GOVERNMENT OF INDIA

ARCHÆOLOGICAL SURVEY OF INDIA

ARCHÆOLOGICAL LIBRARY

ACCESSION NO. 7344
CALL No. 294.309 Dut

D.G.A. 79

EARLY MONASTIC BUDDHISM

VOLUME II

EARLY MONASTIC BUDDHISM

VOLUME II

BY

NALINAKSHA DUTT,

M.A., B.L., P.H.D. (Cal.), D.LITT. (Lond.),

Premchand Roychand Scholar -Lecturer, Post-graduate Department of Pali and Ancient Indian History & Culture, Calcutta University; Philological Secretary, Royal Asiatic Society of Bengal

> 294.309 Dut

7344

CALCUTTA

1945

CENTRAL ARCHAEO O IGAL

LIBRY Y NEW 106 MI

ACC 22.856

Da 294.309 Sut.

Date 7.3.1.3

Call V. 294.3 | Date

PREFACE

The three Buddhist Councils are the three landmarks in the history and development of early monastic Buddhism. In the first volume of this work, an attempt has been made to present the history and doctrines of early Buddhism as far as can be gathered from the Nikāyas and the Vinaya. This volume has been brought to a close with the account of the first Buddhist Council, in which the direct disciples of Buddha met together to ascertain and compile the scattered discourses of the Founder. Though a discordant note is perceptible in the proceedings of the first Council, the Sangha was able to maintain its concord at least ourwardly for about a century or a little less than a century. The disruptive forces were already at work within the Sangha and the Second Buddhist Council marked the complete cleavage of the Sangha into two groups, each of which again became divided into a few sub-groups. After the session of the second Council, the Sangha was no longer one but many, and each sub-Sangha considered itself independent and felt justified in giving its own interpretation to the teachings and disciplinary rules promulgated by the Teacher. Hence the history of Buddhism after the second Council is no longer the history of one group of thinkers but of the many groups of thinkers that came into being in the wake of the first cleavage. About a half of the present volume has therefore been devoted to the study and discussion of the materials available relating to the history, literature and doctrines of the many groups and subgroups. This has been followed up by four chapters, the first dealing with the gradual change of relation of laity to the church, the second with the career of the religion during the regime of the Mauryas particularly Aśoka, the third with Aśoka's Dhamma and the fourth with the third Buddhist Council which marked the climax of sectarian differences and an effort of the Theravadins to propagate their point of view about Buddha's teachings in the different parts of India. This volume has been brought to a close with an analysis of the popular features which the religion incorporated in the pre-Aśokan and post-Aśokan period, thus paving the way for the advent of Mahāyānism.

For the convenience of the general reader not acquainted with the phraseology of the Buddhist texts, an exhaustive index of the Pāli and Sanskrit words with their nearest English renderings has been added to this volume. There is also a general index of both the volumes. Owing to the difficulties due to the last world-war there has been some delay in printing the second volume. I must again thank Mr. P. Das, Manager, Indian Historical Quarterly, for seeing this volume through the Press and preparing the two indexes.

N. Dutt

CONTENTS

CHAPTER	1:	From Ajātasattu to Nagadāsaka	1-4
		Udāyiblradda, 1 ←Anuruddha's son Muṇḍa, 3 —Nāgadāsaka, 4
CHAPTER	И:	Disruptive Forces in the Buddhist Church	5-11
		Story of Kosambi, 6 —Episode of Deva- datta, 6 —Apprehensive statements in the Nikāyas, 7 —Definition of Sangha- bheda, 9 —Differences in the first- Council Proceedings, 10.
CHAPTER	Ш:	Probable Causes for Dissensions in the Sangha	12-21
		Absence of Supreme head of the Church, 12 —System of specialisation in differ- ent branches of Buddhist literature, 14 —Latitude allowed in discipline, 18 —Austerities made optional, 20 Faith instead of moral practices, 20.
CHAPTER	IV:	From Kālāsoka to Nanda Principal Centres of Buddhism, 27.	22-30
CHAPTER	V:	Second Buddhist Council  The Story, 32 —Time and Site, 33  —No President, 34 —Ten un-Vinayie	31-46 acts, 34 —Five Propositions of Maha- deva, 41 —Conclusion, 42-
CHAPTER	VI:	Appearance of the Buddhist Schools of Thoughts	47-50

CHAPTER VII: Schools of Groups I & II: Their History & Literature ... 51-61
Their origin & literature, 53 —Language of the Mahāsanghika-Pitaka, 57 —Principal Seats of the Schools, 58.

CHAPTER VIII (A): Doctrines of Group I Schools ... 61-73

Mahāsanghikas & Lokottaravādins, 62

—other opinions, 68.

CHAPTER VIII (B): Doctrines of Group II Schools 74-110

Is Buddha human? 74 -Are Bodhisattvas average beings? 81 -Arc Arhats fully emancipated? 84 -Can there be retrogression of Arhats, Srotaapannas and other Phalasthas? 90 -Do the Atthamakas have anusaya and pariyutthana? 92 -Are anusaya and paryayasthana associated with mind or not? 93 -Can the Atthamakas have Saddbindriya? of -Is utterance of dukkbu possible in meditation, and does it help perception of the truths? 97 -How Vijnanas function? 99 -How many Avyākatas are there? How many Asamskrtadbarmas are there? 102 -Other doctrines, 103 -Doctrines of the Saila Schools only, 104 -Nirvāna in Nāgārjunikonda inscription, 106 -Doctrines of the Bahuśrutiyas only, 107 - Doctrines of the Prajnaptivadins only, 108 -Doctrines of the Rajagirikas and the Siddhatthikas, 100 -Doctrines of the Vetulyakas only, 110

CHAPTER IX: Doctrines of Group III Schools ... 111-173

The Mahisasakas, Sarvastivadins Dharmaguptakas, and other schools, 111 -The Earlier Māhīšāsakas, 112 -Doctrines of the earlier Mahisasakas, 114 -The Later Mahisasakas, 117 -The Sarvāstivāda, 117 —Succession of Teachets, 118 -Geographical Expansion, 122 -Buston's information about the School, 123 -Language and Literature, 124 -Vinaya, 128 -Abbidharma, 130 -Doctrines: Sabbam arthi, 137 -Maitri and Karuna, 147 Arbats, 148 —Samyakatvanyāma, 152 -Anupubbābhisamaya, 154 -Puthujjana, Laukikamārga or Laukikāgradharma, 157 - Anusaya and Paryavasthāna, 159 —Meditation, 159 —Vijāana, 161 - Avyākrta, Asamskrta and Antarābhava, 161 —Other opinions, 162 -The Dharmaguptas, 162 -Doctrines, 164 -The Kāśyapiyas, 165 -Doctrines, 166 -The Samkantikas or Sautrāntikas, 166 - Doctrines, 166 -Kośa on the Sautrantika doctrines, 167 -The Haimavatas, 169 -Doctrines, 171 -The Uttarapathakas, 171.

CHAPTER X: Doctrines of Group IV Schools ... 174-198

The Vätsiputriya-Sämmitiyas, Dharmottariyas and other Schools, 175

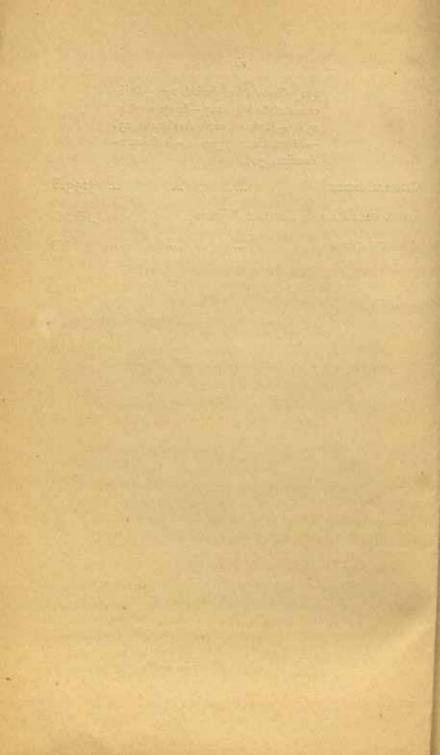

—Doctrines, 176—Other doctrines, 194

—Dhammuttariya, Bhadrayaniya and Chan, nagarika, 195—Vibhajyavada,

CHAPTER XI	: Doctrines of Group V Schools 199-20 Sthaviravāda or Theravāda, 199 —Centres of popularity, 201 —Language, 202 —Literature, 203 —Doctrines, 203.
CHAPTER XII	: Place of Laity in Early Buddhism 207-23  The Three Parisās, 210 —Aims and objects of Gahapatis, 211 —Discourses to Gahapatis, 213 —Gahapatānī, 217  Upāsakas and upāsikās, 220 —Lay-devotees and monks, 225 —Uposatha of the Upāsakas, 226 —Teaching im- parted to lay-devotees, 228 —Upā- saka's spiritual attainments, 232.
CHAPTER XIII;	The Mauryas and Buddhism 239-257  Candragupta, 239 —Bindusāra, 241  —Aśoka, 242 —Buddhist-Sanskrit Traditions, 243 —Pāli Traditions, 248  —The two traditions compared, 251  —Aśoka's successors, 253 —Jalauka, 255 —Daśaratha, 255, —Sampadi, 255  —Puṣyamitra, 256
CHAPTER XIV:	Aśoka's Dhamma 258-264
CHAPTER XV:	Third Buddhist Council 265-274  The Traditional account, 267 —Propagation of the religion, 270.
CHAPTER XVI:	Popular Buddhism 275-313  Pre-Aśokan Period, 276 — Ecclesiastical Rituals, 276 — Worship of Cetiya and Stūpa 282 — Four places of Pilgrimage, 284 — Nirvāṇa through Faith, 285 — Relaxation of Disciplinary Rules, 290 —Post-Aśokan Period, 292 —Deification of Buddha, 293 —Image-worship, 296 —Jātakas and Avadānas, 298 —Pāramitā-cult, 300 —Bodhisattvadoctrine, 305.

GENERAL INDEX		 	315-328
INDEX OF PALI AND	SANSKRIT WORDS		329-347
Abbreviations			348-349

CHAPTER I

FROM AJATASATTU TO NAGADASAKA

In the history of Buddhism, the session of the First Buddhist Council coincides with the eighth year of king Ajātasattu's reign. Ajātasattu extended his father's dominion beyond Magadha and ruled over Anga, Kāšī and the states of the Vajjian confederacies.\(^1\) The Buddhist traditions are unanimous in stating that Ajātasattu in his early days was not very well-disposed towards Buddha and his religion, but later on he changed and became a patron of the religion, and whole-heartedly lent his support to the session of the First Council.

In the Mahāvamsa<sup>2</sup> and the Mañjuśri-mūlakalpa<sup>3</sup> (henceforth abbreviated as Mmk.), Ajātasattu's enthusiasm for rendering service to the new religion is referred to but there is no evidence to show that his interest for the propagation of the religion was anything notable.

UDAYIBHADDA

According to the Buddhist and Jain traditions, though not according to the Purāṇas,4 Ajātasattu was succeeded by his son

1 See Buddhist India, ch. 1; H. C. Raychaudhuri, Political History of Ancient India, 3rd ed., p. 140. Maiijušrimūlakalpa, p. 604.

2 In the Vamsatthappakāsini, (p. 145), it is pointed out that Ajātasattu repaired the 18 great monasteries of Rājagaha.

3 Mmk., p. 603:

मासनाथे तु बुवानां कारविष्यति अर्थ हो: । सहाराजाजातविष्यातो मामधेसी नराविषः ॥

4 Raychandhuri, op. cit., p. 143-

Udāyibhadda. He ruled for 16 years. The Mmk. says that like his father he was not only enthusiastic about the religion but also had the sayings of Buddha collected.2 In the same text3 again, it is stated that the religion would decline after Buddha's death, the kings would be fighting with one another, and the monks would busy themselves with various secular matters, find fault of one another, and lack in selfrestraint. The monks and men would be demoralised, indulge in false disputations, and become jealous of one another. The non-Buddhists would gain the upper hand and the people would revert to Brāhmanism and take to animal killing and such other evil practices. If this self-contradictory statement of the Mmk. be considered along with the discreet silence of the Ceylonese chronicles about the activities of Udayibhadda, it seems that the cause of Buddhism found little favour with the king. The text adds that there would be, however, some good men, gods and beings other than human, who would continue to worship the relics, and though the religion would be on the wane, there

1 20 years according to the Mmk., p. 604. Prof. Chattopadhyaya assigns to him a reigning period of 25 years.

Recently Prof. K. Chattopadhyaya has re-examined the question of succession of the kings of Magadha and arrived at the conclusion that Darkaka was an alternative name of Udāyi as Śrenika was of Bimbisāra and Kunika of Ajātaśatru. (See Proc. of the Indian History Congress, Lahore, 1940, pp. 140-7). Prof. Bhandarkar identifies Darśaka with Nāgadāsaka. Cf. Divyāvadāna, p. 369.

2 Mmk., p. 604:-

तस्थापि सुतो राजा उकारास्त्रः प्रकोति तः। भविष्यति तदा चित्रं गासनाधे च उद्यतः ॥ तदेतत् प्रवचनं गास्तु लिखापयिष्यति विचरम्। पूजांच सहतों करवा दिक समनान् नयिष्यति॥ would be a least eight distinguished monks1 with Rāhula as the chief to protect the religion.

<sup>3</sup> Mmk., p. 597-8.

Buston<sup>2</sup> writes that the guardianship of the religion was entrusted by the Teacher to (Mahā) Kāśyapa, who in turn entrusted it to Ānanda. Both Kāśyapa and Ānanda passed away during the life-time of Ajātasattu. Ānanda charged his disciple Sāṇavāsika to protect the religion after his demise and to ordain, in course of time, Upagupta of Mathurā. He foretold that, according to the prophecy of the Teacher, Upagupta would become a Buddha but not with all the characteristics of a Sambuddha.

Just before his demise. Ananda also ordained 500 Brāhmanical anchorites with Madhyāntika at their head, and entrusted him with the propagation of the religion in Kashmir. The episode of Madhyāntika and his activities in Kashmir do not find any mention in the Ceylonese chronicles.

ANURUDDHA'S SON MUNDA

Udāyibhadda, after a region of 16 years, was succeeded by his son Anuruddha whose period of reign along with that of his son Munda was very short, being only 8 years in all. In the Dioyāvadāna<sup>3</sup> king Munda is described as the son of Udāyibhadda, and no mention is made of Anuruddha. In the r The list of monks given elsewhere is as follows:—

Mmk., p. 64: Săriputra, Maudgalyāyana, Mahākāsyapa, Subhūti, Rāhula, Nanda, Bhadrika, Kaphina.

Ibid., p. 111: Sārīputra, Maudgalyāyana, Gavāmpati, Piņdola-Bharadvāja, Pilindavatsa, Rāhula, Mahākāsyapa, Ānanda

2 Obermiller's Translation of Buston's History of Buddhism (henceforth abbreviated as Buston), II, p. 88.

3 Dioyāvadāna, p. 369

Anguttara Nikāya, king Muṇḍa is mentioned as approaching bhikkhu Nārada on the death of his queen Bhaddā. He listened to a discourse of bhikkhu Nārada delivered at Pāṭaliputta on the impermanence of worldly things. In the Jaina tradition preserved in the Parisistaparvan (ch. vi), it is stated that a prince in the guise of a Jaina novice killed Udāyin. Prof. Chattopadhyaya surmises that this novice might be king Muṇḍa.<sup>2</sup>

NĀGADĀSAKA

King Munda was succeeded by his son Nagadasaka, who ruled for 24 years. With Nagadasaka ended the rule of the line of kings that commenced with Bimbisara. In the Ceylonese chronicles, all the successors of Bimbisara are described as patricidal (pitughātakavaṃsa); how far this statement is reliable remains yet to be examined, but it seems that the Buddhists were not in much favour of these kings, and evidently, as the Mmk. says, Buddhism was on the wane all along this period of about half a century. Madhyāntika's departure to Kashmir and his attempt to propagate Buddhism far away from Magadha is also an indirect hint to the unpopularity of the religion in the province of its origin.

Bimbisāra-Ajātaśatru-Udāyibhadra-Muṇda-Kākavarṇi-Sahali-Tulakuci-Mahāmandala-Prasenajit-Nanda-Vindusāra-Susima-Aśoka.

<sup>1</sup> Augustara, III, pp. 57f.

<sup>2</sup> K. Chattopadhyaya, op. cit.

<sup>3</sup> The Dioyāvadāna (p. 369) says that Munda's son was Kākavarni. In the Ašokāvadāna and Dioyāvadāna the line of kings is given as follows:—

CHAPTER II

DISRUPTIVE FORCES IN THE BUDDHIST CHURCH

If the suttas in the Nikāyas and the rules in the Vinaya, the compilation of a greater portion of which may be placed during the reign of Ajātasattu and his successors, be scrutinised, it will be found that the disruptive forces were already at work within the Sangha even at the time of Ajātasattu, i.e., soon after Buddha's death. These forces were not totally absent during the life-time of Buddha as is evidenced by the story of Kauśambi and the episode of Devadatta. In the Nikāyas¹ also appear a few apprehensive statements regarding the possibility of dissensions in the Sangha and the condemnation of sanghabheda as one of the five extreme offences like patricides, matricides and so forth. In the Vinaya, there are elaborate directions as to when a dissension among the monks should be regarded as a regular or an irregular sanghabheda. In the proceedings of the First Council also, is noticeable a rift in the lute in the refusal of Purāṇa of Dakkhiṇāgiri to accept in toto the texts adopted by Mahākassapa and his followers as Buddhavacana. His insistence on the introduction of a few disciplinary rules clearly shows a lack of unanimity among the monks immediately after Buddha's death.2

<sup>1</sup> Majjhima, III, p. 65; Mahavagga, X. 3. 1; Kathavatthu, <sup>2</sup> See my Early Monastic Buddhism (henceforth abbreviated as EMB.), I, p. 331-2.

The story of Kosambī

At Kosambī, there were two teachers, one a Dhammadhara and the other a Vinayadhara, both imparting instructions in their respective subjects to two different groups of students. One day the Dhammadhara teacher committed a very light offence through inadvertence and when pointed out he expressed regret for it, but this was talked about by the Vinayadhara teacher among his students and lay-devotees. The students and lay-admirers of the Dhammadhara teacher became offended at this provocative attitude of the Vinayadhara teacher and his followers, and there was a sharp cleavage not only between the two groups of students but also between their respective lay-devotees. Buddha intervened, and at first failed to make up the difference, and it was out of sheer disgust that he preferred to retire to the forest to be served by an elephant than by quarrelling people of the world. At this attitude of the Teacher, the quarrelling teachers, students and lay public came to their senses and settled their dispute.1 This episode cannot strictly be called a sanghabheda, but it shows the possibility of dissensions in the Sangha.

The episode of Devadatta

The episode of Devadatta is almost a sanghabheda though it is not recognised as such in the Vinaya. Devadatta was an advocate for more austere discipline and requested the Teacher to make the following five rules compulsory for all monks<sup>2</sup>:—

t Mabāvagga, X; Majjbima, Kosambisutta; Dhammapadaṭṭha-katbā, Kosambivattha. In the Gilgit ms. of the Mūlasarvāstivāda Vinaya, the story remains substantially the same with slight variations in geographical details.

