king heard that, he was filled with pity, and said to the warder: “Take this woman and commend her to the Queen Vāsavadattā.” Then that woman was conducted into the presence of the queen by that warder, as it were by her own good actions marching in front of her. The queen, when she heard from that warder that the Brāhman woman who had come had been sent by the king, felt all the more confidence in her. And when she saw that the woman, though poor, had two children, she thought: "This is exceedingly unfair, dealing on the part of the creator! Alas, he grudges a son to me, who am rich, and shows affection to one who is poor! I have not yet one son, but this woman has these twins." Thus reflecting, the queen, who was herself desiring a bath, gave orders to her servants to provide the Brāhman woman with a bath and other restoratives. After she had been provided with a bath, and had had clothes given her, and had been supplied by them with agreeable food, that Brāhman woman was refreshed like the heated earth bedewed with rain. And as soon as she had been refreshed, the Queen Vāsavadattā, in order to test her by conversation, artfully said to her: "O Brāhman lady, tell us some tale." When she heard that she agreed, and began to tell this story:

1 I.e. Umā or Pārvatī.

25. Story of Devadatta

In old time there was a certain petty monarch of the name of Jayadatta, and there was born to him a son, named Devadatta. And that wise king, wishing to marry his son, who was grown up, thus reflected: "The prosperity of kings is very unstable, being like a courtesan to be enjoyed by force; but the prosperity of merchants is like a woman of good family; it is steady and does not fly to another man. Therefore I will take a wife to my son from a merchant's family, in order that misfortune may not overtake his throne, though it is surrounded with many relations." Having formed this resolve, that king sought for his son the daughter of a merchant in Pātaliputra named Vasudatta. Vasudatta for his part, eager for such a distinguished alliance, gave that daughter of his to the prince, though he dwelt in a remote foreign land.

1 As a courtesan is not enjoyed by force, the sense seems doubtful. Barnett explains in a letter to me on the subject that balavad does literally mean "forcibly," but that the word is more usual in the sense of "intensely," as of rain, wind, sound, etc. Thus the meaning here is "to be intensely (or thoroughly) enjoyed."—N.M.P.

And he loaded his son-in-law with wealth to such an extent that he no longer felt much respect for his father's magnificence.¹ Then King Jayadatta dwelt happily with that son of his who had obtained the daughter of that rich merchant. Now one day the merchant Vasudatta came, full of desire to see his daughter, to the palace of his connection by marriage, and took away his daughter to his own home. Shortly after the King Jayadatta suddenly went to heaven, and that kingdom was seized by his relations, who rose in rebellion; through fear of them his son Devadatta was secretly taken away by his mother during the night to another country.

Then that mother, distressed in soul, said to the prince: "Our feudal lord is the emperor who rules the eastern region; repair to him, my son; he will procure you the kingdom."

When his mother said this to him, the prince answered her: "Who will respect me if I go there without attendants?" When she heard that, his mother went on to say: "Go to the house of your father-in-law, and get money there, and so procure followers; and then repair to the emperor." Being urged in these words by his mother, the prince, though full of shame, slowly plodded on and reached his father-in-law's house in the evening. But he could not bear to enter at such an unseasonable hour, for he was afraid of shedding tears, being bereaved of his father and having lost his worldly splendour; besides, shame withheld him.

So he remained in the verandah of an almshouse near, and at night he suddenly beheld a woman descending with a rope from his father-in-law's house, and immediately he recognised her as his wife, for she was so resplendent with jewels that she looked like a meteor fallen from the clouds; and he was much grieved thereat. But she, though she saw him, did not recognise him, as he was emaciated and begrimed, and asked him who he was. When he heard that, he answered: "I am a traveller." Then the merchant's daughter entered the almshouse, and the prince followed her secretly to watch her. There she advanced towards a certain man, and he towards her, and asking why she had come so late, he bestowed several kicks on her. Then the passion of the wicked woman was doubled, and she appealed him, and remained with him on the most affectionate terms.

¹ The D. text reads agalad instead of acalad, "that his pride on account of his father's splendour vanished."—N.M.P.

When he saw that, the discreet prince reflected: "This is not the time for me to show anger, for I have other affairs in hand; and how could I employ against these two contemptible creatures, this wife of mine and the man who has done me this wrong, this sword which is to be used against my foes? Or what quarrel have I with this adulteress, for this is the work of malignant desire that showers calamities upon me, showing skill in the game of testing my firmness? It is my marriage with a woman below me in rank that is in fault, not the woman herself; how can a female crow leave the male crow to take pleasure in a cuckoo?"

Thus reflecting, he allowed that wife of his to remain in the society of her paramour; for in the minds of heroes possessed with an ardent desire of victory, of what importance is woman, valueless as a straw? But at the moment when his wife ardently embraced her paramour there fell from her ear an ornament thickly studded with valuable jewels. And she did not observe this, but at the end of her interview, taking leave of her paramour, returned hurriedly to her house as she came. And that unlawful lover also departed somewhere or other.

Then the prince saw that jewelled ornament, and took it up; it flashed with many jewel-gleams, dispelling the gathering darkness of despondency, and seemed like a hand-lamp obtained by him to assist him in searching for his lost

---

1 Cf. an incident in "Gül and Sansubur" (Liebrecht, Zur Volkskunde, p. 144)—also the "Tale of the Ensorcelled Prince," Nights (Burton, vol. i, p. 72), and see Chauvin, Bibliographie des Ouvrages Arabes, vi, p. 577.——N.M.P.

2 This is not a correct rendering of yadrichchhāya. It means literally, "casually," "by chance," or "arbitrarily." Barnett suggests that its meaning here is "at her own pleasure," "of her own free will"—thus "wantonly" would perhaps be the best translation.—N.M.P.
prosperity. The prince immediately perceived that it was very valuable, and went off, having obtained all he required, to Kanyakubja; there he pledged that ornament for a hundred thousand gold pieces, and after buying horses and elephants went into the presence of the emperor. And with the troops which he gave him he marched, and slew his enemies in fight, and recovered his father’s kingdom; and his mother applauded his success.

Then he redeemed from pawn that ornament, and sent it to his father-in-law to reveal that unsuspected secret; his father-in-law, when he saw that earring of his daughter’s, which had come to him in such a way, was confounded, and showed it to her. She looked upon it, lost long ago like her own virtue; and when she heard that it had been sent by her husband she was distracted, and called to mind the whole circumstance: “This is the very ornament which I let fall in the almshouse the night I saw that unknown traveller standing there; so that must undoubtedly have been my husband come to test my virtue, but I did not recognise him, and he picked up this ornament.”

While the merchant’s daughter was going through this train of reflection, her heart, afflicted by the misfortune of her unchastity having been discovered, in its agony, broke. Then her father artfully questioned a maid of hers who knew all her secrets, and found out the truth, and so ceased to mourn for his daughter; as for the prince, after he recovered the kingdom, he obtained as wife the daughter of the emperor, won by his virtues, and enjoyed the highest prosperity.

[Mark] “So you see that the hearts of women are hard as adamant in daring sin, but are soft as a flower when the tremor of fear falls upon them. But there are some few women born in good families that, having hearts virtuous and of transparent purity, become like pearls, the ornaments of the earth. And the fortune of kings is ever bounding away like a doe, but the wise know how to bind it by the tether of firmness, as you see in my story; therefore those who desire good fortune must not abandon their virtue even in calamity, and of this principle my present circumstances are an illustration, for I preserved my character, O Queen, even in this calamity, and that has borne me fruit in the shape of the good fortune of beholding you.”

1. Here there is a pun, samādita meaning also “well rounded.”

Having heard this tale from the mouth of that Brāhman woman, the Queen Vāsavadattā, feeling respect for her, immediately thought: “Surely this Brāhman woman must be of good family, for the indirect way in which she alluded to her own virtue and her boldness in speech prove that she is of gentle birth, and this is the reason why she showed such tact in entering the king’s court of justice.” Having gone through these reflections, the queen again said to the Brāhman woman: “Whose wife are you, or what is the history of your life? Tell me.” When she heard that, the Brāhman woman again began to speak:

26. Story of Pingalikā

Queen, there was a certain Brāhman in the country of Mālava, named Agnidatta, the home of Fortune and of Learning, who willingly impoverished himself to help suppliants. And in course of time there were born to him two sons like himself: the eldest was called Śankaradatta and the other Śāntikara. Of these two, O glorious one, Śāntikara suddenly left his father’s house in quest of learning, while he was still a boy, and went I know not whither, and the other son, his elder brother, married me, who am the daughter of Yajnadratta, who collected wealth for the sake of sacrifice only. In the course of time the father of my husband, who was named Agnidatta, being old, went to the next world, and his wife followed him; and my husband left me, when I was pregnant, to go to holy places, and through sorrow for his loss abandoned the body in fire purified by the goddess Sarasvatī; and when that fact was told us by those who accompanied him in his pilgrimage, I was not permitted to follow him by my relations, as I was pregnant.

1 I.e. burned herself with his body.

Then, while my grief was fresh, brigands suddenly swooped down on us and plundered my house and all the royal grant; immediately I fled with three Brāhmaṇ women from that place, for fear that I might be outraged, taking with me very few garments. And, as the whole kingdom was ravaged, I went to a distant land, accompanied by them, and remained there a month, only supporting myself by menial drudgery. And then, hearing from people that the King of Vatsa was the refuge of the helpless, I came here with the three Brāhmaṇ women, with no other travelling provision than my virtue; and as soon as I arrived I gave birth at the same time to two boys. Thus, though I have the friendly assistance of these three Brāhmaṇ women, I have suffered bereavement, banishment, poverty; and now comes this birth of twins. Alas, Providence has opened to me the door of calamity!

Accordingly, reflecting that I had no other means of maintaining these children, I laid aside shame, the ornament of women, and entering into the king’s court I made a petition to him. Who is able to endure the sight of misery of youthful offspring? And in consequence of his order, I have come into your august presence, and my calamities have turned back, as if ordered away from your door. This is my history: as for my name, it is Pingalikā, because from my childhood my eyes have been reddened by the smoke of burnt-offerings. And that brother-in-law of mine Sāntikara dwells in a foreign land, but in what land he is now living I have not as yet discovered.

[M] When the Brāhmaṇ woman had told her history in these words, the queen came to the conclusion that she was a lady of high birth, and, after reflecting, said this to her with an affectionate manner: “There is dwelling here a foreign Brāhmaṇ of the name of Sāntikara, and he is our domestic chaplain; I am certain he will turn out to be your brother-in-law.” After saying this to the eager Brāhmaṇ lady, the queen allowed that night to pass, and the next morning sent for Śāntikara and asked him about his descent. And when he had told her his descent, she, ascertaining that the two accounts tallied completely, showed him that Brāhman lady, and said to him: "Here is your brother's wife." And when they recognised one another, and he had heard of the death of his relations, he took the Brāhman lady, the wife of his brother, to his own house. There he mourned exceedingly, as was natural, for the death of his parents and his brother, and comforted the lady, who was accompanied by her two children.

And the Queen Vāsavadattā settled that the Brāhman lady's two young sons should be the domestic chaplains of her future son, and the queen gave the eldest the name of Śāntisoma, and the next of Vaiśvānara, and she bestowed on them much wealth. The people of this world are like a blind man, being led to the place of recompense by their own actions going before them,¹ and their courage is merely an instrument. Then those two children and their mother and Śāntikara remained united there, having obtained wealth.

Then once upon a time, as days went on, the Queen Vāsavadattā beheld from her palace a certain woman of the caste of potters coming with five sons, bringing plates, and she said to the Brāhman lady Pingalikā, who was at her side: "Observe, my friend, this woman has five sons, and I have not even one as yet²; to such an extent is such a one the possessor of merit, while such a one as myself is not."

Then Pingalikā said: "Queen, these numerous sons are people who have committed many sins in a previous existence, and are born to poor people in order that they may suffer for them; but the son that shall be born to such a one as you must have been in a former life a very virtuous person. Therefore do not be impatient, you will soon obtain a son such as you deserve." Though Pingalikā said this to her, Vāsavadattā, being eager for the birth of a son, remained with her mind overpowered by anxiety about it. At that moment the King of Vatsa came, and perceiving what was in her heart, said: "Queen, Nārada said that you should obtain a son by propitiating Śiva, therefore we must continually propitiate Śiva, that granter of boons." Upon that, the queen quickly determined upon performing a vow, and when she had taken a vow, the king and his ministers, and the whole kingdom also, took a vow to propitiate Śiva; and after the royal couple had fasted for three nights, that lord was so pleased that he himself appeared to them and commanded them in a dream: "Rise up; from you shall spring a son who shall be a portion of the God of Love, and owing to my favour shall be king of all the Vidyādhāras."

¹ _Purogaih_ means "done in a previous life," and also "going before."

When the god, whose crest is the moon, had said this and disappeared, that couple woke up, and immediately felt unfeigned joy at having obtained their boon, and considered that they had gained their object. And in the morning the king and queen rose up, and after delighting the subjects with the taste of the nectarous story of their dream, kept high festival with their relations and servants, and broke in this manner the fast of their vow. After some days had passed, a certain man with matted locks came and gave the Queen Vāsavādattā a fruit in her dream. Then the King of Vatsa rejoiced with the queen, who informed him of that clear dream, and he was congratulated by his ministers, and supposing that the god of the moon-crest had given her a son under the form of a fruit, he considered the fulfilment of his wish to be not far off.1

1 The whole question of supernatural birth in München, Sagas and custom has been ably discussed in detail by Hartland, The Legend of Perseus, vol. i, pp. 71-131 (the reference on p. 76 to the Kathā Sarit Sāgara should be ii, 563). See also V. Chauvin, op. cit., v, p. 43, under the heading "Conceptions extraordinaires."

In the "Story of King Parityāgasena, his Wicked Wife and his Two Sons," which appears in a later volume, the two wives receive two heavenly fruits from Durgā. So in Chapter CXX the mother of the future King Vikramādiyā is given a fruit by Śiva. The fruit in question is sometimes a mango, as in Stokes, Indian Fairy Tales, p. 41; Frere, Old Deccan Days, p. 254; Sistri, Folk-Lore in Southern India, p. 140. In Stokes, op. cit., p. 91, lichi fruits are given, while in other tales it is a pomegranate. It is unnecessary to give further examples, as Hartland has recorded anything of importance.—N.M.P.
CHAPTER XXII

THEN, in a short time, Vāsavadattā became pregnant [M] with a child, glorious inasmuch as it was an incarnation of the God of Love, and it was a feast to the eyes of the King of Vatsa. She shone with a face the eyes of which rolled, and which was of palish hue, as if with the moon come to visit her out of affection for the God of Love conceived in her. When she was sitting down, the two images of her form, reflected in the sides of the jewelled couch, seemed like Rati and Priti come there out of regard for their husband. Her ladies-in-waiting attended upon her like the Sciences that grant desires come in bodily form to show their respect for the future King of the Vidyrādhara's conceived in her. At that time she had breasts with points dark like a folded bud, resembling pitchers intended for the inaugural sprinkling of her unborn son. When she lay down on a comfortable couch in the middle of the palace, which gleamed with pavement composed of translucent, flashing, lustrous jewels, she appeared as if she were being propitiated by the waters, that had come there trembling, through fear of being conquered by her future son, with heaps of jewels on every side.

Her image, reflected from the gems in the middle of the chariot, appeared like the Fortune of the Vidyrādhara coming in the heaven to offer her adoration. And she felt a longing for stories of great magicians provided with incantations by means of spells, introduced appropriately in conversation. Vidyrādhara ladies, beginning melodious songs,

1 I read with a MS. in the Sanskrit College patisneḥād for pratisneḥād. The two wives of the God of Love came out of love to their husband, who was conceived in Vāsavadattā.
2 Vidyrādhara means, literally, "magical knowledge-holder."
3 The ceremony of coronation.
4 See Vol. I, Appendix III, pp. 221-228, on the "Dohada, or Craving of the Pregnant Woman."—N.M.P. waited upon her when in her dream she rose high in the sky, and when she woke up she desired to enjoy in reality the amusement of sporting in the air, which would give the pleasure of looking down upon the earth. And Yaugandharāyaṇa gratified that longing of the queen’s by employing spells, machines, juggling, and such-like contrivances. So she roamed through the air by means of those various contrivances, which furnished a wonderful spectacle to the upturned eyes of the citizens’ wives. But once on a time, when she was in her palace, there arose in her heart a desire to hear the glorious tales of the Vidyādharas. Then Yaugandharāyaṇa, being entreated by that queen, told her this tale while all were listening:

27. Story of Jīmūtavāhana

There is a great mountain named Himavat,\(^1\) the father of the mother of the world,\(^2\) who is not only the chief of hills, but the spiritual preceptor of Śiva, and on that great mountain, the home of the Vidyādharas, dwelt the lord of the Vidyādharas, the King Jīmūtaketu. And in his house there was a wishing-tree,\(^3\) which had come down to him from his ancestors, called by a name which expressed its nature, “The Giver of Desires.” And one day the King Jīmūtaketu approached that wishing-tree in his garden, which was of divine nature, and supplicated it: “We always obtain from you all we desire, therefore give me, O god, who am now childless, a virtuous son.”\(^4\) Then the wishing-tree said: “King, there shall be born to thee a son who shall remember his past birth, who shall be a hero in giving, and kind to all creatures.” When he heard that, the king was delighted,

---

\(^1\) See Vol. I, p. 2, 2n\(^2\).—N.M.P.

\(^2\) Ambikā—i.e. Pārvatī the wife of Śiva.

\(^3\) See Vol. I, pp. 8, 144, 144n\(^1\), and also W. Crooke, Popular Religion and Folk-Lore of Northern India, vol. ii, p. 88.—N.M.P.

\(^4\) Liebrecht, speaking of the novel of Guerino Meschino, compares this tree with the sun and moon trees mentioned in the work of the Pseudo-Callisthenes, Book III, ch. xvii. They inform Alexander that the years of his life are accomplished, and that he will die in Babylon. See also Ralston’s Songs of the Russian People, p. 111.
and bowed before that tree, and then he went and delighted his queen with the news: accordingly in a short time a son was born to him, and his father called the son Jimūtavāhana.

Then that Jimūtavāhana, who was of great goodness, grew up step by step with the growth of his innate compassion for all creatures. And in the course of time, when he was made crown prince, he, being full of compassion for the world, said in secret to his father, who was pleased by his attentions: “I know, O father, that in this world all things perish in an instant, but the pure glory of the great alone endures till the end of a kalpa. If it is acquired by benefiting others, what other wealth can be, like it, valued by high-minded men more than life? And as for prosperity, if it be not used to benefit others, it is like lightning, which for a moment pains the eye and, flickering, disappears somewhere or other. So, if this wishing-tree, which we possess, and which grants all desires, is employed for the benefit of others, we shall have reaped from it all the fruit it can give. So let me take such steps as that by its riches the whole multitude of men in need may be rescued from poverty.”

This petition Jimūtavāhana made to his father, and having obtained his permission, he went and said to that wishing-tree: “O god, thou always givest us the desired fruit, therefore fulfil to-day this one wish of ours. O my friend, relieve this whole world from its poverty, success to thee, thou art bestowed on the world that desires wealth!”

The wishing-tree, being addressed in this style by that self-denying one, showered much gold on the earth, and all the people rejoiced; what other compassionate incarnation of a Bodhisattva except the glorious Jimūtavāhana would be able to dispose even of a wishing-tree in favour of the needy? For this reason every region of the earth became devoted to Jimūtavāhana, and his stainless fame was spread on high.

Then the relations of Jimūtaketu, seeing that his throne was firmly established by the glory of his son, were envious, and became hostile to him. And they thought it would be easy to conquer that place, which possessed the excellent

1 A period of 482 million years of mortals.
2 More literally, “the cardinal and intermediate points.”
wishing-tree that was employed for bestowing gifts, on account of its not being strong: then they assembled and determined on war, and thereupon the self-denying Jīmūtavāhana said to his father: "As this body of ours is like a bubble in the water, for the sake of what do we desire prosperity, which flickers like a candle exposed to the wind? And what wise man desires to attain prosperity by the slaughter of others? Accordingly, my father, I ought not to fight with my relations. But I must leave my kingdom and go to some forest or other; let these miserable wretches be, let us not slay the members of our own family."

When Jīmūtavāhana had said this, his father, Jīmūtaketu, formed a resolution and said to him: "I too must go, my son; for what desire for rule can I, who am old, have, when you, though young, out of compassion abandon your realm as if it were so much grass?" In these words his father expressed his acquiescence in the project of Jīmūtavāhana, who then, with his father and his father's wife, went to the Malaya mountain. There he remained in a hermitage, the dwelling of the Siddhas, where the brooks were hidden by the sandalwood-trees, and devoted himself to taking care of his father. There he struck up a friendship with the self-denying son of Viśvāvasu, the chief prince of the Siddhas, whose name was Mitrāvasu. And once on a time the all-knowing Jīmūtavāhana beheld in a lonely place Mitrāvasu's maiden sister, who had been his beloved in a former birth. And the mutual gaze of those two young people was like the catching in a frail net of the deer of the mind.

Then one day Mitrāvasu came up suddenly to Jīmūtavāhana, who deserved the respect of the three worlds, with a pleased expression, and said to him: "I have a younger sister, the maiden called Malayavati; I give her to you, do not refuse to gratify my wish." When Jīmūtavāhana

---

1 The sense here is not at all clear, but is explained in the D. text, which reads mukta instead of yuktā, thus meaning: "They thought it would be easy to conquer that (kingdom) as it had lost its strength on account of the change of place of the excellent wishing-tree now employed to bestowing gifts." See Speyer, op. cit., pp. 103, 104.—N.M.F.

2 Reading manomrigi, "the deer of the mind."
heard that, he said to him: "O Prince, she was my wife in a former birth, and in that life you became my friend, and were like a second heart to me. I am one who remembers the former state of existence; I recollect all that happened in my previous birth." When he said this, Mitrāvasu said to him: "Then tell me this story of your former birth, for I feel curiosity about it." When he heard this from Mitrāvasu, the benevolent Jīmūtavāhana told him the tale of his former birth as follows:

27A. Jīmūtavāhana's Adventures in a Former Birth

Thus it is; formerly I was a sky-roaming Vidyādhara, and once on a time I was passing over a peak of the Himalaya. And then Śiva, who was below, sporting with Gaurī, being angry at my passing above him, cursed me, saying: "Descend into a mortal womb, and after obtaining a Vidyādharī for your wife, and appointing your son in your place, you shall remember your former birth, and again be born as a Vidyādhara." Having pronounced when this curse should end, Śiva ceased and disappeared; and soon after I was born upon earth in a family of merchants. And I grew up as the son of a rich merchant in a city named Vallabhi, and my name was Vasudatta.

And in course of time, when I became a young man, I had a retinue given me by my father, and went by his orders to another land to traffic. As I was going along, robbers fell upon me in a forest, and after taking all my property, led me in chains to a temple of Durgā in their village, terrible with a long waving banner of red silk like the tongue of Death eager to devour the lives of animals. There they brought me into the presence of their chief, named Pulindaka, who was engaged in worshipping the goddess, in order that I might serve as a victim. He, though he was a Savara,¹ the moment he saw me, felt his heart melt with pity for me; an apparently causeless affectionate movement of the heart is a sign of friendship in a former birth. Then that Savara king, having saved me from slaughter, was about to complete the rite by the sacrifice of himself, when a heavenly voice said to him: "Do not act thus, I am pleased with thee, crave a boon of me." Thereupon he was delighted, and said: "O goddess, thou art pleased; what other blessing can I need; nevertheless I ask so much—may I have friendship with this merchant's son in another birth also." The voice said, "So be it," and then ceased; and then that Savara gave me much wealth, and sent me back to my own home.

¹ Member of a savage tribe.

And then, as I had returned from foreign travel and from the jaws of death, my father, when he heard the whole occurrence, made a great feast in my honour. And in course of time I saw there that very same Savara chief, whom the king had ordered to be brought before him as a prisoner for plundering a caravan. I told my father of it immediately, and making a petition to the king, I saved him from capital punishment by the payment of a hundred thousand gold pieces. And having in this way repaid the benefit which he conferred upon me by saving my life, I brought him to my house, and entertained him honourably for a long time with all loving attention. And then, after this hospitable entertainment, I dismissed him, and he went to his own village, fixing upon me a heart tender with affection.

Then, while he thought about a present for me that might be worthy of my return for his previous kindness, he came to the conclusion that the pearls and musk and treasures of that kind, which were at his disposal, were not valuable enough. Thereupon he took his bow and went off to the Himalaya to shoot elephants, in order to obtain a surpassingly splendid necklace for me. And while he was roaming about there, he reached a great lake with a temple upon its shore, being welcomed by its lotuses, which were as devoted to their friend as he was to me. And suspecting that the wild elephants would come there to drink

1 I.e. of the pearls in the heads of the elephants.—The pearl (kuntjara-maṇi gajamukta) is said to be found in the brain, forehead and stomach of the elephant. It possesses protective qualities and is used in charms. [See Bull. Madras Mus., vol. iii, p. 221; North Indian Notes and Queries, vol. iii, p. 53; Crooke, op. cit., vol. ii, p. 240; and Waddell, Buddhism of Tibet, p. 208.—N.M.P.]

2 I.e. the sun.
water, he remained in concealment with his bow in order to kill them.

In the meanwhile he saw a young lady of wonderful beauty riding upon a lion\(^1\) to worship Śiva, whose temple stood on the shore of the lake; looking like a second daughter of the King of the Snowy Mountains, devoted to the service of Śiva while in her girlhood. And the Savara, when he saw her, being overpowered with wonder, reflected: “Who can this be? If she is a mortal woman, why does she ride upon a lion? On the other hand, if she is divine, how can she be seen by such as me? So she must certainly be the incarnate development of the merits of my eyes in a former birth. If I could only marry my friend to her, then I should have bestowed upon him a new and wonderful recompense. So I had better first approach her to question her.” Thus reflecting, my friend the Savara advanced to meet her.

In the meanwhile she dismounted from the lion, that lay down in the shade, and advancing began to pick the lotuses of the lake. And seeing the Savara, who was a stranger, coming towards her and bowing, out of a hospitable feeling she gratified him with a welcome. And she said to him: “Who are you, and why have you come to this inaccessible land?” Thereupon the Savara answered her: “I am a prince of the Savaras, who regard the feet of Bhavānī as my only refuge, and I am come to this wood to get pearls from the heads of elephants. But when I beheld you just now, O goddess, I called to mind my own friend that saved my life, the son of a merchant prince, the auspicious Vasudatta. For he, O fair one, is, like you, matchless for beauty and youth, a very fount of nectar to the eyes of this world. Happy is that maiden in the world whose braceletèd hand is taken in this life by that treasure-house of friendship, generosity, compassion and patience. And if this beautiful form of yours is not linked to such a man, then I cannot help grieving that Kāma bears the bow in vain.”

By these words of the king of the hunters the mind of the maiden was suddenly carried away, as if by the syllables of the God of Love's bewildering spell. And, prompted by love, she said to that Savara: "Where is that friend of yours? Bring him here and show him to me." When he heard that, he said: "I will do so." And that moment the Savara took leave of her and set out on his journey in high spirits, considering his object attained. And after he had reached the village, he took with him pearls and musk, a weight sufficient for hundreds of heavily laden porters, and came to our house. There he was honoured by all the inmates and, entering it, he offered to my father that present, which was worth much gold. And after that day and that night had been spent in feasting, he related to me in private the story of his interview with the maiden from the very commencement. And he said to me, who was all excitement, "Come, let us go there," and so the Savara carried me off at night just as he pleased. And in the morning my father found that I had gone off somewhere with the Savara prince; but feeling perfect confidence in his affection, he remained master of his feelings. But I was conducted in course of time by that Savara, who travelled fast, to the Himalaya, and he tended me carefully throughout the journey.

\(^1\) See Vol. I, p. 173.—N.M.P.

And one evening we reached that lake, and bathed; and we remained that one night in the wood, eating sweet fruits. That mountain wood, in which the creepers strewed the ground with flowers, and which was charming with the hum of bees, full of balmy breezes, and with beautiful gleaming herbs for lamps, was like the chamber of Rati to repose in during the night for us two, who drank the water of the lake. Then the next day that maiden came there, and at every step my mind, full of strange longings, flew to meet her, and her arrival was heralded by this my right eye, throbbing as if through eagerness to behold her.¹ And that maid with

¹ Throbbing of the right eye in men portends union with the beloved.
—In all countries involuntary twitchings or itchings are looked upon with great superstition—movements of the right ear, hand, leg, etc., signifying good luck and the left bad luck. This was the case among the Hindus, but it applied only to men. With women the omens were reversed. Thus in Kalidása's Sakuntalá (Act V), Sakuntalá says, "Alas! what means this throbbing of my right eyelid?" to which Gautami replies, "Heaven avert the evil omen, my child! May the guardian deities of thy husband's family lovely eyebrows was beheld by me, on the back of a knotty-maned lion, like a digit of the moon resting in the lap of an autumn cloud; and I cannot describe how my heart felt at that time while I gazed on her, being full of tumultuous emotions of astonishment, longing and fear; then that maidens dismounted from the lion, and gathered flowers, and after bathing in the lake, worshipped Śiva, who dwelt in the temple on its banks.¹

And when the worship was ended, that Savara, my friend, advanced towards her and, announcing himself, bowed, and said to her who received him courteously: "Goddess, I have brought that friend of mine as a suitable bridegroom for you:
if you think proper, I will show him to you this moment."
When she heard that, she said, "Show him," and that Savara came and took me near her and showed me to her.
She looked at me askance with an eye that shed love, and being overcome by Kāma taking possession of her soul, said to that chieftain of the Śavaras: "This friend of yours is not a man, surely he is some god come here to deceive me to-day: how could a mortal have such a handsome shape?"

When I heard that, I said myself, to remove all doubt convert it into a sign of good fortune!" As is natural, such superstitions enter largely into English literature. To give a few examples:

"Mine eyes do itch;
Doth that bode weeping?"

Shakespeare, Othello, iv, 3.

"If your lips itch, you shall kisse somebody."

Melton, Astrologaster, p. 32.

"We shall ha' guests to-day
... My nose itcheth so."

Dekker, Honest Whore.

"By the pricking of my thumbs, Something wicked this way comes."

Shakespeare, Macbeth, iv, 1.

In The Encyclopædia of Superstitions, Folk-Lore and the Occult Sciences
(edited by Cora Linn Daniels and Prof. C. M. Stevans, Chicago and Milwaukee, 1908, vol. i, pp. 298-300 and p. 335) numerous references will be found under the headings "Itching" and "Twitching." Apart from superstitions relating to all parts of the face are included those regarding the palm, knee, elbow, leg, etc. For sneezing see Vol. III, Appendix I, of this work.—N.M.P.

¹ No doubt by offering the flowers which she had gathered.
from her mind: "Fair one, I am in very truth a mortal; what is the use of employing fraud against one so honest as yourself, lady? For I am the son of a merchant named Mahâdhana, that dwells in Vallabhî, and I was gained by my father by the blessing of Siva. For he, when performing austerities to please the god of the moony crest, in order that he might obtain a son, was thus commanded by the god in a dream being pleased with him: 'Rise up, there shall spring from thee a great-hearted son, and this is a great secret, what is the use of setting it forth at length?' After hearing this, he woke up, and in course of time I was born to him as a son, and I am known by the name of Vasudatta. And long ago, when I went to a foreign land, I obtained this Savara chieftain for a chosen friend, who showed himself a true helper in misfortune. This is a brief statement of the truth about me."

When I had said this I ceased; and that maiden, with her face cast down from modesty, said: "It is so, I know; Siva being propitiated deigned to tell me in a dream, after I had worshipped him, 'To-morrow morning thou shalt obtain a husband'; so you are my husband, and this friend of yours is my brother." When she had delighted me by this nectar-like speech, she ceased; and after I had deliberated with her, I determined to go to my own house with my friend, in order that the marriage might be solemnised in due form. Then that fair one summoned by a sign of her own that lion, on which she rode, and said to me: "Mount it, my husband." Then I, by the advice of my friend, mounted the lion, and taking that beloved one in my arms, I set out thence for my home, having obtained all my objects, riding on the lion with my beloved, guided by that friend. And living on the flesh of the deer that he killed with his arrows, we all reached in course of time the city of Vallabhî. Then the people, seeing me coming along with my beloved, riding on a lion, being astonished, ran and told that fact quickly to my father. He too came to meet me in his joy, and when he saw me dismount from the lion, and fall at his feet, he welcomed me with astonishment.

And when he saw that incomparable beauty adore his feet, and perceived that she was a fit wife for me, he could not contain himself for joy. So he entered the house, and after asking us about the circumstances, he made a great feast, praising the friendship of the Savara chieftain. And the next day, by the appointment of the astrologers, I married that excellent maiden, and all my friends and relations assembled to witness our wedding. And that lion, on which my wife had ridden, having witnessed the marriage, suddenly, before the eyes of all, assumed the form of a man.

Then all the bystanders were bewildered, thinking: "What can this mean?" But he, assuming heavenly garments and ornaments, thus addressed me: "I am a Vidyādhara named Chitrāṅgada, and this maiden is my daughter, Manovati by name, dearer to me than life. I used to wander continually through the forest with her in my arms, and one day I reached the Ganges, on the banks of which are many ascetic groves. And as I was going along in the middle of the river, for fear of disturbing the ascetics, my garland by accident fell into its waters. Then the hermit Nārada, who was under the water, suddenly rose up, and, angry¹ because the garland had fallen upon his back, cursed me in the following words:—'On account of this insolence, depart, wicked one; thou shalt become a lion, and repairing

¹ Such unintentional injuries are common in folk-lore. We shall come across other examples in the Ocean of Story. Thus in the twentieth vampire story, in Chapter XCIV, the king and the hermit's daughter lie down on a bed of flowers under an Aśvattha tree. This disturbs the sacred home of the Brāhmaṇ demon Jvalāṃukha, and the king has either to forfeit his own heart, or find a Brāhmaṇ boy willing to offer himself in his place. In the same way in Chapter C the king's ministers climb into a tree to gather fruit and, not knowing it was a dwelling-place of Gaṇeśa, do not rinse their mouths or wash their hands and feet. In consequence they become fruits themselves. Readers will remember the "Tale of the Trader and the Jinni" in the Nights (Burton, vol. i, p. 25), where the hapless trader is eating dates and throwing away the stones. A huge Ifrit suddenly appears, and accuses the merchant with the death of his son. On being asked how this was possible, he replies: "When thouatest dates and throwest away the stones, they struck my son full in the breast as he was walking by, so that he died forthwith." The death of the trader is only saved by the stories of the three Shaykhs, whom the trader and the jinni meet by chance. For a note on the "jerking of the date-stone" see E. Forster, Arabian Nights' Entertainments, 1839, p. xxvi. See also V. Chauvin, op. cit., vi, p. 23.—N.M.P.
to the Himālaya, shalt carry this daughter upon thy back. And when thy daughter shall be taken in marriage by a mortal, then, after witnessing the ceremony, thou shalt be freed from this curse.' After being cursed in these words by the hermit, I became a lion, and dwelt on the Himālaya, carrying this daughter of mine, who is devoted to the worship of Siva. And you know well the sequel of the story, how by the exertions of the Savara chieftain this highly auspicious event has been brought about. So I shall now depart; good luck to you all! I have now reached the termination of that curse."

Having said this, that Vidyādhara immediately flew up into the sky. Then my father, overwhelmed with astonishment at the marvel, delighted at the eligible connection, and finding that his friends and relations were overjoyed, made a great feast. And there was not a single person who did not say with astonishment, reflecting again and again on that noble behaviour of the Savara chieftain: "Who can imagine the actions of sincere friends, who are not even satisfied when they have bestowed on their sworn brothers the gift of life?" The king of the land too, hearing of that occurrence, was exceedingly pleased with the affection which the Savara prince had shown me, and finding he was pleased, my father gave him a present of jewels, and so induced him immediately to bestow on the Savara a vast territory. Then I remained there in happiness, considering myself to have attained all that heart could wish, in having Manovati for a wife, and the Savara prince for a friend. And that Savara chieftain generally lived in my house, finding that he took less pleasure in dwelling in his own country than he formerly did. And the time of us two friends, of him and me, was spent in continually conferring benefits upon one another without our ever being satisfied.

And not long after I had a son born to me by Manovati, who seemed like the heart-joy of the whole family in external visible form; and being called Hiranyadatta he gradually grew up, and after having been duly instructed, he was married. Then my father, having witnessed that, and considering that the object of his life had been accomplished, being old, went to the Ganges with his wife to leave the body. Then I was afflicted by my father's death, but having been at last persuaded by my relations to control my feelings, I consented to uphold the burden of the family. And at that time on the one hand the sight of the beautiful face of Manovati, and on the other the society of the Savara prince delighted me. Accordingly those days of mine passed, joyous from the goodness of my son, charming from the excellence of my wife, happy from the society of my friend.

Then, in course of time, I became well stricken in years, and old age seized me by the chin, as it were out of love giving me this wholesome reproach: "Why are you remaining in the house so long as this, my son?" Then disgust with the world was suddenly produced in my breast, and longing for the forest I appointed my son in my stead. And with my wife I went to the mountain of Kālinjara, together with the King of the Savaras, who abandoned his kingdom out of love to me. And when I arrived there, I at once remembered that I had been a Vidyādhara in a former state of existence, and that the curse I had received from Śiva had come to an end. And I immediately told my wife Manovati of that, and my friend the King of the Savaras, as I was desirous of leaving this mortal body. I said, "May I have this wife and this friend in a future birth, and may I remember this birth," and then I meditated on Śiva in my heart, and flung myself from that hill-side, and so suddenly quitted the body together with that wife and friend. And so I have been now born, as you see, in this Vidyādharā family, under the name of Jimūtavāhana, with a power of recollecting my former existence. And you, that prince of the Savaras, have been also born again by the favour of Śiva, as Mitrāvasu the son of Viśvāvasu, the King of the Siddhas. And, my friend, that Vidyādhara lady, my wife Manovati, has been again born as your sister, Malayavati by name. So your sister is my former wife, and you were my friend in a former state of existence, therefore it is quite proper that I should marry her. But first go and tell this to my parents, for, if the matter is referred to them, your desire will be successfully accomplished.
27. Story of Jimūtavāhana

When Mitrāvasu heard this from Jimūtavāhana, he was pleased, and he went and told all that to the parents of Jimūtavāhana. And when they received his proposal gladly, he was pleased, and went and told that same matter to his own parents. And they were delighted at the accomplishment of their desire, and so the prince quickly prepared for the marriage of his sister. Then Jimūtavāhana, honoured by the King of the Siddhas, received according to usage the hand of Malayavatī. And there was a great festival, in which the heavenly minstrels bustled about, the dense crowd of the Siddhas assembled, and which was enlivened by bounding Vidyaḍharas. Then Jimūtavāhana was married, and remained on that Malaya mountain with his wife in very great prosperity. And once on a time he went with his brother-in-law Mitrāvasu to behold the woods on the shore of the sea. And there he saw a young man come in an agitated state, sending away his mother, who kept exclaiming: “Alas, my son!” And another man, who seemed to be a soldier, following him, conducted him to a broad and high slab of rock and left him there. Jimūtavāhana said to him: “Who are you? What are you about to do, and why does your mother weep for you?” Then the man told him his story.

27b. The Dispute about the Colour of the Sun’s Horses

Long ago Kadrū and Vinatā, the two wives of Kaśyapa, had a dispute in the course of a conversation which they were carrying on. The former said that the Sun’s horses were black, the latter that they were white, and they made an agreement that the one that was wrong should become a slave to the other.¹ Then Kadrū, bent on winning, actually induced her sons, the snakes, to defile the horses of the Sun by spitting venom over them; and showing them to Vinatā

¹ Like the two physicians in Gesta Romanorum, lxxvi.——See Ocean of Story, Vol. I, p. 143, 143a². There was a misprint in this note: chap. xx should read chap. xxii.—M.M.P.
in that condition, she conquered her by a trick and made her her slave: terrible is the spite of women against each other! When Garuḍa, the son of Vinatā, heard of that, he came and tried to induce Kadrū by fair means to release Vinatā from her slavery; then the snakes, the sons of Kadrū, reflecting, said this to him: “O Garuḍa, the gods have begun to churn the sea of milk, bring the nectar thence and give it to us as a substitute, and then take your mother away with you, for you are the chief of heroes.”

When Garuḍa heard that, he went to the sea of milk, and displayed his great might in order to obtain the nectar. Then the god Vishnū, pleased with his might, deigned to say to him: “I am pleased with thee, choose some boon.” Then Garuḍa, angry because his mother was made a slave, asked as a boon from Vishnū: “May the snakes become my food.” Vishnū consented, and when Garuḍa had obtained the nectar by his own valour, he was thus addressed by Indra, who had heard the whole story: “King of Birds, you must take steps to prevent the foolish snakes from consuming the nectar, and to enable me to take it away from them again.” When Garuḍa heard that, he agreed to do it, and elated by the boon of Vishnū, he went to the snakes with the vessel containing the nectar.

And he said from a distance to those foolish snakes, who were terrified on account of the boon granted to him: “Here is the nectar brought by me; release my mother and take it; if you are afraid, I will put it for you on a bed of darbha grass. When I have procured my mother’s release, I will go; take the nectar thence.” The snakes consented, and then he put the vessel of nectar on a pure bed of kuśa grass, and they let his mother go. So Garuḍa departed, having thus released his mother from slavery; but while the snakes were unsuspectingly taking the nectar, Indra suddenly swooped down and, bewildering them by his power, carried off the vessel of nectar from the bed of kuśa grass. Then the snakes

---

1 See the note on the Garuḍa Bird, Vol. I, pp. 103-105.—N.M.P.

2 For a long bibliography on the “eau-de-jourence” see Chauvin, Bibliographie des Ouvrages Arabes, vi, p. 73.—N.M.P.

3 A peculiarly sacred kind of darbha grass.
in despair licked that bed of darbha grass, thinking there might be a drop of spilt nectar on it; the effect was that their tongues were split, and they became double-tongued for nothing. What but ridicule can ever be the portion of the over-greedy? Then the snakes did not obtain the nectar of immortality, and their enemy Garuḍa, on the strength of Vishnu’s boon, began to swoop down and devour them. And this he did again and again. And while he was thus attacking them, the snakes in Pāṭāla were dead with fear, the females miscarried, and the whole serpent race was well-nigh destroyed.

And Vāsuki, the King of the Snakes, seeing him there every day, considered that the serpent world was ruined at one blow; then, after reflecting, he preferred a petition to that Garuḍa of irresistible might, and made this agreement with him: “I will send you every day one snake to eat, O King of Birds, on the hill that rises out of the sand of the sea. But you must not act so foolishly as to enter Pāṭāla, for by the destruction of the serpent world your own object will be baffled.” When Vāsuki said this to him, Garuḍa consented, and began to eat every day in this place one snake sent by him: and in this way innumerable snakes have met their death here. But I am a snake called Sankhachūḍa, and it is my turn to-day: for that reason I have to-day, by the command of the King of the Snakes; in order to furnish a meal to Garuḍa, come to this rock of execution, and to be lamented by my mother.

1 M. Lévéque considers that the above story, as told in the Mahābhārata, forms the basis of the Birds of Aristophanes. He identifies Garuḍa with the hoopoe (Les Mythes et Légendes de l’Inde et de la Perse, p. 14).

2 Rājīla is a striped snake, said to be the same as the ḍuṇḍubha, a non-venomous species.

3 The D. text reads mardakārīṇa, instead of mandakārīṇa, thus making the sense: “You must not enter Pāṭāla, pursuing your work of destruction.”

—N.M.P.

4 The remarks which Ralston makes (Russian Folk-Tales, p. 65) with regard to the snake, as represented in Russian stories, are applicable to the Nāga of Hindu superstition: “Sometimes he retains throughout the story an exclusively reptilian character, sometimes he is of a mixed nature, partly serpent and partly man.” The snakes described in Veckenstedt’s Wendische Sagen (pp. 402-409) resemble in some points the snakes which we hear so
27. Story of Jīmūtavāhana

When Jīmūtavāhana heard this speech of Śankhachūḍa’s he was grieved, and felt sorrow in his heart, and said to him: “Alas! Vāsuki exercises his kingly power in a very cowardly fashion, in that with his own hand he conducts his subjects to serve as food for his enemy. Why did he not first offer himself to Garuḍa? To think of this effeminate creature choosing to witness the destruction of his race! And how great a sin does Garuḍa, though the son of Kaśyapa, commit! How great folly do even great ones commit for the sake of the body only! So I will to-day deliver you alone from Garuḍa by surrendering my body. Do not be despondent, my friend.”

When Śankhachūḍa heard this, he, out of his firm patience, said to him: “This be far from thee, O great-hearted one; do not say so again. The destruction of a jewel for the sake of a piece of glass is never becoming. And I will never incur the reproach of having disgraced my race.” In these words the good snake Śankhachūḍa tried to dissuade Jīmūtavāhana, and thinking that the time of Garuḍa’s arrival would come in a minute, he went to worship in his last hour an image of Śiva under the name of Gokarna, that stood on the shore of the sea.

And when he was gone, Jīmūtavāhana, that treasure-house of compassion, considered that he had gained an opportunity of offering himself up to save the snake’s life. Thereupon he quickly dismissed Mitrāvasu to his own house on the pretext of some business, artfully pretending that he himself had forgotten it. And immediately the earth near him trembled, being shaken by the wind of the wings of the approaching Garuḍa, as if through astonishment at his much of in the present work. See also Bartsch’s Sagen, Märchen und Gebräuche, aus Meklenburg, vol. i, p. 277 et seq.—Numerous references will be found in the General Index of Vol. I, under “Serpent” and “Snake.”

In Arabian fiction the most extraordinary snake story is “The Queen of the Serpents,” Nights (Burton, vol. v, p. 298 et seq.). The serpents in this story are wholly reptilian, except the queen herself, who “shone like a crystal and whose face was as that of a woman, and who spake with human speech.” See also Hartland, Legend of Perseus, vol. ii, p. 44.—N.M.P.
valour. That made Jīmūtavāhana think that the enemy of the snakes was approaching, and full of compassion for others he ascended the stone of execution. And in a moment Garuḍa swooped down, darkening the heaven with his shadow, and carried off that great-hearted one, striking him with his beak. He shed drops of blood, and his crest-jewel dropped off, torn out by Garuḍa, who took him away and began to eat him on the peak of the mountain. At that moment a rain of flowers fell from heaven, and Garuḍa was astonished when he saw it, wondering what it could mean.

In the meanwhile Sāṅkhachūḍa came there, having worshipped Gokarna, and saw the rock of execution sprinkled with many drops of blood; then he thought: "Alas! surely that great-hearted one has offered himself for me, so I wonder where Garuḍa has taken him in this short time. I must search for him quickly, perhaps I may find him." Accordingly the good snake went following up the track of the blood. And in the meanwhile Garuḍa, seeing that Jīmūtavāhana was pleased, left off eating and thought with wonder: "This must be someone else, other than I ought to have taken, for though I am eating him, he is not at all miserable; on the contrary the resolute one rejoices." While Garuḍa was thinking this, Jīmūtavāhana, though in such a state, said to him in order to attain his object: "O King of Birds, in my body also there is flesh and blood; then why have you suddenly stopped eating, though your hunger is not appeased?" When he heard that, that King of Birds, being overpowered with astonishment, said to him: "Noble one, you are not a snake; tell me who you are." Jīmūtavāhana was just answering him, "I am a snake," so eat me, complete what you have begun, for men of resolution never leave unfinished an undertaking they have begun," when Sāṅkhachūḍa arrived and cried out from afar: "Stop, stop, Garuḍa! he is not a snake; I am the snake meant for you, so let him go; alas! how have you suddenly come to make this mistake?"

On hearing that, the King of Birds was excessively be-

---

1 The word nāga, which means "snake," may also mean, as Dr Brockhaus explains it, "a mountaineer"—from naga, "a mountain."
wilder, and Jīmūtavāhāna was grieved at not having accomplished his desire. Then Garuḍa, learning, in the course of their conversation with one another, that he had begun to devour by mistake the King of the Vidyādhāras, was much grieved. He began to reflect: "Alas! in my cruelty I have incurred sin. In truth, those who follow evil courses easily contract guilt. But this great-hearted one who has given his life for another, and despising the world, which is altogether under the dominion of illusion, come to face me, deserves praise." Thinking thus, he was about to enter the fire to purify himself from guilt, when Jīmūtavāhāna said to him: "King of Birds, why do you despond? If you are really afraid of guilt, then you must determine never again to eat these snakes; and you must repent of eating all those previously devoured, for this is the only remedy available in this case; it was idle for you ever to think of any other."

Thus Jīmūtavāhāna, full of compassion for creatures, said to Garuḍa, and he was pleased, and accepted the advice of that king, as if he had been his spiritual preceptor, determining to do what he recommended; and he went to bring nectar from heaven to restore to life rapidly that wounded prince, and the other snakes, whose bones only remained. Then the goddess Gaurī, pleased with Jīmūtavāhāna's wife's devotion to her, came in person and rained nectar on him: by that his limbs were reproduced with increased beauty, and the sound of drums of the rejoicing gods was heard at the same time. Then, on his rising up safe and sound, Garuḍa brought the nectar of immortality from heaven and

---

1 I conjecture kramād for krandat. If we retain krandat we must suppose that the King of the Vidyādhāras wept because his scheme of self-sacrifice was frustrated.

2 I read adhaḥ for adah.

4 In the Sicilian stories of Laura Gonzenbach, an ointment does duty for the Aṃrīta—cf., for one instance out of many, page 145 of that work. Ralston remarks that in European stories the raven is connected with the Water of Life. See his exhaustive account of this cycle of stories on pages 231 and 232 of his Russian Folk-Tales. See also Veckenstedt's Wendische Sagen, p. 245, and the story which begins on page 227. In the thirty-third of the Syrian stories collected by Prym and Socin we have a King of Snakes and Water of Life.
sprinkled it along the whole shore of the sea. That made all the snakes there rise up alive, and then that forest along the shore of the sea, crowded with the numerous tribe of snakes, appeared like Pātāla\(^1\) come to behold Jīmūtavāhana, having lost its previous dread of Garuḍa.

Then Jīmūtavāhana’s relations congratulated him, having seen that he was glorious with unwounded body and undying fame. And his wife rejoiced with her relations, and his parents also. Who would not joy at pain ending in happiness? And with his permission Sankhachūḍa departed to Rasāṭala,\(^2\) and without it his glory, of its own accord, spread through the three worlds. Then, by virtue of the favour of the daughter of the Himālaya, all his relations, Matanga and others, who were long hostile to him, came to Garuḍa, before whom the troops of gods were inclining out of love, and timidly approaching the glory of the Vidyādhara race, prostrated themselves at his feet. And being entertained by them, the benevolent Jīmūtavāhana went from that Malaya mountain to his own home, the slope of the Himālaya.
There, accompanied by his parents and Mitrāvasu and Malayavatī, the resolute one long enjoyed the honour of Emperor of the Vidyādharas. Thus a course of fortunate events always of its own accord follows the footsteps of all those whose exploits arouse the admiration of the three worlds.

\[\text{[M]}\] When the Queen Vāsavadattā heard this story from the mouth of Yaugandharāyaṇa she rejoiced, as she was eager to hear of the splendour of her unborn son. Then, in the society of her husband, she spent that day in conversation about her son, who was to be the future King of the Vidyādharas, which was suggested by that story, for she placed unfailing reliance upon the promise of the favouring gods.

---See Vol. I, pp. 200, 203.—\text{N.M.P.}

\(^1\) The home of the serpent race below the earth.

\(^2\) Here equivalent to Pātāla.
CHAPTER XXIII

THEN Vāsavadattā on the next day said to the King [M] of Vatsa in private, while he was surrounded by his ministers: “My husband, ever since I have been pregnant with this child the difficulty of taking care of it afflicts my heart; and last night, after thinking over it long, I fell asleep with difficulty, and I am persuaded I saw a certain man come in my dream, glorious with a shape distinguished by matted auburn locks and a trident-bearing hand; and he, approaching me, said as if moved by compassion: ‘My daughter, you need not feel at all anxious about the child with which you are pregnant; I will protect it, for I gave it to you. And hear something more, which I will tell you to make you confide in me: a certain woman waits to make a petition to you to-morrow; she will come dragging her husband with her as a prisoner, reviling him, accompanied by five sons, begirt with many relations; and she is a wicked woman, who desires by the help of her relations to get that husband of hers put to death, and all that she will say will be false. And you, my daughter, must beforehand inform the King of Vatsa about this matter, in order that that good man may be freed from that wicked wife.’ This command that august one gave and vanished, and I immediately woke up, and lo! the morning had come.”

When the queen had said that, all spoke of the favour of Śiva, and were astonished, their minds eagerly expecting the fulfilment of the dream; when lo! at that very moment the chief warder entered and suddenly said to the King of Vatsa, who was compassionate to the afflicted: “O King, a certain woman has come to make a representation, accompanied by her relations, bringing with her five sons, reviling her helpless husband.” When the king heard that, being astonished at the way it tallied with the queen’s dream, he commanded the warder to bring her into his presence.
the Queen Vasavadatta felt the greatest delight, having become certain that she would obtain a good son, on account of the truth of the dream. Then that woman entered by the command of the warder, accompanied by her husband, looked at with curiosity by all, who had their faces turned towards the door. Then, having entered, she assumed an expression of misery, and making a bow according to rule, she addressed the king in council accompanied by the queen: "This man, though he is my husband, does not give to me, helpless woman that I am, food, raiment and other necessaries, and yet I am free from blame with respect to him."

When she had said this, her husband pleaded: "King, this woman speaks falsely, supported by her relations, for she wishes me to be put to death. For I have given her supplies beforehand to last till the end of the year; and other relations of hers, who are impartial, are prepared to witness the truth of this for me." When he had said this to the king, the king of his own accord answered: "The trident-bearing god himself has given evidence in this case, appearing to the queen in a dream. What need have we of more witnesses? This woman with her relations must be punished."

When the king had delivered this judgment, the discreet Vaugandharayaña said: "Nevertheless, King, we must do what is right in accordance with the evidence of witnesses, otherwise the people, not knowing of the dream, would in no wise believe the justice of our proceedings." When the king heard that he consented, and had the witnesses summoned that moment, and they, being asked, deposed that that woman was speaking falsely. Then the king banished her, as she was plotting against one well known to be a good husband, from his territory, with her relations and her sons. And with heart melting from pity he discharged her good husband, after giving him much treasure, sufficient for another marriage. And in connection with the whole affair the king remarked: "An evil wife, of wildly cruel nature, tears her still living husband like a she-wolf, when he has fallen into the pit of calamity; but an affectionate, noble and magnanimous wife averts sorrow as the shade\(^1\) of the wayside tree averts heat, and is acquired by a man’s special merits.” Then Vasantaka, who was a clever story-teller, being at the king’s side, said to him à propos of this: “Moreover, King, hatred and affection are commonly produced in living beings in this world owing to their continually recalling the impressions of a past state of existence, and in proof of this hear the story which I am about to tell:

1 Here there is a pun: ākula may also mean "by descent."

28. Story of Sinhaparākrama

There was a king in Benares named Vikramachandra, and he had a favourite follower named Sinhaparākrama, who was wonderfully successful in all battles and in all gambling contests. And he had a wife, very deformed both in body and mind, called by a name which expressed her nature, Kalahakāri.\(^2\) This brave man continually obtained much money both from the king and from gambling, and, as soon as he got it, he gave it all to his wife. But the shrewish woman, backed by her three sons begotten by him, could not, in spite of this, remain one moment without a quarrel. She continually worried by yelling out these words at him with her sons: “You are always eating and drinking away from home, and you never give us anything.” And though he was for ever trying to propitiate her with meat, drink and raiment, she tortured him day and night like an interminable thirst.

Then at last Sinhaparākrama, vexed with indignation on that account, left his house and went on a pilgrimage to the goddess Durgā, that dwells in the Vindhya hills. While he was fasting, the goddess said to him in a dream: “Rise up, my son; go to thy own city of Benares; there is an enormous Nyagrodha tree; by digging round its root thou wilt at once obtain a treasure. And in the treasure thou wilt find a dish of emerald, bright as a sword-blade, looking like a piece of the sky fallen down to earth; casting thy eyes on that, thou wilt see, as it were, reflected inside, the previous existence of every individual, in whatever case thou mayest wish to know it. By means of that thou wilt learn the previous birth of thy wife and of thyself, and having learned the truth wilt dwell there in happiness free from grief."

\(^1\) Kulīnā may mean “falling on the earth,” referring to the shade of the tree. Mārgasthā means “in the right path” when applied to the wife.

\(^2\) I.e. Madam Contentious. Her husband’s name means “of lion-like might.”

Having thus been addressed by the goddess, Sinhaparākrama woke up and broke his fast, and went in the morning to Benares; and after he had reached the city he found at the root of the Nyagrodha tree a treasure, and in it he discovered a large emerald dish, and, eager to learn the truth, he saw in that dish that in a previous birth his wife had been a terrible she-bear and himself a lion. And so, recognising that the hatred between himself and his wife was irremediable, owing to the influence of bitter enmity in a previous birth, he abandoned grief and bewilderment. Then Sinhaparākrama examined many maidens by means of the dish, and discovering that they had belonged to alien races in a previous birth, he avoided them, but after he had discovered one who had been a lioness in a previous birth, and so was a suitable match for him, he married her as his second wife, and her name was Sinhaśri. And after assigning to that Kalahakāri one village only as her portion,¹ he lived, delighted with the acquisition of treasure, in the society of his new wife. Thus, O King, wives and others are friendly or hostile to men in this world by virtue of impressions in a previous state of existence.

[M] When the King of Vatsa had heard this wonderful story from Vasantaka, he was exceedingly delighted, and so was the Queen Vāsavadattā. And the king was never weary day or night of contemplating the moon-like face of the pregnant queen. And as days went on there were born to all of his ministers in due course sons with auspicious marks, which heralded approaching good fortune. First there was born to Yaugandharāyaṇa, the chief minister, a son, Marubhūti by name. Then Rumaṇvaṭ had a son called Hariśikha, and to Vasantakā there was born a son named Tapantaka. And to the head warden, called Nityodita, whose other title was Ityaka, there was born a son named Gomukha. And after they were born a great feast took place, and during it a bodiless voice was heard from heaven: “These ministers shall crush the race of the enemies of the son of the King of Vatsa here, the future universal emperor.”

¹ Speyer (op. cit., p. 104) suggests grāmaikabhāgini as a more probable reading than grāmaikabhāgini, thus meaning that the repudiated wife was merely accorded her livelihood. Similar subsistence-allowances were given as punishment to the wicked officials in Mudrā-Rākshasa, Act. III (see p. 135 of the Bombay edition).—N.M.P.

And as days went by the time drew near for the birth of the child with which the Queen Vāsavadattā was destined to present the King of Vatsa, and she repaired to the ornamented lying-in chamber, which was prepared by matrons having sons, and the windows of which were covered with arka and ṣamī plants. The room was hung with various weapons, rendered auspicious by being mixed with the gleam of jewel-lamps, shedding a blaze able to protect the child; and secured by conjurers who went through innumerable charms and spells and other incantations, so that it became a fortress of the matrons hard for calamity to storm; and there she brought forth in good time a prince of lovely aspect, as the heaven brings forth the moon from which stream pure nectarous rays.

The child, when born, not only irradiated that room, but the heart also of that mother, from which the darkness of grief had departed; then, as the delight of the inmates of the harem was gradually extended, the king heard of the

---

1 I read (after Böhtlingk and Roth) Ityakāpara. See chapter xxxiv, sl. 115.
2 Tejas also means “might,” “courage.”
3 See note at the end of this chapter.—N.M.P.
4 The word harem, from the Arabic haram and ḥarīm, means “that which is prohibited,” and is applied to that portion of the house allotted to the women, and also to the women themselves. It is further used to denote a particularly sacred spot, such as the sanctuary at Mecca. Owing to its constant use in English, it is often employed in describing the women’s quarters in non-Moslem lands, or in countries where only a certain proportion of the birth of a son from the people who were admitted to it; the reason he did not give his kingdom in his delight to the person who announced it was that he was afraid of committing an impropriety, not that he was avaricious.

And so the king, suddenly coming to the harem with longing mind, beheld his son, and his hope bore fruit after a long delay. The child had a long red lower lip like a leaf, beautiful flowing hair like wool, and his whole face was like the lotus, which the Goddess of the Fortune of Empire carries for her delight. He was marked on his soft feet with umbrellas and chowries, as if the fortunes of other kings had beforehand abandoned their badges in his favour, out of fear. Then, while the king shed with tearful eye, that swelled with the pressure of the fullness of the weight of his joy, drops inhabitants are Moslems. The other words used with a similar meaning are zenana, seraglio and purdah.

Zenana, or more correctly ʿzenana, is from the Persian ʿzan, “woman” (γυνή), and is almost exclusively used in India. The word has become familiar in Britain owing to the establishment in India of zenana schools, hospitals and missionary societies.

Seraglio has an interesting etymological history. It is derived directly from the Italian serraglio, “an enclosure” (Latin sera, a bar), and has become connected with ḥarim, through confusion with the Persian sarā, sarāb, which originally meant merely “an edifice,” or “palace.” In this sense sarāb was largely used by the Tartars, from whom the Russians obtained the use of the word, degrading it, however, to mean only a “shed.” In the language of the Levantine Franks it became serai and serraglio. It was at this point that a mistaken “striving after meaning” with the Italian serrato, “shut up,” etc., connected it with the private apartments of women.

The Italian traveller Pietro della Valle (1586-1652) refers to the subject in his Travels (vol. i, p. 36):—

“This term serraglio, so much used among us in speaking of the Grand Turk’s dwelling . . . has been corrupted into that form from the word serai, which in their language signifies properly ‘a palace.’ . . . But since this word serai resembles serratio, as a Venetian would call it, or seraglio as we say, and seeing that the palace of the Turk is (serrato or) shut up all round by a strong wall, and also because the women and a great part of the courtiers dwell in it barred up and shut in, so it may perchance have seemed to some to have deserved such a name. And thus the real term serai has been converted into serraglio.”

See Yule’s Hobson Jobson, under “Serai, sere,” whence I have taken the above extract.

The use of sarāb, meaning “house” or “building,” is very well known, that seemed to be drops of paternal affection, and the ministers, with Yaugandharāyaṇa at their head, rejoiced, a voice was heard from heaven at that time to the following effect:—

"King, this son that is born to thee is an incarnation of Kāma, and know that his name is Naravāhanadatta; and he will soon become emperor of the kings of Vidyādharas, and maintain that position unwearyed for a Kalpa of the gods." When so much had been said, the voice stopped, and immediately a rain of flowers fell from heaven, and the sounds of the celestial drums went forth. Then the king, excessively delighted, made a great feast, which was rendered all the more solemn from the gods having begun it. The sound of cymbals floated in the air, rising from temples, as if to tell all the Vidyādharas of the birth of their king; and red banners, flying in the wind on the tops of the palaces, seemed with though perhaps not often recognised, in the word "caravanserai" (Persian karvānsarā), "a (halting)-place for camels."

Turning to the word purdah, or pardah, it is derived from parda, "a curtain," and has come to mean the women's part of the house, which is separated from the rest by a thick curtain or blinds to which this name is given.

The literature dealing with the harīm life of the East is naturally voluminous. The following references, however, contain the more important accounts:—

For further references see the numerous articles in Hastings' Ency. Rel. Eth. under "Birth," "Education," "Emancipation," "Ethics," "Family" and "Marriage."—N.M.P.

1 Snehā, which means "love," also means "oil." This is a fruitful source of puns in Sanskrit.

2 Infinitely longer than a mortal Kalpa. A mortal Kalpa lasts 432 million years.
their splendour to fling red dye to one another. On earth beautiful women assembled and danced everywhere, as if they were the nymphs of heaven glad that the God of Love had been born with a body.\textsuperscript{1} And the whole city appeared equally splendid with new dresses and ornaments bestowed by the rejoicing king. For while that rich king rained riches upon his dependents, nothing but the treasury was empty. And the ladies belonging to the families of the neighbouring chieftains came in from all sides, with auspicious prayers, versed in the good custom,\textsuperscript{2} accompanied by dancing-girls bringing with them splendid presents, escorted by various excellent guards, attended with the sound of musical instruments, like all the cardinal points in bodily form. Every movement there was of the nature of a dance, every word uttered was attended with full vessels,\textsuperscript{3} every action was of the nature of munificence, the city resounded with musical instruments, the people were adorned with red powder,\textsuperscript{4} and the earth was covered with bards—all these were so in that city which was full of festivity.

Thus the great feast was carried on with increasing magnificence for many days, and did not come to an end before the wishes of the citizens were fully satisfied. And as days went on that infant prince grew like the new moon, and his father bestowed on him with appropriate formalities \textsuperscript{1} He is often called Ananga, "the bodiless," as his body was consumed by the fire of Śiva's eye.

\textsuperscript{2} Or virtuous and generous.
\textsuperscript{3} It is still the custom to give presents of vessels filled with rice and coins. Empty vessels are inauspicious, and even now if a Bengali on going out of his house meets a person carrying an empty pitcher he turns back, and waits a minute or two.
\textsuperscript{4} This is the \textit{kunkam}, \textit{kunkun}, or \textit{kunku} already mentioned in Vol. I, pp. 244, 256. It enters largely into Hindu ceremony and ritual, especially on auspicious occasions and at times of general rejoicing.

It is described as a pink powder made of turmeric, lime-juice and borax. It seems to be a more agreeable substitute for vermilion, whose constant use has probably an injurious effect on the skin and hair. The powder is used in the Maratha country in the same way as vermilion, and a married woman will smear a little patch on her forehead every day and never allow her husband to see her without it. See Russell, \textit{op. cit.}, vol. iv, p. 109. In the month of fasting (Śrāwana) the auspicious \textit{kunkam} is not used, but at festivals such as the Holi it is greatly in evidence.—\textit{N.M.P.}
the name of Naravāhanadatta, which had been previously assigned to him by the heavenly voice. His father was delighted when he saw him make his first two or three tottering steps, in which gleamed the sheen of his smooth fair toe-nails, and when he heard him utter his first two or three indistinct words, showing his teeth which looked like buds.

Then the excellent ministers brought to the infant prince their infant sons, who delighted the heart of the king, and commended them to him. First Yaugandharāyaṇa brought Marubhūti, and then Rumaṇvat Hariśikha, and then the head warder named Ityaka brought Gomukha, and Vasanta his son named Tapantaka. And the domestic chaplain Śāntikara presented the two twin sons of Pingalikā, his nephews Śāntisoma and Vaiśvānara. And at that moment there fell from heaven a rain of flowers from the gods, which a shout of joy made all the more auspicious, and the king rejoiced with the queens, having bestowed presents on that company of ministers’ sons. And that Prince Naravāhanadatta was always surrounded by those six ministers’ sons, devoted to him alone, who commanded respect even in their boyhood, as if with the six political measures ¹ that are the cause of great prosperity. The days of the lord of Vatsa passed in great happiness, while he gazed affectionately on his son with his lotus-like face, going from lap to lap of the kings whose minds were lovingly attached to him, and making in his mirth a charming indistinct playful prattling.

¹ Peace, war, march, halt, stratagem, and recourse to the protection of a mightier king.
NOTE ON PRECAUTIONS OBSERVED IN THE BIRTH-CHAMBER

On page 161 we saw that the room in which Vāsavādattā was confined had its windows covered with sacred plants. These were to act as a protection against the possible intrusions of evil spirits, whose malign influence was feared on such an auspicious occasion. Furthermore, the room was hung with various weapons. Here again we have a charm to ward off danger.

In India iron does not bring good luck, but scares away evil spirits, consequently weapons hung up in the birth-chamber act as a powerful protection. In the same way our horseshoe is really only lucky because of the power in iron to repel evil influences. Steel is equally effective. In her Rites of the Twice-born, Mrs Stevenson, in describing the Brāhman birth-chamber, states that the scissors which have been used to sever the umbilical cord are put under the pillow on which the young mother's head is resting, and the iron rod with which the floor has been dug up for the burial of the after-birth is placed on the ground at the foot of the bed. This iron rod is part of a plough, and, if the householder does not possess one of his own, it is specially borrowed for the occasion; its presence is so important that it is not returned for six days, however much its owner may be needing it. The midwife, before leaving, often secretly introduces a needle into the mattress of the bed, in the hope of saving the mother after-pains.

Frazer (Golden Bough, vol. iii, p. 234 et seq.) has collected numerous examples showing the dislike of spirits for iron in various parts of the world, especially Scotland, India and Africa. Among the Majhwar, an aboriginal tribe in the hill country of South Mirzapur, an iron implement such as a sickle or a betel-cutter is constantly kept near an infant's head during its first year for the purpose of warding off the attacks of ghosts (W. Crooke, Tribes and Castes of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, vol. iii, p. 481). Among the Maravars, an aboriginal race of Southern India, a knife or other iron object lies beside a woman after childbirth to keep off the devil (F. Jagor, "Bericht iiber verschiedene Volksstämme in Vorderindien," Zeitschrift für Ethnologie, vol. xxvi, 1894, p. 70). When a Māla woman is in labour, a sickle and some nīm leaves are always kept on the cot. In Malabar people who have to pass by burning-grounds or other haunted places commonly carry with them iron in some form, such as a knife, or an iron rod used as a walking-stick. When pregnant women go on a journey, they carry with them a few twigs or leaves of the nīm tree, or iron in some shape, to scare evil spirits lurking in groves or burial-grounds which they may pass (E. Thurston, Ethnographic Notes in Southern India, Madras, 1906, p. 341; and Castes and Tribes of Southern India, vol. iv, p. 369 et seq.). See also the articles on pregnancy observances in the Panjāb by H. A. Rose, Journ. Anth. Inst., vol. xxxv, 1905, pp. 271-282.

In Annam parents sometimes sell their child to a smith, who puts an iron anklet on the child's foot, usually adding a small iron chain. After the child has grown and all danger from the attack of evil spirits is over, the anklet is broken.

The use of the sword to scare away evil spirits during childbirth is found in the Philippines, where the husband strips naked (see p. 117 of this volume) and, standing on guard either inside the house or on the roof, flourishes his sword incessantly until the child is born.

In Malaya a piece of iron is numbered among the articles necessary for the defence of infancy against its natural and spiritual foes. See R. J. Wilkinson, Papers on Malay Subjects, part i, p. 1, Kuala Lumpur, 1908.

As iron frightens demons away it is not surprising that it is used in cases of illness. Thus, during an outbreak of cholera, people often carry axes or sickles about with them. On the Slave Coast of Western Africa, when her child is ill, a mother will attach iron rings and bells to the child's ankles and hang iron chains round its neck.

Iron has a similar significance of driving away spirits at death, thus the chief mourners will carry iron with them. When a woman dies in childbirth in the island of Salsette, they put a nail or other piece of iron in the folds of her dress; this is done specially if the child survives her. The intention plainly is to prevent her spirit from coming back; for they believe that a dead mother haunts the house and seeks to carry away her child (G. F. D'Penha, "Superstitions and Customs in Salsette," Indian Antiquary, vol. xxviii, 1899, p. 115).

In all these cases the original cause of the dread of iron by evil spirits appears to be simply that the spirits themselves date back to Stone Age times, and the discovery of iron, with its enormous advantages over stone, attached to it miraculous powers which the evil spirits, in their ignorance, came to dread.

Crooke in his article, "Charms and Amulets (Indian)," Hastings' Ency. Rel. Eth. (vol. iii, p. 443), gives other useful references. He first refers to W. Johnson, Folk Memory, 1908, p. 169 et seq., where the protective value of iron is described. When a child is still-born, the Burmese place iron beside the corpse, with the invocation: "Never more return into thy mother's womb till this metal becomes as soft as down" (Shway Yoe [Sir George Scott], The Burman, vol. i, p. 3). The Vadās of Thāna, in order to guard against the spirit which attacks the child on the sixth day after birth (an unconscious recognition of the danger from infantile lockjaw, caused by neglect of sanitary precautions), place an iron knife or scythe on the mother's cot, and an iron bickern at the door of the lying-in room—a custom which also prevails in the Panjāb (Campbell, Notes on the Spirit Basis of Belief and Custom, Bombay, 1885, p. 387; Malik Muḥammad Din, The Bahāwalpur State, Lahore, 1908, p. 98). An iron bracelet is worn by all Hindu married women, those of high rank encloising it in gold (Rajendralala Mitra, The Indo-Aryans, London, 1881, vol. i, pp. 233, 279; Risley, Tribes and Castes of Bengal, vol. i, p. 582, 583; vol. ii, p. 41). In the form of the sword it has special power. When a birth occurs among the Kachins of Upper Burma, guns are fired, knives (dāh) and torches are brandished over the mother, and old rags and chillies are burned to scare demons by the stench (Gazetteer, Upper Burma, vol. i, pt. i, p. 399).
The Mohammedans of North India wave a knife over a sufferer from cramp, with the invocation: "I salute God! The knife is of steel! The arrow is sharp! May the cramp cease through the power of Muhammad, the brave one!" (North Indian Notes and Queries, vol. v, p. 35). On the Irrawaddy river in Burma iron pyrites is valued as a charm against alligators (Yule, Mission to Ava, London, 1858, p. 198). A curious belief in the sanctity of iron appears among the Doms, a criminal tribe of North India. They inherit from the Stone Age the belief that it is unlawful to commit a burglary with an iron tool; anyone disobeying this rule is expelled from the community, and it is believed that the eyes of the offender will start from his head (North Indian Notes and Queries, vol. v, p. 63).

Apart from the reference to the birth-chamber of the son of the King of Vatsa being hung with various weapons, we are told that they were "rendered suspicious by being mixed with the gleam of jewel-lamps, shedding a blaze able to protect the child." There are two similar descriptions in Chapters XXVIII and XXXIV, where the light of the lamps is eclipsed by the beauty of the expectant mother.

We have already seen (Vol. I, p. 77n1) that demons fear the light and can indulge in their machinations only when it is dark. The same idea obtains at the time of childbirth, for being a most critical period, evil spirits naturally try to take every advantage. Thus it is an almost universal custom to have lights in the birth-chamber to scare away such spirits as may be hovering round to do what harm they can.

"The rule that, where a mother and new-born child are lying, fire and light must never be allowed to go out," says Hartland, "is equally binding in the Highlands of Scotland, in Korea, and in Basutoland; it was observed by the ancient Romans; and the sacred books of the Parsees enjoin it as a religious duty; for the evil powers hate and fear nothing so much as fire and light."

Among the Chinese, as soon as the birth-pangs are felt, the women light candles and burn incense before the household shrine and gods. Red candles are also lighted in the chamber as at a wedding, the idea being that a display of joy and cheerful confidence repels all evil influences.

Crooke (op. cit. supra, pp. 444, 445) also gives useful references about the protecting powers of light and fire in all parts of the world.

The Nayars of Malabar place lights, over which rice is sprinkled, in the room in which the marriage is consummated (Bull. Madras Museum, vol. iii, p. 234; cf. Dubois, Hindu Manners, Customs and Ceremonies, p. 227). Among the Šavaras of Bengal the bridesmaids warm the tips of their fingers at a lamp, and rub the cheeks of the bridegroom (Risley, op. cit., vol. ii, p. 243). The Mohammedan Khojis of Gujarāt place a four-wicked lamp near a young child, while the friends scatter rice (Bombay Gazetteer, vol. ix, pt. ii, p. 45). In Bombay the lamp is extinguished on the tenth day, and again filled with butter and sugar, as a mimetic charm to induce the light to come again and bring another baby (Panjab Notes and Queries, vol. iv, p. 5). The Šrigaud Brāhmans of Gujarāt at marriage wear conical hats made of leaves of the sacred tree Butea frondosa, and on the hat is placed a lighted lamp (Bombay Gazetteer, vol. ix, pt. i, p. 19; and cf. idem, p. 272).

Fire is commonly used for the same purpose. The fires lit at the Holi spring festival are intended as a purgation of evil spirits, or as a mimetic charm to produce sunshine. Touching fire is one of the methods by which mourners are freed from the ghost which clings to them. When an Arer woman of Känara has an illegitimate child, the priest lights a lamp, plucks a hair from the woman's head, throws it into the fire, and announces that mother and child are free from taboo (Bombay Gazetteer, vol. ix, pt. i, p. 215). The rite of fire-walking practised in many parts of the country appears to be intended as a means of purging evil spirits; and the fire lighted by all castes in the delivery-room seems to have the same object. Such use of fire is naturally common among the Zoroastrian fire-worshippers (Shea-Troyer, The Dabistán, Paris, 1843, vol. i, p. 317).

In the Nights (Burton, Supp., vol. i, p. 279) we read: "When the woman came to her delivery, she gave birth to a girl-child in the night, and they sought fire of the neighbours."

In the text of the Ocean of Story under discussion the lamps are described as "jewel-lamps, shedding a blaze," and in Chapter XXXIV we read of "a long row of flames of the jewel-lamps." Tawney gives a note to this latter reference, but does not tell us what jewel-lamps are. The question arises as to whether they are lamps encrusted with jewels, lamps carved out of a solid jewel, or jewels so bright that they do the service of lamps. The first seems quite probable, while the second is most unlikely and, as far as I can discover, does not appear in folk-tales. But the luminous jewel is of very common occurrence, and not only appears largely in Eastern fiction, but enters into Alexandrian myths and is found in the works of mediaeval physiologists.

Clouston, Popular Tales and Fictions, vol. i, p. 412, gives references from the Gesta Romanorum, the Talmud, Pseudo-Callisthenes, Lucian's De Dea Syria, The Forty Vazirs, and ends his note with "Jewel-lamps are often mentioned in the Kathā Sarit Sūgara," so he evidently thought the references were to jewels.

In the Nights (Burton, vol. i, p. 166) a room is lit by a light which "came from a precious stone big as an ostrich egg . . . and this jewel, blazing like the sun, cast its rays far and wide."

On the other hand, lamps enter so enormously into Hindu ritual that one is inclined to think that lamps are really meant, especially when we read of the "long row of flames." Whenever a luminous jewel is mentioned it is nearly always a single stone. There are exceptions, however. The gable of Prester John's palace was lit at night by two carbuncles, one at either end, But a whole row of such jewels used for such a purpose is unheard of.—N.M.P.
BOOK V: CHATURDĀRIKĀ

CHAPTER XXIV

INVOCATION

MAY Ganeśa, painting the earth with mosaic by means of the particles of red lead flying from his trunk whirled round in his madness,¹ and so, as it were, burning up obstacles with the flames of his might, protect you.

[M] Thus the King of Vatsa and his queen remained engaged in bringing up their only son Naravāhanadatta, and once on a time the minister Yaugandharāyana, seeing the king anxious about taking care of him, said to him as he was alone: "King, you must never feel any anxiety now about the Prince Naravāhanadatta, for he has been created by the adorable god Śiva in your house as the future emperor over the kings of the Vidyādharas; and by their divine power the kings of Vidyādharas have found this out, and meaning mischief have become troubled, unable in their hearts to endure it; and knowing this, the god with the moon crest has appointed a prince of the Gaṇas,² Stambhaka by name, to protect him. And he remains here invisible, protecting this son of yours, and Nārada coming swiftly informed me of this."

While the minister was uttering these words there descended from the midst of the air a divine man wearing a diadem and a bracelet, and armed with a sword. He bowed, and then the King of Vatsa, after welcoming him, immediately asked him with curiosity: "Who are you, and what is your ¹ The elephant-headed god has his trunk painted with red lead like a tame elephant, and is also liable to become mast.

² Followers and attendants upon Śiva.—See Vol. I, p. 202.—N.M.P.

170
errand here?" He said: "I was once a mortal, but I have now become a king of the Vidyādharas, named Saktivega, and I have many enemies. I have found out by my power that your son is destined to be our emperor, and I have come to see him, O King."

When Saktivega, overawed at the sight of his future emperor, had said this, the King of Vatsa was pleased, and again asked him in his astonishment: "How can the rank of a Vidyādharā be attained, and of what nature is it, and how did you obtain it? Tell me this, my friend." When he heard this speech of the king’s that Vidyādharā Saktivega, courteously bowing, answered him thus: "O King, resolute souls having propitiated Śiva either in this or in a former birth, obtain by his favour the rank of Vidyādharā. And that rank, denoted by the insignia of supernatural knowledge, of sword, garland and so on, is of various kinds, but listen! I will tell you how I obtained it." Having said this, Saktivega told the following story, relating to himself, in the presence of the Queen Vāsavadattā:

29. Story of the Golden City

There lived long ago in a city called Vardhamāna, the ornament of the earth, a king, the terror of his foes, called Paropakārīn. And this exalted monarch possessed a queen of the name of Kanakaprabhā, as the cloud holds the lightning, but she had not the fickleness of the lightning. And in course of time there was born to him by that queen a daughter, who seemed to have been formed by the creator to dash Lakshmi’s pride in her own beauty. And that moon of the eyes of the world was gradually reared to womanhood by her father, who gave her the name of Kanakarekhā, suggested by her mother’s name Kanakaprabhā.

Once on a time, when she had grown up, the king, her father, said to the Queen Kanakaprabhā, who came to him in secret: "A grown-up daughter cannot be kept in one’s

---N.M.P.

1 The modern Burdwan.—This is, however, not necessarily so (Barnett).

2 Kanaka-prabhā means "lustre of gold."—N.M.P.

3 I.e. "gold-bleam," or "streak of gold."—N.M.P.
house, accordingly Kanakarekhā troubles my heart with anxiety about a suitable marriage for her. For a maiden of good family who does not obtain a proper position is like a song out of tune; when heard of by the ears even of one unconnected with her she causes distress. But a daughter who through folly is made over to one not suitable is like learning imparted to one not fit to receive it, and cannot tend to glory or merit, but only to regret. So I am very anxious as to what king I must give this daughter of mine, and who will be a fit match for her."

When Kanakaprabhā heard this she laughed and said: "You say this, but your daughter does not wish to be married; for to-day, when she was playing with a doll and making believe it was a child, I said to her in fun: 'My daughter, when shall I see you married?' When she heard that, she answered me reproachfully: 'Do not say so; you must not marry me to anyone; and my separation from you is not appointed. I do well enough as a maiden, but if I am married, know that I shall be a corpse; there is a certain reason for this.' As she has said this to me I have come to you, O King, in a state of distress; for, as she has refused to be married, what use is there in deliberating about a bridegroom?"

When the king heard this from the queen he was bewildered, and going to the private apartments of the princess he said to his daughter: "When the maidens of the gods and Asuras practise austerities in order to obtain a husband, why, my daughter, do you refuse to take one?" When the Princess Kanakarekhā heard this speech of her father's she fixed her eyes on the ground and said: "Father, I do not desire to be married at present, so what object has my father in it, and why does he insist upon it?" That King Paropa-kārin, when his daughter addressed him in that way, being the discreetest of men, thus answered her: "How can sin be avoided unless a daughter is given in marriage? And independence is not fit for a maiden who ought to be in dependence on relations. For a daughter, in truth, is born for the sake of another and is kept for him. The house of her father is not a fit place for her except in childhood. For
THE STRANGE CONDITION FOR MARRIAGE 173

if a daughter reaches puberty unmarried her relations go to hell, and she is an outcast, and her bridegroom is called the husband of an outcast.”

When her father said this to her, the Princess Kanakarekhā immediately uttered a speech that was in her mind:
“Father, if this is so, then whatever Brāhmaṇ or Kshatriya has succeeded in seeing the city called the Golden City, to him
I must be given, and he shall be my husband, and if none such is found, you must not unjustly reproach me.” When his daughter said that to him, that king reflected: “It is a good thing at any rate that she has agreed to be married on a certain condition, and no doubt she is some goddess born in my house for a special reason, for else how comes she to know so much though she is a child?” Such were the king’s reflections at that time; so he said to his daughter, “I will do as you wish,” and then he rose up and did his day’s work.

And on the next day, as he was sitting in the hall of audience, he said to his courtiers: “Has anyone among you seen the city called the Golden City? Whoever has seen it, if he be a Brāhmaṇ or a Kshatriya, I will give him my daughter Kanakarekhā and make him crown prince.”
And they all, looking at one another’s faces, said: “We have not even heard of it, much less have we seen it.”

Then the king summoned the warder and said to him:
“Go and cause a proclamation to be circulated in the whole of this town with the beating of drums,¹ and find out if anyone has really seen that city.” When the warder received this order, he said, “I will do so,” and went out; and after he had gone out he immediately gave orders to the city guards, and caused a drum to be beaten all round the city, thus arousing curiosity to hear the proclamation, which ran as follows:—“Whatever Brāhmaṇ or Kshatriya youth has seen the city called the Golden City, let him speak, and the king will give him his daughter and the rank of crown prince.”
Such was the astounding announcement proclaimed all about the town after the drum had been beaten. And the citizens said, after hearing that proclamation: “What is this Golden City that is to-day proclaimed in our town, which has never been heard of or seen even by those among us who are old?" But not a single one among them said: "I have seen it."

¹ See Vol. I, p. 118n².—N.M.P.

And in the meanwhile a Brâhman living in that town, Saktideva by name, the son of Baladeva, heard that proclamation; that youth, being addicted to vice, had been rapidly stripped of his wealth at the gaming-table, and he reflected, being excited by hearing of the giving in marriage of the king’s daughter: "As I have lost all my wealth by gambling, I cannot now enter the house of my father, nor even the house of a courtesan, so, as I have no resource, it is better for me to assert falsely to those who are making the proclamation by beat of drum that I have seen that city. Who will discover that I know nothing about it, for who has ever seen it? And in this way I may perhaps marry the princess."

Thus reflecting, Saktideva went to the city guards and said falsely: "I have seen that city." They immediately said to him: "Bravo! Then come with us to the king’s warder." So he went with them to the warder. And in the same way he falsely asserted to him that he had seen that city, and he welcomed him kindly, and took him to the king. And without wavering he maintained the very same story in the presence of the king: what indeed is difficult for a blackleg to do who is ruined by play?

Then the king, in order to ascertain the truth, sent that Brâhman to his daughter Kanakarekhâ, and when she heard of the matter from the mouth of the warder, and the Brâhman came near, she asked him: "Have you seen that Golden City?" Then he answered her: "Yes, that city was seen by me when I was roaming through the earth in quest of knowledge."¹ She next asked him: "By what road did you go there, and what is it like?" That Brâhman then went on to say: "From this place I went to a town called Harapura, and from that I next came to the city of Benares; and from Benares in a few days to the city of Paundravardhana, thence I went to that city called the Golden City, and

¹ For an account of the Wanderjahre of young Brâhman students see Dr Bühler’s introduction to the Vikramânkadevacharita.
I saw it, a place of enjoyment for those who act aright, like the city of Indra, the glory of which is made for the delight of gods. And having acquired learning there, I returned here after some time; such is the path by which I went, and such is that city."

After that fraudulent Brähman Śaktideva had made up this story, the princess said, with a laugh: "Great Brähman, you have indeed seen that city; but tell me, tell me again, by what path you went." When Śaktideva heard that, he again displayed his effrontery, and then the princess had him put out by her servants. And immediately after putting him out she went to her father, and her father asked her: "Did that Brähman speak the truth?" And then the princess said to her father: "Though you are a king you act without due consideration; do you not know that rogues deceive honest people? For that Brähman simply wants to impose on me with a falsehood, but the liar has never seen the Golden City. And all kinds of deceptions are practised on the earth by rogues; for listen to the story of Śiva and Mādhava, which I will tell you." Having said this, the princess told the following tale:—

29A. Śiva and Mādhava

There is an excellent city rightly named Ratnapura, and in it there were two rogues named Śiva and Mādhava. Surrounded themselves with many other rogues, they contrived for a long time to rob, by making use of trickery, all the rich men in the town. And one day those two deliberated together and said: "We have managed by this time to plunder this town thoroughly; so let us now go and live in 1 More literally, "those whose eyes do not wink." The epithet also means "worthy of being regarded with unwinking eyes." No doubt this ambiguity is intended.—"The city of Indra" is svarga—a temporary paradise, where the blessed enjoy unequalled delights before their next birth on earth. The duration of the stay is in proportion with their good deeds in their previous life. In Vol. I, p. 59, Vararuchi speaks of the "perishable joys of Svarga." It is here that the Gandharvas and Apsaras are in continual service of Indra, as we have already seen (Vol. I, p. 201).—N.M.P.

2 I.c. the city of jewels.
the city of Ujjayinī; there we hear that there is a very rich man named Śankararavāmin, who is chaplain to the king. If we cheat him out of his money we may thereby enjoy the charms of the ladies of Mālava. He is spoken of by Brāhmans as a miser, because he withholds\(^1\) half their usual fee with a frowning face, though he possesses treasure enough to fill seven vessels; and that Brāhma has a pearl of a daughter spoken of as matchless; we will manage to get her too out of him along with the money."

Having thus determined, and having arranged beforehand what part each was to play, the two rogues Sīva and Mādhava went out of that town. At last they reached Ujjayinī, and Mādhava, with his attendants, disguised as a Rājpūt, remained in a certain village outside the town. But Sīva, who was expert in every kind of deception, having assumed the disguise of a religious ascetic, first entered that town alone. There he took up his quarters in a hut on the banks of the Siprā, in which he placed, so that that could be seen, clay, darbha grass, a vessel for begging, and a deerskin. And in the morning he anointed his body with thick clay, as if testing beforehand his destined smearing with the mud of the hell Avīchi. And plunging in the water of the river, he remained a long time with his head downward, as if rehearsing beforehand his future descent to hell, the result of his evil actions. And when he rose up from his bath he remained a long time looking up towards the sun,\(^2\) as if showing that he deserved to be impaled. Then he went into the presence of the god, and making rings of kusa grass,\(^3\) and muttering prayers, he remained sitting in the posture called Padmāsana,\(^4\) with a hypocritical, cunning face, and from time to time he made an offering to Viṣṇu, having gathered white flowers, even as he took captive the simple hearts of the good by his villainy; and having made his offering he again

---

\(^1\) Askandin is translated "granting" by Monier Williams and the Petersburg lexicographers.

\(^2\) For the amazing austerities of Hindu ascetics see Vol. I, p. 79n.---N.M.P.

\(^3\) These are worn on the fingers when offerings are made.

\(^4\) A particular posture in religious meditation, sitting with the thighs crossed, with one hand resting on the left thigh, the other held up with the thumb upon the heart, and the eyes directed to the tip of the nose.
THE TWO ROGUES

pretended to betake himself to muttering his prayers, and prolonged his meditations as if fixing his attention on wicked ways.

And the next day, clothed in the skin of a black antelope, he wandered about the city in quest of alms, like one of his own deceitful leers intended to beguile it, and observing a strict silence, he took three handfuls of rice from Brāhmans’ houses, still equipped with stick and deerskin, and divided the food into three parts, like the three divisions of the day, and part he gave to the crows, and part to his guest, and with the third he filled his maw; and he remained for a long time hypocritically telling his beads, as if he were counting his sins at the same time, and muttering prayers; and in the night he remained alone in his hut, thinking over the weak points of his fellow-men, even the smallest; and by thus performing every day a difficult pretended penance he gained complete ascendancy over the minds of the citizens in every quarter. And all the people became devoted to him, and a report spread among them in every direction that Śiva was an exceedingly self-denying hermit.

And in the meanwhile his accomplice, the other rogue, Mādhava, having heard from his emissaries how he was getting on, entered that city; and taking up his abode there in a distant temple, he went to the bank of the Siprā to bathe, disguised as a Rājpūt, and after bathing, as he was returning with his retinue, he saw Śiva praying in front of the god, and with great veneration he fell at his feet and said before all the people: “There is no other such ascetic in the world, for he has been often seen by me going round from one holy place to another.” But Śiva, though he saw him, kept his neck immovable out of cunning, and remained in the same position as before, and Mādhava returned to his own lodging.

And at night those two met together and ate and drank, and deliberated over the rest of their programme, what they must do next. And in the last watch of the night Śiva went

---

1 There seem to be two or three mistakes in Brockhaus’ text. D. reads bhikṣūtrayam tataḥ ... cakre triḥ satyam āvam khaṇḍāsāh, “he divided the begged food, three handfuls of rice, into three parts, just as he broke asunder the truth.” See Speyer, op. cit., pp. 104, 105.—N.M.P.
back leisurely to his hut. And in the morning Mādhava said to one of his gang: "Take these two garments and give them as a present to the domestic chaplain of the king here, who is called Śankarasvāmin, and say to him respectfully: 'There is a Rājpūt come from the Deccan of the name of Mādhava, who has been oppressed by his relations, and he brings with him much inherited wealth; he is accompanied by some other Rājpūts like himself, and he wishes to enter into the services of your king here, and he has sent me to visit you, O treasure-house of glory.'"

The rogue who was sent off by Mādhava with this message went to the house of that chaplain with the present in his hand, and after approaching him, and giving him the present at a favourable moment, he delivered to him in private Mādhava's message, as he had been ordered; he, for his part, out of his greed for presents, believed it all, anticipating other favours in the future, for a bribe is the sovereign specific for attracting the covetous. The rogue then came back, and on the next day Mādhava, having obtained a favourable opportunity, went in person to visit that chaplain, accompanied by attendants, who hypocritically assumed the appearance of men desiring service,1 passing themselves off as Rājpūts, distinguished by the maces they carried; he had himself announced by an attendant preceding him, and thus he approached the family priest, who received him with welcomes which expressed his delight at his arrival. Then Mādhava remained engaged in conversation with him for some time, and at last being dismissed by him, returned to his own house.

On the next day he sent another couple of garments as a present, and again approached that chaplain and said to him: "I indeed wish to enter into service to please my retainers, for that reason I have repaired to you, but I possess wealth." When the chaplain heard that, he hoped to get something out of him, and he promised Mādhava to procure for him what he desired, and he immediately went and petitioned the king on this account, and, out of respect for the chaplain, the king consented to do what he asked. And on the next day the family priest took Mādhava and his retinue, and presented them to the king with all due respect. The king too, when he saw that Mādhava resembled a Rājput in appearance, received him graciously and appointed him a salary. Then Mādhava remained there in attendance upon the king, and every night he met Śiva to deliberate with him. And the chaplain entreated him to live with him in his house, out of avarice, as he was intent on presents.

---

1 Kārpaṭika may mean a pilgrim, but it seems to be used in the Kathā Sarit Sāgara to mean a kind of dependent on a king or great man, usually a foreigner. See Chapters XXXVIII, LIII and LXXXI of this work.

Then Mādhava with his followers repaired to the house of the chaplain; this settlement was the cause of the chaplain’s ruin, as that of the mouse in the trunk of the tree was the cause of its ruin. And he deposited a chest in the strong-room of the chaplain, after filling it with ornaments made of false gems. And from time to time he opened the box and by cunningly half showing some of the jewels he captivated the mind of the chaplain, as that of a cow is captivated by grass. And when he had gained in this way the confidence of the chaplain, he made his body emaciated by taking little food, and falsely pretended that he was ill.

And after a few days had passed, that prince of rogues said with weak voice to that chaplain, who was at his bedside: “My condition is miserable in this body, so bring, good Brāhman, some distinguished man of your caste, in order that I may bestow my wealth upon him for my happiness here and hereafter, for, life being unstable, what care can a wise man have for riches?” That chaplain, who was devoted to presents, when addressed in this way, said, “I will do so,” and Mādhava fell at his feet. Then whatever Brāhman the chaplain brought, Mādhava refused to receive, pretending that he wanted a more distinguished one. One of the rogues in attendance upon Mādhava, when he saw this, said: “Probably an ordinary Brāhman does not please him. So it will be better now to find out whether the strict ascetic on the banks of Siprā named Śiva pleases him or not.” When Mādhava heard that, he said plaintively to that chaplain: “Yes, be kind, and bring him, for there is no other Brāhman like him.”

The chaplain, thus entreated, went near Śiva, and beheld him immovable, pretending to be engaged in meditation. And then he walked round him, keeping him on his right hand, and sat down in front of him: and immediately the rascal slowly opened his eyes. Then the family priest, bending before him, said with bowed head: "My lord, if it will not make you angry, I will prefer a petition to you. There is dwelling here a very rich Rājpūt from the Deccan, named Mādhava, and he, being ill, is desirous of giving away his whole property: if you consent, he will give you that treasure which glitters with many ornaments made out of priceless gems." When Śiva heard that, he slowly broke silence, and said: "O Brāhmaṇa, since I live on alms, and observe perpetual chastity, of what use are riches to me?" Then that chaplain went on to say to him: "Do not say that, great Brāhmaṇa; do you not know the due order of the periods in the life of a Brahmaṇa?¹ By marrying a wife, and performing in his house offerings to the Manes, sacrifices to the gods and hospitality to guests, he uses his property to obtain the three objects of life²; the stage of the householder is the most useful of all."³ Then Śiva said: "How can I take a wife, for I will not marry a woman from any low family?" When the covetous chaplain heard that, he thought that he would be able to enjoy his wealth at will, and, catching at the opportunity, he said to him: "I have an unmarried daughter named Vīnayāsvāmini, and she is very beautiful; I will bestow her in marriage on you. And I will keep for you all the wealth which you receive as a donation from Mādhava, so enter on the duties of a householder." When Śiva heard this, having got the very thing he wanted, he said: "Brāhmaṇa, if your heart is set on this,⁴ I will do what you say. But I am an

¹ First he should be a Brahmachārī or unmarried religious student, next a Grihastha or householder, then a Vānaprastha or anchoret, lastly a Bhikṣu or beggar.

² I.e. virtue, wealth, pleasure: dharma, artha, kāma.

³ In his translation of this story from the D. text in The Golden Town, 1909, Barnett adds "among the men in the four orders" before "the stage," thus making the meaning clearer.—N.M.P.

⁴ Graha also means "planet"—i.e. inauspicious planet. Śiva tells the truth here.
SIVA MARRIES THE CHAPLAIN'S DAUGHTER 181

ascetic who knows nothing about gold and jewels: I shall act as you advise; do as you think best."

When the chaplain heard that speech of Siva's he was delighted, and the fool said, "Agreed," and conducted Siva to his house. And when he had introduced there that inauspicious guest named Siva,¹ he told Mādhava what he had done, and was applauded by him. And immediately he gave Siva his daughter, who had been carefully brought up, and in giving her he seemed to be giving away his own prosperity lost by his folly. And on the third day after his marriage he took him to Mādhava, who was pretending to be ill, to receive his present. And Mādhava rose up and fell at his feet, and said what was quite true: "I adore thee whose asceticism is incomprehensible."² And in accordance with the prescribed form he bestowed on Siva that box of ornaments made of many sham jewels, which was brought from the chaplain's treasury. Siva for his part, after receiving it, gave it into the hands of the chaplain, saying: "I know nothing about this, but you do." And that priest immediately took it, saying: "I undertook to do this long ago, why should you trouble yourself about it?" Then Siva gave them his blessing, and went to his wife's private apartments, and the chaplain took the box and put it in his strong-room.

Mādhava for his part gradually desisted from feigning sickness, affecting to feel better the next day, and said that his disease had been cured by virtue of his great gift. And he praised the chaplain when he came near, saying to him: "It was by your aiding me in an act of faith that I tided over this calamity." And he openly struck up a friendship with Siva, asserting that it was due to the might of Siva's holiness that his life had been saved. Siva, for his part, after some days said to the chaplain: "How long am I to feast in your house in this style? Why do you not take from me those jewels for some fixed sum of money? If they are valuable, give me a fair price for them."

When the priest heard that, thinking that the jewels were

¹ I.e. the auspicious or friendly one.

² There is probably a double meaning in the word "incomprehensible."
of incalculable value, he consented, and gave to Śiva as purchase-money his whole living. And he made Śiva sign a receipt for the sum with his own hand, and he himself too signed a receipt for the jewels, thinking that that treasure far exceeded his own wealth in value. And they separated, taking one another’s receipts, and the chaplain lived in one place, while Śiva kept house in another. And then Śiva and Madhava dwelt together, and remained there, leading a very pleasant life consuming the chaplain’s wealth. And as time went on, the chaplain, being in need of cash, went to the town to sell one of the ornaments in the bazar.

Then the merchants, who were connoisseurs in jewels, said after examining it: “Ha! the man who made those sham jewels was a clever fellow, whoever he was. For this ornament is composed of pieces of glass and quartz with various colours and fastened together with brass, and there are no gems or gold in it.” When the chaplain heard that, he went in his agitation and brought all the ornaments from his house, and showed them to the merchants. When they saw them, they said that all of them were composed of sham jewels in the same way; but the chaplain, when he heard that, was, so to speak, thunderstruck. And immediately the fool went off and said to Śiva: “Take back your ornaments and give me back my own wealth.” But Śiva answered him: “How can I possibly have retained your wealth till now? Why, it has all in course of time been consumed in my house.”

Then the chaplain and Śiva fell into an altercation, and went, both of them, before the king, at whose side Madhava was standing. And the chaplain made this representation to the king: “Śiva has consumed all my substance, taking advantage of my not knowing that a great treasure which he deposited in my house was composed of skilfully coloured pieces of glass and quartz fastened together with brass.” Then Śiva said: “King, from my childhood I have been a hermit, and I was persuaded by that man’s earnest petition to accept a donation, and when I took it, though inexperienced in the ways of the world, I said to him, ‘I am no connoisseur in jewels and things of that kind, and I rely upon you,' and he consented, saying, 'I will be your warrant in the matter.' And I accepted all the donation and deposited it in his hand. Then he bought the whole from me at his own price, and we hold from one another mutual receipts; and now it is in the king's power to grant me help in my sorest need.'"

1 Perhaps we ought to read datvā for tatra.

Śiva having thus finished his speech, Mādhava said: "Do not say this; you are honourable, but what fault have I committed in the matter? I never received anything either from you or from Śiva; I had some wealth inherited from my father, which I had long deposited elsewhere; then I brought that wealth and presented it to a Brāhmaṇa. If the gold is not real gold, and the jewels are not real jewels, then let us suppose that I have reaped fruit from giving away brass, quartz and glass. But the fact that I was persuaded with sincere heart that I was giving something is clear from this, that I recovered from a very dangerous illness."

When Mādhava said this to him without any alteration in the expression of his face, the king laughed, and all his ministers, and they were highly delighted. And those present in court said, laughing in their sleeves: "Neither Mādhava nor Śiva has done anything unfair." Thereupon that chaplain departed with downcast countenance, having lost his wealth. For of what calamities is not the blinding of the mind with excessive greed the cause? And so those two rogues Śiva and Mādhava long remained there happy in having obtained the favour of the delighted king.¹

¹ This is the first of several excellent "thieving" stories which appear in the Ocean of Story. The history of stealing plays a very important part in both fact and fiction in India. The "Art of Stealing in Hindu Fiction" has recently been treated by Bloomfield in two most entertaining and instructive papers, Amer. Journ. Phil., vol. xlv, part ii, pp. 97-133; part iii, pp. 193-229, 1928. I shall have occasion to refer to these again. The arch-thief of Hindu fiction is Mūladeva, whom Bloomfield identifies with Kaṁsūta, Gaṅiputra, Gaṅikāputra and Gaṅikāsūta. We shall meet him in the fifteenth vampire story, Chapter LXXXIX, in the "Story of the Magic Pill," and also in the last story of the whole work. He is supposed to have written a famous manual of thievery entitled Steyasadra-pravartika or Steyasadra-pravartaka.

The science is regarded with the utmost seriousness, and thieving was regularly taught to a selected number of pupils, a high standard of mutual regard existing between teacher and pupil. See J. J. Meyer's remarks on
29. Story of the Golden City

"Thus do rogues spread the webs of their tongue with hundreds of intricate threads, like fishermen upon dry land, living by the net. So you may be certain, my father, that this Brähman is a case in point. By falsely asserting that he has seen the City of Gold, he wishes to deceive you, and to obtain me for a wife. So do not be in a hurry to get me married; I shall remain unmarried at present, and we will see what will happen." When the King Paropakärin heard this from his daughter Kanakarekha, he thus answered her: "When a girl is grown up, it is not expedient that she should remain long unmarried, for wicked people envious of good qualities falsely impute sin. And people are particularly fond of blackening the character of one distinguished; to illustrate this, listen to the story of Harasvāmin which I am about to tell you."

thieves' practices in his introduction to Daśa Kumāra Charita, or The Story of the Ten Princes, p. 15 et seq.

Among the numerous extracts from thieving stories collected by Bloomfield, I will here quote a Tamil story, reported by De Rossairo in The Orientalist, vol. iii, p. 188. Apart from the excellence of the tale itself it affords a good parallel to the ascetic practices of the rogue Śiva in our text, showing to what a degree of risk and personal discomfort the expert thief must be prepared to go.

A king wishes to study the art of stealing, in order to mete out more perfect justice. His learned minister presents before him a notorious thief and pilferer. After the king has dismissed all attendants, he expresses his desire to become the thief's pupil. To his surprise, the thief pleads ignorance of the art of stealing, and asserts that he has been most unjustly accused. The king dismisses him, but on the next day misses his signet-ring off his ring-finger. The thief, though asserting his innocence, is condemned to be impaled upon a three-pronged stake. But the king, uneasy in his mind, disguises himself, and goes in the still of the night to the place of execution. As he comes near he hears the thief, in pitiful accents, address the Almighty Creator, pleading his innocence, and calling for vengeance from heaven on the head of him who had judged him so wrongly and pronounced so unjust and heavy a punishment. The king has the thief set free, but on the next morning the thief appears once more, and, with expressions of respect and civility, presents to his Majesty the lost signet-ring. When asked to explain, the thief says: "May it please your Majesty, I have the ring because I played my part with alacrity and decision. Should your Majesty wish to follow my profession, there would be no difficulty in doing so, if you could but behave as I did—
29B. The Iniquity of Scandal

There is a city on the banks of the Ganges named Kusumapura,¹ and in it there was an ascetic who visited holy places, named Haravāmin. He was a Brāhman living by begging; and constructing a hut on the banks of the Ganges, he became, on account of his surprisingly rigid asceticism, the object of the people’s respect.² And one day a wicked man among the inhabitants, who could not tolerate his virtue, seeing him from a distance going out to beg, said: “Do you know what a hypocritical ascetic that is? It is he that has eaten up all the children in this town.” When a second there who was like him heard this, he said: “It is true; I also have heard people saying this.” And a third confirming it said: “Such is the fact.” The chain of villains’ conversation binds reproach on the good. And in this way the report spread from ear to ear, and gained general credence in the city. And all the citizens kept their children by force in their houses, saying: “Haravāmin carries off all the children and eats them.”³

And then the Brāhmans in that town, afraid that their offspring would be destroyed, assembled and deliberated about his banishment from the city. And as they did not namely, maintain a lie even when put to extreme trial. My behaviour is the first lesson in the art your Majesty is desirous of being taught.”

For the practices of modern thieves see Russell, Tribes and Castes of the Central Provinces, vol. i, pp. 234, 248; vol. iv, pp. 190, 191, 472-474, 483-487, 606-608; and Kennedy, Criminal Classes of Bombay, 1908.—N.M.P.

¹ The city of flowers—i.e. Pāṭaliputra.—See p. 39 of this volume.—N.M.P.
² Perhaps we ought to read yayau for dadau. This I find is the reading of an excellent MS. in the Sanskrit College, for the loan of which I am deeply indebted to the Principal and Librarian.
³ A report similar to that spread against Haravāmin was in circulation during the French Revolution. Taine in his history of the Revolution, vol. i, p. 418, tells the following anecdote:—“M. de Montlosier found himself the object of many unpleasant attentions when he went to the National Assembly. In particular a woman of about thirty used to sharpen a large knife when he passed and look at him in a threatening manner. On inquiry he discovered the cause—Deux enfants du quartier ont disparu enlevés par des bohémiens, et c’est maintenant un bruit répandu que M. de Montlosier, le marquis de Mirabeau, et d’autres députés du côté droit se rassemblent pour faire des orgies dans lesquelles ils mangent de petits enfants.”
dare to tell him face to face, for fear he might perhaps eat them up in his rage, they sent messengers to him. And those messengers went and said to him from a distance: "The Brāhmans command you to depart from this city."

Then in his astonishment he asked them: "Why?" And they went on to say: "You eat every child as soon as you see it." When Harasvāmin heard that, he went near those Brāhmans, in order to reassure them, and the people fled before him for fear. And the Brāhmans, as soon as they saw him, were terrified and went up to the top of their monastery. People who are deluded by reports are not, as a rule, capable of discrimination. Then Harasvāmin, standing below, called all the Brāhmans who were above, one by one, by name, and said to them: "What delusion is this, Brāhmans? Why do you not ascertain with one another how many children I have eaten, and whose, and how many of each man's children?"

When they heard that, the Brāhmans began to compare notes among themselves, and found that all of them had all their children left alive. And in course of time other citizens, appointed to investigate the matter, admitted that all their children were living. And merchants and Brāhmans and all said: "Alas! in our folly we have belied a holy man; the children of all of us are alive; so whose children can he have eaten?" Harasvāmin, being thus completely exonerated, prepared to leave that city, for his mind was seized with disgust at the slanderous report got up against him by wicked men.\footnote{Cf. Virgil's well-known description of the growth of rumour, Æneid, iv, 74 et seq.—N.M.P.} For what pleasure can a wise man take in a wicked place, the inhabitants of which are wanting in discrimination? Then the Brāhmans and merchants, prostrating themselves at his feet, entreated him to stay there, and he at last, though with reluctance, consented to do so.

29. Story of the Golden City

"In this way evil men often impute crime falsely to good men, allowing their malicious garrulity full play on beholding their virtuous behaviour. Much more, if they obtain a slight glimpse of any opportunity for attacking them, do they pour copious showers of oil on the fire thus kindled. Therefore if you wish, my daughter, to draw the arrow from my heart, you must not, while this fresh youth of yours is developing, remain unmarried to please yourself, and so incur the ready reproach of evil men."

Such was the advice which the Princess Kanakarekhā frequently received from her father the king, but she, being firmly resolved, again and again answered him: "Therefore quickly search for a Brāhmaṇ or Kshatriya who has seen that City of Gold and give me to him, for this is the condition I have named."

When the king heard that, reflecting that his daughter, who remembered her former birth, had completely made up her mind, and seeing no other way of obtaining for her the husband she desired, he issued another order to the effect that henceforth the proclamation by beat of drum was to take place every day in the city, in order to find out whether any of the new-comers had seen the Golden City. And once more it was proclaimed in every quarter of the city every day, after the drum had been beaten: "If any Brāhmaṇ or Kshatriya has seen the Golden City, let him speak; the king will give him his own daughter, together with the rank of crown prince." But no one was found who had obtained a sight of the Golden City.
CHAPTER XXV

29. Story of the Golden City

IN the meanwhile the young Brähman Śaktideva, in very low spirits, having been rejected with contempt by the princess he longed for, said to himself: "To-day by asserting falsely that I had seen the Golden City I certainly incurred contempt, but I did not obtain that princess. So I must roam through the earth to find it, until I have either seen that city or lost my life. For of what use is my life, unless I can return, having seen that city, and obtain the princess as the prize of the achievement?"

Having thus taken a vow, that Brähman set out from the city of Vardhamāṇa, directing his course toward the southern quarter; and as he journeyed he at last reached the great forest of the Vindhya range, and entered it, which was difficult and long as his own undertaking. And that forest, so to speak, fanned, with the soft leaves of its trees shaken by the wind, him, who was heated by the multitudinous rays of the sun; and through grief at being overrun with many robbers it made its cry heard day and night in the shrill screams of animals which were being slain in it by lions and other noisome beasts. And it seemed, by the unchecked rays of heat flashed upward from its wild deserts, to endeavour to conquer the fierce brightness of the sun: in it, though there was no accumulation of water, calamity was to be easily purchased: and its space seemed ever to extend before the traveller as fast as he crossed it.

In the course of many days he accomplished a long journey through this forest, and beheld in it a great lake of pure cold water in a lonely spot, which seemed to lord it over all lakes, with its lotuses like lofty umbrellas, and its swans like gleaming white chowries. In the water of that lake he performed

1 Probably a poor pun—there is a play upon the words jala, "water," and jada, "fools," thus the sense is: "The forest is without gatherings of water (or fools), yet it is fertile in misfortune" (Barnett).—N.M.P.
the customary ablutions, and on its northern shore he beheld a hermitage with beautiful fruit-bearing trees; and he saw an old hermit named Sūryatapas sitting at the foot of an Āsvattha tree, surrounded by ascetics, adorned with a rosary, the beads of which by their number seemed to be the knots that marked the centuries of his life, and which rested against the extremity of his ear that was white with age. And he approached that hermit with a bow, and the hermit welcomed him with hospitable greetings.

And the hermit, after entertaining him with fruits and other delicacies, asked him: "Whence have you come, and whither are you going? Tell me, good sir." And Saktideva, inclining respectfully, said to that hermit: "I have come, venerable sir, from the city of Vardhamāna, and I have undertaken to go to the Golden City in accordance with a vow. But I do not know where that city lies; tell me, venerable sir, if you know." The hermit answered: "My son, I have lived eight hundred years in this hermitage, and I have never even heard of that city." Saktideva, when he heard this from the hermit, was cast down, and said again: "Then my wanderings through the earth will end by my dying here."

Then that hermit, having gradually elicited the whole

---

1 Lenormant in his Chaldæan Magic and Sorcery, p. 41 (English translation), observes: "We must add to the number of those mysterious rites the use of certain enchanted drinks, which doubtless really contained medicinal drugs, as a cure for diseases, and also of magic knots, the efficacy of which was firmly believed in, even up to the Middle Ages." See also Ralston's Songs of the Russian People, p. 288.—Cf. the speech of the river-goddess, Tamāśa, in Act III of the Uttara Rāma Charita as translated by Wilson (Select Specimens of the Theatre of the Hindus, vol. ii, 1827):

"And homage therefore should be done
This day to their great Sire, the Sun,
For that the lucky knot has told,
Twelve years their rapid course have rolled,
Since, from the daughter of the Earth,
Kusa and Lava drew their birth."

In a note explaining the "lucky knot" Wilson states that the expression alludes to the practice, still in use amongst the Hindus, of making a knot every year of a person's life in the string or thread which is wound round the paper scroll on which the calculations of his nativity are inscribed. For collected references on knots in magic and ritual see Frazer, Golden Bough, vol. iii, pp. 293-317.—N.M.P.
story, said to him: "If you are firmly resolved, then do what I tell you. Three yojanas from here there is a country named Kâmpilya, and in it is a mountain named Uttara, and on it there is a hermitage. There dwells my noble elder brother named Dirghatapas; go to him, he being old may

1 In the story of the "Beautiful Palace East of the Sun and North of the Earth" (Thorpe, Yule-tide Stories, p. 158) an old woman sends the youth, who is in quest of the palace, to her older sister, who again refers him to an older sister dwelling in a small ruinous cottage on a mountain. In Laura Gonzenbach's Sicilianische Mïrchen, p. 86, the prince is sent by one "Einsiedler" to his brother, and this brother sends him to an older brother, and he again to an older still, who is described as "Steinalt." See also p. 162. We have a similar incident in Méluvaine, p. 447. The story is entitled "La Montagne Noire ou Les Filles du Diable." See also Il Pentameron, ninth diversion of the fifth day (Burton, vol. ii, pp. 549, 550); Ralston's Russian Folk-Tales, p. 7; Waldau's Bïhmische Mïrchen, pp. 37, 255 et seq.; Dasset's Popular Tales from the Norse, 1859, pp. 31-32, 212-213, and 330-331; and Kaden's Unter den Olivenbïumen, p. 56.

——The motif is found in the first voyage of Aboulsaouaris, Les Mille et un Jours, Lille, 1784, vol. iv, p. 166, whence it was copied in "The Story of Qara Khan," a sub-tale in The Story of Jewad, translated by E. J. W. Gibb, Glasgow, 1884. See Chauvin, op. cit., vii, pp. 60, 61n4, where other references are given.

Clouston, Popular Tales and Fictions, vol. ii, pp. 94-98, quotes from a paper by Cowell, "The Legend of the Oldest Animals," in Y Cymroder (Welsh Society's Journal), October 1882, where in the "Story of Kilwch and Olwen" Arthur's ambassadors seek certain tidings by the aid of animals, each referring them to an older and cleverer one than themselves. In the "Tale of the Jealous Sisters," Dozon, Contes Albanais (No. 2), the hero meets a lamia, in quest of a magic flower, who not only refrains from eating him, but directs him to her elder sister, and she again refers him to her elder sister. In the tale of "Hasan of Bassorah" in the Nights (Burton, vol. viii, pp. 72-82), Hasan is sent by a venerable Shaykh to his brother, and thence to the King of the Camphor Islands, who all aid him in his search for the Islands of Wak. There is no mention of each being older than the last, although the story is always quoted as an example of this motif.

A curious variant is found in Sästri's Dravidian Nights. The hero, in quest of the pârijâta flower, is sent to an ascetic who opened his eyes every watch, then to one who opened his eyes every second watch, and finally to one who only opened them every third watch.

I do not agree with Clouston (op. cit., p. 98), who says: "The idea is probably a survival of some primitive myth, suggested by the physical and mental imbecility of extreme old age—'second childhood.'" On the contrary, old age in man is usually venerated in the East, and apart from the use of the motif to the story-teller to excite the curiosity of his audience as the dénouement is thus continually postponed, it serves as an excellent lesson in perseverance and patience.—N.M.P.
perhaps know of that city." When Saktideva heard that, hope arose in his breast, and having spent the night there, he quickly set out in the morning from that place.

And wearied with the laborious journey through difficult forest country, he at last reached that region of Kāmpilya and ascended that mountain Uttara; and there he beheld that hermit Dirghatapas in a hermitage, and he was delighted and approached him with a bow; and the hermit received him hospitably, and Saktideva said to him: "I am on my way to the City of Gold spoken of by the king's daughter; but I do not know, venerable sir, where that city is. However, I am bound to find it, so I have been sent to you by the sage Śūryatapas in order that I may discover where it lies." When he had said this, the hermit answered him: "Though I am so old, my son, I have never heard of that city till today; I have made acquaintance with various travellers from foreign lands, and I have never heard anyone speak of it, much less have I seen it. But I am sure it must be in some distant foreign island, and I can tell you an expedient to help you in this matter; there is in the midst of the ocean an island named Utsthala, and in it there is a rich king of the Nishādas\(^1\) named Satyavrata. He goes to and fro among all the other islands, and he may have seen or heard of that city. Therefore go first to the city named Viṭānkapura, situated on the border of the sea. And from that place go with some merchant in a ship to the island where that Nishāda dwells, in order that you may attain your object."

When Saktideva heard this from the hermit, he immediately followed his advice, and taking leave of him set out from the hermitage. And after accomplishing many kos and crossing many lands he reached the city of Viṭānkapura, the ornament of the seashore. There he sought out a merchant named Samudradatta, who traded with the island of Utsthala, and struck up a friendship with him. And he went on board his ship with him, and having food for the voyage fully supplied by his kindness, he set out on the ocean path. Then, when they had but a short distance to travel, there arose a black cloud with rumbling thunder, resembling a roaring Rākshasa, with flickering lightning to represent his lolling tongue. And a furious hurricane began to blow like Destiny herself, whirling up light objects and hurling down heavy.\(^1\) And from the sea, lashed by the wind, great waves rose aloft like the mountains equipped with wings,\(^2\) indignant that their asylum had been attacked. And that vessel rose on high one moment, and the next moment plunged below, as if exhibiting how rich men are first elevated and then cast down.

\(^1\) Wild aboriginal tribes not belonging to the Aryan race.

And the next moment that ship, shrilly laden with the cries of the merchants, burst and split asunder as if with the weight. And the ship being broken, that merchant its owner fell into the sea, but floating through it on a plank he at last reached another vessel. But as Saktideva fell a large fish, opening its mouth and neck, swallowed him without injuring any of his limbs. And as that fish was roaming at will in the midst of the sea it happened to pass near the island of Utsthala; and by chance some servants of that king of the fishermen, Satyavrata, who were engaged in the \(^1\) Destiny often elevates the worthless, and hurls down men of worth.—Clouston (Popular Tales and Fictions, vol. i, p. 407) compares this sentiment with Defoe's seathing reply to Lord Havershaw's Vindication of his Speech: "Fate makes footballs of men; kicks some upstairs and some down; some are advanced without honour, others suppressed without infamy;—some are raised without merit, some are crushed without crime; and no man knows, by the beginning of things, whether his course will issue in a peecage or a pillory." And these passages from the drama of Mrichhakatika, or The Toy Cart (Wilson, Theatre of the Hindus).

"Fate views the world
A scene of mutual and perpetual struggle;
And sports with life as if it were a wheel
That draws the limpid water from the well;
For some are raised to affluence, some depressed
In want, and some are borne awhile aloft,
And some hurled down to wretchedness and woe."

"O Fate! thou sportest with the fortunes of mankind, Like drops of water trembling on the lotus-leaf."

—N.M.P.

\(^2\) The usual story is that Indra cut off the wings of all except Maināka, the son of Himavat by Menā. He took refuge in the sea. Here it is represented that more escaped. So in Bhartṛihari Niti Śataka, st. 76 (Bombay edition).
pursuit of small fish, came there and caught it. And those fishermen, proud of their prize, immediately dragged it along to show their king, for it was of enormous size. He too, out of curiosity, seeing that it was of such extraordinary size, ordered his servants to cut it open; and when it was cut open Śaktideva came out alive from its belly, having endured a second wonderful imprisonment in the womb. Then the

1 For Śaktideva’s imprisonment in the belly of the fish cf. Chapter LXXIV of this work; Indian Fairy Tales, by Miss Stokes, No. xiv; and Lucian’s Vera Historia, Book I. In this tale the fish swallows a ship. The crew discover countries in the monster’s inside, establish a “scientific frontier,” and pursue a policy of Annexation.——In Chapter CXXIII of the Ocean of Story the huge fish appears twice: firstly in the “Story of the Two Princesses,” where it swallows a ship and all on board; and secondly in the tale of “Kesaṭa and Kandarpa,” where a woman is rescued from a fish’s belly. To the former of these Tawney adds a few further references.

Similar incidents are found in the Hindi Bundelkhandi, where the hero Alhā is cut out from captivity in a fish’s inside (see Ind. Ant., vol. xiv, October 1885, p. 228). In some cases the flights of fancy of the storyteller fall little short of those indulged in by Lucian. In a Kasmiri tale (J. H. Knowles, “Pride Abased,” Ind. Ant., vol. xv, June 1886, p. 157) a king lives inside a fish for years, until he is finally rescued by a potter who is hacking at the stranded fish with an axe. Similarly in Miss Stokes’ tale “Loving Lailī” lives twelve years in a rohita fish. All these stories appear to me to be merely examples of one of the numerous forms of exaggeration dear to Oriental story-tellers, and which comes in most handily as part of the hero’s adventures during his travels in a foreign land, or while on his search for a lost bride, magic article or what not.

In the case of Sindbad, he is not swallowed by a fish, but lands with the crew on a huge fish’s back mistaken for an island. See Nights, Burton, vol. vi, p. 6 with note. Further references will be found in Crooke, Popular Religion and Folk-Lore of Northern India, vol. ii, p. 254; and Chauvin, op. cit., vii, p. 9, under “La Baleine.”

Various explanations of this legend have been offered, some rather fantastic like that of a certain American astronomer of the last century who saw the star-group “Cetus” in the whale and the “moon passing through it in three days and nights” in Jonah. There are, however, other cosmological interpretations deserving of more attention. We have already seen (pp. 81-83 of this volume) how widespread was the belief that at eclipses the luminary was swallowed or attacked by some monster, and it is quite understandable that the primitive mind might easily conceive of the sunset being caused by a huge fish swallowing the sun. But when we come to the Jonah legend, we find that the prophet was in the fish——i.e. invisible to human eyes—for three days—the period of the moon’s disappearance at the end of the month (see R. Campbell Thompson, Semitic Magic, pp. 53, 54). Jonah is the Hebrew fisher-king Satyavrata, when he saw that young man come out and bestow his blessing on him, was astonished, and asked him: "Who are you, and how did this lot of dwelling in the belly of the fish befall you? What means this exceedingly strange fate that you have suffered?" When Saktideva heard this he answered that king of the fishermen: "I am a Brāhmaṇ of the name of Saktideva from the city of Vardhamāna; and I am bound to visit the City of Gold, and because I do not know where it is, I have for a long time wandered far over the earth; then I gathered from a speech of Dirghatapas' that it was probably in an island, so I set out to find Satyavrata the king of the fishermen, who lives in the island of Utsthala, in order to learn its whereabouts, but on the way I suffered shipwreck, and so, having been whelmed in the sea and swallowed by a fish, I have been brought here now."

VOL. II.

word for "dove," and, as Robertson Smith has pointed out (Religion of the Semites, quoting Al-Nadim, 294), it was at Harran, the city sacred to the moon-god, that the dove was not sacrificed.

A fairly widely accepted interpretation of the Jonah legend, however, is that it is a prophecy conveyed under a parable. There are several reasons given for the propagation of this view. In the first place, no reference of the supposed conversion of Nineveh by Jonah is mentioned by Isaiah, Ezekiel, Hosea, or the other prophets, and no records of Jonah's visit to the city have been discovered. Jeremiah (ii, 34) clearly shows the meaning of expressions similar to those found in the Jonah story. Here we read: "Nebuchadrezzar, the king of Babylon, hath devoured me, he hath crushed me, he hath made me an empty vessel, he hath swallowed me up like a dragon, he hath filled his belly with my delicates, he hath cast me out." See also Jeremiah 1, 17; 1, 44; and Isaiah xxvii, 1.

Other interpretations of the story have been advocated. W. Simpson (The Jonah Legend, London, 1899) considers that it is an initiatory legend showing death and subsequent resurrection, embodying the same principles as Christian baptism and the Brahmanic "rite of the twice-born." He points out that Jonah (ii, 2) cried out from "hell"—i.e. "Hades," "Sheol," or the "grave"—which shows that there was no real "fish" in the case, and that it was, on the contrary, the dramatic action of a ceremony, with its symbolic accessories.

When Saktideva had said this, Satyavrata said to him: "I am in truth Satyavrata, and this is the very island you were seeking; but though I have seen many islands I have never seen the city you desire to find, but I have heard of it as situated in one of the distant islands." Having said this, and perceiving that Saktideva was cast down, Satyavrata, out of kindness for his guest, went on to say: "Brāhman, do not be despondent; remain here this night, and to-morrow morning I will devise some expedient to enable you to attain your object." The Brāhman was thus consoled by the king, and sent off to a monastery of Brāhmans, where guests were readily entertained. There Saktideva was supplied with food by a Brāhman named Vishnudatta, an inmate of the monastery, and entered into conversation with him. And in the course of that conversation, being questioned by him, he told him in a few words his country, his family and his whole history. When Vishnudatta heard that, he immediately embraced him, and said in a voice indistinct from the syllables being choked with tears of joy: "Bravo! you are the son of my maternal uncle and a fellow-countryman of mine. But I long ago in my childhood left that country to come here. So stop here awhile, and soon the stream of merchants and pilots that come here from other islands will accomplish your wish."

Having told him his descent in these words, Vishnudatta waited upon Saktideva with all becoming attentions. And Saktideva, forgetting the toil of the journey, obtained delight, for the meeting of a relation in a foreign land is like a fountain of nectar in the desert. And he considered that the accomplishment of his object was near at hand, for good luck befalling one by the way indicates success in an undertaking. So he reclined at night sleepless upon his bed, with his mind fixed upon the attainment of his desire, and Vishnudatta, who was by his side, in order to encourage and delight him at the same time, related to him the following tale:—
29c. Aśokadatta and Vijayadatta

Formerly there was a great Brāhman named Govinda-svāmin, living on a great royal grant of land on the banks of the Yamunā. And in the course of time there were born to that virtuous Brāhman two sons like himself, Aśokadatta and Vijayadatta. While they were living there, there arose a terrible famine in that land, and so Govindasvāmin said to his wife: “This land is ruined by famine, and I cannot bear to behold the misery of my friends and relations. For who gives anything to anybody? So let us at any rate give away to our friends and relations what little food we possess and leave this country. And let us go with our family to Benares to live there.” When he said this to his wife she consented, and he gave away his food and set out from that place with his wife, sons and servants. For men of noble soul cannot bear to witness the miseries of their relatives. And on the road he beheld a skull-bearing Saiva ascetic, white with ashes, and with matted hair, like the god Śiva himself with his half-moon.

The Brāhman approached that wise man with a bow, and out of love for his sons asked him about their destiny, whether it should be good or bad, and that Yogi answered him: “The future destiny of your sons is auspicious, but you shall be separated, Brāhman, from this younger one, Vijaya-datta, and finally by the might of the second, Aśokadatta, you shall be united to him.” Govindasvāmin, when that wise man said this to him, took leave of him and departed, overpowered with joy, grief and wonder; and after reaching Benares he spent the day there in a temple of Durgā outside the town, engaged in worshipping the goddess and such-like occupations. And in the evening he encamped outside that temple under a tree with his family, in the company of pilgrims who had come from other countries. And at night, while all were asleep, wearied with their long journey, stretched out on strewn leaves and such other beds as travellers have to put up with, his younger son Vijayadatta, who was awake, was suddenly seized with a cold ague fit;

1 Cf. Grimm’s Märchen, No. 60; Sicilianische Märchen, Nos. 39 and 40, with Dr Köhler’s notes.
that ague quickly made him tremble, and caused his hair to stand on end, as if it had been the fear of his approaching separation from his relations. And oppressed with the cold he woke up his father, and said to him: "A terrible ague afflicts me here now, father, so bring fuel and light me a fire to keep off the cold; in no other way can I obtain relief or get through the night." When Govindaśvāmin heard him say this, he was distressed at his suffering, and said to him: "Whence can I procure fire now, my son?" Then his son said: "Why, surely we can see a fire burning near us on this side, and it is very large, so why should I not go there and warm my body? So take me by the hand, for I have a shivering fit, and lead me there." Thus entreated by his son, the Brāhman went on to say: "This is a cemetery, and the fire is that of a funeral pyre, so how can you go to a place terrible from the presence of goblins and other spirits, for you are only a child?" When the brave Vijayadatta heard that speech of his affectionate father he laughed, and said in his confidence: "What can the wretched goblins and other evil ones do to me? Am I a weakling? So take me there without fear." When he said this so persistently, his father led him there, and the boy warming his body approached the pyre, which seemed to bear on itself the presiding deity of the Rākshasas in visible form, with the smoke of the flames for dishevelled hair, devouring the flesh of men. The boy at once encouraged his father

1 If such a word can be applied to a place where bodies are burnt.—The usual expression is "burning-ground," or "burning-ghāṭ."—N.M.P.

2 See Vol. I, pp. 204, 205. When Hanumān, the monkey-god, entered Lāṅkā in the form of a cat, to reconnoitre, he saw that the Rākshasas who slept in the house "were of every shape and form. Some of them disgusted the eye, while some were beautiful to look on. Some had long arms and frightful shapes; some were very fat and some were very lean; some were dwarf and some were prodigiously tall. Some had only one eye, and others had only one ear. Some had monstrous bellies, hanging breasts, long projecting teeth, and crooked thighs; whilst others were exceedingly beautiful to behold and clothed in great splendour. Some had the heads of serpents, some the heads of asses, some of horses, and some of elephants." For further details see Crooke, op. cit., vol. i, pp. 246-250.—N.M.P.

3 Samāśvāsya, the reading of a MS. in the Sanskrit College, would perhaps give a better sense.
and asked him what the round thing was that he saw inside the pyre. And his father, standing at his side, answered him: "This, my son, is the skull of a man which is burning in the pyre."

Then the boy in his recklessness struck the skull with a piece of wood lighted at the top and clove it. The brains spouted up from it and entered his mouth, like the initiation into the practices of the Rākshasas, bestowed upon him by the funeral flame. And by tasting them that boy became a Rākshasa, with hair standing on end, with sword that he

Ⅰ Although at first sight the disgusting method by which Vijayadatta becomes a Rākshasa may appear merely fantastic and revolting, the idea is based on practices which enter into the Tantric rites of the Śākta worshippers of Dāvi, in one of her various forms, as Kāli, Durgā, Chāmunḍā, etc. Apart from the cannibalism and human sacrifices connected with this worship, we find similar and even more loathsome practices among the Aghori caste, who are not even extinct to-day (see p. 90n). Members of this caste eat the most disgusting things imaginable, including putrid corpses, human and animal excretions, etc.

As Crooke points out ("Aghori," Hastings' Ency. Rel. Eth., vol. i, p. 212), these vile practices may perhaps be accounted for by similar ones which existed, and in some cases do still exist, among wizards and medicine-men of savage tribes. The idea at the root of such practices is that the unusual and filthy food thus consumed enhances the spiritual exaltation of the eater. I consider it is really the same principle as we saw (p. 117) existed in the minds of people who perform rites in a state of nudity.

The following examples of eating disgusting food for magical reasons have been collected by Crooke (op. cit., p. 212): According to Haddon (Report Cambridge Exped., vol. v, p. 321), at Mabuiag in Torres Straits, the Maidelaig, or sorcerer, "made a practice of eating anything that was disgusting and revolting in character, or poisonous or medicinal in nature, not only during the course of instruction, but subsequently, whenever about to perform a special act of sorcery. For instance, they were said frequently to eat flesh of corpses, or to mix the juices of corpses with their food. One effect of this diet was to make them 'wild' so that they did not care for anyone, and all affection temporarily ceased for relatives, wife and children; and on being angered by any of them, they would not hesitate to commit murder." In parts of Melanesia, according to Codrington, Mana, or spiritual exaltation, is gained by eating human flesh; and in this way people obtain the power of becoming vampires, the ghost of the corpse which was eaten entering into friendly relations with the eater (Journ. Anth. Inst., vol. x, p. 305; Melanesians, p. 222). In Central Africa, according to Macdonald, witches and wizards feed on human flesh, and anyone tasting a morsel of such food becomes himself a wizard (Journ. Anth. Inst., vol. xxii, p. 107). Among nearly all the Bantu negro had drawn from the flame, terrible with projecting tusks: so he seized the skull and, drinking the brains from it, he licked it with tongue restlessly quivering like the flames of fire that clung to the bone. Then he flung aside the skull, and lifting his sword he attempted to slay his own father Govindaśvāmin. But at that moment a voice came out from the cemetery: "Kapālasphoṭa,¹ thou god, thou oughtest not to slay thy father. Come here." When the boy heard that, having obtained the title of Kapālasphoṭa and become a Rākṣasa, he let his father alone and disappeared; and his father departed, exclaiming aloud: "Alas, my son! Alas, my virtuous son! Alas, Vijayadatta!" And he returned to the temple of Durgā, and in the morning he told his wife and his eldest son Aśokadatta what had taken place. Then that unfortunate man together with them suffered an attack of the fire of grief, terrible like the falling of lightning from a cloud, so that the other people who were sojourning in Benares, and had come to visit the shrine of the goddess, came up to him and sympathised heartily with his sorrow.
THE TERRIBLE TRANSFORMATION

In the meanwhile a great merchant, who had come to worship the goddess, named Samudradatta, beheld Govindaśvāmin in that state. The good man approached him and comforted him, and immediately took him and his family home to his own house. And there he provided him with a races there is a lingering suspicion that the sorcerer, or person desiring to become a sorcerer, is a corpse-eater, a ghoul who digs up the bodies of dead persons to eat them, either from a morbid taste, or in the belief that this action will invest him with magical powers. In Uganda, as well as in many parts of Bantu Africa, there is believed to exist a secret society of such ghouls, who assemble at midnight for the purpose of disinterring and eating corpses. People cursed with this morbid taste are in Uganda called ̀basesi (Johnston, Uganda, vol. ii, pp. 578, 692 et. seq.).

Stories similar to those in the present work are still told in India (Panjab Notes and Queries, vol. ii, p. 75; Steel and Temple's Wide-Awake Stories, p. 418). Even at the present day the Odi magicians in Malabar are said to eat filth as a means of acquiring power (Fawcett, Bulletin of the Madras Museum, vol. iii, p. 811).

For further details reference should be made to Bourke, Scatologic Rites of all Nations, see especially ch. xliii, under "Witchcraft," etc.—N.M.P.

¹ i.e. "skull-cleaver."
bath and other luxuries, for this is the innate tendency of the great, to have mercy upon the wretched. Govindasvāmin also and his wife recovered their self-command, having heard the speech of the great Śaiva ascetic, hoping to be reunited to their son. And thenceforth he lived in that city of Benares, in the house of that rich merchant, having been asked by him to do so. And there his other son Aśokadatta grew up to be a young man, and after studying the sciences learnt boxing and wrestling. And gradually he attained such eminence in these arts that he was not surpassed by any champion on the earth. And once on a time there was a great gathering of wrestlers at an idol procession, and a great and famous wrestler came from the Deccan. He conquered all the other wrestlers of the King of Benares, who was called Pratāpamukūta, before his eyes. Then the king had Aśokadatta quickly summoned from the house of that excellent merchant, and ordered him to contend with that wrestler. That wrestler began the combat by catching the arm of Aśokadatta with his hand, but Aśokadatta seized his arm and hurled him to the ground. Then the field of combat, as it were, pleased, applauded the victor with the resounding noise produced by the fall of that champion wrestler. And the king being gratified, loaded Aśokadatta with jewels, and having seen his might, he made him his own personal attendant. So he became a favourite of the king's, and in time attained great prosperity, for to one who possesses heroic qualities a king who appreciates merit is a perfect treasure-house.

Once on a time that king went on the fourteenth day of the month away from his capital, to worship the god Śiva in a splendid temple in a distant town. After he had paid his devotions, he was returning by night near the cemetery when he heard this utterance issue from it: “O King, the chief magistrate out of private malice proclaimed that I deserved death, and it is now the third day since I was impaled, and even now my life will not leave my body, though I am innocent, so I am exceedingly thirsty. O King, order water to be given me.” When the king heard it, out of pity he said to his personal attendant Aṣokadatta: “Send that man some water.” Then Aṣokadatta said: “Who would go there at night? So I had better go myself.” Accordingly he took the water and set off.

---

1 Perhaps we ought to read smṛtvā for srutvā, “remembering,” “calling to mind.”

2 Barnett (Golden Town, p. 16) translates simply “a religious festival.”

After the king had proceeded on his way to his capital, the hero entered that cemetery, the interior of which was difficult to penetrate, as it was filled with dense darkness within; in it there were awful evening oblations offered with the human flesh scattered about by the jackals; in places the cemetery was lighted up by the flaming beacons of the blazing funeral pyres, and in it the Vetalas made terrible music with the clapping of their hands, so that it seemed as if it were the palace of black night.¹ Then he cried aloud: “Who asked the king for water?” And he heard from one quarter an answer: “I asked for it.” Following the voice he went to a funeral pyre near, and beheld a man impaled on the top of a stake, and underneath it he saw a woman that he had never seen before, weeping, adorned with beautiful ornaments, lovely in every limb—like the night adorned with the rays of the moon, now that the moon itself had set, its splendour having waned in the dark fortnight, come to worship the funeral pyre.² He asked the woman: “Who are you, mother, and why are you standing weeping here?” She answered him: “I am the ill-fated wife of him who is here impaled, and I am waiting here with the firm intention of ascending the funeral pyre with him. And I am waiting some time for his life to leave his body, for though it is the third day of his impalement his breath does not depart. And he often asks for that water which I have brought here, but I cannot reach his mouth, my friend, as the stake is high.” When he heard that speech of hers, the mighty hero said to her: “But here is water in my hand sent to him by the king, so place your foot on my back and lift it to his mouth, for the mere touching of another man in sore need does not disgrace a woman.” When she heard that, she consented, and, taking the water, she climbed up so as to plant her two feet on the back of Asokadatta, who bent down at the foot of the stake. Soon after, as drops of blood unexpectedly began to fall upon the earth and on his back, the hero lifted up his face and looked. Then he saw that woman cutting off slice after slice of that impaled man’s flesh with a knife and eating it.¹

¹ Barnett (op. cit., p. 17) translates “while the tuneless hand-clapping of goblins rang out; it was like black Night’s own palace.”—N.M.P.

² The passage is not clear. Speyer (op. cit., p. 105) points out that the difficulty vanishes when we read citārohāya of the D. text instead of citārcāya in Brockhaus. The wife, who sits down on the earth near her impaled husband, is duly compared to a night of the dark half of the month, at the time when the moon has set; both, in fact, are preparing to ascend the pyre that is to consume their husband—the woman after the death of the tortured man, and Night in the glow of the approaching dawn.—N.M.P.

³ As the lady was young and beautiful, this mode of address may seem strange, but it is an assurance that the speaker has no designs on the other's chastity. It corresponds with the Arabic “Yā Ummī!”—“O my mother!” See Nights (Burton, vol. viii, p. 87).—N.M.P.

Then, perceiving that she was some horrible demon,² he ¹ So in Laura Gonzenbach’s Sicilianische Märchen, p. 66, a lovely woman opens with a knife the veins of the sleeping prince and drinks his blood. See also Veckenstedt’s Wendische Sagen, p. 354. Ralston in his Russian Folk-Tales, p. 17, compares this part of the story with a Russian story called “The Friend” (Afanasjef, vi, No. 66).——The incident in our text found its way into the story of “Brave Seventee Bai”, Frere’s Old Deccan Days, pp. 27, 28. The best-known story of people digging up corpses and eating them occurs in the “History of Sidi Nu’uman,” Nights (Burton, Supp., vol. iii, pp. 325-386). A very similar tale is current at Palena, in the Abruzzi, and is given in vol. iii of the Archivio per lo studio delle Tradizioni Popolari (Palermo, 1882), p. 222. An important abstract was given by E. Sidney Hartland to W. S. Clouston, who printed it on pp. 585-586 of the same volume of the Nights as given above. In this case (as in that of Sidi Nu’uman) the attention of the husband is drawn to his wife’s behaviour as she cannot eat anything when at home and merely “picks a few grains of rice with a large pin.” Her suspicious husband follows her one night to the burial-ground, where she meets with certain female companions, who open a grave and feast on a newly buried corpse. When on the next day the husband shows he is no longer in ignorance of his wife’s strange pastime, he is immediately turned into a dog by her magic.

Other references will be found in Crooke, Popular Folk-Lore of Northern India, vol. ii, pp. 168, 169; Chauvin, op. cit., vii, p. 199; and Macculloch, The Childhood of Fiction, ch. x.—N.M.P.

² One is tempted to read vikrätm for vikriti, but vikriti is translated by the Petersburg lexicographers as Gespensterscheinung. Vikrätm would mean transformed into a Räkshasi.
dragged her down in a rage, and took hold of her foot with its tinkling anklets in order to dash her to pieces on the earth. She for her part dragged away from him that foot, and by her deluding power quickly flew up into the heaven and became invisible. And the jewelled anklet, which had fallen from her foot while she was dragging it away, remained in one of Aśokadatta’s hands. Then he, reflecting that she had disappeared after showing herself mild at first, and evil-working in the middle, and at the end horror-striking by assuming a terrible form, like association with wicked men, and seeing that heavenly anklet in his hand, was astonished, grieved and delighted at the same time; and then he left that cemetery, taking the anklet with him, and went to his own house, and in the morning, after bathing, to the palace of the king.

And when the king said, “Did you give the water to the man who was impaled?” he said he had done so, and gave him that anklet; and when the king of his own accord asked him where it came from, he told that king his wonderful and terrible night adventure. And then the king, perceiving that his courage was superior to that of all men, though he was before pleased with his other excellent qualities, was now more exceedingly delighted; and he took that anklet in his joy and gave it with his own hand to the queen, and described to her the way in which he had obtained it. And she, hearing the story and beholding that heavenly-jewelled anklet, rejoiced in her heart and was continually engaged in extolling Aśokadatta. Then the king said to her: “Queen, in birth, in learning, in truthfulness and beauty Aśokadatta is great among the great; and I think it would be a good thing if he were to become the husband of our lovely daughter Madanalekā; in a bridegroom these qualities are to be looked for, not fortune that vanishes in a moment, so I will give my daughter to this excellent hero.”

When she heard that speech of her husband’s, that queen approving the proposal said: “It is quite fitting, for the youth will be an appropriate match for her, and her heart has been captivated by him, for she saw him in a spring-garden, and for some days her mind has been in a state of vacancy and she neither hears nor sees. I heard of it from her confidante, and, after spending an anxious night, towards morning I fell asleep, and I remember I was thus addressed by some heavenly woman in a dream: 'My child, thou must not give this thy daughter Madanalekhā to anyone but Aṣokadatta, for she is his wife acquired by him in a former birth.' And when I heard it I woke up, and in the morning I went myself on the strength of that dream and consoled my daughter. And now my husband has of his own accord proposed the marriage to me. Let her, therefore, be united to him, as a springcreeper to its stalk.'\(^1\) When the king's beloved wife said this to him, he was pleased, and he made festal rejoicings, and summoning Aṣokadatta gave that daughter to him. And the union of those two, the daughter of the king, and the son of the great Brāhmaṇa, was such that each enhanced the other's glory, like the union of prosperity and modesty.

And once upon a time the queen said to the king, with reference to the anklet brought by Aṣokadatta: "My husband, this anklet by itself does not look well, so let another be made like it." When the king heard that, he gave an order to the goldsmiths and other craftsmen of the kind, to make a second anklet like that. But they, after examining it, said: "It is impossible, O king, to make another like it, for the work is heavenly, not human. There are not many jewels of this kind upon the earth, so let another be sought for where this was obtained." When the king and the queen heard this, they were despondent, and Aṣokadatta, who was there, on seeing that, immediately said: "I myself will bring you a fellow to that anklet." And having made this promise he could not give up the project on which he was resolved, although the king, terrified at his temerity, endeavoured to dissuade him out of affection.

And taking the anklet he went again on the fourteenth

---

\(^1\) Indian rhetoric always compares the union of husband and wife to the creeper clinging to a tree. This is, moreover, found in the D. text, which reads vykhenevārtavāti latā. See Speyer, op. cit., p. 105. Barnett (Golden Town, p. 18) translates "as a climbing plant of spring with its tree."—N.M.P.
night of the black fortnight to the cemetery where he had first obtained it; and after he had entered that cemetery which was full of Rākshasas as it was of trees, besmirched with the copious smoke of the funeral pyres, and with men hanging from their trunks ¹ which were weighed down and surrounded with nooses, he did not at first see that woman that he had seen before, but he thought of an admirable device for obtaining that bracelet, which was nothing else than the selling of human flesh.² So he pulled down a corpse from the noose by which it was suspended on the tree, and he wandered about in the cemetery, crying aloud: "Human flesh for sale, buy, buy!" ³ And immediately a woman called to him from a distance, saying: "Courageous man, bring the human flesh and come along with me." When he heard that, he advanced, following that woman, and beheld at no great distance under a tree a lady of heavenly appearance, surrounded with women, sitting on a throne, glittering with jewelled ornaments, whom he would never have expected to find in such a place, any more than to find a lotus in a desert.

And having been led up by that woman, he approached the lady seated as has been described, and said: "Here I am; I sell human flesh; buy, buy!" And then the lady of He obtains
the second Anklet
heavenly appearance said to him: "Courageous hero, for what price will you sell the flesh?"
Then the hero, the corpse hanging over his shoulder and back, said to her, showing her at the same time that single jewelled anklet which was in his hand: "I will give this flesh to whoever will give me a second anklet like this one; if you have got a second like it, take the flesh."
When she heard that, she said to him: "I have a second like it, for this very single anklet was taken by you from me. I am that very woman who was seen by you near the impaled man, but you do not recognise me now, because I have

¹ Skandha when applied to the Rākshasas means "shoulder."
² Literally, "great flesh." "Great" seems to give the idea of unlawfulness, as in the Greek μεγα ίφυς.
³ This resembles the Tantric rite described in the Mālāki Mādhava. See note at the end of this chapter.—N.M.P. assumed another shape. So what is the use of flesh? If you do what I tell you, I will give you my second anklet, which matches the one in your hand.” When she said this to the hero, he consented, and said: “I will immediately do whatever you say.”

Then she told him her whole desire from the beginning: “There is, good sir, a city named Trighanța on a peak of the Himalayas. In it there lived a heroic prince of the Rākshasas named Lambajihva. I am his wife, Vidyuchchhikha by name, and I can change my form at will. And as fate would have it, that husband of mine, after the birth of my daughter, was slain in battle fighting in front of the King Kapālasphoṭa; then that king being pleased gave me his own city, and I have lived with my daughter in great comfort on its proceeds up to the present time. And that daughter of mine has by this time grown up to fresh womanhood, and I have great anxiety in my mind as to how to obtain for her a brave husband. Then being here on the fourteenth night of the lunar fortnight, and seeing you coming along this way with the king, I thought: ‘This good-looking youth is a hero and a fit match for my daughter, so why should I not devise some stratagem for obtaining him?’ Thus I determined, and imitating the voice of an impaled person, I asked for water, and brought you into the middle of that cemetery by a trick. And there I exhibited my delusive power in assuming a false shape and other characteristics, and, saying what was false, I imposed upon you there, though only for a moment. And I artfully left one of my anklets there to attract you again, like a binding chain to draw you, and then I came away. And to-day I have obtained you by that very expedient; so come to my house, marry my daughter and receive the other anklet.”