<sup>2</sup> Cullavagga, vii. 3. 14; Jātakas, I, p. 34.

That the monks

- (i) should live all their life in the forest:
- (ii) subsist solely on doles collected out-doors;
- (iii) dress themselves in rags picked out of dust-heaps;
- (iv) dwell always under a tree and never under a roof;
- (v) never ear fish or flesh.

Buddha could not agree with Devadatta. He believed more in person's own initiative than in obligatory rules, and so he left to the monks the option of observing the rules. This was too much for Devadatta, who departed to Gayasisa with a number of disciples who supported him. It is said that at the instance of Buddha, Sārīputta and Moggallāna later on won them over to Buddha's side.

Apprehensive statements in the Nikāyas

Though Buddha did not admit that there was any dissension in his Sangha, he was fully conscious of the possibility of such dissensions. It is clear from his sayings here and there that he strongly apprehended dissensions among his followers. He laid stress upon the importance of samaggā parisā (concord in the sangha) and pointed out in one of his last discourses that so long as his disciples would perform the ecclesiastical functions in concord, the welfare of the Sangha was assured. Once Cunda and Ānanda approached him with the news of the death of Nigantha Nāṭaputta and informed him

r Yuan Chwang writes that he saw three Buddhist monasteries at Karnasuvarna, where, in accordance with the teaching of Devadatta, milk-products were not taken as food. Watters, II, pp. 191, 192. I-tsing states that milk is an unlawful food. See Takakusu, I-tsing, p. 43.

about the quarrels that immediately followed his death among his disciples. Buddha assured them that among his disciples there was no disagreement as far as his fundamental teaching, consisting of the 37 Bodbipakkbiya dhammas,1 was concerned. There might be, after his death, he said, some differences of opinion relating to abhi-dhamma (atireka-dhamma = minor points of doctrine),2 ajjhājiva (minor rules of livelihood) and adhi-pātimokkha (minor rules of discipline) bur these should be treated as negligible (appamattake), but should there be any differences relating to the fruits (magga), path (patipada) or the congregation (sangba), it would be a matter of regret and cause harm to the gods and the people.3 In differences of minor matters, as mentioned above, his instruction was that the erring monks should be politely pointed out that they were putting a different interpretation on a text or misreading a text, and that in the interest of the Saigha, they should give it up; for practical purposes, he suggested, that a sane and reasonable member among the erring monks should be selected for the purpose." In the Sanghādisesa section of the Pātimokkha appear similar instructions (vide rules 10-11) with the addition that if the erring monk or monks do not change their views, he or they should be treated as guilty of the Sanghadisesa offence. In the Anguttaras there is a reference to Ananda complaining Viz., (i) four satipatțhānas; (ii) four sammāppadhānas; (iii) four iddhipādas; (iv) five indriyas; (v) five balas; (vi) seven bojjhangas; (vii) eight-fold path. See Digba, xvi, 50; Majjhima, II, pp. 77, 103, 104; Lalitavistara (Bibl, Ind.), pp. 34-37; Sangiti-paryāya in IPTS., 1904-5, pp. 71, 75.

<sup>2</sup> Atthasalini, p. 2.

<sup>3</sup> Majjbima, II, p. 245; cf. Digha, III, p. 117f.

<sup>4</sup> Majjhima, II, pp. 238-9. 5 Anguttara, II, p. 239.

to Buddha that Anuruddha's disciple Bāhiyo was in the habit of picking up quarrels among the monks and causing dissension in the Sangha while his teacher would not say a word to him. Buddha pacified Ananda by saying that Anuruddha had never interfered in Sangha matters, and that all such disputes had so far been settled by himself or Sariputta and Moggallana.

Failing to make up differences by polite persuasion, Buddha's instruction was to take resort to the seven methods of adhikaranasamathas, defined in the Majjhima and the Patimokkha." Buddha attributed all quarrels to selfish motives of the monks or their possession of certain wicked qualities. He held out the prospect of a happy and glorious life like that of the god Brahma to a monk in after-life as the result of any act of his that would serve to re-unite the groups of monks separated from one another, while he declared that the monk sowing dissension among his brethren is doomed to perdition for an acon.2

Definition of Sanghabheda

Every quarrel or difference of opinions among the bhikkhus was not characterised by Buddha as a sanghabheda. It is thus described in the Vinaya: "For not only is a formal putting forward and voting on the false doctrine essential to schism as distinct from mere disagreement, but the offending bhikkhus must also be quite aware that the doctrine so put forth is wrong, or at least doubtful, and also that the schism resulting from his action will be or will probably be disastrous to the Dhamma- In other words, the schism must be brought about deliberately by putting forward a doctrine known to be false, or at least doubtful, or with the express intention or object of thereby injuring the Dhamma."1 This definition obviously represents the opinion of the conservative school of the Theravadins who usually looked upon all those who differed from them with an eye of suspicion and ascribed an evil motive to their entertainment of the dissenting views. It is very likely that the dissenters held an honest belief that their views were devoid of any evil motive of injuring the Dhamma. It will, therefore, be apparent from a neutral standpoint that evil intention is not an essential factor of the sanghabheda. The real essentials are:-(1) belief in a dissentient religious view regarding either one or more points of faith or discipline; (2) entertainment of the dissenting view by eight, or more than eight, fully ordained monks; (3) the division taken among the aforesaid eight or more monks must show a majority on the side of the dissenters. When the disunion is confined to eight monks, it is called Sangharāji. This restriction as to number forming the essential of sangharāji shows that it might at any moment develop into a sanghabheda, by drawing an additional monk into the difference. Of course, bonafide belief and the full ordination of monks are necessary requisites.2

<sup>1</sup> See EMB., I, p. 307-8.

<sup>2</sup> Angustara, V, pp. 73, 75, 78; Cullavagga, vii. 5

Differences in the First Council Proceedings

In the proceedings of the First Council it will be observed that Mahākassapa was keen on securing the approval of all the senior monks, particularly, of Gavampati and Purāṇa, of the texts settled by his Council as Buddhavacana.<sup>1</sup> Gavampati remained neutral, i.e., he did not wholeheartedly accepted the proceedings of the Council as final while Purāṇa expressed his inability to accept the same as the words of the Teacher.<sup>2</sup> He further insisted on the incorporation into the Vinaya of eight rules relating to food.<sup>2</sup> The Mahīśāsaka Vinaya not only upheld these eight rules as pointed out by Prof. Przyluski<sup>4</sup> and also gave special recognition to Purāṇa as one of the foremost teachers of the time.

I Vinaya Texts (S. B. E.), pt. iii, p. 271 n.

<sup>2</sup> Cullavagga, vii, 5, 1; Milindapañha, p. 108: "No layman can create a schism, nor a sister of the order, no one under preparatory instruction, nor a novice of either sex. It must be a bhikkhu under no disability, who is in full communion and corresident" (S. B. E., vol. xxxv, p. 163).

All these testimonies clearly indicate that the seeds of dissensions had already been sown in the Sangha during Buddha's life-time and that these sprouted forth in full vigour in the second century after Buddha's demise.

<sup>1</sup> See EMB., I, p. 331-2.

<sup>2</sup> Cullavagga, si. t. 11.

<sup>3</sup> The eight rules (as translated by Suzuki from Chinese) are:

(i) cooking food indoors; (ii) cooking indoors; (iii) cooking of one' own accord; (iv) taking food of one's own accord; (v) receiving food when rising early in the morning; (vi) carrying food home in compliance with the wish of the giver; (vii) having miscellaneous fruits; and (viii) eating things grown in a pond.

<sup>4</sup> Przyluski, Le Concile de Rajagrha.

<sup>5</sup> See Infra, Ch. VII.

CHAPTER III

PROBABLE CAUSES FOR DISSENSIONS IN THE SANGHA

In the preceding chapter, it has been shown that disruptive forces were already at work within the Sangha during and immediately after Buddha's life-time. On scrutinizing these and the state of the Buddhist church as presented in the Nikāyas and the Vinaya, we may point out the following as the probable causes for dissensions in the Sangha:—

Absence of the supreme head of the church

Buddha thought that the prescription of heavy punishments for schisms in the church would check them effectively and that his Dhamma and Vinaya were comprehensive enough to keep intact the religion established by him, obviating thereby the appointment of the supreme religious head. He magnified the unaided strength of dhamma and vinaya, and directed that his teachings would be the Teacher after his death. Vassakāta asked Ānanda whether any bhikkhu had been specified by Buddha as would after his death become the leader of men under whom everybody would seek shelter. Ānanda answered in the negative. He asked again whether any bhikkhu had been selected by the Sangha as would become their leader etc. To this also Ānanda answered in the negative. Vassakāta was curious to learn the cause of the concord prevail-ng in the church inspite of there being no leader (lit. refuge). Ananda replied "We are not without a refuge (appatisarana), dhamma is our refuge. There is a treatise called Pātimokkha which has been formulated by the omniscient Teacher and which all the monks living in the same parish (gāmakkhetta) have to recite in a monastery where they assemble on the uposatha days. Should there occur any difference or doubt in the recitation, the bhikkhus present explain them in accordance with the dhamma (hence they have their refuge as dhamma)."1 In answer to another question put by Vassakāra, Ānanda explained that though there was no supreme head of the fraternity but there was in each parish a qualified head who was respected by the people under his charge and whose guidance was strong enough to keep the great many parishes connected together in religious concord. This conversation makes it clear that each parish was under the control of the seniormost and the best qualified monk that the parish could furnish.2

<sup>1</sup> Majjbima, II, p. 105.

<sup>2</sup> Digha, II, p. 154: Yo mayā dhamma ca vinayo ca desito paññatto, so vo mam* accayena Satthā.

In the Pātimokkha assemblies, the monks interpreted the terse expressions of the Teacher in different ways and intro-

1 Majjhima, III, pp. 7ff.

2 In the Mahāparinibbāna Suttanta (Digha, II, p. 77) it is enjoined upon the bhikkhus that they should offer due respect to the Sangha-pitara or Sangha-parināyaka (the head of the parish) who should be bhikkhus of long standing and experience for the well-being of this Sangha. See also Anguttara, IV, p. 21; V, p. 353.

Childers in his Pāli-Dictionary (s. v. saigha) says that a Saighatthera is usually selected as the President of an assembly. He cites, for instance, Kassapa, the then Saighatthera was the President of the First Council. He also points out that a Saighatthera is not always the one who is the longest ordained for Sabbakāmin who was the longest upasampanna bhikkhu was not the President of the Second Council. duced additional material in the interpretations, and passed them in the name of Buddha. This happened in most of the parishes scattered over the whole of northern India. There was none at that time in the whole of the Buddhist community who could dissolve the numberless divergences thus originated into one uniform whole and convert the threatening centrifugal forces then at work into centripetal, conducive to the well-being of the whole Sangha.

Mahākassapa made an attempt to remedy this defect of the Sangha as a whole by convening a Conneil, but he was also not fully successful as pointed out above (p. 10-11).

System of specialisation in different branches of Buddbist literature

The Pali literature is replete with terms like (i) Suttantikas or masters of Suttanta (or the Sutta-pitaka); (ii) Vinayadharas or repositories of the rules of discipline (Vinaya-pitaka); (iii) Mātikādharas or those versed in mātikā (=abhidbamma); (iv) Dhammakathikas or the preachers of the Buddhist doctrine. In the Atthakathās again, appear further terms like Dīgha-bhāṇaka and Majjhima-bhāṇaka (reciters of the Dīgha and Majjhima Nikāyas).2

In those days, when writing was hardly used for putting on record the sayings and discourses of Buddha, the means for preserving and handing them down to posterity was recitation and memorization. This was akin to the method that had been in vogue in India from the earliest Vedic period, which also gave rise to the different Vedic schools. A similar cause produced a similar result among the Buddhists and we find that the memorizing of different portions of the Piţaka was entrusted to different sets of bodies hardened and separated from one another in course of time and bearing names descriptive of their functions.

<sup>1</sup> Digha, II, p. 125; Auguttara, I. p. 117.

<sup>2 -</sup> Sum. Vil., I, p. 15; Papañcasūdani, p. 79

In the account of the first Council it will be observed that Ananda was requested to recite the Suttas while Upāli the Vinaya. This would not have been the case if Ananda or Upāli was not generally famed for proficiency in the particular branches of the Pitaka. Elements of such specialisation can be noticed in the quarrel that took place between the dhamma-kathikas and the vinayadharas. Commonness of duties gave rise to unity among the dhammakathikas on one side and the vinayadharas on the other in such a marked way that each group made the cause of one individual member its common cause and participated in the dispute.

It is an interesting reading how arrangements of beds and seats were made for the residence of the bhikkhus. Dabba Mallaputta, it is said, made such an arrangement that the bhikkhus, adopting the same mode of life (sabbāgā), resided in the same place in order that the Suttantikas could recite suttantas among themselves while the Vinayadharas could discuss the t Vinaya, IV. 15. 4 (S. B. E. xiii, p. 339). "On the Pavāraṇā day the greater part of the night has passed away while the bhikkhus were in confusion: the bhikkhus were reciting the Dhamma, those versed in Suttantas were propounding the Suttantas, those versed in Vinaya were discussing the Vinaya, the Dhamma preachers were talking about the Dhamma".

In the Sam. Vil., I, p. 15, it is stated that the memorization of the Majihima-nikāya, Samyutta-nikāya and Anguttara-nikāya was entrusted to Sāriputta, Mahākassapa and Anuruddha respectively and their respective disciples.

<sup>2</sup> See above, p. 6.

<sup>3</sup> Vinaya, II, pp. 75. 76.

rules of discipline with one another, and the Dhammakathikas talk about the matters of doctrine. Instances are not rare of a feeling of rivalry among these bodies, each member of which wished and was pleased to see the body to which he belonged take precedence over other bodies in having seat or food in assemblies or in thanksgiving after a meal.<sup>1</sup>

These separate bodies, which existed for a particular function necessary for the whole Buddhist community, e.g., the preservation of a particular portion of the Pitaka by regular recitations, imbibed in course of time, doctrines, which could be looked upon as peculiar to the body holding them and in this way, the body developed into a separate religious school of Buddhism. Such instances are found in the Theravadins who had developed into such a school from the Vinayadharas, and the Sautrantikas from the Sautrantikas.

The crystallization of bodies happened not only for the preservation of literature but also for the grouping of monks around a noted teacher. Buddha awarded prominence to some of his disciples by extolling them for their attainment of proficiency in certain branches of the Buddhist dhamma. Of them the following may be mentioned:—(i) Sāriputta, the foremost of the highly wise (mahāpaññānam); (ii) Mahāmoggallāna, the foremost of the possessors of miraculous powers (iddhīmantānam); (iii) Anuruddha, the foremost of the possessors of divine eyes (dibba-cakkhukānam); (iv) Mahākassapa, the foremost of the followers of dhūta precepts (dhūtavādānam); (v) Punna Mantāniputta, the foremost of the preachers of dhamma (dhammakathikānam); (vi) Mahākaccāyana, the foremost of the expositors

<sup>1</sup> Cullavagga, IV, 6, 2; Mahavagga, IV, 15, 4

<sup>2</sup> Anguttara, I, p. 24.

(sankbittena bhāsitassa vitthārena attham vibhajantānam); (vii) Rāhula, the foremost of the students (sikkhākāmānam); (viii) Revata Khadiravaniya, the foremost of the forest-recluses (āraññikānam); (ix) Ānanda, the foremost of the vastly learned (bahussutānam). and (x) Upāli, the foremost of the masters of Vinaya (vinayadbarānam).

Buddha indirectly pointed out to his new disciples the preceptor most suited to each in view of his peculiar mental leanings. This practice led to the grouping of students around a teacher or his direct disciples, hence the remark dhātuso sattā samsandanti samenti¹ on the principle that like draws like. In the Samyutta Nikāya,² we read of ten chief theras, viz. Sāriputta, Moggallāna, Mahākotthita, etc., each having ten to forty disciples under their tution. Buddha on a certain occasion pointed out that the group of bhikkhus formed round each of these theras was possessed of the same special qualifications that characterised the thera himself. Thus the bhikkhus accompanying Sāriputta were mahāpaññāvantā, those accompanying Mahākassapa were dhūtavādā, those accompanying Devadatta were sinfully inclined (pāpiechā).

Yuan Chwang noticed about a thousand years later that on auspicious days the Abhidhammikas worshipped Săriputra, the Vinayists Upāli, the Srāmaņeras Rāhula, the Sūtraists Pūrņa Maitrāyaṇiputra, the Samādhists Mahāmoggallāna, the bhikkhunis Ānanda, the Mahāyānists Manjuśrī and other Bodhisattvas.

In the first four classes of bhikkhus, the aforesaid affinity between them and their leaders is obvious. In the next three classes, the affinity existed all the same though it may not be apparent on the face of it. For the Samādhists followed Mahāmoggallāna because he was the master of iddhi par excellence which could be obtained only through samādhi, and the bhikkhunīs followed Ānanda because to him the order of nuns owed its origin.

<sup>1</sup> Samyutta, II, p. 157. 2 Samyutta, II, pp. 155, 156.

<sup>3</sup> Watters, Yuan Chwang, I, p. 302.

The principal points of resemblance between the followers and their preceptors were the ties that bound them together but these were the points which constituted the features by which the chief qualities of the preceptors were distinguished. These distinctions among them did not lie in any differences of doctrines which they professed but in the degrees of proficiency attained by each, in particular directions of Buddhistic sādhana. But the divisions though not proceeding from radical differences in doctrine grew stereotyped in course of time, and fusion between them later on became an impossibility due to the separatist frame of mind that their existence as separate bodies naturally developed. Thus the division which had commenced without any doctrinal differences gradually gave rise to the latter and grew into full-fledged schools.

Latitude allowed in discipline

It has been already mentioned in connection with the episode of Devadatta<sup>1</sup> that Buddha allowed a certain amount of latitude to his disciples in the observance of Vinaya rules. He laid more emphasis on mental than on physical discipline. In his discussion with Upāli, a disciple of Nigantha Nāṭaputta, he pointed out that he considered manodanda as more important than kāyadanda in spiritual culture.1 In the Mahāparinibbānasutta, his direction regarding the abrogation of minor disciplinary rules clearly revealed his viewpoint in regard to external discipline.3 In short, in his estimation, pañña and citta practices were far more important than sīla observance.3 He realised the value of the latter for the new adepts but it was not the all and end all of his scheme of culture. From the history of the growth of the Vinaya code4 it will be observed how he made concessions after concessions for the physical comforts of his disciples. His code was not a hard and fast one. He made exceptions in favour of the bhikkhus who were placed at a disadvantage by reason of the locality in which they resided. In the border countries (paccantima janapada) such as Avantī, the converts were few and intractable, hence, Buddha at the request of Kaccayana and Punna Mantaniputta made some exceptions in their favour in regard to the rules for the formation of an assembly for ordaining monks, and the use of leather-made shoes and other articles, prohibited to the bhikkhus dwelling in the Middle country.5

Particularly noticeable is his reply to the Vajjiputtaka monk who expressed his difficulty in observing all the 250 rules of the Pātimokkha. Buddha said that he would be satisfied if the bhikkhu would practise the three Siksās, viz., adhisīla,

1 Majjhima, I, p. 372f. 2 Digha, II, p. 154. 3 See EMB., I, ch. XII. 4 EMB., I, ch. XVI.

5 For boundaries, see B. C. Law, Geography of Early Buddhism;

Vinaya, I, pp. 197-8; Divyāvadāna, p. 21.

6 Majjbima, II, pp. 8, 9. Cf. DbA., I, p. 334: 'Sekho' ti adhisīlasikkhā adhicittasikkhā adhipaññāsikkhā ti imā tisso sikkhā sīkkhaṇato sotāpattimaggattham ādim katvā yāva arahattamaggatthā sattavidho sekho..... adhicitta and adhipaññā, by which he meant the minute observance of the discipline envisaged in the atthanka-magga.

Austerities made optional

From his personal experiences Buddha recommended to his disciples the middle path which eschewed austerities as a means of attaining the goal. Buddha himself led a life of severe austerity and he was convinced that such austerities could never fulfil his mission.1 For this reason one is expected that austere practices should not figure in his disciplinary code and this is actually a fact,2 but there are ample evidences to show that Buddha praised those ascetics who took to the dhūta precepts." Buddha yielded to the strong tendency of those disciples who believed in the efficacy of austerities and could not be satisfied with a religion barren of such practices. Mahākassapa, one of his most favourite disciples, was an advocate of austerities, and it was difficult for the Teacher not to comply with the wishes of disciples like him. The system of living a forest-life, therefore, came into vogue in the early days of Buddhism and so there are in the Vinaya special rules for the arannakas. The arannakas were required to attend the fortnightly Patimokkha assemblies, but they were exempted from many formalities.

(v) Faith instead of moral practices

It cannot be exactly determined when firm faith in Buddha, Dhamma and Sangha came to be recognised as a means to the attainment of Nirvana. In the Vatthūpamasutta, so much emphasis is laid on it, that a monk having firm faith in the

<sup>1</sup> Majjbima, I, p. 17.

<sup>2</sup> Vinaya, V, 131, 193.

<sup>3</sup> Anguttara, III, p. 344f.

Triratna is exempted from observing even the rules of food. This sutta further shows that a monk taking to faith need not practise the sīlas as recommended for the generality of monks.<sup>1</sup>

In view of what has been stated above, we may conclude that strict observance of the Vinaya rules was not in the Teacher's mind though after his demise his disciples made the most of same. In fact, they became more and more ritualistic and failed in using common discretion. A slight deviation from the Vinaya laws made them sinners though it mattered very little in spiritual advancement. The protest raised by the Mahāsanghikas had nothing untoward in it and the Theravādins, we may say, magnified them. We do not mean to justify laxity in discipline but when discipline ends in literal and superficial observance of a set of rules, one has the right to examine them on merits.

I See my paper in IHQ., vol. XVI: Place of Faith in Early Buddhism.

CHAPTER IV

FROM KĀLĀSOKA TO NANDA

The Bimbisāra (or Haryanka) line of kings ended with the reign of king Nāgadāsaka.¹ The throne was taken by his minister Susunāga, who according to the traditions preserved in the Uttaravihāra Aṭṭhakathā, was the son of a Licchavi prince of Vesāli by a courtezan.² As he was adopted by a minister, he came to be known as a minister's son. According to a late tradition preserved in the Mālālankāravatthu, Susunāga had his royal residence at Vesāli, to which place he later on transferred the capital from Rājagaha. He ruled for 18 years and is said to have humbled the Pradyota dynasty of Avantī.³ As far as the testimony of the Buddhist texts is concerned, no incident of note happened during his reign in the history of Buddhism.

Susunāga was succeeded by his son Kālāsoka of the Ceylonese chronicles or Kākavarņi of the Purānas. Most of the scholars are of opinion that the two names are of an identical person. The Aśokāvadāna places Kākavarņi after Munda<sup>4</sup> and makes no mention of Kālāsoka while the Mañjuśrīmūlakalpa speaks of Viśoka as the successor of Susunāga. Tāranātha has made a confusion of the Emperor Aśoka with Kālāsoka and makes Viśoka a son of Aśoka. In the Kathāvatthu-aṭṭhakathā (p. 2) he is called simply Aśoka. The outstanding event that

<sup>1</sup> See above, p. 4.

<sup>2</sup> Vamsatthappakāsini, I, p. 155.

<sup>3</sup> See Raychaudhury, Political History, (1932), p. 147.

<sup>4</sup> See above, p. 3-4.

took place in the history of Buddhism during his reign is the session of the Second Buddhist Council (see infra).

According to the Mahābodhivaṃsa, Kālāsoka was succeeded by his ten sons: Bhadrasena, Koraṇḍavarṇa, Maṅgura, Sabbañjaha, Jālaka, Ubhaka, Sañjaya, Koravya, Nandivardhana, and Pañcamaka, who ruled simultaneously for 22 years. This tradition, however, is not corroborated by other Buddhist sources, according to which Kālāsoka or Viśoka was succeeded by his son Sūrasena, who reigned for 17 years.<sup>1</sup>

Sūrasena supported the bhiksus of the four quarters for three years, and offered a hundred kinds of requisites to all caityas existing on the face of the earth.<sup>2</sup> Tāranātha makes Arhat Sāṇavāsika and Arhat Yaśa contemporaries of Sūrasena and refers to the appearance of Mahādeva and his five propositions during his reign.

Sūrasena was succeeded by Nanda, who, according to Tāranātha,<sup>3</sup> was Sūrasena's son. The Mmk.<sup>4</sup> says that king Nanda was very powerful, maintained a large army and made Puspapura his capital. He, it is said, acquired wealth through magical means. Jayaswal<sup>5</sup> on the basis of the stanza in the Mmk.:

I Also called Ugrasena in the Mahābodhi-vaṃsa. Cf. Mmk., p. 611: तसाधानन्तरे राजा ग्रस्तेन: प्रकथाते।

2 Schiefner Tāranātha's Geschichte des Buddhismus, p. 50-51, The restoration from Tibetan may well be Śūrasena instead of Virasena. Cf. Mmk. p. 611:

तेनापि कारिता शासुः कारा सुमहती तदा। सुपैरलंकता सर्वा समुद्राना वसुन्धरा॥

3 Schiefner, op. cit., p. 52. King Nanda came of the Licchavi tribe, see p. 41.

4 Mmk., p. 611-612. 5 Imperial History of India, p. 14-

नीचमुख्यसमाख्यातो ततो लोके भविष्यति । तद्दनं प्राप्य मन्त्री सौ लोके पार्थिवतां गतः ॥

remarks that Nanda was at first a minister of the previous king and that he belonged to a low family but was the leading man of the community. By unexpected acquisition of wealth he became the king of the country. He entertained the bhiksus in Käśi for many years. King Nanda was surrounded by Brähmana ministers, on whom also he bestowed wealth. At the instance of his spiritual teacher (kalyāṇamitra) he offered several gifts to the caityas built on Buddha's relics. King Nanda ruled for 20 years and died as a true Buddhist at the age of sixty-six.

During the reign of Nanda, the bhikşu Nāga began to speak highly of the five propositions of Mahādeva, which led to the appearance of four schools. In this connection, we may refer to the statement of Tāranātha that during the reign of Aśoka (i.e. Kālāsoka) appeared a brāhmaṇa Vatsa in Kashmir who was learned but very wicked. He took pleasure in preaching the Ātmaka theory, travelled over all the countries and turned the simple people into his own teaching and caused a dissension in the Sangha. It is a well known fact that the Vātsiputrīyas were one of the four schools, and probably this school came into existence at an earlier date but was recognised as a separate school at the time of king Nanda.

Tāranātha as well as Bu-ston speak of the successor of Nanda as his son Mahāpadma, who, they state, was devoted to Buddhism and furnished the monks at Kusumapura with all their necessaries of life. They further state that Vararuci and

<sup>1</sup> Schiefner, op. cit., p. 53.

<sup>3</sup> Mmk., p. 612.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid.

<sup>2</sup> Mmk., p. 611-2.

<sup>4</sup> Schiefner, op. cit.

<sup>6</sup> Schiefner, op. cit., p. 55.

Pāṇini, who were his father's ministers, continued to be his ministers, but Vararuci was hated and ultimately killed by him. As an atonement for the sin of killing a brāhmaṇa, 24 monasteries were erected by him. During his reign, Tāranātha states, Sthiramati, a disciple of Nāga,¹ caused further divisions in the Saṅgha by propagating his teacher's propositions.

Prof. Raichaudhury and other scholars place king Nanda after the reign of the sons of Kālāsoka, Jayaswal, on the basis of the Mmk., places Sūrasena after Kālāsoka. It may be that Sūrasena was another name of Bhadrasena, the first son of Kālāsoka. In the history of Buddhism we know that, after the session of the second council during the reign of Kālāsoka, dissensions arose in the Buddhist Sangha. Mahādeva's five propositions were regarded by Vasumitra and others as one of the causes of the dissensions. Mahādeva was followed by Nāga, who, in his turn, was followed by Sthiramati in the propagation of the five propositions. In view of this succession of teachers, it is quite probable that Kālāsoka was succeeded by Sūrasena, and Sūrasena by Nanda. Buston writes that troubles arose in the Buddhist Sangha 137 years after Buddha's parinibbana.2 This date coincides with the reign of Nanda and therefore his information as also of Taranatha that Surasena intervened between Kālāsoka and Nanda appears to be historical. It is quite likely that the Tibetan historians mistook the name Mahāpadma Nanda as names of two personages. Nanda and Mahāpadma, and made the latter a son of the former. It may be that king Nanda took the appellation Mahapadma some time after the commencement of his reign.

<sup>1</sup> See above, p. 24.

<sup>2</sup> Buston, II, p. 76.

The Mmk, and the Tibetan historians furnish us with interesting information regarding the time and activities of the famous grammarians Pāṇini and Vararuci. Regarding Pāṇini the texts mention that he was born at Bhīrukavana in the west (probably north-west) and that though he was a brāhmaṇa, he was strongly inclined to the Buddhist faith, and that he attained proficiency in grammar (śabdaśāstra) through the grace of Avalokiteśvara. He composed the well-known Pāṇinivyākaraṇa and ultimately attained Śrāvakabodhi. The date of Pāṇini is placed by Weber, Maxmüller, Keith, and several other scholars between 350 and 300 B.C., and this is also the time of the reigning period of king Nanda, hence the contemporaneity of Nanda and Pāṇini as stated by the Buddhist writers seems to be true.

Regarding Vararuci our information is that he was an erudite scholar and started writing explanatory śāstras on Buddha's words. Prof. Belvalkar¹ has adduced ample evidences to show that Vararuci was another name of Kātyāyana of the Aindra School of grammarians, which school, Tāranātha says, was believed to be earlier than the Pāṇinian school. To this school also belongs Kaccāyana's Pāli grammar. Vararuci's interest in writing exegetical literature is also referred to by Belvalkar.² In view of all these, it will not be wide of the mark if we hold that Vararuci was also a contemporary of king Nanda and Pāṇini and that he like his famous namesake Mahākaccāyana specialised in writing commentaries on Buddha's enigmatic expressions. Tāranātha suggests that the writing of Vibhāṣā-śāstras was commenced by Vararuci. It may be that Kātyāyana or Vararuci was the originator of the Sarvāstivāda school of Buddhism, which later on came to be known as the Vaibhāṣika school. From the above account, we may conclude that dissensions in the Buddhist Sangha commenced in the reign of Kālāsoka and multiplied during the reigns of Sūrasena and Mahāpadma Nanda.

<sup>1</sup> Systems of Sanskrit Grammar, pp. 11, 27, 85.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., p. 84-

Principal centres of Buddhism

The names of monks and the geographical information as furnished by the accounts of the Second Council throw interesting light on the extent of the area which came under the influence of the Buddhist church. The leading monks of the time were counted as eight, viz., Sabbakāmī, Sāļha, Revata, Khujjasobhita, Yasa, Sambhūta Sānavāsī, Vāsabhagāmika and Sumana.1 The first six were disciples of Ananda, and the remaining two of Anuruddha. Ananda died during the latter part of the reign of Ajātasattu, and so the age of his disciples at the time of the Second Council exceeded, in any case, 90 years. Sabbakāmī was then the Sanghatthera but Revata was the recognised leader. In the Sanskrit tradition, Sambhüta Sāṇavāsī gets more prominence as he, according to this tradition, was selected by Ananda as the monk to take charge of the religion after him. In the Chinese traditions, he is shown as taking the leading part in the deliberations of the Council. The Vesālians were monks of the eastern countries (pācīnakā) so also were Sabbakāmī, Sāļha of Sahajāti,2 Khujjasobhita and Vāsabhagāmika.¹ In Buston's account, Sabbakāmī is said to have been residing at Vesāli. Hiuen Tsang tells us that Khujjasobhita belonged to Pāṭaliputra while Sāļha came from Vesāli. It will be observed that Sāļha of Sahajāti or Vesāli was at first in an indecisive mood. King Kālāsoka also like Sāļha was at first in favour of the Vesālians, but later on, at the intervention of his sister Bhikkhunī Nandā, he changed towards the Westerners. In the early history of Buddhism, Vesāli is described as a town seething with non-Buddhistic thinkers and as a centre of the followers of Niganṭha Nāṭaputta, hence it is quite in keeping with the traditions of the country that non-orthodox Buddhists should find a footing there.

<sup>1</sup> Buston (II, p. 93) gives a slightly different list: Yasas, Sāḍha. Dhanika, Kubjita, Ajita, Sambhūta, Revata, <sup>2</sup> Sonaka, according to Buston, II, p. 93. Sahajāti is identified with Bhitā 9 miles S.S.W. from Allahabad. Sir John Marshall identifies Sahajāti with Bhita on the basis of the inscription: "Māgadhī Sahajātiye nigamasa". See N. N. Ghosh, Early His. of Kausambi, p. 89.

Yasa, the most active figure in the account and the one who started the commotion, hailed, according to Hinen Tsang, from Kosala. He left Vesāli for Kosambī, where he organised a party with sixty monks of Pāvā (Pāveyyakā)² and eighty monks of Avantī, all of the Western countries.³ He proceeded with them first to Sambhūta Sāṇavāsī of Mathurā and met him at Ahoganga.⁴ Accompanied by him they went to meet Revata, another Westerner, belonging to Kanauj and met him at t Buston (p. 93) gives the following geographical information: i Sarvakāmin of Vaisāli ii Yasas of Dhanika

iii Sādha of Sonaka

iv Dhanika of Samkäsya (in Magadha, see Przyluski, Le Concile de Rājagaha, p. 286)

v Kubjita of Pāṭaliputra vi Ajita of Srughna vii Sambhūta of Mahiṣmati viii Revata of Sahajāti.

2 Pātheyyakā is another reading.

3 Vamsatthappakāsini, p. 166: Pacchimikā yeva Pāveyyakā.

4 Ahoganga is a mountain near the sources of the Ganges. Moggaliputta Tissa resided there immediately before the Third Council see B. C. Law, Geog. of Early Buddhism, p. 40. Soreyya. The fourth Western monk was Sumana. Thus we see that there was a clear geographical division among the monks. The opposition to the Vesālian practices was started by Yasa of Kosala, and supported by Revata of Soreyya (Kanauj), Sambhūta Sāṇavāsī of Mathurā, and Sumana, whose native place is not mentioned anywhere. This testifies to the fact that the monks of the Western countries, viz. Kauśāmbī, Avantī Mathurā were more orthodox in their observance of the Vinaya rules as adopted by the Theravādins. In the deliberations of the Council, Sabbakāmī, though the Saṅghatthera, was not given the lead, and this also proves the lack of his whole-hearted support to the agitation started by Yasa. Sālha's attitude, as mentioned above, was at first indecisive and similar probably was also the view of Khujjasobhita of Pāṭaliputra.

Prof. Przyluski also has noted the geographical division of monks in his Concile de Răjagrha (p. 308-9) and remarks that there were definitely three centres, viz., Vaišalī, Kaušambī and Mathurā. Kaušambī and all south-western countries became later on the seat of the Theravadins while Mathura and the north-western countries of the Sarvastivadins. The Westerners of this Council were therefore the group of monks who came to be later on known as the Sthaviras and Sarvastivadins while the Easterners, who made their seat at Vaišalī, were the Mahāsanghi-kas and their offshoots. Whatever may have been the differences

1 Dhanika, according to Buston (II, p. 91).

2 Kauśāmbi is identified with the ruins at Kośam, 38 miles from Allahabad above the Yamunā. Watters, II, p. 75.

 3 In the Sarvästivädin Vinaya account of the Kausambi dispute, one party is described as Vesälian and the other Kausambian.

4 Vaisāli is identified with Besarh in the Muzaffarpur district of Behar.

between the Easterners and Westerners, it is apparent that Buddhism was prevalent at the time all over the central belt of India from Avantī¹ to Vaiśālī and from Mathurā to Kauśāmbī. The chief centre of Buddhism, it seems, was shifted at that time from Rājagṛha to Pāṭaliputra which became then also the royal seat of the rulers. The Mahāsanghikas made Pāṭaliputra their chief centre.²

<sup>1</sup> Avanti in ancient times was divided into two parts, the northern part with its capital at Ujjeni is identified with Malwa.

<sup>2</sup> See Infra

CHAPTER V

SECOND BUDDHIST COUNCIL

Sources (Earlier): (i) Our main sources of information for the history of the Second Council are the Cullavagga of the Vinaya Pitaka and the Vinayakṣudrakavastu, the Tibetan translation of the Mūla-sarvāstivāda Vinaya,¹ which forms also the basis of Buston's and Tāranātha's accounts of the Council, as also of Rockhill. The Ceylonese chronicles and Pāli commentaries derive their information mainly from the Cullavagga and so have no independent value of their own. The account of Yuan Chwang is useful inasmuch as his information is derived from the Chinese versions of the Vinaya texts of the Mahāsanghika and other schools.

Sources (Later): (ii) Besides the above accounts derived from the Vinaya texts, there are three other texts written by Bhavya, Vasumitra and Vinitadeva on the history of the Buddhist schools. In introducing the history of the schools of thought, Vasumitra refers to the Council. He writes that it was held one hundred and odd years after Buddha's death while Aśoka was ruling at Kusumapura<sup>2</sup> in Magadha kingdom. Evidently, by 1 Dul-va, xi, 323-330; Rockhill, Life of the Buddha, pp. 171-180. The account also appears in the Vinaya texts of the Mahiśāsakas and the Dharmaguptas. Tāranātha, p. 41; Bu-ston, p. 91f.

2 See Masuda in Asia Major, I, p. 14. According to some authorities the name of the kings is given as Nanda and Mahāpadma and the time elapsed after Buddha's death is 137 years. See Bu-ston, II, p. 96. Aśoka, he meant Kālāśoka of the Pāli tradition. All these three writers have not a word to say about the ten un-Vinayic acts of the Mahāsanghikas. They attribute the division of the Sangha to the five propositions of Mahādeva.¹ The works of these writers, therefore, are not of much value for the events that led to the session of the Second Council.

(iii) Apart from the two kinds of sources mentioned above, there are references to the session of the Council in the Mahāvastu, Samādhirāja, Mañjuśrīmūlakalpa and other later texts, hence the session of the Council was taken generally as an accepted fact by the early writers on Buddhism.