When the Rākshasī said this to him, the hero consented, and by means of her magic power he went with her through the air to her city. And he saw that city built of gold on a peak of the Himalayas, like the orb of the sun fixed in one spot, being weary with the toil of wandering through the heavens. There he married that daughter of the Prince of the Rākshasas, by name Vidyutprabhā, like the success of his own daring incarnate in bodily form. And Aśokadatta dwelt with that loved one some time in that city, enjoying great comfort by means of his mother-in-law’s wealth. Then he said to his mother-in-law: “Give me that anklet, for I must now go to the city of Benares, for I myself long ago promised the king that I would bring a second anklet, that would vie with the first one so distinguished for its unparalleled beauty.” The mother-in-law gave him that second anklet of hers and in addition a golden lotus.¹

Then he left that city with the anklet and the lotus, after promising to return, and his mother-in-law by the power of her magic knowledge carried him once more through the air to the cemetery. And then she stopped under the tree and said to him: “I always come here on the fourteenth night of the black fortnight, and whenever you come here on that ² night you will find me here under the banyan-tree.” When Aśokadatta heard this, he agreed to come there on that night, and took leave of that Rākhasi, and went first to his father’s house. And just as he was gladdening by his unexpected arrival his parents, who were grieved by such an absence of his, which doubled their grief for their separation from their younger son, the king, his father-in-law, who had heard of his arrival, came in. The king indulged in a long outburst of joy, embracing him who bent before him, with limbs the hairs of which stood on end like thorns, as if terrified at touching one so daring.³

Then Aśokadatta entered with him the palace of the king, like joy incarnate in bodily form; and he gave to the king those two anklets matched together, which so to speak praised his valour with their tinkling; and he bestowed on that king the beautiful golden lotus, as it were the lotus with which the presiding Fortune of the Rākshasas’ treasure plays, torn from her hand. Then being questioned out of curiosity by the king and queen he told the story of his

¹ Cf. the golden rose in Gaal, München der Magyaren, p. 44.
² Reading tasyān for tasmān.
³ Somadeva no doubt means that the hairs on the king’s body stood on end with joy.—See Vol. I, p. 120n—N.M.P.
exploits, which poured nectar into their ears. The king then exclaimed: "Is glittering glory, which astonishes the mind by the description of wonderful exploits, ever obtained without a man's bringing himself to display boldness?" Thus the king spoke on that occasion, and he and the queen, who had obtained the pair of anklets, considered their object in life attained, now that they had such a son-in-law. And then that palace, resounding with festal instruments, appeared as if it were chanting the virtues of Aśokadatta.

And on the next day the king dedicated the golden lotus in a temple made by himself, placing it upon a beautiful silver vessel; and the two together, the vessel and the lotus, gleamed white and red like the glory of the king and the might\(^1\) of Aśokadatta. And beholding them thus, the king, a devout worshipper of Śiva, with eyes expanded with joy, spoke inspired with the rapture of adoration: "Ah! this lofty vessel appears, with this lotus upon it, like Śiva white with ashes, with his auburn matted locks. If I had a second golden lotus like it I would place it in this second silver vessel." When Aśokadatta heard this speech of the king's, he said: "I, King, will bring you a second golden lotus." When the king heard that, he answered him: "I have no need of another lotus; a truce to your temerity!"

Then as days went on, Aśokadatta being desirous of bringing a golden lotus, the fourteenth day of the black fortnight returned; and that evening the sun, the golden lotus of the sky-lake, went to the mountain of setting, as if out of fear, knowing his desire for a golden lotus; and when the shades of night, brown as smoke, began immediately to spread everywhere like Rākshasas, proud of having swallowed the red clouds of evening as if they were raw flesh, and the mouth of night like that of an awful goblin began to yawn, shining and terrible as \textit{tamāla}, full of flickering flames,\(^2\) Aśokadatta of his own accord left the palace where the princess was asleep, and again went to that cemetery. There he beheld at the foot of that banyan-tree his mother-

\(^{1}\) According to the canons of Hindu rhetoric glory is always white.

\(^{2}\) Night is compared to a female goblin (Rākshasi). These creatures have fiery mouths.
in-law the Rākshasī, who had again come, and who received him with a courteous welcome; and with her the youth went again to her home, the peak of the Himālayas, where his wife was anxiously awaiting him. And after he had remained some time with his wife he said to his mother-in-law: "Give me a second golden lotus from somewhere or other." When she heard that, she said to him: "Whence can I procure another golden lotus? But there is a lake here belonging to our King Kapālasphoṭa, where golden lotuses of this kind grow on all sides. From that lake he gave that one lotus to my husband as a token of affection."
When she said this, he answered her: "Then take me to that lake in order that I may myself take a golden lotus from it." She then attempted to dissuade him, saying: "It is impossible; for the lake is guarded by terrible Rākshasas";
but nevertheless he would not desist from his importunity.
Then at last his mother-in-law was with much difficulty induced to take him there, and he beheld from afar that heavenly lake on the plateau of a lofty mountain, covered with dense and tall-stalked lotuses of gleaming gold, as if from continually facing the sun's rays they had drunk them in, and so become interpenetrated with them.

So he went there and began to gather the lotuses; and while he was thus engaged the terrible Rākshasas who guarded it endeavoured to prevent him from doing so.

And being armed he killed some of them, but the others fled and told their King Kapālasphoṭa, and when that King of the Rākshasas heard of it he was enraged, and came there himself, and saw Aṣokadatta with the lotuses he had carried off. And in his astonishment he exclaimed as he recognised his brother:
"What! is this my brother Aṣokadatta come here?" Then he flung away his weapon, and, with his eyes washed with tears of joy, he quickly ran and fell at his feet, and said to him: "I am Vijayadatta, your younger brother; we are both the sons of that excellent Brāhman Govindasvāmin.
And by the appointment of destiny I became a Rākshasa such as you see, and have continued such for this long time;

and I am called Kapālasphoṭa from my cleaving the skull on the funeral pyre. But now from seeing you I have remembered my former Brāhmaṇ nature, and that Rākshasa nature of mine, that clouded my mind with delusion, has left me.” When Vijayadatta said this, Aśokadatta embraced him, and, so to speak, washed with copious tears of joy his body defiled by the Rākshasa nature. And while he was thus engaged there descended from heaven by divine command the spiritual guide of the Vidyādharas, named Kauśika. And he, approaching these two brothers, said: “You and your family are all Vidyādharas, who have been reduced to this state by a curse, and now the curse of all of you has terminated. So receive these sciences, which belong to you, and which you must share with your relations. And return to your own proper dwelling, taking with you your relations.” Having said this, the spiritual guide, after bestowing the sciences on them, ascended to heaven.

And they, having become Vidyādharas, awoke from their long dream and went through the air to that peak of the Himālayas, taking with them the golden lotuses; and there Aśokadatta repaired to his wife, the daughter of the King of the Rākshasas, and then her curse came to an end and she became a Vidyādhari. And those two brothers went in a moment with that fair-eyed one to Benares, travelling through the air. And there they visited their parents, who were scorched with the fire of separation, and refreshed them by pouring upon them the revivifying nectar of their own appearance. And those two, who, without changing the body, had gone through such wonderful transformations, produced joy not only in their parents, but in the people at large. And when Vijayadatta’s father, after so long a separation, folded him in a close embrace, he filled not only his arms, but also his desire.

Then the King Pratāpamukūṭa, the father-in-law of Aśokadatta, hearing of it, came there in high delight; and Aśokadatta, being kindly received by the king, entered with his relations the king’s palace, in which his beloved was anxiously awaiting him, and which was in a state of festal rejoicing. And he gave many golden lotuses to that king, and the king was delighted at getting more than he had asked for. Then Vijayadatta’s father Govindasvāmin, full of wonder and curiosity, said to him in the presence of all: “Tell me, my son, what sort of adventures you had after you had become a Rākshasa in the cemetery during the night.”

Then Vijayadatta said to him: “My father, when in my reckless frivolity I had cloven the burning skull on the funeral pyre, as fate would have it, I immediately, as you saw, became a Rākshasa by its brains having entered my mouth, being bewildered with delusion. Then I was summoned by the other Rākshasas, who gave me the name of Kapālasphoṭa, and I joined them. And then I was led by them to their sovereign, the King of the Rākshasas, and he, when he saw me, was pleased with me and appointed me commander-in-chief. And once on a time that King of the Rākshasas went, in his infatuation, to attack the Gandharvas, and was there slain in battle by his foes. And then his subjects accepted my rule, so I dwelt in his city and ruled those Rākshasas; and while I was there I suddenly beheld that elder brother of mine, Aśokadatta, who had come for golden lotuses, and the sight of him put a stop to that Rākshasa nature in me. What follows, how we were released from the power of the curse, and thereby recovered our sciences,¹ all this my elder brother will relate to you.”

When Vijayadatta had told this story, Aśokadatta began to tell his from the beginning: “Long ago we were Vidyādharas, and from the heaven we beheld the daughters of the hermits bathing in the Ganges near the hermitage of Gālava,² and then we fell suddenly in love with them, and they returned our affection; all this took place in secret, but their relations, who possessed heavenly insight, found it out and cursed us in their anger: ‘May you two wicked ones be born both of you to a mortal woman, and then you shall be separated in a marvellous manner, but when the second of you shall behold the first arrived in a distant land, inaccessible to man, and shall recognise him, then you shall have your magic knowledge restored to you by the spiritual preceptor of the Vidyādhara, and you shall again become Vidyādhara, released from the curse and reunited to your friends." Having been cursed in this way by those hermits, we were both born here in this land, and you know the whole story of our separation; and now by going to the city of the King of the Rākshasa, by virtue of my mother-in-law’s magic power, to fetch the golden lotuses I have found this younger brother of mine. And in that very place we obtained the sciences¹ from our preceptor Prajnaptikauṣika, and suddenly becoming Vidyādhara we have quickly arrived here." Thus Aśokadatta spoke, and then that hero of various adventures, delighted at having escaped the darkness of the curse, bestowed on his parents and his beloved, the daughter of the king, his wonderful sciences of many kinds, so that their minds were suddenly awakened and they became Vidyādhara.

¹ Magical sciences, in virtue of which they were Vidyādharas or science-holders.
² A son or pupil of Viśvāmitra.

Then the happy hero took leave of the king, and with his brother, his parents and his two wives flew up and quickly reached through the air the palace of his emperor. There he beheld him, and received his orders, and so did his brother, and he bore henceforth the name of Aśokevag, and his brother of Vijayavega. And both the brothers, having become noble Vidya dhara youths, went, accompanied by their relations, to the splendid mountain named Govindakūṭa, which now became their home. And Pratāpamukūṭa, the King of Benares, overpowered by wonder, placed one of the

¹ Prajnapti, "foreknowledge," is one of the many "sciences" controlled by Vidyādhara, or "holders of magic science."

She (for the science is feminine) occurs again at the beginning of Chapter XXX; in the "Story of Alankāravatī," Chapter LI; and in the "Story of the Silent Couple," Chapter CXI. In Chapter XLV the art is said to be founded on Śāṅkhya and Yoga and is described as "the famous supernatural power, and the independence of knowledge, the dominion over matter that is characterised by lightness and other mystic properties."

Various other sciences besides Prajnapti occur in this work, thus in Chapter XLVI the science called Mohani, "bewitching," appears, and in Chapter CVII it is Gaurī, "with three eyes, armed with a trident," who paralysed the chief heroes of Naravāhanadatta’s army. See Bloomfield, Proc. Amer. Phil. Soc., vol. lvi, 1917, pp. 1-6.—N.M.P.
THE CHANCES OF SUCCESS

golden lotuses in the second vessel in his temple, and offered to Siva the other golden lotuses presented by Ašokadatta, and, delighted with the honour of his connection, considered his family highly fortunate.

29. Story of the Golden City

"Thus divine persons become incarnate for some reason, and are born in this world of men, and possessing their native virtue and courage, attain successes which it is hard to win. So I am persuaded that you, O sea of courage, are some portion of a divinity, and will attain success as you desire; daring in achievements hard to accomplish even by the great, generally indicates a surpassingly excellent nature. Moreover, the Princess Kanakarekhâ, whom you love, must surely be a heavenly being, otherwise being a mere child how could she desire a husband that has seen the Golden City?" Having heard in secret this long and interesting story from Vishnudatta, Šaktideva, desiring in his heart to behold the Golden City, and supporting himself with resolute patience, managed to get through the night.
NOTE ON TANTRIC RITES IN THE MĀLATĪ MĀDHAVA

Bhavabhūti, the great romantic dramatist of India, who flourished towards the end of the seventh century, has three plays attributed to him—the Mālatī Mādhava, the Mahā Vīra Charita, and the Uttara Rāma Charita.

It is in the first of these that we have such insight into the esoteric rites of Hinduism. The Tantric practices pictured here are so vivid and detailed that imagination must have been aided by a knowledge of actual fact. The goddess whose worship figures so largely in the play is Chāmunḍā, a form of Durgā. Among the rites of the high priest is the sacrifice of a human virgin, and by means of sorcery Mālatī is led to the dread temple of the goddess.

The hero Mādhava has decided, like Faust, to call the powers of evil to his aid in his winning of Mālatī. Accordingly he prepares for the necessary Tantric rites by procuring human flesh as an offering—flesh which had been obtained not by the common method of cutting it from a man slain in battle, but, we are led to suppose, by more grim and sanguinary means. Chance takes Mādhava, with his offering of flesh, to the very temple where, little as he knows it, his beloved is bound and about to be offered up as a sacrifice to Chāmunḍā.

The temple is situated in a burning-ground and as Mādhava approaches the terrors of the place begin to have their effect on him. On hearing a noise behind he speaks as follows (the extracts given here are taken from Act V of the play, as translated by H. H. Wilson; see his Theatre of the Hindus, vol. ii, 1827):—

"Now wake the terrors of the place, beset
With crowding and malignant fiends; the flames
From funeral pyres scarce lend their sullen light
Clogged with their fleshly prey, to dissipate
The fearful gloom that hems them round. Pale ghosts
Sport with foul goblins, and their dissonant mirth
In shrill respondent shrieks is echoed round.
Well, be it so. I seek, and must address them.
Demons of ill, and disembodied spirits,
Who haunt this spot, I bring you flesh for sale.
The flesh of man untouched by trenchant steel,
And worthy your acceptance. (A great noise.)
How, the noise
High, shrill, and indistinct, of chattering sprites
Communicative fills the charnel ground.
Strange forms like foxes flit along the sky;
From the red hair of their lank bodies darts
The meteor blaze; or from their mouths that stretch
From ear to ear thickset with numerous fangs,
Or eyes or beards or brows, the radiance streams."
TANTRIC RITES IN THE MĀLATĪ MĀDHAVA  215

And now I see the goblin host: each stalks,
On legs like palm-trees, a gaunt skeleton,
Whose fleshless bones are bound by starting sinews,
And scantily cased in black and shrivelled skin:
Like tall and withered trees by lightning seathed
They move, and as amidst their sapless trunks
The mighty serpent curls—so in each mouth
Wide-yawning rolls the vast blood-dripping tongue.
They mark my coming, and the half-chewed morsel
Fails to the howling wolf—and now they fly

(Pauses and looks round.)
Race—dastardly as hideous—all is plunged
In utter gloom. (Considering.) The river flows before me,
The boundary of the funeral ground, that winds
Through mouldering bones its interrupted way.
Wild raves the torrent as it rushes past,
And rends its crumbling bank; the wailing Owl
Hoots through its skirting groves, and to the sounds
The loud-moaning Jackal yells reply.”

Suddenly Mādhava hears a voice and rushes off alarmed.
Meanwhile the priest and priestess in the temple have dressed the luckless Mālatī as a victim and a ritual dance is being performed round her as she lies bound and terrified. The priest begins his incantations thus:

“Hail—hail—Chāmunḍā, mighty goddess, hail!
I glorify thy sport, when in the dance,
That fills the court of Śiva with delight,
Thy foot descending spurns the earthly Globe.
Beneath the weight the broad-backed tortoise reels;
The egg of Brahmā trembles at the shock;
And in a yawning chasm, that gapes like hell,
The sevenfold main tumultuously rushes.

The elephant hide that robes thee, to thy steps
Swings to and fro—the whirling talons rend
The crescent on thy brow—from the torn orb
The trickling nectar falls, and every skull
That gems thy necklace laughs with horrid life—
Attendant spirits tremble and applaud.
The mountain falls before thy powerful arms,
Around whose length the sable serpents twine
Their swelling forms, and knit terrific bands,
Whilst from the hood expanded frequent flash
Envenomed flames—

As rolls thy awful head,
The lowering eye that glows amidst thy brow
A fiery circle designates, that wraps
The spheres within its terrible circumference:
Whilst by the banner on thy dreadful staff,
High waved, the stars are scattered from their orbits.
The three-eyed God exults in the embrace
Of his fair Spouse, as Gaurī sinks appalled
By the distracting cries of countless fiends,
Who shout thy praise. Oh, may such dance afford Whate'er we need—whate'er may yield us happiness."

While this is proceeding Mādhava enters unseen and slaying the priest releases Mālatī.

There are many other striking episodes in the play, but the above is sufficient to show the Tantric basis of the scene described in pp. 198, 199 and 205 of this volume.—N.M.P.
CHAPTER XXVI

29. Story of the Golden City

The next morning, while Saktideva was dwelling in the monastery, in the island of Utsthala, Satyavrata, the king of the fishermen, came to him and said to him in accordance with the promise which he had made before: "Brähman, I have thought of a device for accomplishing your wish. There is a fair isle in the middle of the sea named Ratnakūta, and in it there is a temple of the adorable Vishnu founded by the Ocean, and on the twelfth day of the white fortnight of Āshāṅga there is a festival there, with a procession, and people come there diligently from all the islands to offer worship. It is possible that someone there might know about the Golden City, so come let us go there, for that day is near."

When Satyavrata made this proposal, Saktideva consented gladly, and took with him the provisions for the journey furnished by Vishṇudatta. Then he went on board the ship brought by Satyavrata, and quickly set out with him on the ocean-path; and as he was going with Satyavrata on the home of marvels 1 in which the monsters resembled islands, he asked the king, who was steering the ship: "What is this enormous object which is seen in the sea far off in this direction, looking like a huge mountain equipped with wings rising at will out of the sea?" Then Satyavrata said: "Brähman, this is a banyan-tree 2; underneath it they say that there is a gigantic whirlpool, the mouth of the submarine fire. And we must take care in passing this way to avoid that spot, for those who once enter that whirlpool never return again." While Satyavrata was thus speaking, the ship began to be carried in that very direction by the force of the wind. 3

---

1 i.e. the Ocean.

2 Cf. the ἐρυνέος μέγας φύλλωσι τεθηλώσ in the Odyssey, Book XII, 103.

3 The metre of this line is incorrect. There is a superfluous syllable. Perhaps we ought to read ambuwegatah, "by the current."—The D. text shows Tawney's guess was quite correct.—N.M.P.
When Satyavrata saw this he again said to Saktideva:
"Brähman, it is clear that the time of our destruction has now arrived, for see, this ship suddenly drifts¹ in that direction. And now I cannot anyhow prevent it, so we are certain to be cast into that deep whirlpool, as into the mouth of death, by the sea which draws us on as if it were mighty Fate, the result of our deeds. And it grieves me not for myself; for whose body is continuing? But it grieves me to think that your desire has not been accomplished in spite of all your toils, so while I keep back this ship for a moment quickly climb on to the boughs of this banyan-tree; perhaps some expedient may present itself for saving the life of one of such noble form; for who can calculate the caprices of Fate or the waves of the sea?"

While the heroic Satyavrata was saying this the ship drew near the tree; at that moment Saktideva made a leap in his terror ² and caught a broad branch of that marine banyantree,³ but Satyavrata’s body and ship, which he offered for another, were swept down into the whirlpool, and he entered the mouth of the submarine fire. But Saktideva, though he had escaped to the bough of that tree, which filled the regions with its branches, was full of despair, and reflected: "I have not beheld that Golden City, and I am perishing in an uninhabited place; moreover, I have also brought about the death of that king of the fishermen. Or, rather, who can resist the awful Goddess of Destiny, that ever places her foot upon the heads of all men?" ⁴ While the Brähman youth was thus revolving thoughts suited to the occasion on the

¹ I think we ought to read adhaḥ, "downwards."
² Brockhaus does injustice to Saktideva, who was no coward in the greatest dangers. The D. text reads viśādhvaśaḥ, "fearless," instead of 'iha sādhvaśaḥ.
—N.M.P.
³ Cf. Odyssey, xii, 432:

aṅkār ēyō ὑπὲρ μακρὸν ἔρινθου ὑποσ’ ἀρθώις τῷ προσφόρε ἑχόμνυ ὡς νυκτερίς.
—Similarly Sindbad saves himself by bestriding a tub which carried him under the lee of a lofty island, with trees overhanging the tide. Thereupon (Nights, Burton, vol. vi, p. 7) "I caught hold of a branch and, by its aid clambered up on to the land, after coming nigh unto death."—N.M.P.
⁴ αλλ’ ἡρα ἤγε κατ’ ἀνήραν κράσατα βαίνει, Iliad, xix, v. 93.
trunk of the tree the day came to an end. And in the evening he saw many enormous birds, of the nature of vultures, coming into that banyan-tree from all quarters, filling the sides of heaven with their cries, and the waves of the sea, that was lashed by the wind of their broad wings, appeared as if running to meet them out of affection produced by long acquaintance.

Then he, concealed by the dense leaves, overheard the conversation of those birds perched in the branches, which was carried on in human language. One described some distant island, another a mountain, another a distant region, as the place where he had gone to roam during the day, but an old bird among them said: “I went to-day to the Golden City to disport myself, and to-morrow morning I shall go there again to feed at my ease; for what is the use of my taking a long and fatiguing journey?” Saktideva’s sorrow was removed by that speech of the bird’s, which resembled a sudden shower of nectar, and he thought to himself: “Bravo! that city does exist, and now I have an instrument for reaching it—this gigantic bird, given me as a means of conveyance.” Thinking thus, Saktideva slowly advanced and hid himself among the back-feathers of that bird while it was asleep, and next morning, when the other birds went off in different directions, that vulture, exhibiting a strange partiality to the Brāhmaṇ like destiny, carrying Saktideva on his back where he had climbed up, went immediately to the Golden City to feed again. Then

1 Here we have another example of the “overhearing” motif. See Vol. I, p. 483, and the note on p. 107 of this volume. As stated in this latter reference, I shall give further variants in a note in Vol. III, Chapter XXIX.

2 Pakshapāta also means “flapping of wings.” So there is probably a pun here.

3 So in the Swedish tale, “The Beautiful Palace East of the Sun and North of the Earth,” the phœnix carries the youth on his back to the palace. Cf. the halcyon in Lucian’s Vera Historia, Book II, 40 (see Fowler’s translation, Oxford, 1905, vol. ii, p. 169), whose nest is seven miles in circumference, and whose egg is probably the prototype of that in the Arabian Nights. Cf. also the Glücksvogel in Prym and Socin, Syrische Märchen, p. 269, and the eagle which carries Chaucer in The House of Fame.

——In the Kathākoça (Tawney, pp. 29, 30) the hero Nāgadatta climbs up a the bird alighted in a garden, and Saktideva got down from its back unobserved and left it, but while he was roaming about there he saw two women engaged in gathering flowers; he approached them slowly, who were astonished at his appearance, and he asked them: "What place is this, good ladies, and who are you?" And they said to him: "Friend, this is a city called the Golden City, a seat of the Vidyādharas, and in it there dwells a Vidyādharī, named Chandraprabhā, and know that we are the gardeners in her garden, and we are gathering these flowers for her." Then the Brāhman said: "Obtain for me an interview with your mistress here." When they heard this, they consented, and the two women conducted the young man to the palace in their city.

When he reached it, he saw that it was glittering with pillars of precious stones, and had walls of gold, as it were the very rendezvous of prosperity. And all the attendants, when they saw him arrived there, went and told Chandraprabhā the marvellous tidings of the arrival of a mortal; then she gave a command to the warden, and immediately had the Brāhman brought into the palace and conducted into her presence. When he entered he beheld her there giving a feast to his eyes, like the creator's ability to create marvels reprehensible and sounds gongs in order to scare away enormous bhāruṇḍa birds, who, by the wind produced by the flapping of their wings, cause a stranded ship to continue on its course. In the same collection of Jain stories (pp. 164, 165) Lalitāṅga, having overheard a valuable secret from the conversation of two birds, crawled in among the feathers of one of the birds and lay there. "At the hour of dawn they all went to the city of Champā. Lalitāṅga crept out of the bird's feathers, and entered the city."

Our old friend Sindbad makes similar use of the rukh when stranded on a desert island. The great bird suddenly alighted on a great white dome, its egg, and brooded over it with its wings covering it and its legs stretched out behind it on the ground, and in this posture it fell asleep, glory be to Him who sleepeth not! When I saw this, I arose and, unwinding my turband from my head, doubled it and twisted it into a rope, with which I girt my middle and bound my waist fast to the legs of the rukh, saying in myself: 'Peradventure, this bird may carry me to a land of cities and inhabitants, and that will be better than abiding in this desert island.' (Nights, Burton, vol. vi, p. 17). I have already given (Vol. I, pp. 103-105) full references to the Garuda bird, rukh, etc.—N.M.P.

1 We should read sauvāryabhṛtti.
sented in bodily form. And she rose from her jewelled couch, while he was still far off, and honoured him with a welcome herself, overpowered by beholding him. And when he had taken a seat she asked him: "Auspicious sir, who are you that have come here in such guise, and how did you reach this land inaccessible to men?" When Chandraprabhā in her curiosity asked him this question, Saktideva told her his country and his birth and his name, and he related to her how he had come in order to obtain the Princess Kanakarekhā as the reward of beholding the Golden City.

When Chandraprabhā heard that, she thought a little and heaved a deep sigh, and said to Saktideva in private: "Listen, I am about to tell you something, fortunate sir. There is in this land a king of the Vidyādhāras named Śaśikhaṇḍa, and we four daughters were born to him in due course; I am the eldest, Chandraprabhā, and the next is Chandrarekhā, and the third is Śāśirekhā, and the fourth Śaśiprabhā. We gradually grew up to womanhood in our father's house, and once upon a time those three sisters of mine went together to the shore of the Ganges to bathe, while I was detained at home by illness; then they began to play in the water, and in the insolence of youth they sprinkled with water a hermit named Agrayatapas while he was in the stream. That hermit in his wrath cursed those girls, who had carried their merriment too far,¹ saying: 'You wicked maidens, be born all of you in the world of mortals.' When our father heard that, he went and pacified the great hermit, and the hermit told how the curse of each of them severally should end, and appointed to each of them in her mortal condition the power of remembering her former existence, supplemented with divine insight. Then, they having left their bodies and gone to the world of men, my father bestowed on me this city, and in his grief went to the forest; but while I was dwelling here the goddess Durgā informed me in a dream that a mortal should become my husband. For this reason, though my father has ¹ It looks as if Tawney guessed at the more correct atinirbandhiniḥ of the D. text, which means "over-insisting," "with excessive insistence"; the atiniro-vartinīḥ of Brockhaus would mean "feeling satisfaction," "coming into being," or "coming to completion," all of which are quite inappropriate here.—N.M.P.

---

recommended to me many Vidyādhara suitors, I have rejected them all and remained unmarried to this day. But now I am subdued by your wonderful arrival and by your handsome form, and I give myself to you; so I will go on the approaching fourteenth day of the lunar fortnight to the great mountain called Rishabha to entreat my father for your sake, for all the most excellent Vidyādharas assemble there from all quarters on that day to worship the god Śiva, and my father comes there too, and after I have obtained his permission I will return here quickly; then marry me. Now rise up.”

Having said this, Chandraprabhā supplied Saktideva with various kinds of luxuries suited to Vidyādharas, and while he remained there he was as much refreshed as one heated by a forest conflagration would be by bathing in a lake of nectar. And when the fourteenth day had arrived Chandraprabhā said to him:
“To-day I go to entreat my father’s permission to marry you, and all my attendants will go with me. But you must not be grieved at being left alone for two days; moreover, while you remain alone in this palace, you must by no means ascend the middle terrace.”

When Chandraprabhā had said this to that young Brāhman she set out on her journey, leaving her heart with him, and escorted on her way by his. And Saktideva, remaining there alone, wandered from one magnificent part of the palace to another to delight his mind; and then he felt a curiosity to know why that daughter of the Vidyādhara had forbidden him to ascend the roof of the palace, and so he ascended that middle terrace of the palace; for men are generally inclined to do that which is forbidden. And when he had ascended it he saw three concealed pavilions, and he entered one of them, the door of which was open; and when he had entered it he saw a certain woman lying on a magnificently jewelled sofa, on which there was a mattress placed, whose body was hidden by a sheet. But when he lifted up the sheet and looked he beheld lying dead in that guise that beautiful maiden, the daughter of King Paropakārīn; and when he saw her there he thought: “What is this great wonder? Is she sleeping a sleep from which there is no awaking, or is it a complete delusion on my part? That woman, for whose sake I have travelled to this foreign land, is lying here without breath, though she is alive in my own country, and she still retains her beauty unimpaired, so I may be certain that this is all a magic show, which the creator for some reason or other exhibits to beguile me."

Thinking thus, he proceeded to enter in succession those other two pavilions, and he beheld within them in the same way two other maidens. Then he went in his astonishment out of the palace, and sitting down he remained looking at a very beautiful lake below it, and on its bank he beheld a horse with a jewelled saddle; so he descended immediately from where he was, and out of curiosity approached its side; and seeing that it had no rider on it, he tried to mount it, and that horse struck him with its heel and flung him into the lake. And after he had sunk beneath the surface of the lake he quickly rose up to his astonishment from the middle of a garden lake in his own city of Vardhamānā; and he saw himself suddenly standing in the water of a lake in his own native city, like the kumuda plants, miserable without the light of the moon.1 He reflected: "How different is this city

1 Or Chandraprabhā, whose name means "light of the moon." The forbidden chamber will at once remind the reader of Perrault's La Barbe Bleue. The lake incident is exactly similar to one in Chapter LXXXI of this work and to that of Kandarpaketu in the Hitopadeśa. In Wirt Sikes' British Goblins, p. 84, a draught from a forbidden well has the same effect. See Ralston's Russian Folk-Tales, p. 99. He refers to this story and gives many European equivalents. See also Veckenstedt's Wendische Sagen, p. 214. Many parallels will be found in the notes to Grimm's Märchen, Nos. 3 and 46, to which Ralston refers in his exhaustive note.

——The "forbidden chamber" motif has already been ably discussed by Sidney Hartland ("The Forbidden Chamber," Folk-Lore Journal, vol. iii, 1885, pp. 193-242), so that there is no need to go into any great detail here. One of the closest accounts to that in our text occurs in the third Kalandar's tale (Nights, Burton, vol. i, p. 160). In this story Ajib, son of Khazib, is entrusted with the keys of a palace containing forty chambers all of which he can open except one, and he is warned that if he does, he and his beloved will be separated for ever. However, as usual, curiosity overcomes him, and as soon as he opens the door a wonderful perfume meets his nose which immediately sends him into a faint. After a time he recovers and inspects the room, which is lit with lamps of gold diffusing a scent of musk and ambergris. "Presently," he says when relating the story, "I espied a noble steed, black of Vardhamāna from that city of the Vidyādharas! Alas! what is this great display of marvellous delusion? Alas! I, ill-fated wretch, am wonderfully deceived by some strange power; or rather, who on this earth knows what is the nature of destiny?" Thus reflecting, Śaktideva rose from the midst of the lake, and went in a state of wonder to his own father's house. There he made a false representation, giving as an excuse for his absence that he had been himself going about with a drum, and being gladly welcomed by his father he remained with his delighted relations; and on the second day he went outside his house, and heard again those words being proclaimed in the city by beat of drum: "Let whoever, being a Brāhman or a Kshatriya, has really seen the Golden City say so: the king will give him his daughter and make him crown prince."

as the murks of night when murkiest, standing, ready saddled and bridled (and his saddle was of red gold) before two mangers, one of clear crystal wherein was husked sesame, and the other also of crystal containing water of the rose scented with musk. When I saw this I marvelled and said to myself, 'Doubtless in this animal must be some wondrous mystery'; and Satan cozened me, so I led him without the palace and mounted him; but he would not stir from his place. So I hammered his sides with my heels, but he moved not, and then I took the rein-whip and struck him withal. When he felt the blow, he neighed a neigh with a sound like deafening thunder, and opening a pair of wings flew up with me in the firmament of heaven far beyond the eyesight of man. After a full hour of flight he descended and alighted on a terrace roof and shaking me off his back lashed me on the face with his tail and gouged out my left eye, causing it roll along my cheek. Then he flew away." He then goes down from the terrace and finds himself among the ten one-eyed youths who had met with similar adventures themselves, and through whom Ajīb had originally started on his adventure.

—N.M.P.
SAKTIDEVA WINS—AND LOSES THE PRINCESS 225

Then Saktideva hearing that, having successfully accomplished the task, again went and said to those who were proclaiming this by beat of drum: "I have seen that city." And they took him before that king, and the king, recognising him, supposed that he was again saying what was untrue, as he had done before. But he said: "If I say what is false, and if I have not really seen that city, I desire now to be punished with death; let the princess herself examine me." When he said this, the king went and had his daughter summoned by his servants. She, when she saw that Brāhman, whom she had seen before, again said to the king: "My father, he will tell us some falsehood again." Then Saktideva said to her: "Princess, whether I speak truly or falsely, be pleased to explain this point which excites my curiosity. How is it that I saw you lying dead on a sofa in the Golden City and yet see you here alive?"

When the Princess Kanakarekhā had been asked this question by Saktideva, and furnished with this token of his truth, she said in the presence of her father: "It is true that this great-hearted one has seen that city, and in a short time he will be my husband, when I return to dwell there. And there he will marry my other three sisters; and he will govern as king the Vidyādharas in that city. But I must to-day enter my own body and that city, for I have been born here in your house owing to the curse of a hermit, who moreover appointed that my curse should end in the following way: 'When you shall be wearing a human form, and a man, having beheld your body in the Golden City, shall reveal the truth, then you shall be freed from your curse, and that man shall become your husband.' And though I am in a human body I remember my origin, and I possess supernatural knowledge, so I will now depart to my own Vidyādharā home, to a happy fortune." Saying this, the princess left her body, and vanished, and a confused cry arose in the palace.

And Saktideva, who had now lost both the maidens, thinking over the two beloved ones whom he had gained by various difficult toils, and who yet were not gained, and not only grieved but blaming himself, with his desire not accomplished, left the king's palace and in a moment went through the following train of thought:—"Kanakarekhā said that I should attain my desire; so why do I despond, for success depends upon courage? I will again go to the Golden City by the same path, and destiny will without doubt again provide me with a means of getting there."

Thus reflecting, Śaktideva set out from that city; for resolute men who have once undertaken a project do not turn back without accomplishing their object. And journeying on, he again reached after a long time that city named Viṭṭankapura, situated on the shore of the sea. And there he saw the merchant coming to meet him, with whom he originally went to sea, and whose ship was wrecked there. He thought: "Can this be Samudradatta, and how can he have escaped after falling into the sea? But how can it be otherwise? I myself am a strange illustration of its possibility." While he approached the merchant thinking thus, the merchant recognised him, and embraced him in his delight; and he took him to his own house and after entertaining him asked him: "When the ship foundered, how did you escape from the sea?"

Śaktideva then told him his whole history, how, after being swallowed by a fish, he first reached the island of Utsthala; and then he asked the good merchant in his turn: "Tell me also how you escaped from the sea." Then the merchant said: "After I fell into the sea that time, I remained floating for three days supported on a plank. Then a ship suddenly came that way, and I, crying out, was descried by those in her, and taken on board her. And when I got on board I saw my own father, who had gone to a distant island long before, and was now returning after a long absence. My father, when he saw me, recognised me, and embracing me asked my story with tears, and I told it him as follows:—'My father, you had been away for a long time and had not returned, and so I set about trading myself, thinking it was my proper employment; then on my way to a distant island my ship was wrecked, and I was plunged in the sea, and you have found me and rescued me.' When I had said this to him, my father asked me reproachfully: 'Why do you run such risks? For I possess wealth, my son, and I am engaged in acquiring it; see, I have brought you back this ship full of gold.' Thus spoke my father to me, and comforting me, took me home in that very ship to my own dwelling in Viṭāṇkapura.'

When Śaktideva had heard this account from the merchant, and had rested that night, he said to him on the next day: "Great merchant, I must once more go to the island of Utsthala, so tell me how I can get there now." The merchant said to him: "Some agents of mine are preparing to go there to-day, so go on board the ship, and set out with them." Thereupon the Brāhman set out with the merchant's agents to go to that island of Utsthala, and by chance the sons of the king of the fishermen saw him there, and when they were near him they recognised him, and said: "Brāhman, you went with our father to search here and there for the Golden City, and how is it that you have come back here to-day alone?" Then Śaktideva said: "Your father, when out at sea, fell into the mouth of the submarine fire, his ship having been dragged down by the current." When those sons of the fisher-king heard that, they were angry, and said to their servants: "Bind this wicked man, for he has murdered our father. Otherwise how could it have happened that, when two men were in the same ship, one should have fallen into the mouth of the submarine fire and the other escaped it? So we must to-morrow morning sacrifice our father's murderer in front of the goddess Durgā, treating him as a victim." Having said this to their servants, those sons of the fisher-king bound Śaktideva, and took him off to the awful temple of Durgā, the belly of which was enlarged, as if it continually swallowed many lives, and which was like the mouth of Death devouring tāmāla with projecting teeth.²

There Śaktideva remained bound during the night, in

¹ Brockhaus' tataṅk disturbs the sense. The D. text renders the passage cinvatt itās tadā, "at that time you went . . ."—N.M.P.

² Following the D. text, S₀peyer (op. cit., p. 105) would translate, "whose rows of teeth are adorned with bells."—N.M.P.
fear of his life, and he thus prayed to the goddess Durgā: “Adorable one, granter of boons, thou didst deliver the world with thy form, which was like the orb of the rising sun, appearing as if it had drunk its fill of the blood gushing freely from the throat of the giant Ruru; therefore deliver me, thy constant votary, who have come a long distance out of desire to obtain my beloved, but am now fallen without cause into the power of my enemies.” Thus he prayed to the goddess, and with difficulty went off to sleep; and in the night he saw a woman come out of the inner cell of the temple; that woman of heavenly beauty came up to him, and said in a compassionate manner: “Do not fear, Saktideva, no harm shall happen to you. The sons of that fisher-king have a sister named Vindumatī; that maiden shall see you in the morning and claim you for a husband, and you must agree to that; she will bring about your deliverance: and she is not of the fisher caste: for she is a celestial female degraded in consequence of a curse.” When he heard this he woke up, and in the morning that fisher-maiden came to the temple, a shower of nectar to his eyes. And announcing herself, she came up to him and said in her eagerness: “I will have you released from this prison, therefore do what I desire. For I have refused all these suitors approved of by my brothers, but the moment I saw you, love arose in my soul; therefore marry me.” When Vindumatī, the daughter of the fisher-king, said this to him, Saktideva, remembering his dream, accepted her proposal gladly; she procured his release, and he married that fair one, whose wish was gratified by her brothers receiving the command to do so from Durgā in a dream. And he lived there with that heavenly creature that had assumed a human form, obtained solely by his merits in a former life, as if with happy success.

And one day, as he was standing upon the roof of his palace, he saw a Chandāla coming along with a load of cow’s flesh, and he said to his beloved: “Look, slender one! how can this evil-doer eat the flesh of cows, those animals that are the object of veneration\(^1\) to the three worlds?" Then Vindumati, hearing that, said to her husband: "The wickedness of this act is inconceivable; what can we say in palliation of it? I have been born in this race of fishermen for a very small offence owing to the might of cows, but what can atone for this man's sin?" When she said this, Saktideva said to her: "That is wonderful. Tell me, my beloved, who are you, and how came you to be born in a family of fishermen?" When he asked this with much importunity, she said to him: "I will tell you, though it is a secret, if you promise to do what I ask you." He affirmed with an oath: "Yes, I will do what you ask me."

---

1 The Dānavas are a class of demons or giants. Ruru was a Dānava slain by Durgā.——See Vol. I, pp. 199-200.—N.M.P.

She then told him first what she desired him to do: "In this island you will soon marry another wife, and she, my husband, will soon become pregnant, and in the eighth month of her pregnancy you must cut her open and take out the child,\(^2\) and you must feel no compunction about it." Thus she said, and he was astonished, exclaiming: "What can this mean?" And he was full of horror; but that daughter of the fisher-king went on to say: "This request of mine you must perform for a

\(^1\) For details of the cow-worship of the Hindus see the note at the end of this chapter.—N.M.P.

\(^2\) Once again this extraordinary act is not merely the product of the story-teller's fertile imagination, but is founded on fact. Risley (Tribes and Castes of Bengal, vol. i, p. 94) states that among the Bhandaris of Bengal, when a pregnant woman dies before delivery, her body is cut open and the child taken out, both corpses being buried in the same grave. J. S. Campbell (Notes on the Spirit Basis of Belief and Custom, Bombay, 1885) tells us that in Bombay, when a woman dies in pregnancy, her corpse, after being bathed and decked with flowers and ornaments, is carried to the burning-ground. There her husband sprinkles water on her body from the points of a wisp of the sacred darbha grass and repeats holy verses. Then he cuts her right side with a sharp weapon and takes out the child. Should it be alive, it is taken home and cared for; should it be dead, it is then and there buried. The hole in the side of the corpse is filled with curds and butter, covered with cotton threads, and then the usual rite of cremation is carried out.

For further details on fœticide and abortion reference should be made to Havelock Ellis, Studies in the Psychology of Sex, vol. vi, pp. 605-612; Westermarck, The Origin and Development of the Moral Ideas (2nd edition, 1912), ch. xvii; and A. E. Crawley, "Fœticide," Hastings' Ency. Rel. Eth., vol. vi, pp. 54-57, all of which contain full bibliographical references.—N.M.P. certain reason. Now hear who I am, and how I came to be born in a family of fishermen. Long ago in a former birth I was a certain Vidyādharī, and now I have fallen into the world of men in consequence of a curse. For when I was a Vidyādharī I bit asunder some strings with my teeth and fastened them to lyres, and it is owing to that that I have been born here in the house of a fisherman. So, if such a degradation is brought about by touching the mouth with the dry sinew of a cow, much more terrible must be the results of eating cow’s flesh!” While she was saying this, one of her brothers rushed in in a state of perturbation, and said to Śaktideva: “Rise up! an enormous boar has appeared from somewhere or other, and after slaying innumerable persons is coming this way in its pride, towards us.” When Śaktideva heard that, he descended from his palace, and mounting a horse, spear in hand,1 he galloped to meet the boar, and struck it the moment he saw it; but when the hero attacked him the boar fled, and managed, though wounded, to enter a cavern; and Śaktideva entered there in pursuit of him, and immediately beheld a great garden shrubbery with a house. And when he was there he beheld a maiden of very wonderful beauty, coming in a state of agitation to meet him, as if it were the goddess of the wood advancing to receive him out of love.

And he asked her: “Auspicious lady, who are you, and why are you perturbed?” Hearing that, the lovely one thus answered him: “There is a king of the name of Chaṇḍavikrama, lord of the southern region. I am his daughter, auspicious sir, a maiden named Vindurekhā. But a wicked Daitya, with flaming eyes, carried me off by treachery from my father’s house to-day and brought me here. And he, desiring flesh, assumed the form of a boar, and sallied out; but while he was still hungry he was pierced with a spear to-day by some hero; and as soon as he was pierced he came in here and died. And I rushed out and escaped without being outraged by him.” Then Śaktideva said to her: “Then why all this perturbation? For I slew that

1 In śl. 172a I conjecture śaktihasto for Śaktidevo, as we read in śl. 181a that the boar was wounded with a sakti.
boar with a spear, princess.” Then she said, “Tell me who you are,” and he answered her, “I am a Brähman named Saktideva.” Then she said to him, “You must accordingly become my husband,” and the hero consenting went out of the cavern with her. And when he arrived at home he told it to his wife Vindumati, and with her consent he married that Princess Vindurekhā. So, while Saktideva was living there with his two wives, one of his wives, Vindurekhā, became pregnant; and in the eighth month of her pregnancy, the first wife Vindumati came up to him of her own accord and said to him: “Hero, remember what you promised me; this is the eighth month of the pregnancy of your second wife; so go and cut her open and bring the child here, for you cannot act contrary to your own word of honour.” When she said this to Saktideva, he was bewildered by affection and compassion; but being bound by his promise he remained for a short time unable to give an answer; at last he departed in a state of agitation and went to Vindurekhā; and she seeing him come with troubled air said to him: “Husband, why are you despondent today? Surely I know: you have been commissioned by Vindumati to take out the child with which I am pregnant; and that you must certainly do, for there is a certain object in view, and there is no cruelty in it, so do not feel compassion; in proof of it hear the following story of Devadatta:

29D. Devadatta the Gambler

Long ago there lived in the city of Kambuka a Brähman named Haridatta; and the son of that auspicious man, who was named Devadatta, though he studied in his boyhood, was, as a young man, exclusively addicted to the vice of gaming. As he had lost his clothes and everything by gambling,¹ he was not able to return to his father’s house, so

¹ The Indian has been an inveterate gambler from the earliest times. In a famous hymn of the Rig-veda (x, 34) a gambler tells of the fatal fascination the dice have had for him, and the consequent ruin and slavery, which was one of the final conditions of the debtor. Details of the play referred to are not described, but scattered allusions seem to show that four, and sometimes
he entered once on a time an empty temple. And there he saw alone a great ascetic, named Jālapāda, who had attained many objects by magic, and he was muttering spells in a corner. So he went up to him slowly and bowed before him, and the ascetic, abandoning his habit of not speaking to anyone, greeted him with a welcome; and after he had remained there a moment, the ascetic, seeing his trouble, asked him five dice were used, and the aim of the gambler was to throw a number which should be a multiple of four (see Lüders, Das Würfelspiel im alten Indien; Caland, Zeit. d. deutsch. morg. Ges., vol. lxii, p. 123 et seq.; and Keith, Journ. Roy. As. Soc., 1908, p. 823 et seq.).

Cheating at play appears in the Rig-Veda as one of the most frequent of crimes, and the word for "gamester," kitava, came to mean "cheat" in classical Sanskrit.

In the Mahābhārata the vice of gambling is often mentioned. The Kuru prince schemed to overthrow the Pāṇḍus by gambling, and the well-known episode of Nala and Damayanti (iii, 59-61) shows the extent to which it was carried.

The theme also occurs in the Mrichchhakālīka, where there is a vivid description of a gambler's quarrel in Act II. See also the story of "Nala and Davadanti" (Tawney, Kathākośa, p. 201, etc.).

Crooke gives some interesting details in the last of his mass of valuable papers, "The Divāli, the Lamp Festival of the Hindus," Folk-Lore, vol. xxxiv, 1923, pp. 287, 288. The Nepalese are inveterate gamblers, and a tale is told of a man who cut off his left hand and put it down under a cloth as his stake. When he won he insisted on his opponent cutting off his hand, or else restoring all his winnings (D. Wright, History of Nepal, p. 39). In Kashmir nearly all classes gamble at the Divāli under the belief that winning will bring them luck during the coming year (F. Drew, The Jummo and Kashmir Territories, p. 72; but see W. R. Lawrence, The Valley of Kashmir, p. 266). In the Deccan, at the Divāli, men and women play chess till midnight in the hope that the goddess Pārvatī will bring them cartloads of treasure (Bombay Gazetteer, vol. xviii, part i, p. 251). At their chief festival held in March by the Shan of Upper Burma gambling is permitted to Burmese, Shan and Chinese, but not to natives of India. The gambling booths are put up to auction, and even the Pongyi priests may be seen gambling in the lines of huts outside the gambling enclosure (Sir J. G. Scott, J. P. Hardiman, Gazetteer of Upper Burma and the Shan States, Part II, vol. i, p. 229). In the Panjāb, success in gambling at the Divāli is believed to bring good luck. Native gentlemen gamble only with their wives, so that, whoever wins, they lose nothing. Traders play to find out whether the next year will be lucky or not. If a man wins he speculates freely, but if he loses he confines himself to safe ordinary business (Punjab Notes and Queries, vol. ii, p. 159).

For further details see J. L. Paton, "Gambling," Hastings' Ency. Rel. Eth., vol. vi, p. 164 and the references there given. —N.M.P.
the cause, and he told him of his affliction produced by the loss of his wealth, which had been dissipated in gambling. Then the ascetic said to Devadatta: “My child, there is not wealth enough in the whole world to satisfy gamblers; but if you desire to escape from your calamity, do what I tell you, for I have made preparations to attain the rank of a Vidyādhara; so help me to accomplish this, O man of fortunate destiny, you have only to obey my orders and then your calamities will be at an end.” When the ascetic said this to him, Devadatta promised to obey him, and immediately took up his residence with him.

And the next day the ascetic went into a corner of the cemetery and performed worship by night under a banyan-tree, and offered rice boiled in milk, and flung portions of the oblation towards the four cardinal points, after worshipping them, and said to the Brāhmaṇa, who was in attendance on him: “You must worship here in this style every day, and say: ‘Vidyutprabhā, accept this worship.’ And then I am certain that we shall both attain our ends.” Having said this, the ascetic went with him to his own house. Then Devadatta, consenting, went every day and duly performed worship at the foot of that tree, according to his instructions. And one day, at the end of his worship, the tree suddenly clave open, and a heavenly nymph came out of it before his eyes, and said: “My good sir, my mistress summons you to come to her.” And then she introduced him into the middle of that tree. When he entered it he beheld a heavenly palace made of jewels, and a beautiful lady within it reclining upon a sofa. And he immediately thought: “This may be the success of our enterprise incarnate in bodily form”; but while he was thinking thus that beautiful lady, receiving him graciously, rose with limbs on which the ornaments rang as if to welcome him, and seated him on her own sofa. And she said to him: “Illustrious sir, I am the maiden daughter of a king of the Yakshas, named Ratnavarsha, and I am known by the name of Vidyutprabhā; and this great ascetic Jālapāda was endeavouring to gain my favour; to him I will give the attainment of his ends, but you are the lord of my life. So, as you see my affection, marry me.” When she said this, Devadatta consented, and did so. And he remained there some time, but when she became pregnant he went to the great ascetic with the intention of returning, and in a state of terror he told him all that had happened, and the ascetic, desiring his own success, said to him: “My good sir, you have acted quite rightly, but go and cut open that Yakṣī and, taking out the embryo, bring it quickly here.” The ascetic said this to him, and then reminded him of his previous promise; and being dismissed by him, the Brāhmaṇ returned to his beloved, and while he stood there despondent with reflecting on what he had to do the Yakṣī Vidyutprabhā of her own accord said to him: “My husband, why are you cast down? I know Jālapāda has ordered you to cut me open, so cut me open and take out this child, and if you refuse I will do it myself, for there is an object in it.” Though she said this to him, the Brāhmaṇ could not bring himself to do it; then she cut herself open and took out the child and flung it down before him, and said: “Take this, which will enable him who consumes it to obtain the rank of a Vidyādharā. But I, though properly a Vidyādharī, have been born as a Yakṣī owing to a curse, and this is the appointed end of my curse, strange as it is, for I remember my former existence. Now I depart to my proper home, but we two shall meet again in that place.” Saying this, Vidyutprabhā vanished from his eyes. And Devadatta took the child with sorrowful mind and went to that ascetic Jālapāda and gave it to him, as that which would ensure the success of his incantations; for good men do not even in calamity give way to selfishness.

1 Literally, having auspicious marks.

The great ascetic divided the child’s flesh, and sent Devadatta to the wood to worship Durgā in her terrific form. And when the Brāhmaṇ came back after presenting an oblation, he saw that the ascetic had made away with all the flesh. And while he said, “What! have you consumed it all?” the treacherous Jālapāda, having become a Vidyādharā, ascended to heaven. When he had flown up, with sword blue as the sky, adorned with necklace and bracelet, Devadatta reflected: “Alas, how I have been deceived by this evil-minded one! Or, rather, on whom does not excessive compliance\textsuperscript{1} entail misfortune? So how can I revenge myself on him for this ill turn, and how can I reach him who has become a \textit{Vidyådhar}a? Well! I have no other resource in this matter except propitiating a \textit{Vetåla}.” After he had made up his mind to do this, he went at night to the cemetery. There he summoned at the foot of a tree a \textit{Vetåla} into the body of a man, and after worshipping him he made an oblation of human flesh to him. And as that \textit{Vetåla} was not satisfied, and would not wait for him to bring more, he prepared to cut off his own flesh to gratify him. And immediately that \textit{Vetåla} said to that brave man: “I am pleased with this courage of yours; do not act recklessly. So, my good sir, what desire have you for me to accomplish for you?” When the \textit{Vetåla} said this the hero answered him: “Take me to the dwelling-place of the Vidyådharas, where is the ascetic Jålapåda, who deceives those that repose confidence in him, in order that I may punish him.” The \textit{Vetåla} consented, and placing him on his shoulder, carried him through the air in a moment to the dwelling of the Vidyådharas. And there he saw Jålapåda in a palace, seated on a jewelled throne, elated at being a king among the Vidyådharas, endeavouring by various speeches to induce that Vidyutprabhå,\textsuperscript{2} who had obtained the rank of a Vidyådharî, to marry him in spite of her reluctance. And the moment that the young man saw this he attacked him, with the help of the \textit{Vetåla}, being to the eyes of the delighted Vidyutprabhå what the moon, the repository of nectar, is to the partridges.\textsuperscript{3} And Jålapåda beholding him suddenly arrived in this way, dropped his sword in his fright, and fell from his throne on the floor. But Devadatta, though he had obtained his sword, did not slay him; for the great-hearted feel pity even for their enemies when they are terrified.

And when the \textit{Vetåla} wanted to kill him, he dissuaded him, and said: “Of what use will it be to us to kill this miserable heretic? So take him and place him in his own house on earth; it is better that this wicked, skull-bearing ascetic should remain there." At the very moment that Devadatta was saying this the goddess Durgā descended from heaven and appeared to him, and said to him who bent before her: "My son, I am satisfied with thee now, on account of this incomparable courage of thine; so I give thee on the spot the rank of King of the Vidyādharas." Having said this, she bestowed the magic sciences¹ on him and immediately disappeared. And the Vetāla immediately took Jālapāda, whose splendour fell from him, and placed him on earth (wickedness does not long ensure success); and Devadatta, accompanied by Vidyutprabhā, having obtained that sovereignty of the Vidyādharas, flourished in his kingdom.

\textsuperscript{1} The D. text reads “excessive uprightness.” See Speyer, \textit{op. cit.}, p. 107.
\textsuperscript{2} I read \textit{Vidyutprabhåm} for \textit{Vidyådharîm}. But perhaps it is unnecessary.
\textsuperscript{3} The Chakora is said to subsist upon moonbeams.

29. Story of the Golden City

Having told this story to her husband Saktideva, the softly speaking Vindurekhā again said to him with eagerness: "Such necessities do arise, so cut out this child of mine as Vindumati told you, without remorse." When Vindurekhā said this, Saktideva was afraid of doing wrong, but a voice sounded from heaven at this juncture: "O Saktideva, take out this child without fear, and seize it by the neck with your hand, then it will turn into a sword." Having heard this divine voice, he cut her open, and quickly taking out the child he seized it by the throat with his hand; and no sooner did he seize it than it became a sword in his hand; like the long hair of Good Fortune seized by him with an abiding grasp.²

Then that Brāhman quickly became a Vidyādhar, and Vindurekhā that moment disappeared.³ And when he saw that, he went, as he was, to his second wife Vindumati and told her the whole story. She said to him: "My lord, we are three sisters, the daughters of a king of the Vidyādharas,

¹ So making him a Vidyādhar or "magic-knowledge-holder."
² The D. text reads satvataḥ, "courage," instead of Brockhaus' satataḥ, "abiding."—N.M.P.
³ The sudden transformation is doubtless to be attributed to the magical power of steel, for which see pp. 166-169 of this volume.—N.M.P.
VINDUMATĪ EXPLAINS

who have been banished from Kanakapuri in consequence of a curse. The first was Kanakarekhā, the termination of whose curse you beheld in the city of Vardhamāna; and she has gone to that city of hers, her proper home. For such was the strange end of her curse, according to the dispensation of Fate; and I am the third sister, and now my curse is at an end. And this very day I must go to that city of mine, my beloved, for there our Vidyādhara bodies remain. And my elder sister, Chandraprabhā, is dwelling there; so you also must come there quickly by virtue of the magic power of your sword. And you shall rule in that city, after obtaining all four of us as wives, bestowed upon you by our father, who has retired to the forest, and others in addition to us.”

Thus Vindumatī declared the truth about herself, and Saktideva, consenting, went again to the City of Gold, this time through the air, together with that Vindumatī. And when he arrived he again saw those three darlings of his bending before him, Kanakarekhā and the others, after entering with their souls, as was fitting, those heavenly female bodies, which he saw on a former occasion extended lifeless on the couches in those three pavilions. And he saw that fourth sister there, Chandraprabhā, who had performed auspicious ceremonies, and was drinking in his form with an eye rendered eager by seeing him after so long an absence.

His arrival was joyfully hailed by the servants, who were occupied in their several duties, as well as by the ladies, and when he entered the private apartments that Chandraprabhā said to him: “Noble sir, here is that Princess Kanakarekhā, who was seen by you in the city of Vardhamāna, my sister called Chandraprekhā. And here is that daughter of the fisher-king, Vindumatī, whom you first married in the island of Utsthala, my sister Śaśirekhā. And here is my youngest sister Śaśiprabhā, the princess, who after that was brought there by the Dānava and then became your wife. So now come, successful hero, with us into the presence of our father, and quickly marry us all, when bestowed upon you by him.”
THE OCEAN OF STORY

When Chandraprabhā had swiftly and boldly uttered this decree of Kāma, Śaktideva went with those four to the recesses of the wood to meet their father; and their father, the King of the Vidyādharas, having been informed of the facts by all his daughters, who bowed at his feet, and also moved by a divine voice, with delighted soul gave them all at once to Śaktideva. Immediately after that he bestowed on Śaktideva his opulent realm in the City of Gold, and all his magic sciences; and he gave the successful hero his name,1 by which he was henceforth known among his Vidyādharas. And he said to him: “No one else shall conquer thee, but from the mighty lord of Vatsa there shall spring a universal emperor, who shall reign among you here under the title of Naravāhana-datta and be thy superior; to him alone wilt thou have to submit.” With these words the mighty lord of the Vidyādharas, named Śaśikhaṇḍapada, dismissed his son-in-law from the wood where he was practising asceticism, after entertaining him kindly, that he might go with his wives to his own capital. Then that Śaktivega, having become a king, entered the City of Gold, that glory of the Vidyādharas world, proceeding thither with his wives. Living in that city, the palaces of which gleamed with fabric of gold, which seemed on account of its great height to be the condensed rays of the sun falling in brightness, he enjoyed exceeding happiness with those fair-eyed wives, in charming gardens, the lakes of which had steps made out of jewels.

[1] Having thus related his wonderful history, the eloquent Śaktivega went on to say to the King of Vatsa: “Know me, O lord of Vatsa, ornament of the lunar race, to be that very Śaktideva—come here, full of desire to behold the two feet of your son who is just born and is destined to be our new emperor. Thus I have obtained, though originally a man, the rank of sovereign among the Vidyādhāras by the favour of Śiva: and now, O King, I return to my own home. I have seen our future lord; may you enjoy unfailing felicity."

1 The Brockhaus text is not clear here. The meaning (as the D. text shows) is that the king altered the name of his son-in-law a little by changing the last syllable deva into vega, the latter being a termination found among Vidyādharas. The same thing happened in the case of Aśokadatta and Vijayadatta (see p. 212). It will be noticed that the altered name, Śaktivega, is used a few lines lower down.—N.M.F.

After finishing his tale, Saktivega said this with clasped hands, and receiving permission to depart, immediately flew up into the sky like the moon in brightness; and then the King of Vatsa, in the company of his wives, surrounded by his ministers, and with his young son, enjoyed, in his own capital, a state of indescribable felicity.
NOTE ON THE SACRED COW OF THE HINDUS

Although the worship of the sacred cow plays such an important part in modern Hinduism, there appears to be considerable doubt as to whether the practice dates from historical or prehistorical times in India. Thus in Hastings' Ency. Rel. Eth., in the article on "Animals" (vol. i, p. 507), by N. W. Thomas, we read: "Unlike Egypt, it is clear that India developed a respect for the animal in historic times"; while in the article on the "Cow (Hindu)", by H. Jacobi (vol. iv, pp. 224-226), we find: "The belief in the sanctity of the cow, which is a very prominent feature of Hinduism, seems to have been inherited by the Indians from prehistoric times, before they and the Iranians had separated." Crooke (op. cit., vol. ii, p. 226) is inclined to support the former view, but inspection of the early references in the Avesta, Rig-Veda, Atharva-Veda show, without doubt, that the cow was held sacred from the very earliest times. In the Purāṇas the worship increased, while in the Mahābhārata the great sacredness of the cow becomes a firmly established fact—so firmly indeed that even to-day its slaughter fills the Hindu with such horror that it is prohibited in native states under treaties with the English.

We will now examine the evidence in closer detail.

The Vedic Indians were a nation of meat-eaters, the chief food being the ox, sheep and goat. The slaughter of the ox, however, was always regarded as a kind of sacrificial act, and therefore particularly appropriate for the entertainment of guests. It also played an important part at wedding festivals. In the Cambridge History of India, vol. i, p. 102, A. B. Keith points out that there is no inconsistency between this eating of flesh and the growing sanctity of the cow, which bears already in the Rig-Veda the epithet agnivā, "not to be killed." Such a term should be looked upon merely as a proof of the high value attached to an animal which supplied the milk that meant so much both for secular and sacred use to the Vedic Indian.

It is interesting to note that in Rig-Veda days the cow was used as a standard of value, and the epithet satadāya denotes that the price of a man's blood was a hundred cows. Although there were no coins even in the times of the later Sanskrit and Brähmanas, the nishka, originally a gold ornament, was used as a unit of value and the cow was gradually being superseded as such.

Early Buddhist literature shows the ancient systems of barter and reckoning values by cows almost entirely replaced by a metal currency, commodities being stated in figures of a certain coin, or its fractions (see Journ. Roy. As. Soc., 1901, p. 882 et seq.).

But quite apart from the sanctity attached to the cow in Vedic times owing to its value as a supplier of milk, the mystic relation between the cow and the universe is alluded to in the Rig-Veda in several places (e.g. i, 158, 3; viii, 90, 15; x, 11, 1). For further details see A. A. Macdonell, Vedic Mythology, Grundriss d. Indo-Arischen Philologie, iii, 1897, under "Cow" and "Cows."
THE SACRED COW OF THE HINDUS

The same idea is found in the Atharva-Veda, especially in viii, 10 and 22-29. By the time of the Purāṇas the idea has become fully developed as a legend and in the Vīshṇu Purāṇa (Wilson, vol. i, ch. xiii) we get the following (according to Jacobi’s résumé):—

Prithu, son of Vena, having been constituted universal monarch, desired to recover for his subjects edible plants, which, during the preceding period of anarchy, had all perished. He therefore assailed the Earth, which, assuming the form of a cow, fled from him and traversed all the heavenly regions. At last she yielded to him, and promised to fecundate the soil with her milk. Thereupon Prithu flattened the surface of the earth with his bow, uprooting and thrusting away hundreds and thousands of mountains. Having made Svāyamānava Manu the calf, he milked the Earth, and received the milk into his own hand, for the benefit of mankind. Thence proceeded all kinds of corn and vegetables upon which people subsist now and always. By granting life to the Earth, Prithu was as her father; and she thence derived the patronymic appellation Prithiśī (“daughter of Prithu”). Then the gods, the sages, the demons, the Rākṣhasas, the Gandharvas, Yākshas, Pītris, serpents, mountains and trees took a milking vessel suited to their kind, and milked the Earth of appropriate milk. And the milker and the calf were both peculiar to their own species.

The cow was also identified with speech, and as speech was regarded as divine we have here an additional reason for the sanctity of the cow. Jacobi (op. cit., p. 225) points out that this identification was perhaps due, not so much to a popular association of ideas, as to a chance similarity of sound between the two words go, “cow,” and gā, “to sing,” or perhaps gir, “speech.”

The doctrine of ahimsā, the forbidding of any injury to an animal, was not fully developed in the Brāhmaṇa period. For although the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa prohibits the eating of a cow (iii, 1, 2, 21), the great sage Yājña-valkya ate meat of milch cows and oxen provided the flesh was āmsala—i.e. “firm,” or “tender.”

It is only when the belief in transmigration strengthened the philosophic tenets of the Brāhmaṇas as to the unity and concord of existence that the taboo was really established. It has been pointed out that the cow was still killed for guests in the Grihya Sūtras, but it should be noticed that the offer to kill a cow for a guest was merely a rite of hospitality, corresponding somewhat to the “my house and everything in it is yours” attitude of the Oriental of to-day. In vol. i, ch. x, p. 232 of the Cambridge History of India, E. W. Hopkins makes this quite clear—the host says to the guest, holding the knife ready to slay the cow, that he has the cow for him; but the guest is then directed to say: “Mother of Rudras, daughter of the Vasus, sister of the Ādityas, navel of immortality (is she). Do not kill the guiltless cow; she is (Earth itself), Aditi, the goddess. I speak to them that understand.” He adds: “My sin has been killed and that of So-and-so; let her go and eat grass.” But if he really wants to have her eaten, he says: “I kill my sin and the sin of So-and-so” (in killing her), and though in many cases the offer of the cow is thus plainly a formal piece of etiquette, yet the offering to the guest was not complete without flesh of some sort; and it is clear from the formulas that any of the worthiest guests might demand the cow's death, though as the "six worthy guests" are teacher, priest, father-in-law, king, friend, and Aryan "reborn" man, and all of these were doubtless well grounded in that veneration for the cow which is expressed above by identifying her with Earth (as Aditi), there was probably seldom any occasion to harrow the feelings of the cow-revering host.

Gradually there was no question of the cow being killed, the goat being the animal usually substituted. As already mentioned, it is in the Mahābhārata that we find the great sacredness of the cow fully established. Here emphasis is laid on the great merit acquired by gifts of cows, and the value of the animal for religious sacrifice owing to its great purity.

So pure, indeed, is the cow that its five products, pañchagavya (milk, curds, ghee, urine and dung), are also considered pure and enter largely, sometimes in a very disgusting way, into rites of purification, besides being used in exorcism, magic, disease and domestic ritual.

The peculiar smell of cows has led to the myth tracing their descent from Surabhi, "the fragrant one." It is fully given in Mahābhārata, xiii, 77. Surabhi once practised austerities and Brahma granted her immortality and a region above the three worlds to dwell in, called Goloka. This is, therefore, the cow's heaven, a beautiful place, only to be attained by those who have achieved merit on earth by the continual gifts and worship of cows.

For other rites in the Mahābhārata see xiii, 80, 1-3; 78, 24 et seq.

The connection of the bull with Śiva, the celestial cow, Kāmadhenn, with Indra, and the friendship of Kṛishṇa with the herdsmen and his love of the gopīs, particularly Rādhā, have all added to the general sacredness of the cow.

Its connection with fertility seems to appear in the phallic worship of Śiva, where the evil influences of the female principal through the yoni are partly counteracted by the bull, Nandin, being placed between the yoni and the direction of the village.

For references on cow ritual, apart from those already mentioned at the beginning of the note, see Dubois, op. cit., pp. 191-192, 573-574, 686, 706; the Index of Macdonell's A History of Sanskrit Literature under "Cow"; Russell, Tribes and Castes of the Central Provinces, vol. i, p. 415, where a most curious penalty for killing a cow by members of the Tiyor caste is described; and Stevenson, Rites of the Twice-born, pp. 161, 194, 273, 311 et seq., 324 et seq., and 376. The fullest account, however, is that by Crooke, "The Veneration of the Cow in India," Folk-Lore, vol. xxiii, 1912, pp. 275-306. I did not discover this interesting article till my note was in the press. I notice that he (pp. 280, 291) has entirely abandoned his old views (line 10 of note), and fully recognises the great antiquity of cow-worship among the Hindus.—N.M.P.
APPENDIX I
APPENDIX I

THE STORY OF URVASĪ AND PURŪRAVAS

This well-known story appears in many forms owing to its great age and the enormous popularity it has always enjoyed. As related in the Ocean of Story, it has unfortunately lost nearly all its original character and charm. Before attempting, therefore, to offer any suggestions as to the possible meaning of the legend, it will be as well to tell the story in its original form.

In the first place, however, I would like to point out why this story is so intensely interesting. It is the first Indo-European love-story known, and may even be the oldest love-story in the world. Its history throughout the whole range of Sanskrit literature is astonishing. The story itself can be regarded from several points of view—all of them interesting. Firstly, it is a tale of a great love, full of deep feeling and real pathos. Its beauty is quite sufficient to immortalise it, whatever else we may read in it. Secondly, it contains incidents which strike one as distinctly symbolic, and immediately open up that ever-fascinating pursuit of theorising. Thirdly, it has a distinct historical and anthropological value, and is without doubt the earliest example of nuptial taboo in existence. Lastly, the tale so appealed to Kālidāsa that he made it the theme of his play Vikramorvasī, still further beautifying it with some of the choicest gems of his poetical genius.

We first hear of Urvasī and Purūravas in a somewhat obscure hymn of the Rig-Veda (x, 95). It consists of a dialogue when the Apsaras is about to leave her mortal husband for ever. As the story is incomplete and disjointed, we must pass on to the fuller account as found in the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa (v, 1), which, however, includes several of the verses from the Rig-Veda.¹

1. The nymph Urvasī loved Purūravas, the son of Ilā. When she wedded him she said: "Thrice a day shalt thou embrace me; but do not lie with me against my will, and let me not see thee naked, for such is the way to behave to us women."

2. She then dwelt with him a long time, and was even with child of him, so long did she dwell with him. Then the Gandharvas said to one another: "For a long time, indeed, has this Uṛvasī dwelt among men: devise ye some means how she may come back to us." Now a ewe with two lambs was tied to her couch: the Gandharvas then carried off one of the lambs.

3. "Alas," she cried, "they are taking away my darling, as if I were where there is no hero and no man!" They carried off the second, and she spake in the selfsame manner.

4. He then thought within himself: "How can that be (a place) without a hero and without a man where I am?" And naked as he was he sprang up after them: too long he deemed it that he should put on his garment. Then the Gandharvas produced a flash of lightning and she beheld him naked even as by daylight. Then, indeed, she vanished. "Here I am back," he said, and lo! she had vanished. Wailing with sorrow he wandered all over Kurukṣetra. Now there is a lotus-lake there called Anyataḥplakṣā. He walked along its bank, and there nymphs were swimming about in the shape of swans.

5. And she (Uṛvasī), recognising him, said: "This is the man with whom I have dwelt." They then said: "Let us appear to him!" "So be it!" she replied, and they appeared to him.

6. He then recognised her and implored her (Ṛg-Veda, x, 95, 1): "Oh, my wife, stay thou, cruel in mind: let us now exchange words! Untold, these secrets of ours will not bring us joy in days to come."—"Stop, pray, let us speak together!"—this is what he meant to say to her.

7. She replied (Ṛg-Veda, x, 95, 2): "What concern have I with speaking to thee? I have passed away like the first of the dawns. Purūravas, go home again: I am like the wind, difficult to catch."—"Thou didst not do what I had told thee; hard to catch I am for thee, go to thy home again!"—this is what she meant to say.

8. He then said, sorrowing (Ṛg-Veda, x, 95, 14): "Then will thy friend rush away this day, never to come back, to go to the farthest distance: then will he lie in Nirṛti's lap, or the fierce wolves will devour him."—"Thy friend will either hang himself or start forth; or the wolves or dogs will devour him!”—this is what he meant to say.
APPENDIX I—URVĀŚĪ AND PURŪRĀVAS

9. She replied (Rig-Veda, x, 95, 15): “Purūravas, do not die! Do not rush away! Let not the cruel wolves devour thee! Truly, there is no friendship with women, and theirs are the hearts of hyenas.”—“Do not take this to heart! There is no friendship with women: return home!”—this is what she meant to say.

10. (Rig-Veda, x, 95, 16): “When changed in form I walked among mortals, and passed the nights there during four autumns. I ate a little ghee, once a day, and even now feel satisfied therewith.”—This discourse in fifteen verses has been handed down by the Bṛāvīcas. Then her heart took pity on him.

11. She said: “Come here the last night of the year from now: then shalt thou lie with me for one night, and then this son of thine will have been born.” He came there on the last night of the year, and lo! there stood a golden palace. They then said to him only this (word), “Enter!” and then they bade her go to him.

12. She then said: “To-morrow morning the Gandharvas will grant thee a boon, and thou must make thy choice.” He said: “Choose thou for me!” She replied: “Say, let me be one of yourselves!” In the morning the Gandharvas granted him a boon, and he said: “Let me be one of yourselves!”

13. They said: “Surely there is not among men that holy form of fire by sacrificing wherewith one would become one of ourselves.” They put fire into a pan and gave it to him, saying: “By sacrificing therewith thou shalt become one of ourselves.” He took it (the fire) and his boy and went on his way home. He then deposited the fire in the forest and went to the village with the boy alone. He came back and thought, “Here I am back,” and lo! it had disappeared: what had been the fire was an Aśvattha tree (Ficus religiosa), and what had been the pan was a Śāmī tree (Mimosa suma). He then returned to the Gandharvas.

14. They said: “Cook for a whole year a mess of rice sufficient for four persons; and taking each time three logs from this Aśvattha tree, anoint them with ghee, and put them on the fire with verses containing the words ‘log’ and ‘ghee’: the fire which shall result therefrom will be that very fire (which is required).”
15. They said: "But that is recondite (esoteric), as it were. Make thyself rather an upper arañi (fire-stick) of Aśvattha wood, and a lower arañi of Śamī wood: the fire which shall result therefrom will be that very fire."

16. They said: "But that also is, as it were, recondite. Make thyself rather an upper arañi of Aśvattha wood, and a lower arañi of Aśvattha wood: the fire which shall result therefrom will be that very fire."