The Story

Some of the Vajjian monks of Vesāli allowed as lawful ten rules which were not in strict conformity with the Pātimokkha. Yasa of Kosambi, while at Vesāli, happened to notice this and strongly protested against the same. The Vajjian monks resented this attitude of Yasa and expelled him (ukkhepana) from the Sangha. Yasa made an appeal to the laity of Vesāli, and it is said, that he had to flee to his native land. From there he tried to form a party of monks who adhered to his views. He sent messengers to the monks at Patheyya and Avanti, and he himself went to Ahoganga, the residence of Sambhūta Sāṇavāsī. There he was joined by sixty theras of Pātheyya and eighty theras of Avanti, and gradually by several others. They all decided to approach Revata of Soreyya, who was then the chief of the Sangha. Before they could reach Soreyya, Revata started for Vesāli, and the meeting of Revata with other monks took place at Sahajāti. The Vajjian monks, in order to forestall

<sup>1</sup> Infra, p. 41.

Yasa's plans, approached Revata at Sahajāti with robes and such other presents but failed to win him over to their side. Salha of Sahajāti was at first wavering between the two parties, but ultimately he sided with Yasa. The Vajjian monks, being unsuccessful in this attempt of theirs, approached king Kālāsoka at Pupphapura, and persuaded him to believe that the monks of the western countries were making a sinister move to get possession of the Teacher's Gandhakūtī in the Mahāvanavihāra at Vesali. The king at first took up their cause but later on changed his mind, it is said, at the intervention of his sister who was a bhikkhuni. The session of the Council was held at Vesāli with 700 members but as there was great uproar during the deliberations of the Council, it was decided to refer the matters to a body of referees consisting of eight members, four from the orthodox party of the west and four from the unorthodox party of the east. The Council followed the Ubbābikā process as described in the Pātimokkha.1 The findings of the referees, which were all against the Vesālian monks, were placed before the larger body constituting the Council and were confirmed.

The Ceylonese chronicles continue the story and write that the findings were not accepted by all the Vesālian monks, some of whom held another Council and included in it all the monks whether arhats and non-arhats, and decided matters according to their own light. This assembly was called Mahāsangha or Mahāsangīti.

Time & site of the Council

All the traditions state that a Council was held about a century after Buddha's death to suppress certain un-Vinayic acts practised by a group of monks of Vesāli. The Council was held at Vesāli, but the traditions differ about the name of the monastery where the scene of the session was laid. In Pāli the name of the monastery is given as Vālukārāma, and this is corroborated by the Mahāsaṅghika Vinaya.¹ According to Buston, the name of the monastery was Kusumapura,² but it is not corroborated by any other text. Buston probably confused the capital of the province with that of the seat of the Council, or it may be that the Mahāsaṅghikas after their defeat in the Vesālian Council held another Council at the capital.

<sup>1</sup> See Early Monastic Buddhism, vol. I, p. 319.

No President

A remarkable feature of the Council is that it did not elect any President. By the ubbāhikā process a body of referees consisting of eight monks was formed to go into the questions of dispute, and each tradition gave prominence to its favoured monk. Thus, we see that though Sabbakāmī is recognised as the Saṅghatthera, the Pāli tradition accords to Revata, a Westerner, the leadership of the Council, while the Chinese version of the Mahāsaṅghika Vinaya attributes to Sambhūta Sāṇavāsī the leading part in the Council. Buston gives prominence to Sabbakāmī and Khujjasobhita (Kubjita). In view of these differences regarding the leading monk, we have to conclude that there was no elected President and the business was carried on by a Committee.

The ten un-Vinayic acts

All the earlier sources agree in stating that the main business of the Council was to examine the validity of the ten un-

Watters, op. cit., II, p. 73.

Vinayic acts performed by a section of the Vesālian monks,<sup>1</sup> but there exists a wide divergence of opinion in their interpretations. It is difficult to decide which of the interpretations, accessible to us, should be accepted and so we should prefer that which appears more plausible.

The ten un-Vinayic acts with their interpretations, as given in the Pāli texts, are as follows:-

(i) Singilona kappa—or the practice of carrying salt in a horn for use when needed, which contravened according to one view the rule against the storing of articles of food (cf. Pācittiya 38).

(ii) Dvangula kappa—or the practice of taking food after midday, lit. when the shadow (on the dial) is two digits wide (vide Pāc. 37).

(iii) Gāmantara kappa—or the practice of going to a neighbouring village and taking a second meal there the same day, committing thereby the offence of over-eating (cf. Pāc. 35).

(iv) Āvāsa kappa—or the observance of uposathas in different places within the same parish (sīmā) (prohibited in the Mahāvagga, II, 8, 3).

(v) Anumati kappa-or doing an act and obtaining its sanction afterwards (contrast Mahāvagga, IX, 3. 5).

(vi) Acinna kappa-or the use of precedents as authority.

(vii) Amathita kappa—or the drinking of milk-whey after meal (against Pac. 35).

(viii) Jalogimpātum—or the drinking of fermenting palm-juice which is not yet toddy (against Pac. 51).1

ा Cf. Mūlasarvāstivāda Vinaya (Gilgit ms.), Cīvaravastu, p. 142: मदो स्टयवान् प्रचिष्य भूमी निखात्रव्यम् । ग्र्लस्वे परिवातं परिमोक्तव्यम् । ग्र्लस्वानुद-योज्यं तु कोरियतव्यम् । मां भिज्ञः शासारमुद्दिशक्तिमेदामदेशमपेशमन्ततः कुशार्ये वापि । (ix) Adasakam nisīdanam—or the use of a borderless sheet to sit on (contrary to Pāc. 89).

(x) Jātarūparajatam—or the acceptance of gold and silver

(prohibited in Nissagg. 18).1

Buston, on the basis of the tradition preserved in the Mūla-Sarvāstivāda Vinaya, enumerates the undermentioned ten acts.<sup>2</sup> Prof. La Vallée Poussin translated the same Tibetan passage from the Dulva. We reproduce below both the translations of Obermiller and de La Vallée Poussin.

(i) Using the sacred salt: (Obermiller) Mixing the salt that is to be kept for life-time with that which is used in general, to eat it and make it thus an object of use.<sup>3</sup>

(Poussin) Mixing salt consecrated for life-time with food appropriate at the moment.4

The Dharmaguptas and the Mahisasakas offer quite a different interpretation. According to them, the word singi is singa (vera) = ginger and lona = salt. Their interpretation is to "mix the food with salt and ginger."

1 For a discussion on the interpretations of the terms, see Minayeff, Recherches, I, pp. 44-50.

The first three rules are relaxations of the more stringent rules, made by Buddha regarding the storage of food and eating to suit the conditions created by famine in Vesāli. The people of Vesāli continued to observe the relaxed rules though they were abrogated later on by the Theravādins in their Vinaya.

2 The order of enumeration has been changed for the convenience of comparison with the Pāli list.

3 Cf. Gilgit Ms. leaf 93b: अस्ति आयुषाङ्गां ग्रहापुटं खवणं यावज्जीवनधि-ष्ठितम् । cf. Mo. vi. 3. 1.

4 Indian Antiquary, 1908, pp. 91, 104.

5 Ibid., p. 91.

(ii) Taking food with two fingers: (Obermiller) The food that has not been left (from a previous meal) they eat, taking it with two fingers.

(L. V. P.) Eating food of both kinds, not being remainder, while using two fingers.1

(iii) Eating on the way: (Obermiller) The monks, having gone a yojana or a half, assemble and eat on the pretext that they are travelling.

(L. V. P.) Having gone a yojana or a half-yojana, and having eaten food in troop, rendered the meal in troop legal by reason of the journey.2

- (iv) Admission of a mixture: (Obermiller) The monks mix a drona measure of milk with as much sour milk and drink it at undue time.
- (L. V. P.) After agitating a full measure (droña) of milk with a full measure of curd, and then eating the preparation out of time.3
- (v) Taking intoxicating drink: (Obermiller) The monks take wine in the manner of a leech that sucks blood and having drunk, excuse it with illness.
- (L. V. P.) Drinking fermented liquor with a sucking action like leeches, rendering it legal by reason of illness.4
- 1 Dharmaguptas: "derogation from sobriety, as if, for example, a monk after an ample repast, forgetting the rule of good conduct, began to take with two fingers and to eat the food remaining."

2 The Mahiśāsakas say "to eat a second time after having risen before taking a sufficient meal."

3 The Dharmaguptas and Mahiśāsakas say: "to drink, beyond the time allowed, a mixture of cream, butter, honey and sugar.

4 According to the Mahisasakas, it is a question of an intoxicating liquor which had become fermented.

- (vi) Making a new rug: (Obermiller) Taking a new rug without stitching it by a patch of the so-called Sugata span taken from the old one.
- (L. V. P.) Not having patched their new mats with a border, a Sugata's cubit broad, from the old mat.
- (vii) Begging gold and silver: (Obermiller) The monks anoint an alms-bowl with fragrant spices, put it on the head of a Śramaṇa, on a table or a seat, or in a narrow passage at the four cross-roads and proclaim: This is a sublime vessel, if you deposit your gifts in it and fill it, you are to reap great merit.
- (L. V. P.) Taking alms-bowls such as were round, pure and suitable for ritual, anointing them with perfumes, fumigating them with incense, adorning them with various fragrant flowers, placed on the head of a monk over a cushion went about the highways, streets and cross-roads, crying as follows. "Here, ye people, who have come from various towns and countries, and ye wise people of Vaiśālī! This pātra is a lucky one, to give in it is to give much, or whoever shall fill it will obtain a great fruit, a great advantage, a great activity, a great development."

[As far as the seven un-Vinayic acts, mentioned above, are concerned, all the Vinaya texts, including those of the Mahī-śāsakas and the Dharmaguptas agree, though they have differed in interpretations, which have all been pointed out.]

- (viii) Digging ground: (Obermiller) It is considered admissible for monks to live by agriculture. (L. V. P.) Turning up the soil with their own hands.<sup>2</sup>
- 1 According to the Mahiśāsakas, to make for oneself a mat of undetermined dimensions; there is no question of fringe.
- 2 According to the Dharmaguptas, the Vajjiputtakas think their conduct may be justified by alleging that "this has been done from time immemorial."

On this un-Vinayic act, the comment of the Sarvāstivādins stands alone, and this seems to be due to careless Sanskritization of ācinna by āchinna, unconsciously changing the root (car to chid). Hence the interpretation offered by the Sarvāstivādins should be left out of account.

(ix) Approving: (Obermiller) They perform religious observances, and at the same time incite the monks in attendance to approve. (L.V.P.) The Venerable Ones (absent brothers) having approved, do ye count it as approved, caused the resolutions of the incomplete Sangha to be approved by the monks of the parish.<sup>2</sup>

Buston or Obermiller has no doubt been misled by the Tibetan rendering of the Sanskrit word anumodanā, which, though derived from the root mud, does not carry the meaning of "rejoice". Anumodanā in Pāli means "acquiescence of an act done by the Sangha in one's absence". This is also an instance of anomaly of converting a Prakrit word into Sanskrit. We are not aware what was the original Prakrit word, but evidently the Pālists made it anumati. In any case, the interpretations offered by the different Vinaya texts are similar, i.e., getting an ecclesiastical act performed in an incomplete assembly approved by the absentee members.

The Mahīśāsakas and the Sarvāstivādins have both omitted āvāsakappa of the Pāli list. It seems that these schools included

According to the Mahiśāsakas: "To continue to occupy themselves with what they had been in the habit of doing before becoming ascetics; certain occupations were declared lawful, others were forbidden."

r "Rejoicing" of Obermiller is changed by me to "Approving."

2 The Dharmaguptas support the Pāli interpretation while the Mahisāsakas say "in the accomplishment of an ecclesiastical act to call others one by one afterwards to hear."

all the irregularities committed by the Vajjian monks relating to the performance of ecclesiastical acts in a regular or irregular assembly within anumodanā-kappa, while the Theravādins (Pāli) and the Dharmaguptas have split it up into two: anumati and āvāsa. The Dharmaguptas, it will be noted, put a slightly different interpretation on āvāsakappa. They say that "in the āvāsa, besides the regular acts, the innovators accomplished others.

Perhaps in order to keep up the number of deviations as ten the Mahīśāsakas and the Sarvāstivādins borrowed one point from Mahādeva's five and made it the first of their list, viz., "Exclamation of abo".

- (x) Exclamation of astonishment: (Obermiller) The monks of Vaiśālī perform religious observances and at the same time they admit such exclamations as aho.
- (L. V. P.) The monks of Vaiśālī having rendered legal the exclamation abo performed an ecclesiastical act illegally in an incomplete or complete Saṅgha or legally in an incomplete Saṅgha.

The interpretation given in the Vinaya of the Sarvāstivādins is a laboured one and appears more or less a repetition of the previous un-Vinayic act of the Vajjiputtakas.

The exclamation of aho reminds us of the fifth point of Mahādeva, viz., the path is attained by an exclamation. This has been discussed in the Kathāvatthu (xi. 4) under the heading: 'Idam dukkhan ti' vācam bhāsato 'idam dukkhan ti' ñānam pavattatī ti.¹

A comparison of the two lists (Pāli and Sanskrit) shows that both the traditions have worked on a common original list, which was probably in a Prakrit, and definitely neither in Sanskrit nor in Pāli. This we state on the basis of the change noticed in the words: singilona, ācinna and anumati. The anomaly of āvāsa can hardly be explained. As regards the remaining six items, the interpretations of both the schools are allowable and either exposition may be accepted.

<sup>1</sup> See Infra, p. 41.

Five propositions of Mahadeva

Vasumitra, followed by Bhavya and Vinītadeva, writes that on account of the five propositions propounded by Mahādeva, the Saṅgha became divided into two schools: the Mahāsaṅghika and the Sthaviravāda. The five points are:—

The Arhats

1. are subject to temptation (cf. Kvu. II. 1. Atthi

2. may have residue of ignorance (cf. Kvu. II. 2: Atthi arabato aññanan ti?)

3. may have doubts regarding certain matters (cf. Kvu. II. 3: Atthi arahato kankhā ti?)

4. gain knowledge through others' help (cf. Kun. II. 4: Atthi arahato paravitāranā ti?).

5. The Path is attained by an exclamation (as "abo")

(cf. Kvu. II. 3 & 4 & XI. 4).

Watters has collected some information regarding the life of Mahādeva from the Abhidharma-mahāvibhāṣā-lun (ch. 99).¹ According to this work, Mahādeva was the son of a brāhmin merchant of Mathurā. He had his ordination at Kukkuṭārāma in Pāṭaliputra. By his zeal and abilities, he soon became the head of the Buddhist establishment there. The ruling king was a friend and patron of Mahadeva. With his help, he was able to oust the senior orthodox monks and establish his five dogmas, as enumerated above. Yuan Chwang writes that at the instance of the reigning king, an assembly of monks was summoned, in which the senior brethren, who were arhats, voted against the five dogmas, which however, were supported by a large majority of ordinary ordained members, i.e., non-arhats.

<sup>1</sup> Watters, op. cit., I, pp. 267-8.

The Chinese pilgrim, it will be observed, mentioned both the five dogmas of Mahādeva (Watters, I, p. 267) and the few un-Vinayic acts of the Vesālian monks (Watters, II, p. 73) as the cause of the session of the Council and the cleavage in the Sangha. The writer of the Kathāvatthu was aware of the five dogmas. Buddhaghosa attributed them to the Mahāsanghikas, so there can be no doubt that the statement of Vasumitra and others is authentic. The Dīpavaṃsa also states that the seceders introduced alterations in the doctrines as well.

Conclusion

Now the questions that can be raised are: To which of the two causes is due the schism? Or is the schism due to both the causes? We prefer the second alternative and may account for the two traditions thus: The division of monks began with the differences of opinion regarding the interpretation of the ten Vinaya rules some time before the appearance of Mahādeva (or Nāga)<sup>1</sup> i.e., during the reign of Kālāsoka. It was about half a century after this event that Mahādeva or Nāga propounded his five dogmas during the reign of king Nanda and his disciple Sthiramati propagated it further. As regards the fact that the tradition of the breach of ten Vinaya rules appears in the Vinaya texts and the Ceylonese chronicles while the tradition about Mahādeva's five dogmas appears in the Tibetan and Chinese versions of Vasumitra's and other writers' text on the doctrine of the schools, we may state that the Vinaya texts being concerned with the disciplinary aspect of the religion passed over the doctrinal differences while Vasumitra and other writers being more concerned with doctrinal differences than with disciplinary rules, considered it unnecessary to repeat the ten un-Vinayic acts of the Vesalian monks. The sources of information of the Ceylonese chronicles being the Vinaya texts, these also passed over the doctrinal differences, Yuan Chwang, being an annalist, was interested in both doctrines and disciplines and so he recorded the divergences in regard to both. It is quite probable that the schism began with disciplinary rules and in course of time, incorporated matters of doctrine.

<sup>1</sup> See above, p. 24, where Nāga is described as a disciple of Mahādeva, and Sthiramati as a disciple of Nāga.

It is apparent from the subject-matter of the ten un-Vinayic acts and the five points of Mahādeva, that the Vesālians wanted a certain amount of latitude and freedom in the interpretation and observance of the rules, and to carry into their organizations and general governance a democratic spirit which was gradually disappearing from the Buddhist Sangha. The exclusive powers and privileges which the arhats claimed for themselves were looked upon with disfavour by the Vesālians. The claim of the arhats to become members of important Councils and make their decisions binding on the non-arhats did not appeal to the Vajjians—a clan imbued with a thorough democratic spirit. The five propositions of Mahādeva also indicated that the arhats were not 'perfect' men as was claimed by the orthodox and that the arhats also had a few limitations. The Vesālians refused to be bound down by the decision of the arhats, and instead they convened a Council of all arhats and non-arhats, calling it a Mahāsangīti and agreed to abide by the decisions of the enlarged Council. This new body believed sincerely that the decisions taken by them were in conformity with what they had learnt from Buddha.

<sup>1</sup> The Vesalian monks are called Vajjiputtakas in the Pali tradition. In the Aiguttara (I, p. 230) we notice that a Vajjiputtaka monk approached Buddha saying that it would be difficult for him to observe the 250 rules of the Patimokkha.

Effect on the Church

Some of the Vesālian monks separated themselves from the Sangha of the Elders or the Orthodox, called the Thera or Sthaviravādins, and organised a new one of their own, calling it Mahā-sangha, from which they came to be known as the Mahā-sanghikas. From now on, the cleavage in the Sangha began to widen and widen, ultimately giving rise to as many as eighteen to twenty-five sects. The Thera or Sthavira-vādins were split up into eleven sects but remained Hīnayāna throughout their existence, while the Mahā-sanghikas became divided into seven sects, gradually gave up their Hīnayāna doctrines, and became the fore-runners of Mahāyānism. Once the disruptive forces were set in motion the Sangha could no longer remain a single whole. Sect after sect came into existence on slight differences of opinion concerning doctrines, disciplinary rules, and even cutting, colouring and wearing of robes.

In view of the general agreement of the different traditions, the session of the Second Council is taken as historical by the present-day writers. There can be no question about the fact that the Council marked the beginning of divisions in the Buddhist church, and that the disruption hinged on the ten un-Vinayic rules. The different traditions agree about nine of the ten rules though they may have differed in their interpretations. The only point which requires further evidences is the date of the Council and the name of the king under whose auspices the Council was held. The Ceylonese chronicles gives Kālāsoka as the name of the king. Kālāsoka succeeded Susunāga and is identified now with Kākavarnin of the Purānas (see above, p. 22). In view of the fact that Susunaga transferred his capital to Vesali, it is not unlikely that his son should continue to make Vesāli his royal seat and take interest in the affairs of the monks who were residents of the capital. If Kālāsoka be accepted as the royal patron of the Council,1 the date of its session will have to be put about a century after Buddha's death. Kern has questioned the statement of the Ceylonese chronicles about the age of the monks who took leading parts in the deliberations of the Council and pointed out that the names do not include any of the list of teachers given in the fifth chapter of the Mahavamsa.2 Kern's apprehensions are not baseless and so we should take the statement of the Mahāvamsa that some of the monks lived at the time of Buddha<sup>a</sup> with a certain amount of caution. As far as the line of teachers is concerned, Kern overlooks the fact that it is a list of succession of the spiritual teachers of Moggaliputta Tissa and not a list of succession of the Sanghattheras. Kern's conclusion that the Second Council "preceded but had no connection with the schism of the Mahāsaṅghikas" seems to be his personal conviction and not based on any evidence and so is his remark that Kāla-Asoka was Dharma-Asoka in his early days. Vasumitra places the session of the Council during the reign of Mahāpadma Nanda. This statement is probably due to the confusion made by Vasumitra that Mahādeva's five propositions were the original causes of the schism.

<sup>1</sup> Kern thinks that Kala Asoka is none other than Dharma-Asoka in his early days.

<sup>2</sup> Manual of Indian Buddhism, p. 108-9.

<sup>3</sup> Mahāvaṃsa, IV, 59-

CHAPTER VI

APPEARANCE OF THE BUDDHIST SCHOOLS OF THOUGHTS

It has been shown that within the period of Buddha's ministry which covered less than half a century, the various forces leading to dissensions were already at work. It was not therefore unusual that in the absence of the Teacher, the disruptive forces were still more active, and inspite of all precautions against Sanghabheda, caused the origin of as many as eighteen or more schools within a century and a half.

We have two independent traditions about the secession of the Schools, one preserved in the Kathāvatthu-aṭṭhakathā, the Ceylonese chronicles and the Sinhalese Nikāya-saṅgraha, and the other in the treatises of Vasumitra, Bhavya and Vinītadeva, Though there are slight deviations in the order of secession of the schools, the two traditions, as shown in the annexed table, agree substantially. Vasumitra has assigned little later dates to the origin of some of the schools, but the dates are too vague to be of any consequence to us.

Vinītadeva and the author of the Bhikswarsāgraprechā divided the eighteen sects in five groups thus:—

I. & II. Mahāsanghikas comprising Pūrvašaila, Aparašaila, Haimavata, Lokottaravāda and Prajňaptivāda.

III. Sarvāstivādins comprising Mūlasarvāstivāda, Kāśyapīya, Mahīśāsaka, Dharmagupta, Bahuśrutīya, Tāmraśātīya and a section of the Vibhajyavāda.

IV. Sā m m i tī y a s comprising Kaurukullaka, Avantaka and Vātsīputrīya. V. Sthaviras comprising Jetavanīya, Abhayagirivāsin, and Mahāvihāravāsin.

Vinītadeva's information and classification evidently point to a posterior date. He includes some of the later schools into his enumeration and omits some of the older schools which were probably extinct by his time, e.g., the Ekavyavahārika, Gokulika, Dharmottariya, and Bhadrayānika. Particularly noticeable is his inclusion of the Ceylonese sects like Jetavanīya¹ (i.e. Sāgalika of the Mahāvamsa, v. 13), Abhayagirivāsin² (i.e. Dhammarucika of the Mahāvamsa, v. 13) and the Mahāvihāravāsin. The Jetavanīya, it will be noted, came into existence as late as the reign of Mahāsena (5th century A.D.).

Tāranātha in his 42nd chapter (Kurze Betrachtung des Sinnes der vier Schulen³) furnishes us with very important identifications of the different names of schools appearing in the lists of Bhavya, Vasumitra Vinītadeva and others. After reproducing the several lists, he gives the following identifications:—

- (i) Kāśyapīya = Suvarsaka.
- (ii) Saṃkrāntivādin = Uttarīya = Tāmraśāṭīya.
- (iii) Caityaka = Pūrvaśaila = Schools of Mahādeva.
- (iv) Lokottaravāda = Kaukkuţika.
- (v) Ekavyavahārika is a general name of the Mahāsaṅghikas.
- (vi) Kaurukullaka, Vātsīputrīya, Dharmottariya, Bhadrayānīya and Channagarika held almost similar views.<sup>4</sup>
- 1 Vamsattha, p. 175; Sāgalikā nāma Mahāsenarañño Jetavanavāsino bhikkhu.
  - 2 Ibid. It was founded in Ceylon during the reign of Vattagamani.
  - 3 Schiefner, op. cit., pp. 270-274.
- 4 Tāranātha tells us further that during the reign of the Pāla king, seven schools only were known. These were These identifications help us to trace the Uttarapathakas of the Kathāvatthu. This school should be identified with the Uttariyas of Bhavya and the Samkrantivadins of Vasumitra or Samkrāntikas of the Pāli texts. The Samkrāntivādins were also known as the Tamraśatiyas probably on account of their coppercoloured robes. Out of these Tāmraśāṭīyas or Uttarāpathakas or Samkrāntivādins or Dārstāntikas arose the Sautrāntikas, who are often mentioned in the Samkarabhāsya, Sarvadaršanasangraha and such other works of the Brāhmanic schools of philosophy.

A comparison of the different lists of Schools shows that the grouping of Schools fairly agrees with one another. The Mahāsanghika branches may be sub-divided into two groups one earlier and the other later.

The earlier (or the first) group comprised the original Mahāsanghikas, Ekavyavahārikas and Caityakas or Lokottaravādins. According to Tāranātha, Ekavyavahārikas and the Mahāsanghikas were almost identical. The chief centre of this group was at Pātaliputra.

The later (or the second) group of Schools came into existence long after the Mahāsanghikas. They became widely known as the Saila Schools or the Andhakas,1 and made their chief centre at Amaravati and Nagarjunikonda. With them

(i) Sāmmitiya comprising Vātsiputriya and Kaurukullaka.

(ii) Mahāsamghika comprising Prajūaptivāda and Lokottaravāda.

(iii) Sarvāstivāda comprising Tāmrašātiya and Sarvāstivāda. The former became known as Darstantika, out of which developed the Sautrāntika School. This corroborates Masuda's remark as against that of de la Vallee Poussin that the Därstäntikas preceded the Sauträntikas. See Asia Major, p. 67, fn.

r To the Andhakas should be added the Vetulyakas and the Hetuvadins of the Kathavatthu.

may be classed the Bahuśrutīyas and Prajñaptivādins, as the former had more agreement in doctrinal matters with the Saila Schools than with the Mahāsaṅghikas while the latter had its origin as a protest against the doctrins of the Bahuśrutīyas.

The third group of Schools is formed by the earlier Mahīśāsakas, and Sarvāstivādins with the later Mahīśāsakas, Dharmaguptakas, Kāśyapīyas, Samkrāntikas or Uttarāpathakas, or Tāmraśātīyas.

The fourth group comprised the Vajjiputtakas or Vātsīputrīyas with Dharmottarīyas, Bhadrayānikas, Channagarikas, and Sammitiyas, and also Kaurukullakas. In this group, practically all the schools merged in one, viz., the Vātsīputrīyas, otherwise known as the Sāmmitiyas.

The last, the fifth group but the earliest in origin was the Theravāda which, as Vinītadeva says, formed a group with the Ceylonese sects, viz., Jetavanīya, Abhayagirivāsins and Mahāvihāravāsins.

I Vasumitra gives Sautrāntika as an alternative name of Samkrantikas or Samkrāntivāda. See Masuda, Asia Major, II. p. 67 fn. The Sautrāntikas are called Uttarāpathakas in the Kathāvatthu. See Infra.

CHAPTER VII

SCHOOLS OF GROUPS I & II: THEIR HISTORY & LITERATURE

The first two groups in our scheme included the Mahāsanghikas with all their sub-sects. Scanning the various traditions about the appearance of the sub-sects, we notice that Vasumitra and Bhavya¹ agreed with the Kathāvatthu as far as the first three sub-divisions² were concerned, if Cetiya be taken as an alternative name of Lokottaravāda. In the Mahāvastu, which is an avowed text of the Lokottaravāda branch of the Mahāsanghikas, worship of caityas is given special prominence, hence it will not be out of the way to say that the Lokottaravādins, on account of their devotion to caityas, were also called Caityakas.

Sometime after the appearance of these three sub-sects, came into existence two further sub-sects, viz., Bahuśrutiyas and Prajñaptivadins. According to Vasumitra and Bhavya, they issued out of the Mahāsanghikas direct while in the Kathāvatthu and Ceylonese traditions, they are made sub-divisions of the Gokulikas though the Gokulikas do not appear to have become an important sect at any time. The doctrines of these two later schools are allied to those of the Mahāsanghikas or the Sarvāstivādins.

r Vinitadeva's list, being of a later date, may be left out of account. See Infra.

<sup>2</sup> Kaukkutika (Gokulika), Lokottaravāda (Cetiya) and Ekavyavahārika (Ekabbohāra).

The importance and popularity of the Mahāsanghikas have been raised not so much by the sub-sects mentioned above but by the schools, which came into existence still later, we mean, the Saila schools of Vasumitra and Bhavya and the Andhakas of the Pāli tradition. The former speak of three Saila schools, Caitya, Apara and Uttara, while in Pāli appear four or five names: Hemavatika, Rājagirika, Siddhatthika, Pubbaseliya and Aparaseliya. Though the Pāli tradition is partially corroborated by Vinītadeva's list, it has been fully borne out by the inscriptions recently unearthed at Nāgārjunikoṇḍa, where as also at Amarāvatī (Dhanakaṭaka) appear the following names:—

- (i) Hamghi (Burgess, p. 105) Ayira-haghāna (El., XX, pp. 17, 20)
- (ii) Caityika (Burgess, pp. 100, 102) Cetiavadaka (Ibid., p. 102)
- (iii) Aparamahāvanaseliya (El., XX, p. 41) Mahāvanaseliyāna (Burgess, p. 105)
- (iv) Puvasele (E1., XX, p. 22)
- (v) Rājagiri-nivāsika (Burgess, p. 53) Rājaśaila (Ibid., p. 104)
- (vi) Sidhathikā (Ibid., p. 110)
- (vii) Bahusutiya (E1., XX, p. 24)
- (viii) Mahīśāsaka (Ibid.)

Excepting the last, the rest are all sub-branches of the Mahā-sanghika school.<sup>1</sup>

Out of twelve names of the Pāli tradition, we come across seven in the above-mentioned inscriptions. This testimony indicates the authenticity of the Pāli tradition. Vinītadeva replaces Bahuśrutīya of the inscriptions by Prajñaptivāda, otherwise he upheld the traditions preserved in Pali and the inscriptions, The Saila schools of later days placed the Mahāsanghikas in the shade. It seems that the earlier Mahasanghikas were not concentrated in one centre as were the Sailas. The former remained scattered over N. W. India, Behar and Western India, while the latter were concentrated at Sriparvata and Dhanakataka (in mod. Guntur District). The inscriptions indicate that a magnificent caitya was erected here and its grandeur and sanctity attracted devotees from places all over India and Ceylon. According to the inscriptions, the date of erection of the caitya should be placed some time about the 3rd or 4th century A.D.

<sup>1</sup> See IHQ., vol. VII, p. 646-7 for further details.

The first group of schools, comprising the Mahasanghikas, Ekavyavahārikas and the Caityakas (or Lokottaravādins) had generally common doctrines with minor differences, which have not been carefully distinguished by Vasumitra. As regards the doctrines of the second group of schools, viz., the Sailas or the Andhakas, the Bahuśrutīyas, and Prajňaptivādins, Vasumitra has equally been taciturn. It is in the Kathāvatthu that we find a large number of doctrines, specially attributed to this group, and scanning the doctrines, it appears that this group accepted some of the doctrines of the Sarvāstivādins. We propose to discuss the doctrines of the first and second groups separately, but as the materials for the history and literature of both these groups are scanty, we shall have to take up their treatment together.

Their origin and literature

In the account of the Second Council, we have already shown how and when the Mahāsanghikas appeared in the field; and what disciplinary rules and dogmas were upheld by them. In the history of Buddhism, they were the earliest seceders to come into the field.

In the Dipavamea,1 it is stated that they did not stop at introducing only the ten new Vinaya rules but went further and propounded new doctrines contrary to the established ones. At the Mahāsangīti held by them, in reciting the Sūtras and the Vinaya, they made alterations in the texts, their arrangement and interpretations. They replaced portions of the text by others according to their liking, and even rejected certain parts of the canon though they had been accepted in Mahākassapa's council. They did not include in the Pitaka collection,2 Parivāra, Abbidhammappakarana, Patisambbidā, Niddesa, and the latakas. The importance and accuracy of the decision by which the Mahasanghikas discriminated between the original portions and the later interpolations are found in the full support that the decision obtains from modern researches bearing out their discrimination in toto. The Parivara (patha), meant as a manual for the bhikkhus, is no doubt a composition of a date much later than that of the Canon.3 The Abhidhamma literature also developed after the Council of Vesäli and obtained its final shape in Asoka's Council.4 Lastly the three works, the Patisambhida, the Niddesa and the Jatakas too have been added to the Canon without much discrimination and evidently long after its close. In view of the contents, it would have been proper if the Patisambhida had been included in the Abhidhamma collection, and the Niddesa, an old commentary on the Sutta Nipāta, along with the Jātakas which is a commentary on the canonical Jataka book, had been altogether excluded from the Pitaka collection.

<sup>1</sup> Dipavamsa, ch. iv. 2 Dipavamsa, V, 32-38.

<sup>3</sup> Rhys Davids, Hibbert Lectures, p. 42; Oldenberg's Intro. to the Vinaya Pitaka, I, p. xxxiv.

<sup>4</sup> Oldenberg, op. cit., p. xxxiv.

From all these testimonies mentioned above, it is apparent that like the Theravadins and the Sarvastivadins, the Mahasanghikas also had a complete canon of their own in its three divisions. References to the canon of the Mahāsanghikas are found in the inscriptions discovered at Amaravati and Nāgārjunikonda. On the pillar of an outer railing of the Amaravati stūpa there are two inscriptions, one of which speaks of certain nuns as Vinayadhara1 and another of the monks of Mahāvanaseliya as Mahāvinayadhara.2 These distinctly imply the existence of a Vinayapitaka in that region about the beginning of the Christian era.

There are similar references to the Sütra-pitaka also, but in more details. In an inscription on one of the slabs found near the Central stupa of Amaravatī there is a reference to a monk of Mahāvanasālā as Samyuta-bhānaka (not Samyutabhātuka, as read by Burgess). In the Nāgārjunikonda, appear the following inscriptions in the Ayaka pillars C, and C2: Digha-Majhimapamcamātuka-osaka-vācakānam, Dīgha-Majhima-nikāya-dharena, Dīgha-Majhima-pamda-mātuka-desaka vācakānam and Dīgha-Ma-nigoya-dharena. These leave no room for doubt about the existence of a Sutta-pitaka in at least three Nikāyas: Digha, Majjhima and Samyukta.

There also occurs the expression Pañca-mātuka which is a Prākrit form of Pañca-mātrkā or (Pāli) Pañca-mātikā. In Pāli, mātikā is the usual term for the Abhidhamma-pitaka. Among the Vinaya texts in Chinese, catalogued by Nanjio, there are four works with mātṛkā as a part of their titles, though none of these belong to the Mahāsanghikas.¹ Prof. Przyluski writes² the Mahāsanghikas had a particular fancy for the number "five", specially in connection with the Vinaya rules. Mātṛkā was used by the ancient writers to denote the Vinaya-piṭaka as much as the Abhidharma-piṭaka, hence the word 'Paṃca-mātuka' of the inscriptions may well mean the Vinaya-piṭaka of the Mahāsanghikas whose text also had five divisions like the other schools.³

<sup>1</sup> Burgess, Buddhist Stupas of Amaravati and Jaggayyapeta (Arch. Sur. of S. India), p. 37-

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., p. 102.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid., p. 91 (Plate xlviii, 35), see also p. 105.

Fa-hien (414 A.D.) took away, from Paraliputra to China, a complete transcript of the Mahāsanghika Vinaya and translated it into Chinese two years later.4 According to Yuan Chwang the Vinaya of the Mahāsanghikas was the same as the one reiterated in the First Council. In Nanjio's Catalogue are mentioned two Vinaya texts of this school, viz., Mahāsanghika Vinaya and Mahāsangha-bhiksunī Vinaya (No. 543). Fortunately, there is the original Mahāvastu, which is the first volume of the Vinaya Pitaka of the Lokottaravadins, a branch of the Mahasanghikas. It corresponds to that part of the Pāli Vinaya Piţaka, which gives an account of Buddha's life and his formation of the first Sangha. By Buddha's life, the compiler meant not merely his present life but the events of his past lives as well, by recounting which he showed that a particular event in this life was only a repetition or result of the past. The account is divided into three sections like the Nidana-katha of the Jatakas, the first

<sup>1</sup> Sec IHQ., vol. VII, p. 644-5.

<sup>2</sup> Przyluski, Le Concile de Rājagrha, p. 212.

<sup>3</sup> Przyluski, op. cit., pp. 353, 357, 359.

<sup>4</sup> Takakusu, Records of the Buddhist Religion by I-tsing, p. xx.

<sup>5</sup> Separt's ed. p. 25

dealing with his existences during the time of Dipankara and other Buddhas, the second with his life in Tusita heaven, and the third with his present life, agreeing mostly with the contents of the Pāli Mahāvagga. Apart from a few rules relating to ordination, it has nothing to do with the disciplinary matters. It contains a few Prakrit versions of the sūtras of the Nikāyas. Sutta-nipāta, Dhammapada and a few other texts. It is more a collection of Jātakas than a text on Vinaya. Winternitz thinks that its date of composition should be placed between the 2nd century B.C. and the 4th century A.D.<sup>1</sup>

Yuan Chwang states that the Mahāsanghikas accepted the canon as rehearsed in Kassapa's Council but they included certain discourses which had been rejected in the first recitation as non-canonical. He further states that the canon of the Mahāsanghikas was divided into four parts: Sūtra, Vinaya, Abhidharma and Dhāranī.

Language of the Mahasanghika-Pitaka

Bu-ston<sup>2</sup> tells us that the Mahāsanghikas claimed Mahākāśyapa as their founder, and that the language of their Piṭaka was Prākrit. The language of the Mahāvastu, specially of its poetry portion, is mixed Sanskrit and which may well be called a Prākrit.<sup>2</sup>

See Winternitz, History of Buddhist Literature, II, p. 239;
 B. C. Law, A Study of the Mahāvastu, 1930.

<sup>2</sup> Besides their own language, Buston adds, their robes had 23 to 27 fringes, and their badge was a conch-shell. Bu-ston, II, p. 100. Cf. Csoma Körösi, IASB., 1838, p. 134; Wassiljew, Der Buddhismus, p. 294-5; Eitel's Handbook of Chinese Buddhism, p. 88.