17. He then made himself an upper arañi of Aśvattha wood, and a lower arañi of Aśvattha wood, and the fire which resulted therefrom was that very fire: by offering therewith he became one of the Gandharvas. Let him therefore make himself an upper and a lower arañi of Aśvattha wood, and the fire which results therefrom will be that very fire: by offering therewith he becomes one of the Gandharvas.

In the above version there are several points to be noticed:

1. A heavenly nymph loves a mortal man.
2. The nuptial taboo.
3. The inability to preserve it.
4. The swan-nymphs.
5. The aloofness of the nymph.
6. Sudden pity for the mortal.
7. The necessity for the mortal to become immortal.
8. The fire-sacrifice as a means of achieving this.

Looking at the legend as it stands, it appears to show how impossible it is for a mere man to aspire to a heavenly bride. His nature is such that he is incapable of abiding by the accustomed conditions of such a marriage, and in consequence misery is bound to result, unless by following the prescribed rules of sacrifice and esoteric ritual he can manage to rise to her level. Then, and only then, can he expect eternal happiness.

Before examining the tale in greater detail it will be advisable to see if the other versions give us further data to work upon. It occurs in the Mahābhārata and most of the Purāṇas. The best account, however, is probably that in the Viśnu Purāṇa. The following portions are taken from the translation by H. H. Wilson.

We are first given more details about our hero.

It has already been related how Buddha begot Purūravas by Ilā. Purūravas was a prince renowned for liberality, devotion, magnificence, and love of truth, and for personal beauty. Urvasi, having incurred the imprecation of Mitra and Varuna, determined to take up her abode in the world of mortals, and descending accordingly, beheld Pururavas.

Then follow the incidents of the taboo, the rams, lightning, and disappearance of Urvasi. The heart-broken Pururavas wandered naked over the world like one insane.

At length coming to Kurukshetra, he saw Urvasi sporting with four other nymphs of heaven in a lake beautiful with lotuses, and he ran to her and called her his wife, and wildly implored her to return. "Mighty monarch," said the nymph, "refrain from this extravagance. I am now pregnant: depart at present, and come hither again at the end of a year, when I will deliver to you a son, and remain with you for one night." Pururavas, thus comforted, returned to his capital. Urvasi said to her companions: "The prince is a most excellent mortal: I lived with him long and affectionately united." "It was well done of you," they replied; "he is indeed of comely appearance, and one with whom we could live happily for ever." When the year had expired Urvasi and the monarch met at Kurukshetra, and she consigned to him his first-born, Ayus; and these annual interviews were repeated until she had borne to him five sons. She then said to Pururavas: "Through regard for me all the Gandharvas have expressed their joint purpose to bestow upon my lord their benediction; let him, therefore, demand a boon." The Raja replied: "My enemies are all destroyed, my faculties are all entire; I have friends and kindred, armies and treasures: there is nothing which I may not obtain except living in the same region with my Urvasi. My only desire, therefore, is to pass my life with her." When he had thus spoken, the Gandharvas brought to Pururavas a vessel with fire and said to him: "Take this fire and, according to the precepts of the Vedas, divide it into three fires; then fixing your mind upon the idea of living with Urvasi, offer oblations, and you shall assuredly obtain your wishes."

The Raja took the brazier and departed, and came to a forest. Then he began to reflect that he had committed a great folly in bringing away the vessel of fire instead of his bride; and leaving the vessel in the wood he went disconsolate to his palace. In the middle of the night he awoke, and considered that the Gandharvas had given him the brazier to enable him to obtain the felicity of living with Urvāṣī, and that it was absurd in him to have left it by the way. Resolving, therefore, to recover it, he rose and went to the place where he had deposited the vessel; but it was gone. In its stead he saw a young Aśvattha tree growing out of a Śamī plant, and he reasoned with himself, and said: "I left in this spot a vessel of fire, and now behold a young Aśvattha tree growing out of a Śamī plant. Verily I will take these types of fire to my capital, and there, having engendered fire by their attrition, I will worship it." Having thus determined, he took the plants to his city, and prepared their wood for attrition, with pieces of as many inches long as there are syllables in the Gayatṛī: he recited that holy verse and rubbed together sticks of as many inches as he recited syllables in the Gayatṛī. Having thus elicited fire, he made it threefold, according to the injunctions of the Vedas, and offered oblations with it, proposing as the end of the ceremony reunion with Urvāṣī.

In this way, celebrating many sacrifices agreeably to the form in which offerings are presented with fire, Pururavas obtained a seat in the sphere of the Gandharvas, and was no more separated from his beloved. Thus fire, that was at first but one, was made threefold in the present Manwantara by the son of Ilā.

In this version the most important difference is the more detailed account of the fire-ritual. Here we at once see an unmistakable symbolism, and perhaps a lesson to show the importance of sacrifice when carried out in strict accordance with the teachings of the Vedas. We have now become acquainted with the legend in its fullest form and need not look at the numerous other versions, all of which are based on the above.

I would, however, refer again to the original dialogue in Hymn xc of the Rig-Veda. As we have already seen, verses 1, 2, 14, 15 and 16 recur in the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa. There are thirteen other verses, which describe the pleading of Pururavas on once again finding his beloved. He recalls the trick by which the Gandharvas made him break his promise, and the disadvantages he had, being only a mortal. Urvāṣī is unmoved. Then he thinks of their son—what will he think when he sees no father, when he hears he has been deserted? Urvāṣī replies 1:

1 R. T. H. Griffith, vol. iv, Benares, 1892, p. 304 et seq.
“I will console him when his tears are falling: he Shall not weep and cry for care that blesses.
    That which is thine between us will I send thee.
    Go home again, thou fool; thou hast not won me.”

Purūravas in his misery determines to destroy himself
(as in the other versions), and finally Urvasī speaks thus:

“Thus speak these gods to thee, O son of Ilā: as Death has verily got thee for his subject,
    Thy sons shall serve the gods with their oblation,
    And thou, moreover, shalt rejoice in Svarga.”

Thus the obdurate nymph shows no signs of yielding to her broken-hearted lover. She merely consoles him by telling him that the gods have promised that, after his death, his sons shall offer them sacrifices, and Purūravas himself shall attain the abode of the blessed.

I feel that this sad ending, this unsatisfied love, would in time lose any significance it may once have had, and as the tale found its way into newer works a happier and more conventional ending would be substituted.

As is usual in nearly every legend, scholars have endeavoured to interpret the story of Purūravas and Urvasī as a nature-myth. Max Müller tried to do this by his usual method of comparative philology. The principle he worked upon was, that in order to arrive at the original meaning of a myth all you have to do is to trace to their source the original meanings of the names of the gods or goddesses mentioned. In most cases these names will be found to denote elemental phenomena, and will have some natural significance, such as an earthquake, the sunset, a storm, the sky, and so on.

Applying this principle to the tale under discussion, he would derive Urvasī from uru, “wide,” and a root as, “to pervade,” thus meaning “that which occupies the wide spaces of the sky”—i.e. “the dawn.” Purūravas he identifies with the Greek πολυφειός, “endowed with much light,” deriving the Sanskrit word from the root ru, “to cry,” and applied to a loud or crying colour—i.e. red. Thus the name really means the sun. So the story simply expresses the sun chasing the dawn. “Thus,” says Müller,

1 Max Müller, Oxford Essays, 1856, p. 61 et seq. (reprinted in Chips from
"’Urvasī loves Purūravas’ meant ‘the sun rises’; ’Urvasī sees Purūravas naked’ meant ‘the dawn is gone’; ’Urvasī finds Purūravas again’ meant ‘the sun is setting.’"

This system of tracing the origin of myths through etymology has proved almost entirely unsuccessful. The reasons for this are numerous. Among others may be mentioned the fact that myths very similar indeed to those found among Aryan peoples have also been discovered among Australians, South Sea Islanders, Eskimos, etc. Then again, the meaning of a god’s name need have nothing whatever to do with the myth in which it occurs, for the simple reason that nothing was more usual than to attach the name of a popular god to some old myth, the real origin of which had long been forgotten. Names like Gilgamesh, Buddha, Alexander, Solomon, David and a hundred others continually drew to them stories long ante-dating (or post-dating) them, which really had nothing to do with them at all. If there were no miracles connected with a popular hero or saint, some had to be found—and were found. Then again, proper names of mortals were often derived from natural phenomena, and a story told about “Sun” and “Moon,” two members of, say, some Brazilian tribe, would in later years be told of “the sun” and “the moon.”

But apart from all this, philologists differ widely as to the true etymology of words, especially names of deities. Nothing can be proved definitely, and the whole system is one that the mythologist of to-day “turns down.”

The beginning of the story is simple enough. The heavenly nymph falls in love with a mortal who returns her love to the very utmost. Although warned that he must abide by certain conditions, he is willing to risk everything. He is told that the conditions are merely in accordance with the usual custom. Whether she means the custom among Apsarases or Aryan womanhood as a whole we are not told. Anyhow, we have here the earliest example of a nuptial taboo, which in after years appeared in a Greek Märchen, known to us through the Latin of Apuleius—the famous Cupid and Psyche myth.

---

This is not the place to go into any details on the subject of taboo, which has been so ably discussed by Frazer (see the volume of The Golden Bough (iii) entitled “Taboo and the Perils of the Soul”). I would, however, draw attention to J. A. Macculloch’s Childhood of Fiction, pp. 324 et seq., where will be found many interesting variants to our story in the folk-lore of both civilised and semi-civilised peoples.

Although not usually mentioned, there is a story closely resembling “Cupid and Psyche” in the Pentamerone, second day, ninth diversion (Burton, vol. i, p. 211 et seq.), entitled “The Padlock.”

It seems very probable that all these taboos in legend had their origin in taboos in real life, many examples of which have been noted (Macculloch, op. cit., p. 335).

In all these taboo stories the taboo seems to be made to be broken; perhaps it is intended to teach some lesson or explain some principle. It may show the weakness of human nature, the evil results of lack of determination or the necessity for unremitting care and forethought—any or all of which ideas would perfectly well serve as an incentive to a more protracted study and careful observance of the Vedas.

Frazer’s theory as to the origin of tales like “Urvasī and Purūravas” and “Cupid and Psyche” is interesting. He considers that they represent a stage of decay in a cycle of stories which originally were totemic. He argues thus: “Now, wherever the totemic-clans have become exogamous, that is, wherever a man is always obliged to marry a woman of a totem different from his own, it is obvious that husband and wife will always have to observe different totemic taboos, and that a want of respect shown by one of them for the sacred animal or plant of the other would tend to domestic jars, which might often lead to the permanent separation of the spouses, the offended wife or husband returning to her or his native clan of the fish-people, the bird-people or what not. That, I take it, was the origin of the sad story of the man or woman happily mated with a transformed animal and then parted for ever. Such tales, if I am right, were not wholly fictitious. Totemism may have broken many loving hearts. But when that ancient system of society had fallen into disuse, and the ideas on which it was based had ceased to be understood, the quaint stories of mixed marriages to which it had given birth would not be at once forgotten. They would continue to be told, no longer, indeed, as myths explanatory of custom, but merely as fairy tales for the amusement of the listeners. The barbarous features of the old legends, which now appeared too monstrously incredible even for story-tellers, would be gradually discarded and replaced by others which fitted in better with the changed beliefs of the time. Thus in particular the animal husband or animal wife of the story might drop the character of a beast to assume that of a fairy."

---

1 The Golden Bough, vol. iv, “The Dying God,” pp. 130, 131. I would especially draw attention to the fine collection of references given in the notes on these two pages. See also P. Saintyves, Les Contes de Perrault, p. 416 et seq.

Personally I am not in the least convinced by this theory, which, although ingenious, seems entirely devoid of any sort of proof, and is, moreover, one of those delightful theories that can have no proof. The idea of an animal husband or wife would not tax the imagination of a story-teller very far, and, moreover, nothing has yet been thought of too wild for the boundless imagination of the Hindus, whose pantheon is so full of animal incarnations.

Referring to the tale under discussion, Frazer states in conclusion that "we can still detect hints that the fairy wife was once a bird-woman," and in the note below says that a clear trace of the bird nature of Urvāśī occurs in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa. Here again I would cry "not proven." As already mentioned (Vol. I, p. 201), Apsarases were originally water-nymphs, those who "moved about in the water." In verse 10 of the version in the Rig-Veda Purūravas says in speaking of Urvāśī:

"She who flashed brilliant as the falling lightning Brought me delicious presents from the waters."

This is merely describing Urvāśī's home: "from the waters (of the firmament)." Her nature was that of a beautiful bird moving serenely through the waters, and when we find her in her celestial home in the guise of a swan I see no reason to take this to be an early example of either the "Beauty and the Beast" or the famous "swan-maiden" cycle of stories. Furthermore, the one important feature of this latter cycle is the discovery of the disguise on the part of the man and his immediate efforts to keep her in her human shape.
APPENDIX I—URVAŚI AND PURURAVAS 255

Then comes the aloofness of Urvaśī after her reunion with Purūravas. In the earliest version she maintains this attitude to the end. In other versions she softens, and all ends happily. This makes a prettier story, and perhaps that explains a lot. Anyhow in no version is the lesson, which is intended to be conveyed, lost sight of. A mortal love and marriage is all very nice and proper, but it is only temporary. There is a far greater goal to be obtained—that of immortality—and until the mere mortal has realised the necessity to strive after something higher and finer he cannot hope to enjoy the lasting fruits of a passionate love.

We now come to the incident about the sacrificial fire. It does not occur in Hymn xcv of the Rig-Veda, but in Hymn xxix there is a full account of the process of fire-making by means of the fire-drill (arani), and the analogy between the process and the intercourse of the sexes is realised. It seems rather as if the fire-incident was connected with the story of Urvaśī at a later date, and merely introduced to show the importance of sacrificial fires as initiatory rites to the final attainment of immortality. In the version found in the Satapathā Brāhmaṇa Purūravas is given holy fire by sacrificing with which he can obtain his wish—to become a Gandharva. He leaves the fire in the forest and on his return finds the fire and the pan turned into two trees, one an Aśvattha (i.e. Ficus religiosa—the modern pipal, aswat, jari, basri, bo, etc.), and the other a Samī tree (i.e. Mimosa suma—the name of the leaves is Prosopis spicigera). He thereupon returns to the Gandharvas for further instructions. After mentioning various rites and methods of making fire from the two trees, they finally tell him that if both sticks for the fire-drill are made out of the Aśvattha tree the resulting fire will be “that very fire.”

In the Vishnu Purāṇa details are more fully described, as already seen. Purūravas realised that the fire had been given him “to enable him to retain the felicity of living with Urvaśī.” On returning to the place where he left the fire he finds a young Aśvattha tree growing out of a Samī plant. He immediately takes wood from each tree, which he makes into the upper and lower parts of a fire-drill—taking care to cut them in accordance with a specially prescribed ritual. As he works the fire-drill he fixes his mind on reunion with his beloved, thus employing a kind of sexual sympathetic magic. Finally stress is laid on the importance of celebrating sacrifices in the form in which offerings are prescribed with fire. Purūravas carries out the necessary instructions of the Gandharvas and regains Urvaśī.

1 Rig-Veda, iii, 29. See Griffith’s translation, vol. ii, pp. 25-27, which begins: “Here is gear for friction, here tinder made ready for the spark. Bring thou the matron [lower stick], we will rub Agni in ancient fashion forth.”

Thus (the version ends) fire that was at first but one was made threefold. The three kinds of fire referred to are: vaḍavāgni, which is submarine, causes the waves, and keeps the level of the ocean uniform by consuming so much water—the inpouring rivers making the deficit; laukikāgni, the domestic fire; and urīka, the fire in one’s own body which can be heard on putting the fingers in one’s ears.¹

It is possible that the fire resulting from the friction of the two sticks symbolised the child, for in a very large number of primitive tribes in all parts of the world the vertical stick is known by a name signifying “male,” while the horizontal stick is called “female,” and in some cases (as among the Thompson Indians of British Columbia) as soon as the spark falls on the tinder of dried leaves or grass they exclaim: “The woman has given birth!”

The whole subject of the fire-drill has been fully discussed by Frazer,² while reference should also be made to Crooke and Thurston.³

It is curious that Frazer (p. 209) states that the sticks are not taken from the same tree, but that one must be hard and the other soft. Certainly this seems reasonable, but he must have overlooked the statements in the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa and also the numerous examples quoted by Thurston, where both sticks are made from the same tree.

¹ For full details of the Agnyādhāna, or “Establishment of the Sacred Fires,” see Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, part i, second kāṇḍa, p. 274 et seq.
² The Golden Bough, vol. ii, ch. xv, “The Fire Drill” (pp. 206-226), and ch. xvi, “Father Jove and Mother Vesta” (pp. 227-252). See also the General Index under “Friction.”
⁴ Ethnographic Notes in Southern India, pp. 464-470; and Castes and Tribes of Southern India, vol. i, p. 99, where it is interesting to note that although the Badagas make fire by friction, reference is made in their folk-legends not to this mode of obtaining fire, but to chakkamukki (flint and steel). Commenting upon this, T. C. Hodson (Primitive Culture of India, Roy. As. Soc. Forlong Fund, vol. i, p. 36) suggests that possibly the flint and steel had superseded the use of the fire-drill, except in the solemnity of funeral rites.
APPENDIX I—URVASI AND PURURAVAS

In order to appreciate the extent to which the sacred fire entered into Hindu ritual as time went on we have only to glance at the daily offering to the fire made by the modern Brāhman, known as homa. It is made twice daily, once in the morning before breakfast and again at night before dinner. It consists of ghee, curds, and rice or grain.\(^1\) Homa is also performed at the investiture of the Sacred Thread, at hair-cutting, marriages, śrāddha, etc.

After his wedding a Brāhman can either be an ordinary householder or an agnihotri—i.e. fire-priest—and observe the full forty-eight rites (instead of the ordinary sixteen). The fire used at any important ceremony such as a wedding should be kindled by friction and the fire in the domestic hearth lit by it. Full details of the agnihotri have been given by Crooke.\(^2\)

Thus, I think, we can regard the fire-incident of the story of Purūravas and Urvāsi as showing the great symbolical significance of fire-sacrifice as a means of attaining Svarga, the abode of the blessed, and ensuring a final state of immortality.

Before closing this appendix I would refer again to Kālidāsa’s dramatic version of the legend. It is known as Vikramorvaśī, or “Urvasi won by Valour,” and is a play in five acts. The plot differs considerably from the original story and is briefly as follows:

King Purūravas, in answer to the cries of some nymphs, rescues one of their companions, Urvāsi, from the clutches of a demon, pursuing him in his heavenly car. The two fall in love with one another. Urvāsi is called to the Court of Indra, but sees the king in his garden later on. Complications arise as Purūravas is already married and the queen becomes jealous.

Urvāsi has to act at Indra’s court and when asked in the play whom she loves says “Purūravas” in mistake for Puruśottama (Vishṇu). This enrages her teacher Bharata, who curses her, saying that as she had forgotten her part so she would be forgotten in heaven. However Indra takes pity

\(^1\) For a full description of the offerings see Stevenson, Rites of the Twice-born, p. 226-227.
\(^2\) Tribes and Castes of the North-West Provinces and Oudh, under “Agnihotri.” See also Frazer, op. cit., pp. 247-250.
on her and says she can be united to Purūravas until he sees the son which she will bear him. The lovers wander together on the Himālayas, when Urvāṣī, seeing Purūravas' attention attracted for a moment by a nymph, enters in her anger the groves of Kārtilkeya, forbidden to females. The curse of Bharata begins to take effect and she is immediately changed into a creeper. The king in his frenzied misery at her loss becomes insane, and wanders through the forest inquiring for his beloved of every tree, stream, mountain, or animal he meets.

Everywhere he imagines he sees traces of his lost one—the flowers heavy with dew are her eyes glistening with starting tears, the rippling water is her frown, the meandering current her undulating gait. Wilson's translation gives a very good idea of the original.

Purūravas inquires of a swan:

"Ho! Monarch of the tribes that breast the stream,
Forbear awhile your course: forgo the provender
Of lotus stems, not needed yet, and hear
My suit—redeem me from despair—impair
Some tidings of my love—'tis worthier far
To render kindly offices to others
Than meanly labour for a selfish good—
He heeds me not, but still on Mānasa
Intent, collects his store—and now I note him
More closely, I suspect some mystery.
Why seek to veil the truth?—if my beloved
Was never seen by thee as graceful straying
Along the flowery borders of the lake,
Then whence this elegant gait—'Tis hers—and thou Hast stolen it from her—in whose every step
Love sports—thy walk betrays thee; own thy crime,
And lead me quickly to her. (Laugh.) Nay, he fears
Our Royal power—the plunderer flies the king."

Later he sees a lotus with a bee amid its petals and exclaims:

"Say, plunderer of the honeyed dew, hast thou
Beheld the nymph whose large and languid eye
Voluptuous rolls as if it swam with wine?
And yet methinks 'tis idle to inquire,
For had he tasted her delicious breath
He now would scorn the lotus. I will hence."
APPENDIX I—URVĀŚI AND PURŪRAVAS 259

After many inquiries for Urvaśī he finds a gem, which proves to be the jewel of restoration. Suddenly he sees a vine:

“What means this strange emotion?—as I gaze
Upon this vine—no blossoms deck its boughs;
Nipped by the falling rains, like briny tears,
The buds have perished, and the mournful shrub
All unadorned appears to pine in absence—
No bees regale her with their songs—silent
And sad, she, lonely, shows the image
Of my repentant love, who now laments
Her causeless indignation—I will press
The melancholy likeness to my heart—
Vine of the wilderness, behold
A lone, heart-broken wretch in me,
Who dreams in his embrace to fold
His love, as wild he clings to thee.
And might relenting fate restore
To these fond arms the nymph I mourn,
I’d bear her hence, and never more
To these forbidden haunts return.”

Gradually the creeper is transformed into Urvaśī and Purūravas finds he is in the arms of his beloved:

“What can this mean?—through every fibre spreads
The conscious touch of Urvaśī—yet all
I deemed her charms deceived me—let me wake
And realise the vision or dispel it.
’Tis no deceit—’tis she—my best beloved.” (Faints.)

The pair are happily united, but Urvaśī remembers the curse. Years pass and by accident Purūravas meets Ayus, his son, and in consequence Urvaśī must return to heaven. Once again Indra saves the situation and all ends happily.
APPENDIX II
APPENDIX II

UMBRELLAS

Owing to the great antiquity and significance of the umbrella, and to the fact that there appears to be no recent comprehensive work on the subject, I shall give here a few notes on its history and Western migration.

In the first place the etymology of the word is interesting. Our English word umbrella is, of course, a misnomer, for being derived from the Italian diminutive ombrell (Latin umbra) it means "little shade," and has no reference whatever to rain. It is curious that we do not use a correct self-explanatory word, like the French parapluie, the German Regenschirm, and the Spanish paraguas, etc.

Turning to classical references we find the word umbraculum, meaning "a sunshade," used by Ovid (Fasti, ii, 311; Ars Amat., ii, 209-210); Martial (xiv, 28); Tibullus (ii, 5, 97); and Ammianus Marcellinus (xxviii, 4); while the word umbella occurs in the same sense in Martial (xi, 78-76) and Juvenal (ix, 50). The Greek equivalent ἑλενοφισ ὑσκία dep occurs in Arrian (Indica, xvi), where he states that the umbrella is used by all Indians of consideration; and Athenæus (ii, 31). It is also found represented on numerous ancient Greek vase-paintings. The word parasol appears to be of much later origin. It is mentioned in the Petrarchian vocabulary (fourteenth century) as the equivalent of saioval (from the Persian sāyāban or sāīwān), "an umbrella"). The word is now only used to denote the fragile and elegant variety of sunshade used by ladies.

It is impossible to say with any certainty where the umbrella originated, but evidence seems to point to the Mesopotamian region as its home. It was the emblem of royalty in both Babylon and Assyria, as can be seen from the marvellous reliefs in the British Museum, excavated by Sir Henry Layard. The Nimrūd Gallery contains sculptures from Calah, and some of the reliefs show Assur-nasir-pal in his chariot or on his throne with the royal umbrella held over him. Similar reliefs will be found in the Nineveh Gallery.

263
The ancient Egyptian kings used the umbrella in exactly the same manner as the Assyrians. It appears from a Theban painting reproduced in Wilkinson’s Manners and Customs of the Ancient Egyptians (vol. i, 1878, p. 235) that the honour also extended to members of the royal family. In this particular case it is an Ethiopian princess, and the umbrella, composed of lotus leaves, is fixed into the chariot on the left-hand side.

The use of the umbrella as a symbol of power and sovereignty appears to have existed in all parts of Asia from a very early date. In the Far East the centre of the practice was undoubtedly China, and bas-reliefs dating back to the eleventh century B.C. have been found depicting its use. In Dr Bushell’s Chinese Art, vol. i, 1905 (H.M. Stationery Office), Figs. 1 and 5 show such bas-reliefs of the Han Dynasty. The latter represents an umbrella being held over the head of King Ch'êng of the Chou Dynasty (see op. cit., p. 18). Elaborate examples, such as those in the bas-reliefs, were used only by the sovereign and those to whom the honour was specially granted. The usual variety was made of varnished paper on split bamboo. Large quantities of these were, and still are, exported to Singapore, whence they find their way through Java, Sumatra and Malaya to the coastal towns of Burma.

It is, however, chiefly to Burma, where the etiquette has remained unchanged, that we look for the full significance of the umbrella. As in ancient India, so also in Burma the colour of the royal umbrella (tîbyû) was white. It was about twelve or fifteen feet high, with a diameter of nearly six feet. It was carried only over the king, and possibly his chief wife. It formed, moreover, one of the five articles of regalia, the others being the crown (mâkô), sceptre (thanlyet), sandal (chenin) and chowrie (thâmâyî yat). The umbrellas have distinctive names attached to them, such as “the trembling,” “moon,” “golden,” “sun,” “lotus,” “uplifted” and so forth. When Superintendent at Port Blair, Sir Richard Temple managed to get drawings and carvings made of the complete regalia of the Burmese kings.¹ Nine white umbrellas mark the king, while the heir-apparent has eight golden ones, and a lesser number are allotted to other members of the royal family, the tributary chiefs and other high officials. If a king abdicated, he forfeited the right of the regalia. An exception to this rule, however, occurred in the case of King Kunzaw of the eleventh century, who abdicated on religious grounds. He was allowed to continue the use of the royal symbol, and also of the title Tìbyuzaung ("weaver of the white umbrella"), which is attached to all Burmese kings. The lesser officials have red umbrellas, though in some cases leave was given to cover the outside with coloured silks or satins, usually pink or green. Fringes were considered an additional honour. The inside was nearly always black.

¹ See Ind. Ant.., vol. xxxi, Nov. 1902, pp. 442-444.

The common umbrellas in general use were made of native parchment-like paper glued to spokes of split bamboo and coated with black varnish. Priests were allowed a yellow varnish, giving a diaphanous appearance.

A favourite trick of King Noug daung Gyee was to continually issue new edicts as to the length of umbrella handles allowed, with the result that district officials made small fortunes by fines.

As can be expected, the umbrella had also a religious significance, and we find images of Gautama crowned with this symbol of sovereignty. In Buddhist architecture the "Wheel of Light," symbolising the Buddha, is overshadowed by an umbrella, and every Burmese pagoda is surmounted by a htee, htï or ti, which are really metal (and occasionally stone) umbrellas with bells and other decorations attached. The significance of the ti is shown by an incident connected with the history of the famous Shwé Dagōn pagoda at Rangoon. When, in 1768, it reached its present height of 321 feet from the platform, it was crowned with a ti by the Môn kings of Pegu. This was destroyed by an earthquake in 1768, and five years later King Sinbyushin replaced it by one of true Burmese shape, and the event symbolised the complete Burmanising of the Môn country.

1 See R. Grant Brown, "The Pre-Buddhist Religion of the Burmese," Folk-Lore, June 1921, vol. xxxii, pp. 77-100. In his address to the Governor-General of India in 1855, the King of Burma styled himself "the monarch who reigns over the great umbrella-wearing chiefs of the Eastern countries.

and celebrated the recent successes against Siam, China and Manipur.¹

Passing to India we find similar evidence of the great importance attached to the umbrella. It appears in ancient rock sculptures and enters into Hindu iconography. In the Bharhut tope there is a carving of a casket containing relics guarded by a seven-headed Nāga, and over it is an umbrella of state. At Sānchi we find sculptured representations of two and even three such symbols placed one above the other over temples, the double and triple canopies of which appear to be fixed to the same handle or staff, as in the modern state umbrellas of China and Burma. Thus we have a primary idea of the accumulated honour of stone or metal discs which subsequently became such a prominent feature of Buddhist architecture, culminating in the many-storied pagodas of China and Japan.²

It will be remembered that in our text in the Ocean of Story (p. 49) the colour of the umbrella is given as white, while on p. 55 it is described as “gleaming white like snow.” In this connection it is of interest to quote a paragraph from Yule, Marco Polo, vol. i, p. 355: “An Indian prince, in a Sanskrit inscription of the ninth century, boasts of having wrested from the King of Mārwār the two umbrellas pleasing to Pārvatī, and white as the summer moonbeams. Prithi Rāj, the last Hindu king of Delhi, is depicted by the poet Chand as shaded by a white umbrella on a golden staff.” This was also the colour in the Jātakas. In the Rās Mālā, however, Forbes ³ describes an image of Wun Rāj (Varanāja) in which the king is covered by a scarlet umbrella.

The question naturally arises as to why the umbrella had such a universal importance throughout the East. Several suggestions have been put forward, some of which seem quite feasible. In the first place it was thought to symbolise the firmament owing to its shape, and in support of this view Russell (op. cit., pp. 450-451) states that ⁴ when one of the early Indian monarchs made extensive conquests, the annexed territories were described as being brought under his umbrella; of the King Harsha-Vardhana (A.D. 606-648) it is recorded that he prosecuted a methodical scheme of conquest with the deliberate object of bringing all India under one umbrella—that is, of constituting it into one state. This phrase seems to support the idea that the umbrella symbolised the firmament. Similarly, when Viśvāmitra sent beautiful maidens to tempt the good King Harischandra, he instructed them to try and induce the king to marry them, and if he would not do this, to ask him for the Puchukra Undi or State Umbrella, which was the emblem of the king’s protecting power over his kingdom, with the idea that that power would be destroyed by its loss. Chhatrapati or Lord of the Umbrella was the proudest title of an Indian king. When Sivaji was enthroned in 1674 he proclaimed himself as Pinnacle of the Kshatriya race and Lord of the Royal Umbrella. All these instances seem to indicate that some powerful significance, such as that already suggested, attached to the umbrella. Several tribes, as the Gonds and Mundas, have a legend that their earliest king was born of poor parents, and that one day his mother, having left the child under some tree while she went to her work, returned to find a cobra spreading its hood over him. The future royal destiny of the boy was thus predicted.”

¹ See Nisbet, op. cit., vol. ii, p. 385. The subsequent history of the ti is to be found in Captain C. J. F. S. Forbes’ British Burma and its People, 1878, pp. 200-201.
³ See the 1924 edition, with notes by H. J. Rawlinson. The umbrella is shown in vol. i, p. 40. See also note on p. 440.
APPENDIX II—UMBRELLAS

Another suggestion as to the original significance of the umbrella is that it was used to protect the eyes of the sovereign from the people—his glance being considered magical and harmful. This, however, seems more unlikely than the opposite—namely, that the sacred person of his Majesty should be protected from the common gaze of the populace; but both ideas lose their value when we remember the use of the symbol on temples and the fact that the umbrella is always represented as held vertically over the king’s head, thus protecting it from the powerful rays of a tropical sun. It seems, however, quite possible that, apart from the actual harm it might do, the sun should never be allowed to shine direct on the sacred person of the king. This idea is strengthened by the fact that at the most important period of a Brähman’s life he had to keep the sun from shining on his head. Thus we read in the Grihya Sūtras ¹ that on the day when a Brähman student of the Veda took a bath to signify that the time of his studentship was at an end, he entered a cow-shed before sunrise, hung over the door a skin with the hair outside, and sat there: on that day the sun should not shine upon him. Frazer\(^1\) includes this under the various taboos of sacred persons in the section “Not to see the Sun,” and gives numerous examples where the sovereign (as in the case of the Mikado) was so sacred that the sun was not worthy to shine upon him.

The migration of the umbrella from East to West was slow and gradual. This is not to be wondered at when we remember the great size of the state umbrella, and the fact that as yet the folding variety was unknown. The costliness of such articles would also be a great disadvantage, besides being very hard to obtain. Mediæval accounts given by travellers are not very numerous. Marco Polo, in describing the Court of Kūblāi Kaan in 1292 says\(^2\) that generals who have command of 100,000 men are awarded a tablet of gold according to their rank, etc., and that everyone, moreover, who holds a tablet of this exalted degree is entitled, whenever he goes abroad, to have a little yellow canopy, such as is called an umbrella (palieque in Pauthier, unum pallium in the Latin text), carried on a spear over his head in token of his high command.

In Europe the umbrella was not unknown at this time and Martino da Canale, a contemporary of Polo, states that in Venice “when the Doge goes forth of his palace, ‘si vait après lui un damoiseau qui porte une umbrelle de dras à or sur son chief,’ which umbrella had been given by ‘Monseigneur l’Apostoille.’ There is a picture by Girolamo Gambarota, in the Sala del Gran Consiglio, at Venice, which represents the investiture of the Doge with the umbrella by Pope Alexander III, and Frederick Barbarossa (concerning which see Sanuto Junior, in Muratori, xxii, 512”).\(^3\) Ibn Baṭūṭa (ii, 440) tells us that in his time (c. 1332) parasols were in general use at Constantinople. It was also in the fourteenth century that the folding umbrella was first noticed. It is described by Marignolli as “a thing like a little tent-roof on a cane handle, which they open out at will as a protection against sun or rain. This they call a chatyr; I brought one to Florence with me.”\(^4\)

\(^1\) Golden Bough, vol. x, pp. 18-21.
\(^2\) Yule, Marco Polo, vol. i, p. 351.
\(^3\) Idem, ibid., p. 354.
\(^4\) See Yule and Cordier, Cathay and the Way Thither, vol. iii, p. 256.
The next mention of a similar variety appears to be that given by Duarte Barbosa. They are described as “made of finely worked silk with many golden tassels, and many precious stones and seed pearls.” In an interesting note Dames states that the next mention of umbrellas which open and shut is probably that in a passage in the Decadas of João de Barros (III, x, 9, f, 264, ed. of 1563). It speaks of events which occurred at Cananor in 1526. The first part of the passage is quoted in Hobson Jobson (ed. 1903, p. 851), but the description itself is omitted. It is as follows:—

“All this is mounted on a staff as an awning, as we have said, and the canes play up and down, shutting and opening to close it or spread it out. And when they would put up the great crown which gives the shade, they insert into that staff (piam) a very light wooden shaft (aste) about fifteen palms in length, and then they run it by means of a socket (noete) working on the wooden staff, in order that it may be fully spread out when it arrives at the top of the staff. There they put a cross-piece of wood through the shaft, in which there is a hole, so that it remains fixed and does not fall down.”

Although umbrellas were used by the Anglo-Saxons, as is shown in the Harleian MS. (603 in the British Museum), they do not reappear in England till the seventeenth century, and even then remained practically unknown until early in the following century, when it became the practice for coffee-houses to keep large umbrellas for use of their patrons in very much the same way as they are used to-day by commisionaires of clubs and hotels. The custom, however, could not have been very familiar, for in 1752 Colonel Wolfe noticed their use in Paris and wondered why they had not been introduced into England.

Jonas Hanway (1712-1786) is stated to be the first man to habitually carry an umbrella. It is interesting to note that the Anglo-Indian term used for an umbrella in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries was “roundel,” a word of eyearly English origin applied to a variety of circular objects, as a mat under a dish, a target, shield, etc. The form

1 The Book of Duarte Barbosa, trans. by M. Longworth Dames, Hakluyt
2 See Fig. 23 in Mrs Ashdown’s British Costume, 1910.
3 The Tatler, No. 238, 17th October 1710.
4 See Yule, Hobson Jobson, under “Roundel,” also “Umbrella,” “Kittysol,” “Sombrero”; R. C. Temple, Ind. Ant., December 1904, p. 316; and Murray’s
New English Dictionary under “Roundel.”
"arundel" is also found. The fact that the Anglo-Indians called the umbrella a roundel and regarded it as a symbol of sovereignty or nobility indicated that it was as yet little known in England. W. W. Skeat¹ points out that "some kind of umbrella was, however, occasionally used by ladies at least as far back as 1709; and a fact not generally known is that from about the year 1717 onwards a 'parish' umbrella, resembling the more recent 'family' umbrella of the nineteenth century, was employed by the priest at open-air funerals, as the church accounts of many places testify."

Murray's New English Dictionary gives a long and interesting list of quotations under "Umbrella," the earliest being as follows:

"1611. 'Many of them doe carry other fine things . . . which they commonly call in the Italian tongue 'umbrellaes.' . . . These are made of leather something answerable to the form of a little caunopy and hooped in the inside with divers little wooden hoopes that extend the umbrella in a pretty large compass.'—CORYATE, Crudities, iii."

Among others may be mentioned two references from the writings of Swift:

"1704. 'A large skin of Parchment . . . served him for a Night-cap when he went to bed, and for an Umbrello in rainy Weather.'—Tale of a Tub, ix."

"c. 1712. 'The tuck'd up semstress walks with hasty strides While streams run down her oil'd umbrella's sides.'—A City Shower."

Finally the following lines from Gay's Trivia, Bk. I, give quite a good idea of the history of the umbrella:

"1716. 'Good housewives all the winter's rage despise,
Defended by the riding hood's disguise;
Or underneath the umbrella's oily shade
Safe through the wet on clinking pattens tread.

Let Persian dames the umbrella's ribs display
To guard their beauties from the sunny ray;"

¹ The Past at our Doors, 1911, pp. 97, 98.
APPENDIX II—UMBRELLAS

Or sweating slaves support the shady load
When Eastern monarchs show their state abroad;
Britain in winter only knows its aid
To guard from chilly showers the walking maid.’”

Very few early examples of English umbrellas appear to have been preserved, and the earliest specimens in the Victoria and Albert Museum date only from the first half of the nineteenth century. They belong to the class which have whalebone ribs, thick wooden sticks and large oiled silk covers. In time gingham (a kind of cotton cloth first made in Guingamp in Brittany, the yarn of which is dyed before it is woven) was substituted, and in 1848 William Sangster patented the use of alpaca as an umbrella covering.

The chief invention, however, was the “Paragon” rib, patented by Samuel Fox in 1852. It is formed of a thin strip of steel rolled into a trough section, thus combining lightness, strength and elasticity.

Huge umbrellas have always been in demand in native courts in all parts of Africa, and many are made in England for this purpose. Brewer (Dictionary of Phrase and Fable—“Umbrella”) quotes a paragraph from The Graphic of 18th March 1894, p. 270: “An umbrella is now being made in London for an African potentate which, when unfurled, will cover a space sufficient for twelve persons. The stick is . . . fifteen feet long.”

In 1874 the sacred umbrella of King Koffee Kalcalli of the Ashantees was captured and found its way to the South Kensington Museum. Many similar ones were to be seen at the Empire Exhibition, Wembley, in 1924.

In his famous Pilgrimage to El Medina and Mecca, three vols., 1855-1856 (vol. iii, pp. 140-141) Burton describes the Sherif of Mecca as being “plainly dressed in white garments and a white muslin turban . . . and the only emblem of his dignity was the large green satin umbrella borne by an attendant on foot.” And in a note he adds: “From India to Abyssinia the umbrella is the sign of royalty: the Arabs of Mecca and Senaa probably derived the custom from the Hindus.”

When visiting the Emir of Abyssinia at Harar, Burton

1 The New English Dictionary derives the word from the Malay ging-gang, meaning “striped.”
2 First Footsteps in East Africa, 1856, p. 336.
was received by his Highness under a red satin umbrella heavily fringed.

Apart from the references already given, the following may be consulted:—

O. Uzanne, L’Ombrelle, Paris, 1883 (see the interesting copy in the Ashbee Collection, British Museum). It was translated into English as The Sunshade, the Glove, the Muff, London, 1888. References to the umbrella in the Rāmāyana and Mahābhārata will be found on pp. 13-16. See also by the same author, Les Ornements de la Femme, “L’Ombrelle (Le Parasol—Le Parapluie),” Paris, 1892, pp. 131-195.

APPENDIX III
APPENDIX III

POISON-DAMSELS

On page 91 of this volume we read of the methods employed by Yogakaranḍaka, the minister of King Brahmadatta, against our hero, the King of Vatsa: "He tainted, by means of poison and other deleterious substances, the trees, flowering creepers, water and grass all along the line of march. And he sent poison-damsels as dancing-girls among the enemy's host, and he also dispatched nocturnal assassins into their midst."

The tactics of this minister are as curious as they are unscrupulous. We have read of wells being poisoned and even of diseased clothes being left for the enemy to find, but the poisoning of the vegetation and the dispatching of poisoned women are much more uncommon.

This subject is of great interest from many points of view, and as there appears to be very little published on the matter, especially poison-damsels, I will discuss the whole question in some detail.

Although by far the greater part of this appendix will be on poison-damsels, I will first give a few notes on the practice of poisoning water, etc., in both classical and modern times.

Poisoned Water, Etc.

The references to such practices in Sanskrit literature are not numerous. They are, however, mentioned, and even advocated, in the Code of Manu, vii, 195, where, in the chapter on the duties of kings, we read\(^1\): "When he has shut up his foe (in a town) let him sit encamped, harass his kingdom and continually spoil his grass, food, fuel and water."

The glosses of the commentators on this text refer in general terms to bad or harmful substances which are mixed with the grass, etc., or to destroying them by fire, water and so on. The bad substances may be supposed to include poison. In only one of the glosses is the actual word "poison" used.

In the well-known medical work dating from about the \(^1\) Bühler's translation, Sacred Books of the East, vol. xxv, p. 247.

275
beginning of the Christian era, the Suṣruta Sanskritā, we read in a chapter on the subject of the nature of animal poisons, etc., the following:—

"A sheet of poisoned water becomes slimy, strong-smelling, frothy and marked with (black-coloured) lines on the surface. Frogs and fish living in the water die without any apparent cause. Birds and beasts that live (in the water and) on its shores roam about wildly in confusion (from the effects of poison), and a man, a horse or an elephant, by bathing in this (poisoned) water is afflicted with vomiting, fainting, fever, a burning sensation and swelling of the limbs. These disorders (in men and animals) should be immediately attended to and remedied, and no pains should be spared to purify such poisoned water. The cold ashes of Dhava, Aśva-karna, Asana, Pāribhadra, Pātalā, Siddhaka, Mokshaka, Rāja-druma and Somavalka burnt together, should be cast into the poisoned pool or tank, whereby its water would be purified; as an alternative, an Anjali-measure (half a seer) of the said ashes cast in a Ghata-measure (sixty-four seers) of the required water would lead to its purification.

"A poisoned ground or stone-slab, landing-stage or desert country gives rise to swellings in those parts of the bodies of men, bullocks, horses, asses, camels and elephants that may chance to come in contact with them. In such cases a burning sensation is felt in the affected parts, and the hair and nails (of these parts) fall off. In these cases, the poisoned surface should be purified by sprinkling it over with a solution of Ananta and Sarva-gandha (the scented drugs) dissolved in wine (Surā), or with (an adequate quantity of) black clay dissolved in water, or with the decoction of Viḍāṅga, Pāthā and Katabhi.

"Poisoned hay or fodder, or any other poisoned food-stuff, produces lassitude, fainting, vomiting, diarrhoea, or even death (of the animal partaking thereof). Such cases should be treated with proper anti-poisonous medicines according to the indications of each case. As an alternative, drums and other musical instruments smeared with plasters of anti-poisonous compounds (Agadas) should be beaten and sounded (round them). Equal parts of silver (Tāra), mercury (Sutāra), and Indra-Gopa insects with Kuru-Vinda equal in weight to that of the entire preceding compound, pasted with the bile of a Kapila (brown) cow, should be used as a paste over the musical instruments (in such cases). The sounds of such drums, etc. (pasted with such anti-poisonous drugs), are said to destroy the effects of even the most dreadful poison.”

Turning to Europe, we find that from the earliest times writers on military law have continually distinguished between the law of nature and the law of nations, showing how the two sometimes coincide, but as often operate in opposite directions. They have, moreover, condemned the use of poison in warfare as being against all laws—human and divine.

Hugo Grotius in his great work, De jure beli ac pacis, writes as follows 2 (Book III, chap. iv, sec. 15, etc.) :-

“As the laws of nations permit many things... which are forbidden by Natural Law, so they forbid some things which are permitted by Natural Law. For him whom it is lawful to put to death, whether we put to death by the sword or by poison, it makes no difference, if we look to Natural Law. It is doubtless more generous to kill so that he who is killed has the power of defending himself; but this is not due to him who has deserved to die. But the Laws of Nations, if not of all, at least of the best, have long been, that it is not lawful to kill an enemy by poison. This consent had its rise in common utility, that the dangers of war, which are numerous enough, may not be made too extensive. And it is probable that this rule proceeded from kings, whose life may be defended from other causes, better than the lives of other persons; but is less safe than that of others from poison, except it be defended by the scruples of conscience and the fear of infamy.

“Livy (xliii, 18), speaking of Perseus, calls these clandestine atrocities: so Claudian (De Bello Gild., v, 273) and Cicero (De Offic., iii, 22) use like expressions. The Roman consuls say that it is required, as a public example, that nothing of the kind be admitted, in the epistle to Pyrrhus which Gellius (Noct. Attic., iii, 8) gives. So Valerius (vi, 5, 1). And when the prince of the Catti offered to procure the death of Arminius by poison, Tiberius rejected the offer, thus gaining glory like that of the ancient generals (Tacitus, Ann., ii, 88).

“Wherefore they who hold it lawful to kill the enemy by poison, as Baldus, following Vegetius (Cons., ii, 188), regard

1 See also Kautilya's Arthashastra, new edition, J. Jolly and R. Schmidt, Lahore, 1928, ix, 6, 86; xii, 4, 6-8, 14.
mere Natural Law, and overlook the Instituted Law of Nations. . . . To poison fountains, which must be discovered before long, Florus says (Lib. II, 20), is not only against old rule, but also against the law of the gods; as the Laws of Nations are often ascribed to the gods; nor is it to be wondered, if to diminish dangers, there be some such tacit conventions of belligerents, as formerly in the permanent war of the Chalcidians and Eretrians (Strabo, x, p. 488) it was agreed not to use missiles.

"But the same is not true of making waters foul and undrinkable without poisoning them (Æsch., De male ob. leg., p. 262a), which Solon and the Amphictyons are said to have justified towards barbarians: and Oppian mentions as customary in his time. For that is the same thing as turning away a stream, or intercepting a spring of water, which is lawful both by Natural Law and by consent."

Nearly a hundred years later (1758) Emeric de Vattel, the Swiss jurist, published his Droit des Gens. It was founded on the works of Wolff and Leibnitz, with many quotations from Grotius. After practically repeating the above extract, he continues 1:

"Assassination and poisoning are, therefore, contrary to the laws of war, and are alike forbidden by the Natural Law and the consent of civilised nations. The sovereign who makes use of such execrable means should be regarded as an enemy of the human race, and all nations are called upon, in the interest of the common safety of mankind, to join forces to punish him. In particular, an enemy who has been the object of his detestable practices is justified in giving him no quarter. Alexander the Great declared 'that he was determined to take the most extreme measures against Darius, and no longer treat him as an enemy in lawful war, but as a poisoner and an assassin' (Quint. Curt., iv, 9, 18). The interest and the safety of those in command, far from allowing them to authorise such practices, call for the greatest care on their part to prevent the introduction of them.

"Eumenes wisely said 'that he did not think any general would want to obtain a victory by the use of means which might in turn be directed against himself' (Justin., xiv, 1, 12). And it was on the same principle that Alexander condemned the act of Bessus, who had assassinated Darius (Quint. Curt., vi, 3, 14).”

The importance of Grotius’s De jure belli ac pacis lies chiefly in the fact that it forms the foundation of the International Law of the present day. It was the first of such works to influence sovereigns and statesmen, for it showed in an exhaustive and masterly fashion what all men were beginning to feel.

The value of Vattel’s work is due to the fact that it consists of all that is best in the works of his predecessors, Grotius, Pufendorf, Leibnitz, Bynkershoek and Wolff. Consequently it became the handbook of statesmen and jurists, and is still quoted as one of the great authorities.

As we have already seen, both these jurists condemned all unnecessary methods of killing an enemy—particularly by any form of poisoning. But, as history is largely a record of cruelty exercised by those in power, we must not be surprised to find that, especially in mediæval times, the number of deaths due to some form of poisoning was very large. At the same time superstition and general ignorance of medicine probably lay at the bottom of many so-called poison mysteries of ancient days, while in some cases, as with the Borgias, reliable evidence is weak.

There are, however, many occasions on which poison in some form or other has been used in warfare.

For instance, when the young Egyptian Sultan Faraj withdrew before the conquering hosts of Timūr (Tamerlane) in 1400 he took care to poison both the fields and water before leaving. It is related that in consequence Timūr lost so many men and animals that he desisted from the pursuit.

In India the most deadly poison is undoubtedly the variety of aconite found in the Himalayan districts. This is the so-called “Nepal aconite,” known as bīs, bish, bikh, etc. There are numerous forms of the series, the most deadly being A. spicatum. It is so poisonous in the Sikkim Terai that the sheep often have to be muzzled. The uses to which the aconites are put vary, for the rural drug-dealer has a great knowledge of the plant and finds many commercial uses for it, such as an adulterant in making bhāng from Indian hemp, for poisoning arrow-heads (for which see Lewin, “Arrow Poisons,” Virchow’s Archiv Path. Anat. und Phys., 1894, pp. 138, 289) and many other uses.

1 Hans Schiltberger’s Reisebuch, ed. by Langmantel, Tübingen, 1885, 25, 38.
The Indian aconites are confined to the mountain tracts of the north-eastern boundary, stretching from Afghanistan and Baluchistan, through Kashmir, Nepal, Sikkim, Bhutan and Assam to Burma.\(^1\)

The Gurkhas of Nepal regard the plant as a great protection against enemy attacks, and Hamilton\(^2\) describes how they can destroy whole armies by poisoning the water, and in the Nepalese war the British found the wells poisoned with crushed aconite.

The poisoning of water is not confined to India. Thus Burton\(^3\) tells us that the Yuta Indians have diminished in numbers owing to the introduction of arsenic and corrosive sublimate in springs and provisions.

Similar havoc was wrought among the Australians,\(^4\) while in Tasmania\(^5\) poisoned rum was used to exterminate the aborigines.

In Brazil, when the import of African slaves rendered the capture of the natives less desirable than their extermination, the Portuguese left the clothes of people who had died of smallpox and scarlet fever for them to find in the woods.\(^6\) It is also said\(^7\) that the caravan traders from the Missouri to Santa Fé communicated smallpox to the Indian tribes of that district in 1831 by infectious clothing and presents of tobacco.

But vile as all these acts are, they are easily eclipsed by the inhuman methods of warfare introduced by the Germans in the Great War. They have cast a blot on European history which neither compunction nor time can ever eradicate.

This is not the place to describe in detail the different varieties of poison-gases used in the Great War, but I would give a few reliable references sent me by the War Office:

\(^1\) The different species of aconites are fully discussed in Watt’s Commercial Products of India, the abridgment of The Dictionary of the Economic Products of India, 1908, pp. 18-24.

\(^3\) City of the Saints, 1861, p. 576.

\(^4\) E. J. Eyre, Journals of Expeditions of Discovery into Central Australia, 1845, vol. i, pp. 175-179.

\(^5\) Bowick, Last of the Tasmanians, p. 58.

\(^7\) J. Fröbel, Seven Years’ Travel in Central America, 1859, p. 272; and A. R. Wallace, Narrative of Travels on the Amazon and Rio Negro, p. 326.

The Historical Section of the War Office informs me that in General Botha’s campaign in German South-West Africa the poisoning of wells was both authenticated and admitted. It is believed that the poison used to make the wells unserviceable was chloride of mercury, which was available as it was employed in the gold-mining industry. The official records of the campaign are in the hands of the Government of the Union of South Africa.

The following references may be consulted by readers generally interested in the subject of poisons:—

We now pass on to the study of the poison-damsel.

The Poison-Damsel in India

Although the poison-damsel is found in the Kathā Sarit Sāgara, her appearance in Sanskrit literature is rare.

There are, however, two or three works in which she is mentioned. Of these the most important is undoubtedly Viśākhadatta’s political drama, the Mudrā-Rākshasa, or Signet-ring of Rākshasa. This play, written about the seventh century A.D., deals with events which happened, or were supposed to have happened, at the formation of the great Maurya Empire in 318 B.C. From the commencement of this dynasty dates the unbroken chain of Indian history, and Chandragupta, its founder, must be regarded as the first paramount sovereign or emperor of India. He obtained the throne of Pāṭaliputra under circumstances which have a distinct bearing on the subject under discussion. At the end of 327 B.C. or in the early spring of the following year. Alexander the Great began his invasion of Northern India. He had gradually pushed farther and farther eastwards until, at the river "Yadava" (the modern Beas, a tributary of the Sutlej), his victorious advance received a sudden, but none the less definite, check by his army refusing to proceed with the expedition.

Thus he was prevented from attempting the overthrow of two great peoples, the Prasii and the Gangaridae, which, he was informed, inhabited a district beyond the Ganges.

The king of these peoples was a certain Agrammes or Xandrames (according to the Greek writers), who has been identified by some with Dhana-Nanda, Nanda, or Nandrus, King of Magadha (South Bihār).

At this time Chandragupta, an illegitimate relation of Nanda, held the position of Commander-in-Chief in his army. He chanced to incur Nanda's displeasure and fled to the Panjāb, where he is said to have met Alexander and to have made a close study of his methods of warfare.

However this may be, the mention of Alexander in connection with Chandragupta is of the greatest interest in this inquiry. For, as we shall see later, the European versions of the poison-damsel find their origin in a certain Pseudo-Aristotelean work purporting to have been written for Alexander and sent to him on his campaigns, when age prevented his learned tutor from continuing his duties personally. This work was known as the Secretum Secretorum, and will be fully discussed in the course of this appendix.

It will suffice here merely to draw attention to the fact that it was Aristotle who was credited with the wise teachings and prudent counsels which helped Alexander so much in his Eastern campaigns, and it was he who, in the Secretum Secretorum, prevented him from losing his life at the hands of the poison-damsel.

1 Scholars differ about the duration of Alexander's Indian expedition. See V. A. Smith, Early History of India, 1904, pp. 106, 107, and also the 3rd edition, 1914; A. E. Anspach, De Alexandri Magni Expeditione Indica, London, 1903; F. W. Thomas in ch. xviii of the Cambridge History of India, with the Bibliography on pp. 674-676.

2 We have already come across a legend of his reign in Vol. I, pp. 13, 17, 85 et seq.

3 Said to have been the son of Murā, a concubine of the king. Hence his surname Maurya.
In just the same way, Chandragupta benefited by the advice of a wise minister. For at the very time that he fled to the Panjāb there was a certain Brāhman named Chāṇakya (Kautilya or Vishnugupta) who, incensed against King Nanda, owing to an effrontery to which he had been subjected, became not only a fellow-conspirator with Chandragupta in the overthrow of Nanda, but was the directing force guiding every movement of the plot. Although details of the defeat of Nanda are hidden under a veil of mingled fact and fiction, it seems almost certain that Chandragupta had the assistance of strong allies, the chief of whom was Porus, who ruled on the far side of the Hydaspes (Jhelum).

On his ascending the throne of Pātaliputra Chandragupta, not forgetful of the part played by Chāṇakya in his success, made him his chief minister, and it is at this point that the Mudrā-Rākshasa commences. We find Chāṇakya involved in a maze of political intrigue, employing every form of cunning and strategy imaginable. His chief object is to win over the late king’s ex-minister Rākshasa and so sever the one remaining link with the old line of Nanda kings. In this he is ultimately successful, but only after he has answered every stroke of his opponents by a more effective counter-stroke, at the same time shielding Chandragupta from the numerous attempts on his life. These attempts were of different kinds, including a poisoned draught and nocturnal assassins who were instructed to get into Chandragupta’s sleeping chamber by a subterranean passage and kill him in his sleep. The plot was, however, discovered by Chāṇakya. In relating the circumstances to Rākshasa, one of his secret agents, Virādhagupta, speaks as follows:

1 Chāṇakya appeared in Vol. I, p. 55 et seq., as a Brāhman who brought about Nanda’s death by a magical rite. In the same volume (p. 238) his name is mentioned as an alternative of Kautīlya, the supposed author of the Arthaśāstra. See p. 233n.1

3 The translation given is that by H. H. Wilson, Select Specimens of the Theatre of the Hindus, vol. iii, 1827, p. 71. Reference should be made to his Introduction, which contains the different versions of the tale of Nanda, Chandragupta and Chāṇakya. For more recent translations of the Mudrā-Rākshasa see those by S. C. Chakravarti, Calcutta, 1908, and B. Goswami, Calcutta [1909].
Before the king retired to rest,
The watchful minister was wont to enter
The chamber, and with diligent scrutiny
Inspect it—thus, he saw a line of ants
Come through a crevice in the wall, and noticed
They bore the fragments of a recent meal
Thence he inferred the presence of the feeders
In some adjoining passage, and commanded
That the pavilion should be set on fire
That moment—soon his orders were obeyed,
And our brave friends, in flame and smoke enveloped,
Unable to escape, were all destroyed."

Rākshasa replies:

"'Tis ever thus—Fortune in all befriends
The cruel Chandragupta—when I send
A messenger of certain death to slay him,
She wields the instrument against his rival,
Who should have spoiled him of one half his kingdom.
And arms, and drugs, and stratagems are turned
In his behalf, against my friends and servants,
So that whate'er I plot, against his power,
Serves but to yield him unexpected profit."

The "messenger of certain death" was the poison-damsel which Rākshasa had prepared for Chandragupta's undoing. The plot was discovered by the ever-watchful Chānakyā, who, instead of killing or returning the girl, passed her on to Parvataka, who, although a former ally of Chandragupta, was thought best out of the way.

It appears that the girl could poison only once, and, like the cobra, would be of little danger after the accumulated poison had been spent in her first embrace.

Rākshasa, thinking of the well-known incident in the Mahābhārata, says (Chakravarti's translation):

"Friend, see how strange! As Karna in order to kill Arjuna reserved a strong lance capable of destroying only one person once and for all, I too kept a vigorous poisonous maid to kill Chandragupta. But as the lance, to the great advantage of Kṛishṇa, killed the son of Hīḍimbā, so she killed the Lord of the Mountains [Parvataka] to be destroyed by the wicked Chānakyā, to his very great advantage."

There is no need to pursue this reference further. Sufficient has now been said to show the analogy between Chandragupta and Chānakya on the one hand, and Alexander and Aristotle on the other. Both kings were saved from the deadly results of a poison-damsel by their equally clever ministers, both were in the Panjáb during the reign of the last of the Nanda kings, and both would naturally be the cause of endless plots.

Although the possible connection of what may be two versions of a single incident (whether fact or fiction) is nothing more than a suggestion, the idea is none the less fascinating, and one on which much research might be carried out.

Before dealing with the Secretum Secretorum I should mention other occurrences of the poison-damsel in Sanskrit literature.

In the Pariśishtaparvan we find a slightly different version of the story. Here it is Nanda himself who has prepared the poison-damsel, and his minister Rākshasa has nothing to do with it. The passage is as follows1:

"Then Chandragupta and Parvata [sic] entered Nanda’s palace and began to divide his great store of treasures. Now in the castle there lived a maiden who was cared for as if all treasures were combined in her. King Nanda had had her fed on poison from the time of her birth. Parvata was seized with such a passion for her that he locked her in his heart like his guardian deity. Chandragupta’s teacher [Chānakya] gave her to him, and he immediately began to celebrate the ceremony of taking hands. During this, however, poison was transferred to him through her, because their perspiration, caused by the heat of the sacrificial fire, was mixed together. The strength of this poison caused Parvata great agony; all his limbs relaxed, and he said to Chandragupta: ‘I feel as if I had drunk poison; even speaking is well-nigh impossible. Help me, friend. I am surely going to die.’"

Chānakya, however, advises Chandragupta to let him die, as then he will have the entire treasure to himself. Thus that king of the Himalayan mountain died, and Chandragupta became ruler of two mighty kingdoms.

That the poison-damsel was well known and regarded

1 Ausgewählte Erzählungen aus Hīmacandras Pariśishtaparvan, Johannes Hertel, Leipzig, 1908, viii, line 327 et seq. Bloomfield refers to this in his Life and Stories of Pārvanātha, p. 198. On p. 62 of this work the word "poison-damsel" is used as a simile of a stolen jewel-casket which was destined to bring bad luck to whoever touched it.
with the greatest fear is clear from the seventy-first tale of the Suvābahuttarakathā, where, on the demand of Dharmdat for King Kāmsundar’s daughter, the wily minister Siddhreh gets out of the difficulty by saying that the girl is a poison-damsel, and by a clever trick persuades Dharmdat to depart.\(^1\)

Both Hertz \(^2\) and Bloomfield \(^3\) state that there is a treatise in Sanskrit for finding out whether a woman is a poison-damsel. It is described by Weber,\(^4\) but appears on inspection to be nothing more than a treatise on horoscopes which sometimes show if a child is going to be a poison-damsel when grown up, but there is no method given for discovering if a woman one might chance to meet is a poison-damsel or not.

Secretum Secretorum

After thus briefly enumerating the chief Sanskrit references to poison-damsels, we must now take a big jump to Europe in search of further evidence. This does not mean that there is no trace of our motif in Persia, Mesopotamia, Arabia, Syria and Asia Minor, but merely, that as Eastern Europe in the Middle Ages was the centre of great literary activity and the entrepôt between East and West, it is here that we are most likely to find data to help us in our inquiry. Having surveyed the evidence, we must look eastwards for links with India, and westwards to mark the extent of its ultimate expansion.

In the first place, then, it is necessary to become more acquainted with the character of the Secretum, to ascertain, if possible, why it was written, the cause of its immense popularity, and what is known of the history of the work itself.\(^5\) We shall then be in a better position to estimate the value of the inclusion of such a motif as that of the poison-damsels.

\(^1\) “Über die Suvābahuttarakathā,” Johannes Hertel, Festschrift für Ernst Windisch, Leipzig, 1914, pp. 146, 147.

\(^5\) Although space will not permit any detailed discussion of this tangled mass of evidence, I shall endeavour to supply ample reference to the existing literature on the subject.
APPENDIX III—POISON-DAWSELS

About the very time that Somadeva wrote, a work appeared in European literature in the Latin language, translated from the Arabic. It was entitled Secretum Secretorum, De Secretis Secretorum, or De Regimine Principum. It purported to be nothing less than a collection of the most important and secret communications sent by Aristotle to Alexander the Great when he was too aged to attend his pupil in person. Such letters had been circulated from the earliest times, but here was a treatise containing not only the essence of political wisdom and state-craft, but regulations for the correct conduct of body and mind, and an insight into the mysteries of occult lore.

Since his death in 322 B.C. the reputation of Aristotle had gradually increased, and in the Middle Ages any work bearing his name was sure to be received with the greatest enthusiasm. Furthermore, the name of Alexander was surrounded by an ever-growing wealth of romance and mystery. No wonder, then, that the discovery, or supposed discovery, of the actual correspondence between these two great men created something of a sensation.

The Secretum, however, is not reckoned among Aristotle’s genuine works, but as one of a number of unauthenticated treatises which, reflecting as it does theories and opinions contained in his famous philosophical writings, was readily accepted as a work of the Master himself. Its popularity was so great that it became the most widely read work of the Middle Ages, and contributed more to Aristotle’s reputation than any of his fully authenticated writings. It was translated into nearly every European language, and consequently played a very considerable part in European literature.

As already mentioned, the Latin version of the Secretum first made its appearance in the twelfth century. There were two distinct recensions, a longer and a shorter one, both derived from Arabic MSS., which in their turn were said to rest upon Greek originals. Owing to the complicated and uncertain history of the Secretum it was considered necessary in the later MSS. to account in some way for the appearance of this hitherto unheard of correspondence between Aristotle and Alexander. A kind of prologue was accordingly added, both to the longer and shorter recensions, written by the alleged discoverer of the work, Yahya ibn Baṭrīq—i.e. John the son of Patricius, who was a Syrian freedman under the Khalifa al-Ma’mūn (circa 800). He first gives what he describes as the preliminary correspondence between Aristotle and Alexander, and states that in accordance with the commands of the Khalifa, who had somehow heard of the existence of the Secretum, he started on a prolonged search for the MS. and "left no temple among the temples where the philosophers deposited their hidden wisdom unsought," until finally he came across the object of his search in the Temple of the Sun dedicated to Æsculapius (Asklepios). It was written in letters of gold, and he immediately translated it first into Rumi (Syriac), and then from Rumi into Arabic. Whether Yahya was really the double translator is unknown. He certainly would know Syriac and Arabic, but if he was ignorant of Greek we must assume that the translation from the Greek into Syriac had been made earlier. It has been suggested that it was on the occasion of the second translation that the other treatises previously existing independently were incorporated, thus accounting for the longer and shorter recensions found both in the Arabic and Latin versions. The number of existing Latin MSS. is very large, and every library of any note possesses a number of copies.2

1 For other titles see Förster, De Aristotelis quae feruntur secretis secretorum commentatio, Kiliae, 1888, 1.

As was only to be expected with a popular book like the Secretum, it suffered greatly at the hands of copyists, who removed or added chapters as they thought fit. The work was, moreover, so wide in its scope that in some cases a chapter was enlarged to such a degree that it appeared as a fresh work of its own and was circulated separately. This is what happened with the chapters on Regimen Sanitatis—rules for preserving the health—and that on Precious Stones, while that on Physiognomy was incorporated into the works of Albertus Magnus and Duns Scotus.3

A comparison of the various texts and translations shows

1 See Steinschneider in Virchow’s Archiv für pathologische Anatomie und Physiologie, liii, p. 364 et seq.; and Förster, op. cit., p. 23 et seq.
2 There is no complete bibliography of the MSS., prints, etc., of the Secretum in all the different languages in the libraries of Europe, but Förster made a list of no less than 207 Latin MSS. See the Centralblatt für Bibliotheks- wesen, vol. vi, 1889, p. 1 et seq.
that in all probability these very chapters, or sections, which are also found as separate works, did not form part of the original composition, but were added at a later date. The chief reasons for arriving at this conclusion will be given a little later. Thus a kind of "enlarged edition" was formed, which would naturally enjoy a greater circulation. Without going over the ground that has already been sufficiently covered, I would merely mention the two men who are reputed to have made the Latin translations. The first was a Spanish Jew, who, on his conversion to Christianity, took the name of Johannes Hispaniensis, or Hispalensis. He flourished in the middle of the twelfth century, and translated only the section dealing with the health-rules and the four seasons. It had, however, the prologue prefixed to it, and bore the Latinised form of the Arabic title, "In Alasrar." The other translator was a French priest, Philip Clericus of Tripoli, who at the request of his Archbishop, Guido of Valencia, translated the whole work from an Arabic original he had found in Antioch. His date is fixed at the beginning of the thirteenth century. As time went on these two versions got blended, and any knowledge of the separate works was lost. The most interesting and important of the Arabic originals have been compared and discussed by Steinschneider, who found a similar confusion of the chapters as in the Latin texts.

There is also a Hebrew version, which is quite as old as any of the complete texts. It is now almost universally recognised as the work of Judah Al-Ḥarīzī, who flourished in the early thirteenth century. It formed, in all probability, one of the cycle of Alexandrian legends upon which Harizi was working. This Hebrew version, translated by Gaster, is important in tracing the history of the Secretum as it follows the Arabic faithfully, and represents the work before it was encumbered with the enlarged chapters on Astronomy, Physiognomy, etc. One of the most convincing proofs of the subsequent addition of these chapters is the fact that none of them is included in the index of either the longer Arabic or Hebrew texts, and the Latin versions derived from them. But apart from this Förster has traced the chapter on Physiognomy to the Greek treatise of Polemon, while Steele has ascribed part of the Rule of Health section to Diocles Carystius (320 B.C.). The medical knowledge displayed in the enlarged chapters places the author in the eighth or ninth century, but when restored to their original proportions we can reduce the date by at least a century. Scholars are agreed that there is no Greek text in existence, and no proof that it ever did exist. Now if we look more closely into the longer Arabic and Hebrew texts, we find that the background of the book is wholly Eastern—Persian and Indian—while, on the other hand, there is hardly a mention of Greece. If any analogy or simile is needed, it is the sayings and doings of Persians or Indians that are quoted. The allusion to chess, the occurrence of Eastern place-names, and animals, all tend to point to the influence under which the Secretum really originated. Among similar Eastern works whose history is now fairly completely known may be mentioned Syntipas, Kalilah, and Barlaam and Josaphat. All these slowly migrated westwards, changing their character with their environment, and readily adapting themselves to any new purpose for which they might be wanted. Among the later insertions added by the Greek author of Barlaam is a “Mirror of Kings,” which closely resembles portions of the Secretum. The composition of this work is now placed at about the first half of the seventh century, and the vicissitudes through which the two works have gone are in all probability very similar.

3 Uebersetzungen, p. 995—cf. also p. 245 et seq., where a full bibliography is given.

Having thus briefly glanced at the history of the Secretum, we are now in a better position to examine the actual reference to poison-damsels. In the first place we should note that it is omitted in both those sections which were not included in the index (see supra), but occurs in the oldest portion—that of the rules for "the ordinance of the king, of his purveyance, continence and discretion."

2 For further notes on this see Gaster, op. cit., Oct. 1908, p. 1080.

According to the text, Aristotle is warning Alexander against entrusting the care of his body to women, and to beware of deadly poisons which had killed many kings in the past. He further advises him not to take medicines from a single doctor, but to employ a number, and act only on their unanimous advice. Then, as if to prove the necessity of his warnings, he recalls a great danger which he himself was able to frustrate. "Remember," he says, "what happened when the King of India sent thee rich gifts, and among them that beautiful maiden whom they had fed on poison until she was of the nature of a snake, and had I not perceived it because of my fear, for I feared the clever men of those countries and their craft, and had I not found by proof that she would be killing thee by her embrace and by her perspiration, she would surely have killed thee."

This is from the Hebrew text (Gaster's translation), and,
as has already been mentioned, represents the early recension.
It will be noted that the person who sent the poison-damsel was a king of India. In some of the Arabic texts it is the king's mother, and in most of the later versions the queen of India, who sends the poisoned woman. Then again the contamination differs—sometimes it is caused by the kiss or bite, in other versions by the perspiration, intercourse, or even only the look.

The translation ¹ of one of the Arabic texts (MS. Gotha, 1869) is as follows:—

"Remember the mother of the Indian king who sent to thee presents, one of which was a girl who had been brought up on poison until her nature had become that of poisonous serpents. And if I had not found out through my knowledge of the Indian kings and physicians, and had not suspected her to be capable of inflicting a fatal bite, surely she would have killed thee."

Another MS. (Laud. Or., 210) ends with: "she surely would have killed thee by her touch and her perspiration."

¹ See the appendix to Fasc. V of Steele's Opera hactenus inedita Rogeri Baconi, by A. S. Fulton, Oxonii, 1920, p. xI.
The Spread of the Legend in Europe

As already mentioned, the work has been translated in full, or partly edited, in numerous European languages. These include Spanish, Italian, Provençal, Dutch, French, and English. Full bibliographical details will be found in the excellent article, "Die Sage vom Giftmädchen," by W. Hertz, to which I am indebted for many useful references and translations. There are, however, only one or two of these which, owing to their importance in literature or curiosity of their version, interest us here.

The incidents of the story must have been well known in Spain by the fifteenth century, as Guillem de Cervera when referring to the tricks of women in his Romania, xvi, 96, verse 1000, observes: "The Indian wanted to murder Alexander through a woman"; and later, when advising care with regard to presents, he continues: "Alexander took gifts from India, and the maiden who thought to rouse his passion was beautiful. If Aristotle had not been versed in astronomy, Alexander would have lost all he possessed through presents." ²

Heinrich von Meissen, a German poet of the thirteenth century, generally known as Frauenlob, and famous for the display of learning in his poems, tells us that a certain queen of India was so clever that she brought up a proud damsel on poison from infancy. She gave, according to the text, "poisoned words"—that is to say, the breath from her mouth when speaking was poisonous—and her look also brought sudden death. This maiden was sent to King Alexander in order to cause his death and thus bring freedom to

¹ Abhandlungen der k. bayerischen Acad. der Wissensch., I, Cl. xx, Bd. 1, Abth, München, 1893.

² Alexandri pres do Aristotels no fos
D'Indis et le puciela Apres d'astronemia,
Quel cuydet passio Alexandri per dos
Dar, car era tam biela. Perdera quant avia.

Romania, xvi, 107, verses 1149-1150.

³ Frauenlob's poetry was edited by L. Ettmüller in 1843; a selection will be found in K. Bartsch, Deutsche Liederdichter des 12. bis 14. Jahrhunderts (3rd ed., 1895). An English translation of Frauenlob's Cantica canticorum, by A. E. Kroeger, with notes, appeared in 1887 at St Louis, U.S.A. See also A. Boerkel, Frauenlob (2nd ed., 1881), and F. H. Von der Hagen, Minnesinger, iii, 111a, verse 3.
APPENDIX III—POISON-DAMSELS

her land. A master saw through this and gave the king a herb to put in his mouth, which freed him from all danger.

Frauenlob cites the above as a warning to princes to beware of accepting gifts from conquered foes. The idea of the miraculous herb is entirely new and seems to have been an invention of the poet.

A peculiar rendering is found in a French prose version of the early fourteenth century. It has been described by Ernest Renan in the Histoire Littéraire (xxx, p. 567 et seq.). The work is in three different texts. According to the most recent (sixteenth century), Le Cuer de Philosophie, by Antoine Vérard, the tale of the "Pucelle Venimeuse" is roughly as follows:

A certain king was once informed by a soothsayer that a child, named Alexander, had just been born who was destined to be his downfall. On hearing this disconcerting news, the king thought of an ingenious way in which to get rid of the menace, and gave secret orders for several infant girls of good family to be nourished on deadly poison. They all died except one, who grew to be a beautiful maiden and learnt to play the harp, but she was so poisonous that she polluted the air with her breath, and all animals which came near her died.