<sup>3</sup> See Keith, Foreword to B. C. Law's Study of the Mahavastu.

Principal seats of the schools

The different traditons about the Second Council indicate that a section of the Vajjiputtakas held another council, Mahāsangīti, at Kusumapura, i.ē., Pāṭaliputra, the capital of Kālāsoka. Yuan Chwang also remarks that "the majority of inferior brethren at Pāṭaliputra began the Mahāsanghika school." Fa-hien, as stated above, found the Vinaya of this school at Pāṭaliputra, so, ir may be safely concluded that the chief centre of this school was at Pāṭaliputra. I-tsing (671-695 A.D.) tells us that the Mahāsanghikas were found in his time mostly in Magadha (Central India) and a few in Lata and Sindhu (Western India) and some in a few places in Northern, Southern and Eastern India." Before I-tsing, both Fa-hien and Yuan Chwang had come across in these localities the adherents of this school though not so frequently as those of the others. The earliest epigraphical notice of this school is found in the inscription on Mathura Lion Capital (about 120 B.C.), mentioning that it had a very strong opponent in Buddhila, an adherent of the Sarvāstivāda school.

At Andarab in Afghanistan and its neighbouring places, there were also some followers of this school. During the reign of Huviska, one Kamagulya deposited some relics of Buddha in the Wardak vase and presented the same to the teachers of the Mahāsanghika school. The vault which contained the relicvase was built by the father of Kamagulya. At Andarab which was three days journey from the country of the Wardaks, Yuan Chwang found the adherents of this school in three monasteries.

<sup>1</sup> Watters, op. cit., I, p. 269. 2 Takakusu, op. cit., p. xxxiii.

<sup>3</sup> Ep. Indica, IX, pp. 139, 141, 146.

<sup>4</sup> Ep. Indica, XI, p. 211.

<sup>5</sup> Watters' Yuan Chwang, II, pp. 267, 269.

There was another centre of the school at Karle, in the Bombay Presidency, famous in the history of Buddhist architecture for its possession of the largest and finest cave-temples, which are still standing as memorials of their past glory. That this cave was in the possession of the Mahāsanghikas is shown by two inscriptions at the cave-temples, one recording the gift of the village of Karajaka by Gautamīputra Sātakarni to the monks of the Valuraka caves for the support of the school of the Mahāsanghikas,2 and the other of the time of Vāsistiputra Siripulumayi recording the gift of a nine-celled hall to the same school by an inhabitant of Abulama.3 Though the Mahāsanghikas did not receive much attention from the Buddhist writers and donors, the Karle caves show that the school commanded a great popularity in that part of the Bombay Presidency where the caves exist; for, otherwise the cave-temples could not have been so richly decorated with such fine specimens of sculptural and architectural beauty. Its existence and richness prove that there was a series of donors through centuries anxious to express their religious devotion and zeal in the best way that their resources could command.

The above inscriptional evidences relate to the Mahāsanghikas alone, who as it appears from the evidences were scattered probably in small groups in a few localities of North-western, Western and Eastern India, and had their main centre at Pātaliputra or Kusumapura.

The career of the off-shoots of this school, however, took a different course. They were mainly located in one country, the

<sup>1</sup> See for its description Fergusson's Indian & Eastern Architecture, pp. 117 ff.; Fergusson and Burgess, Cave Temples of India, pp. 232 ff.

<sup>2</sup> Ep. Indica, vol. VII, pp. 64 ff. 3 Ibid., pp. 71 ff.

Andhra, for which they were given in the Ceylonese chronicles the collective name of the Andhakas. We have seen above (p. 52) that their names appear more than once in the Amarāvatī and Nāgārjunīkoṇḍa inscriptions. Just as Bodh-Gaya grew up on the bank of the Nerañjarā as a very early centre of Theravāda and a place of pilgrimage for the early Buddhists so also did Amarāvatī (extending to Jaggayapeta) and Nāgārjunikoṇḍa on the bank of the Kṛṣṇā (including its tributary Paler) grow as a flourishing centre of the off-shoots of the Mahāsaṅghikas in the first century B.C. or A.D. and became a place of pilgrimage for the Buddhists of the later days.

On the basis of the style of sculptures and the palæographic data, Burgess, agreeing with Fergusson, holds that the construction of the Amarāvatī Stūpa was commenced in the 2nd century B.C., and enlarged later and decorated with new sculptures, the latest of which was the great railing erected a little before 200 A.D.¹ It was some time after the completion of this Amarāvatī stūpa, that the stūpas at Jaggayyapeta and Nāgārjunikoṇḍa came into existence, their dates being, according to Burgess and Vogel respectively, the 3rd or 4th century A.D.² This estimate of date is based on palæographic evidences and the mention of the king called Māḍharīputa Siri Virapurisadata (=Māṭharīputra Śrī Virapuruṣadatta) of the Ikṣvāku dynasty.³ The inscriptions on the āyaka-pillars at Nāgārjunikoṇḍa contain not only the name of this king, but also that of his father Vāseṭhīputa Siri Cāmtamūla and his son and successor Vāseṭhīputa Siri

Burgess, Buddbist Stūpas of Amarāvati and Iaggayyapeta (Arch-Survey of Southern India), p. 112-3.

<sup>2</sup> Ep. Ind., XX, p. 2.

<sup>3</sup> Bühler assigns 3rd century A.D. to the reign of king Purisadata. Ep. Ind., XX, p. 2, quoting Ind. Ant., XI (1882), pp. 256 ff.

Ehuvula Cāṃtamūla.¹ It appears from the inscriptions that the principal donor of the subsidiary structures of the stūpa was Cāṃtasiri, the sister of the king Siri Cāṃtamūla, and the paternal aunt (pituchā), later on, probably mother-in-law, of the king Siri Vīrapurisadata.³ Hence, the time of the inscriptions, mentioning the names of the kings Cāṃtasiri and Vīrapurisadata, is the 3rd or the 4th century A.D. It should be remembered that the period mentioned here relates to the subsidiary structures of the main stūpa, and not to the stūpa itself—the Mahācetiya, which must be assigned to an earlier period.

It is evident therefore that the off-shoots of the Mahāsanghikas, viz., the Caitya and Saila schools migrated to the Guntur district from Pāṭaliputra through Orissa and made their settlement in that region in the 2nd century B.C. During the course of four or five centuries of their residence, they gradually extended their monasteries to the neighbouring hills, becoming one day a place of pilgrimage for all Buddhists.

The offshoots of this school, the Lokottaravadins and Caityakas, in other words, the Saila schools, we know from the inscriptions of Amaravatī and Nāgārjunikonda, established themselves along the banks of the Kṛṣṇā with several monasteries located on the different hills all round. In the Kathāvatthu-atthu-atthu-atthakathā and the Ceylonese chronicles they are given the appellation of Andhakas, indicating thereby that they mainly belonged to the Andhra country.

In short, the earlier schools (i.e. the First Group) were located at Pāṭaliputra with adherents scattered all over Northern and North-western India, while the later schools (i.e. the Second Group) were concentrated in the south, having their chief centre in the Guntur district on the banks of the Kṛṣṇā.

CHAPTER VIII (A)

DOCTRINES OF GROUP I SCHOOLS

The Mahāsanghikas & Lokottaravādins

Our main sources of information for the doctrines of the Mahāsanghikas and the Lokottaravādins are the Mahāvastu, Kathāvatthu and works of Vasumitra, Bhavya and Vinītadeva. In the Mahāvastu, the doctrines mentioned are essentially Hīnayānic in character, e.g., the four truths, eightfold path, theory of pratītyasamutpāda, impermanence of skandhas, non-existence of ātman, theory of karma, the bodhipaksiyadharmas, bodhyangas and so forth. The doctrines of dharmasinyatā, trikāya, the two āvaranas (kleša and jneya), the essentials of Mahāyānic doctrines receive little attention. The accounts of the four caryās, ten bhūmis, countless Buddhas and their ksetras (spheres) appear more as interpolations than as integral parts of the original text.

Re. Buddha and Bodhisattva. The only Mahāyānic feature of the text is the deification of Buddha and Bodhisattva. A Bodhisattva is described as self-born (upapāduka) and not born of parents; he sits cross-legged in the womb and preaches therefrom to the gods who act as his protectors; while in the womb he remains untouched by the phlegm and such other matters

<sup>1</sup> Mahāvastu, III, pp. 331-3. 2 Ibid.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid., p. 448-9. 4 Ibid., III, p. 345.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid., pp. 335-7, 447; III, p. 66.

<sup>6</sup> Ibid., II, p. 363. III, p. 65. 7 Mtu. I, p. 145, 153-4.

<sup>8</sup> Mtu. I, p. 144; cf. Lalitavistara, p. 65.

of the womb, and he issues out of the womb by the right side without piercing it.1 He cannot have kāma and so Rāhula was also self-born. But it will be observed that such conceptions about the Bodhisattva appear only in the introductory portion (p. 193) of the Mabāvastu, and very rarely in the remaining portion of the text. There are occasional references to Buddha as lokottara,2 but it seems that the lokottara conception had not yet taken firm hold of the people's minds. Buddha's acquisitions are said to be all supramundane and cannot be compared to anything worldly.3 His spiritual practices are supramundane and so are his merits, even his bodily movements such as walking, standing, sitting and lying are also supramundane. His eating, his putting on robes and such other acts are also supramundane. It is for following the ways of the world (lokanuvariana) that he shows his iryāpathas. His feet are clean, still he washes them. His mouth smells like the lotus, still he cleans his teeth. His body is not touched by the sun or wind or rain, still he puts on garment and lives under a roof. He cannot have any disease and still he takes medicine to cure himself.4 This lokottara conception also appears only in the introductory portion of the Mahāvastu; and so it is evident that the text'was originally an out and out Hinayana text, and that in course of time, the introductory chapters were added, and very probably the addition was made by one of its later offshoots, the Lokotraravadins.

<sup>1</sup> lbid., 1, p. 148: परिपुर्व हि च दशहि मासेहि सं वोधिसका: मातृः कृची पाद्मैनिन दिखिन पात्रेंन म च तं पाशे भिदाते।

<sup>2</sup> Mahāvastu, I, p. 48.

<sup>3</sup> Mahāvastu, I, p. 159: न इ किंचित सम्पक्तंत्रतानां लोकेन समें । यह साल सर्वेशन महर्षिणां लोकोत्तरम् । तथाहि सम्पक्त संत्रतानां समुदासमः सोऽपि लोकोत्तरः ।

<sup>4</sup> For the beautiful inspiring account read the Mahāvastu. I, pp. 167-170.

In the Abbidharmakośa and its Vyākhyā, it is said that according to the Mahāsanghikas, Buddhas appear at the same time in more than one world, and that they are omniscient in the sense that they know all dharmas at the same time. The former statement appears also in the Kathāvatthu (xxi, 6), in which it is stated that according to the Mahāsanghikas, Buddhas exist in all corners of the world (sabbā disā Buddhā titthanti). In the Kathāvatthu and the Kośa, no special doctrines about the Bodhisattva conception are attributed to the Mahāsanghikas.

Re. Arbat. There is a sharp difference of opinion among the various schools on the problem, viz., whether arhathood is identical with mukti or not? Those who adhere to the former view state that an arhat cannot recede from arbathood. This was the view of the Saila schools and a section of the Mahasanghikas.2 From Mahadeva's five points, we have to infer that a section of the earlier Mahasanghikas adhered to the opposite view, viz., that an arhat may fall from arbathood. In this respect the Kathāvatthu3 and the Koia4 come to our aid. These texts state that, according to a section of the Mahāsanghikas, the arhats are not omniscient like Buddha (vide Kon., XXI, 3) and that they are subject to fall from arhathood. The Kośa (ii, p. 210) incidentally mentions that an adept who has attained the nirodha-samapatti (meditation in which percept on ceases almost completely), appertaining to the fourth dhyana, cannot have a fall from that state. The Theravadins admit pattaparihani

<sup>1</sup> Kośa, iii. 200; ix, 254.

<sup>2</sup> Vide Masuda, p. 27; Kośa (Poussin's transl.), vi, p. 255 fn.

<sup>3</sup> Kun. I. 2: Parihāyati arahā arahattā ti?

<sup>4</sup> Koša-vyākbyā (Jap. ed.), p. 568-9.

<sup>5</sup> Kvn. Atthakathā, p. 35: Ekacce Mahāsanghikā arahato parihānim icchati.

(loss of what is attained) of those adepts who have attained only lokiya-samāpatti (meditation limited to the worldly sphere) and not the higher fruits of sanctification (arbatādisāmañnaphala) while the opponents speak of retrogression of the latter also, but confine it only to those arhats who are samayavimuttas.\(^1\) The basis of this contention of the opponents is a passage of the Anguttara Nihāya (iii. 173), in which Buddha says that five ārāmatā (indulgences), viz., in kamma, (deed), bhassa (desultory talks), niddā (sleep) and sanganikā (frequenting societies) lead to the fall of a samayavimutta-bbikkhu. Buddhaghosa infers from the discussion that the opponents assert that the arhats retrogress up to the Sotāpattiphala but no further and that the retrogression happens only in the sphere of Kāmaloka and not in the higher two spheres, Rūpa and Arūpa, and that also is confined only to the mudindriya or samayavimutta arhats.

The Kathāvatthu refers to another cause for the fall of an arbat, viz., (i) kammahetu arahā arahattā parihāyati (an opinion of the Pubbaseliyas and Sammitīyas). It means that the fall of an arbat is sometimes due to the deeds of his previous lives, e.g. of having calumniated an arbat. It also warns the opponents particularly the Pubba- and Apara-seliyas and Uttarāpathakas about impostors passing as an arbat and committing abrabmacarīya offences (vide Kvu., II. 1 & XXIII. 2).

Re. Anusaya (Dormant passion):

- (i) Anusayā anārammaņā and citta-vippayuttā (IX. 4) (Dormant passions are not objects of thought and are dissociated from mind).
- 1 By Samayavimutta is meant those arhats whose faculties are not very strong; according to the Theravadins these arhats complete their meditational course but have not attained complete self control.

This opinion is the same as that of the Saila schools, so it has been discussed along with their other views (see infra.) (cf. Koşa, transl., V, p. 4-5).

Re. Viññāna (Perception):

(i) Pañcaviññanasamangissa atthi maggabhāvanā (X. 3) (Inspite of the perceptions through the organs of sense, a person may progress along the spiritual path). (ii) Pañcaviññanā kusalā ti akusalā pī ti (X. 4) and (iii) Pañcaviññānā sābhogā (X. 5) (The five sense-perceptions may be good or bad and are "co-ideational" (sābhogā, lit., are associated with mental enjoyment).

The Mahäsanghikas on the basis of the statement of Bhagavā, "Idha bhikkhave bhikkhu cakkhunā rūpam disvā nimittaggāhī hoti...pe...na nimittaggāhī hoti...pe...sotena saddam sutvā etc.," contend that a person using the five senseorgans may practise maggabhāvanā, by not grasping the object seen or heard (nimittaggāhī) and directing his mind towards nibbāna. The Theravādins argue that if through pañcaviññāna one attains sotāpatti and other maggas, then the pañcaviññānā and magga should be of the same category, but the former is lokiya and the latter lokuttara, the former is savattbuka (have an object as basis) and the latter is avattbuka (without any basis). In this way the Theravādins argue that by the exercise of the five viññāṇas one does not attain nibbāna.

The opponents state that through the use of five viññāṇas a person may engender rāga (attachment) is self-evident though the Theravādins may not admit that the five perceptions are sābhogā (X. 5). In the discussion (VIII. 4) whether the five āyatanas are associated with desires (kāma), the Theravādins acknowledge that Buddha said that the five āyatanas may or may not be kāmaguṇas, and explained the same by saying that a person's organs of sense or the objects of the senses are not by themselves kāmaguṇas (associated with desires) but one, who has saṃkapparāga (desireful intention) and does not dissociate his mind from the objects of sense, is not expected to attain detachment from worldly objects.\(^1\) The Mahāsanghikas, I think, hold the identical opinion though it is not so clearly expressed in Vasumitra, it is only the Sarvāstivādins who held the opinion that the vijnānas conduce to sarāga and not to virāga (Masuda, p. 48).

<sup>1</sup> Meditational practices which lead to the attainment of the four maggas, viz., sotāpatti, sakadāgūmi, anāgāmi and arahatta.

Re. Indriyas (Organs of sense):

Cakkbunā rūpam passatī ti (Kvu. xviii. 9). Sentient surface of the eyes see).2

In the Kathāvatthu (xviii, 9), the Mahāsanghikas are said to hold the opinion that the organs of sense perceive and not their perceptive faculty (vijñāna). This is also the view of the Vaibhāṣikas (vide Kośa, transl. i. p. 81-2). The Saila schools and the Theravadins hold the opposite view (see infra).

Re. Anupubbābhisamaya (Gradual realisation of the truths):

The Mahāsanghikas like the Theravādins hold that the realisation of the truths takes place all at once and not gradually (for the contrary opinion of the Sarvāstivādins, a see infra).

<sup>1</sup> Quoted in the Kou., p. 370 from the Ang. Nik., III, 411.

<sup>2</sup> The eyes see and not the caksu-vijñāna is also the opinion of the Vaibhāsikas (Koša, i. 81-2). See Infra.

<sup>3</sup> Koša (transl.), vi, p. 185 fn.

Re. Apratisamkhyā-nirodba (Emancipation without knowledge):

The Buddhists admit two kinds of nirodha one attained by means of knowledge (pratisamkhyā) and the other by complete removal of all impurities which cause rebirth, and not by knowledge (apratisamkhyā). The Mahāsanghikas hold that the latter is paścād abhāva (subsequent absence) of dharmas in virtue of their spontaneous destruction, which are not reborn.

Re. Kleśa-bija (Germ of impurities):

The Mahāsanghikas state that kleša-bīja is a dharma distinct from kleša (Koša, v. p. 7).

Re. Reals:

The Mahāsanghikas maintain as against the Sarvāstivādins that the present exists but not the past and future.

Re. Vijnapti (Signs of intimation):

The Mahāsanghikas hold that vijňapti is also an act (Kośa, iv, p. 3). (Cf. p. 71).

Other opinions:

The following are some of the doctrines attributed to the Mahāsanghikas in the Kathāvatthu only:—

- (i) Restraint (samvara) or unrestraint (asamvara) of the organs of sense should be treated as action (kamma). The Theravadins regard it as non-action, their contention being that an action should be defined as the actual functioning of the five organs of sense initiated by mind (cetana). Kvu. XII. 1.
- (ii) All actions (sabbam kammam) are accompanied by results (savipāka). The Theravadins contend that as cetanā is the source of all actions, and as there are avyākata (neither good nor bad) and avipāka (unaccompanied by any result) cittas, there must be also avyākata and avipāka kammas, hence all actions are not necessarily accompanied by results.—Kvu. XII. 2.

<sup>1</sup> Kośa (transl.), ii, p. 280. 2 Cf. Kośa, (trasl.), iv, p. 52.

(iii) Sound and other āyatanas (spheres of the organs of sense) are also results of actions (kammassa katattā uppannam). In short, all non-materials (arūpadhammā) are products of actions (kammasamutthānā).—Kvu., XII. 3 & 4.3

(iv) Acquisition of moral purity is not mental (sīlam acetasikan ti; sīlam na cittānuparivattī ti). Kvu. X. 7. 8.