Once the king was besieged by a powerful army, and he sent this maiden by night into the enemy's camp to play the harp before their king. She was accompanied by two others, who were, however, not poisonous. The king, struck by her beauty, invited her to his tent. As soon as he kissed her he fell dead to the ground, and the same fate overtook many of his followers who gathered round her on the same evening. At this juncture the besieged army made a sortie and easily overcame the enemy, who were demoralised by the death of their leader.

Delighted with the success of his experiment, the king ordered the damsel to be even better cared for, and nourished with even purer poison than hitherto.

Meanwhile Alexander, grown to manhood, had started his campaigns, besieged and conquered Darius, and made his name feared throughout the world.

Then the king, anxious to put his long-conceived plan into execution, had five maidens beautifully attired, the fifth being the poisoned damsel, more lovely and more richly clad than the rest; these he sent to Alexander, ostensibly as a mark of his love and obedience, accompanied by five attendants with fine horses and rare jewels. When Alexander saw the lovely harpist he could scarcely contain himself, and immediately rushed to embrace her. But Aristotle, a wise and learned man of the court, and Socrates, the king’s tutor, recognised the poisonous nature of the maiden and would not let Alexander touch her. To prove this Socrates ordered two slaves to kiss the damsel, and they immediately fell dead. Horses and dogs which she touched died instantly. Then Alexander had her beheaded and her body burnt.

In some of the German versions the name of the poison is mentioned.

The most curious version, however, is that occurring in the Italian edition of Brunetto Latini’s Li livres dou Tresor, and which runs as follows:—

There ruled a wise queen in the land of Sizire, and she discovered by her magical art that a son of Olympus, Alexander by name, would one day deprive her of her kingdom. As soon as she was informed of the birth of this hero, she considered how she might destroy him and thus evade her fate. She first procured Alexander’s portrait, and seeing that his features betrayed a sensual nature, made her plans accordingly.

In that country there exist snakes so large that they can swallow a whole stag, and their eggs are as big as bushel baskets. The queen put a baby girl, just born, into one of these eggs, and the snake-mother hatched it out with her other eggs. The little one came out with the young snakes and was fed by the snake-mother with the same food that she gave her own young ones. When the young snakes grew up, the queen had the girl brought to her palace and shut up in a cage. She could not speak, and only hissed like a snake, and anyone coming near her too often either died or fell into disease. After seven weeks the queen had her fed with bread, and gradually taught her to speak.

After seven years the girl began to be ashamed of her nakedness, wore clothes and became accustomed to human food. She grew into one of the most beautiful creatures in the world, with a face like an angel.

2 Il Tesoro di Brunetto Latini verificato, see Atti, Series IV, Classe di scienze morali, storiche e filologiche, vol. iv, part i, 111 et seq., Roma, 1888.
APPENDIX III—POISON-DAMSELS

Once upon a time Alexander chanced to come to that country, and the queen, thinking that her opportunity had arrived, offered him the girl, with whom he at once fell in love, saying to Aristotle, "I will lie with her." But Aristotle, without whose permission he would not even eat, saw the beauty of the maiden, her glittering face and her look, and said to Alexander: "I see and recognise in this creature the bearing of snakes. Her first nourishment was poison, and whoever comes in contact with her will be poisoned." Seeing that Alexander was loath to believe him, Aristotle continued: "Procure me a snake and I will show you." He ordered the girl to be kept carefully overnight, and the next morning a dreadful snake was brought to him which he shut up under a big jar. Then he ordered a basket of fresh dittany to be ground in a mortar, and with the juice thus obtained he drew a circle round the jar about an ell away from it. Then a servant lifted the jar and the snake crawled out and crept along the circle of juice trying to find a way out. But it could find no outlet and crawled continuously round and round until it died.1

"See," said Aristotle, "that will also happen to that maiden." Then Alexander had the three girls brought, and drew a circle of the juice all round them, and called them to him. The two maidens ran to him, but the third, the poisoned damsel, remained within the circle, looking in vain for an outlet. She then began to choke, her hair stood on end, and she died suddenly like the snake.

It is impossible to say if this tale is really old, or merely emanated from the poet's own imagination. Although the kingdom of Sizire appears to be unknown, it is interesting to note the mention of the huge swallowing powers of the snakes, which naturally point to India as the home of the story.

As already pointed out (p. 98n4 et seq.), the magic circle could be used as a vantage-ground from which to summon spirits and also as a barrier from which there was no escape. It appears that even in the early Babylonian texts the prototype of the magic circle possessed these same properties, and in his Semitic Magic R. Campbell Thompson describes it as a kind of haram through which no spirit could break. The circle was sometimes made of kusurra (flour), flour of lime, which may, perhaps, have been a mixture of meal and lime, while in other cases flour and water were used for tracing the circle. The mixture was described as the "net of the corn-god," thus fully explaining the office it was supposed to perform.

1 For numerous references on the use of dittany in the works of classical writers, particularly Plutarch and Pliny, see Thorndike, A History of Magic and Experimental Science, vol. i, pp. 218, 495.

Hertz (op. cit., p. 105) refers to a mediæval legend told by Hieronymus Rauscher. Once upon a time a terrible dragon overcame a land and no human power could destroy him; then the bishop ordered the people to fast for ten days, whereupon he said: "In order that you may discover what power lies in fasting, you must all spit into this mug." After this he took that saliva and traced a circle round the dragon, which was unable to get out of it (Das andrer Hundert der Baptistischen Lügen, Laugingen, 1564, c. 32). Aristotle (Hist. Anim., viii, 28, 2) and Pliny (Nat. Hist., vii, 2, 5) believed that human saliva, and especially that of a fasting person, was dangerous to poisonous animals. The same effect is attributed to the juice of garlic. Johannes Hebenstreidt (Regiment pestilenzischer giff tiger Fieber, Erford, 1562, Folio H., p. 1b) tells us that a white worm was found in the heart of a prince who had died after a long illness. When they put this worm on a table surrounded by a circle of garlic, he crawled round until he died (cf. Harsdorffer, Der grosse Schauplatz lust- u. lehrreicher Geschichte, Frankfurt, 1660, ii, 113, N. 9). Wolfgang Hildebrand (Magia naturalis, 200) states that a circle drawn round a snake with a young hazel branch will cause its death.

The spread of the tale of the poison-damsel in Europe was greatly increased by its inclusion in the famous collection of stories, "invented by the monks as a fire-side recreation; and commonly applied in their discourses from the pulpit," known as the Gesta Romanorum. These tales date from the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. In Swan's English translation, edited by Thomas Wright, the tale forms No. 11 of the collection. We are informed that it was the Queen of the North (Regina Aquilonis) who, having heard of Alexander's proficiency, nourished her daughter upon poison and sent her to him. The story as told here is very brief indeed, chief importance being laid upon the "application," in which any good Christian is represented by Alexander, the Queen of the North is a superfluity of the good things in life, the envenomed beauty is luxury and gluttony, which are poison to the soul. Aristotle exemplifies conscience, and the moral is:
APPENDIX III—POISON-DAMSELS

Let us then study to live honestly and uprightly, in order that we may attain to everlasting life.

The popularity of the Gesta Romanorum must have done much to cause the spread of the poison-damsel motif, and as time went on, the idea found its way, sometimes little changed and at other times hardly recognisable, into the literature of most European countries.

When discussing the different methods of poison transfer we shall meet with numerous interesting versions. The most recent adaption of the story is probably that of the American poet, Nathaniel Hawthorne. It appeared under the title of "Rappacini's Daughter," and tells of a certain doctor of Padua who was always making curious experiments. Soon after the birth of his daughter the heartless father decides to use her for his latest experiment. He has a garden full of the most poisonous plants, and trains her up to continually inhale their odours. As years pass she not only becomes immune from poison, but so poisonous herself that, like Siebel in Faust, any flowers she touches wither. The girl herself was beautiful, and a young man falls in love with her, but marriage seems out of the question. A colleague of her father's, however, prepares a potion for the lover which would neutralise the poison. The plan succeeds, but because poison has now become part of her very life the sudden application of the antidote kills her.

This idea might be well taken from similar results that the sudden complete stoppage of drugs in a habitual drug-fiend would produce. We shall consider the possible connection of opium with our motif a little later.

I now propose to look rather more fully into the different methods by which the poison-damsel was said to transfer her poison.

Some versions speak merely of the kiss. Thus in the Persian version of the Fables of Pilpay, the Anvār-i-Suhaili, we read of a queen who wished to kill her husband, so knowing he had a special weakness for kissing the neck of his favourite concubine, she has it rubbed with poison. The plot is, however, discovered by a slave.²

The same idea is found in the Vissāsabhojana-Jātaka,

² See the translation by Eastwick, 1854, p. 582. See also Benfey, Das Pañchatantra, vol. i, p. 598. For other references see Chauvin, op. cit., ii, p. 87 where a herd of cows yield but little milk through fright of a lion in the neighbourhood. Finding out that the lion is very attached to a certain doe, the herdsman catch it and rub it all over with poison and sugar. They keep it for a day or two until it has properly dried, and then let it go. The lion meanwhile has missed its friend and on seeing it again licks it all over with pleasure, and so meets its death. Then as a kind of moral we read:

“Trust not the trusted, nor th’untrusted trust;
Trust kills; through trust the lion bit the dust.”

Other methods are through the look, the breath, the perspiration, the bite and, finally, sexual intercourse.

We will consider the fatal look first.

The Fatal Look

As has already been mentioned in some versions of the story, it is merely a look from the poison-damsel which is fatal. When we consider the practically universal fear of the evil eye, it is not to be wondered at that such an idea should have crept into these versions. A large number of examples from all parts of the world will be found in Hertz, op. cit., pp. 107-112; reference should also be made to F. T. Elworthy, The Evil Eye, 1895, and his article, “Evil Eye,” in Hastings’ Ency. Rel. Eth., vol. v, pp. 608-615.

There is a wide-spread Oriental belief that the look of a snake is poisonous, hence the Sanskrit name \textit{drig-visa} or \textit{drišti-visa}, “poison in a glance.” The Indians also believed that a single snake \textit{dībya} could poison the atmosphere with its eyes (Wise, Commentary on the Hindu System of Medicine, London, 1860, p. 399).

Similar snakes are reported by the Arabs as living in the desert (see Barbier de Meynard, Les Colliers d’Or, allocutions morales de Zamakhshari, Paris, 1876, p. 94). Likewise al-Qazwīnī in his Kosmographie tells of snakes existing in the Snake Mountains of Turkestan which also killed by their glance. It is interesting to note that these deadly snakes have entered into stories connected with Alexander the Great. Thus in the Secretum Secretorum\(^2\) we read: “I furthermore command thee and warn thee that thy counsellor be not red-haired, and if he has blue eyes, in Arabic called azrık, and if he be one of thy relations, do not trust them, do not confide in them any of thy affairs, and beware of them in the same manner as thou bewarest of the Indian snakes which kill with their look from a distance."

\(^1\) See the Cambridge edition, No. 93, vol. i, p. 228.
APPENDIX III—POISON-DAMELS

According to another myth, during one of his campaigns Alexander came across a valley on the Indo-Persian frontier guarded by deadly serpents whose mere glance was fatal. Learning that this valley was full of precious stones, he erected mirrors in which the serpents might stare themselves to death, and so secured the gems by employing the carcasses of sheep in a manner with which we have already become accustomed in the story of "Sindbad the Sailor." See also the description of Epiphanius. According to Albertus Magnus the scheme was suggested by Aristotle. He also tells a somewhat similar tale of Socrates in his commentary on the Pseudo-Aristotelian work on the properties of the elements and planets. In the reign of Philip of Macedon, who is himself described as a philosopher and astronomer, the road between two mountains in Armenia became so poisoned that no one could pass. Philip vainly inquired the cause from his sages until Socrates came to the rescue and, by erecting a tower as high as the mountains with a steel mirror on top of it, saw two dragons polluting the air. The mere glance of these dragons was apparently not deadly, for men in air-tight armour went in and killed them.

Thus it seems that it was the breath of the dragon that caused death. This will be discussed shortly. The fatal glance of snakes reminds us at once of Medusa, whose hair was

2 Thorndike, History of Magic and Experimental Science, vol. i, p. 496.

3 De mirabilibus mundi (De secretis mulierum, Amstelodami, 1669, p. 176 et seq.).

4 De causis et proprietatibus elementorum, II, ii, 1. See also the complete edition of his work by Augustus Borgnet, vol. ix, p. 648. The extract quoted above and those immediately following are taken from Thorndike, op. cit., vol. ii, pp. 262-263.

5 Compare the poisonous breath of the snakes in the Jātakas—e.g. Daddara-Jātaka (No. 304), Cambridge edition, vol. iii, p. 11.
composed of serpents, one glance at which was sufficient to turn the unwary into stone.

It is in myths like that of Perseus and the Gorgon that the fatal glance is more understandable. For in the case of the Alexander story, if a single look produced death, the warning of Aristotle would come too late. Some of the translators seem to have realised this, and in cases where the text read
"by the glance" it has been altered to "continual (or prolonged) look." It is clear, I think, that the reading is not correct and is found only in some of the later texts.

The Poisonous Breath

The idea of poisonous breath, such as we find in some of the versions of the poison-damsel story, is quite a common one in fiction. As we saw in Frauenlob's version, the girl's breath was poisonous. The same statement is made by Peter of Abano,¹ the Jesuit Del Rio,² Michael Bapst, Wolfgang Hildebrand and Gaspar de los Reyes.³ For further details see Hertz, op. cit., pp. 112, 113.

The notion of the poisonous breath may perhaps be traced in some cases to stories of people living on poison in order to protect themselves against any attempt on their lives by the same means. The story of Mithradates (Pliny, Hist. Nat., xxv, 3) is a well-known case in point. Discovering that the Pontic duck lived on poison, he utilised its blood as a means of inoculation, and finally was able to eat poison regularly.

Of more interest to us, however, as showing the Indian belief in the use of poison as nourishment, is the tale of Mahmūd Shāh, King of Gujurāt. It was current about 1500, and versions are found in the travels of Varthema⁴ and Duarte Barbosa.⁵

The story goes that Mahmūd's father reared his son on poison to frustrate any attempts on the part of enemies to poison him. In Varthema's account we read: 'Every day he eats poison. Do not, however, imagine that he fills his

¹ Libellus de veneris, c. 3 (Conciliator, Venetiis, 1548, fol. 2, 278, col. 2).
² Disquisitiones Magicae, Moguntiae, 1606, i, 55.
³ Elysius Campus, 483.
⁴ Travels of Ludovico di Varthema, G. P. Badger, Hakluyt Society, 1863,
⁵ The Book of Duarte Barbosa, M. Longworth Dames, Hakluyt Society, 1918, vol. i, pp. 121-123.
stomach with it; but he eats a certain quantity, so that when he wishes to destroy any great personage he makes him come before him stripped and naked, and then eats certain fruits which are called chofole, which resemble a muscatel nut. He also eats certain leaves of herbs, which are like the leaves of the sugar orange, called by some tamboli; and then he eats some lime of oyster shells, together with the above-mentioned things. When he has masticated them well, and has his mouth full, he spurs it out upon that person whom he wishes to kill, so that in the space of half-an-hour he falls to the ground dead. This sultan has also three or four thousand women, and every night that he sleeps with one she is found dead in the morning. Every time that he takes off his shirt, that shirt is never again touched by anyone; and so of his other garments; and every day he chooses new garments. My companions asked how it was that this sultan eats poison in this manner. Certain merchants, who were older than the sultan, answered that his father had fed him upon poison from his childhood."

In Barbosa's version we have a very interesting and accurate account of gradual inoculation by poison compared with the taking of opium:

"He began to eat it in such small doses that it could do him no evil, and in this manner he continued so filled with poison that when a fly touched him, as soon as it reached his flesh it forthwith died and swelled up, and as many women as slept with him perished.

"And for this he kept a ring of such virtue that the poison could have no effect on her who put it in her mouth before she lay down with him. And he could never give up eating this poison, for if he did so he would die forthwith, as we see by experience of the opium which the most of the Moors and Indians eat; if they left off eating it they would die; and if those ate it who had never before eaten it, they too would die; so they begin to eat it in such small quantities that it can work them no ill, as they are reared on it, and as they grow up they are accustomed to it. This opium is cold in the fourth degree; it is the cold part of it that kills. The Moors eat it as a means of provoking lust, and the Indian women take it to kill themselves when they have fallen into any folly, or for any loss of honour, or for despair. They drink it dissolved in a little oil, and die in their sleep without perception of death."
Dames (op. cit., p. 122) notes that it was Ramusio's versions of the travels of Varthema and Barbosa which spread the story through Europe, until it found its way into Purchas (ii, 1495). Butler's allusion in Hudibras, where he turns the poison into "asps, basilisks and toads," is as follows:

"The Prince of Cambay's daily food
Is asp, and basilisk, and toad;
Which makes him have so strong a breath,
Each night he stinks a queen to death."

Part II, canto i, line 753 et seq.

Dames refers to a curious tale he heard about Nādir Shāh among the Baloches (see Folk-Lore, 1897, p. 77), in which the king's breath was so poisonous that of the two girls who helped him to clean his teeth, one died outright, and the other only just managed to recover.

It is interesting to note that in Varthema's account of Mahmūd Shāh he distinctly speaks of the practice of betel-chewing so widely distributed throughout the East. The fruit called chofole, coffolo, or in Arabic fūfel, faufel, is the betel nut, the fruit of the areca—Areca Catechu. The tamboli are the leaves of the betel vine or pan—Chavica Betel. The third ingredient, "some lime of oyster shell," is the small pellet of shell lime or chunam which is added to the piece of dried nut, both being wrapped in the leaf. Although betel-chewing is not poisonous, as was proved as early as the fifteenth century by the botanist Clusius (Charles de l'Escluse or Lécluse, 1526-1609),1 it has been known to have curious effects on people strongly addicted to the habit, and it is quite natural that such effects would be exaggerated in the hands of story-tellers, or merely in the gradual spread of a local story first told, perhaps, with a large percentage of truth, which in time would become smaller and smaller.

The spitting of betel juice in a person's face was an Indian way of offering a gross insult. In speaking of the city of Kail, or Cail (a port, now forgotten, on the coast of the Tinnevelly district of the Madras Presidency), Marco Polo2 says: "If anyone desires to offer a gross insult to another, when he meets him he spits this leaf or its juice in his face. The other immediately runs before the king, relates the insult that has been offered him, and demands leave to fight the offender. The king supplies the arms, which are sword and target, and all the people flock to see, and there the two fight till one of them is killed. They must not use the point of the sword, for this the king forbids."

1 See the note to his translation of Garcia de Orta, L. I, c. 25 (Aromatum Historia, Antwerpiae, 1567, p. 122 et seq.). The English translation, The Simples and Drugs of India, is by Clements Markham, London, 1913.

In an interesting letter to me on the subject, Dr J. D. Gimlette, the Residency Surgeon of Kelantan, tells me that in the old days Malays were in the habit of conveying poison to anyone they wanted "out of the way" in a "chew" of betel. The modern Malay criminal may also attempt to poison his victim during the process of betel-chewing. The poison, consisting of the bile of the green tree-snake (ular puchok, Dryophis prasinus, Boie-Dipsodomorphinae) mixed with that of the green water-frog and that of the jungle-crow, is smeared on the gambier used in betel-chewing. White arsenic, a common Eastern poison, could easily be mixed with the lime, and might well go undetected if the betel leaf was not carefully wiped to remove any grittiness. The Malays must always have been suspicious of such tricks, as even to-day they always wipe the leaves thoroughly before commencing chewing.

Sufficient has now been said to show how, in the East especially, exaggerated stories of poison breaths might arise. I shall have more to say on betel-chewing in a later volume.

Opium

Significant, too, is the mention of opium by Barbosa. He speaks of "opium which the most of the Moors and Indians eat." Although the contrary view has been expressed, the weight of evidence appears to indicate that the eating and drinking of opium is much more deleterious than smoking it.

Both Mahmūd Shāh and his son have been described as great opium-eaters, and at this time the practice was on the increase. The early history of the drug is very uncertain, but the discovery of opium began to attract attention about the third century B.C., when references to it are found in the works of Greek writers. The home of the Papaver somniferum appears to have been the Levant, whence it soon spread to

---

1 See the 2nd edition (1923) of his Malay Poisons and Charm Cures.
Asia Minor. It was, however, the Arabs who were chiefly responsible for disseminating the knowledge of the plant and its varied uses, and to the Mohammedans can be attributed its introduction into both India and China. Thus all the vernacular names for the drug are traceable to the Semitic corruption of opos or opion into afyûn. ¹

It was not long before opium found favour with the Hindus. There were many reasons for this. It was looked upon as a cure for several diseases, and enabled those who took it to exist on very little food during famines; it was a great restorative, a means of imparting strength in any laborious work, and was, moreover, considered a strong aphrodisiac. Apart from all this, opium was welcomed by ascetics, and, besides gânja, or Indian hemp (from which bhâng is made), became a means of producing the physical inertia and abnormal mental exaltation required for the complete conquest of all sensation and movement. It was also found to aid the observance of a protracted fast.

Then, again, it was venerated on account of the pleasant and soothing visions it produced, which were regarded as the excursions of the spirit into paradise.

No wonder then that such a powerful drug took a strong hold of the people, and appears in some form or other in literature. True it was unknown in India in the time of Somadeva, but there was no lack of other poisons, as is clear from the most cursory glance at the earliest Hindu medical works.

Russell ² says that opium is administered to children almost from the time of their birth, partly because its effects are supposed to be beneficial, and also to prevent them from crying and keep them quiet while their parents are at work. One of the favourite methods of killing female children was to place a fatal dose of opium on the nipple of the mother's breast. The practice of giving children opium is said to be abandoned at the age of eight or nine, but as that is about

---

¹ The full history of opium has yet to be written, but I would refer readers to Watt's Commercial Products of India, 1908, pp. 845-861, which is a revised and abridged account from his Dictionary of the Economic Products of India, and contains many useful references. The latest and most interesting information will be found in a little pamphlet by Prof. H. A. Giles, Some Truths about Opium, Cambridge, 1923. The article “Opium,” by E. M. Holmes, in the Ency. Brit. is also well worth perusal.

² Tribes and Castes of the Central Provinces, vol. iii, p. 319.
the marriage age of girls it seems as if the harm would be already done, and the habit a very difficult one to break. I can find no evidence as to whether children were given poisonous herbs to suck before opium was introduced; the possibility, however, seems quite a likely one. The prohibition of alcoholic liquor by the Brāhmaṇ priesthood only led to the use of noxious drugs, and opium contributed much to the degeneration of the Rājpūts, the representatives of the old Kshatriya or warrior class.¹

Poison by Intercourse

The fatal look and poisonous breath which help to characterise the poison-damsel's snake nature cannot be taken alone. They appear to be mere variants of the original idea stated, or perhaps only hinted at, in the story as told in India. There are several considerations that help to show what was originally meant. In all versions we are told that the girl was very beautiful and at once captured the admiration of her intended victim. The evil effects of her bite are mentioned. Remembering the Eastern origin of the tale, we must regard this as an amorous bite on the lip, probably drawing blood, and so allowing the poisonous saliva of the girl to enter the whole system of the man. Then, again, the perspiration is mentioned.² All these facts point to intercourse as the most obvious and successful way of passing on the poison.

Aristotle told Alexander that if he had had intercourse with the poisoned woman he would have died. I take this to include all the numerous methods which in later versions were taken separately. The idea would be appreciated by the Hindu, who would imagine the woman bringing into play the whole ars amoris indica, as detailed by Vātsyāyana. It is almost surprising that no versions suggest nail-scratching as a means of conveying the poison.

So much for the actual idea of poisonous intercourse, but ¹ See Col. Tod's Annals and Antiquities of Rājasthān, edited by W. Crooke, Oxford, 1920; the latter's articles on the Rājpūt clans in his Tribes and Castes of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh; and Russell, op. cit., vol. iv, p. 423 et seq. For evidence against the Rājpūts being the offspring of the Kshatriyas see Forbes, Rās Mālā, edited by H. G. Rawlinson, 1924, vol. i, p. 214.

² In one version, that in the Parishīštēparvan, the perspiration was caused by the heat of the sacrificial fire (see supra).
the question which is of far greater interest is, What gave rise to such an idea?

Perhaps it depends on the interpretation of the word "poisonous." It is well known that in many countries the first intercourse after marriage is looked upon with such dread, and as an act of so inauspicious a nature, that the husband either appoints a proxy for the first night, or else takes care that if the girl is a virgin the hymen be broken by artificial means.\textsuperscript{1} It is hard to say exactly why the first sexual connection was so greatly feared, but the chief idea seems to have been that at any critical time evil spirits are especially active. We have already seen (pp. 166-169) how special care had to be taken at birth; so also at marriages it was equally important to guard against any malign influences which may be at work trying to do harm on the first night of the marriage. Such attempts, however, would not be renewed, and if only the husband could shift the primary danger on to someone else’s shoulders all would be well.

There is no evidence that any form of poisoning was feared, but the idea occurs in a curious passage from Mandeville. In describing the islands in the lordship of Prester John, he says\textsuperscript{2}:

"Another Yle is there toward the Northe, in the See Ocean, wherc that ben fulle crueld and ful evele Wommen of Nature; and thei han precious Stones in hire Eyen: and thei ben of that kynde, that zif thei beholden ony man with wratthe, thei slen him anon with the beholdynge, as doth the Basilisk.\textsuperscript{3}

"Another Yle is there, fulle fair and gode and gret, and fulle of peple, where the custom is suche, that the first nyght that thei ben maryed, thei maken another man to lye be hire Wifes, for to have hire Maydenhode: and thenfore thei taken gret Huyre and gret Thank. And ther ben certain men in every Town, that serven of none other thing; and thei clepen hem Cadeberiz, that is to seyne, the Foles of Wanhope. For thei of the Contree holden it so gret a thing and so perilous, for to have the Maydenhode of a Woman, that hem semethe that thei that haven first the Maydenhode, puttethe him in aventure of his Lif. And zif the Husbonde fynde his Wif Mayden, that other next nyghte, aftre that sche scholde have ben leyn by of the man, that is assigned therefore, perauntes for Dronkenesse or for some other cause, the Husbonde schalle pleyne upon him, that he hath not done his Deveer, in suche cruelle wise, as thoughe he wolde have him slayn thernfore. But after the firste nyght, that thei ben leyn by, thei kepen hem so streytely, that thei ben not so hardy to speke with no man. And I asked hem the cause, whi that thei helden suche custom: and thei sedyen me, that of old tyme, men hadden ben dede for deflourynge of Maydenes, that hadden Serpentes in hire Bodyes, that stongen men upon hire Zerdes, that thei dyeden anon: and therefore thei helden that custom, to make other men, ordeyn’d thernfore, to lye be hire Wyfes, for drede of Dethe, and to assaye the passage be another, rather that for to putte hem in that aventure."

\textsuperscript{2} The \textit{Voiage and Travaile of Sir John Mandeville, Kt.}, with an Introduction, Additional Notes and Glossary, J. O. Halliwell, 1889, p. 285 et seq. (In the 1866 reprint the page is 284 et seq.) The 1895 edition, illustrated by Layard, omits all the above except the first paragraph (p. 355).

\textsuperscript{3} Pliny, Lib. VII, c. 2.
APPENDIX III—POISON-DAMSELS

Although we must look upon the above as an invention of Mandeville himself, the idea could well have been founded on fact. For instance, apart from the custom of employing proxies for the first night of marriage, there has always been a curious connection between snakes and intercourse. In India the snake is often represented as encircling the linga. In a paper read before the Asiatic Society, J. H. Rivett-Carnac¹ refers to certain paintings in Nāgpūr, and says that "the positions of the women with the snakes were of the most indecent description and left no doubt that, so far as the idea represented in these sketches was concerned, the cobra was regarded as the phallus."

The subject has been treated by many scholars² and cannot be discussed here further.

The most simple explanation of the true meaning of poisoning by intercourse which at once suggests itself is that it was merely venereal disease unrecognised as such. Here we at once open up an enormous field of research, much too complicated and technical to pursue here. All I can hope to do is to state briefly what the chief opinions on the subject are, and the consequent bearing they have upon the question of poison-damsels.

In spite of assertions to the contrary, it is a generally accepted fact that syphilis was introduced into Europe by way of Spain in 1493 by Columbus’ men, who had contracted the disease in Haiti. From Spain it spread to Italy, being carried there by the Spanish troops who enlisted in Charles VIII’s army. This view is held by Havelock Ellis and many other authoritative writers. It is also accepted by the National Council for Combating Venereal Disease and the British Medical Journal (see below).

There has, however, been considerable controversy on the subject, some attempting to prove that venereal disease has existed in all countries from the earliest times, and that mummies from ancient Egypt show undoubted signs of syphilis. One of our greatest authorities on such subjects, however, Prof. G. Eliot Smith, tells me that there is absolutely no evidence even to suggest that the disease existed in Egypt before mediaeval times. He says, moreover, that there is no sign of it in ancient Egyptian remains, and that had it existed there it most certainly would have left its mark.

In Central America, however, the antiquity of the disease is fairly well established. As time went on, the natives became practically immune, but when it spread to the Spaniards, the disease assumed a virulent form. In an article on the subject

1 Psychology of Sex, vol. vi ("Sex in Relation to Society"), p. 321 et seq.

APPENDIX III—POISON-DAMSELS

one of the greatest authorities on Central America declares his belief in the American origin of syphilis. He quotes (among others) Montejo y Robledo in the fourth report of the International Americanists' Congress at Madrid in 1881 (Actas, Tomo I, p. 331 et seq.).

That the Mexicans looked upon the disease as something divine is clear from the fact that they had a god of syphilis, named Nanahuatzin, who was a satellite of the sun-god. The only known statue of the god is in Mr Fenton's collection, inspection of which leaves little doubt as to its identification. Mr Fenton also showed me the sun-god, which is represented as having gap-teeth, in keeping with the disease which undoubtedly forms one of its attributes.

Although scholars are not unanimous in their acceptance of the above theory, evidence to the contrary seems to be quite unconvincing.

However this may be, stories certainly existed in the Middle Ages in Europe which seem to show undoubted reference to the disease, which was looked upon as a magic poisoning, the handiwork of a witch, or exceedingly clever woman, whose knowledge was something out of the ordinary. Take, for instance, the legend of the death of King Wenceslaus II of Bohemia in 1305.

According to the contemporary poet, Ottacker, the king grew daily weaker without any apparent cause. Suspicion fell on the king's favourite and trusted mistress, one Agnes, a most beautiful and accomplished woman. It was rumoured that she had accepted bribes from certain men to defile herself in such a manner as to bring about the king's death by her embrace. "How could you do a deed like this?" says the poet. "How could you mix poison with the fathomless sweetness which you carry in your delicate body? Mistress, you betrayed him, just as the Romans did when they betrayed an emperor. They brought up a child on poison, who later became the emperor's mistress, and after he had lain with her he died. But that case was different, as the child had been trained by the Romans that she might poison the Emperor.”

2 This is the German poet and historian who flourished at the end of the thirteenth and beginning of the fourteenth centuries, and must not be confounded with the King of Bohemia (Ottacker or Ottakar) of about the same date.

The poet, in conclusion, curses her and calls down the wrath of heaven on any such treacherous woman.1

About a hundred years later we find a curious tale dealing with the death of King Ladislao (also called Ladislaus, Ladislas, or Lanzilao) of Naples. He aspired to absolute rule of Italy, but, according to one version, was mysteriously poisoned by a trick of the Florentines. The story goes 2 that they bribed a certain unscrupulous doctor of Perugia, whose beautiful daughter was the mistress of Ladislao. The unnatural father persuaded the girl that if she wanted to be loved exclusively and unceasingly by her royal lover she must secretly rub herself with a certain ointment which he himself had prepared for her. The deluded girl believed him and did his bidding, used the ointment, which was composed chiefly of the juice of aconite (monk's-hood), and both she and the king lost their lives.

Although such stories as these are of considerable interest, they afford no conclusive proof of the existence of venereal disease in Europe before the end of the fifteenth century. It is impossible to say what was the exact nature of these mysterious illnesses or how they originated.

Syphilis appears to have been unknown in India till the end of the fifteenth or beginning of the sixteenth century, when it was introduced by the Portuguese.3

But quite apart from such evidence as this, the time the disease takes to show itself is greatly against its use in a story where the effect has to be immediate and causing practically instantaneous death.

It seems, therefore, that we must look for some means of 1 For the complete passage see R. D. P. Hieronymus Pez, Scriptores rerum Austriacarum veteres ac genuini, Tom. III, Ratisbonæ, 1745, cap. deciliv, pp. 741-742.

3 See J. Jolly, Indische Medicin, Strassburg, 1901; Iwan Bloch, Ursprung der Syphilis, Jena, 1901, vol. i, p. 283 et seq. The British Medical Journal tells me that they know of no evidence of the occurrence of syphilis in India before 1495 and consider its introduction can be placed with very little doubt about A.D. 1500. It was due to the Portuguese explorers, who had been infected as a sequel to the introduction of the disease in Europe by Columbus' men.
imparting death which (1) existed undoubtedly from olden times in India, (2) is practically instantaneous, and (3) has a distinct connection with poison.

Although poisonous plants could be cited, there is a much more obvious and certain thing—namely, the sting of the cobra. Here, I think, we have the clue to the whole idea.

In the first place we are fully aware of the great antiquity of the reverence paid to the cobra in India, a reverence which, however, is naturally mixed with dread. How great that dread must be we can better appreciate when we glance at the amazing statistics of deaths due to snake-bite. The average annual death-roll is about 20,000 people. In 1889 there were 22,480 human beings and 3,798 cattle killed by snakes, the chief being the cobra, the krait and Russell’s viper. In more recent years the figures have increased. Thus in 1911 the deaths due to snake-poison were 24,312; in 1915, 26,406, while in 1922 the figure dropped to 20,090.

No further evidence is needed to emphasise the deadliness of the sting of the cobra and the krait. If the poison enters a large vein, death is very rapid and all so-called antidotes are unavailing. The poison of a snake becomes exhausted after it has struck frequently, and in cases where a cobra’s sting does little harm it is usually to be explained by the fact that the reptile must have already bitten and not yet re-formed its poison.

It is a curious fact that a snake cannot poison itself or one of its own species, and only any other genus of venomous snake in a slight degree. This brings us a step nearer our inquiry. It is obvious that in a country like India, infested with snakes, and where the resulting mortality is so large, the customs of the reptiles should have been studied in detail. This has been largely done by snake-charmers, whose livelihood depends on their ability to catch them alive and train them sufficiently for their particular object in view. A snake-charmer’s secret lies chiefly in his dexterity and fearlessness. There is, however, another important factor to be considered—incubation. It is a well-known fact that snake venom is perfectly digestible, and that if the mouth and stomach are free from abrasions quantities of venom can be taken with no ill effects. It is on this principle that the snake-

1 For further details of deaths from snake-bite in India prior to 1891 see Sir Joseph Fayrer, On Serpent-worship and on the Venomous Snakes of India, being a paper read before the Victoria Institute, 1892. For the recent figures
I am indebted to the High Commissioner for India.
charmors work, inoculating themselves with increasing doses of venom until they are immune from the bite of the particular snake whose venom they have used. For instance, if cobra-venom is chosen, immunity will be obtained only against cobra-venom, and viper-venom would prove fatal in the usual way.\footnote{1}

It is a fairly widely recognised fact that a child who has once had measles is not likely to get it again, for the simple reason that a stronger resistance is set up by the one attack. We are all aware that vaccination is a protection against smallpox, and that anti-typhoid inoculation preserves one to a considerable degree against typhoid fever. In the former case the vaccine lymph actually causes a mild attack of smallpox (just in the same way as the snake-charmer gets slightly poisoned by his repeated bites), and in the latter case dead typhoid bacilli are injected under the skin. Just as cobra-inoculation is no protection against viper-venom, so vaccination is no protection against typhoid.

As the system on which the snake-charmer works became more and more familiar, and experience showed only too well the fatal results of cobra bites to people who are not immune, it is quite reasonable to imagine that this knowledge would find its way into fiction. It would, indeed, be curious if it was not so, for as history affords so many examples of vegetable and mineral poisoning, we can well understand that stories, at any rate, would arise telling of snake-poisons.

All the story-teller had to do was to transfer the idea from the snake-charmer to a beautiful maiden, and introduce the possibility of passing on a poison thus accumulated. The method of doing this would naturally be intercourse, a bite, perspiration and so on.

As is to be expected, we find stories where the poison is definitely stated as being derived from plants. The chief of these was el-biś (the Arabic form of the Sanskrit \textit{visha}). In al-Qazwini’s\footnote{2} \textit{Kosmographie} we read: "Among the wonders of India may be mentioned the plant el-biş, which is found only in India, and which is a deadly poison. The Indian kings, we are told, when they want to conquer an enemy ruler, take a new-born girl and strew the plant first for some time under her cradle, then under her mattress and then under her clothes. Finally they give it her to drink in her milk, until the growing girl begins to eat it without hurt. This girl they send with presents to the king whom they wish to destroy, and when he has intercourse with her he dies."

Conclusion

To summarise briefly, I would say that the motif of the poison-damsel originated in India at a very early period before the Christian era. The poison-damsel herself has no existence in actual fact, but is merely the creation of the story-teller, who derived the idea from what he saw around him. First of all he was acquainted with poisonous herbs and knew something of the uses to which they were put, but he was still more familiar with the ways of the snake-charmer and the methods of his gradual inoculation. He could not help being fully aware of the fatal results of the bite of the cobra and krait, and the reverence and fear of the snake throughout India was everywhere evident. Thus there was plenty of material for the creation of the poison-damsel, and in later days the knowledge of opium and other foreign drugs would merely introduce some new variant of the tale.

Like so many Eastern stories, the legend of the poison-damsel travelled slowly westwards, and received its greatest impetus by becoming attached to the Pseudo-Aristotelean myths of mediaeval Europe. Its inclusion in such a famous collection as the Gesta Romanorum was a further means of its increasing popularity.

I need hardly say that I have touched only the very fringe of the subject. Whilst many important and extremely interesting queries have been raised in the course of this appendix, I have, for the most part, refrained from offering any solution, and have been content with stating facts and giving references.

Most readers will, I think, agree with me that, despite many disadvantages, there is much that is attractive about the poison-damsel.
INDEX I

SANSKRIT WORDS AND PROPER NAMES

The n stands for "note" and the index number refers to the number of the note. If there is no index number to the n it refers to a note carried over from a previous page.

Abano, Peter of, Libellus de veneris, 300, 300n²; works of, 39n²
Abbott, G. F., Macedonian Folk-Lore, 70n²
Abruzzi, Palena in the, 202n¹
Acacia speciosa (siras tree), 118
Achilles with his horses, Xanthos and Balios, conversation of, 57n¹
Aconitum spicatum, deadliest aconite, 279
Aðadá, 155n²
Adam’s Bridge (Rāma’s Bridge), 84n¹
Adam’s exile, Ceylon regarded by the Arabs as the place of, 84n², 85n Adam’s footprint, 85n Adam’s Peak, beliefs regarding the depression on, 84n¹, 85n Aðáhá, 155n²
Aðáhá (downwards), 218n¹
Áddityasaptha, King, 97-99, 111-114
Áddityasena, King, 54-59, 62, 64, 65, 68, 79
Áeschinês, 278
Áesclapious (Asklepios), MS. of Secretum Secretorum found in the Temple of the Sun dedicated to, 288
Áfanaséïf, “The Friend,” 202n¹
Afghanistan, aconite in, 250
Africa, General Botha’s campaign in German S.W., 281; polyanthy in, 18; umbrellas used at native courts in, 271
Áfjúā (opium), 304
Ágádas (anti-poisonous compounds), 276
Agamemnon, 127n²
Aghání (not to be killed), 240
Aghori, sect of ascetics, 90n³
Agnes, mistress of King Wenceslaus II, 309
Agni, God of Fire, 97, 101, 255n²
Agniada, Bráhman named, 95, 133
Agnihotri (fire-priest), 257
Agnyādhāna (“Establishment of the Sacred Fires”), 256n²
Agrammes or Xandrames (Dhana - Nanda, Nanda, etc.), 282, 289n²
Agryatapas, hermit named, 221
Ahalyā, story of, 45-46
Ahastagrāhāyogāyam, 24n³
Aiṅśma, doctrine of, 241
Ajīb, son of Khazib, 223n¹
Akbar, 110n²
Akula (by descent), 158n¹
Alakā, 93
Alakeswara Kathā, the, 123
Albertus Magnus, De mirabilibus mundi, 299, 299n³; works of, 288, 289n³
Alexander the Great, 252, 282, 285, 287, 288, 291, 292, 292n², 293-296, 299, 300; and Darius, 278
Alexander III, Pope, 268
“Allah, Abode of” (Allahābād), 110n²
Allahābād (“Abode of Allah”), 110n³; pillars at, 92n³
Allahābād (Prayāga), 110n²
Al - Qazwīnī, Kosmographie, 293, 312
Ár.getMonth (mango), 118
Amāvas, or no-moon night, 118
Ambikā (Pārvati, Durgā, etc.), 138n³
Ambanvegatāḥ (“by the current”), 217n²
America, antiquity of syphilis in Central, 308, 309, 309n¹
Amjad and As’ād, 124
Ammianus Marcellinus, 263
Amita (nectar), 155n²; stolen by Rāhu, 81
Amsala (“firm” or “tender”), 241
Ananga, a name of Kāma, the Hindu Cupid, 74n²
Ananga (“the bodiless”—i.e. Kāma), 164
Ananta (a scented drug), 276
Andromeda and Perseus, 70n²
Angia or angiya (bodice), 50, 50n²
Angiya or angiya (bodice), 50, 50n²
Angiya, bodice of Northern India, 50n²
Anglo - Saxons, umbrellas used by, 269, 269n³
Anjali-measure (half-a-seer), 276
Annam parents, children sold to a smith by some, 166, 167
Anspach, A. E., De Alexandri Magni Expeditione Indica, 282n¹
Antelias, Bellerophon and, 120
Antichrist, announcement of the birth of, 39n²
Antioch, Arabic MS. found in, 289
Anupu and Batti, two brothers called, 120-131
Anvāri-i-Suhailī (Fables of Pilpay), 297, 297n²
Anyatahplakshā, Lotus-lake called, 246, 249
Apollo and Tyana, “Dragons of India,” 108n
Apsaras, 34-36, 245-259
Apsarases, 35n¹, 175n¹, 252
THE OCEAN OF STORY

Apuleius, the Cupid and Psyche myth, 253; Golden Ass, 60n
Arabia, poison-damsel in, 286
Arabs, meeting eyebrows considered beautiful by the, 104n Arabs regard Ceylon as the place of Adam’s exile, 84n1, 85n Aralū (Sheol or Hades), 61n
Arany (fire-drill or -stick), 948, 255, 256
Areca Catechu, 302
Arer women of Kanara, 169
Argha, an obligation to gods and venerable men, 77, 77n
Argo, the freeing of, 72n
Arindama, hermit named, 127
Aristophanes, Birds, 152n
Aristotle, Pseudo-, Secretum Secretorum, 286 et seq.
Arjuna, son of Pându, 16, 224
Arkha plants, 161
Arminius, offer of the prince of the Catti to poison, 277
Arrian, Indica, 263
Ars amoris indica, 305
Artemis, the hind of, 127n
Artha (wealth), 180n
Arthasastra, the, Kauṭilya, 271n, 283n
'Arthato, 40n
Arūdhaḥ, 89n
Aryans, polyandry regarded with disfavour by the, 17; value of war horses among the, 57n
Āryavarman, King, 73, 74, 78
Āś (to pervade), 251
As'ad and Amjad, 124
Asana, ashes of, 276
Asandhimitrā, wife of Āsoka, 120
Āshādha, 217
Asheetes, King Koffee Kalcali of the, 271
Ashee Collection, British Museum, 272
Asia Minor, poison-damsel in, 286
Asklepios (Æsculapius), 288
Aso (October), 119
Āsoka, Buddhist Emperor of India, 120
Āsoka, first Emperor of India, Pātaliputra the capital of, 39n
Asokadatta and Vijayadatta, 196-213, 238n
Asokavega, name given to Asokadatta, 212
Assam, aconite in, 280; customs connected with eclipses in, 81; Kāmarūpa the western portion of, 94, 94n
Assur-nasir-pal, royal umbrella held over, 263
Assyria, magic circle in, 99n; umbrella in, 263
Āstā, 105n
Āste (shaft of umbrella), 269
Astyadeias and Peleus, 120
Ātū, 105n
Aṣubhi ("with his breath"), 41n
Āsura brothers Sunda and Upasunda, 13-14
Āsura, Rāhu an, 81, 82
Asura Tāraka, the, 100, 101, 102, 103
Āsuras, 93n; Māyādhara, King of the, 35
Aśva-karma, ashes of, 276
Āsvattha tree (Ficus religiosa), 96, 147n, 189, 247, 250, 255; voice from the, 97
Āwpat tree, 255
Ātavara-Feda, the, 240, 241
Atheneus, 263
Ātīnabhandhiniḥ (over-insisting), 221n
Ātīnivariniḥ (feeling satisfaction), 221n
Australians, nature myths among the, 252
Austria, Maximilian of, 112n
Avenger, William of, works of, 99n
Āvantikā (Vāsamadattā), 21-23, 29
Avichi, the hell called, 176
Axon, W. E. A., Lancashire Gleanings, 76n, 77n
Āyus, son of Urvaśī and Pururavas, 249, 259
Aṣrī (Arabic, "blue eyes"), 299
Babylon, belief in vampires in, 61n; Nebuchadrezzar, King of, 194n; umbrella in, 263
Babylonia, magic circle in, 99n
Bachapa, minister of Raja Kāmpila, 122
Bacon, Roger, works of, 99n
Badagas, fire made by the, 258n
Badarikā, hermitage of, 36
Badger, G. P., Travels of Ludovico di Varthema, 300, 300n, 301
Bahiricas, verses handed down by the, 247
Baiti, Anupu and, two brothers called, 120-121
Bakhtīyār Nāma, the, 123
Baladeva, father of Saktideva, 174
Balad, forcibly), 129n
Balios and Xanthos, conversation of Achilles with, 57n
Baloches, the, 302
Baluchistan, aconite in, 280
Bandello, Novelle, 10n
Banjāra women wear spangles set in gold, 23n
Bantu negro races, eating human flesh among the, 198n, 199n
Bapst, Michael, 300
Bapst von Rochlitz, Michael, Artzney Kunst und Wunder Buch, 294n
Bar tree (Ficus indica), 118
Barbarossa, Frederick, 268
Barbier de Meynard, Les Colliers d’Or, 298
Barbosa, Duarte, 269, 300, 300n, 301, 303
Baring-Gould, 104n; Curious Myths of the Middle Ages, 39n; Strange Survivals, 272
Bartsch, K., Deutsche Lieder- dichter des 12. bis 14. Jahr- hunderts, 292n; Sagen, Märchen und Gebreuche aus Mecklenburg, 98n, 107n, 153n
Basæti, people who eat human flesh (Uganda), 199n
Basile, Pentamerone (Burton’s translation), 51n, 190n, 253
Burton, R. F.—continued
190n⁴, 193n⁴, 201n², 202n³, 218n⁴, 219n³, 220n, 223m³, 224n³; Pilgrimage to El Medina and Mecca, 271; translation of Basile's Pentamerone, 5n³, 190n¹, 253
Bushell, Chinese Art, 264
Butea frondosa, the sacred tree, 169
Butler, Hudibras, 302
Bynkershoek, works of, 279

Cadeberiz, professional proxies of husbands, 307
Cail or Kail, Tinnevelly district of the Madras Presidency, 302
Calah, sculptures from, 263
Calmette, R., Les Venins, les animaux venimeux et la séro-therapie antivenimeuse, 281
Cambridge edition of the Jātakas, 285n³
Campbell, Notes on the Spirit Basis of Belief and Custom, 167, 229n³
Campbell Thompson, R., The Devils and Evil Spirits of Babylonia, 61n¹; Semitic Magic, 99n, 193n¹, 295
Camphor Islands, King of the, 190n¹
Cananor, 269
Candace, Queen of Ethiopia, eunuch of, 85n Carnatic, the, 92n⁴
Catti offers to poison Arminius, prince of the, 277
Cecioni, Il Secretum Secretorum attributo ad Aristotele, 289n²
Central Africa, eating human flesh in, 195n²
Central America, antiquity of syphilis in, 308, 309, 309n¹
Central India Agency, hard life of women in the, 19
Central India, Pardhi caste of, 88n¹
Central Provinces, belief about Rahu in the, 82; jikas made in districts of the, 23n³
Ceylon (Lanka), 82, 84n¹
Ceylon regarded by the Arabs as the place of Adam's exile, 84n¹, 85n Chakkamukki (flint and steel), 256n⁴
Chakora (partridge), 235, 235n³
Chakora subsists upon moon-beams, 235n³
Chakra, 54n³
Chakradhara, Brahman named, 59, 60, 65
Chakravāka (Brahmanyduck), 36
Chakravarti, S. C., trans. of Mudrā Rakhshasa, 283n³
Chaldea and Babylon, belief in vampires in, 61n¹
Chālita, a dramatic dance, 35, 35n²
Chamāp, 220n
Chāmūnda (Pārvati, Durgā, Kāli, Dēvi, etc.), 195n², 214-215
Chānākya (Kāutilya, or Vishnugupta), Brahman named, 283, 283n¹, 284, 285 Chand, the poet, 266
Chandāla, 228
Chandamahāsena, King, 6, 48, 93, 128
Chandavikrama, King, 230
Chandragnipa, founder of the Maurya Empire, 281-285
Chandraprabhā, son of Ādityaprabha, 113, 114
Chandraprabhā, Vidyādhāra named, 220-222, 237, 238
Chandraprabhā, wife of Dharmagupta, 39
Chandarekhā, daughter of Saśikhandā, 221, 237
Charles de l'Escale or Lécluse (Clusius), 302, 302n¹
Chatterji, K. K., Syphilis in General Practice, with Special Reference to the Tropics, 308n³
Chaturdārikā (Book V), 170-242
Chātyr (folding umbrella), 268
Chaucer, House of Fame, 219n³
Chaukūnārāṇy ceremony, 118
Chauvin, V., Bibliographie des Ouvrages Arabes, 46n³, 58n¹, 108n, 122, 131n¹, 136n³, 147n¹, 151n¹, 190n¹, 193n¹, 202n³, 224n, 297n²
Chovaca Betel (betel vine or pan), 302
Chedi, land of, 89
Ch'êng of the Chou Dynasty, King, 264
Chenin (sandal), 264
Chhatrapati, Lord of the Umbrella, title of an Indian king, 267
Chhattisgarh division of the Central Provinces, 82
Child, English and Scotch Popular Ballads, 70n¹
China, customs connected with eclipses in, 81; introduction of opium by the Mohammedans into, 304; pagodas of, 266; umbrellas in, 264
Chitrāngada, Vidyādhara named, 147, 148
Chitrāngā, stepmother of Sārangādhara, 121, 122
Chofole, fruits called, 301, 302
Chola māṇḍala, or district, 92n⁴
Chola race, the king of the, 92, 92n⁴
Chola, sovereignty of, 92, 92n⁴
Choli, bodice of Western India, 50n³
Chou Dynasty, King Ch'êng of the, 264
Chowrie (thāmya yat), 264
Chowries, 43, 80, 90, 111, 162; swans like, 158
Chunār, Mirzapur district, rites to produce rain in, 117, 118
Cicerò, De Officiis, 277
Circars, Northern, 92n²
Cīḻāryā, 201n²
Cīḻārohyā, 201n²
Claudian, De Bello Gild., 277
Clouston, W. S., 123, 202n¹; Book of Sindibad, 114n, 120, 121, 122, 224n; A Group of Eastern Romances and Stories, 108n; Popular Tales and Fictions, 108n, 114n, 122, 169, 190n¹, 192n³, 224n
Clusius, Aromatum Historia, 302, 302n¹; (Charles de l'Escale or Lécluse), 302, 302n¹
Cochin, Nairs or Nāyers of, 17-19
Coelho; Contos Populares Portugueses, 76n³
Coffolo or Chofole (betel nut), 302
Collier, Mr, 113n³
Columbus' men, introduction of syphilis into Europe by, 308
Comorre the Cursed, identification of Bluebeard with, 224n
Comparetti, Richerche intorno, etc., 122
Constantine the Great, Fausta, wife of, 120
Constantinople, parasols in, 268
Conway, Demonology, 117
Cony beare, F. C., "A Brittany Marriage Custom," Folk-Lore, 23n
Coorg (South India), polyandry in, 18
Coote, H. C., trans. of Comparetti's Richerche intorno al Libro di Sindicab, 122
Cordier, Yule and, Book of Ser Marco Polo, 85n, 266, 268, 268n, 302, 302m, 303; Cathay and the Way Thither, 85n, 268n
Coromandel coast, Chola the modern appellation of, 92n
Coryate, Crudities, 270
Costanzo, Angelo di, Historia del regno di Napoli, 310, 310n
Cowell, "The Legend of the Oldest Animals," Y Cymrodor, 190n
Crispus, son of Constantine the Great, 120
Crooke, W.—continued
Inst., 119; Popular Religion and Folk-Lore of Northern India, 57n, 82, 83, 96n, 99n, 121, 133n, 142n, 155n, 193n, 197n, 202n, 240, 256, 256n; "Serpent Worship (Indian)," Hastings' Ency. Rel. Eth., 307n; "Some Notes on Homeric Folk-Lore," Folk-Lore, 57n; Tribes and Castes of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, 119, 166, 168, 257, 257m, 305n; "The Veneration of the Cow in India," Folk-Lore, 242
Cunningham, General, 69n; Ancient Geography of India, 3n; Archaeological Reports, 110n
Cupid, Ananga, a name for Kama the Hindu, 74n; Kavadeva, the Hindu, 51n
Cupid and Psyche myth, 253
Curula of Ptolemy, Murala identified with, 99n
Dadau, 185n
Dā-hānī-sī (consumer), 25, 25m
Dāitya, 230
Dāmannaka, story of, 113n
Dames, M. Longworth, Book of Duarte Barbosa, 18, 269n, 300, 300n, 301, 303; "A Legend of Nādīr Shāh," Folk-Lore, 302
Dānava, 237
Dānasvās, demons or giants, 223n; war between Indra and the, 35
Dāndin, Daśa Kumara Charita, 183n, 184n
Daniels, C. L., and C. M. Stevans, Encyclopedia of Superstitions, Folk-Lore and the Occult Sciences, 145n
Darbaris of H. H. the Mahārajā of Mysore, 119
Darbhā grass, 151, 152, 176, 229n
Darius, 293
Darius and Alexander the Great, 278
Darjayat, 53m
Daśa Kumara Charita, the, Dāndin, 183m, 184n
Dasent, Popular Tales from the Norse, 190n
Daśnāmīs ("ten names"), 90n
Dāttē, 182n
David, 252
[David, Caroline F. Rhys, "Notes on Early Economic Conditions in Northern India"] Journ. Roy. As. Soc., 240
David, Rhys, "Adam's Peak," Hastings' Ency. Rel. Eth., 85n; Buddhist India, 3n; trans. of the Jātakas, 52n
Day, L. B. [Folk-Tales of Bengal], 105n
Deccan, gambling in the, 252n; wrestler from the, 220
Dekker, The Honest Whore, 145m
Del Rio, Disquisitiones Magicae, 300, 300n
Delhi, Hastinapura near, 16; the Lāṭ at, 92m; Frithi Rāj, the last Hindu king of, 266
Democritos, 108n
Denmark, meeting eyebrows in, 104n
Dervish Makhlis of Isphānā, The Thousand and One Days, 6n
Deva, 238n
Devadāru wood, 106
Devadāsa, story of, 86-88
Dīvā-lāris (handmaidens of the gods), 17
Devadatta the gambler, 231-236; story of, 129-132
Devasena, herdsman named, 51, 52; king named, 6-8, 69, 71, 79
Dēvī (Kāli, Durgā, Pārvatī, Chāmuṇḍā, etc.), 198n, 214, 215; Tantric rites of votaries of, 198n, 199n
Dhā (knives), 167
Dhanananda or Nanda (Agrammes or Xandrames), 282, 282n
Dhārīn (carrying), 90n
Dharma (virtue), 180n
Dharmagupta, merchant named, 39-41
Dharmakalpadruma, 14n
Dharmadat, King, 286, 286n
Dharmā at the sun's door, sitting, 82
THE OCEAN OF STORY

Dhātā, 1n²
Dhātṛā, 1n²
Dhava, ashes of, 276
Dhaval Chandra, Jayanta, minister of, 121
Dhritarāṣṭra, prince named, 16
Dīlya = heavenly (snake), 298
Diočes Carystius, 290
Dīrghatapas, brother of Sūryatapas, 190, 191, 194
Divālī, or Feast of Lights, 118, 232n
Dohada motif (longings of pregnancy), 31
Dōms, belief in the sanctity of iron among the, 168; a criminal tribe of North India, 168
Dorys, G., La Femme Turque, 163n
Douce, Mr, 113n²
Doxon, Contes Albanais, 190n
Draupadi, wife of Yudhishthira and his brothers, 13, 13n², 14, 16, 17, 22
Drāvida, 92n²
Dravidians, polyandry practised by the, 17
Drew, F., The Jummo and Kashmir Territories, 232n
Dri-giṣa (‘‘poison in a glance’’), 298
Dri-dīti-vaṣa (‘‘poison in a glance’’), 298
Drupada, father of Draupadi, 16
Dryophis prosimus (green tree-snake), 303
Duarte Barbosa, 269, 300, 300n², 301, 303
Dūb grass as a relief from taboo during eclipses, 82
Dubois, Hindu Manners, Customs and Ceremonies, 168, 242
Duhkaladbikā, a daughter of Devasena, 69-71
Dungdubha, a non-venomous snake, 152n²
Dunlop, History of Fiction (Liebrecht’s trans.), 6n², 39n², 127n²
Dans Scotus, works of, 288, 288n³
Durdarsāh, 97n²
Durdasāh, 97n²
Durgā (Pārvati, Gaurī, etc.), 62, 136n², 159, 221, 228, 236
Durgā, temple of, 141, 196, 199; like the mouth of death, 227
Durgāprāśad text, 28n², 30n², 35n², 36n¹, 40n¹², 41n¹, 44n², 51n³, 53n³, 56n¹, 60n¹, 70n¹, 78n¹, 92n², 102n¹, 104n¹, 140n¹, 152n³, 177n¹, 195n¹, 201n¹, 204n², 218n², 221n¹, 227n¹³, 235n¹, 236n¹, 238n¹
Dūrva grass, rice, flowers and water, Argha an oblation of, 77, 77n¹
Durvāsas, hermit named, 23, 24

Eggling, J., Sacred Books of the East, 245n¹
Egypt, belief in vampires in, 61n¹; umbrellas in, 264
Eksakakrā, Pāṇḍūs lived at, 16
El-bis found only in India, 313
Elijah, 31
Eliot Smith, Prof. G., 308
Ellis, Early English Metrical Romances, 115n
Ellis, Havelock, Studies in the Psychology of Sex, 229n², 308, 308n¹
Emir of Abyssinia at Harar, Burton’s visit to the, 271, 271n¹
Entwoven, R. E., 7n¹
Epiphanius, 299, 299n²
Ersch and Gruber, Encyclopädie, 163n
 Eskimos, nature myths among the, 262
Ethiopia, eunuch of Candace, Queen of, 55n¹
Etienne de Bourbon, Liber de Donis, 114n
Ettmüller edit. of Frauenlob’s poetry, 292n²
Eumenes, condemnation of use of poison by, 278
Europe, introduction of syphilis by Columbus’ men into, 305; the poison-damsel in, 292-297
Eya, 28n¹
Eyre, E. J., Journals of Expeditions of Discovery into Central Australia, 280, 280n¹
Ezekiel, 194n
Faraj, the Egyptian Sultan, 279
Fausel (betel nut, Arabic), 302
Fausboll, V., Hindu Mythology according to the Mahabharata, 45n¹; edit. of the Jātakas, 52n¹
Fausta, wife of Constantine the Great, 120
Favre, Mélanges, 289n²
Fawcett, Bulletin of the Madras Museum, 199n
Fayrer, Sir Joseph, On Serpent-worship and on the Venomous Snakes of India,” 311n¹
Fenton, Mr, 309
Fenwick, C. G., trans. of Vattel’s Droit des Gens, 278n¹
Fergusson, J., J. Burgess and R. Phené Spiers, History of Indian and Eastern Architecture, 265n⁴
Ficus Indica (bar or Nyagrodha tree), 42, 42n², 118
Ficus religiosa (Asvattha tree), 247; (pipal tree), 118; (asvat, jari, etc.), 255
Flinders Petrie, “Assyrian and Hittite Society,” Ancient Egypt, 88n¹
Florence, umbrella in, 268
Floræs, 278
Forbes, C. J. F. S., British Burma and its People, 266n¹; Rās Mālā, 266, 266n³, 305n¹
Forbes, Duncan, Adventures of Hatim Tai, 6n²
Forlong Fund, the, 256n⁴
Förster, De Aristotelis quæ feruntur secreta secretorum comentatio, 287n¹, 288n¹, 289n¹
Forster, E., Arabian Nights’ Entertainments, 147n¹
Fox, Samuel, inventor of “Paragon” rib for umbrellas, 271
France, A., Les Sept Femmes de Barbe Bleu, 224n
Frauenlob (i.e. Heinrich von Meissen), 292, 292n³, 300; Cantica Canticorum, 292n³
Frazer, Folk-Lore of the Old Testament, 194n; Golden Bough, 72n³, 83, 105n, 108n, 117, 118, 166, 189n¹, 253, 253n¹, 256, 256n², 257n¹, 268, 268n¹; Pausanias, 70n²
Frederick Barbarossa, 268
THE OCEAN OF STORY

Gahyaka, favour of the, 98, 98n
Gahyakas, attendants of Kuvura, 98n
Guido of Valencia, Archbishop, 289
Guillem de Cervera, Romania, 292, 292n
Guingamp, gingham first made in, 271
Gujarat, Mahmud Shah, King of, 300-302; Sriga Brah- mans of, 163, 169
Guna (rope), 76n
Guabarman, merchant named, 55
Gupta Empire, Magadha the nucleus of the, 3n
Gupta, Rai Bahadur B. A., notes on sambukria, 7n
Gurkhas of Nepal, poisoning of wells by the, 280, 280n
Gutschmid in Zeit. d. d. morg. Gesell, 312n

Haddan, Report Cambridge Exped., 195n
Hades (Aralu or Sheol), 61n; descent of Ishtar into, 61n; (Sheol or Hell), 194n
Hagen, F. H. von der, Minnesinger, 292n
Haiti, syphilis in, 308
Hakluyt Society, 18
Hall, 92n
Haliwell, T. O., The Voyage and Travail of Sir John Maundevile, Kt., 306, 306n, 307
Hamilton, Francis, Account of the Kingdom of Nepal, 280n
Han Dynasty, bas-reliefs of the, 264
Hans Schiltberger's Reisebuch, 279n
Hanumān, the monkey-god, 73, 197n
Hanway, Jonas, first man to use an umbrella, 269
Hāram, haram (harem), 161n; magic circle as a kind of, 295; (a sacred spot), 161n
Harapura, 174
Harar, Burton's visit to the Emir of Abyssinia at, 271, 271n
Haravämin, ascetic named, 184-186; story of, 39n
Hardiman, J. P., J. G. Scott, Gazetteer of Upper Burma and the Shan States, 232n

Harem (Arabic haram, harim, that which is prohibited), 161n
Haridatta, Brahman named, 231
Hari, haram (harem), 161n, 162n, 163n
Harišīkha, son of Ramañvat, 161, 165
Harlschandra, King, 267
Harleian MS., 269
Harran, city sacred to the moon-god, 194n
Harsdorffer, Der grosse Schau- platz lust-und lehrreicher Geschichte, 296
Harsha-Vardhana, King, 267
Harvey, Turkish Harems and Circassian Houses, 163n
Harz mountains, 104n
Hasan, 104n
Hastagrahayogya, 24n
Hastinapura, 1, 16n, 16, 54
Hastings' Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics, 54n, 61n, 81, 83, 85n, 88n, 90n, 99n, 118, 119, 163n, 167, 195n, 229n, 232n, 240, 265n, 298, 307n
Havelock Ellis, Studies in the Psychology of Sex, 229n, 308, 309n
Hawaiian Islands, polyandry in the, 18
Hawthorne, Nathaniel, "Rappacini's Daughter," Masque from an Old Manse, 297, 297n
Hebenstreit, Johannes, Regiment pestilenzischer geijter Fieber, 296
Heinrich von Meissen (Frauenlob), 292, 292n
Heliodorus, Ethiopica, 62n, 106n
Hemachandra, Parishishaparvan, 105n, 285, 285n, 300n; Sthaviravaticharita, 283n
Henderson, Folk-Lore of the Northern Counties, 2n, 98n, 104n
Henisch, Georg, Neinhundert Gedächtniss-würdige Geheimniss und Wunderwerck, 294n
Hercules, 72n
Hérisaie, Noël du Fail de la, Contes d'Eutrepel, 3n
Herrera, A. de, West Indies, 88n
Hertel, J., Ausgewählte Erzählungen aus Hämancandra's Parishishaparvan, 285n; "Pâla und Göpâla," Indische Erzähler, 121; "Uber die Suvarabhattarikâtha," Festschrift für Ernst Windisch, 296, 286n
Hertz, W., "Die Sage vom Giftmächten," Abhandlungen der k. bayrischen Akademie der Wissenschaften, 286, 286n, 292, 292n, 296, 298, 300
Hidimbâ, son of, 284
High Commissioner for India, 311n
Hildebrand, Wolfgang, Magia naturalis, 296, 300
Himayala, daughter of the (Pârvati, Durgâ, etc.), 156
Himayala mountains, 94, 94, 142, 144, 147, 148
Himayalas, 206, 209, 210, 258; Pându retires to the, 16
Himavat, Mainaka, son of, 192n
Himavat mountain, 138
Hindu Kush, 67n
Hindustâni districts, viktòr worn in the, 23n
Hippolytus and his stepmother Phedra, legend of, 120
Hiranyadatta, son of Man- vatì, 148
Hispaniensis, Johannes, trans. of the Secretum Secretorum, 299
Hitopadesa, the, 223n
Hocart, A. M., "Flying through the Air," Ind. Ant., 64n
Hodson, T. C., The Meitheis, 118; Primitive Culture of India (Roy. As. Soc.), 97n, 286n
Hoffman's article in Ersch and Gruber's Encyclopädie (harrim), 165n
Holf festival, 59n, 164n, 169
Homa, daily offering to the fire, 257, 257n
INDEX I.—SANSKRIT WORDS, ETC.