The Mahāsanghikas imply by the above opinion of theirs that purity in speech (sammā vācā), actions (sammā kammanta) and means of livelihood (sammā ājīva) is a corporeal property and as such is non-mental and requires no ārammana (basis). The M. mean that the observance of sīlas transforms the bodily constituents of a being in such a way that it can no longer commit any wrong, i.e., cannot be dussīla.

(v) The collection of silas (merits) is not associated with mind. (cittavippayuttam sīlopacayam). Kvu. X. 9.

Buddhaghosa explains this is due to misapprehension of the sense of the passage in the Samyutta Nikāya (I. p. 33): ārāmaropā vanaropā ye janā...tesam sadā puññam pavaddhati (the merits of those who plant park and woods increase at all times).

- (vi) Maggasamangissa rūpam maggo ti.5 Kvu. X. 2.
- (vii) Maggasamangī dvīhi sīlehi samannāgato ti.6 Kvu. X. 6.
- 1 Cetanāham kammam vadāmi—Atthas., p. 135.
- 2 See Dhammasangani, pp. 87 ff. 3 Cf. Kośa, (trasl.), i, p. 69-70.
- 4 Kuu. I, p. 422. See p. 21, re. Anusaya.
- 5 Transl. "That the physical frame of one who is practising the eightfold path is included in that path." Points of Controversy, p. 244.
  - 6 Transl. "That one who is engaged in the path is practising a

A maggasamangi is an advanced adept who has reached one of the maggas, i.e., sotapattimagga, etc., by following the eightfold path, and is engaged in maggabhāvanā (higher meditations). His mental states are transcendental (lokuttara). The question is whether the sīla practices1 completed by him in the presotāpanna stage and still possessed by him should be regarded as lokuttara or lokiya (belonging to the spheres of Kāma, Rūpa and Arūpa)? The M. contend that the rūpa of a maggasamangī (or maggattha) remains lokiya while his mental state (citta) becomes lokuttara, hence his sīlas, which belong to the category of rūpa as shown above, remain lokiya. Of the eight factors of the atthangika-magga, three, viz., sammā vācā, kammanta and ājīva of a sotapanna are silas and as such they are lokiya but the remaining five which are mental (arūpa) may be lokuttara. A sotāpanna therefore is in possession of lokiya sīlas but if he practises sammāsati, sammāvāyama, etc. he may be said to have lokuttara-sīlas. The Th. do not make any such distinction, for, all the eight sīlas, according to them, emanate from mind;2 so the sīlas of a sotāpanna, who has lokuttara-citta, are lokuttara.

- (viii) Acts of intimation are virtues (viññatti sīlan ti).
- (ix) Acts not intimating a moral purpose is immoral<sup>3</sup> (aviñnatti dussilyan ti). Kvu. X. 10, 11.

double morality." Ibid., p. 248. Vism., p. 6: Sīlena sotāpanna-sakadāgāmibhāvassa kāraṇaṃ pakāsitaṃ hoti. Sotāpanno hi sīlesu pari-pūrakārī ti vutto, tathā sakadāgāmi.

- 1 See Dhammasangani, p. 60.
- 2 Cf. Vism., p. 6: Kim silan ti? Cetanā silam, cetasikam silam, samvara silam, avitikkamo silan ti (quoted from Paţisambhidāmagga, I, p. 44).
- 3 See Points of Controversy, p. 252. For definition of Viññatti, see Atthas., pp. 83 ff.

Sila, according to the M., must be positive action and not mere restraint (samvara), so any viññatti (intimation) by means of body or speech is sila. Salutation, rising to welcome, folding hands, etc., are silas. The M., in view of their opinion that there may be accumulation of demerits without the association of mind (cittavippayuttam apuññupacayam), contend "that acts not intimating a moral purpose are immotal."

- (x) Insight is dissociated from mind (ñanam cittavip-payuttam). Kvu. XI. 3.
- (xi) One should not be called 'nāṇi' (possessed of insight) though his aññāṇa (spiritual ignorance) is gone but his thoughts are not conjoined with insight. (Aññāne vigate ñāṇavippayutte citte vattamāne na vattabbaṃ 'ñāṇī' ti). Kvu. XI. 2.

In this controversy nana means magganana (insight belonging to the adepts who are in one of the four maggas). The M. contend that at the moment when an adept has cakkhuviññana, etc., he cannot have maggañana. In other words they mean to say that it is only when an adept develops maggañana and stops his sense perceptions (viññanas), he may be described as 'ñana', hence ñana is not associated with mind (citta = viññana).

(xii) Akusalamülam paţisandahati kusalamülan ti.¹ Kou. XIV. 1.

The M. contend that as the same object may be the cause of both rāga (attachment) and virāga (detachment) and as one may follow the other immediately, it may be stated that kusala is the anantarapaccaya (contiguous cause) of akusala and vice versa. The Th. point out that cultivation of kusalamūla must be made deliberately (yoniso manasikaroto) while that of akusalamūla does not require any such thinking (ayoniso manasikaroto), and also that nekkhammasaññā (renunciating thought) does not always follow kāmasaññā (worldly thought) and vice versa, and so kusalamūla cannot be regarded generally as the contiguous cause of akusalamūla and vice versa.

<sup>2</sup> "That a basis of bad thought is consecutive to a basis that is good, and conversely." Points of Controversy, p. 282.

(xiii) Paccayatā vavatthitā ti. (One phenomenon can be related to another in one way only). Kvu. XV. 1.

The M. now enter into the problem of paccayas. There are twenty-four kinds of paccayas, viz., hetu, ārammaṇa, adhipati, sahajāta, anantara, etc.<sup>2</sup> They raise the question whether one object can be placed under two or more kinds of paccayas of another object, or one can be related to another by one relation only. The Th. hold that one object may be two kinds of paccayas, e.g., viriya may be both adhipati and sahajāta; vimaṃsā may be both betu and adhipati. The M. do not subscribe to this view.

(xiv) Avijjā paccayā pi saṃkbārā, na vattabbaṃ "saṃkbārā paccayā pi avijjā ti." Kvu. XV. 2.

This view of the M. is only a corollary to the previous one. The M. hold that avijjā is the hetu (cause) of saṃkhārā and as such there cannot be any other relation between the two. The Th., however, argue that avijjā and saṃkhārā are related to each other both as hetu and sahajāta (co-existent) or aññamañña (reciprocal), hence it may be stated that saṃkhārā are sahajāta-paccayā of avijjā, and vice versa. In the Vibbanga (pp. 156 ff.)

2 Sec Atthas., p. 9; Dukapatthāna, p. 3; Points of Controversy, App., pp. 390-2; Buddhist Psychology, pp. 194ff.

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Tihapatthana, pp. 168 ff.

<sup>3 &</sup>quot;That whereas actions are conditioned by ignorance, we may not say that ignorance is conditioned by actions." Points of Controversy, p. 294-the sampayutta (associated) and aññamañña (reciprocal) relations between any two consecutive links of the chain of causation are exhaustively dealt with, showing clearly the attitude of the Theravadins to the problem.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Majjbima Nikāya, I, p. 54-55: avijjā samudayā āsavā

(xv) Lokuttarānam dharmānam jarāmaranam lokuttaram (XV. 6) (decay and death of supramundane beings or objects are also supramundane).

(xvi) Paro parassa cittam nigganhāti (XVI. 1).

The Mahasanghikas hold that the spiritually advanced monks develop the power of controlling others' thoughts.

(xvii) Iddhibalena samannagato kappam tittheyya (XI. 5).

On the basis of Buddha's statement that those who have mastered iddbipāda (higher powers) may live for an acon if he so wishes, the Mahāsanghikas state that by means of higher attainments one can extend his life up to a kalpa."

āsavasamudayā avijjā; also Dīgha Nikāya, II. p. 56-57: viññāṇapaccayā nāmarūpam, nāmarūpapaccayā viññāṇan ti.

<sup>1</sup> See infra, p. 77, n. 4-

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Mahāparinibbānasutta, p. 117.

CHAPTER VIII (B)

DOCTRINES OF GROUP II SCHOOLS

The Saila Schools, Prajñaptivādins, Bahuśrutīyas and Vetulyakas

In discussing the doctrines of the Saila and other schools, Vasumitra has mixed them up with the Mahāsanghikas, probably with that section of the Mahāsanghikas who are distinguished in the Kathāvatthu-aṭṭhakathā as ekacce Mahāsanghikā. It is on the basis of the Kathāvatthu that we have distinguished the doctrine of the later Mahāsanghikas, whose opinion may be taken as identical with those of the Saila and other schools and put them together in the following pages.

I. Is Buddha human? -

In Vasumitra's treatise the Buddhas are described as lokottara (supramundane), and as such he is made of anasrava dbarmas<sup>1</sup> (pure qualities, without sleep or dream which are concomitants of sasrava dbarmas). Buddhas have unlimited rūpakāyas (material bodies), powers (balas), length of life (āyu), etc.

<sup>1</sup> Masuda renders it as "no sāsrava dharmas." The rendering, I would prefer, is "anāsrava dharmas," i.e. Buddhas are embodiment of anāsrava dharmas, viz., silaskandha, samādhisk., prajñāsk., vimuktisk. and vimuktijñānadarsanask. not of rūpa, vedanā, saññā, sankhārā and viññāna which are sāsrava dharmas. See my Aspects of Mahāyāna Buddhism and its Relation to Hinayāna (henceforth indicated as Aspects), p. 108.

In the Kathāvatthu (XVII. 1 &t 2) the above doctrines are attributed to the Vetulyakas, according to whom the Buddha does not live in the world of men neither should he be located anywhere and it is his created form (abbinimmito jino) that delivered the religious discourses. The Theravadins account for this heresy by saying that it is due to the literal but wrong interpretation of the passage: Bhagava loke jato loke sambuddho lokam abbibbuyya vibarati anupalitto lokenā ti (Buddha, born and enlightened in this world, overcame this world and remained untouched by the things of the world-Sam. Nik., iii. 140). This is supplemented by further discussions in the Kon., (XVIII. 1, 2 & XXI. 6) relating to the heresies also attributed to the Vetulyakas, viz., Na vattabbam, "Buddho Bhagavā manussaloke atthasi" ti (It should not be said that Buddha lived in the world of men-XVIII. 1); Sabbā disā Buddhā titthantī ti1 (Buddhas exist in all corners of the world- XXI. 6) and Abhinimmitena desito ti (the discourses are delivered by created forms-XVIII. 2). These show that according to the opponents of the Theravadins the Buddha is omnipresent and as such is beyond the possibility of location in any particular direction or sphere and that all the preaching of Buddhism has been done by the apparitional images of Buddha.

Buddhaghosa with his usual naïvety understood the Vetulyakas as holding the opinion that Buddha remained always in the Tusita heaven, where he was before he came to this world. The discussions in the Kathāvatthu as also the terse statements of Vasumitra leave no room for doubt about the fact that the Mahāsanghikas (specially their offshoots,—the Vetulyakas and the Lokottaravādins) regarded Buddha as transcendental. Masuda suggests that the sambbogakāya of Buddha is referred to in the heresies, but the time of emergence of the conception of sambbogakāya is still a matter of controversy.' From the discussion in the Kathāvatthu (XXI. 5) concerning "atthi Buddhānam Buddhebi binātirekatā ti (whether Buddhas mutually differ?) it seems that the Andhakas (another offshoot of the Mahāsanghikas) were still concerned with the Sambhogakāya and had not yet arrived at the conception of the Dharmakāya. Buddhaghosa says that the Andhakas hold that Buddhas differ from one another in some qualities other than attainments like satipatthāna, sammāppadhāna, etc., the orthodox school holding that Buddhas may differ in respect of sarīra (body), āyu (length of life) and pabhāva (radiance) but not in regard to the artainments mentioned above. The discussion in the Kun. (XVIII. 3) shows that the Uttarapathakas held the views that Buddhas can have no karuna (compassion), and that Buddha's body is made of anasrava dharmas. In the Mahavastu (I, p. 167-8) the conception of lokottara Buddha appears thus: -Transcendental are the practices of Bhagavan, and so are his kuśalamūlas, his eating, drinking and such other daily actions. He follows the ways of the world just as much as he follows the transcendental ways.2 He makes a show of standing, walking and other iriyapathas, but he never gets tired. He washes his feet or body though there is no dirt to wash; he cleanses his teeth

<sup>1</sup> This is the opinion of the Mahāsanghikas only according to the Kun.

t Masuda's opinion, however, can be supported by the fact that in the Mahāvastu (I. p. 169) Buddha's kāya is equated to nisyandakāya rendered into Chinese by pao sheng which is also the rendering of sambbogakāya, see my Aspects, pp. 117, 120.

<sup>2</sup> Mahāvastu, I. p. 168: लोकानुवर्तमां बुद्धा अनुवर्तना लीकिकों। पञ्चित्रमनुवर्तना यथा लोकोशरामपि ॥

though his mouth smells like a lotus; he eats though he has no hunger, and so forth. These are all due to his being an embodiment of the effects of good acrions. There is nothing in common between Him and the beings of the world. Everything of the great is transcendental including his advent into the world.

If the transcendence of Buddha be admitted, then it follows as a matter of course that his length of life would be unlimited and that he could not be subject to sleep or dream, as he could have no fatigue, and one who is without sleep and ever awake has nothing to do with dream. It is worth noting here that even in the Pāli suttas like the Mabāparmibbānasutta there are hints to the effect that a Buddha, if he wishes, can extend his life-limit up to a Kalpa or the end of a Kalpa thus revealing that the transcendental conception has taken roots in the minds of the Buddhists at a very early date.

In the Kathāvatthu<sup>5</sup> the discussion resting with the topic: Buddhassa Bhagavato vohāro lokuttaro ti reveals that the Andhakas, to whom the above opinion is ascribed, held that Buddha's actions (vohāro) are lokuttara and that they are treated as lokiya (mundane) and lokuttara (supramundane) according as the object of the action is lokiya or lokuttara. Mr. Shwe Zan Aung prefets to confine the sense of the word "vohāro" to r Cf. Kun. XVIII. 4: Buddhassa Bhagavato uccārapassāvo ativiya aññe gandhajāte adhiganhātiti—opinion of some Andhakas and Uttarāpathakas.

<sup>2</sup> Mtu., I, p. 169: मुजानो समिन्धन्दानो एवा लोकानुवर्तना । Cf. Lanka. pp. 28, 34: निधन्दन्ता । 3 Mtu., I, p. 159-

<sup>4</sup> Digha, II, p. 103: yassa kassaci cattāro iddhipādā bhāvitā—so ākankhamāno kappam vā tittheyya kappāvasesam vā.

<sup>5</sup> Kun., II, 10. 6 Sans. Vyavabāra

"speech", and we think there is good reason for it. In Vasumitra's treatise an opinion of this nature is attributed to the Mahāsanghikas in contrast to the Sarvāstivādins, viz., the sūtras (or discourses) preached by the Buddha are all perfect in themselves (nītārtha). Buddhas speak of nothing but dharma (doctrines), as such their teaching is concerned only with paramarthasatya (paramatthasacca), i.e., not with samurtisatya (sammutisacca).2 The paramarthasatya cannot be normally expressed by words. It can be explained only by silence or at the most by an exclamation-which idea, I think, is expressed in Vasumitra's treatise thus: "The Buddha can expound all the doctrines with a single utterance and that there is nothing which is not in conformity with the truth in what has been preached by the World-honoured one." In the Upāyakauśalyaparivarta of the Saddharmapundarika it has been shown that for training up deluded beings in his doctrines, Buddha did take recourse to various expedients which were false, i.e., unreal (samurti or sammuti), and that through such teachings he led the deluded beings to the truth-paramartha. So it follows that all his teachings collected in the Pitakas are merely samorti or sammuti (unreal) and hence they are not his real teachings.4

According to the Mahāsanghikas, Vasumitra says, Buddhas have both kṣayajñāna and anutpādajñāna5 always present in their

<sup>1</sup> Cf. M.Vr., p. 494 व्यवहारमनायित्य परमार्थो न देश्यते।

<sup>2</sup> Paramārtha-satya means the highest truth while samorti-satya means the so-called truths as used in every day usage by the people in general. For detailed treatment see my Aspects, pp. 216 ff. 3 Asia Major, II, p. 19.

<sup>4</sup> Aspects, p. 198.

<sup>5</sup> Masuda, pp. 21, 42.

(a) Kṣayajñāna means cognizance of the fact that all the āsavas are destroyed;

mind, the Sarvāstivāda holding that all Arhats may have kṣayajñāna but a few only have anutpādajñāna; the Theravādins, however, do not make such a distinction.

Among the other attributes of this lokottara Buddha, Vasumitra's treatise speaks of his powers (balas)<sup>1</sup> as unlimited while the Mahāvastu of his five eyes (cakṣus)<sup>2</sup> as uncommon

- (b) Anutpādajñāna means cognizance of the fact that one will not be reborn again, Cf. Kola, VI, 67; Atthasālini, p. 54 Cf. Aspects, p. 106 fn. 1.
- The ten balas are,— (Mahāvastu, pp. 159-160).
- स्थानास्थानं वेत्ति
- 2. सबैतगामिनी च प्रतिपद देखि
- 3. नानाधानुक लोक विदन्ति
- 4 अधिमुक्तिनानारवं विभि
- 5. परपुरुषचरितकुशलानि वेति
- कमेवलं प्रतिज्ञानिक यभाग्रसम्
- 7 लेश-यवदानं वित्त ध्यानसमापत्ति वित्ति
- 8. पूर्वनिवासं वेशि
- परिश्वतदिध्यनयना भवन्ति
- 10. सर्वक्र शविनाशं प्राप्नीनित

(Kathāvatthu and Majjhima Nikāya).

- 1. Thanathanam janati...
- 2. Sabbatthagāminipatipadam jānāti.
- Anekadbātum nānādbātum lokam jānāti.
- 4. Sattānam nānādhimuttikatam jānāti.
- Parasattānam parapuggalānam indriya-paropariyattam yathābhūtam pajānāti.
- Atitānāgatāpaccuppannānam betuso vipākam jānāti.
- jbānavimokkbasamādhisamāpattīnam sankilesam vodānam vottbānam yatbābbūtam pajānāti.
- anekavibitam pubbenivāsam annssarati.
- dibbena cakkbunā satte passati cavamāne upapajjamāne etc.
- 10. āsavānam khayā anāsavam cetovimuttim paññāvimuttim ditthe va dhamme sayam abbiññā sacchikatvā upasampajja viharati.
- 2 By eyes, the text means all the five, viz., māmsacakṣu, divyac., prajñāc., dharmac., and buddhac.

(asādhāraṇa) and excelling those of Pratyekabuddhas. Arbats and others. This particular topic—tathāgatabalam sāvakasādhāraṇam ti has been taken up for discussion in the Kathāvatthu (III, 1), but strangely enough the position taken by the compiler of the Kathāvatthu is not that of a Theravādin but of a Lokottaravādin Mahāsanghika as against the Andhakas, i.e., the Saila schools. In Vasumitra's treatise this topic appears in a slightly different form.