Homer, Iliad, 218n; Odyssey, 106n, 217n, 218n
Hopkins, E. W., in Cambridge History of India, 241
Horace, Odes, 120
Hosea, 194n
Htie, hti or ti (stone or metal umbrellas), 265, 265n
Hughes' Dictionary of Islam (Harim), 163n
Hūnas (Huns?), 94, 94n; defeat of the, 94, 94n
Hymdes (Jhelum), Porus, ruler of, 283, 283n

Ibn Baṭṭaṭa, 268
Ifrīt, accusation of the, 147n
Ilā, Purūravas, son of, 245, 248, 250, 251
Ilakka, merchant named, 9
Imphāl, capital of Manipur, 118
India, dread of the cobra in, 311, 312; Mohammedans introduce opium into, 304; poison-damsel in, 281-286; Portuguese introduce syphilis into, 310, 310n
Indians of British Columbia, Thompson, 256
Indians inveeterate gamblers, 231n
Indo-scythe of the ancients, the Turks, 93n
Indra, 34, 35, 45, 46, 53, 100, 101, 102, 103, 116n, 151, 175, 192n, 242, 257, 259
Indra-Gopa insects, 276
"Indra of men" (narendra), 116n
Indus, 39n
Irrawaddy river, 168
Isaiah, 194n
Ishtar into Hades, descent of, 61n
Ityaka, or Nityodita, 161, 161n, 165
Ityakāpara or Ityaka, 161, 161n
Iva, 28n, 71n

Jacob, H., "Cow (Hindu)," Hastings' Ency. Rel. Eth., 240, 241; edit. of Hemachandra's Štvārīvali, 283n
Jaḍa (tools), 188n
Jagor, P., "Bericht über verschiedene Volksstimme in Vorderindien," Zeit­schrift für Ethnologie, 166

Jala (water), 188n
Jālandhar, curing cattle in, 119
Jālapāda, ascetic named, 232-236
Jan Shah, Queen, 124
Jari tree (Ficus religiosa), 255
Jastrow, Morris, The Religion of Babylonia and Assyria, 61n
Java, 264
Jayadatta, king named, 129, 130
Jayanta, minister of Dhar Chandra, 121, 122
Jayastambha (pillar of victory), 92n
Jebb, Prof., notes on Theophrastus' [Characters] "Superstitious Man," 98n
Jeremiah, 194n
Jhelum (the Hymdes), Porus, King of, 283, 283n
Jimūtaketu, Lord of the Vidyādharas, 138-140
Jimūtāvahanā, story of, 138-150, 153-156
Jinn summoned by rubbing magic article, 58n
João de Barros, Décadas, 269
Johannes Hispaniensis, trans. of the Secretum Secretorum, 289
John of Bromyard, Summa Predicamentorum, 114n
John, son of Patricius (i.e. Yahya ibn Baṭṭaṭa), alleged discoverer of the Secretum Secretorum, 228
Johnson, W., Folk Memory, 167
Johnston, Uganda, 199n
Jolly, J., Indische Medicin, 310n; Recht und Sitte, 163n
Jonah, the Hebrew word for "dove," 193n, 194n
Jonah legend, the, 193n, 194n
Jonas Hanway, first man to use an umbrella, 269
Joseph and Potiphar's wife, 120
Joyce, Mexican Archeology, 309n
Jubbulpore district, 23n
Judah Al-Harizī, trans. of Secretum Secretorum, 289, 289n
Justinian, 278

Juvenal, 263
Jvālāmukha, Brāhmaṇ demon named, 147n
Kaaba at Mecca, 119
Kachchhapa, King of, 69
Kachins of Upper Burma, childbirth customs among the, 167
Kadon, Unter den Oliven­bäumen, 5n, 190n
Kadrū and Vinatā, wives of Kaśyapa, 150-151
Kail or Cail, Tinevelly district of the Madras Presidency, 302
Kailāśa, 14, 93
Kalaghakāri, wife of Sinhas­parākrama, 159, 159n, 160
Kalāraṭī, 99, 103, 105-111
Kalāraṭī, Kuvalayāvali and the witch, 99-100, 103, 104, 111-112
Kalāsoka, foundation of Pātaliputra attributed to, 39n
Kalī (Dēvi, Durgā, Chāmuṅda, etc.), 189n
Kaliddāsa, Īḍkuntā, 144n; Vikramorvasī, 245, 257-259
Kalinga, the people of, 92, 92n; site of, 92, 92n
Kalīnjara, mountain of, 149
Kalpa (measure of time), 139n; of the gods, 163, 163n; a mortal, 163n
[Kalyāṇa Malla] The Ananga-Ranga, 10n
Kāma (God of Love), 74n, 105, 128, 143, 145, 163; son of Vivasvatātta to be a portion of, 13
Kāma (pleasure), 180n
Kāma Śastra Society, 10n
Kāma Śūtra, Vātsyāyana, 9n, 49n, 305
Kāmadeva, the Hindu Cupid, 51n
Kāmādhenu, cow granting all desires, 45, 45n; celestial cow connected with Indra, 242
Kāmarūpa, the King of, 94, 94n; the western portion of Assam, 94n
Kambuka, 231
Kāmpila, Rāja, 122
Kāmpilya, 190, 191
Kāmsundar, King, 286, 286n
Kan darpayānu ("Whom shall I make mad?")
Kanakaprabhā, wife of Paropakārīn, 171, 172
Kanaka-prabhā(lustre of gold), 171n²
Kanakapuri, 237
Kanakarekhā, daughter of Paropakārīn, 171-174, 184, 187, 213, 221, 222, 225, 226, 237
Kanaka-rekāh (gold-gleam or streak of gold), 171n³
Kāññara, Arer women of, 169
Kandarpa, the God of Love, 100
Kandarpaketu, 223n¹
Kāntā, 92n⁶
Kanyākubja, 111, 132
Kāpāla (skull), 90n³
Kāpāladhārīn or Kāpālikā (Aghori), 90n³
Kāpālesphoṭa (i.e. "skull-cleaver"), 199
Kāpālesphoṭa, King of the Rākṣasas, 206, 209, 210
Kāpālikā or Kāpāladhārīn (Aghori), 90n³
Kāpila (brown) cow, 276
Kāra (hand or tribute), 27, 27n²
Kārkoṭaka, 67, 73, 78
Karna, 284
Karniṣuṭa, 183n¹
Karnovun (head of the house), 19
Kārpatiṣa (dependent of a king), 178n¹
Kārttikeya, 258; birth of, 100-103
Kārvāṇās̄arā (caravanserai, a halting-place for camels), 162n, 163n
Kashmir, aconite in, 230; blouse in, 50n³; gambling in, 239n; princess of, whose beauty maddens, 6n²
Kāśṭhāgatasehāt ("at hearing this her affection came to its highest pitch"), 78n¹
Kāśyapa, 153; Kāḍrū and Vinātā, wives of, 150, 151
Kātabhi, decoction of, 276
Kāṭhaṅkoṭa, Tawney, 5n¹, 108n, 113n, 219n, 232n
Kauravas or Kuru princes, sons of Dhrītarāṣṭra, 16
Kāṣṇāmī, 47-49, 54, 115, 125
Kāṣṭikā, the spiritual guide of the Vidyādhāras, 210
Kauṭiliya, Arthāśāstra, 277n¹, 283n¹
Kāveri, the, 92
Kāzwini, A. See Qazwini
Keith, A. B., in Cambridge History of India, 240; in ["Game of Dice"] Journ. Roy. As. Soc., 232n
Kelanant, 303
Kennedy, Criminal-Classes of Bombay, 185n
Kerla (Murala or Malabar), 92n⁵
Ketu, the body of Rāhu, 81
Khalifa al Ma’mūn, 238
Khazīb, Aṣīb son of, 223n¹
Khojas of Gujarāt, customs connected with lights among the Mohammedans, 168
Kirby, W., "The Forbidden Doors of the Thousand and One Nights," Folk-Lore Journ., 224n
Kirīyā ("Act of Truth"), 31
Kītava (gamester, cheat), 232n
Kīng (Kalinga), 92n²
Knowles, J. H., Folk-Tales of Kashmir, 124; "Pride Abased," Ind. Ant., 193n¹
Knust in Jahrbuch für romanische und englische Literatur, 289n⁴
Koffee Kalcalli, King of the Ashantees, 271
Kohld’ eyes, 104n
Köhler, Dr, 196n¹
Kos (measure of distance), 191
Kramād, 155n¹
Krandai, 155n¹
Krishṇa, 95, 242, 284
Krittikās, the six (i.e. Pleiades), 102, 102n²
Kroeger, A. E., English trans. of Frauenlob’s Cantica Canticorum, 292n³
Kshatriya caste, 17, 69, 73, 173, 224
Kshatriya race and Lord of Royal Umbrella, title of Pinnacle of the, 267
Kṣetra ("fit recipients" and "field"), 116n¹
Kūblāi Kaan, court of, 268
Kusçu, 92n⁴
Kuhn, A., Die Herabkunft des Feuers und des Göttertrunks, 252n¹
Kūlīnā (falling on the earth), 159n¹
Kumara Rāma, son of Rāja Kāmpīla, 122
Kumbara Rāma Charita, the, 122
Kunudā plants, 233
Kūṇāla, Viceroy of Taxila and son of Aṣoka, 120
Kuṣjhararnās gajamukta (pearl), 142n¹
Kunkam, kunkum or kunku (red powder), 164n⁴
Kunti or Prithā, wife of Pāṇḍu, 16, 126
Kuntī, story of, 23-24
Kuntibhoja, king named, 23
Kunzaw, King, 265
Kurmis, blood mixed with lac dye among the, 24n
Kūrtā, Kashmīrīan bodice, 50n⁵
Kūrtās worn by Pathān women, 50n⁵
Kuru or Kauravas princes, sons of Dhrītarāṣṭra, 16
Kuru prince, the, 232n
Kuru-Vinda, 276
Kurubas, custom regarding bodily marks among the, 7n¹
Kurukshetra, 246, 249
Kūsā grass, 151, 151n¹, 176
Kūsa or dūb grass as relief from taboo during eclipses, 82
Kusumapura ("City of Flowers," i.e. Pāṭaliputra), 39n³, 185n¹
Kusurra (flour), 295
Kuto, 40n²
Kuvalayāvali, Queen, 98
Kuvalayāvali and the witch Kāḷārātri, 99-100, 103, 104, 111, 112
Kuvera, God of Wealth and Lord of Treasure, 93; Guhyakas attendants of, 98n¹
Ladislao (Ladislaus, Ladias or Lanzlao) of Naples, 310; legend of the death of, 310
Lakheras and Patwas, tikā made by the, 23n
Lakshmi or Śrī, Goddess of Prosperity, 65, 65n¹
Laistner, Rüttel der Spindel, 299n¹
Lalitānga, story of, 113n¹, 220n
INDEX I—SANSKRIT WORDS, ETC.  325

Lambajiva, Prince of the Rikshasas, 206
Lane, E. W., Manners and Customs of the Modern Egyptians, 163n
Langmantel, edit. of Hans Schiltberger's Reisebuch, 279n1
Lanka (Ceylon), 82, 84n1, 197n2; painting of Sitā in, 22n
Larice of Ptolemy, Lāṭa the, 93n2
Las Casas, Historia Apologetica, 309n1
Lāṭ at Delhi, 92n1
Lāṭa, women of, 93
Latini, Brunetto, Li Livres don Tresor, 294, 294n3, 299n3
Laukikāgni (domestic fire), 256
Lāvānaka (Book 111), 1-124
Lāvānaka, 12, 20, 25, 26, 28, 49, 51, 94, 95, 115
Lawrence, W. R., The Valley of Kashmir, 232n
Layard, Sir Henry, excavations of, 263
Lécluse, Charles de (Clusius), 302
Lee, The Decameron, its Sources and Analogues, 10n, 76n1, 114n
Leibnitz, works of, 278, 279
Lenormant, Chaldean Magic and Sorcery, 61n4, 69n3, 189n1
Levant the home of the Papaver somniferum, 303
Lévêque, Mythes et Légendes de l'Inde et de la Perse, 152n1
Licht fruits, 136n1
Liebrecht trans. of Dunlop's History of Fiction, 6n2, 39n3, 127n2, Zur Volkskunde, 39n2, 106n4, 131n1
Līṅga, connection with snakes, 307
Livy, 277
Lōṇa or Nōṇa Chamarin, witch called, 119
Lott, E., Harem Life in Egypt and Constantinople, 163n
Lucan, Pharsalia, 62n1
Lucian, De Dea Syria, 169; Vera Historia, 193n3, 219n3
Lucinius, son of Lucinius, 120
Lucinius, father of Lucinius, 120
Lüders, Das Würfelspiel im alten Indien, 232n
Lull, Raymond, works of, 99n1
Lustrato exercitus, 89n4
Mabugi in Torres Strait, 193n1
Macdonald ["East Central African Customs"], Journal Anth. Inst., 193n1
Macdonell, A. A., A History of Sanskrit Literature, 45n5, 242; Vedic Mythology, 240, 252n1
Macedon, Philip of, 299
Mada (ichor), 125n4
Madanalekha, daughter of Pratāpamukta, 203, 204
Mādhava, 214-216
Mādhava and Śiva, two rogues called, 175-183
Madras, 92n2
Madras Presidency, Kail or Cail in the Tinnevelly district of, 302
Māḍrī, wife of Pāṇḍu, 16, 127
Madrid, 309
Magadha, Girivraja the ancient capital of, 3n1; the home of Buddhism, 3n3; the King of, 26-28, 30, 37, 38, 47, 94; the kingdom of, 3n1, 12, 20; Nanda or Dhana-Nanda, King of, 232, 283n2; the nucleus of the Maurya and the Gupta empires, 3n1; Pradyota, King of, 3, 3n1, 12, 20, 21; Rājagriha (modern Rājgir) later capital of, 3n3
Magnus, Albertus, De Mirabilibus mundi, 299, 299n3
Mahā, Vīra Charita, the Bhavabhūti, 214
Mahābhārata, the, 13n4, 16, 17, 77n1, 81, 108n1, 122, 127n3, 152n2, 232n, 240-242, 248, 272, 284
Mahādeva (Śiva), 82
Mahādhānā, merchant named, 146
Mahāpadmā-Jālaka, 122
Mahāpuruṣa-lakṣaṇa (thirty-two lucky marks), 7n1
Mahāraja of Mysore, the Darbārs of H. H. the, 119
Mahāśeṣa, King, 2
Mahendra, the mountain, 92
Mahmūd Shāh, King of Gujarat, 300-302
Mahāvata (breast-cover), 50n5
Maidelai or sorcerer, 198n1
Maināka, son of Himavat, 192n2
Maihbar, an aboriginal tribe of South Mīrzapur, 166
Maijāo ("cat"), 46n1
Maijāo ("my lover"), 46n1
Mākandikā, 4
Mākō (crown), 264
Māla woman in labour, a sickle and nim leaves kept on the cot of a, 166
Malabar (Murala or Kerala), 92n5; customs connected with lights among the Nāyars of, 163; Nairs or Nāyars of, 17-19; Oḍi magicians in, 199n1
Mālāti, 214-216
Mālāti Mādhava, the, 205n3, 214-216
Mālava, 110, 133, 176; the ladies of, 93
Mālāvikkānimitra, 35n5
Mālava, 204
Mālaya mountain, 140, 150, 156
Mālayavati, sister of Mitrāvasu, 140, 150, 156
Malik Muhammad Din, The Bahawalpur State, 167
Mau, 118
Mau, or spiritual exaltation gained by eating human flesh, 198n1
Maua, the island of, 84n1
Mandakirñā, 152n3
Mauñalā (district), the Chola, 92n4
Mandara mountain, 67n1, 93
Mandara (paradise tree), 101, 101n2
Mandeville, Sir John, 306, 307
Māng boy, 82
Manipur, 266; the Meithies of, 118
Mannheim, Alsatian tradition heard at, 115n3
Manning, Ancient India, 155n3
Mānourigā (deer of the mind), 140n2
Manovati, daughter of Chit-rāṅgāda, 147-149
The OCEAN OF STORY

Manu, 17
Manwantara (measure of time), 250
Mapes, Walter, story by, 113n, 114n
Maravars, aboriginal race of Southern India, 166
Mardakariss, 182n3
Margaret of Navarre, Heptameron, 2n, 10n
Mārgasthā (in the right path), 150n1
Marie, Lois, 113n1
Marignolli, description of an umbrella by, 268, 268n4
Markham, Clements, trans. of Garcia de Orta, The Simples and Drugs of India, 302n2 Martial, 263
Martino de Canale, contemporary of Marco Polo, 268
Marubhūti, son of Yaunganadhāraya, 161, 165
Mārwār, King of, 266
Mārwārī Bangladesh women wear spangles set in gold, 23n
Maspero, Popular Stories of Ancient Egypt, 112n, 120-121
Matanga, a relation of Ṣan-khāchūḍa, 156
Mathurā, 9
Māli, 53n2
Maurya Empire, Chandragupta, founder of the, 251; events which happened at the formation of the, 281, 282; Magadha the nucleus of the, 3n1
Māyādhara, King of the Asuras, 35
Maximilian of Austria, 112n1
Mecca, the Kaaba at, 119; the sanctuary at, 161n4
Medusa, the head of, 299, 300
Megasthenes, 39n1
Mėhtar caste or scavengers, 82
Meissen, Heinrich von (Frauenlob), 292, 292n3
Meitei of Manipur, the, 118
Melanesia, eating human flesh in, 198n3
Melton, Astrologaster, 145n
Mēnā, parent of Maināka, 192n2
Meru, the world mountain, 67n2, 102
Mesopotamia, poison-damsel in, 286; the probable home of the umbrella, 263
Mexico, customs connected with eclipses among the Tlaxcalans of, 81; punishment for adultery in, 88n1
Meyer, J. J., Daśa Kumāra Charita, or The Story of the Ten Princes, 183n1, 184n
Meynard; Barbier de, Les Colliers d'Or, 298
Mikado so sacred that the sun must not shine on him, 268
Milinda, King, 32
Mīndopādhā, the, 32
Milton, Paradise Lost, 42n2
Mimoso suma (Prosopis spicigera), 250; (Samī tree), 247
Mirzapur, the Majhwar an aboriginal tribe of South, 166
Mirzapur district, rites to produce rain in Chunār, 117, 118
Missouri, 280
Mithradates, 300
Mitra, 249
Mitra, Rajendralala, The Indo-Aryans, 167
Mitrāvasu, son of Viśvāvasu, 140, 141, 150, 153, 156
Mlechchas destroyed, 93
Modi, J. J., "A few Ancient Beliefs about the Eclipse and a few Superstitions based on these Beliefs," Journ. Anth. Soc. Bomb., 82, 83
Mohānī ("bewitching"), 212n7
Mokshaka, ashes of, 276
Moneelon, Bulletins de la Société d'Anthrop. de Paris, 306n4
Món kings of Pegu, 265
Mongolia, polyandry in, 18
Montosier, M. de, 185n3
Moore, Thomas, The Epicurean, 6n8
Moya, Antoine de, Suceso de las Islas Filipinas, 306n1
Mriechhakatika or Toy Cart, the, 192n1, 232n
Mūdhā 'itī, 40n3
Mūdheti, 40n2
Mūdūrā-Rākhasha, or Signet-ring of Rākhasa, Viṣakhadatta, 160n4, 281, 283, 283n3, 234
Mukhopādhyāya, Prof. Nilmani, 93n1
Mukta, 140n1
Müller, Max, Chips from a German Workshop, 251n3; Oxford Essays, 251, 251n1
Mullick, B., Essays on the Hindu Family in Bengal, 163n
Mundas, tribe of, 267
Murā, a concubine of Nanda, 282n8
Murajaka, Sundaraka calls himself, 111
Murula (Kerala or Malabar), 92n5
Murulas, tribute imposed on the, 92, 92n4-5
Murray, New English Dictionary, 269n4, 270
"Mutalammis letter" motif, 114n
Mysore, the Darbārs of H.H. the Mahārāja of, 119
Na tad, 74n1
Naga (mountain), 154n1
Nāga (snake or moundeener), 154n1
Nāga (snake) of Hindu superstition, 152n4, 153n
Nāga, the seven-headed, 266
Nāgadatta, 219n3
Nāgasena, a Buddhist sage named, 32
Nāgpūr division of the Central Provinces, 82
Nāgpūr, paintings at, 307, 307n1
Nakula, son of Pāṇḍu, 16
Naidu, M. P., The History of Professional Poisoners and Coiners of India, 281
Nairs or Nāyars of Travancore, Cochín and Malabar, 17-19
Nanahuatzin, Mexican god of syphilis, 309
Nanda or Dhana - Nanda (Agrarmes or Xandrames), 282, 283, 285
Nandana, the garden of the gods, 34
Nandin, the bull of Śiva, 242
Nārāda, hermit named, 12, 13, 15, 25, 94, 35, 126-128, 135, 147, 170
INDEX I—SANSKRIT WORDS, ETC. 327

Naravāhanadatta, son of the King of Vatsa, 7m, 163, 165, 170, 212n, 238

Naravāhanadattajanana (Book IV), 125-169

Nārāyana (Vishnū), 81

Narendra ("Indra of men"), 116n1

Navarre, Margaret of, Hesperon, 2m, 10n

Nāyānānaravāntolkā ("casting forth flames out of her eyes and mouth"), 104n3

Nāyars or Nairs of Malabar, customs connected with lights among the, 168

Nāyars or Nairs of Travancore, Cochin and Malabar, 17-19

Nāyars originally a military caste, 19

Nebuchadrezzar, King of Babylon, 194n

Negelein in Teutonia, 57n1

Nepal acnīte (bīk, bish or bikk), 278

Nepal, gambling in, 232n; poisoning of wells by the Gurkhas of, 280

New Caledonia, polyandry in, 18

New Hebrides, polyandry in the, 18

Nicasi, G., "Le credenze religiose delle popolazioni rurali dell’alte valle del Taveri," Lares, 108n

Nicolaus Pergamensis, Dialogus Creatorum, 114n

Nīkāra (void of substance), 92n3

Nilgiri Hills, customs connected with eclipses among the Todas of the, 82; prevalence of fraternal polyandry among the Todas of the, 18

Nīm leaves kept on the cot of a Mīla woman in labour, a sickle and, 166

Nimisīkeśekanāh, 50n3

Nimrod Gallery, British Museum, 263

Nineveh, 194n

Nineveh Gallery, British Museum, 263

Nirritī's lap, 246

Nisbet, J., Burma under British Rule and Before, 265n2, 266n1

Nishādas, King of the, 191, 191n1

Nīshka (a unit of value), 240

Nityodita, chief warden named, 128, 129

Nityodita or Ityaka, 161, 161n1, 165

Nīvārya, 44n2

Nūete (socket), 269

Nonā or Lonā Chamarin, witch called, 119

North and Central Bhutan, Polyandry in, 18

Northern Circars, 92n2

Notthāft, A. V., "Die Legende von der Altertums-syphilis," Rindfleisch Festchrift, 308n

Noung daw Gyee, King, 265

Nyagradha tree (Ficus Indica), 42, 42n2, 159, 160

Odi magicians in Malabar, 199n

Okamura, Monatschrift für praktische Dermatologie, 308n

Oldenberg, Grihya Sūtras, 267, 267n1; Die Literatur des alten Indien, 262n; Religion des Veda, 262n1

Ombrello (Italian umbrella), 263

Opion (opium), 304

Opos (opium), 304

Oppian, 278

Orāon tribe, 119

Orissa, 92n2

Orta, Garcia de, The Simplex and Drugs of India, Eng. trans. Clements Markham, 302n1

Ottacker or Ottokar, German poet, 309, 309n3

Ottokar or Ottacker, German poet, 309, 309n3

Ovid, Ars Amatoria, 263; Fasti, 263

Pacific Islands, polyandry in the, 18

Padma, the land of, 95

Padmāsana, sitting in the posture called, 176, 176n4

Padmāvati, wife of the King of Vatsa, 3, 4, 12, 21-23, 25, 26-30, 34, 38, 47, 48, 51, 89, 93, 94, 116, 125

Padua, a doctor of, 297

Pākhapāta (flapping of wings), 219n2

Pālāsa tree, 126

Palena in the Abruzzi, 202n1

Pali-bothra (Pātaliputra), 39n1

Palićque (umbrella), 268

Pallair's arm, 72n2

Pallis (Tamil agriculturists), interpretation of bodily marks among the, 7n1

Pānchagavya, the five sacred products of the cow, 242

Pānchatantra, the, Benfey, 52n1, 108n, 113n, 231n3

Pāṇḍava race, King of Vatsa sprung from the, 1; the moon the progenitor of the, 13, 13n1

Pāṇḍu, ancestor of Udayana, 126-127; prince named, 16

Pāṇḍu, race of, 89

Pāṇḍu, the, 232n

Pāṇḍyan kingdom, 92n4

Panjāb, 282, 283, 285; former practice of infanticide in the, 18, 19; gambling in the, 232n

Papaever somniferum, Levant the home of the, 303

Paragamas (umbrella), 263

Paraguay, polyandry in, 18

Parapiuie (umbrella), 263

Pārasīkas (Persians), 93, 94, 94n1

Pārṇava-thā, the, 14n

Parda (curtain), 163n

Pardah or purdah, 163n

Pārdi caste of Central India, punishment for adultery among, 88n1

Pārīkhadra, ashes of, 276

Pārījata, one of the five trees of Paradise, 13, 13n2

Pārījāta flower, 190n1

Paris, Paulin, Étude sur les différents Textes, imprimés et manuscrits, du Roman des Sept Sages, 120

Paris, umbrellas in, 269

Parīśīthlaparvan, the, Hema-chandra, 108n, 285, 288n, 305n

Parityagasaṇa, story of, 186n1

Paropakārin, King, 171, 172, 184, 222

Parvan (book), 16

Parvata, ally of Chandragupta, 284, 285

Pārīvātī (Durgā, Gaurī, etc.), wife of Śiva, 82, 101, 232n, 266
THE OCEAN OF STORY

Paścāt (afterwards), 70n
Pātalā, ashes of, 276
Pātāla, the underworld, 92, 152, 156, 156n
Pātali, son of (Pātaliputra), 39n
Pātaliputra (Pataliputra or Pali-bothra), 39, 39n, 86, 87, 130, 185n, 231, 283
Pātāhā, decocation of, 276
Pat (husband), 49n4; (king), 49n4
Potamehād, 137n1
Patna corresponds with kingdom of Magadha, district of, 3n
Patna, Pātaliputra the modern, 39n
Patwas and Lakheras, ūkī made by the, 23n
Pauly-Wissowa, 57n
Paunādravardhana, 69, 69n, 74, 75, 79, 86, 174
Pegu, Môn kings of, 265
Peleus and Astydameia, 120
Penzer, N. M., Annotated Bibliography of Sir Richard Burton, 10n
Percy, Reliques, 10n
Pergamenus, Nicolaus, Dialogus Creatorum, 114n
Perrault, La Barbe Bleue, 223n
Perseus and Andromeda, 70n
Perseus and the Gorgon, 300
Persia, poison-damsel in, 286
Persians (Pārsākās), 93, 94, 94n1; meeting eyebrows considered beautiful by the, 104n
Peru, customs connected with eclipses among the Sones of Eastern, 81
Perugia, a doctor of, 310
Peter of Abano, works of, 99n;
Libellus de Veneris, 300, 300n1
Petrie, Flinders, "Assyrian and Hittite Society," Ancient Egypt, 89n1
Pez, R. D. P. Hieronymus, Scriptores rerum Austrica-rum veteres ac genuini, 310, 310n1
Phedra, legend of Hippolytus and his stepmother, 120
Phalabhūti, story of, 95-99, 112-115
Philip Clericus of Tripoli, trans. of the Secretum Secretorum, 289, 289n2
Philip of Macedon, 299
Philippines, scaring away evil spirits in the, 167
Phineus, 120
Piam (staff), 269
Pietro della Valle, Travels, 162n
Pinalikā, story of, 133-134, 135, 165
Pīpal tree (Ficus religiosa), 118, 255
Pischel and Gelder, Vedische Studien, 252n1
Pitris, 241
Pleades, the six (Kṛttikās), 102, 102n2
Pliny, 295n1, 306n;
Naturalis Historia, 108n, 296, 300
Ploss, Das Weib in der Natur und Völkerkunde, 306n1
Plutarch, 295n1
Polemon, Greek treatise of, 290
πολυδεκαής (endowed with much light), 251
Pongyi priests, 230n
Poole, Index of Periodical Literature, 272
Port Blair, 264
Pōrus, ruler of the Hydaspes (Jhelum), 283, 283n2
Potipher's wife, Joseph and, 120
Prabandhacintāmani, Tawney, 108n
Prabhāṭe (at daybreak), 51n
Pradyota, King of Magadha, 3, 3n, 12, 20, 21
Prājapati, 14n
Prājñāpti (foreknowledge), 212n
Prājñāptikaūṣāka, the prior, 213
Pratīṣṭha (founding), 35n
Prasi and Gangaridai peoples, 282
Pratīṣṭha (valour and heat), 54n3
Pratāpamukta, King of Benares, 200, 210, 212
Pratīṣhād, 137n1
Prfühl (in windy weather), 51n
Pravrāja, 35n
Prāya (Allāhābād), 110n2; "the place of sacrifice", 110n
Preller, "Otus and Ephi-altes," Griechische Mythologie, 13n
Prescott, W., [The Conquest of] Peru, 88n1
Prester John, islands of the Lordship of, 306
Prester John's palace, gable of, 169
Prithā or Kunṣti, wife of Pāṇdu, 16, 126
Prithī Ṭāj, last Hindu king of Delhi, 266
Prithivī ("daughter of Prithu"), earth called, 241
Prithu, son of Vena, 241
Pṛiti and Rati (affection and love), wives of the God of Love, 27, 51, 51n3, 128, 137
Procter, Miss Joan, 312n1
Prospis spicigera (Mimosa spicigera), 255
Prym and Socin, Syrische Mährchen, 76n, 155n4, 219n3
Pseudo-Aristotle, De causis et proprietatibus elementorum, 289n4; Secretum Secretorum, 288 et seq.
Psyche myth, the Cupid and, 253
Ptolemy, Lītā the Larice of, 93n3; Murala identified with the Curula of, 92n3; regio Sera-tanum of, 92n4
Publīus Syrus, 38n1
Pūba, Paunādravardhana identified with, 69n1
Puchkura Undi or State Umbrella, 267
Pufendorf, works of, 279
Pūlindaka, chief of the Savaras, 141
Pūlindaka, King of the Bhīllas, 89, 89n4
Punyasena, story of, 10-11
Purānas, the, 240, 241, 248
Pūrṇāh (harem), 162n
Pūrāḥ or pūrāh, 163n
Pūrgaṇṭ (done in a previous life), 135n1
INDEX I—SANSKRIT WORDS, ETC. 329

Purūravas and Urvāśī, story of, 34-36, 245, 259
Purushottama (Vishṇu), 257
Qazwini, al-, Kosmographie, 298, 312
Quintus Curtius, 278
Rādhā and the gopās, 242
Rāga (passion), 125n5
Rāhu, 63, 63n1, 81, 82, 94, 94n2
Rāhu and eclipses, note on, 81-83
Rajpur district, 23n
Rāja Kāmipila, 122
Rāja Purūravas, 249
Rāja-drūma, ashes of, 276
Rājagriha (modern Rājgir) the later capital of Magadha, 3n
Rājāmahendra, King of Rājāmahendri, 121
Rajas (dust and passion), 106, 106n1
Rajendralala Mitra, The Indo-Aryans, 167
Rājgir (Rājagriha), capital of Magadha, 3n
Rājula, a striped snake, 152n2
Rājput, 91; Mādhava disguised as, 176, 177
Rājputāna, spangles set in gold worn by women from, 23n
Rājputs, degeneration of the, 305, 305n1
Rākṣhasa (goblin), 58n1, 69, 71, 74, 75, 78, 79, 191; the female, 107n1, 127; Vijayadatta becomes a, 198, 199
Rākṣas, minister of Nanda, 281, 283-285
Rākṣas nature leaves Vijayadatta, 210
Rākṣasā Rāvāṇa, 84n1
Rākṣasas, 33, 106, 208, 209, 241; cemetery full of, 205; description of, 197n; King of the, 209-212; Lambaja, prince of the, 206; south neighboured by, 54
Rākṣasī (female Rākṣasā), 69n2
Rākṣasī Vidyechehhikā, 206, 207, 209
Ralston, Russian Folk-Tales, 60n2, 61n1, 71n1, 98n4, 129, 152n4, 155n4, 190n2, 202n1, 223n1; songs of the Russian people, 138n4, 189n1
Ralston, Schiefner and, Tibetan Tales, 14n, 76n1, 122
Rāma, 9, 22, 22n1, 46, 73, 82, 84, 84n1, 93, 118
Rāma’s Bridge (Rāmesetu), 84n1
Rāmārtham ("for the sake of a fair one"), 73n1
Rāmesetu (Rāma’s Bridge), 84n1
Rāmaśīva, the, 22n1, 34n2, 45n2, 84n1, 102n1, 272
Rāmeswarman, island of, 84n1
Ramusio’s versions of Varthema and Barbosa, 302
Rangoon, Shwē Dāgōn pagoda at, 265
Rasātalā (i.e. Pātalā), 156, 156n1
Rati and Priti (love and affection), wives of the God of Love, 27, 51, 51n1, 128, 137, 144
Rātnakūṭa, the, island of, 217
Ratnangī, wife of Rāja Kāmipila, 122
Ratanpura (City of Jewels), 175, 175n2
Ratnavarsha, King of the Yukshas, 233
Rauscher, Hieronymus, Das ander Hundert der Baptischen Lügen, 296
Rāvanā, Chief of the Rākṣasas, 9, 22n1, 82, 84n1
Rawlinson, J. H., notes in Forbes’ Rās Mālā, 266n3, 305n1
Raymond Lull, works of, 99n Regenschirm (umbrella), 263
Regina Aquilonis (Queen of the North), 296
Regio Califergarum (Kalinga), 92n2
Regio Soretanum of Ptolemy, 92n4
Renan, Ernest, Histoire Littéraire, 293
Revā, 93
Reyes, Gaspar de los, Elysius Campus, 300, 300n3
Rhabhā the nymph, 34, 35
Rhodope, the Thracian sorceress, 6n3
Rhys Davids, T. W., "Adam’s Peak," Hastings’ Ency. Rel. Eth., 85n; Buddhist India, 3n1; trans. of the Jātakas, 52n1
Rig-Veda, the, 34n1, 57n1, 86n1, 88n1, 231n1, 232n, 240, 245-247, 250, 254, 255, 255n1
Rishabha, mountain named, 222
Rishi (holy sage), 14n, 128
Rishi Vyāsa, 17
Rishis, 102
Roberts, A. A., The Poison War, 281
Robertson Smith, W., Lectures on the Religion of the Semites, 119, 194n
Robledo, Montejo y, 309 Rochlitz, Michael Bapst von, Artzney Kunst und Wunder Buch, 294n1
Roger Bacon, works of, 99n
Ronaldshay, India, a Bird’s-Eye View, 88n1
Rosario, dc, Tamil story in The Orientalist, 184n
Rosenbaum, Geschichte der Lustsuche im Altertume, 308n
Roth, Böhtlingk and, 53n2, 67n1, 161n1
Rothfeld, Otto, Women of India, 163n
Roumania. See Rumania
Rū (to cry), 251
Rukh, the, 220n
Rumania, nudity rites to produce rain in, 117
Rumanvat, minister of the King of Vatsa, 1, 4, 6, 8-12, 20, 34, 91, 116, 125, 161, 165
Rumi (Syriac), 288
Ruru, the giant, 223, 223n1
Russell, Tribes and Castes of the Central Provinces, 223n, 23n, 83, 83n1, 118, 164n4, 185n, 242, 266, 266n3, 304, 304n2, 305n1
Russia, rites to produce rain in, 117
THE OCEAN OF STORY

Sachchakiriyā ("act of truth"), 31
Šáchi, Indra, husband of, 45
Sacy, Silvestre de, Christomathie Arabe, 312n
Sadehāya, 100n
Sahadeva, son of Pándu, 16
Śahasika, cook named, 112, 113
St Thomas, 85n
Saintyves, P., Les Contes de Perrault, 224n, 253n
Saïoual (parasol, Persian), 263
Śāiva ascetic, a skull-bearing, 196, 200
Śāiva mendicants, ten classes of, 90n
Śāivā (umbrella, Persian), 263
Śākha, son of Kárttikeya, 102
Śākta worshippers of Dévi, Tantric rites of the, 188n, 199n
Śakti, boar wounded with a, 230n
Śaktideva, Brāhmaṇ named, 174, 175, 188, 189, 191-195, 213, 217-222, 224-231, 236-238
Śaktidevo, 230n
Śaktihasto, 230n
Śaktivega (Śaktideva), a king of the Vidyādharas, 80n, 171, 238, 258n, 239
Śakuntalā, Kālidāsa, 144n
Śala del Gran Consiglio at Venice, 268
Saisette, customs connected with iron in, 167n
Samēsavya, 197n
Sambandham, ceremony of alliance as husband and wife, 18
SamŚhavah, 89n
Samhitās, the, 240
Śami plants, 161
Śami tree (Mimosa sutea), 247, 250, 265
Śampada, 89n
Samudradatta, merchant named, 191, 199, 226
Śamudrīśa, the interpreting of bodily signs, 7n
Śānchi, umbrellas at, 266
Śangster, William, 271; Umbrrellas and their History, 272
Śankaradatta, son of Agnidatta, 133
Śankaravāmin, chaplain named, 176, 178
Śankhuśāda, snake named, 152-154, 156
Śānkhyā, 219n
Śanta Fé, 280
Śāntikara, son of Agnidatta, 133-135, 165
Śāntisoma, son of Pingalikā, 135, 165
Sarā or sarāli (edifice or palace, Persian), 162n
Sārangdhara, 121, 122
Sārangdhāra Charita, the, 121
Sarasvatī, the goddess, 133
Śarva-gandha (scented drug), 276
Śāśikhāṇḍa, King of the Vidyādhāras, 221
Śāśikhaṇḍapada, King of the Vidyādhāras, 238
Śāśiprabhā, daughter of Śāśi-khaṇḍa, 221, 237
Śāśirekha, daughter of Śāśikhaṇḍa, 221, 237
Śāstri, Dravidian Nights, 190n; Folk-Lore in Southern India, 136n
Śatādēya (an epithet denoting the price of a man’s blood), 240
Śatānīka, ancestor of the King of Vatsa, 54
Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, the, 241, 245, 250, 254-256
Śatātha (abiding), 256n
Śati, 53n
Śattea (monsters), 79n
Śattea (courage), 236n
Śatyādikṣihānam ("truth command"), 31
Śatyāvādaya ("truth-utterance"), 31
Śatyavrata, King of the Nish-hadas, 191, 192, 194, 195, 217, 218
Śaugor district, 23n
Śavarmabhaṭṭi, 230n
Śāvara, one of a wild tribe, 22n, 141-149
Śāvaras of Bengal, customs connected with lights among the, 188
Śāvbhu (umbrella, Persian), 263
Schiefner, German translation of Tārānātha, History of Buddhism, 69n
Schiefner and Ralston, Tibetan Tales, 14n, 76n, 122
Schiller, "Der Gang nach dem Eisenhammer," Gedichte, 113n; "Der Graf Schiller—continued von Hapsburg," Gedichte, 49n
Schiltberger, Hans, Reisebuch, 279n
Schmidt, Bernhard, Griechische Märchen, 57n, 127n
Schmitt, Hans, Jona, 194n
Schöppner, Sagenbuch (or Geschichte) der Bayerischen Lande, 113n
Scott, J. G., J. P. Hardiman, Gizehleute of Upper Burma and the Shan States, 232n
Scott, Sir J. G., "Burma and Assam (Buddhism in)," Hastings’ Ency. Rel.Eth., 255n; (Shway Yoe) The Burman, his Life and Notions, 167, 265n
Scott, Jonathan, Tales from the Arabic and Persian, 113n
Seler, E., Gesammelte Abhandlungen zur Amerikanischen Sprach-und Altertumskunde, 309, 309n
Sencis of Eastern Peru, customs connected with eclipses among the, 81
Sera (a bar, Latin), 162n
Seraglio (harem), 162n
Serail, 162n
Serbia, rites to produce rain in, 117
Serraglio (enclosure, Italian), 162n
Serrato (shut up, Italian), 162n
Sēsha, the serpent, 90, 90n
Shāhābād corresponds with kingdom of Magadhā, district of, 3n
Shakespeare, Henry V and Henry VI, 98n; Macbeth, 145n; Othello, 145n
Shans of Upper Burma, gambling among the, 252n
Shea-Troyer, The Dabistān, 169
Sheol (Aralū or Hades), 61n, 194n
Sheykh-zāda, 123
Shrāwan (month of fasting), 164n
INDEX I.—SANSKRIT WORDS, ETC.

Shway Yoe (Sir George Scott), The Burman, his Life and Notions, 167, 265n²
Shwe Dagon pagoda at Rangoon, 265
Siam, 266
Siberia, polyandry in, 18
Siddha (independent superman), 111
Siddhaka, ashes of, 276
Siddhas, 14n, 67, 67n, 75,
75n², 140, 149, 150
Siddhre, minister of Kâm-sundar, 286
Sidney Hartland. See Hartland, E. S.
Sikes, Wirt, British Goblins,
75n², 98n², 223n³
Sikkim-Bengal frontier, poly-andry on, the, 18
Sikkim Teral, aconite on the,
279 Silvestre de Sacy, Chresto-malthie Arabe, 312n²
Simpson, W., The Jonah
Legend, 194n
Simrock, Deutsche Volksbücher,
57n², 64n², 76n¹
Sinaband (breast-cover), 50n³
Sinyushin, King, 265
Sindbad and the enormous
birds, 220n
Sindh, subduing of the King of 93
Sindûr (vermilion), 23n
Singapore, 204
Sinhâksha, story of King, 49n³
Sinhaparakrama, story of,
159-160
Sinhaśri, second wife of Sinhaparakrama, 160
Sinhavarman, brother of Padmâvati, 89
Sîpras, banks of the, 176-178
Siras tree (Acacia speciosa), 118
Sîrshä district, curing a horse in the, 119
Sitâ, wife of Râma, 9, 22,
22n³, 84n¹
Sîtodâ river, 67, 75
Śiva, 1, 14, 46n¹, 51, 66, 74,
75, 82, 84, 85, 85n, 90n²,
100, 101-104, 106, 111, 128,
136, 138, 138n, 141, 143,
145, 146, 148, 149, 153, 157,
164n², 170, 171, 196, 200,
208, 213, 222, 238, 242;
skull-bearing worshippers of, 90, 90n³
Śiva and Mâdhâva, story of,
175-183
Śivajî, King, 287
Śivi and the heavenly eyes,
King, 32, 33
Śizâre, Queen of, 294
Śkandha (shoulder), 260n¹
Śkand had āsa,更换 namèd,
71, 72
Śket, W. W., The Peo at our Doors, 270, 270n²
ocul澳er (sunshade), 263
Slave Coast, iron rings attached to sick children on
the, 167
Smith, G. A., The Book of the Twelve Prophets, 194n
Smith, Prof. G. Eliot, 308
Smith, W. Robertson, Lectures on the Religion of the Semîtè,
119, 194n
Smith, V. A., Early History of India, 282n²
Smrîvî (remembering), 200n³
Snake Mountains of Turkestan, 286
Śneha (affection), 77n², 163n¹
Śneha (oil), 77n², 163n²
Socin, Fürn and, Lyrische
Mârchen, 76n², 155n², 219n²
Socrates, 294, 299
Sohâg or lucky tortoise,
23n
Solomon, 252
Solon, 278
Soma (the moon), 45n³
Soma and Sûryo (the moon and sun), 81
Somadatta, son of A. gîdabda,
95-97
Somadeva, Kâtâ sarîsage, 39n³,
207n², 281, 304
Somaprabha, story of, 39-44
Soma-vâlka, ashes of, 276
Sophocles, Elektra, 120n³
Soretanum of Ptolemy, Regio, 92n²
South Bihar, district corresponding to the kingdom of Magadha in, 3n², 29
South Sea Islanders, nature myths among the, 28n
Speyer, Studies about the Kathâsarîsage, Für h. Kon. Akad.
Wertezr. dmsz., 28n², 36n²,
50n², 60n², 70n², 92n³,
140n, 160n², 177n²,
201n², 227n², 235n²
Spiers, R. Phene, J. Fergusson, J. Burgess and, History of Indian and Eastern architecture, 265n³
Spero, D. B., 'The ãraanian Period of Indian Spoonar, D. B.—continued
Soc., 59n³
Spoonar and Waddell, ruins at Patna discovered by, 39n¹
Śrîdha, ceremony of, 257
Śrâvasti, 6
Śri, Goddess of Prosperity,
65, 65n³
Śrîkantha, land of, 97
Śravâvî (having heard), 200n³
Stallybrass trans. of Grimm's
Teutonic Mythology, 43n³,
57n³
Stambhaka, a Gâna appointed to protect Naravâhanadatta, 170
Steel and Temple, Wide-
Awake Stories, 108n, 122,
199n
Steele, R., Opera hactenus
inedita Rogeri Baci, 290,
291, 291n²
Stein and Griersen, Hatim's
Tales, 124
Steinschneider, Hebr. Bib-lioth., 289n²; Übersetzungen, 289n²; in Vichrow's Archiv
für Path. Aat. und Phys., 289n²
Stevens, C. M., C. L. Daniels and, Ency. of Superstitions,
Folk-Lore and the Occult
Sciences, 145n
Stevenson, Mrs S., The Riter of the Twice-born, 54n³, 83,
166, 242, 257n³
Steyaskastra—pravartaka, the,
183n³
Sthâviraçâcharita, Hemach-
andra, 283n³
Stokes, Indian Fairy Tales,
42n², 43n³, 57n¹, 136n, 193n
Stokes' edit. of The Togait
Troi, 72n²
Strabo, 273
Straparola, The Nights, 10n
Subala of Gândhâra, King, 16
Suchier, Denkmler provenz-ilischer Literatur und
Sprache, 289n²
Śûdra woman, 16
Śûdras, 95, 96
Sukthankan, V. S., Eng. trans.
of Swapna-râsvadatta, 21n³;
Bomb. Br. Roy. As. Soc., 21n³
The Oceans of Story

Sumanta, 121, 122
Sumatra, 264
Sunda and Upasunda, story of, 13-14n
Sundaraka and the witches, 105-111
Sūrī (wine), 276
Surabhi (“the fragrant one”), 242
Sūrya and Soma (the sun and moon), 81
Sūryatapasi, hermit named, 189, 191
Sūrūta Sāmpīta, the, 276, 276n¹
Sūtāra (mercury), 276
Sutlej, Beās a tributary of the, 282
Sūtras, the, 17
Svābhavatattirikathā, the, 286, 286n¹
Svāyāpta (well-rounded), 132n¹
Svādāssvāhādha (sweet medicine), 85n¹
Swāpna – vāsavadatta, Bhāsa, 21n¹, 25n²
Swarga, the abode of the blessed and the city of Indra, 175n¹, 257
Swāyambhūya Manu, the calf, 241
Swāyamvara (marriage by choice), 16
Swan, trans. of the Gesta Rōmanorum, 296
Swift, A City Shower, 270; Tale of a Tub, 270
Syria, poison-damsel in, 286
Syrius, Publius, 38n¹
Tacitus, Annals, 277
Tadakāṭāmīn, 50n¹
Tadakāṭātmān, 50n¹
Tadāvārasīthi mahātāram, 28n¹
Taine, H.A. [Les Origines de la France Contemporaine], 185n²
Tālī, ceremony of tying the, 17, 18
Tālīkaṭṭu, ceremony of tying the tāli round the neck of the bride, 17, 18
Tāmāla, 208, 227
Tamasā, the river goddess, 199n¹
Tamboli, leaves of the betel vine, 301, 302
Tamerlane (Timūr), 279
Tamāralipta, 71
Tan mahātārakaṅi, 28n²
Tan tād, 110n¹
Tanjore, 92n⁴
Tārnakāṭūrangaṅi, 28n²
Tantric rites of the Śaṅkta worshippers of Dēvi, 198n¹, 199n¹
Taptanaka, son of Vasantaka, 161, 165
Tārā (silver), 276
Tāraku, the Asura, 100, 102, 103
Tārānātha, History of Buddhism, Schiefer's German translation, 69n²
Tāsān, 207n²
Tāsāyaṇi, 207n²
Tatala, 227n¹
Tātra, 74n¹, 182n¹
Tāvney, C. H., 92n¹, 101n², 105n¹, 116n, 169, 221n¹; Kathākōśa, 5n¹, 108n, 113n¹, 219n², 232n²; "Meeting Eye-brows," Ind. Ant., 104n; Prabandhacintāmaṇi, 108n
Taxila, Kuṇala, son of Asoka and Viceroy of, 120
Tējas (might or courage), 161n³
Tējasvati, wife of Ādityasena, 55, 56, 58
Tējovatī, wife of Vihitasena, 36-37
Teli, oil-presser’s caste, 82
Telugu palm-leaf MS., 121
Temple, R. C. [Notes on a Collection of Regalia of the Kings of Burma of the Alompra Dynasty"], Ind. Ant., 264n¹
Temple, Sir Richard, 62n², 264, 269, 269n⁴
Temple, Steel and, Wide-Awake Stories, 108n, 122, 199n
Tinnevelly district of Madras Presidency, Kail or Cail in the, 302
Tha sādhasāsī, 218n²
Thāṃgī yat (chowrie), 264
Thānā, childbirth customs among the Vadhals of, 167
Thanīyēt (sceptre), 264
Theophrastus' [Characters], "Superstitious Man," Jebb, notes on, 95n⁴
Thomas, E. J., "Sun, Moon and Stars (Buddhist)," Hastings' Ency. Rel. Eth., 81
Thomas, F. W., Cambridge History of India, 282n¹; "The Plays of Bhāsa," Journ. Roy. As. Soc., 21n¹
Thompson, C. J. S., Poison Mysteries, 281
Thompson, R. Campbell, The Devils and Evil Spirits of Babylonia, 61n¹; Semitic Magic, 99n, 193n¹, 295
Thompson Indians of British Columbia, 256
Thorndike, History of Magic and Experimental Science, 99n, 108n, 288n³, 298n¹, 299n², 299n³, 299n⁴
Thorpe, Yule-tide Stories, 76n¹, 80n¹, 190n², 219n³
Thurston, E., Castes and Tribes of Southern India, 166, 256, 265n⁴; Ethnographic Notes in Southern India, 7n¹, 166, 256, 259n⁴
Tī (stone or metal umbrellas), 265, 265n⁴
Tībet, polyandry in, 18; prevalence of fraternal polyandry in, 18
Tibbūs, 263
Tibyusaung ("Wearer of the White Umbrella"), 265
Tkāja, forehead mark made in an initiation ceremony, 228n²
Tkiti, spangles worn by Hindu women of good caste, 228n³, 23n
Tkāla, caste mark, 228n²
Tilottāmā, a beautiful woman made by Viṣvakarmā, 14, 14n, 46
Timirā, 36
Timūr (Tamerlane), 279
Tippan (royal umbrella), 264
Tishyarakshītā, second wife of Asoka, 120
Tiyor caste, 242
Tlaxcalans of Mexico, customs connected with eclipses among the, 81
Tobit, the apocryphal book of, 69n³
Tod, Annals and Antiquities of Rājasthān, 305n¹
Todas of the Nilgiri Hills, customs connected with eclipses among the, 82; prevalence of fraternal polyandry among the, 18
Torello, 76n¹
Torres Strait, Mabuiag in, 198n¹
INDEX I—SANSKRIT WORDS, ETC.

Transylvania, nudity rites for producing rain in, 118
Travancore, Nairs or Nāyars of, 17-19; women well cared for in, 19
Trighanāta, 206
Tripoli, Philip Clericus of, trans. of the Secretum Secretorum, 289, 293n²
Tschudi, J. J. von, Reisen durch Südeuropa, 280n⁶
Tulasi or sacred basil, 82
Tumburu, a teacher called, 35
Turkestan, polyandry in, 18; the Snake Mountains of, 298
Turks (Turushkas), 93, 93ⁿ³; the Indo-scythe of the ancients, 93ⁿ³
Turushkas (Turks), 93, 93ⁿ³
Tylor, E. B., Primitive Culture, 83, 96ⁿ¹, 103ⁿ¹
Udaya, mountain named, 67, 67ⁿ¹
Udaya (rising, appearance), 67ⁿ¹
Udayagiri (eastern mountain), 67ⁿ¹
Udayana, King of Vatsa, 1, 3, 6, 8, 11-13, 15, 20, 22ⁿ³, 23, 25-30, 34, 36, 37, 38, 47-54, 80, 84, 85, 89-91, 93-95, 115, 116, 125, 126, 128, 135-137, 157, 158, 160-162, 165, 170, 171, 238, 239
Udayaparvata (eastern mountain), 67ⁿ¹
Uganda, society of ghouls in, 199ⁿ
Ujjasīyi, 10, 54-58, 78-80, 93, 108-110, 176
Ular puchok (green treesnake), 303
Uma (Pārvati, Gaurī, etc.), wife of Śiva, 51, 101, 102, 106
Umbella (sunshade), 263
Umbra ("little shade"), 263
Umbraculium (sunshade), 263
Union of South Africa, 281
Unmādīni, story of, 6-8
Unum pallium (umbrella), 268
Upasunda and Sunda, story of, 13-14ⁿ; (the ancient Beās), 282
Uru (wide), 251
Urvaśī and Purūravas, story of, 34-36, 245-259
Ukandharāca sucirim ("with uplifted necks"), 30ⁿ²
Utpalavarna seduces her son-in-law, 122
Utpreksāḥ, 71ⁿ²
Utthala, island of, 191, 192, 194, 217, 226, 227, 237
Uttara, mountain named, 190, 191
Uttara Rāma Charita, the, Bhavabhūti, 34ⁿ², 189ⁿ¹, 214
Uzanne, O., L’Ombrelle, 272; Les Ornaments de la Femme, 272; The Sunshade, the Glove, the Muff, 272
Vadavāgni (submarine fire), 256
Vadvāls of Thāna, childbirth customs among the, 167
Vaiśāvanā, son of Pingalikā, 135, 165
Vaiśvānaradatta, son of Agnīdatta, 95
Valencia, Archbishop Guido of, 289
Valerius, 277
Vallabhi, 141, 146
Valle, Pietro della, Travels, 182ⁿ
Vānaprastha oranchoret, 180ⁿ
Vanarāja (Wun Raj), 266
Vararuchi, 58ⁿ¹, 107ⁿ¹, 175ⁿ¹
Vardhamāna (Burdwan), 171, 171ⁿ¹, 188, 189, 223, 224, 237
Varsha (division of a continent), 125ⁿ²
Varthema, 300-302
Varuṇa (the divine judge), 249
Vasantaka, minister of the King of Vatsa, 20-22, 25, 26, 28, 29, 34, 38, 45, 47, 125, 159-161, 165
Vāsavadattā, wife of the King of Vatsa, 1, 3, 6, 8, 12, 15, 20-22, 25-30, 34, 36, 38, 47, 48, 50, 93, 94, 116, 125, 128, 129, 133, 135-137, 156-158, 160, 161, 171
Vāsishtha, the sage, 45ⁿ²
Vasavadatta, Ḫṃūtavāhāna’s former name, 141, 143, 146
Vasavadatta, merchant named, 130
Vāsuki, king of the snakes, 152, 153
Vasunemi, the snake, 22ⁿ³
Vatsa, Udayana the King of, 1, 3, 6, 8, 11-13, 15, 20, 22ⁿ³, 25, 25-30, 34, 36, 37, 38, 45, 47, 80, 84, 85, 89-91, 93-95, 115, 116, 125, 126, 128, 135-137, 157, 158, 160-162, 165, 170, 171, 238, 239, 275
Vātasyānā, Kāṇa Śūtra, 9ⁿ², 49ⁿ², 305
Vattel, E. de, Les Droits des Gens, ou Principes de la Loi Naturelle appliqués à la Conduite et aux Affaires des Nations et des Souverains, 275, 278ⁿ¹, 279
Veekenstedt, Wendische Sage, 42ⁿ¹, 80ⁿ¹, 107ⁿ¹, 152ⁿ¹, 155ⁿ¹, 202ⁿ¹, 223ⁿ¹
Vega, 238ⁿ¹
Vegetius, Cons., 277
Vena, Prithu, son of, 241
Venezuela, polyandry in, 18
Venice, Sala del Gran Consiglio at, 268
Vérand, Antoine, Le Cuer de Philosophie, 293
Vernieux, C., Indian Tales and Anecdotes, 114ⁿ
Vetāla (vampire), 236; carries Devadatta through the air, 236; propitiated by Devadatta, 235
Vetālas, 201
Vibhishana, brother of Rāvana, 84ⁿ¹
Victoria and Albert Museum, 271
Victoria Institute, 311ⁿ
Vidanga, decoction of, 276
Vidura, brother of Dhrītarāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu, 16
Vidūshaka, story of, 54-80
Vidyādhara (independent superhuman), 141, 148, 149, 229, 225, 237; named Chitrāṅgada, 147, 148; race, a maiden of the, 66; rites to attain the rank of a, 233, 234; Saktideva becomes a, 236
Vidyādhara (magical knowledge-holder), 157ⁿ²
Vidyāharas, 25, 67, 128, 138, 138, 150, 163, 170, 171, 211, 212, 221, 224, 225, 228, 233ⁿ¹; Asokadatta and Vijayadatta become, 210; Emperor of the, 156; fortune of the, 137; Golden City a seat of the, 220; Kausika the spiritual guide of the, 210; King of the,
THE OCEAN OF STORY

Wenceslaus II., Legend of the death of, 309, 309n²

Westermarck, History of Human Marriage, 18, 19, 23n, 24n, 306n¹; Origin and Development of the Moral Ideas, 96n¹, 97n, 229n²

Whewell, W., trans. of Gortius, De jure beli ac pacis, 27n²

Wilkinson, Sir J. G., Manners and Customs of the Ancient Egyptians, 264

Wilkinson, R. J., Papers on Malay Subjects, 167

William of Auvergne, works of, 99n

Wilson, H. H., 2n¹, 92n¹, 93n², 94n⁴; Descriptive Catalogue of the Mackenzie Collection of Oriental MSS., 129, 129; Essays on Sanskrit Literature, 92n⁴; Select Specimens of the Theatre of the Hindus, 189n², 192n², 214, 258, 259, 283n²; Vishnu Purana, 81, 241, 245, 256

Windsor, T. N., Indian Toxicology, 281

Wirt Sikes, British Goblins, 70n, 98n, 223n³

Wise, Commentary on the Hindu System of Medicine, 298

Wolfe, Col., 269

Woll, works of, 278, 279

Wright, D., History of Nepal, 232n

Wright, Th., De Nugis Curialium (Camden Society) 114n; edit. of the Gesta Romanorum, 296

Wun Rāj (Vanarāja), 266

Xandrames or Agrampes (Dhana-Nanda, Nanda, etc.), 282, 392n²

Xanthos and Balios, conversation of Achilles with, 57n⁴

“Ya Ummi” (“O my mother!” Arabic), 201n²

Yed hi (“carry out the plan”), 12, 12n³

Yadrichchhayā (casually), 131n³

Yahya ibn Batriq (i.e. John, son of Patriecius), alleged discoverer of the Secretum Secretorum, 288
INDEX I—SANSKRIT WORDS, ETC.

Yajnadatta, father of Pingalikā, 133
Yājñivalkya, the great sage, 241
Yaksha (servant of the gods), 52, 97
Yakshas, 241; Ratnavarsha, King of the, 233
Yaksī named Vidyutprabhā, 233-236
Yamadanshṭra, Rākshasa named, 74, 75, 78, 79
Yamunā (Jumna). 196
Yaugandharāyaṇa, minister of the King of Vatsa, 1, 4, 6, 8, 10-13, 15, 20, 21, 31, 34, 36, 47, 48, 52-54, 84, 85, 89-91, 95, 115, 116, 125, 138, 156, 158, 161, 163, 165, 170
Yāyau, 185n2

Yoga, 212n1
Yogakaraṇḍaka, minister of Brahmadatta, 91, 275
Yogeśvari, friend of Bhadrā, 67, 77
Yogi, 196; wounds healed by a, 122
Yojanas (measures of distance), 57, 57n2, 75, 190
Yoni, 242
Yuddha-kāṇḍa (“battle section”) of the Rāmāyaṇa, 84n1
Yudhisthira, son of Pāṇḍu, 16
Yudhisthira and his brothers, ancestors of the King of Vatsa, 13-17
Yukta, 140n1

Yule, Hobson Johnson, 162n, 269, 269n4; Mission to Ava, 168

Yule and Cordier, The Book of Ser Marco Polo, 85n, 266, 268, 268n2, 302, 302n2, 303; Cathay and the Way Thither, 85n, 268n4

Yuta Indians, poisoning of the, 280

Zan (woman), 162n
Zanana (zenana), 162n
Zarza, Samuel Ibn, Mishn1
Jofi, 259n1
Zenana (harem), 162n
Zeus, Indra the Hindu, 45n4

Zingerle, Kinder-und Hausmärchen aus Tirol, 70n2
[Zoroaster] Avesta, 240
INDEX II

GENERAL

“Abgerblaube,” Pauly-Wissowa, 57n.
Abiding (sotatak), 280n2
“Abode of Allah” (Allahabad), 110n2
Abode of the blessed, Svarga the, 175n1, 257
Aboriginal race of Southern India, Maravars, 166
Aboriginal tribe of South Mirzapur, the Majhwar, 166
Abortion, 229n5
Abscess formed by grief, 2
Account of the Kingdom of Nepal, Francis Hamilton, 280n2
Aconite, girl rubbed with ointment made of the juice of, 310; used in making bhong, 279; varieties of, 279, 280, 280n1; various uses for, 279
Act of hospitality, offer to kill a cow an, 241
“Act of truth” (kiriyā), 31; (sachchakiriyā), 31
“Act of Truth” (motif), 31-33
“Adam’s Peak,” T. W., Rhys Davids, Hastings’ Ency. Rel. Eth., 86n
Adjunct to kingship, flying through the air an, 64n1
Adorned with red powder, people, 164, 164n4
Adrift on the Ganges, girl in basket, 4
“Adultery,” Hastings’ Ency. Rel. Eth., 88n1

Vol. II.

Adultery, nose cut off as punishment for, 88, 88n1; among the Pārdhi caste, punishment for, 88n1; in places other than India, punishments for, 88n1; of Devadāsa’s wife, 86, 87; of a gambler’s wife, ordinary occurrence of the, 86n1
Adventures of Aśokadatta, 211, 212; of Jīmūtavāhana in a former birth, 141-149; of Samudradatta, 226, 227; of Vijayadatta, 211
Adventures of Hatin Tai, Duncan Forbes, 6n2
Advice of Chakradhara, 59, 60; of Nārada, 15
Æneid, Virgil, 186n1
Æthiopica, Heliodorus, 62n1, 106n4
Affection (smeha), 77n2, 163n1
Affection and Love (Priti and Rati), wives of the God of Love, 27, 51, 52n2, 126, 137
Afflictions cured by violence, 2, 2n5, 3n
Afterwards (padcāt), 70n1
Age venerated in the East, old, 190n1
Agent of Rākṣhasa, Virādha-gupta, 283, 284
Agreement of Kadrā and Vinatā, 150
Ague fit attacks Vijayadatta, 196, 197
“Ahalyāyāsi,” Bloomfield, Vedic Concordance, 45n4; Proc. Am. Phil. Soc., 45n4
Aid of Brahman impulsed against Sunda and Upasunda, 14n
Air, demon flies through the, 203; dragons pollute the, 299; flying through the, 62-64n1; horse flies up in the, 224; magical rides in the, 103-105n1; palace in the, 110, 111; polluted with poison - damsel’s breath, 293; power of flying through the, 103, 104; spells to enable Vāsavadātā to roam through the, 138; transportation through the, 76
Air-tight armour, men in, 289
Alakesvara Kāthā, the, 123
“Alankāravatī, Story of,” 212n1
Alexander Magni Expeditionis Indica, De, A. E. Anspach, 282n1
Alexandrian legends, 290
Alexandrian myths, jewel-lamp in, 169
Alive in the fish’s belly, Śaktideva found, 193
Alleged discovery of the Secretum Secretorum by Yayha ibn Baṭṭīq, 283
“Alleged Discovery of Syphilis in Prehistoric Egyptians,” The Lancet, 306n2 “Alles aus einer Erbse,” Kaden, Unter den Olivenbäumen, 5n1
All-Hallows Day, 105n
Alliance of husband and wife, Sambandhan, ceremony of, 18
Alligators, iron pyrites as charm against, 168
Ally of Chandragupta, Parvataka, 284, 285
Amazing discovery of King Adityaprabha, 98, 99
Ambassador sent by the King of Magadha to the King of Vatsa, 20, 32
Amer. Journ. Phil., “Art of Stealing in Hindu Fiction,” Bloomfield, 183n1
“Assyrian and Hittite Society,” Flanders Petrie, Ancient Egypt, 89n3
Astrologaster, Melton, 145n
At daybreak (prabhāc), 51n
Atharva-ī-Veda, the, 240, 241
Attempt of Rāhu to swallow Sūrya and Soma, 81
Attempts on Chandragupta’s life, 285, 284
Attendants of Kuvera, Guh-yakas, 95n1
Auburn matted locks of Śiva, 203
Ausgewählte Erzählungen aus Hīmaćandra’s Parishīṣṭaparvan, J. Hertel, 285n1
Auspicious birth-channel, the, 161
Austerities, fire propitiated by Viṣūśakha with, 58; performed by Gauri, 100; performed by the King of Vatsa, 84, 85; power obtained by, 85; practised by Sunda and Upasunda, 13n4; propitiating Śiva with, 84, 85; of Śiva troubled by the God of Love, 100
Australians, poisoning of, 280, 280n4
Autumn, thunder ceases in the, 92n3
Avarice of the chaplain, 179
Avesta, the [Zoroaster], 240
Baby girl brought up by huge snakes, 294
Back burned by vessel of boiling rice, 24
Back feathers of the huge bird, Śaktideva hides among the, 219
Background of the magic art, the “act of truth” at the, 31
Background of the Secretum Secretorum, Eastern, 290
Bahāwalpur State, The, Malik Muhammad Din, 167
Bakkhīrī Nāma, the, 123
Banks of the Sīpāra, 176-178; of the Yamanū (Jumna), 196
Banyan-tree saves Śaktideva’s life, 218
Banyan-tree, worship in the cemetery under a, 233
Bar (Latin sera), 162n
Barbarians, North defiled by, 53
Barbe Bleue, La, Perraulx, 223n1
Bargain of Vindumati, the strange, 229
Barīlā and Josaphat, 290
Basil, Tulasi or sacred, 82
Basilisk, 299n, 306
Basket containing girl set adrift on the Ganges, 4
Bas-reliefs of the Han Dynasty, 264
Battle of Rāma and Rāvaṇa, 84n1
“Battle Section” (Yuddhākāṇḍa) of the Rāmāyaṇa, 84n1
Beat of drum, proclamation by, 73, 73n2, 173, 187, 224
Beautiful lady found by Viṣūśakha in the temple, 66
Beautiful maiden found on poison, 291
Beautiful maidens found dead by Śaktideva, 223
“Beautiful Palace East of the Sun and North of the Earth,” Thorpe, Yule tide Stories, 80n1, 190n1, 219n3
Beautiful woman Tilottama made by Viṣvakarma, 14, 14n “Beauty and the Beast” motif, 254
Beauty that maddens, 7, 8
Beauty of the two maidens, the illuminating, 43, 43n2
Bees, Guhachandra and the Brāhman assume the shape of, 42
Beggar or Bhikṣu, 180n1
Belief that the dead rise from the tomb in the form of vampires, 61n1; in the poisonous look of snakes, 296; about Rāhu in the Central Provinces, 82; in the sanctity of iron among the Doms, 168; in transmigration, 241; in vampires in Egypt, 61n1
“Bellevophon, Tale of,” Apuleius, Golden Ass, 60n2
“Bellerophon letter” motif, 114n
“Bericht über verschiedene Volksstämme in Vorderindien,” F. Jagor, Zeitschrift für Ethnologie, 166
Betel, poison conveyed in a “chew” of, 303
Betel-chewing, effect of, 302
Betel juice in a person’s face, insult of spitting, 302, 303
Betel nut (fūfel or faufel, Arabic), 302; (cofolo or chofole), 301, 302
Betel vine, leaves of the (Tamboli), 301, 302
Betel vine or pan (Chavica Betel), 302
Bewilderment one of the six faults of man, 106n3
Bewitching (Mohanī), 212n1
Bhārtīhari Niti Sātaka, the, 192n2
Bibliographie des Ouvrages Arabes, V. Chauvin, 46n5, 58n3, 108n, 122, 131n, 135n, 147n, 151n3, 190n3, 193n, 202n1, 224n, 297n2
Bibliography of the MSS. of the Secretum Secretorum, 288n1
Bibliography of Sir Richard Burton, Annotated, N. M. Penzer, 10n
Bibliophiliasts, Society of English, 2n1
Bile, of the green tree-snake as poison, 303; of the green water-frog as poison, 303; of the jungle-crow as poison, 303
Bird carries Śaktideva to the the Golden City, 219, 220
Birds, Aristophanes, 152n1
Birds, hiding in the feathers of, 219n3, 220n; king of the (Garuḍa), 151, 152, 154, 155; language of the, 10fn; like vultures, enormous, 219; overheard by Śaktideva, conversation of, 219, 219n1
Birth of Antichrist, announcement of the, 39n2 Birth, adventures of Jimūta-vāhana in a former, 141-149; of a daughter to Birth—continued

Ādityasena, 55; of Kārttikeya, 100-103; of the king’s horse, the former, 56; of Naravāhanadatta, 161-162; power of remembering former, 149; of Sinhaparākrama’s wife, previous, 160; of Somaprabhā, 39, 40; speaking immediately after, 39, 39n²; of Vasaavadatta, former, 30

“Birth, supernatural,” motif; 139n¹

Birth-chamber, the auspicious, 161; iron rod kept in the, 166; lights to scare away evil spirits in the, 168; precautions observed in the, 166-169

Birth-rate in India, the high, 18

Bite, the amorous, 305; of the poison-damsel fatal, 291

Black magic, 99n; nudity in, 117

Blessed, Svarga, abode of the, 176n², 257

Blind, Dhritarāśṭra born, 16; executioners when attempting to impale Somadatta become, 96

Blood, epithet denoting the price of a man’s (Satadāya), 240; of husband mixed with betel and eaten by the bride, 24n; mixed with lac dye, 24n; mixing or exchanging, by bride and bridegroom, 23n

Blood rite, use of vermilion a survival of the, 23n, 24n

Blue eyes (azrāk, Arabic), 299

Bluebeard, E. A. Vizetelly, 224n

Bluebeard, identification of, 224n

Boar pursued by Śaktideva, 230

Bodice (angia or angiyā), 50, 50n²

Bodice, kūrū the Kashmirian, 50n²; of Western India, the choli, 50n²; worn by Hindu and Mohammedan women of the North, 50n²

Bodies, maidens with serpents in their, 307

“Bodiless, The” (Ananga), 164n³

Bodily marks, interpreting (śūmudrīka), 7n

Body, animating a dead, 62; fire in one’s own (vrika), 256

Body of Rāhu called Ketu, 81

Body of Rāhu the progenitor of meteors and comets, 81

Böhmische Märchen, Waldau, 70n³, 190n¹

Bolting horse of Ādityasena, 56

Bombay Gazetteer, the, 119, 168, 169, 233n

Book (pūrṇan), 16

Book III, Lāvānaka, 1-124

Book IV, Naravāhanadattajanana, 120-169

Book V, Chaturdārīkā, 170-242

Book of Duarte Barbosa, The, M. Longworth Dames, 18, 269n³, 300, 300n², 301, 303

Book of Ser Marco Polo, The, Yule and Cordier, 85n, 266, 268, 268n³, 302, 302n², 303

Book of Sindibad, Clouston, 114n, 120, 121, 122, 224n

Book of Tobit, the apocryphal, 69n³

Book of the Twelve Prophets, The, G. A. Smith, 194n

Boon granted to Kunti, 24; granted to Purūravas by the Gandhāyas, 247, 249; granted by Siva, 136

Boons, image of Ganesa which grants, 99

Borax, turmeric and lime-juice, powder made of, (bunkam), 164n⁴

Bracelet worn by Hindu women, an iron, 167

Brāhmaṇ demon, Jvalāmukha, 147n¹

Brāhmaṇ misér, the, 176

Brāhmaṇ monastery, the, 57-59

Brāhmaṇ named Agnidatta, 95, 133; named Chakradhara, 59, 60, 65; named Chāṇakya (Kauṭilya or Viniṣṭugupta), 285-285; named Govindaśvāmin, 196, 197, 199, 200, 209, 211; named Haridatta, 231; named Śaktideva, 174, 175, 188, 189, 191-195, 213, 217-222, 224-231, 236-238; named Viniṣṭuddatta, 195, 213, 217

Brāhmaṇ, periods in the life of a, 180, 180n²; students, Wanderjahre of, 174n¹; who has seen the Golden City, Kanakarekha will marry a, 173; woman entertains Vidūśaka, 69; woman, the poor, 125, 129, 133-135

Brāhmaṇas, the, 240

Brāhmaṇs feasted by Guha-chandra, 41

Brāhmaṇs of Gujarāt, Śrīgauḍa, 165, 169; of the monastery, 65

Brāhmaṇs oppose the king’s entrance, 67; oppose polyandry, 17

Brāhmaṇs, Pāṇḍu disguised as mendicant, 16; villages given to, 59

Brāhmaṇyuck (Chakravāka), 36

Brains from a skull, drinking, 199

Brave Brāhmaṇ Vidūśaka, 58

“Brave Seventee Bai,” Frere, Old Deccan Days, 202n³

Breast-cover (mahram), 50n³; (śīnband), 50n³

Breath, air polluted by poison-damsel’s, 292, 283; the poisonous, 300-303

Bribed to cause king’s death, woman, 309

Bribery, politic expedient of, 45n³

Bridegroom, tāli tied by a mock, 18

Bridge across the ocean constructed by the monkeys, 84, 84n¹, 85n

British Burma and its People, C. J. F. S. Forbes, 226n³

British Goblins, Wirt Sikes, 75n³, 98n², 223n³

British Medical Journal, 308, 310n³

British Museum, 61n¹, 263, 269

“Brittany Marriage Custom, A,” F. C. Conybeare, Folklore, 25n

Broken heart, death from a, 133

Broken-hearted king, the, 25
INDEX II—GENERAL

Brother of Dhritarāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu, Vidura, 16
Brother of Pāddhva, Śinharvan, 89
Brothers Asokadatta and Vijayadatta, meeting of the, 209
Brothers, stories of hostile, 14n

"Brothers, Story of the Two," Maspero, Popular Stories from Ancient Egypt, 120

Brothers Sunda and Upasunda, Asura, 13-14

Brought up on el-bīś, girl, 313

Brown (Kapila) cow, 276

Buddhism, Magadha the home of, 3n²

Buddhism of Tibet, Waddell, 142n²

Buddhist centre, Pāṭaliputra, the, 39n²

Buddhist Emperor of India, Āsoka, 120

Buddhist India, Rhys Davids, 3n²

Buddhist mendicant, Śiva assumes form of, 106

Buddhist sage named Nāgasena, 32

Bull, god whose ensign is a (Śiva), 101, 101n²; Nandin the, 242

Bull with Śiva, connection of the, 242

Bull. Madras Mus., 142n², 168, 199n

Bulletins de la Société d'Anthrop. de Paris, Moncelon in the, 306n²

Burglary with an iron tool, unlawful to commit a, 168

Buried treasure, 52, 87

"Burma and Assam (Buddhism in)," Sir J. G. Scott, Hastings' Ency. Rel. Eth., 265n²

Burma under British Rule and Before, J. Nisbet, 265n², 266n²

Burman, his Life and Notions, The, Shway Yoe (Sir J. G. Scott), 167, 265n²

Burmese architecture, ti in, 265, 265n²

Burning of Vāsavadatta's pavilion, 21

Burning-ghatt, 197n²

Burning-ground, 197n²; king taken for the keeper of the, 57, 57n³

"By the current" (ambuwe-gataḥ), 217n²

By descent (ākula), 158n²

Calf, Śvayambhubya Manu the, 241

Call from a funeral pyre, 200

Cambridge History of India, 3n³, 120, 240, 241, 282n¹

Camden Society, 114n

Camels, halting-place for (caravanserai or karavansarai), 162n², 163n²

Cannibalism during the French Revolution, 185n³

Cannibalism among the Śakta worshippers, 195n²

Cannibalism, hermit accused of, 185

Cantica cantorum, Frauenlob, 292n³

Capital of Asoka, Pātaliputra the, 39n²

Capital of Magadha, Girivraj the ancient, Rājagriha (modern Rājgir) the later, 3n²

Capture, marriage by, 24n

Caravanserai (karavansarāi, Persian), a halting-place for camels, 162n², 165n²

Cardinal points as only garment, 98, 98n³

Carried off by the animated corpse, the mendicant, 62

Carried off by Garuḍa, Jīmūtavahana, 154

Carry out the plan (yad hi), 12, 12n³

Carrying (dhārīn), 90n³

Caste, the Kshatriya, 17; the Māṅgu, a low, 82; the Pārādhī, 88n²; of scavengers, the Mehtar, 82; Teli the oil-presser's, 82; the Tiyor, 242

Caste mark (Tilaka), 22n³

Castes and Tribes of Southern India, E. Thorston, 166, 256, 256n⁴

"Casting forth flames out of her eyes and mouth" (nayanānānavānīlokaḥ), 104n¹

Casually (yadrichchhayā), 131n²

Cat (mājīdo), 46n²

Cat, Hanumān assumes form of, 197n²; Indra assumes form of, 46

Cat sacred in Russia, 117

Cathay and the Way Thither, Yule and Cordier, 80n², 265n²

Cattle in Jālandhar, cure for, 119

Cause of polyandrous marriage of Draupadi, 16, 17

Cause of the setting of the sun, the west the, 53

Causes of low proportion of females to males in India, 18, 19

Causes of polyandry, 18, 19

Celestial cow Kāmadhenu connected with Indra, 242

Celestial rank abandoned by Somaprabha, 44

Cemetary, horrors of the, 60-62, 201; full of Rākhasas, 205; the religious mendicant in the, 62; to get warm, Vijayadatta goes to the, 197; worship under a banyan-tree in the, 233

Census of India, 17, 18

Census Report, Panjab, 118

Cent. Novelle, Antiche, 113n²

Centralblatt für Bibliotheks- wesene, 288n²

Centre, Pātaliputra the great Buddhist, 39n²

Centuries of life, knots that mark the, 189, 189n³

Ceremonies of Nairs, marriage, 17, 18

Ceremony, the Chaukpurāṇa, 118

Ceremony of alliance as husband and wife (Sambhandham), 18

Ceremony in honour of Śiva, a horrible, 104

"Certain death, messenger of" (i.e. poison-damsel), 284

Chalcedians and Eretrians, war of the, 278

Chaldean Magic and Sorcery, Lenormant, 61n³, 69n³, 189n¹

Chanters of the Śāma Veda, 57

Chaplain named Śankaras-vāmin, 176, 178

Character indicated by bodily marks, 7n¹

Chariot, Rākhasa as a, 75, 78, 79
Charm against alligators, iron pyrites as a, 168
Charm for appeasing the fire, 42; to change shape, 20; to ward off danger, weapons a, 166
Charmed circle, the, 98n, 99n, 100n
"Charms and Amulets (Indian)," W. Crooke, Hastings' Ency. Rel. Eth., 167
Chase by the king, pursuit of the, 126
Cheat (kāla), 222n
Cheating at play a frequent crime, 232n
Chest filled with false gems, 179, 181
"Chew" of betel, poison conveyed in, 303
Chief enemy of the King of Vatsa, Brahmadatta the, 88, 89, 91, 95, 115
Chief of the monkeys, Sugriva, 84, 84n
Chief prince of the Siddhas, Viśvāvasu, 140, 149
Chief of the Savaras, Pulindaka, 141
Chiefwarden named Nityodita, 128, 129
Child becomes a sword, the murdered, 236
Child protected by lamps, 161; sold to a smith by Annam parents, 166, 167; taken from woman after cutting her open, 229, 229n; symbolised by fire produced by fire-drill, 226
Child-bearing, evil effect of early, 18
Childbirth, knife to keep off the devil kept beside woman after, 166
Childbirth customs, 166, 167; among the Kachins of Upper Burma, 167; among the Vadāvāls of Thāna, 167
Childhood of Fiction, The, J. A. Maceulluche, 108n, 194n, 202n, 224n, 226
Children, Harasvāmin accused of eating, 185; method of killing female, 304
Children like Misery and Poverty, two, 128
Children on the Slave Coast, iron rings attached to, 167
Child's flesh eaten by Jālapāda, 234
Chin, character indicated by the, 7n
Chinese Art, Bushell, 264
Chips from a German Workshop, Max Müller, 251n
Chloride of mercury, 281
Choice, marriage by (svayamvara), 16
Cholera, iron used during attack of, 167
Chrestomathie Arabe, Silvestre de Sacy, 312n
Churning of the Ocean, 65m, 67n, 81
Circle, the charmed, 98-100n; the magic, 98-100n, 295, 296
Circle of ashes, 100n
Circle of dittany juice, 100n, 295, 295n
Circle as a kind of ḫaram, the magic, 295
Circumambulating the tree, 96, 97
City, Kanakarekhā will marry a Brāhman or Kshatriya who has seen the Golden, 173; search of Saktideva for the Golden, 188-195; Story of the Golden, 171-175, 184, 186-195, 213, 217-231, 238-238
"City of flowers" Kusumapura (Pāṭaliputra), 39n, 185n
City given to Sundaraka, 111
City of Gold at last reached, 219, 220; bestowed on Saktideva, 233; return of Saktideva to the, 237
City of Indra, Svarga, 175n
"City of jewels," Ratnapura, 175, 175n
"City named of the elephant," Hastināpura, 1, 1n
City sacred to the moon-god, Ḥarran, 194n
City of the Saints, Burton, 280, 280n
City Shower, A. Swift, 270
Class of Rishi (holy sage), Devrashi the highest, 34, 34n
Classes of Śaiva mendicants, ten, 90n
Classical Dictionary, Garrett, 252n
Classical writers, dittany in the works of, 295n
Clever Physician, Story of the, 2, 2n
Clothes in Brazil, infected, 280
Clothes infected with smallpox, 280n
Clue to the poison-damsel myth, cobra stinging the, 311
Cobra in India, dread of the, 311
Cobra regarded as phallic, 307
Cobra, reverence paid to the, 311, 312
Cobra stings a clue to the poison-damsel myth, 311
Code of Manu, 275, 276n
Coffee-houses, umbrellas used by, 269
Collection of communications from Aristotle to Alexander, the Secretum Secretorum, 287
Collects his wives, Vidūshaka, 78, 79
College, the Sanskrit, 50n, 74n, 89n, 97n, 100n, 137n, 185n, 197n
Colliers d'Or, Les, Barbier de Meynard, 298
Collyrium and kohl, 50n
Colour of the Sun's Horses, Dispute about the, 150-153
Columns of victory, 92, 92n
Comets and meteors, Rāhu's body the progenitor of, 81
Command of Siva to the Rākhsha, 74, 75
Commentary on the Hindu System of Medicine, Wise, 298
Commercial Products of India, Watt, 290n, 304n
Communal or group marriage, 17
Communications from Aristotle to Alexander, Secretum Secretorum a collection of, 287 Compassion of Jīmūtavāhana, 139
"Conceptions extraordinaires," Chauvin, Bibliographie des Ouvrages Arabes, 158n
INDEX II—GENERAL

Conciliation, politic expedient of, 45n2
Concubine of Nanda, Murā, 282n3
Concubine rubbed with poison, neck of a, 297
Condition for marriage, Kanakarekhā’s, 173
Conditions of Urvāšī’s marriage to Purūravas, 145-146
Confucian classic Tsun Tsu ("Springs and Autumnns"), 81
Connection between snakes and intercourse, 307; of the bull with Siva, 242; of the celestial cow Kāmadhenu with Indra, 242; of the cow with fertility, 242
Conquering the earth by the King of Vatsa, 91-94
Conqueror (or Victor) of Obstacles (Gaṇeṣa), 1, 125, 125n1
Conquest, preparation of the king for, 53
[Conquest of] Peru, W. Prescott, 85n1
Cons., Vegetius, 277
Construction of a bridge across the ocean by monkeys, 84-85n Consumption (dāhaśiṃ̄a) 25, 25n3
Contamination by the poison-damsel, different methods of, 291
Contes Albanais, Dozon, 190n1
Contes DÉvois or Miracles of the Virgin, 113n1
Contes d’Entrelap, Noël du Fail de la Hérisaye, 3n
Contes de Pervault, Les, P. Saintyves, 224n, 253n1
Continence, division of a (Varsha), 125n2
Continuity, magic circle denotes finality and, 99n
Contos Populares Portugueses, Coelho, 76n
Conversation of Achilles with his horses Xanthos and Balios, 57n1
Conversation of birds overheard by Śāktideva, 219, 219n1
Conversation of birds, overhearing, 107n1
Conversations of Rākṣhasas, giants, vampires, etc., overhearing, 107n1
Cook named Sāhasika, 112, 113
Copyists, Secretum Secretorum suffered at the hands of, 288
"Corn-god, net of the," circle of flour and water called the, 295, 296
Corpse, flames issuing from the mouth of a, 62; mustard seed growing from the navel of a, 62
Corpses, digging up and eating, 202n1
Corpses eaten, flesh of, 108n1
Country of the Bharatas, 16
Courage (sattvataḥ), 236n2; (tejas), 161n2
Court of Kublāi Kaan, 268
Courtesan visited by Guha-chandra, 44
Covetousness one of the six faults of man, 106n3
Cow (go), 241
Cow an act of hospitality, offer to kill a, 241
Cow connected with fertility, 242
Cow connected with Indra, Kāmadhenu the celestial, 242
Cow granting all desires, Kāmadhenu, 45, 45n2
Cow, Hindu filled with horror at the slaughter of a, 240
"Cow (Hindu)," H. Jacobi, Hastings' Enc. Rel. Eth., 240, 241
Cow of the Hindus, the sacred, 240-242
Cow identified with speech, 241
Cow, Kapila (brown), 276
Cow ritual, 241, 242
Cow, the sacred, 229, 229n1
Cow and the universe, mystic relation between the, 240
Cow used as a standard of value, 240
Cow-house flies through the air, 105, 109
Cow-house, Sundaraka takes shelter in a, 106
Cow’s heaven, 242
Cows and oxen eaten by the sage Yājñivalkyya, milch, 241
"Craft and Malice of Women, The," Burton, Nights, 123
Creation of the story-teller, poison-damsel, 313
"Credenze religiose delle popolazioni rurali dell’albergo di Valletta del Taveri," G. Nicasi, Lares, 108n
Creepers clinging to a tree, union of husband and wife compared to a, 204n1
Creepers, Urvāšī changed into a, 258
Creepers-like sword (flexible, well-tempered), 93, 93n1
Creepers poisoned by Yagya-karandaka, 91
Crest, god with the (Śiva), 136, 170
Cries of vultures and jackals, 60
Criminal Classes of Bombay, Kennedy, 185n
Criminal tribe of North India, Doms a, 168
Crow as poison, bile of the jungle, 303
Crown ( mãṇi), 264
Crudities, Coryate, 270
Cry, to (kn), 251
Cuer de Philosophie, Le, Antoine Vérand, 283
Curd, a sacred product of the cow, 242
Cure of affections by violence, 2, 3n1, 3n; of disease by a shock, 37, 37n1
Curing cattle-leprā, Jālandhar, 119
Curing a horse in the Sīrāsā district, 119
Curious Myths of the Middle Ages, Baring-Gould, 39n2
Curl at back of head or near right temple considered unlucky, 7n1; at back of Palli bride’s head indicates death of her eldest brother-in-law, 7n1; on bride’s forehead among Pallis indicates widowhood, 7n1; on forehead lucky, 7n1
Current, by the (ambuśugataḥ), 217n3
Curse of Agryatapas, 121; of Arindama, 127; of Asokadatta’s wife ends, 210; of Bharata, 257, 255; of Gautama, 45; of the hermits, 211; of Nārada, 147; of Siva, 141
Curse, death of Pāṇḍu owing to a, 16; laid upon Purūravas by Tumburu, 35
Cursed, the three sisters, 237
Curtain (porda), 163n
THE OCEAN OF STORY

Curved sword of the King of Vatsa, 93, 93n
Custom of kings to dabble in magic, 112n
Custom regarding bodily marks among the Kurubas, 7n
Customs connected with eclipses, 81-83; connected with eclipses in Northern India, 82, 83; connected with eclipses among the Sencis of Eastern Peru, 81; connected with eclipses among the Tlaxcalans of Mexico, 81; connected with eclipses among the Todas of the Nilgiri Hills, 82; connected with iron in Salsette, 167
Cuts herself open, Vidyut-prabhā, 234
Cutting the noses off impaled robbers, 60-62
Cutting off of the Rākṣasa’s arm by Vidūshaka, 71
Cutting open a woman and taking out the child, 229, 220n²
Cycle of tales, The Sindibād Nāma, 124

Dābibīn, The, Shea-Troyer, 169
Daily offering to the fire (homa), 257, 257n¹
Damsel, the poison-, 275-313
Damsel brought up on poison from infancy, 293
Damsel in India, the poison-, 231-236
Damsels sent among the enemy’s host, poison-, 91, 91n¹
Dance, chalita, a dramatic, 35, 35n²
Dancing, nymphs display their skill in, 35
Danger, weapons a charm to ward off, 166
Daring task undertaken by Vidūshaka, 60-62
Daśa Kumāra Charita, or The Story of the Ten Princes, J. J. Meyer, 183n³, 184n
Date of the worship of the sacred cow, 240
Date-stones, jerking of, 147n¹
Daughter of Adityasena, 55, 62; of Devasena, 69-71; of the Himālaya (Pārvati), 156
“Daughter, Giving of a,” negotiation termed, 47
Daughter, marriage of Śiva and the chaplain’s, 181
“Daughter of Prithu,” Earth called Prithivi, 241
Daughters of hermits, Vidyādharas fall in love with the, 211
Daughters of the Rākṣasas, 74; of Śaśikhaṇḍa, 221
Daybreak, at (probhāte), 51n²
Dead, Kanakarekhā found by Saktideva, 222, 223
Dead body, animating a, 62
Dead and dying, magic circle a protective barrier to the, 99n
Dead rise from the tomb in the form of vampires, belief that the, 61n¹
Dead robbers tenanted by demons, 61, 61n¹
Deadliest aconite (Aconitum ephedratum), 279
Deadly serpents, valley guarded by, 299
Deadly snakes and Alexander the Great, 299, 300
De Aristoletis quae feruntur secretis secretorum commen-tatio, Förster, 287n¹, 288n², 289n¹
Death from broken heart, 132
Death of eldest brother-in-law indicated by curl on the back of Palli bride’s head, 7n¹
Death of Guhasena, 41
Death of King Ladislaw of Naples, legend of the, 310
Death of King Weneceslaus II, legend of the, 309, 309n²
“Death, Letter of,” motif, 114n
Death, the message of, 113-114n
“Death, messenger of certain,” the poison-damsel the, 284
Death in mirrors, serpents stare themselves to, 299
Death of Pāṇḍu owing to a curse, 16
Death, south inhabited by the God of, 54
Death, temple of Durgā like the mouth of, 227
Death the tenth and final stage of love-sickness, 9n²
Death from unrequited love, 8-10n
Death in his wife’s embrace, Pāṇḍu’s, 127
Death, woman bided to cause king’s, 309
Deaths of Duḥkalabdiṣa’s husbands, mysterious, 69, 70
Deaths from: snake-bite, statistics of, 311
De Bello Gild., Claudian, 277
Decadas, João de Barros, 269
Decameron, Boccaccio, 10n, 76n¹, 114n
Decameron, its Sources and Analogues, Lee, 10n, 76n¹, 114n
De causis et propteretatibus elementorum, Pseudo-Aristotle, 299n⁴
Decay of vegetation, symbol of the gradual, 61n¹
“Declaring presence” motif, 76n¹, 77n
Deception of Katalhi, Pāthā and Vīḍanga, 276
De Dea Syria, Lucian, 169
Dedication of the golden lotus to a temple, 208
Deer, hermit in the form of a, 127
Deer of the mind (manomṛgī), 140n²
Defeat of the Hūṇas, 94, 94n³
Desile the Sun’s horses, snakes spit venom to, 150
Degeneration of the Rājputs, 305, 305n¹
Deity of sweepers, Rāhu a, 82
De iure belli in pactis, Hugo Grotius, 277-279
Dedicate mission of Agni, 101
Delights, destroyer of (death), 124
Delta of the Ganges, 92n²
Demon eating the impaled man’s flesh, a horrible, 202
Demon flies up in the air, 203
Demon Jvālāmukha, Brāhmaṇ, 147n¹
Demonology, Conway, 117
Demons, dead robbers tenanted by, 61, 61n¹; fire-breathing, 61
“DemonsandSpirits(Indian),” W. Crooke, Hasting’s Ency. Rel. Eth., 61n¹
Denkmäler provenzalischer Literatur und Sprache, Suchier, 289n¹
INDEX II—GENERAL

De Nugis Curialium, Th. Wright (Camden Society), 114n
De Officiis, Cicero, 277
Dependent of a king (kārpata), 178n
Depression on Adam's Peak, beliefs regarding the, 84n, 85n De Regimine Principum (Secretum Secretorum), 287, 287n
Descending from the air, spell forgotten by Sundaraka for, 110
Descending nodes, Rāhu’s body represents, 81
Descent (ākula), 158n; of Ishtar into Hades, 61n; of Vidūshaka into the sea, 72
Description of Naravāhanadatta, 162; of Rākshasas, 197n; of the terrors of the cemetery, 60-62; of witches, 103-104n
Descriptive Catalogue of the Mackenzie Collection of Oriental MSS., H. H. Wilson, 121, 123
De Secretis Secretorum, 287, 287n
Desire of Gauri for a son, 100
Desire of the king for a second golden lotus, 203
Desire one of the six faults of man, 106n
"Desires, Giver of,” a wishing-tree called, 138, 139
Destiny, Goddess of, 218
Destiny of Govindasvāmin’s sons foretold, 196
Destroyer of delights (death), 124
 Destruction of the Mlecchhas, 93; of the serpent race, 162
Deutsche Liederdichter des 12. bis 14. Jahrhunderts, K. Bartsch, 292n
Deutsche Mythologie, Grimm, 106n
Deutsche Volksbücher, Simrock, 57n, 64n, 76n
"Deux Anglais à Paris," Fabfau, 2n
Devil, knife kept beside a woman after childbirth to keep off the, 166
Devils and Evil Spirits of Babylonia, The, R. Campbell Thompson, 61n
Dharmakalpadruma, 14n
Dialogus Creaturam, Nicolaus Peramenus, 114n
Dice, gambling with, 231n, 232n
Dictionary of the Economic Products of India, Watt, 280n, 304n
Dictionary of Islam, Hughes, 165n
Diverse methods of contamination by the poison-damself, 291
Digestible snake venom, 311
Diving up corpses and eating them, 202n
Dimple in cheek indicates looseness of character, 7n
Diplomacy of Yaugandharaya, 3
Disappearance of Bhradra, 69; of Kālaratri, 111
Discoverer of the Secretum Secretorum, Yaḥya ibn Baṭriq, the alleged, 288
Discovery by Guhachandra that his wife is a divine being, 42, 43
Discovery of the king, amazing, 98, 99
Discovery of the Lost Site of Pāṭaliputra, L. A. Waddell, 39n Discovery of ruins at Patna by Waddell and Spooner, 39n
Disease (vyuddhā), 37n
Disease in connection with the poison-damself myth, venereal, 308, 309
Disease cured by shock, 37, 37n
Disfavour of Aryans for polyandry, 17
Disguise of Pāṇḍu as mendicant Brāhmans, 16; of Vāsavaddattā, Vasantaka and Yaugandharaya, 20, 21
Disguised as a Rājpūtā, Madhava, 176, 177; as a religious ascetic, Śiva, 176
Disgusting food, eating, 198n
Dish of emerald reveals the past, 159, 160
Dislike of spirits for iron, 166
Dispute about the colour of the Sun's horses, 150-152
Disquisitones Magicae, Del Rio, 300, 300n²
Dissension, politic expedient of sowing, 45n²
Distance, measure of (yoginās), 57, 57n², 75; (kōs), 191
Distinctive names of umbrellas, 264
Distinguishing signs of Naravāhanadatta, 7n
District, the Chola maṇḍala or, 92n
Districts of Patna, Gayā and Shāhābād correspond with kingdom of Magadhā, 3n
Dittany juice, circle traced round snake with, 295; magic circle of, 100n, 295
Dittany in the works of classical writers, 295n
"Divali, the Lamp Festival of the Hindus," W. Crooke, Folk-Lore, 118, 232n
Divine being, discovery by Guhachandra that his wife is a, 42, 43; origin of Pāṇḍu in a single, 17
Divine beings, horses as, 57, 57n
Divine man, 170
Divine sage (Devarshi), 34, 34n²
Divine, speech regarded as, 241; syphilis regarded by Mexicans as, 309
Divine voice, a, 63, 65
Division of a continent (Varsha), 125n²
Doctor of Padua, 297; of Perugia, 310
Doctrine of ākīna, 241
Doe rubbed with poison, 298
Doe, tale of the lion and the, 298
Dog a demonic character in Russia, 117
Dog of Venice carries an umbrella, 268
Dogs held in esteem by the moon, 81
Dogs, wife thrown to the, 121
Dolopathos, 124
Domestic fire (laukikāgni), 256
Door fastened with the arm of the Rākshasa, 71, 72n²
Dove, Jonah the Hebrew word for, 193n, 194n
Downwards (adhaš), 218n
Dragon, medieval legend of a, 296
Early marriage in India, evil effects of, 19
Ears, character indicated by the, 77; eyes of Hindu ladies said to reach their, 50, 50m
Earth (Aditi), 241, 242
Earth called Prithivi (daughter of Prithu), 241
Earth conquered by the King of Vatsa, 91-94
Earth goddess, 49
Earth milked by living creatures, 241
Earth under one umbrella, 125, 125m
["East Central African Customs "] Macdonald, Jour. Anth. Inst., 198m
East, Ganges flows towards the, 54; the preferred quarter, 54; presided over by Indra, 54
Eastern background of the Secretum Secretorum, 290
Eastern mountain (udayagiri), 67m; (udayaparvata), 67m
Eastern mountain behind which the sun rises, Udaya, 67m
Eastern quarter subdued by the King of Vatsa, 91
Eating children, Harasvamin accused of, 185
Eating disgusting food, 198m
Eating and drinking opium more harmful than smoking it, 303
Eating flesh of corpses, 198m
Eating lime of oyster shells, 301, 302
Eating human flesh, 103, 104; among the Bantu negro races, 198m, 199m; in Central Africa, 198m; Mana or spiritual exalation gained by, 198m; in Melanesia, 198m; power of becoming vampires by, 198m
Eating the impaled man's flesh, a horrible demon, 202
Eating opium, 303, 304
Eating the ox, sacrificial act of, 240
Eating poison regularly, 300
Eating of a snake gives power of understanding the language of animals, 108m
"Eau-de-jouvence," Chauvin, Bibliographie des Ouvrages Arabes, 151m
Ecclesiastes, 107m
Eclipse an important event among modern Hindus, 83
Eclipses among the Tlaxcalans of Mexico, 81; among the Todas of the Nilgiri hills, 82; in China, 81; in Northern India, 82, 83; regarded with dread, 81, 82
Eclipses, Note on Rahu and, 81-83
Edifice (sarà or sarā, Persian), 182m
Effect of betel-chewing, 302
Effects of poison, ring to destroy the, 301
Egyptian Sultan Faraj, 279
"Egyptians, Alleged Discovery of Syphilis in Prehistoric," The Lancet, 308m
Electra, Sophocles, 127m
Elephant, city named of the (Hastinapura), 1, 1n
Elephant-faced god (Ganesa), 99-103, 125, 125m, 147m, 170
Elephants in the army of the King of Vatsa, 90
Elephants, necklace from the heads of, 142, 142m Emblem of royalty, the umbrella an, 263
Embrace, killing by, 291
Embraces, Pându's death in his wife's, 127
Embryo cut out of woman, 234
Embryo of Kàrttikeya takes a thousand years to develop, 102
Emerald reveals the past, dish of, 159, 160
Emperor of India, Ásioka the Buddhist, 120; Pátaliputra the capital of Ásioka, the first, 39m
Emperor of the Vidyádhars, 156
Empire Exhibition, Wembley, 271
Empire, Goddess of the Fortune of, 163
Empty vessels inauspicious, 164m
Enclosure (serraglio, Italian), 162m
Encyclopädie, Ersch and Gruber, 163m
INDEX II—GENERAL

Encyclopædia of Superstitions, Folk-Lore and the Occult Sciences, C. L. Daniels and C. M. Stevans, 145n

Endowed with much light (σωληνεύεται), 251

Enemies of the King of Vatsa subdued, 91-94

Enemies of man, six faults that are the, 106, 106n

Enemy of the King of Vatsa, Brahmadatta the chief, 88-91, 95, 115

Enemy, spitting at an, 302, 303

English Dictionary, New, Murray, 269n, 270

English and Scotch Popular Ballads, Child, 76n

English trans. of Frauenlob’s Cantica canticorum, A. E. Kroeger, 292n

English umbrellas, examples of, 271

Enormous birds like vultures, 219

“Ensorcelled Prince, Tale of the,” Burton, Nights, 131n

Entry of the king into Kauśāmbi, the triumphant, 49-51, 115

Envy one of the six faults of man, 106n

Epic, the, 45n

Epicurean, The, Thomas Moore, 6n

Epithet denoting the price of a man’s blood (ṣatādāya), 240

Eretrians, war of the Chalcidians and the, 278

Esoteric rites of Hinduism, 214

Essays on the Hindu Family in Bengal, B. Mullick, 163n

Essays on Sanskrit Literature, H. H. Wilson, 92n

“Establishment of the Sacred Fires,” Agnyādāhāna, 256n

Ethiopian princess, 264

Ethnographie Notes in Southern India, Thurston, 1n, 166, 256, 256n

Etiquette, offer of a cow a piece of, 241

Etude sur les différents Textes, imprimés et manuscrits, du Ronan des Sept Sages, Paulin Paris, 120

Etymology, tracing origin of myths through, 251, 252; of the word “umbrella,” 263; of the word zenana, 162n

Eunuch of Candace, Queen of Ethiopia, 85n

Eunuchs, 29, 29n

European form of “death from love” motif, 10n

European literature, Secretum Secretorum in, 292-297

Events which happened at the formation of the Maurya Empire, 281

Evil effects of early marriage in India, 18; of premature child-bearing in India, 18; of primitive midwifery in India, 18

Evil Eye, The, F. T. Elworthy, 298

 Evil eye and the fatal look, 298

Evil omen of an eclipse, 82

Evil omen when children speak shortly after birth, 39n

Evil results of sudden wealth, 59

Evil spirits active on first night of marriage, 306

Evil spirits, lights in the birth-chamber to scare away, 163; measures to prevent entry of, 166; scared away by iron, 166-168; scared away by steel, 166-168; scared away with a sword in the Philippines, 167

Exaltation gained by eating human flesh, Mana or spiritual, 198n

Examples of English umbrellas, 271

Excavations of Sir Henry Layard, 263

Excitement of the women on seeing the king and queens, 50-51

Executioners become blind when attempting to impale Somadatta, 96

Exercizio e Maria, 281

Existence in fact, poison-damsel has no, 313

Expedition of Alexander receives a check, 252

Expedition, preparation of the King of Vatsa for the, 89

Explanations of the fish legend, 193n

“External Soul” motif, 120

Eye, the fire of Śiva’s, 100n, 164n; throbbing, 144-145n

Eye and the fatal look, the evil, 298

Eyebrows, meeting, 103-104n

Eyes, blue (azrā, Arabic), 299; King Śiva and the heavenly, 32, 33; of Hindu ladies said to reach their ears, 50, 50n; koḥi’d, 104n; women with precious stones in their, 306

Eyes of Indra, the thousand, 46, 46n
THE OCEAN OF STORY

Fables of Pilpay (Awārī-Suhailī), 297, 297n²
Fabliaux, "Deux Anglais à Paris," 2n¹
Fabliaux, Le Grand, 113n¹
Faces, boy with six (Kārtti-’keya), 102; of the women like moons, 50, 50n²
Fact, poison-damsel has no existence in, 313
Factors in favour of polyandry, 19
Failure of Brahmadatta’s stratagem, 91
"Fair Margaret and Sweet William," ballad of, Percy, Reliques, 10n Falling on the earth (kalita), 159n¹
False assertion of Śaktideva, 174, 175
False gems, chest filled with, 179, 181
Fame, the Goddess of, 90, 116
Fame of Jīmūtavāhana, 139
Fasti, Ovid, 263
Fasting, month of (Shravana), 164n⁴
Fatal bite of the poison-damsel, 291; kiss of the poison-damsel, 294; look, the, 298-300
Faults that are the enemies of man, six, 106, 106n³
Faust, Goethe, 105n, 297
Favour of the Guhyaka, 98, 99n²; of the king won by Vīduśhaka, 59
Fear of Bhadrā, 67, 68
Fearless (visādīvāsaḥ), 218n²
Feast in honour of the birth of the king’s son, 163, 164; of Indra, 35; of Lights, the Divāli, 118; of Rāma, 82
Feast in archery performed by Arjuna, a great, 16
Feathers of birds, hiding among the, 219n², 220n
Feats of strength, superiority of Pāṇḍu princes in, 16
Feeling satisfaction (ānimīvarīntaḥ), 221n⁴
Feces, character foretold by, 7n¹
Feigned illness of Mādhava, 179, 181; madness of Vīduśhaka, 68
Fellow to the jewelled anklet craved by the queen, 204
Female children in India, neglect of, 18, 19
Female children, method of killing, 304
Female, horizontal stick as, 256
Female Rākhsha (Rākhsha), 69n², 107n¹, 127
Females in India, low proportion of, 18, 19
Femme Turque, La, G. Dorys, 163n
Fertility, connection of the cow with, 242; rites, nudity in, 118
Festival, the Holī, 59n¹, 164n⁴, 169
Festschrift für Ernst Windisch, "Über die Suvabhuttari-katha," J. Hertel, 286, 286n¹
Fickleness of Devadatta’s wife, 131
Field (kesṭhra), 116n¹
Fields and water poisoned by Faraj, 279
Final stage of love-sickness, death the, 9n²
Finality and continuity, magic circle denoted, 99n
Finding of the jewelled throne, 52, 53
Finger, character indicated by, 7n¹
Fire, Agni, God of, 97
Fire appears to Gukhachandra, a god of, 42
Fire-breathing demons, 61
Fire, charm for appeasing the, 42; daily offering to the (homa), 257, 257n²; domestic (laukikāgni), 256; given to Purūravas, 247, 249; and light, rules in all parts of the world regarding, 168; obtained with fire-stick, 250; in one’s own body (vrika), 256; produced by fire-drill symbolic of the child, 256; propitiated by Vīduśhaka with austerities, 58; to the queen’s palace, plot to set, 3; ritual, 248-250; the sacrificial, 247, 249, 250, 255; of Siva’s eye, 100n¹, 164n³; son born to Siva and Umā in the, 102; submarine (vadavāgni), 250; turned into an Ásvattha tree, 247, 250
Fire-drill (araṇi), 255, 256; and intercourse of the Fire-drill—continued
· sexes, analogy between, 255, 256; symbolic of the child, fire produced by the, 256
Fire by friction, making, 247, 249, 250, 255, 256
Fire God, sword of the, 58, 60, 71, 72, 74
Fire-priest (agnihotri), 257
Fire-stick (araṇi), 248; made of Ásvattha and Śaṅkī wood, 248, 250
Fire-walking, rite of, 169
Fire of the wrath of Śiva, 66
"Fires, Establishment of the Sacred," Agnyādhaṇa, 256n³
Firm (amsala), 241
First Emperor of India, Paṭaliputra the capital of, Asoka the, 39n³
First Footstep in East Africa, Burton, 271n²
First Indo-European love-story, 245
First man to use an umbrella, Jonas Hanway, 269
First night of marriage, evil spirits active on the, 306
Fish, a rohita, 193n¹
Fish swallows Śaktideva, 192
Fisherman prepare to sacrifice Śaktideva, sons of the, 227, 228
Fish’s belly, Śaktideva found alive in the, 193
Fit recipients (kesṭhra), 116n¹
Five-arrowed God of Love, 1
Five articles of regalia, 264
Five brothers with one wife, 13, 13n³, 16, 17
Five “royal” trees, 118
Five sacred products of the cow (paṇḍhagaya), 242
Five sons of Pāṇḍu, 16
Five trees of Paradise, Parijāta one of the, 13, 13n³
Flames issuing from the mouth of a corpse, 62
Flapping of wings (pakṣha-pāta), 219n²
Flesh of corpses eaten, 198n¹
Flesh eaten by Jālapāda, the child’s, 234
Flesh, eating human, 103, 104; obliteration of human, 99; for sale, human, 205; in Tantric rites, human, 214
Flexible, well-tempered sword (creepere-like), 93, 93n¹
INDEX II—GENERAL

Flint and steel (chakkamukki), 256n
Florentines, Ladislao poisoned by the, 310
Flour (kusurra), 295
Flow of the Ganges towards the East, 54
Flower, the pārijāta, 190n
"Flowers, the city of," Ku-sumapura or Pātaliputra, 39n, 185n
Flying through the air, 62-64n, 103, 104
"Flying through the Air," A. M. Hocart, Ind. Ant., 64n
Fodder, poisoned, 276
Fœeticide, 229n
"Fœeticide," A. E. Crawley, Hastings' Ency. Rel. Eth., 229n
Folding umbrella (chatyra), 268
Folk-lore, the "Act of Truth," motif in, 31-33
Folk-Lore Journal, 'The Forbidden Chamber,' E. S. Hartland, 223n; "The Forbidden Doors of the Thousand and One Nights," W. Kirby, 224n
Folk-Lore of the Northern Counties, Henderson, 2n, 98n, 104n
Folk-Lore of the Old Testament, Frazer, 194n
Folk-Lore Society, 80n, 122
Folk-Lore in Southern India, Sāstrī, 136n
Folk Memory, W. Johnson, 167
Folk-Tales of Bengal, L. B. Day, 108n
Folk-Tales of Kashmir, Knowles, 124
Food, eating disgusting, 195n
Food of Garuḍa, snakes become, 151, 152
Foolish snakes, the, 151
Fools (jāda), 188n
Footprint, depression on Adam's Peak regarded as Adam's, 85n
"Forbidden Chamber, The," E. S. Hartland, Folk-Lore Journal, 225n
"Forbidden Chamber" motif, 223n, 224n
"Forbidden Doors of the Thousand and One Nights, The," W. Kirby, Folk-Lore Journal, 224n Forbidden Terrace, the, 222-224n
Forced on Somaprabhā, marriage, 41
Forcibly (balavad), 129n
Forehead, curl lucky on the, 7n; curl on Palli bride's, indicates widowhood, 7n
Forehead mark made in an initiation ceremony, tikā, 22n, 23n
Forehead-streaks, 22-24n, 26, 27, 29
Foreknowledge, Prajñāpīti, 212n
Forgotten by Sundaraka, spell for descending from the air, 110
Form of the "Act of Truth," 32
Form of Buddhist mendicant assumed by Sīva, 106
Form of a cat assumed by Hanumān, 197n; of a cat assumed by Indra, 46; of a man assumed by the lion, 147
Formation of the Maurya Empire, events which happened at, 281
Former birth, adventures of Jimūtavāhana in a, 141-149; of the king's horse, 56; power of remembering, 149; of Vāsavadātā, 30
Former name of Jimūtavāhana, Vāsudatta, 141
Forms of marriage enjoyed by Kshatriyas, the lowest, 17
Forms of polygamy, 17
Fortune of Empire, Goddess of the, 162
Fortune, the Goddess of, 49, 116
Fortune, handful of water offered to, 6n
Fortune, the long hair of Good, 236
Fortune of Victory, 90
Fortune of the Vidyādharas, 137
Forty Vazirs, The, 169
Foundation of Pātaliputra attributed to Kālāsoka, 39n
Founder of the Maurya Empire, Chandragupta the, 281-285
Four-faced to behold Tilottama, Śiva becomes, 14
Four politico expedients, 45, 45n
Four sisters, marriage of Saktideva to the, 238
"Fragrant one, the" (Surabhi), 242
Frame-story of Book of Sindi-bad, 122, 123
Fraternal polyandry, 18
Frauenlob, A. Beerkel, 292n
Freedman under Khalifa al-Ma'mūn, Yahya ibn Baṭriq, a Syrian, 288
French poem of "Horn and Rimenhild," 75n
French Revolution, report of cannibalism during the, 185n
French version of the poison-damsel myth, 293
Fricition, making fire by, 247, 249, 250, 255, 256
"Friend, The," Afanasiyeff, 202n
Friend of Bhadrā, Yogeśvarī, 67
Friendship of Jimūtavāhana and the Śāvara chief, 142; of Krishna with the herdsmen, 242; of the Rākshasa Yamadanshtra for Vidūshaka, 75
Frog as poison, bile of the green water-, 303
Fruit given to Vāsavadātā in a dream, 136
Fruit received from Durgā, heavenly, 136n
Fruits called chofole, 301, 302
Funeral pyre, call from a, 200
Future ministers of Naravāhanadatta, 165
THE OCEAN OF STORY

Gable of Prester John’s palace, 169
Gain love, stratagem to, 44
Gaining love by magic aid, 43, 44
Gambler Devadatta, the, 281-286
Gambler’s wife, ordinary occurrence of the adultery of a, 85n Gambling, 231n, 232n; in the Deccan, 232n; in Kashmir, 232n; in Nepal, 232n; in the Panjab, 232n; among the Shans of Upper Burma, 232n
Gamester (kitawa), 232n
Gaming-table, Saktideva loses his wealth at the, 174
Gaming, vice of, 231
“Gang nach dem Eisenhammer, Der,” Schil er, Gedichte, 113n
Garden of the gods, Nandana, 34; of herbs, a, 108, 110; of Kailāsa, 14
Garlands made by Vāsavatātā, unfading, 22, 23, 26, 27, 29
Garlic juice dangerous to poisonous animals, 296
Garment, cardinal points as only, 98, 96n
Gazetteer, Upper Burma, 167, 252n
Gedichte, Schiller, “Der Gang nach dem Eisenhammer,” 113n; “Der Graf von Habsburg,” 49n
Gems, chest filled with false, 179, 181; given to the chaplain, 181
General of Indra’s forces, Kārttikeya, 103
German poet, Ottacker or Ottokar, 309, 309n
German South-West Africa, General Botha’s campaign in, 281
German versions of the poison-damsel myth, 294, 294n
Gesammelte Abhandlungen zur Amerikanischen Spruch- und Allertumskunde, E. Seler, 309, 309n
Geschichte (or Sagenbuch) der Bayerischen Lande, Schöppner, 113n
Geschichte der Lustsuche im Allertume, Rosenbaum, 308n
Geschichte der Stadt Rom im Mittelalter, Gregorovius, 310n
Gespensterscheinung (vikritī), 202n
Gesta Romanorum, 113n, 127n, 150n, 169, 296, 297
“Geste of King Horn,” 76n
Ghee, a sacred product of the cow, 242
Ghosts, iron implement kept near child’s head to ward off, 166
Ghouls in Uganda, society of, 199n
Giant Ruru, 228, 228n
Giant saves Vīdūṣhaka from drowning, the leg of the, 73
Giant under the sea, ship stopped by the leg of a, 72
Giants, overhearing conversations of, 107n
Gift of Vishnu to Purūravas, Urvāśī the, 34, 35
Gingham first made in Guingamp, Brittany, 271
Girl in a basket set afloat on the Ganges, 4
Girl brought up among poisonous herbs, 297; brought up on el-bīṣ, 313; brought by huge snakes, 294
Girl with the snake nature, 294, 295
Girl rubbed with ointment of juice of aconite, 310
Girls nourished on poison, infant, 293
“Giver of Desires,” a wishing-tree called, 138, 139
“Giving of a daughter,” negotiation called, 47
“Glance, poison in a” (drīg-vīśa or drīṣti-vīśa), 298
Glass and quartz, jewels of, 182
Glory white in Hindu rhetoric, 208n
Glücksvogel, 219n
Goa and the Blue Mountains, R. F. Burton, 19
God whose crest is the moon (Siva), 136
God of Death, south inhabited by the, 54
God of Fire, Agni, 97, 101, 255n
God of fire appeased by Guhachandra, a, 42
God, Ganeśa, the elephant-faced, 103; Hanumān, the monkey, 197n; Harran, city sacred to the moon, 194n; Nanahautzin, satellite of the Mexican sun, 309; the trident-bearing (Siva), 158
God of Love (Kāma), 27, 27n, 55, 66, 94, 100, 101, 127, 136, 144, 164; consumed by Siva, 100, 100n; the five-arrowed, 1; incarnation of the, 137; wives of the, 51, 51n
God with the moon crest (Siva), 170
God of the peoples, Indraa, 45n
God of the Sea propitiated by Rāma, 86n
God, Sword of the Fire, 58, 60, 71, 72, 74
God of sfyphils (Nanahautzin), 309
God of Wealth and Lord of Treasures (Kuvera), 93
Godess of Destiny, 218; of Fame, 90, 116; of Fortune, 49, 116; of the Fortune of Empire, 162
Godess, the Earth, 49
Godess Gaurī born in the form of Vāsavatātā, 128
Godess of Prosperity (Lakshmi or Śrī), 65, 65n, 76; Timirā the dwelling of, 36
Godess Sarasvatī, 133
Godess, Tamasā, the river, 189n
Godess, temple of the, 62-68
Gods, Ganges the river of the, 54, 54n; Kalpa of the, 163, 163n; Nananda the garden of the, 34; Viśvakarman the architect of the, 14, 14n
Gold at last reached, City of, 219, 220
Gold bestowed on Śaktideva, the City of, 238
“Gold-gleam” (kanaka-rekhā), 171n
Gold, lustreof (kanaka-prabhā), 171n
INDEX II—GENERAL 351

Gold, return of Śaktideva to the City of, 237
Gold, streak of (kanaka-rekhā), 171n
Golden Ass, Apuleius, 60n²
Golden Bough, Frazer, 72n³, 83, 105n, 105n, 117, 118, 166, 189n², 253, 253n¹, 256, 256n², 257n³, 268, 268n¹
Golden City, Kanakarekhā who will marry a Brāhman or Khatriya who has seen the, 173; search of Śaktideva for the, 188-195; a seat of the Vidyādhāras, 220; Story of the, 171-175, 184, 186-195, 213, 217-231, 236-238
Golden lotus, the, 207; dedicated to a temple, 208; desired by the king, a second, 208
Golden lotuses, the lake of, 209
Golden throne, the, 52, 53
Golden Town, Barnett, 200n², 201n³
Golden umbrella, heir-apparent has a, 264
Good deeds, heavenly wives as a reward for, 44, 45
Good Fortune, the long hair of, 236
Government Archæological Survey of India, 39n²
"Graf von Habsburg, Der," Schiller, Gedichte, 49n²
Graphic, The, 271
Grass, darbha, 151, 152, 176, 229n²; kuśa, 151, 151n³, 176
Grass poisoned by Yogakaraṇḍaka, 91, 275
Grateful Dead, The, G. H. Gerould (Folk-Lore Society, 80n¹
Great circle, 98-100n
Great feat in archery performed by Arjuna, 16
Great poem relating to the Bharatas (the Mahābhārata), 16
Great sage Yājñivalkya, 241
Great self-sacrifice of Jīmata-vāhana, 153, 154
Great War, poisons in the, 280, 281
Green tree-snake (Ular puchok, Dryophis prasinus or Boie—Dipsadomorphinae), 303; as poison, bile of the, 303
Green water-frog as poison, bile of the, 303
Greek origin of the Secretum Secretorum, 257, 288
Greek treatise of Pōlemos, 290
Griechische Märchen, Bernhard Schmidt, 57n¹, 127n²
Griechische Mythologie, Preller, 15n²
Grief forms an abscess, 2
Grief of the princess on losing her husband, 66, 67
Grihya Śītras, Oldenberg, 241, 267, 267n¹
Grim repast of Kuvalayāvāli and Adityaprabha, 113
Grosse Schaublatt lust-u. lehrreicher Geschichte, Der, Harsdorffer, 296
Group or communal marriage, 17
Group of Eastern Romances and Stories, Clouston, 108n
Grundris der Indo-Arischen Philologie, Vedic Mythology, A. A. Macdonell, 240
Guardian spirit haunts one of the pyramids, 6n²
Guide of the Vidyādhāras, Kausika the spiritual, 210
"Güll and Sanaubhar," Liebrecht, Zur Volkskunde, 131n¹
Hair of Good Fortune, the, long, 236
Hakluyt Society, 300n⁴, 5
Half a seer (Anjali-measure), 276
Hallowe'en, 108n
Halt, political measure of, 165n¹
Hunting-place for camels (caravanserai or kārvānasarā), 162n, 163n¹
Hand (kara), 27, 27n²
Hand cut off as a stake at gambling, the left, 232n
Hand of a lady compared to a lotus, 65n¹
Handful of water offered to Fortune, 6n¹
Hands of Love, Urvaśī a stupefying weapon in the, 34, 34n²
Hard life of women in the Central India Agency, 19; in Eastern Bengal, 19
Hard treatment accorded to women in India, 18
Hard work done by women in India, 18
Hare in the moon, 82
Harem, 98, 98n², 161, 161n⁴, 162n, 163n
Harem Life in Egypt and Constantinople, E. Lott, 163n
"Harīm," Dictionary of Islam, Hughes, 163n
Harpist, the poisonous, 293
"Hasan of Bassorah," Burton, Nights, 190n¹
Hatim's Tales, Stein and Grierson, 124
Haunted pyramid, 6n²
Having heard (sṛtu), 200n²
Hay, poisoned, 276
Head, curl on back of, considered unlucky, 7n³
Head deprived of the umbrella, 94, 94n⁵
Head of the house, Karnovan, 19
Head, iron implement to ward off ghosts kept near child's, 166
Head of the King of the Pārāsikas cut off, 93, 94, 94n¹, 2
Head of Medusa, 299, 300
Head of Rāhu cut off by Vīṣṇu, 81
Head of Rāhu, the immortal, 81
Heads of elephants, necklaces from the, 142, 142n¹
Healing disease, nudity rites in, 118, 119
Health, rules for preserving, 288
Heart, death from a broken, 132
Heart of a prince, white worm in the, 296
Heat (pratapa), 54n³
Heaven, the cow's, 242
Heaven, voice from, 30, 73
Heavenly Eye and King Śivi, 32, 33
Heavenly fruit received from Durgā, 136n¹
Heavenly lady buys the human flesh, 205
Heavenly maidens, the two, 43
Heavenly nymph comes out of a tree, 233
Heavenly wine, drinking, 43
Heavenly wives' as reward for good deeds, 44, 45
Heavenly workmanship of the ankle, 204
Hebr. Biblioth., Stein-schneider, 280n4
"Hebrew Version of the Secretum Secretorum,"
Gaster, Journ. Roy. As. Soc.,
290, 290n3, 291, 298, 298n3
Hebrew word for "dove,"
Jonah the, 193n1, 194n4
"Heimonskinder, Die," Sim-
rock, Deutsche Volksbücher,
57n4
"Heinrich der Löwe," Sim-rock, Deutsche Volksbücher,
76n4
Heir apparent has a golden umbrella, 264
Hell Avīchi, the, 176
Hell (Sheol, Hades, or Aralô),
194n4
Hemp, Indian (gânja), 304
Henry V, Shakespeare, 98n4
Henry VI, Shakespeare, 98n4
Heptameron, Margaret of Navarre, 2n4, 10n
Herobrkunft des Feuers und des Gütertranks, Die, A. Kuhn,
252n4
Herb as protection from the poison-damsel, 293
Herbs, a garden of, 108, 110;
girl brought up among poisonous, 297
Herdsman named Devasena,
51, 52
Herdsman, friendship of Krishna with the, 242; the king and the, 51, 52
Hermit accused of cannibalsim, 185
Hermit named Agryatapas,
221; named Arindama, 127;
named Durvâsas, 23, 24; named Sûryatapas, 189, 191
Hermit Gautama, 45-46
Hermit Nârada visits the King of Vatsa, 12, 13
Hermitage of Badarikâ, 63;
of Gâlava, 211
Hermit's, Vidyâdharas fall in love with the daughters of, 211 Hiding in the feathers of birds, 219-220n
High birth-rate in India, 18
High rank betrayed by the smell of the body, 22n, 22n3 Highest class of Rishi (holy sage), Devarshi the, 34,
34n3
Hikayet-u-Erbâ'ina-Sabâhîn we Mesâ'î (The Story of the Forty Morns and Eves), 123
"Hill Tribes of the Central Indian Hill," W. Crooke,
Journ. Anth. Inst., 24n
Hills, the Vindhya, 13n4, 56,
159
Himalayan country, 67n3
Himalayan mountain, Parva- taka king of the, 284, 285
Himalayan regions, fraternal
polyandry prevalent in the, 18
Hind of Artemis, 127n2
Hindoos as They Are, The,
S. C. Bose, 163n
Hindu Cupid, Ananga a name for Kâma the, 76n4; Kâmadeva the, 51n2
Hindu Gods and Heroes, L. D.
Barnett, 45n8
Hindu iconography, umbrella
in, 266
Hindu king of Delhi, Prithi
Raj the last, 266
Hindu Manners, Customs and Ceremonies, Dubois, 168, 242
Hindu married women, iron bracelet worn by, 187
Hindu and Mohammedan
women of the North,
bodice worn by, 50n5
Hindu poetry, the smile in,
60n3
["Hindu Pregnancy Observances in the Punjab"] H. A.
Rose, Journ. Anth. Inst.,
166
Hindu rhetoric, glory white in, 208n1
Hindu ritual, lamps prominent in, 169
Hindu Zeus, Indra the, 45n4
Hinduism, esoteric rites, 214 Hindus, opium favoured by the, 304; the sacred cow of
the, 240-242
Hissing like a snake, girl, 294
Histoire Littéraire, Ernest
Renan, 293
Hist. Anim., Aristotle, 296
Historia Apoloteica, Las Casas,
309n3
Historia del regno di Napoli,
Angelo di Costanzo, 310n2
Historical Section of the War
Office, 281
Historical value of the story of Urvasî and Purûravas, 245
History of Buddhism, Tarânâtha, 69n2
"History of Gharib and his Brother Ajib," Burton,
Nights, 124
History of Fiction, Dunlop,
(Liebrecht’s trans.), 6n3,
39n2, 127n2
History of the Forty Vazirs,
E. J. W. Gibb, 123
History of Human Marriage,
Westermarck, 18, 19, 23n,
24n, 306n1
History, importance of Magadha in, 3n4
History of Magic and Experimental Science, Thorndike,
99n, 108n, 288n3, 295n1,
299n2. 4
History of Nepal, D. Wright,
232n
History of opium, early, 303,
304.
History of Professional Poisoners and Coiners of India, M. P. Naidu, 281
History of Sanskrit Literature,
A. A. Macdonell, 45n4, 242
History of the Secretum
Secretorum, 286
History of the Shwê Dagôn
pagoda, 265
"History of Sidi Nu’uman," Burton, Nights, 202n3
Hitopadesa, the, 223n2
Hobson Jobson, Yule, 162n,
269, 269n4
"Holi: A Vernal Festival of the Hindus, The," W.
Crooke, Folk-Lore, 59n1
Home of Buddhism and Jainism, Magdha the, 3n4
Home of the umbrella, 263
"Homeric Folk-Lore, Some Notes on," W. Crooke,
Folk-Lore, 57n3
Homâopathic magic, originof,
the idea of “overhearing”
matâj, 105n1, 105n
Honest Whore, Dekker, 145n
Honour of Siva, a horrible ceremony in, 104
Hoopoe, Garuda identified with the, 152n1
Horizontal marks on forehead, years of longevity foretold by the, 7n1
INDEX II—GENERAL

Horizontal stick "female," 256
"Horn and Rimenhild," French poem of, 76n¹
Horoscope shows if child is to be a poison-damsel, 236
Horrible ceremony in honour of Siva, 104
Horrible demon eating the impaled man’s flesh, 202
Horror, slaughter of the cow fills the Hindu with, 240
Horrors of the cemetery, 201
Horse of Ādityasena, 56-58
Horse flies up in the air, 224n
Horse with a jewelled saddle, 223
Horse in mythology, 57n¹
Horse in the Sīrśā district, curing a, 119
Horse superstitions, 57n¹
Horse-worship, 57n¹
Horses among the Aryans, value of, 57n¹
Horses are divine beings, 57, 57n¹
Horses an object of worship, 57n¹
Horses, the Sun’s, 57; dispute about the colour of the Sun’s, 150-152
Hospitality, offer to kill a cow an act of, 241
Hostile brothers, stories of, 14n
House of Fame, Chaucer, 219n²
House, Karnuvin, head of the, 19; magical circle a protective barrier round a, 99n
Householder or Grihaśṭha, 180n¹
Hudibras, Butler, 302
Huge snakes, baby girl brought up by, 294
Human flesh, eating, 103, 104; in Africa, eating, 198n¹; among the Bantu negro races, eating, 198n¹, 199n; Mana or spiritual exaltation gained by eating, 198n¹; in Melanesia, eating, 198n¹; oblation of, 99; power of becoming vampires by eating, 198n¹; for sale, 205; in Tantric rites, 214
Human sacrifices among the Śākta worshippers, 198n¹
Human saliva dangerous to poisonous animals, 296
Hundred sons of Dhrūtra-rāṣṭra, 16
Hunting a madness of kings, 127
Hunting, vice of (nyasana), 21, 21n², 127
Husband, an animal, 254
Husband (pati), 49n⁴
Husband, proxy for, 306, 307
Husband of Sachi, Indra, 45
Husband and wife, sambandham, ceremony of alliance as, 18
Husband’s blood mixed with betel and eaten by the bride, 24n
Husbands, mysterious deaths of Dukkalabdhika’s, 69, 70
Husbands, professional proxies for, Cadéberiz, 307
Husbands by worshipping Ganeśa, maidens obtain, 99, 100
Hypocrisy of Śiva, 177
Hypocritical Ascetic, Story of the, 4-5
Icelandic Sagas about meeting eyebrows, 103n¹
Ichor (mada), 90, 93, 125n⁴
Iconography, umbrella in Hindu, 266
Identification of Bluebeard with Comorre tl. Cursed, 224n; with Gil de Rais, 224n Identification of speech with the cow, 241
Iliad, Homer, 218n⁴
Illness feigned by Mādhava, 179, 181
Illuminating beauty of the two maidens, 43, 43n²
Il Propugnatore, 289n²
Il Tesoro di Brunetto Latini verificato, 294n²
Image of Ganeśa which grants boons, 99, 103
Image of Siva, 103
Images of Gautama, 265
Immortal head of Rāhu, 81
Immortality brought by Garuḍa, nectar of, 155, 156
Immortality granted to Surabhi, 242
Immuinity from snake-bite by inoculation, 311, 312
Impaled man, Aśokadatta takes water to the, 201
Impaled robbers, 60-62
"Impediments, the magical," motif, 121
Implement kept near child’s head to ward off ghosts, an iron, 166
Important event among modern Hindus, eclipse an, 83
Inauspicious, empty vessels are, 164n³
Inauspicious marks, 4, 4n², 7, 7n¹
Incarnation of the God of Love, 137
Incident which caused polyandrus marriage of Draupadi, 16, 17
Index of Periodical Literature, Poole, 272
India, a Bird’s-Eye View, Ronaldshay, 88n²
Indian Antiquary, “Flying through the Air,” A. M. Hocart, 64n¹; “Meeting Eyebrows,” Tawney, 104n³; [“Notes on a Collection of Regalia of the Kings of Burma of the Alompra Dynasty”] R. C. Temple, 264n¹, 268, 269n⁴; “Pride Abased,” J. H. Knowles, 193n¹; “Superstitions and Customs in Salsette,” G. F. D’Penha, 167
Indian Fairy Tales, Stokes, 42n¹, 43n³, 57n¹, 136n¹, 195n¹
Indian hemp (gānja), 304
Indian history, importance of Magadha in, 3n¹
Indian Mythology according to the Mahābhārata, F. Fausböll, 45n⁴
Indian Tales and Anecdotes, C. Vermieux, 114n
Indian Toxicology, T. N. Windsor, 281
Indica, Arrian, 263
Indische Erzähler, “Pāla und Gopāla,” Hertel, 121
Indische Medicin, J. Jolly, 310n³
Indische Streifen, A. Weber, 259n¹
Indo-Aryan, The, Rajendralala Mitra, 167
Indo-European love-story, the first, 245

VOL. II.
Infancy, damsel brought up on poison from, 293, 313
Infant; girls nourished on poison, 293
Infanticide in Bombay, former practice of, 18, 19; in the Panjab, former practice of, 18, 19
Infanticide one of the causes of low proportion of females in India, 18, 19
Infants, opium given to, 304
Infected clothes in Brazil, 280, 280\textsuperscript{n}a\textsuperscript{7}
Inheritance, matriarchal, 19
Iniquity of scandal, the, 185, 186
Initiation ceremony, \textit{ākā} a forehead mark made in an, 22\textsuperscript{n}a\textsuperscript{3}
Injuries, unintentional, 147, 147\textsuperscript{\textit{a}n}\textsuperscript{1}
Inoculation against typhoid fever, 312
Inoculation of snake-charmers, 311, 312
Insects, \textit{Indra-gopa}, 276
Insult, duel as result of, 303; of spitting betel juice in a person’s face, 302, 303
Intercourse, connection between snakes and, 307; poison by, 305-310
Intercourse of the sexes, analogy between the fire-drill and, 255, 256
International Americanists’ Congress, 309
Interpretations of the story of \textit{Urvāṣī} and Purūravas, 251-255
Interpreting bodily marks (\textit{sāmudrīka}), 7n\textsuperscript{1}
Intrigue of Ahālyā found out by Gautama’s supernatural power, 45, 46
Introduction of syphilis into Europe by Columbus’ men, 308, 308\textsuperscript{n}a; into India by the Portuguese, 310\textsuperscript{n}, 310\textsuperscript{n}a
Invasion of Northern India by Alexander the Great, 282, 282\textsuperscript{n}a Investiture of the Doge with the umbrella, 288; of the Sacred Thread, 257
\textit{Irische Märchen}, Grimm, 104\textsuperscript{n}
Iron among the Doms, belief in the sanctity of, 68
Iron bracelet worn by Hindu married women, 167
Iron, childbirth customs in connection with, 166, 167; protective value of, 166, 167
Iron implement near child’s head to ward off ghosts, 166
Iron pyrites as charm against alligators, 168
Iron rings attached to sick children on the Slave Coast, 167
Iron rod kept in the birth-chamber, 166
Iron in Salevette, customs connected with, 167
Iron scares away evil spirits, 166-165
Iron tool, unlawful to commit a burglary with an, 168
Iron used during attack of cholera, 167
Irresistible power of truth, 31
Island of Manaar, 84n\textsuperscript{1}; of Rāmesvarman, 84n\textsuperscript{1}; of Ratnakūta, 217; named Utthala, 191, 192, 194, 217, 226, 227, 237
Islands of the lordship of Prester John, 306
Islands of Wāk, 190n\textsuperscript{1}
Italian sarraglio ("an enclosure"), 162n; errato ("shut up"), 162n
Italian version of the poison-damsel myth, 394, 395
Itching and twitching, superstitions connected with, 144n\textsuperscript{1}, 145n\textsuperscript{1}
Jackals, cries of, 60
\textit{Jahrbuch für romänische und englische Literatur}, Knust in, 289n\textsuperscript{2}
Jainism, Magadha the home of, 3n\textsuperscript{1}
Jātakas, the, 52n, 108n, 122, 266
"Jealous Sister, Tale of the," Dozon, \textit{Contes Albanais}, 190n\textsuperscript{1}
Jealousy of the Kuru princes for the Pāṇḍus, 16
Jealousy of Somaprabhā, 44
Jerking of date-stones, 147n\textsuperscript{1}
\textit{Jewad, The Story of}, E. J. W. Giff, 190n\textsuperscript{1}
Jewel dropped by Devadatta’s wife, 131
Jewel-lamps, 161, 169
Jewelled anklet, the, 203
Jewelled saddle, horse with a, 223

Jewelled throne, the, 52, 53
Jewels of glass and quartz, 182
Jewels, Ratnapura, city of, 175, 175n\textsuperscript{2}; the sea prostituted with, 72, 72n\textsuperscript{1}
\textit{Jona}, Hans Schmitt, 194n
Jonah Legend, \textit{The}, W. Simpson, 194n
\textit{Journ. Anthr. Inst.} ["East Central African Customs"], Macdonald, 198n\textsuperscript{1}; "Hill Tribes of the Central Indian Hills," W. Crooke, 24n
["Hindu Pregnancy Observances in the Punjab"] H. A. Rose, 166; "Melanesians," Codrington, 190n\textsuperscript{1}; ["Muhammedan Pregnancy Observances in the Punjab"] H. A. Rose, 166; "Nudity in Custom and Ritual," W. Crooke, 119
\textit{Journ. Anthro. Soc. of Bombay}, "Aghoris and Agrarapathis," H. W. Barrow, 90n\textsuperscript{1}; "A few Ancient Beliefs about the Eclipse and a few Superstitions based on these Beliefs," J. J. Modi, 82, 83
\textit{Journ. As. Soc. Bengal}, "Rough Notes on the Snake Symbol in India," J. H. Rivett-Carnac, 307, 307n\textsuperscript{1}
\textit{Journal of Indian Art and Industry}, 266n\textsuperscript{2}
INDEX II—GENERAL

Banerji-Sastri, 21n; “The Plays of Bhāsa,” Thomas, 21n; “The Zoroastrian Period of Indian History,” D. B. Spooner, 39n
Journals of Expeditions of Discovery into Central Australia, E. J. Eyre, 280n Journey of Vidyushaka to find Bhadrā, 69, 71
Judgment of the King of Vatsa, 158
Juice of aconite, girl rubbed with ointment of, 310
Jummoo and Kashmir Territories, The, F. Drew, 232n
Jungle-crow as poison, bile of the, 303

Kalilah va Dimnah, 290
Kāma Sūtra, Vātsyāyana, 9n, 49n, 305
Karling legend of Bayard, 57n
Kashmirian bodice, the kūrtā, 50n
Katākopa, the, Tawney, 5n, 108n, 113n, 219n, 282n
Kathāprakāsa, 122
Kathā Sarit Sāgara, 80n, 122, 136n, 169, 175n, 281
Keeper of the burning-ground, the king taken for the, 57, 57n
“Kesāta and Kandarpa,” tale of, 193n
Kicked by Somadatta, old Brāhmaṇ, 96
“Kilwhech and Olwen, Story of,” Cowell, Y Cynrodor, 190n
Killed each day in the apartment of the princess, a man, 69, 70
Killing by embrace or Perspiration, 291
Killing female children, method of, 304
Kind reception of Vāsavadattā by Padmāvatī, 22
Kinder-und Hausmärchen aus Tirol, Zingerle, 70n
King addicted to pleasure, 125
King Ādityaprabha, 97-99, 111, 112-114; Ādityasena, 54-59, 62, 64, 65, 79; Āryavarman, 73, 74, 78; of the Asuras, Māyādhara, 36; of Benares, Brahmadatta, King—continued
88, 89, 91, 95, 115; of Benares, Pratāpamukṭa, 200; of the Bhillas, Pulindaka, 89, 89n; of the birds (Garuda), 161, 162, 164, 155; of the Camphor Islands, 190n; Chāndamahāsena, 6, 48, 93, 128; Chāṇḍavikrama, 230; of the Chola race, 92, 92n; Devasena, 69, 71; and the herdsmen, 51, 52; of Kachchhapa, 69; of Kāmārūpa, 94, 94n; of India sends Alexander a poison-damsel, 291, 292; of Magadha, Nanda or Dhana-Nanda, 282, 282n; (narendra), 116n; of the Nishādas, 191, 191n; of the Pārīsikas cut off, the head of the, 93-94n; Paropa-kārina, 171, 172; (pati), 49n; Purūravas, 34-36; of the Rākshasas, 209-212; rogue wishes to enter the service of the, 178, 179; of the Siddhas, 149; of Sindh, subdued, 93; of the Snakes, Vāsuki, 152; of the Snowy Mountain (Siva), 143; of the Vidyādharas, 13, 85, 137, 155, 156, 171; Vīhitasena, 36-37; Vikramachanda, 159; wishes to study the art of stealing, 184n, 185n; of the Yakshas, Ratnavarsha, 233
Kingdom of Magadha, 3n, 12, 20
Kingdom, the Pândyan, 92n
“Kings, Mirror of,” Barlaam, 290
Kingship, flying through the air an adjunct of, 64n
Kiss of the poison-damsel, the fatal, 294
Knife kept beside a woman after childbirth to keep off the devil, 166
Knives (dāha), 167
Knot, the lucky, 189n
Knots, magic, 189n
Knots that mark the centuries of life, 189, 189n
Knowledge-holder, magical (vidyādharas), 137n
Kosmographie, Al-Qazwini, 298, 312

Krait, fatal sting of the, 311, 312
Kumara Rāma Charita, the, 122
Labour, a sickle and nim leaves kept on the cot of a Mālā woman in, 166
Lac dye, blood mixed with, 24n
Ladies, eyes of Hindu, said to reach their ears, 50, 50n
Ladies of Mālava, 93
Lady buys the human flesh, a heavenly, 205
Lady compared to a lotus, the hand of a, 65n
Lady found by Vidyushaka in the temple, a beautiful, 66
Lady riding on a lion, 143
Lais, Marie, 113n
Lake of golden lotuses, 209
Lamps, jewel-, 169
Lamps prominent in Hindu ritual, 169
Lamps, protection of the child by, 161
Lancashire Gleanings, W. E. A. Axon, 76n, 77
Lanctot, The, “The Alleged Discovery of Syphilis in Prehistoric Egyptians,” 308n
Land of Chedi, 89; of Padma, 95; of the Siddhas, 67, 67n, 75, 75n; of Srikānta, 97
Language of animals, 107n of birds, 107n
Lares, “Le credenze religiose delle popolazioni rurali dell’alte valle del Taveri,” G. Nicasi, 106n
L Arme bactériologique future concorrente des armes chimique et balistique, L. Georges, 281
Last Hindu king of Delhi, Prithi Raj the, 266
Last of the Tasmanians, Bowick, 280n
Latin translations of the Secretum Secretorum, 283, 288n
Law, Natural, 277, 278
Laws of Nations, 277-279
Lead, marking with red, 23n
Leaves of the betel vine, tamboli, 301, 302
Lectures on the Religion of the Semites, W. Robertson Smith, 119, 194n
THE OCEAN OF STORY

Life of Śaktideva saved by the banyan-tree, 218
Life of Savara chief saved by Jimūtavāhana, 142
Life of Somadatta spared by the king, 96
Life and Stories of Pāryyāvatā, Bloomfield, 14n, 105n, 122, 226n1, 226n2
"Light of the moon," Chandrasprabhā means, 223, 223n1
Light, rules in all parts of the world regarding, 168
Lights among the Moghamedan Khojas of Gujarāt, customs connected with, 168; among the Nāyars of Mālar, customs connected with, 168; among the Śavaras of Bengal, customs connected with, 168
Lights in the army of the King of Vatsa, waving, 89, 89n4
Lights in the birth-chamber to scare away evil spirits, 168
Lights, Divāl or Feast of, 118
Les Livres dou Tresor, Brunetto Latini, 294, 294n1, 299n1
Lime-juice, borax and turmeric, powder made of (kunkam), 164n4
Lime of oyster shells eaten, 301, 302
Lion assumes the form of a man, 147
Lion and the doe, tale of the, 298
Lion, lady riding on a, 143
Lion transformation, the, 147, 148
Lions, Vindhya hills haunted by, 56, 56n3
Littérature des alten Indien, Die, H. Oldenberg, 252n1
Literature, poison-damsel rare in Sanskrit, 281
Literature, Secretum Secretorum in European, 286-291
"Little shade" (umbra), 263
Livingcreatures, earth milked by, 241
Loathsome practices of the Aghori caste, 198n1
Locks of Śiva, the auburn, 208
Lofty umbrella, 55, 55n1, 89
Lofty umbrellas, lotuses like, 188
L'ombrelle, O. Uzanne, 272
Long hair of Good Fortune, 258
Longing to hear stories, Vāsadattā’s, 137
Longing of Vāsadattā for a son, 135
Look, the fatal, 298-300
Look of snakes, belief in the poisonous, 298
Looseness of character indicated by dimple in cheek, 7n4
Lord of the Mountains (Parvata), 284, 285
Lord of Obstacles (Gaṇesā), 102
Lord of Treasure, Kuvera God of Wealth and, 93
Lord of the Umbrellas, Chhatrapati, title of Indian kings, 287
Lord of the Vidyādharas, Jimūtaketa, 138-140
Lordship of Prester John, islands of the, 306
Lotus-lake called Anyataḥ-plakshā, 246, 249
Lotus which closes in the night, 25, 25n1
Lotus desired by the king, a second, 208
Lotus, the golden, 207; dedicated to a temple, 298
Lotus, hand of a lady compared to, 65n1
Lotuses, the lake of golden, 209; like lofty umbrellas, 188
Love and affection (Rati and Priti), wives of the God of Love, 51, 51n2
Love consumed by Śiva, God of, 100, 100n1
Love, death from unrequited, 8, 9, 9n2, 10n; five-arrowed God of, 1; the God of (Kāma or Kundarpa), 27, 27n1, 55, 66, 94, 100, 101, 127, 136, 144, 164; Guha-chandra tortured with the pain of, 40; incarnation of the God of, 137; the overwhelming power of, 9; stages of, 9n3, 10n; stratum to gain, 44; Urvasī, a stupefying weapon in the hands of, 34, 34n2; wives of the God of, 51, 51n2

Left hand cut off as a stake at gambling, 232n
Leg of the giant cut off, 72, 72n2
Leg of the giant saves Vidūshaka from drowning, 73
Leg of a giant, ship stopped in the sea by the, 72
Legend of Bayard, the Karling, 57n1
Legend of a dragon, medieval, 296
Legend of the death of King Ladaslao of Naples, 310; of King Wenecelsau II, 309, 309n2
Legend of Hippolytus and his stepmother Phèdra, 120
Legend of Jonah, 193n1, 194n
"Legend of Nādir Shāh," M. Longworth Dames, Folk-Lore, 302
"Legend of the Oldest Animals, The," Cowell, Y Cynrodor, 190n3
Legend of Peraeus, E. S. Hartland, 70n3, 96n3, 136n3, 150n Legend of Urvāsi and Pururavas, 34-36, 246-269
"Légende de l'Empereur Apoka, La," Przyluski, Annales du Musée Guimet, 120
"Légende von der Altertums-syphilis," A. V. Notthafft, Rindfleisch Festschrift, 306n
Legends, Alexandrian, 290
"Legends of Krishna," W. Crooke, Folk-Lore, 39n2
"Letter of Death" motif, 114n
Libellus de Veneris, Peter of Abano, 300, 300n1
Liber de Donis, Etienne de Bourbon, 114n
Lib. VII, Pliny, 306n3
Life, attempts on Chandragupta's, 283, 284; done in a previous (parigāth), 135n1; knots that mark the centuries of, 159, 159n2; raven connected with the Water of, 155n4; the three objects of, 180, 180n2
Life of a Brāhmaṇ, periods in the, 180, 180n1
Life by Garuḍa, snakes restored to, 155, 155
Life of Jimūtavāhana saved by Śavara chief, 141, 142
Life of the princess saved by Vidūshaka, 63

356
INDEX II—GENERAL

Love of the gopās, Krīṣṇa’s, 242
Love of Indra for Ahalyā, 45, 46
Love by magic, gaining, 43, 44
Love on mere mention, 143, 144
Love-scratches, varieties of, 49n3
Love-sickness, death the final stage of, 7n1
Love (smekha), 163n1
Love-story, the first Indo-European, 245
Love-story in the world, the first, 245
Love of Tishyarakshitā for Kuṇāla, 120
Love of women, rejected, 105, 109; the scorned, 120-124
Loving Couple who died of Separation, Story of, 9
Loving nails, the prints of, 49, 49n3
Low caste, Māṅga, 82
Low proportion of females to males in India, causes of, 18, 19
Lowest forms of marriage enjoyed by Kṣatryāyas, 17
Lucky, curl on forehead considered, 7n1
Lucky knot, 189n1
Lucky marks of Buddha, 7n1
Lucky troussseau (ṣahāg), 23n
Lustre of gold (kanaka-prabhā), 171n8
Lying-in chamber, the ornamented, 161
Macbeth, Shakespeare, 145n
Macedonians Folk-Lore, G. F. Abbott, 70n1
Mad, whom shall I make? (taṃ darpaṇāmi), 100
“Mad Lover, The,” Burton, Nights, 10n
Madam Contentious (Kalakahāri), 159n3
Maddening beauty, 7, 8
Madness feigned by Vidū- shaka, 68
Magia naturalis, Wolfgang Hildebrandt, 296, 300
Magic aid, gaining love by, 43, 44
Magic art, “Act of Truth” at the background of the, 31
Magic art of the Vidyādhāra, 66, 67
Magic article, jinn summoned by rubbing a, 58n1
Magic circle, 98-100n, 295; in Assyria, 99n; in Babylonia, 99n; denotes finality and continuity, 99n; as kind of haram, 295; as prison, 100n
Magic, custom of kings to dabble in, 112n3; nudity in black, 117; origin of “overhearing” motif may be traced to homeopathic, 107n1, 108n
Magic gifts given up by Bhādrā, 78
Magic knots, 189n1
“Magic Pill, Story of the,” 185n1
Magic power of witches’ spells, 103, 104
Magic Ritual, Nudity in, 117-120
Magic virtue of steel, 106n4
“Magical impediments” motif, 121
Magical knowledge-holder (vidyādharā), 137n2
Magical powers of healing disease, nudity in, 118, 119
Magical rides in the air, 103-105n
Magicians in Malabar, Oḍi, 199n
Mahā Pāriva Charita, Bhava- būti, 214
Mahābhārata, the, 13n4, 16, 17, 77n, 81, 105n, 122, 127n1, 152n3, 238n, 240-242, 248, 272, 284
Mahāparāsrama-Jñātaka, the, 122
Maid and the monkey, the, 5
Maiden fed on poison, a beautiful, 291
Maiden of the Vidyādhara race, 66
Maidens found dead by Saktideva, beautiful, 223
Maidens obtain husbands by worshipping Gaṇeṣa, 99, 100
Maidens with serpents in their bodies, 307
Maidens sitting on trees connected with tree-worship, 43, 45n1
Maidens, the two heavenly, 43
Making fire by friction, 247, 249, 250, 255, 256
Mālāti Mādhhava, the, Bhava- būti, 205n3; Tantric rites in the, 214-216
Malay Poisons and Charm Cures, J. D. Gimlette, 303, 303n1
Male vertical stick, 256
Man killed each day in the apartment of the princess, 69, 70
Mango (ām tree), 118
Manners and Customs of the Ancient Egyptians, Wilkin- son, 264
Manners and Customs of the Modern Egyptians, E. W. Lane, 163n
Man’s blood, epithet denoting the price of a (satadāya), 240
Manual of thievry called Steyyāśāstra-pravartaka, 183n1
MSS. of Secretum Secretorum, bibliography of, 288n2
March of the King of Vatsa, 89, 90
March, political measure of, 165n1
Märchen, 252
Märchen, Grimm, 60n2, 196n1, 223n1
Märchen der Magyaren, Gaal, 155n2, 207n1
Marco Polo, The Book of Ser, Yule and Cordier, 85n, 266, 268, 268n2, 302, 302n2, 303
Mark the centuries of life, knots that, 189, 189n1
Mark of the king, nine white umbrellas, 264
Mark of respect, “Mother” a mode of addressing as a, 201, 201n2; semi-nudity as a, 119
Marks, inauspicious, 4, 4n4, 7, 7n1
Marriage of Ādityasena and Tejasvati, 55; of Asokadatta and Madanalekha, 204; of Asokadatta and Vidyutprabhā, 205, 207; of Bhādrā and Vidūshaka, 66
Marriage by capture, 24n; ceremonies of the Nāyars, 17, 18; by choice
Marriage—continued

Meeting eyebrows, 103-104n
"Meeting Eyebrows," Tawney, Ind. Ant., 104n
Mathieu, The, T. C. Hodson, 118
Mélanges, Favre, 289n
Mélusine, "La Montagne Noire ou les Filles du Diable," 190n
Men in air-tight armor, 299
Mendicant Brâhmans, Pândus disguised as, 16
Mendicant carried off by animated corpse, 62
Mendicant in the cemetery, the religious, 62
Mendicant, the princess carried off by the, 63;
Śiva assumes form of, 106; slain by Viḍūshakā, 63
Mendicants, ten classes of Śaiva, 90n
Mention, love on mere, 143, 144
Merchant named Dharmagupta, 49-41; named Guha-chandra, 40-44; named Guṇavartman, 55; named Mahādana, 146; named Samudradatta, 191, 199,
226; named Skandhadāsa, 71, 72; named Vasudatta,
130
Mercury (Śūrā), 276; chloride of, 281
Message of death, the, 113-114n
"Messenger of certain death" (i.e. the poison - damsel), 284
Metal or stone umbrellas (ātek, āt or āt), 265, 265n
Metamorphoses, stone, 46, 46n
Meteors and comets, Rāhu's body the progenitor of, 81
Method of killing female children, 304
Methods of contamination by the poison-damsel, different, 291
Methods of punishment of adultery, various, 88n
Mexican Archeology, Joyce, 309n
Mexican sun-god, 309
Mexicans regard phthisis as divine, 309
Michilat Jośi, Samuel Ibn Zarza, 299n
Middle Ages, poison-damsel in the, 292-297
Midwifery in India, primitive methods of, 18
Might (tejas), 161n
Migration of the umbrella, 268, 269
Milch cows and oxen eaten by the sage Yājñivalkhya, 241
Milindapaśa, the, 32
Military caste, Nāyars originally a, 19
Milk, nectar in the sea of, 151; poison given to infant in, 313; sacred product of the cow, 242
Milked by living creatures, the earth, 241
Mille et un Jours, Les, 190n
Mind, deer of the (manomṛgī), 140n
Minister of Brahmadatta, Yogakaraṇājakā, 91, 275; of Dhaval Chandra, Jayanta, 121; of Kāmsundara, Siddhre, 288; of Nanda,
Rākshasa, 283-285
Ministers of Nārāvāhānādatta, the future, 165
Minnesinger, F. H. von der Hagen, 292n
Mirabilibus Mundi, De, Albertus Magnus, 299,
299n
Miracles of the Virgin or Contes Dévots, 113n
Miraculous herb, 293
"Mirror of Kings," Barlaam, 290
Mirrors, serpents stare themselves to death in, 299
Miser, the Brāhmaṇ, 176
Misery and Poverty, two children like, 128
Misfortune of marrying out of one's rank, 131
Mission of Agni, the delicate, 101
Mission to Ava, Yule, 168
Mistress of Lādīlsalo, 310
Mock bridegroom, āt attached by a, 18
Mode of address as mark of respect, "Mother," 201, 201n
Medical Journal, The British, 309, 310n
Meeting of Alexander and Chandragupta, 282, 285;
of Aśokadatta and his brother Vijayadatta, 209;
of the maiden and Jīmūtavāhana, 146; of the two queens, 21; of Viḍūshakā and Bhadrā, 77

Modern appellation of the Coromandel coast, Chola district, 92n
Modern Hindus, eclipse an important event among, 83
"Pontus and the Fair Sioned," E. J. Matter, 76n
Mohammedan Khosjas of Gujrat, customs connected with lights among the, 168
Mohammedan women of the north, bodice worn by, 50n
Mohammedans introduce opium into India and China, 304
Mohammedans of North India, 168
Monarch, Vidushaka becomes a, 50
Monastery of Brahmans, 57-59, 65, 195
Monastery at Karkotaka, 73
Monatschrift fur praktische Dermatologie, Okamura, in, 308n
Monkey-god, Hanuman the, 73, 197n
Monkey and the maid, 5
Monkeys construct a bridge across the ocean, 84, 84n, 85n Monkeys, Sugriva chief of the, 84, 84n
Monsters (sattva), 79n
"Montagne Noire ou les Filles du Diable, La," Melusine, 190n
Month of fasting (Shrawan), 164n
Moon, crest god with the (Siva), 136, 170
Moon, dogs held in esteem by the, 81; hare in the, 82
"Moon, light of the," Chandrprabha means the, 223, 223a
Moon the progenitor of the Pandava race, 13, 13n
Moon (Soma), the, 45n, 81
Moonbeams, Chakora subsists upon, 235n
Moon-god, Harran city sacred to the, 194n
Moons, the faces of the women like, 50, 50n
Moral of the poison-damsel myth in the Gesta Romanorum, 296, 297
Morals of Indra, 45n
Mortal kalpa, a (measure of time), 163n
Mortals, a river that cannot be crossed by, 75
Moses from an Old Manse, Nathaniel Hawthorne, 297n
"Mother," mode of address as mark of respect, 201, 201n
Mount Meru, 102
Mountain behind which the sun rises, Udaya the eastern, 67n
Mountain, the Brocken, 104n, 105n; named Govindakuta, 212; Himavat, 138; Kalinjara, 149; Mahendra, 92; the Malayya, 140, 150, 156; Mandara, 67n, 93; Meru, the world, 67n; called Rishabha, 222; of the rising sun, 68, 75; named Udaya, 67, 67n; named Uttar, 190, 191
Mountain (naga), 154n
Mountaineer (naga), 154n
Mountaineer, a wild (Savara), 141-149
Mountains, the Harz, 104n; Lord of the (Parvataka), 284, 285; the Himlaya, 54; King of the Snowy (Siva), 143; of Turkestan, the Snake, 298; the Vindhya, 54
Mouth of a corpse, flames issuing from the, 62
Mouth of Death, temple of Durgâ like the, 227
Mrichchhakatika, or Toy Cart, Wilson, 192n, 232n
Mudra - Rahâshha, the, or Signet-ring of Rahâshha, Vişàkhâdattha, 160n, 281, 283-284
Mummies, attempts to find traces of venereal disease in, 308, 308n
Muratori, Sanudo Junior, 268, 268n
Murdered child becomes a sword, 236
Mustard-seeds enable Vidushaka to travel through the air, 63, 64; growing from the navel of a corpse, 62
Muzzling sheep owing to aconite, 279
"My lover" (maîja), 46n
Mysterious deaths of Dhubaladhika's husbands, 69, 70
Mystic relation between the cow and the universe, 240
Mystic significance attached to the naked body, 119
Myth, the Cupid and Psyche, 253; French version of the poison - dams el, 293-294; German versions of the poison-damsel, 294, 294n; Italian version of the, 294-295; story of Urvâsi and Purûravas interpreted as a nature, 251
Myth of Râhu, unknown origin of the, 81
Mythes et Légendes de l'Inde et de la Perse, Lvévèque, 152n
Mythologie, Deutsche, Grimm, 105n
Mythology, the horse in, 57n
Myths traced through etymology, origin of, 251, 252
Nails, the prints of loving, 49, 49n
Naked body, mystic significance attached to the, 119
Naked, Urvâsi must not be seen, 245, 246; worshipping the gods, 98, 99n
THE OCEAN OF STORY

"Nala and Davadanti," Tawney, Kathākōga, 252n
"Nala and Damayanti, Mahābhārata, 77n, 232n
Name of Jīmūtavāhāna, former, 141
Name of Phalabhūti given to Somadatta, 97
Names denoting natural phenomena, 251, 252
Names of umbrellas, distinctive, 254
Narrative of Travels on the Amazon and Rio Negro, A. R. Wallace, 280n7
Nations, Laws of, 277-279
Native courts in Africa, umbrellas used at, 271
Nat. Hist., Pliny, 108n, 296, 300
Natural Law, 277, 278
Natural phenomena, names denoting, 251, 252
Nature myth, story of Urvāśī and Purūravas interpreted as a, 251
Nature myths among the Australians, Eskimos and South Sea Islanders, 252
Nature of the Rakshasas leaves Vijayadatta, 210
Nature of a snake acquired by maiden, 291, 294, 295
Navel of a corpse, mustard-seeds growing from the, 62
Neck of concubine rubbed with poison, 297
Necklace from the heads of elephants, 142, 142n
Necks, with uplifted (utkhandharta ca suciram), 30n2
Nectar (Amrita), 155n4; Gāruḍa ordered to bring, 151;
of immortality brought by Gāruḍa to the snakes, 155, 156
Neglect of female children in India, 18
Negotiation termed "giving of a daughter," the, 47
Negro races, eating human flesh among the Bantu, 198n3, 199n
Nepalese War, the, 280
"Net of the corn-god," circle of flour and water called the, 296
Neuhundert Gedächtniss-würdige-Geheimnuss und Wunderwerk, Georg Henisch, 294n1
New English Dictionary, Murray, 269n4, 270
Night, lotus which closes in the, 25, 25n1
Night of marriage, evil spirits active on first, 306
Nights, The Thousand and One, Burton, 10n, 58n1, 104n, 104n3, 123, 124, 131n3, 147n3, 153n9, 169, 190n, 193n2, 201n, 202n, 218n, 219n3, 220n, 223n1, 224n
Nights, Straparola, 10n
Nine white umbrellas mark the king, 264
Nodder Attica, Gellius, 277
Nocturnal assassins sent to the enemy's camp, 91
Nodes, Rāhu's body resembles the descending, 81
No-moon night or Amāvas, 118
Non-existence of polyandry among Nāyars to-day, 18
Non-fraternal polyandry, 18
Non-venomous snake (duṇḍūkha), 152n2
North defied by barbarians, 53
North India, Mohammedans of, 168
North Indian Notes and Queries, 118, 142n3, 168
North, Queen of the (Regina Aquilonis), 296
Northern India, customs connected with eclipses in, 83
Nose, character indicated by, 7n1
Nose cut off as punishment for adultery, 88, 88n3
Noses of impaled robbers cut off, 60-62
Not to be killed (aghnya), 240
"Not to see the sun" taboo, 268
Note on nudity in magic ritual, 117-120; on polyandry, 16-19; on the precautions observed in the birth-chamber, 166-169; on Rāhu and eclipses, 81-83; on the sacred cow of the Hindus, 240-341; on Tantric rites in the Mālātī Mādhava, 214-216; on women whose love is scorned, 120-124
Notes on the "Act of Truth" motif in folk-lore, 31-33
["Notes on a Collection of Regalia of the Kings of Burma of the Alompra Dynasty"] R. C. Temple, Ind. Ant., 264n3, 269, 269n4
Notes on śāmudrika, by Rai Bahadur B. A. Gupta, 7n5
Notes on the Spirit Basis of Belief and Custom, J. S. Campbell, 167, 229n5
Nourished on poison, infant girls, 293
Nourishment, poison as, 300
Novel of GuerinoMeschino, 138n4
Novelle, Bandello, 10n
Novels of the tenth day of the Decameron, source of the, 76n1
Nucleus of the Maurya and Gupta empires, Magadhā, the, 3n1
Nudity in black magic, 117; in fertility rites, 118; in healing disease, 118, 119; in magic ritual, note on, 117-120; in rites to produce rain, 117, 118
Number of horizontal lines on forehead as indication of years of longevity, 7n1
Nuptial taboo, 248; earliest example of, 252
Nurses of Kārttikeya, the, 102
Nymph comes out of a tree, a heavenly, 233
Nymph, Rambhā the, 34, 35
Nymph Urvāśī, the, 34-36, 245-259
Nymphs of heaven displaying their skill in dancing, 35
Nymphs in the shape of swans, 246
Object of worship, horses an, 57n1
Objects of life, the three, 180, 180n3
Oblation to gods and venerable men, argha an, 77, 77n1
INDEX II—GENERAL

Oblation of human flesh, 99
Oblation made to the tree, 97
Observances, pregnancy, 166
Obstacles, Conqueror or Victor of (Gañesa), 1, 125, 125n;
Lord of (Gañesa), 102
Ocean, Churning of the, 65n, 67n, 81; Śaktideva prepares to cross the, 191;
Vidushaka prepares to cross the, 71, 72; whirlpool in the,
217, 218
Ocean of Story, the, 14n, 31, 39n, 50n, 56n, 39n, 58n, 62n, 82, 90n, 107n, 147n, 150n, 169, 183n, 193n, 245, 266
October (Aso), 119
Odes, Horace, 120
Odyssey, Homer, 106n, 217n, 218n
Offer of Catti prince to poison
Arminius, 277
Offer to kill a cow an act of hospitality, 241
Offering to the fire, daily
(homa), 257, 257n
Oil (sneha), 71n, 218n
Oil-presser's caste, the, Teli,
82
Ointment of juice of aconite, girl rubbed with, 310
Old age venerated in the East, 190n
Old Deccan Days, Frere, 3n,
108n, 136n, 202n
Old and Modern Poison Lore,
A. Wynter Blyth, 281
“Older and older” motif,
190n
Oldest love-story in the world,
245
Omen, eclipse an evil, 82;
when children speak shortly after birth, an evil, 39n
One-eyed boy, Vasantaka disguised as a, 20, 22
One umbrella, the earth
under, 125, 125n
Opera hactenus inedita Rogeri
Bacani, Steele, 290, 291,
291n
Opium, early history of,
303, 304; eating, 305-305;
favoured by the Hindus,
304; given to infants, 304
“Opium,” E. M. Holmes,
Ency. Brit., 304n
Opium (opos, opion or afyin),
304
Opium, Some Truths about,
H. A. Giles, 304n
Opposition of Brāhmans to entrance of the king, 57;
of Brāhmans to polyandry,
17
Opus Maius of Roger Bacon,
J. H. Bridges, 100n
Order of St John, 39n Order of Vishnu to Indra to give Urvashi to Pururavas,
34, 35
Ordinary occurrence of adultery of a gambler's wife, 88n
Orgies held by witches, 104,
104n
Orient und Occident, Benfey,
120
Orientalist, Tamil story in the,
De Rosaio, 184n
Origin and Development of
The Moral Ideas, Westermarck,
96n, 97n, 229n
Origin of eclipses, 81-83; of the myth of Rahu, unknown, 81; of myths traced through tymology, 251, 283; of idea of “overhearing” motif may be homeopathic magic, 107n, 108n;
of Pāṇḍu in a single divine being, 17; of story of Urvashi and Pururavas, Frazer's theory of the, 253, 254; of
the umbrella, 263
“Origin of Syphilis, The,”
J. Knott, New York Medical
Journal, 308n
Original significance of
the umbrella, 267
[Origines de la France contemporaine, Les, Taine] 185n
Ornamental lying-in chamber,
161
Ornamenta de Femine, Les,
O. Uzanne, 272
Othello, Shakespeare, 145n
“Otos and Ephialtes,” Preller, Griechische Mythologie, 13n
Overheard by Śaktideva, the conversation of birds, 219
“Overhearing” motif, 107n, 108n, 219n
Over-insisting (atinirband-hint), 221n
Overwhelming power of love,
9
Ox, sacrificial act of eating
the, 240
Oxen eaten by the sage
Yā:jūvalkya, milch cows and, 241
Oxford Essays, Max Müller,
281, 281n
Oyster shells eaten, lime of,
301, 302
“Padlock, The,” Burton,
Pentameron, 263
Pagoda, history of the Shwē
Dagôn, 265
“Pagodas, Auriolés and Umbrellas,” F. C. Gordon
Cumming, The English Illustrated Magazine, 272
Pagodas surmounted by umbrellas, 265, 266
Pain of love, Guhachandra tortured with the, 40
Painting of Sītā, 22, 22n
Paintings in Nāgpura, 307
“Pālā und Gōpālā,” J. Hertel,
Indische Erzähler, 121
Palace in the air, the, 110,
111
Palace, gable of Prester
John’s, 169; plot to set fire to the queen’s, 3
Palace (sarī or sarī), Persian,
102n
Palm-leaf MS., a Telugu, 121
Pan containing fire turns into Śamī tree, 247, 250
Paśchatantara, the, Benfey,
62n, 108n, 113n, 297n
Panjāb, Census Report, 118
Panjab Notes and Queries, 118,
165, 232n
Papers on Malay Subjects,
R. J. Wilkinson, 167
Paradise Lost, Milton, 42n
Paradise, Pārijāta one of the five trees of, 13, 13n
Paradise tree (mandara), 101,
101n
Paragon rib for umbrellas,
271
Parasol (saional, Persian), 263
Parasols in Constantinople,
285
Parish umbrella, 270
Parishkāparvan, Hema-
chandra, 108n, 285, 285n,
305n
Partridge (Chakora), 235,
235n
Passion (rajās), 106, 106n;
(rāga), 125n
Past, dish of emerald reveals
the, 159, 160
THE OCEAN OF STORY

Past at our Doors, The, W. W. Skeat, 270, 270n
Pathān women, Kūrtās worn by, 50n
Pausanias, Frazer, 70n
Pavilion of Vāsavadattā burned, 21
Pavilions, the three, 222
Peace, political measure of, 165n
Peak, beliefs regarding the depression on Adam's, 84n, 85n Peaks of the Vindhya, 92
Pearl (kutjārāmāya gajamuktā), 142n
Parels in the heads of elephants, 142n
Penance performed by Pururavas, 36
Pentamerone, Basile (trans. Burton), 51n, 190n, 233
People adorned with red powder, 164n, 164n
People who eat human flesh, basezi, 199n
People, Indra a god of the, 45n; of Kalinga, 92, 92n; red as vermilion, 58-59n
Periods in the life of a Brāhmaṇ, 180, 180n
Perseverance, the reward of, 97
Persian sārī or sārāt (edifice or palace), 162n
Persian umbrella (sāwūn), 263; sāgāban, 263
Perspiration, killing by the, 285, 291; poison transferred through the, 285
Peru [Conquest of], W. Prescott, 88n
Pervade, to (as), 251
Petrarchian vocabulary, 263
Phallus, cobra regarded as, 307
Pharsalia, Lucan, 62n
Phenomena, names denoting natural, 251, 252
Physician, story of the clever, 2, 2n
Pilgrimage to El Mediinah and Meccah, Burton, 271
Pilgrimage, Rāmasetu a place of, 94n
"Pill, Story of the Magic," 183n
Pillar of victory set up by the King of Vatsa, 91, 92, 92n
Pillars at Allahābād, Bubbal, etc., 92n
Pinnacle of the Kshatriya race and Lord of the Royal Umbrella, title of, 267
Place of Adam's exile, Ceylon regarded by the Arabs as, 84n, 85n Place of pilgrimage, Rāmasetu a, 84n
"Place of Sacrifice" (Pra-yāga or Allahābād), 110n
Plains of the Ganges, 67n
Planet (graha), 180n
Plants, arka, 161; poison caused from, 312; śammi, 161; windows covered with sacred, 161, 166
Play, wealth lost at, 86
Pleasure (kāma), 180n; king addicted to, 125
Plot to get the king and queen to Lāvānaka, 12; to overthrow Nanda, 283; to set fire to the queen's palace, 3; of Yaugandhāra-yaṇa to give the King of Vatsa dominion of the earth, 3
Plots to kill Chandragupta, 283, 284
Ploughing to produce rain, 117, 118
Poem relating to the Bharatas, the great (the Mahābhārata), 16
Poet Chand, the, 266
Poet Ottacker or Ottokar, the German, 309, 309n
Poetry, the smile in Hindu, 50n
Poison, beautiful maiden fed on, 291, 313; bile of the green tree-snake as, 303; bile of the green water-frog as, 303; bile of the jungle crow as, 303; caused from plants, 312; conveyed in a "chew" of betel, 303; damsel brought up on, 291, 313; doe rubbed with, 298; eaten regularly, 300; given to infant in milk, 313; infant girls nourished on, 293; by intercourse, 305-310; neck of concubine rubbed with, 297; as nourishment, 300; the Pontic duck lives on, 300; ring to destroy effects of, 301; transferred through perspiration, 285
Poison—damsel in Arabia, Asia Minor, Mesopotamia, Persia and Syria, 286; in Europe, 292-297; has no existence in fact, 313; fatal bite of the, 291; fatal kiss of the, 294; in the Gesta Romanares, 296, 297; herb as protection against the, 293; in India, 281-286; killed by antidote, 297; kills Parvataka, 284, 285; "messenger of certain death," 284; in the Middle Ages, 286; prepared by Nanda, 285; in the Secretum Secretorum, 286-291; sent to Alexander the Great, 291-295; treatise to discover if a woman is a, 286, 286n
Poison—damsel myth, cobra sting a clue to the, 311; French version of the, 293, 294; German version of the, 294, 294n; Italian version of the, 294, 295; venereal disease in connection with the, 308
Poison—damsels, Appendix III, 275-313; Sanskrit references to, 281-286; sent among the enemy's host, 91, 91n
"Poison in a glance" (drig-viṣa or drīṭi-viṣa), 295
Poison Lore, Old and Modern, A. Wynter Blyth, 281
Poison Mysteries, C. J. S. Thompson, 281
Poison War, The, A. A. Roberts, 281
Poisoned by the Florentines, Ladisloo, 310
Poisoned hay or fodder, 276
Poisoned trees, creepers, water, grass, 91
Poisoned water, etc., 275-280
Poisoned wells in German South-West Africa, 281
Poisoned words (i.e. poisonous breath), 292
Poisoning of Australians, 280, 280n3; of Tasmanians, 280, 280n3; of wells by the Gurkhas of Nepal, 280; of the Yuta Indians, 280
Poisonings by the Borgia, 279
Poisonous animals, garlic juice dangerous to, 296; human saliva dangerous to, 296
Poisonous breath, 300-303
Poisonous harpist, the, 293, 294
Poisonous herbs, girl brought up among, 297
Poisonous look of snakes, belief in the, 298
Poisonous saliva, 305
Poisons condemned by the Romans, use of, 277, 278
Poisons in the Great War, 280, 281
Poisons of India, 279, 280
Poisons: their Effects and Detection, A. W. and M. W. Blyth, 281
Policy incarnate in bodily form, Väsavadatta, 38
Politics expedients, the four, 45, 45n3
Political measures, the six, 165, 165n1
Polyandrous marriage of Draupadi, 13, 13n3, 14, 16, 17
Polyandry in the Bismarck Archipelago, 18; causes of, 18, 19; non-existent among the Nāyars to-day, 18; factors in favour of, 19; in the Hawaiian Islands, 18; in New Caledonia, 18; in the New Hebrides, 18; note on, 16-19; shortage of women a cause of, 18; in various parts of the world, 16-19
Polygamy, forms of, 17
Polygyny, 17
Pontic duck lives on poison, 300
Poor Brāhmaṇ woman, the, 128, 129, 133-135
Pope Alexander III, 268
Popol Vuh, Brasseur de Bourbourg, 308n1
Popular Antiquities of Great Britain, Brand, 99n, 105n
Popular Religion and Folk-Lore of Northern India, W. Crooke, 57n3, 82, 83, 96n1, 99n, 127n2, 138n3, 142n3, 155n3, 193n1, 197n2, 202n3, 240, 256, 256n3
Popular Stories of Ancient Egypt, Maspero, 112n1, 120-121
Popular Tales and Fictions, Clouston, 108n, 114n, 122, 169, 190n3, 192n1, 224n
Popular Tales from the Norse, Daseint, 190n3
Popularity of the Secretum Secretorum, 286
Portion of house allotted to the women, harem, 161n4
Portuguese Christians, 85n Portuguese, introduction of syphilis into India by the, 310, 310n3
Posture called Padmāsana, sitting in the, 176, 176n4
Poverty, two children like Misery and, 128
Powder, people adorned with red, 164, 164n4; made of turmeric, lime-juice and borax (kunām), 164n4
Power and sovereignty, the umbrella a symbol of, 264
Power of becoming vampires by eating human flesh, 198n1; of flying through the air, 103, 104; of love, the overwhelming, 9; obtained by austerities, 85; of remembering former birth, 149; of truth, the irresistible, 31; of witches’ spells, magic, 103, 104
Prabandhacintāmaṇi, Tawney, 108n
Prakrit dialect, 46
Prayer of the mendicant to Durgā, 62
Prayer of Saktideva, 228
“Pre-Buddhist Religion of the Burmese, The,” A. Grant Brown, Folk-Lore, 265n1
Precautions observed in the birth-chamber, 166-169
Preceptor, Prajnaptikaśīka, 212
Precious stones in their eyes, women with, 306
Precious stones, rules for preserving, 288; valley full of, 299
Pregnancy observances, 166-169
Pregnancy of Väsavadattā, 137, 138; of Vindurekhā, 231
Preparation of the king for conquest, 53; of the king for the expedition, 89
Present of a poison-damsel sent to Alexander the Great, 291-295
Present sent to the chaplain by the rogue Mādhava, 178
Prevalence of fraternal polyandry in the Himalayan regions, 18; in Tibet, 18; among the Todas of the Nilgiri hills, 18
Previous birth of Sinapārakrama’s wife, 160
Previous life, done in a (purogaṇī), 135n1
Price of a man’s blood, epithet denoting the (satadāya), 240
“Pride Abased,” J. H. Knowles, Ind. Ant., 193n1
Pride one of the six faults of man, 106n3
Pride of wealth, Brāhmans intoxicated with the, 59
Priest, āre- (agnihotri), 257
Primitive Culture, E. B. Tylor, 83, 96n1, 103n3
Primitive Culture of India, T. C. Hodson (Roy. As. Soc.), 97n, 256n4
Primitive methods of mid-wifery in India, 18
Prince eaten by his parents, 113, 114
Prince of th.: Rākshasas, Labajīhva, 206
Prince of the Siddhas, Viśvavasu, the chief, 140
Princes named Dhītarāśṭra and Pāṇḍu, 16
Princess carried off by the mendicant, 63
Princess of Kashmir whose beauty maddens, 6n3
Princess, Vīḍūrakāṇa watches in the apartment of the, 74
Princess won by Śaktideva, 225
Princess's life saved by Vidyāshaka, 63
Prints of loving nails, 49, 49n²
Prison, magic circle as a, 100n
"On the Art of Entering Another's Body," Bloomfield, 212n¹
Procession of the king, triumphant, 51
Proclamation announced by beat of drum, 73, 73n², 173, 187, 224
Producing fire (i.e. "rubbing Agni forth"), 255n¹
Products of the cow, the five sacred (pañcchagaya), 242
Professional proxies for husbands, Cadeberiz, 307
Progenitor of meteors and comets, Rān's body the, 81
Progenitor of the Pāṇḍava race, the moon the, 13, 13n¹
Propitiation Śiva to obtain a son, 136; Śiva with austerities, 84, 85; the Vetalas, 235
Propagnator, II, 289n²
Prosperity, Lakṣmī or Śrī, Goddess of, 65, 65n¹, 75; Timirā the dwelling of the Goddess of, 36
Protection against the poison-damsel, herb as, 293; of child by lamps, 161; of a mightier king, political measure of recourse to the, 165n¹
Protective barrier to the dead and dying, magic circle a, 99n
Protective barrier round a house, magic circle a, 99n
Protective value of iron, 166, 167
Proxies for husbands, Cadeberiz professional, 307
Proxy for husband, 306, 307
Pseudo-Aristotelian work, Secretum Secretorum, 286-291
Pseudo-Aristotelisches Steinbuch von Lättich," Zeit- schrift für deutsches Altert., 299n¹
Pseudo-Callisthenes, 138n¹, 169
Psychology of Sex, Studies in the, Havelock Ellis, 229n², 306, 308n¹
"Pacelle Venimeuse" (poison-damsel), 293
Punishment for adultery among the Pārdhi caste, 88n¹
Punishment for adultery, nose cut off as, 88, 88n¹; in places other than India, 88n¹
Pupil of Viśvāmitra, Gālava a son or, 211n²
Purāṇas, the, 240, 241, 248
Pursuit of a boar by Śaktideva, 230
Pursuit of the chase by the king, 126
Pyramidshaufted by guardian spirit, one of the, 6n²
Pyrites as charm against alligators, iron, 168
"Qara Khan, The Story of," E. J. W. Gibb, The Story of Jeezad, 190n¹
Qirg. Vezir Tārīkkī (History of the Forty Vezirs), 123
Quarrel of Sunda and Upasunda, 14, 14n
Quarrlesome wife, the, 159-160
Quartz, jewels of glass and, 182
Queen of Ethiopia, eunuch of Candace, 85n Queen of India sends Alexander a poison-damsel, 294
Queen Jan Shah, 124
Queen Kuvalayāvali, 98
Queen of the North (Regina Aquilonis), 296
"Queen of the Serpents," Burton, Nights, 153n
Queen of Sizire, 294
Queen's palace, plot to set fire to the, 3
Quotations about umbrellas, 270, 271
Race, King of the Chola, 92, 92n²; the King of Vatsa sprung from the Pāṇḍava, 1; moon the progenitor of the Pāṇḍava, 13, 13n¹; of Paṇḍu, 89
Rain in Chunār, Mirzapur district, rites to produce, 117, 118
Rain, nudity in rites to produce, 117, 118; ploughing to produce, 117, 118
Rain ritual in various parts of the world, nudity in, 117, 118
Rāmāyana, the, 22n¹, 34n², 45n¹, 54n¹, 102n¹, 272
Rams of Urvās, 246, 249
Range, the Vindhya, 188
Rank abandoned by Somaprabha, celestial, 44
Rank betrayed by smell of the body, high, 22, 22n²
Rank of a Vidyādhara, rites to obtain the, 233, 234
"Rappacini's Daughter," Mosse from an Old Manze, Nathaniel Hawthorne, 297, 197n¹
Rare appearance of the poison-damsel in Sanskrit literature, 291
Rāsi Malā, Forbes, 266, 266n², 305n¹
Rüttel der Sphinx, Lastner, 299n¹
Raven connected with the Water of Life, 150n¹
Reason for split tongues of snakes, 152
Reasons for nudity in magic ritual, 117
Recensions of the Secretum Secretorum, 287, 288-291
Recht und Sitte. J. Jolly, 163n
Recitation of Phalabhūti at the king's door, 97, 98
Recognition, the ring of, 76, 77
Reconciliation of the King of Magadha, 47
Recourse to the protection of a mightier king, political measure of, 165n¹
Red lead, marking with, 23n
Red powder, people adorned with, 164, 164n²
Red umbrellas, lesser officials have, 265
Red used in marriage rites, the colour, 23n, 24n
Red as vermilion, people, 58, 59, 59n¹
Refusal of Kanakarekhā to be married, 172, 173; of the king to ascend the jewelled throne, 53
INDEX II—GENERAL

Regalia, five articles of, 264
Regimen Sanitatis, chapters of Secretum Secretorum, 288
Regiment pestilentzrcher giftiger Fieber, Johannes Hebenstreit, 296
Region above the three worlds called Goloka, 242
Reisebuch, Hans Schiltberger, 279n
Reisen durch Südamerika, J. J. von Taschd, 289n Rejected love of women, 105, 109, 120-124
Rejection of Kālāratri by Sundaraka, 105, 109
Relation between the cow and the universe, mystic, 240
Relation of Saṅkhāchūḍa, Matanga, 156
Relations attack Jimūtaketu, 140
Relative found by Saṅktideva, 195
Relief from taboo during eclipses, kuśa or dīb grass as, 82
Religion of Babylonia and Assyria, Morris Jastrow, 61n3
“Religion of the Burmese, The Pre-Buddhist,” R. Grant Brown, Folk-Lore, 265n1
Religion of the Semites, Lectures on the, W. Robertson Smith, 119, 194n1
Religion des Veda, H. Oldenberg, 252n1
Religious acts before making a sāchakāritya (Act of Truth), 31, 32
Religious ascetic, rogue Śiva disguised as, 176
Religious mendicant in the cemetery, 62
Religious significance of the umbrella, 265, 266
Religious student, Brahma-ṛchāρīṁ, an unmarried, 180n1
Reliques, Percy, 10n3
Remembering (smṛti), 200n1
Remembering former birth, power of, 149
Renunciation by Bhadrā of her magic gifts, 78
Repast of Kuvalayāvālī and Ādityaprabha, the grim, 113
Report Cambridge Expedition, Haddon, 198n2
Report of cannibalism during the French Revolution, 185n3
Report on the Excavations of Pāṭaliputra (Patna), 59n3
Repulsive appearance of Kālāratri, 103, 104
Respect, “Mother,” mode of address as a mark of, 201, 201n3; semi-nudity as a mark of, 119
Restored to life by Garuḍa, snakes, 155, 156
Result of insult, duel as, 303
Return of Asokadatta to Benares, 207; to Kaushāmbī, the, 48-50, 67; of Saṅktideva to the City of Gold, 237; of Vidūṣhaka to the temple, 66; of Vidūṣhaka, the triumphant, 79
Reunion of Vāsavadattā and the King of Vatsa, 29; of Vidūṣhaka and Bhadrā, 77, 78
Reveals the past, dish of emerald, 159, 160
Revenge planned by Devadatta, 236
Reverence paid to the cobra, 311, 312
Revolution, report of cannibalism during the French, 185n3
Rewue des Études Juives, 289n4
Reward for good deeds, heavenly wives as, 44, 45; of perseverance, the, 97; of virtue, 133
Ricerche intorno al Libro di Sindibad, Comaretti, 122
Rides in the air, magical, 103-105n
Riding on a lion, lady, 143 “Right path, in the,” (mārgasthāṁ), 159n3
Rīg-Vēda, the, 24n1, 57n1, 86n1, 88n1, 231n1, 232n1, 240, 245-247, 250, 264, 265, 265n1
Ring to destroy the effects of poison, 301; given by Bhadrā to Vīḍūṣhaka, 68; of recognition, the, 76, 77
Rings of kuśa grass, 176, 176n3
Rising sun, the mountain of the, 75
Rising (udaya), 67n1
Rite of fire-walking, 169
Rites to attain the rank of a Vidyādharā, 233, 234
Rites of Hinduism, esoteric, 214
Rites, human flesh in Tantric, 214
Rites in the Mālaś Mādhava, Tantric, 214-216
Rites to produce rain, nudity in, 117, 118; in various parts of the world, nudity in, 117, 118
Rites of the Śākta worshippers of Dēvī, Tantric, 198n3, 199n3
Rites of the Twice-born, Mrs. S Stevenson, 54n1, 83, 166, 242, 257n1
Ritual, cow, 142, 241; the fire, 248-250; lamps prominent in Hindu, 169; nudity in magic, 117-120
River of the gods (i.e. the Ganges), 54, 54n2
River that cannot be crossed by mortals, 75
River-goddess, Tamasā, 189n1
Roam through the air, spells to enable Vāsavaddattā to, 138
Roaming Vidyādhara, a sky-, 141
Robbers fall upon Jimūtavāhana, 141
Robbers, the impaled, 60-62
Robbers tenanted by demons, dead, 61, 61n1
Rogue sends the chaplain a present, 178; wishes to enter the service of the king, 178, 179
Rogues, triumph of the, 183
Rohita fish, 193n1
“Romance of Doolin of Mayence,” Dunlop, History of Fiction, 127n2
“Romance of Merlin,” Dunlop, History of Fiction, 39n2
Romania, Guillelm de Cervera, 292, 292n
Romans, use of poisons condemned by, the, 277, 278
Room hung with weapons, 161
Rope (gava), 75n1
Sacrificial act of eating the ox, 240
Sacrificial fire, the, 247, 249, 250, 255
Saddle, horse with a jewelled, 223
Sagas about meeting eyebrows, Icelandic, 103n²
Sagas from the Far East, 5n¹, 82n³, 9³
Sage, divine (Devarshi), 34, 34n³
Sage Yajñivalkya, the great, 241
Sage Vaśishṭa, 45n²
Sagen aus Böhmen, Grohmann, 13n³, 45n², 99n, 104n
Sagen aus der Grafschaft Mansfeld, Grössler, 99n
Sagen, Märchen und Gebräuche aus Meklenburg, Bartsch, 98n³, 107n¹, 158n
Sagenbuch (or Geschichte) der Bayerischen Lande, Schöppner, 115n
"Sake of a fair one, for the" (rämtāram), 75n
Śākuntālā, Kālidāsā, 144n³
Sale of human flesh, 205
Saliva dangerous to poisonous animals, human, 296
Saliva, the poisonous, 205
Sāmas Veda, chanters of the, 57
Sāṁhitas, the, 240
Sanctity of iron among the Doms, belief in the, 165
Sanctuary at Mecca, 161n⁴
Sandal (chenin), 264
Sanskrit College, the, 50n¹, 74n¹, 89n³, 97n³, 100n⁵, 137n¹, 185n², 197n³
Sanskrit literature, poison-damsel rare in, 281
Sanskrit references to poison-damsels, 281-286
Sanuto Junior, Muratori, 268, 268n⁸
Śatrāngāhāra Charita, the, 121
Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, the, 241, 245, 250, 254-256
Satellite of the Mexican sun-god, Nanahuatzin a; 309
Saved by shock, Vihitasena, 37, 37n¹
Scented drug (Ananta), 276; (Sarva-gandha), 276
Sceptre (kanyle), 264
Science of thieving, 183n³, 184n
Sciences of the Vidyādharas, 210-212, 212n¹
Scorned love of women, 120-124
Scratches, varieties of love, 49n³
Screams of witches, 60
Scripторes rum Austriacarum veteres ac genuini, R. D. P. Hieronymus Pez, 310n¹
Scripторum Arabum de Rebus Indicii loci, J. Gildemeister, 312n²
Sculptures from Calah, 263
Sea of milk, nectar in the, 151
Sea propitiated with jewels, 72, 73n¹
Sea propitiated by Rāma, the God of the, 84n⁴
Search of Śaktideva for the Golden City, 188-195; of Vidūśhaka for Bhadrā, 69, 71
Second anklet given to Asokadatta, 206
Second golden lotus desired by the king, 208
Second rejection of Kālaratī by Sundaraka, 109
Secret of the forbidden terrace, 222, 223
Secrets of Brahmadatta learnt by spy, 91
Secretum Secretorum attributo ad Aristotele, II, Cecioni, 289n²
Sect of ascetics, the Aghorī, 90n³
Seduce Sunda and Upasunda, Tilottāmā sent to, 14, 14n
Seeing the king and queens, excitement of the women on, 50, 51

Roundel, Anglo-Indian term for umbrella, 269, 269n⁴
Royal Asiatic Society, For- long Fund, Primitive Culture of India, T. C. Hodson, 97n, 256n⁴
"Royal" trees, the five, 118
Royal umbrella (tippan), 264
Royalty, the umbrella an emblem of, 263
"Rubbing Agni forth" (i.e. producing fire), 255n¹
Rubbing magic article, jinn summoned by, 58n¹
Ruins at Patna discovered by Waddell and Spooner, 39n¹
Ruler of the Hydrospes (Jhelum), Porus, 283, 285n¹
Rules for preserving health, 288; regarding fire and light in all parts of the world, 168
Russell’s viper, deaths from sting of, 311
Russian Folk-Tales, Ralston, 60n², 61n¹, 71n¹, 95n⁴, 122, 152n⁴, 155n⁴, 190n, 202n¹, 223n¹
Sacred basil or Tulasi, 82
Sacred Books of the East, 245n³, 267n¹, 275n¹
Sacred cow, the, 229, 229n¹; of the Hindus, 240-242
"Sacred Fires, Establishment of the," Agnyādānā, 256n¹
Sacred to the moon-god, Harran the city, 19n⁴
Sacred pipal tree (Ficus religiosa), 118, 265
Sacred plants, windows covered with, 161, 166
Sacred spot (haram), 161n⁴
Sacred Thread investiture, 257
Sacred tree Butea frondosa, 169
Sacrifice among the Śakta worshippers, human, 195n¹
Sacrifice of the daughter of Ādityasena ordered by the goddes, 62
Sacrifice of Jīmūtavāhāna, the great, 153, 154
"Sacrifice, The place of" (Prayāga), 110n²
Sacrifice Saktideva, sons of the fisherman prepare to, 227, 228
Sacrifices to water-spirits, 72, 72n¹

Sacrificing the princess by Vidūśhaka, 63
Scandal, The Iniquity of, 185, 186
Scarlet fever, 220
Socratological Rites of all Nations, Bourke, 199n
Scavengers, Mehtar caste of, 82
Scented drug (Ananta), 276; (Sarva-gandha), 276
Sceptre (kanyle), 264
Science of thieving, 183n³, 184n
Sciences of the Vidyādharas, 210-212, 212n¹
Scorned love of women, 120-124
Scratches, varieties of love, 49n³
Screams of witches, 60
Scripторes rum Austriacarum veteres ac genuini, R. D. P. Hieronymus Pez, 310n¹
Scripторum Arabum de Rebus Indicii loci, J. Gildemeister, 312n²
Sculptures from Calah, 263
Sea of milk, nectar in the, 151
Sea propitiated with jewels, 72, 72n¹
Sea propitiated by Rāma, the God of the, 84n⁴
Search of Śaktideva for the Golden City, 188-195; of Vidūśhaka for Bhadrā, 69, 71
Second anklet given to Asokadatta, 206
Second golden lotus desired by the king, 208
Second rejection of Kālaratī by Sundaraka, 109
Secret of the forbidden terrace, 222, 223
Secrets of Brahmadatta learnt by spy, 91
Secretum Secretorum attributo ad Aristotele, II, Cecioni, 289n²
Sect of ascetics, the Aghorī, 90n³
Seduce Sunda and Upasunda, Tilottāmā sent to, 14, 14n
Seeing the king and queens, excitement of the women on, 50, 51
INDEX II—GENERAL

367

Select Specimens of the Theatre of the Hindus, H. H. Wilson, 189m, 192n, 214, 258, 259, 258n, 283n.

Self-sacrifice of Jumutavāhana, Great, 153, 154.

Semi-nudity as mark of respect, 119.

Semitic Magic, R. Campbell Thompson, 99n, 130n, 295.

Semitic opos or opion (opium), 304.

Separation of Rāma from Sītā, 9; of Urvāsi and Pururavas, 35, 36, 245-259.

Sept Femmes de Barbe Bleu, Les, A. France, 224n.

Serpent race nearly destroyed, 152.

Serpent Šesha, 90, 90n.

Serpent—worship and on the Venomous Snakes of India, On, Sir Joseph Fayer, 311n.

Serpents in their bodies, maidens with, 307.

“Serpents, The Queen of the,” Burton, Nights, 153n.

Serpents stare themselves to death in mirrors, 299.

Serpents, valley guarded by deadly, 299.

Service of the king, rogue wishes to enter the, 178, 179.

Setting of the sun, the west cause of the, 53.

Seven-headed Nāga, the, 266.

Seven Wise Masters, The, 124.

Seven Years’ Travel in Central America, J. Fröbel, 280n.

Sexes, analogy between fire-drill and intercourse of the, 255.

“Shade, little” (umbra), 263.

Shaft (aste), 269.

Shame of Garuḍā, 155.

Shape of bees assumed by Guhachandra and the Brāhmaṇ, 42.

Sheep muzzled owing to aconite, 279.

Shock saves Viślata, 37, 37n.

Ship stopped in the sea by the leg of a giant, 72; ship swept into the whirlpool, 218.

Shortage of women a cause of polyandry, 18.

Shoulder (škaṇḍha), 205n.

Shrewish wife, the, 159, 160.

“Shroud, The,” Ralston, Russian Folk-Tales, 60n.

Shut up (Italian serrato), 162n.

Sicilianische Mütrenzen, Gonenbach, 6n, 50n, 113n, 135n, 150n, 190n, 196n, 202n, 209n.

Sickle and stū leaves kept on the cot of a Māla woman in labour, 166.

Signet—ring of Rāksha, or Mudrā-Rāksha, Viśākhadatta, 160n, 281, 283-284.

Significance of the umbrella, 263-265; religious, 265, 266.

Silence broken by ascetic, vow of, 4.

“Silent Couple, Story of the,” 212n.

Silver (Tūra), 276.

Similarity of nature myths among many peoples, 252.

Simplex and Drugs of India, Garcia de Orta, 302n.

Sin of Indra, 45, 46.

“Sindbad the Sailor,” 299.

Sindibad Nāma cycle of tales, 124.

Sing (gā), 241.

Single divine being, origin of the Pānḍus in a, 17.

Sisters, marriage of Śaktideva to the four, 238; the three, 237.

Site of Kalinga, 92, 92n; of Pātaliputra, 39n.

Sitting dhārma at the sun’s door, 82.

Sitting in the posture called Padmāsana, 176, 176n.

Six faces, a boy with (Kārttikeya), 102.

Six faults that are the enemies of man, 106, 106n.

Six Krittikās (i.e. Pleiades), 102, 102n.

Six political measures, the, 165, 165n.

Sixty-four seers (Ghata-measure), 276.

Skill in dancing, nymphs display their, 35.

Skull (kāpāla), 90n.

Skull-bearing Śaiva ascetic, 196, 200.

Skull-bearing worshippers of Śiva, 90, 90n.

Skull-cleaver (Kapālasphata), 199.

Skull, drinking brains from, 199.

Skull struck by Viṣṇu, 198n.

Sky-roaming Viṣṇu, 141.

Slain by Viṣṇu, the mendicant, 63.

Slaughter of the cow fills the Hindu with horror, 240.

Slave of Kadrū, Viṇāta becomes the, 151.

Slavonian superstition about meeting eyebrows, 103n.

Smallpox, clothes infected with, 280; traders infect Indians with, 280; vaccination against, 312.

Smell of the body, high rank betrayed by the, 22, 22n.

Smile in Hindu poetry, 50n.

Smith, Annam parents sell children to a, 166, 167.

Smoking opium less harmful than eating or drinking it, 303.

Snake (dībha), 298; (nāga), 154n.

Snake-bite, statistics of deaths from, 311.

Snake called Śankhachūḍa, 152-154, 156.

Snake cannot poison one of its own species, 311.

Snake-charmer’s inoculation, 311, 312.

Snake, ānuḍubha, a non-venerous, 152n; rājula a striped, 152n.

Snake, girl only able to hiss like a, 294.

Snake, the green tree—(Ulār puchok, Dryophis prasina or Boie-Dipsodomorphus), 303.

Snake gives power of understanding language of animals, eating a, 108n.

Snake nature acquired by maiden, 291, 294, 295; girl with the, 294, 295.

Snake as poison, bile of the green tree, 303.
Snake Vasunemi, the, 22n
Snake venom digestible, 311
Snakes and Alexander the Great, deadly, 299
Snakes, baby girl brought up by huge, 294; become the food of Garuda, 151, 152; belief in the poisonous look of, 298; the foolish, 151; of Hindu superstition, 152n, 153n; and intercourse, connection between, 307; reason for split tongues of, 152; restored to life by Garuda, 155, 156; sons of Kādrū, 150; spit venom and defile the Sun's horses, 150; Vāsuki, King of the, 152
Snakes laid in the path of the King of Vatsa, 91
Sneezeing, 145n
Snowy Mountains, King of the (Śiva), 143
Soaps used at Brāhmaṇ wedding, 22n
Sociéties, Sunderer of (death), 124
Society of English Bibliophiles, 2n
Society of ghouls in Uganda, 199n
Society of witches, 104-105n
Socket (note), 269
"Some Notes on Homeric Folk-Lore," W. Crooke, Folk-Lore, 57n
Some Truths about Opium, H. A. Giles, 304n
Son of Adityaprabha eaten, 113, 114
Son born to Śiva and Umā in the fire, 102
Son, desire of Gauri for a, 100; longing of Vāsavadattā for a, 135; promised to Vāsavadattā, 13; propitiating Śiva to obtain a, 136; or pupil of Viśvāmitra, Gālava a, 211n; of Rumanvat, Harīśkha, 161, 165; of Vasantaka, Tapantaka, 161, 165; of Vinatā, Garuḍa, 151; worshipping Ganesa to obtain a, 100, 102; of Yaugandharāyaṇa, Marubhūti, 161, 165
Son of Hiḍimbā, 284
Son of the King of Vatsa to be King of the Vidyāharas, 85
Son-in-law seduced by Utpalavārṇa, 122
Son of Nātyodita, Gomukha, 161, 165
Son of Pātalī (Pātaliputra), 39n
Songs of the Russian People, Ralston, 138n, 189n
Sons of the fisherman prepare to sacrifice Śaktideva, 227, 228
Sons of Kādrū, snakes the, 150; of Kārttikeya, 102; of Pāndu, the five, 16
Sorcerer or Maidelag, 193n
Sorceress, Rhodope the Thracian, 6n
Source of the novels of the 10th day of the Decameron, 76n
South Kensington Museum, 271
South neighboured by Rākshasas and inhabited by the God of Death, 54
South, ikkī worn in the, 23n
Southern India, Maravans an aboriginal race of, 166
Sovereignty of Chola, 92, 92n
Sovereignty, the umbrella a symbol of power and, 264
Sowing dissension, political expedient of, 45n
Spangles set in gold worn by women from Rājputāna, 29n
Spangles worn by Hindu women of good caste, ikkī, 22n, 23n
Speaking immediately after birth, 29, 39n
Speech (gīt), 241; identified with the cow, 241; regarded as divine, 241
Spell for descending from the air forgotten by Sundaraka, 110
Spell overheard by Sundaraka, the witches', 107
Spells to drive away Rākshasas, 106; to enable Vāsavadattā to roam through the air, 138; magic power of witches', 103, 104
Spies sent to Benares, 89, 90
Spirits active on first night of marriage, evil, 306
Spirits date back to the Stone Age, 167; lights in the birth-chamber to scare away evil, 165; measures to prevent entry of evil, 166; scared away by iron, evil, 166-167; scared away by steel, evil, 166-168; scared away with a sword in the Philippines, evil, 167
Spiritual exaltation or Mana gained by eating human flesh, 198n
Spiritual guide of the Vidyāharas, Kauśika the, 210
Spitting at an enemy, 302, 303
Spitting betel juice in a person's face, insult of, 302, 303
Split tongues of snakes, reason for, 192
Spread of the poison-damsel myth in Europe, 292-297
Spread of syphilis in Europe, 308
Spring festival, the Holī, 169
"Springs and Autumn" (Tsun Tsii), the Confucian classic, 81
Spy learns the secrets of Brahmadatta, 91
Staff (piam), 269
Stages of love, 9n, 10n
Stake at gambling, left hand cut off as a, 232n
Standard of value, cow used as a, 240
State umbrella or Puchukra Undi, 267
Statistics of deaths from snake-bite, 311
Statue of the god of syphilis, 309
Stealing of Aṃpita by Rāhu, 81
"Stealing in Hindu Fiction, Art of," Bloomfield, Amer. Journ. Phil., 183n Stealing, king wishes to study the art of, 184n, 185n
Steel, flint and (chakkamukki), 256n
Steel, magic virtue of, 106n; scares away evil spirits, 161-168
Steyafāstra-pravartaka, a manual of thievry called, 183n
Sthānirvāṇa-carita, Hemachandra (Jacobi's edit.), 283n
INDEX II—GENERAL

369

Stipulation of Somaprabhā on her marriage, 41, 41n².²
Stone Age, spirits date back to the, 167
Stone, Ahalyā turned into, 46
Stone or metal umbrellas (hīcī, ha, ti), 265, 265n⁴
Stone metamorphoses, 46, 46n³
Stones in their eyes, women with precious, 306
Stones, valley full of precious, 299
Stories of Ancient Egypt, Popular, Maspero, 112n¹, 120-121
Stories of children who speak shortly after birth, 39, 39n²
Stories, Vāsavaddattā’s longing to hear, 137
Storm comes up at sea, 191, 192
Story of Ahalyā, 45, 46; of Alāṅkaravi, 212n¹; of the Brāhma woman, 69-70; of the Clever Physician, 2, 2n²; of Devadasā, 86-88; of Devadatta, 129-132; of the Golden City, 171-175, 184, 186-195, 213, 217-231, 236-238; of Harasāvīni, 39n³; of the Hypocritical Ascetic, 4-5; of Jumātavāhana, 138-150, 153-156; of Kesāta and Kandarpa, 193n¹; of Kuntī, 22-24; of Lalitānga, 113n¹, 220n; of the Loving Couple who died of Separation, 9; of Phalabhūti, 95-99, 112-115; of Pingalikā, 133-134; of Punyasena, 10-11; of Saktivega, 80n¹; of Sinharākrama, 159-160; of Somaprabhā, 39-44; of Sunda and Upasunda, 13-14n; of Umādīni, 6-8; of Urvasī and Pururāvasiya, 34-36, 245-259; of Vidūṣhaka, 54-80; of Vihitāsena, 36-37; of the “Witch Girl,” 71n²
Story of the Forty Mornas and Eves (Hikāyetu-Erbānā Sabāhīn ve Mesī), 123
“Story of Horn and Rimenhild,” H. Schofield, Mod. Lang. Ass. Amer., 76n²
Story of Jewad, The, E. J. W. Gibb, 190n³

“Story of Kilmwhc and Olwen,” Cowell, Y Cymroder, 190n¹
“Story of the Magic Pill,” 189n¹
“Story of King Parityāgasena,” 136n¹
“Story of Qara Khan,” The Story of Jewad, E. J. W. Gibb, 190n¹
“Story of the Silent Couple,” 212n¹
“Story of King Sihāka,” 49n³
Story of the Ten Princes or Daśa Kumāra Charita, J. J. Meyer, 183n¹, 184n “Story of the Two Brothers,” Maspero, Popular Stories of Ancient Egypt, 120
“Story of the Two Princesses,” 190n³
Story-teller, poison-damsel a creation of the, 313
Strange bargain of Vindumati, 229
Strange Survivals, S. Baring-Gould, 272
Stratagem, failure of Brahmadehattā’s, 91; to gain love, 44; the King of Vatsa conducted to Lāvānaka by a, 20; political measure, 165n³; of Vidūṣhaka, 68
Streak of Gold (kanaka-rekkhā), 171n³
Stream named Śītoddā, 67
Streams of ichor, 90, 93
Strength, superiority of Pañcū princes in feats of, 16
Striped (ging-gang), 271n¹
Striped snake, rajula a, 152n²
Student, Brahmacārin an unmarried religious, 180n¹
Students, Wanderjahre of Brāhmaṇ, 174n¹
“Studies about the Kathāsaritsāgara,” Speyer, Verh. Kon. Akad. Welen, Amst., 25n², 36n¹, 53n², 60n², 70n¹, 92n², 140n², 160n¹, 177n², 201n², 227n², 235n¹
Studies in the Psychology of Sex, Havelock Ellis, 229n², 308, 308n²
Study the art of stealing, king wishes to, 184n, 185n
Stupefying weapon in the hands of Love, Urvasī a, 34, 34n²
Subduing the King of Sindh, 93
Subduing the King of Vatsa’s enemies, 91-94
Submarine fire (vadavāgni), 256
Substance, void of (niṣṣāra), 92n³
Substitute for vermilion, kun-kam a, 164n⁴
Sucesos de las Islas Filipinas, Antoine de Moya, 306n¹
Sudden wealth, evil results of, 59
Suicide contemplated by the King of Vatsa, 25
Sultan Faraj, the Egyptian, 279
Summa Prædicantium, John of Bromyard, 114n
Summoning a jinn by rubbing magic article, 58n³; a supernatural being by thought, 58n¹; a sword by thought, 58, 58n¹
Sun-god, Mexican, Nana- hurlatin a satellite of the, 309
Sun kept from Brāhmaṇ’s head on day his studentship ends, 267, 268
“Sun, Moon and Stars (Buddhist),” E. J. Thomas, Hastings’ Ency. Rel. Eth., 81
“Sun, Moon and Stars,” Hastings’ Ency. Rel. Eth., 83
Sun, mountain of the rising, 75
“Sun, not to see the,” taboo, 268
Sun rises, Udaya the eastern mountain behind which, 67n¹
Sun (Śūrya), 81
Sun, Temple of the, MS. of Secretum Secretorum: found in the, 288
Sun, the west the cause of the setting of the, 53
Sun’s door, sitting dhamā at the, 82
Sun’s horses, 57; dispute about the colour of the, 150-152
Sunderer of societies (death), 124
Sun-rising, mountain of the, 67, 68
Sunshade, the Glove, the Muff, The, O. Uzanne, 272
Sunshade (umbrella), 263; (umbrella), 263; (umbrella), 263
Superiority of Pându princes in feats of strength, 16
Supernatural beings summoned by thought, 58n
"Supernatural birth" motif, 136n
Supernatural birth, sons of Dharmastra and Pându by, 16
Supernatural power, Ahalya’s intrigue found out by Gautama’s, 45, 46
Supersitions connected with itching and twitching, 144n, 145n; connected with wedding rings, 99n
"Supersitions and Customs in Saisette," G. F. D’Penha, Ind. Ant., 167
Supersitious, horse, 57n
"Superstitious Man" [Characters], Prof. Jebb’s notes on Theophrastus’, 89n
Surmounted by umbrellas, Pagodas, 265, 266
Survival of the blood rite, use of vermilion a, 23n, 24n
Svārata Sanshātra, the, 276, 276n
Swāhahuttarikāthā, the, 286, 286n
"Svāhahuttarikāthā, Ueber die," J. Hertel, Festschrift für Ernst Windisch, 286n
Swānā-Śāsvadattā, Bhāsa, 21n, 25n
Swallow Sūrya and Soma, Rāhu’s attempt to, 81
Swallowing of Saktideva by a fish, 192
"Swan Maiden" motif, 25n
Swans like chowries, 188
Swans, nymphs in the shape of, 245
Sweeper or deity of sweepers, Rāhu a, 82
Sweet medicine (svādvašātha), 85n
Sword, a creeper-like (flexible, well-tempered), 93, 93n; of the fire-god, 58, 60, 71, 72, 74; in her hand, Kalarātri with a drawn, 106, 106n; of the King of Vatsa, the curved, 93, 93n; murdered child becomes a, 236; to scare away evil spirits during childhood in the Philippines, 167; that comes on thought, 58, 58n
Symbol of the gradual decay of vegetation, Ishur’s descent to Hades a, 61n Symbol of power and sovereignty, the umbrella, 264
Symbolical of child, fire produced by fire-drill, 256
Symbolical incidents in the story of Urvāsi and Pururavas, 245
Syntipas, 290
Syphils Aujourd’hui et chez les Anciens, Le, Buret, 308n
Syphils in Central America, antiquity of, 308, 309
Syphils, Nanaahnatzin, god of, 308; introduced into Europe by Columbus’ men, 308; introduced into India by the Portuguese, 310; regarded by Mexicans as divine, 309
Syrian freedman under Khalifa al-Mamun, Yahya ibn Baqri, a, 288
Syrische Märchen, Prym and Socin, 76n, 150n, 219n
Tablet in the British Museum, 61n
Taboo during eclipses, kusa or diś grass as relief from the, 82
Taboo, earliest example of nuptial, 252; “not to see the sun,” 268; the nuptial, 248
"Taboo and the Perils of the Soul," Frazer, Golden Bough, 253
Taboo stories, 253
"Tale of the Ensoealled Prince," Burton, Nights, 131n
"Tale of the Jealous Sisters," Dozon, Contes Albanais, 190n
"Tale of Kamar al-Zaman," Burton, Nights, 124
"Tale of a King," Stein and Grierson, Haim’s Tales, 124
"Tale of the Trader and the Jinn," Burton, Nights, 147n
Tale of a Tub, Swift, 270
Tales from the Arabic and Persian, Douce, 113n
Talmud, the, 169
Tamil story in Orientalist, De Rossaio, 184n
Tantric rites, human flesh in, 214; in the Maññi Mādhava, 214-216
Task undertaken by Vidūshaka, a daring, 60-62
Tasmanians, poisoning of the, 280, 280n
Teacher called Tumburu, a, 38
Temple of Chāmuṇḍa, 214, 215
Temple, curl near the right; unlucky, 7n
Temple of Durgā, 62, 141, 196, 199, 227
Temple of the goddess, the, 62-68
Temple, golden lotus dedicated to a, 208
Temple of the Sun dedicated to Asculapius (Asclepius), MS. of Secretum Secretorum found in the, 288
Tempting of Bāti by Anupu’s wife, 121; of Sundaraka by Kalarātri, 105, 109
Ten classes of Śaiva mendiants, 90n
Ten names (Daśśanmās), 90n
"Ten Wazirs: or the History of King Azadabhakti and his Son," Burton, Nights, 123
Tenanted by demons, dead robbers, 61, 61n
Tender (ānyaśala), 241
Tending of the king by Vidūshaka, 58
Terrace, the forbidden, 222, 223, 223n, 224n
Terrible Rākṣasa, Vijayadatta becomes a, 198, 199
Terrors of the cemetery, description of the, 60-62
Teutonic Mythology, Grimm, 43n, 57n, 96n
"That which is prohibited" (karam, karim), 161n
Thief of Hindu fiction, Māladeva the arch-, 183n
Thieving in Hindu fiction, 183n, 184n, 185n
Thieving, the science of, 183n, 184n
Thirty-two lucky marks (mahāpurushalakṣhayā) and eighty minor marks possessed by Buddha, 1n
Thought, Rākshasa comes on, 75, 78; summoning a supernatural being by, 58n; sword that comes on, 58, 58n
Thousands of eyes of Indra, the, 46, 46n
Thousand Nights and a Night, See Nights
Thousand and One Days, Dervish Makhlis of Ispāhān, 6n
Thousand years to develop, embryo of Kārttikeya takes a, 102
Thracian sorceress Rhodope, 6n
Thread, investiture of the sacred, 257
Three forms of polygamy, 17
Three forms of “scorned women” motif, 122
Three objects of life, 180, 180n
Three pavilions, the, 222
Three sisters, the, 237
Three worlds, Goloka a region above the, 242
Throbbing eye, 144, 144n, 145n
Throne, finding of the jewelled, 52, 53
Thunder ceases in the autumn, 92n
Tibetan Tales, Schiefner and Ralston, 14n, 76n, 122
Tibetans, polyandry practised by the, 17
Time, measure of (kalpa), 139n; (Manvantara), 250
Title of Indian kings, Chhatrarapati or Lord of the Umbrella, 267
Todas, The, Rivers, 82
Togail, Troi, the, Stokes, 72n
Tomb in the form of vampires, belief that the dead rise from the, 61n
Tongues of snakes, reason for split, 152
Tool, unlawful to commit a burglary with an iron, 168
Tope, the Bharhut, 266
Torches waved over women after delivery by Kachins of Upper Burma, 167
Tortured with the pain of love, Guhachandra, 40
Totemic origin of the story of Urvasī and Purūravas, 253, 254
Toy Cart or Myrichchhakāti, 192n, 232n
Tracing origin of myths through etymology, 251, 252
“Trader and the Jinni, Tale of the,” Burton, Nights, 147n
Traders infect Indians with smallpox, 280
Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature, 77n
Transformation, the lion, 147, 148
Transformation of Vijayadatta into a Rākshasa, 198, 199
Transformed into a Rākshasa (vikṛttām), 202n
Translations of the Secretum Secretorum, 287-290
Transmigration, belief in, 241
Transportation through the air, 75
Travelling through the air, 62-64, 64n
Travels of Ludovico di Varthena, G. P. Badger, 300, 300n, 301
Travels, Pietro della Valle, 162n
Treasure, the buried, 52, 87; at the foot of a Nyagrodha tree, 169, 160; guarded by a Yaksha, 52; Kuvera, God of Wealth and Lord of, 93
Treatise to discover if a woman is a poison-damsel, 286, 286n
Treatise of Polemon, the Greek, 290
Tree, Aśvattha (Ficus religiosa), 96, 189; Butea frondosa, the sacred, 169; called “Giver of Desires,” a wishing-, 138, 139; circumambulating the, 96, 97; heavenly nymph comes out of a, 253; a Nyagrodha (Ficus Indica), 159, 160; obligation made to the, 97; the palāsa, 126
Tree, snake, the green (Ular puchok, Dryophis prasinus or Boie-Dipodomorphina), 303
Tree-snake as poison, bile of the green, 303
Tree-spirits, worship of trees and, 96n, 97
Tree-worship, maidens sitting on trees connected with, 43, 43n
Trees, the five “royal,” 118; of Paradise, Pārījāta one of the five, 13, 13n; poisoned by Yogakaranjaka, 91, 275; and tree-spirits, worship of, 96n, 97n
Tribe of North India, Doms a criminal, 168
Tribe, the Orāon, 119
Tribe and Castes of Bengal, Risley, 24n, 167, 229n
Tribe and Castes of the Central Provinces, Russell, 22n, 23n, 85, 88n, 118, 164n, 185n, 242, 266, 266n, 304, 304n, 305n
Tribe and Castes of the North-West Provinces and Oudh, W. Crooke, 119, 166, 168, 257, 257n, 305n
Tribes of Gonds and Mundas, 267
Tribute (kara), 27, 27n; imposed on the Muralas, 92, 92n
Trick to ensure Urvasī’s return, Gandharvas’, 246
Trident-bearing god (Śiva), 153
Triumph of the rogues, 183
Triumphant entry of the king into Kausāmbi, 49-51
Triumphant return of Vidūshaka, 79
Trivīva, Gay, 270, 271
Trouseau, sohāg, the lucky, 23n
“Truth, Act of,” motif, 31-33
“Truth-command” (satyā-dhiśāṇam), 31
Truth, the irresistible power of, 31
“Truth—utterance” (satyā-vādya), 31
Tsun Tsu (“Springs and Autumns”), the Confucian classic, 81
Turkish Harem and Circassian Homes, Harvey, 163n
Umbrella—continued

265, 266; a symbol of power and sovereignty, 264; (num pamvllum), 265; a white, 49, 49n, 80
Umbrellas, appendix on, 263-272; distinctive names of, 264; examples of English, 271; lotuses like lofty, 188; metal or stone (hēe, hā, or ti), 265, 265n4; pagodas surmounted by, 265, 266; Paragon rib for, 271; in Paris, 269; quotations about, 270, 271; used by Anglo-Saxons, 269, 269n2; used by coffee-houses, 269; used by lesser officials, red, 269; used at native courts in Africa, 271

Umbrellas and their History, W. Sangster, 272
Uncle of Dhrītarāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu, Bhishma, 16
Under one umbrella, the earth, 125, 125n3
Underworld, Pātāla the, 92
Unfading garlands, 22, 23, 26, 27, 29
Unintentional injuries, 147, 147n1
Union of husband and wife compared to a creeper clinging to a tree, 204n1
Unit of value (nishka), 240
Universe, mystic relation between the cow and the, 240
Unknown origin of the myth of Rāhu, 81
Unlawful to commit a burglary with an iron tool, 168
Unlucky, curl at back of head or near right temple considered, 7n1
Unmarried religious student, Brahmacārīn, 180n1
Unrequited love, death from, 8, 9, 9n2, 10n
Unterden Olseneibjenis, Kaden, 5n1, 190n1
Uplifted necks, with (utkandharā ca suciram), 30n2
Upper Burma, childhood customs among the Kachins of, 167; gambling among the Shans of, 322n
"Urūha letter" motif, 114n
Urine, a sacred produce of the cow, 242

Ursprung der Syphilis, Iwan Bloch, 310n3

Use of the magical circle, 99n, 100n
Use of poisons condemned by the Romans, 277, 278
Uses of aconite, various, 279
Uses of "overhearing" motif, 107n1
Uttra Rāma Charita, the, Bhavabhūti, 34n2, 189n1, 214
Vaccination against smallpox, 312
Valley full of precious stones, 299
Valley guarded by deadly serpents, 299
Valley of Kashmir, The, W. R. Lawrence, 232n
Valour (pratīpa), 54n3
Value, cow used as a standard of, 240; of iron, the protective, 168, 167; unit of (nishka), 240; of war horses among the Aryans, 57n1
Vampire (Brulokal), meeting eyebrows in Greece denote a, 104n
Vampires, belief that the dead rise from the tomb in the form of, 61n1; in Egypt, belief in, 61n1; overhearing conversations of, 107n1; power of becoming, by eating human flesh, 198n1; (Vetālas), 201
Vanished princess, the, 225
Variants of the story of Ahalyā, 45n4
Varieties of aconite, 279, 280; of love-scratches, 49n3
Various uses of aconite, 279
Various versions of the story of Urvāśī and Pururavas, 246-250
Varthema, Travels of Ludovico di, G. P. Badger, 300, 300n4, 301
Vedas, the, 17, 67n1, 106, 249, 250, 253
Vedic age, Indra in the, 45n4
Vedic Concordance, Bloomfield, 45n4
Vedic days, horses an object of worship from, 51n1
Vedic Mythology, A. A. Macdonell, Grundriss d. Indo-Arischen Philologie, 240, 252n1
Vedicische Studien, Pischel and Geldner, 252n1
Vegetation, Ishtar's descent to Hades symbol of the gradual decay of, 61n
Venerated in the East, old age, 190n
"Veneration of the Cow in India, The," W. Crooke, Folk-Lore, 242
Venereal disease in connection with the poison-damsel myth, 308
Venines, les animaux venimeux, etc., Les, R. Calmette, 281
Venom and defile the sun's horses, snakes spit, 150
Vera Historia, Lucian, 193n, 219n
Vermilion (sundar), 23n; the basis of the īkā, 22n; kunkam a substitute for, 164n; people red as, 58, 59, 59n; a survival of the blood rite, use of, 23n, 24n
Verses handed down by the Bahvricas, 247
Versions of the story of Urvāśī and Pururavas, 246-250
Vertical stick "male," 256
Verzeichnis der Sanskrit Hand- schriften der Königlichen Bibliothek, Weber, 256, 266n
Vessel of fire given to Pururavas, 224, 249
Vessels inauspicious, empty, 164n
Vice of gambling, 231
Vice (vyasana) of hunting, 21, 21n, 127
Victorious King of Vatsa, the, 93, 94
Victory, fortune of, 90
Victory set up by the King of Vatsa, a pillar of, 91, 92, 92n
Vikramānkhadevacharita, Bühler, 17tn
Vikramorvasī, Kālidāsa, 245, 257-259
Villages given to Brāhmaṇs, 59
Violence, afflictions healed by, 2, 2n, 3n
Violier des Histoires Romaines, Brunet, 289n
Viper, deaths from sting of Russell's, 311
Virtue (dharma), 180n; brings its own reward, 133
Vishnu Purāṇa, the, 81, 241, 248, 255
Visit of Guhachandra to a courtesan, 44
Vissāñabhōjana - Jātaka, 297, 298, 298n
Voice from the Aśvatha tree, 97
Voice, a divine, 63, 65
Voice from heaven, 30, 73
Void of substance (nīlsātra), 92n
"Von einem der auszog das Fürchten zu lernen," Grimm, Märchen, 60n
Voaty of the Aśvatha tree, Somadatta a, 96, 96n, 97
Vow of Saktideva, 188
Vow of silence broken by ascetic, 4
Vultures, cries of, 60; enormous birds like, 219
Wanderjahre of Brāhmaṇ students, 174n
War between the Chalcedians and Eretrians, 278; between Indra and the Dānavas, 35
War horses among the Aryans, value of, 57n
War Office, 280, 281
War, poisons in the Great, 280, 281; political expedient of, 45n, 165n; political measure of, 45n, 165n
Ward off danger, weapons a charm to, 166
Ward off ghosts, iron implements kept near child's head to, 166
Warder named Nityodita, chief, 128, 129
Warfare, German methods of, 280
Warning of Aristotle to Alexander, 291; of Brāhmaṇ to the God of Love, 100
Watch of Vīdūśaka in the apartment of the princess, 74
Water (jala), 186n
Water-frog as poison, bile of the green, 303
Water and fields poisoned by Faraj, 279. See Amrita
Water of Life, raven connected with the, 155n
Water poisoned by Yogakarandaka, 91, 275
Water, etc., poisoned, 257-258
Water-spirits, sacrifices to, 72, 72n
Water taken to the impaled man, 201
Water weapon, the, 34n
Waters of the Godsavī, 92, 93
Waving lights in the army of the King of Vatsa, 89, 89n
Wealth (artha), 180n; bestowed on Phalabhūti, 98; Brāhmaṇs intoxicated with the pride of, 59; evil results of sudden, 59; and Lord of Treasure, Kuvera, God of, 93; lost at the gaming-table, Saktideva's, 174; lost at play, 86
Weapon in the hands of Love, Urvāśī a stupefying, 34, 34n
Weapon, the water, 34n; the whirlwind, 34n
Weapons a charm to ward off danger, 166
Weapons, room hung with, 161
"Wearer of the white umbrella" (Thībuzuanga), 265
Weather, in windy (pravātā), 51n
Wedding rings, superstitions connected with, 99n
Wedding, soaps used at Brāhmaṇ, 22m
Weeping woman near the impaled man, 201
Weib in der Natur-und Völker- kunde, Das, Ploss, 306n
Weisskunig, 112n
Well-rounded (anuvṛttā), 132n
Well-tempered, flexible sword (creepere-like), 93, 93n
Wells poisoned in German South-West Africa, 281
Wells poisoned by the Gurkha of Nepal, 280
Welsh Society's Journal, 190n
Wendische Sagen, Veenkendt, 42n, 98n, 107n, 150n, 150n, 202n, 223n
Werewolf, 104n
West the cause of the setting of the sun, 53
West Indies, A. de Herrera, 58
Western India, choṭi, bodice of, 59
Western portion of Assam, Kāmarūpa, 44, 49n
"Wheel of Light," 265
Whirlpool in the ocean, the, 217, 218
Whirlwind weapon, the, 34n
White arsenic, 303
White chowries, 43
White, glory in Hindu rhetoric is, 208n
White smile, the, 50, 50n
White umbrella, 47, 49n, 80; the royal, 254
"White umbrella, wearer of the" (Tibyuzangun), 285
White worm in the heart of a prince, 296
"Whom shall I make mad?" (kan darpaṇāmi), 100
Wide (uru), 251
Wide-Awake Stories, Steel and Temple, 108n, 122, 199n
Widowhood indicated by curl on the Palli bride's temple, 73n Wife, adultery of Devadāsa's, 86, 97; an animal, 254; of Anupu tempts Batti, 121; fickleness of Devadatta's, 131; five brothers with one, 13, 13n2, 16, 17; the quarrelsome, 159, 160; of Rāja Kāmpila, Ratnangi, 122; the shrewish, 159, 160; thrown to the dogs, 121; of Vīhitāsena, Tejovati, 36, 37
Wild mountaineer (Sāvara), 141-149
Windows covered with sacred plants, 161, 166
Windy weather, in (pravāle), 51n
Wine (surā), 276; drinking heavenly, 43
Winning of the princess by Śaktideva, 225
"Wisdom of the East" Series, 45n4
Wishing-cow of the good, 45, 45n2
Wishing-tree called "Giver of Desires," a, 138, 139
Witch called Lonā or Nonā Chamarin, 119
"Witch Girl," story of the, 71n
Witch Kālarātri, the, 99-100, 103, 104, 111-112
Witches, description of, 103, 104, 104n; orgies held by, 104, 104n3, 106n; screams of, 60; society of, 104, 104n4, 108n; Sundaraka and the, 105-111
Witches' spells, magic power of, 103, 104; overheard by Sundaraka, 107
"With his breath" (asubhīk), 41n
Wives of the God of Love (Rati and Priti), 51, 51n; of Kāśyapa, Kadrū and Vīnatā, 160, 161; of Pāṇḍu, Priti or Kunti and Mādri, 16, 126, 127; as reward for good deeds, heavenly, 44, 45; of the Sultan Mahmūd Shāh, 301, 302; Vidūshaka collects his, 78, 79
Woman (zan), 162n; bribed to cause king's death, 309; cut open and child taken out, 229, 229n2; near the impaled man, weeping, 201; the poor Brāhmaṇ, 128, 129, 133-135
Woman in India, M. F. Billington, 163n
Women, hard treatment accorded to, in India, 18; harem the portion of the house allotted to the, 161n4; in India, hard work done by, 18; iron bracelet worn by Hindu married, 167; of Lāṭa, 93; whose love is scorned, 120-124; like moons, the faces of the, 50, 50n; with precious stones in their eyes, 306; rejected love of, 105, 109; on seeing the king and queens, excitement of, 50, 51; well cared for in Travancore, 19
Women in India, Otto Roths-feld, 163
Women of Turkey and their Folk-Lore, The, L. M. Garnett, 163n
Wood, the devādāru, 106
Work done by women in India, hard, 18
Workmanship of the anklet, heavenly, 204
Works of Albertus Magnus, 288, 288n; of Bynker-schock, 279; of Duns Scotus, 288, 288n; of Leibnitz, 278, 279; of Pufendorf, 279; of Wolff, 278, 279
World mountain, Meru the, 67n
Worlds, Goloka a region above the three, 242
Worm in the heart of a prince, a white, 296
Worship in the cemetery under a banyan-tree, 233
Worship, horses an object of, 57n
Worship of the sacred cow, 240; of trees and tree-spirits, 96n, 97n
Worshipper of Vishnu, Purāravas a devoted, 34
Worshippers of Siva, skull-bearing, 90, 90n3
Worshipping Gāṇeṣa, maidens obtain husbands by, 99, 100, 103; to obtain a son, 100, 102
Worshipping the gods naked, 98, 98n3
Wounds healed by a Yogi, 122
Wrath of Kālarātri, 105, 109; of Śiva, fire of the, 66
Wrath one of the six faults of man, 106, 106n3
 Wrestler from the Deccan, 200
Writers, dittany in the works of classical, 295n
Würfelspiel im alten Indien, Lüders, 232n
Y Cymrodor, "The Legend of the Oldest Animal," Cowell, 190n
Years of longevity foretold by number of horizontal marks on forehead, 73n
Yule-tide Stories, Thorpe, 76n, 80n, 190n
Zeitschrift für deutsches Altertum, "Pseudo - Aristotelisches Steinbuch von Lüttich," 299n
Zeitschrift der deutschen morgenländischen Gesellschaft, Gutschmid in, 312n² Zeitschrift für Ethnologie, Virchowin, 308n²; "Bericht "Zoroastrian, etc."—cont.
Zeitschrift—continued über verschiedene Volksstämme in Vorderindien," F. Jagor, 166
Zoological Mythology, De Gubernatis, 57n¹, 127n²
Zoological Society, 312n¹
Soc., 39n¹
Gesell., 232n
Zur Volkskunde, Liebrecht, 39n², 106n⁴, 131n¹
Central Archaeological Library,
NEW DELHI

Call No. Saeka/Some 1TP 47825

Author— Sonadevi's

Title "A book that is shut is but a block"

"A book that is shut is but a block"

CENTRAL ARCHAEOLOGICAL LIBRARY
GOVT. OF INDIA
Department of Archaeology
NEW DELHI

Please help us to keep the book clean and moving.