The Theravadins do not regard Buddha as lokottara but attribute to him almost all the powers and qualities of a lokottara Buddha and this discussion reveals one of such instances. The ten special balas (powers) of a Tathagata appear not only in the Mahāvastu (i, pp. 159-160) but also in old Pāli works like the Majjhima Nihāya (i, pp. 69 ff.). The contention of the Andhakas is that there is a certain degree of difference between the Buddhas and the Arhats regarding the acquisition of the ten balas, and as such, Buddhas and Arahats are not on the same level (asādbāraṇam). In the Mahāvastu and the Pāli works this view is accepted with this reservation that Buddhas are sarvākārājāa, i.e., they possess a complete and detailed knowledge of everything, while an Arhat can at the utmost have sectional knowledge.1 The Pali school, i.e., the Theravadins hold that as far as vimutti is concerned there is no difference between a Buddha and an Arhat, and that Buddhas are superior to the Arhats only on account of the fact that the former are promulgators of a new law while the Arhats are only followers of the same.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Kon. Cy.. p. 62: Thānāthānādini hi sāvakā padesena jānanti. Tathāgatā nippadesena iti. Tāni uddesato sādhāranāni; niddesato asādhāraṇāni—niddesato sabbākāravisayatam saṃdhāya paṭikkhipati. Cf. Mtm., I, p. 158: बोधिम्लन्यूया चामामार्था सर्वोकारकार्या देवचयु: समजावता मधन्ति। Cf. Aspects, p. 106 fn. 1.

II. Are Bodhisattvas average beings?

If, according to the Mahasanghikas, Buddhas are lokottara, and if the Buddhas, we puthujjanas know of, are only created forms of the real Buddha, the Bodhisattvas also cannot be average human beings-they must also be supramundane. In Vasumitra's treatise the following account of the Bodhisattvas is given: The Bodhisattvas do not pass through the embryonic stages. They assume the form of white elephants when they enter their mothers' wombs and come out of the same by the right side. The above opinion is the natural outcome of the legendary belief that came to be woven around the person of the great man about a century after his actual existence. In the Lalitavistara,2 the Bodhisattva is placed not only in a crystal casket put within the womb but while in that state he is said to be preaching his dharma to the heavenly beings that flocked around him. The stories of the white elephant seen by Māyā in a dream at the time of her conception and the birth of the Bodhisattva by bursting through the right side of the mother's womb are too well-known to need any comment. The incorporation of these legends in the doctrines of the Mahāsanghikas shows that the Bodhisattva conception of the Mahāyānists was yet in the course of development.

The only doctrine that can be described as Mahāyānic is that Bodhisattvas take birth out of their own free will in any form of existence for imparting Buddhist dharmas to the sentient beings of that particular form of existence<sup>1</sup> an idea well illustrated in the lātakas, and developed in the later Mahāyāna works like the Sikṣāsamuccaya and the Bodhicaryāvatāra. This topic has been taken up for discussion in the Kathāvatthu (XXIII. 3): Bodhisatto issariyakāmakārikabetu vinipātam gacchatī ti—but the arguments put forward completely ignore the standpoint of the Mahāsanghikas and attempt to show the untenability of the opponent's proposition by treating the Bodhisattva as nothing but an average human adept toiling along the path towards the attainment of bodhi.

This argument is adduced in the Kvu. See also Sam. Nik., III, p. 66.

<sup>2</sup> Lalitavistara, ch. VI, p. 73 (of A.S.B. edition).

In the niyāmokkantikathā<sup>2</sup> (Kvu., IV. 8, XII. 5, 6 XIII. 4) the same attitude is taken by the Theravādins. By niyāma, the Theravādins understand sammattaniyāma and micchattaniyāma, the former being the practice of brahmacariya (purity in conduct) and ariyamagga (path of sanctification) including, for the Bodhisattvas, the fulfilment of pāramis, leading to nibbāna (i.e. samyaktva or sammatta), and the latter the commission of heinous crimes (anantarīyakamma) leading to hell (i.e., mithyātva or micchatta), all other practices being looked upon as aniyata (un-predestined). In the sense as expressed above any Stāvaka can be a sammattaniyāma and he need not be a bodhisattva. The Theravādins do not recognise the bodhisattvas as superior in attainments to the Srāvakas, and in the matter of brahmacariya and practice of ariyamagga they do not want to make any distinction between a Stāvaka and a Bodhisattva.

In the Lankāvatāra and Asanga's Sūtrālankāra and such other Mahāyāna works however it is repeatedly stated that a person by the development of bodhicitta becomes a niyata Bodhisattva, i.e., through the fulfilment of pāramis and practice of the various forms of asceticism he is to become ultimately a Buddha. Siddhārtha Gautama, in one of his previous births as Jotipāla-māṇava, did, as a matter of fact, develop bodhicitta at the time of Kassapa Buddha and then through several births, he fulfilled the paramis and took recourse to all possible sadhanas, whether Buddhistic or non-Buddhistic and ultimately attained perfection. He even became disciples of Ālāra Kālāma and Rudraka Rāmaputta whose doctrines are treated as heresies in the Brahmajāla and other suttas. In the Mahāyāna texts emphasis is laid more on bodhicitta than on brahmacariya and ariyamagga. In the Kathāvatthu discussion, the Mahāyānic sense of niyata is ignored and the Theravada sense of sammattaniyama is kept in view. In the Kathāvatthu (XIII. 4) it is argued that to speak of a niyata śrāvaka or bodhisattva to have become a sammatta1 is illogical. The difference of opinion really rests on the interpretation given to the word niyata in Mahāyāna texts as against that given by the Kathāvatthu writer and commentator. Inspite of the above interpretation of niyāma and attitude of the Theravadins they contend that Gautama Buddha in his bodhisattva existence did not become a disciple (śrāvaka) of Kassapa Buddha. In support of their contention they cited the passage: na me ācariyo atthi, sadiso me na vijjabi etc. The Andhakas, strangely enough, took the opposite view and asserted that he did become a śrāvaka of Kassapa Buddha and cited the passage from the Majjhima Nikāya (ii, p. 54): Kassapo, aham Ānanda bhagavati brahmacariyam acarim sambodhāyā ti etc.2

<sup>1</sup> Masuda, p. 21.

<sup>2</sup> Stepping into the path destined to reach Nibbana.

<sup>3</sup> Kvu., pp. 78, 143: Ime dve niyāme thapetvā añño niyāmo nāma natthi.

<sup>1</sup> Na niyatassa niyāmokkamanam tasmā asādhakan ti. Kvu. A., p. 143.

<sup>2</sup> Kvu., p. 288.

According to the Theravadins, the Bodhisattvas as a class of beings as envisaged in the Satralankara and Lankavatara do not exist. The individual, who happens to become the Buddha, is called a bodhisattva in his previous existence just to distinguish him as a being superior to an average one; by calling him a bodhisattva the Theravadins do not attribute to him any special virtues unattainable by a śravaka. The Mahasanghikas or the Andhakas do not subscribe to the above view. According to them an individual from the moment he develops bodhicuta becomes a bodhisatta and is destined (niyata) to become a Buddha and follows a career which is quite different from that of a śravaka. The career of the former is marked more by love and compassion for the suffering beings than by path-culture while that of the latter has more of path-culture and sadbana than exercise of metta and karuna.

III. Are Arhats fully emancipated?

According to Vasumitra, Bhavya and Vinitadeva, the secession of the Mahāsanghikas from the Theravādins happened on account of the five points of Mahādeva. Four of these points relate to the qualities attainable by an Arhat. According to the Theravādins only one who is fully emancipated is called an Arhat,—he is anupatto sadattho vītarāgo vītadoso vītamoho khīnāsavo ohitabhāro katakaranīyo nāparam itthattāyā ti (in possession of the excellent goal, free from attachment, hatred and delusion, in short, all impurities, relieved of burden of khandhas, accomplished in all that is to be done and-devoid of any further existence). He has further acquired the clear vision about the origin and destruction of things, got rid of all doubts (kankhā) about the Buddha, Dhamma and Sangha, non-existence of soul and the theory of causation, seen things for himself without the help of others (na paravitāranā)1 and attained bodhi which however is catumaggaññana2 and not sabbaññutañana—the bodhi of the Buddhas.3 The Theravadins do not admit the failings4 which are attributed to the Arhats by the Bahuśrutīyas, the Saila schools and the Haimavatas. The failings are thus enumerated in Vasumitra's treatise:

- (1) Arhats can be tempted by others;
- (2) They have still ignorance;
- (3) They have still doubt;
- (4) They gain knowledge through others' (help).5

In the Kathāvatthu (II, 1-5) all the above statements are taken up for discussion and appear thus:

- (i) Atthi arabato rago? (II. 1).6
- (ii) Atthi arahato aññanan ti? (II. 2).
- (iii) Atthi arahato kankhā ti? (II. 3).
- (iv) Atthi arahato paravitāranā ti? (II. 4).

The Theravadins emphatically deny that an Arhat who is free from attachment (vitarāga) can be subject to temptation. The

- 1 See infra, p. 87.
- 2 The catumaggas are sotāpatti, sakadāgāmi, anāgāmi and arhatta.
- 3 See Kun., A., p. 76.
- 4 For the discussion "Parihāyati arahā arahattā ti" see infra, p. 90.
- 5 Masuda, pp. 24, 36, 38, 52; cf. IRAS., 1910, pp. 413-423. For the 5th point see infra, p. 87.
- 6 In the text the wording is "atthi arahato asucisukkavisatthi?" It perhaps refers to an instance of the Māra gods having removed asucisukka of an arhat. The commentator remarks that the impostors passing as arhats may have asucisukkavisatthi and upon that the contention of the Saila schools is based. The Theravadins take their stand upon the fact an arhat cannot have raga and hence they cannot commit asucisukkavisatthi.
  - 7 Aññanam is not the same as avijja.

opponents, as shown in the Kvu., draw a subtle distinction between a Sa-(=Sans. Sva-)dhammakusala-arbat and a Paradhammakusala-arbat, the former, according to the commentator, is a Paññāvimutta and the latter an Ubhatobhāgavimutta, that is, the knowledge of the former is confined to his own personal attainments while that of the latter is extended to other's attainments besides his own. In the Pāli texts the Ubhatobhāgavimutta is not regarded as superior to the Paññāvimutta the only distinction made between the two is that the former has samathābbinivesa¹ and realisation of eight vimokkhas² while the latter has vippassanābbinivesa³ and realisation of only four jhānas,⁴ but as far as the question of rāga or āsavas is concerned both the classes of Arhats must be regarded as completely free from them, hence the subtle distinction drawn by the opponents is of no avail according to the Theravādins.

The next two points, that an arhat may have ignorance (i.e. aññāṇa and not avijjā) and doubt (kaṅkhā or vimati) are also vehemently opposed by the Theravādins on the ground that one cannot be an arhat unless he gets rid of avijjā and vieikiechā and develops perfect vision free from impurities (virajam vītamalaṃ dhammacakkhuṃ) after having dispersed all his doubts (kaṅkhā vapayanti sabbā).

The opponents, as presented in the Kvw., in this case also draw a distinction between a Sadhammakusala-arhat and a Para-

<sup>3</sup> Samatha leads to concentration of thoughts and eradication of attachment (rāga). Cf. Anguttara, I, p. 61: rāgavirāgā cetovimutti.

<sup>2</sup> For the eight Vimokkhas, see Appendix.

<sup>3</sup> Vipassanā leads to knowledge and removal of ignorance. Cf. Anguttara, I, p. 61: avijjāvirāgā paññāvirnutti.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Aspects. pp. 250, 276. See Majjbima, I, p. 477 and Manorathapūrani, III, p. 188; Puggala-paññatti, 14, 72.

dhamma-kusala-arhat, saying that both the classes of arhats may not have avijjā in regard to the truths, the theory of causation, etc. or vicikicchā about Buddha, Dharma and Sangha or absence of soul, but the former may have aññāna and kankhā, say, as regards the name and family of an unknown man or woman or of a tree. It should be noted here the opponents do not mean sabbaññutañāna (omniscience) but just paradhammañāna—an intellectual power attained by the Ubhatobhāgavimutta-arhats, by which they can know many things outside himself. Arguing in this way the opponents maintain that a section of the arhats, i.e., the Paññāvimuttas or Sa-dhammakusala-arhats have ignorance (aññāna) relating to things or qualities other than those belonging to himself.

The same arguments and counter-arguments are applied in the next discussion relating to atthi arahato paravitāranā? The word paravitāranā perplexed our translator Mr. Shwe Zan Aung.¹ The discussion in the Kvw. reveals that the word means that an arhat develops faith in the Triratna or acquires knowledge of the truths, etc. not by himself but through the instruction of his preceptor¹ in whom he had firm faith. The Theravādins oppose the contention of the opponents, saying that an arhat is vītamoha and is possessed of dhammacakkhu and so he does not require paravitāranā. The opponents as before contend that a sa-dhammakusala-arhat requires paravitāranā. while a para-dhammakusala-arhat does not.

Another statement of Vasumitra relating to the Arhats, r "Excelled by others." See Points of the Controversy, p. 119. Buddhaghosa writes: yasmā yesam tāni vatthuni pare vitaranti pakāsenti ācikkhanti tasmā tesam atthi paravitāraņā ti.

Cf. Masuda, p. 24: "gain spiritual perception by the help of others (lit. enlightenment through others)."

namely, "one who is kṛtakṛtyaḥ (=Pāli: katakaraṇyo) does not take any dharma to himself i.e. has no attachment for worldly things" is echoed, I think, in the Kvn. (XVII, 1 & XXII. 2) in these terms: atthi arabato puññopacayo ti? and arabā kusalacitto parinibbāyatī ti. The Theravādins agreeing with the Mahāsanghikas contend that the citta of Arhats goes beyond pāpa and puṇya, kusala and akusala, kriyā and vipāka, hence, to speak of them as acquiring merits or demerits is absurd. The opponents, the Andhakas, however, contend that the Arhats perform many good deeds, e.g., making gifts, worshipping caityas and so forth, and remain always self-possessed (sato sampajāno) even at the time of his parinibbāna, and so he does collect merits and passes away with kusalacitta,

Neither the above discussions in the Kathavatthu nor the terse statements of Vasumitra help us much in finding out the real difference between the Andhakas and the Theravadins about the position of an Arhat. The Mahāyāna works point out the distinction thus: Arhats, who are perfect Śrāvakas, get rid of only klesavarana, i.e., the veil of impurities consisting of raga, dosa, moha, sīlabbataparāmāsa, and vicikicchā but not of jñeyāvarana, i.e., the veil which conceals the truth-the veil which can only be removed by realising the Dharma-śūnyatā or Tathatā.1 It is the Buddha alone who is perfectly emancipated having both kleśavarana and jñeyavarana removed. That the Mahāsanghikas appear to be groping to get at this clear distinction will be evident from two other topics discussed in the Kun. but not referred to in Vasumitra's treatise. The topics are,atthi kiñci saññojanam appahāya parinibbānan ti? (XXII. 1) or arahattappattīti? (XXI. 3). To these the Mahāsanghikas replied in the affirmative, saying that an arhat is nikkileso (free from impurities) and does attain parinibbana or arhatta but as he is not cognizant of all that is Buddhavisaya (domain of Buddha's knowledge), it must be admitted that some saññojanas are left in him. This opinion may be taken as a hint that the arhats do not remove the jñeyāvarana.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> For details, see Aspects, pp. 35 ff.

- 2 There are a few subsidiary discussions in the Kathāvatthu relating to Arhats. These are given here briefly:—
  - IV. 1. Householders cannot become Arhats—Theravādins.
     But householders like Yasa, Uttiya, Setu became Arhats— Uttarāpathakas.
  - IV. 2. No one is born as Arhats—Therav.

    But there are Upahacca-(uppajja)-parinibbāyī Arhats— Uttarāp.
  - IV. 3. All dharmas of Arhats are not anāsava, e.g. their physical body etc.—Therav.
    But Arhats are anāsavā (free from āsavas)—Uttarāp.
  - IV. 4. In the Arhat stage, only arhattaphala is acquired—Therav. But all the phalas are possessed by the Arhats—Uttarāp.
  - An Arhat is chalupekkho (see App.)—Therav.
     Rather Arahā chahî upekkhāhi samannāgato—Uttarāp.
  - IV. 10. All saññojanas are gradually destroyed and not by Arhattamagga alone—Therav.

But by the destruction of all saññojanas one becomes an Arhat—Andhakas.

- XVII. 2. Arhats may have untimely death as arahatghātaka is mentioned in the Buddhavacanas—Therav.
  - But as one cannot become an Arhat before the karmaic effects are exhausted, an Arhat cannot have untimely death—Rājagirikas and Siddhatthikas.
- XVII. 3. Arhats do not die when in imperturbable meditation and devoid of kriyācitta—Therav.

But did not Gautama Buddha pass away immediately after arising from the 4th jhāna—Uttarāp.

IV. Can there be retrogression of Arhats, Srotaāpannas and other Phalasthas?

The following views regarding the possibility of retrogression of Arhats, Srotaāpannas and other phalasthas are attributed in Vasumitra's treatise' to a section of the Mahāsanghikas and some of their sub-sects:

 From the gotrabhūmidharma there is in all stages the possibility of retrogression.

 (ii) A Srotaāpanna has a chance of retrogression while an Arhat has not.

The above two views are discussed in the Kathāvatthu under the topic: Parihāyati arahā arahattā ti? (I. 2).

It will be observed that the Kon. does not attribute to the Mahāsanghikas the above views about the retrogression of Arhats and Srotaāpannas. According to the Mahāsanghikas, the Kon. says, an Arhat has retrogression while a Srotaāpanna has not, while Vasumitra takes a contrary view, as above (ii). Vasumitra says that the former opinion is held by the Sarvāstivādins and other schools. Buddhaghosa points our that this opinion is held by one section of the Mahāsanghikas and not all, and so Vasumitra may have in view the views "of that section, according to whom the Arhats may retrogress but the Srotaāpannas do not."

All the schools advocating the view that arhats retrogress hold, as stated in the Kun., that the Sotāpannas have no retrogression. This, however, contradicts the statement of Vasumitra.<sup>6</sup> All these schools accept that a sotāpanno is niyato

r Masuda, p. 22

<sup>2</sup> Kun, A., p. 35: Sammitiyā Vajjiputtiyā Sabbatthivādino ekacce ca Mahāsanghikā arahato parihānim iechati.

<sup>3</sup> See Masuda, II, p. 27.

sambodhiparāyano and hence is not subject to retrogression, but a sakadāgāmī or an anāgāmī may retrogress but not further than the sotāpanna stage, for some of the adepts in these stages may have anusaya which may develop into pariyuṭṭhāna¹ and thus bring about the fall—an argument which will be discussed next in connection with the Aṭṭhamakas. In regard to these two stages the Kvu. corroborates Vasumitra's statement (no. ii).

Regarding the srotaāpannas, Vasumitra further states that:

- (1) they are capable of knowing their own nature (svabhāva) through their citta and caitasika dharmas;
- (2) they can also attain the dhyāna;
- (3) they are liable to commit all sorts of offences except the five anantariyas (i.e. matricide, patricide etc.)

In the Kvu. we do not come across any controversy relating to the first two topics. This silence may be interpreted as that the Theravadins accepted the two views. As regards the third topic, we may take into consideration the controversy: Ditthisampanno puggalo sancicca panam jivita voropeyya ti? (see infra). A sotapanna is a person with right view (ditthisampanno), hence, according to the Theravadins, he cannot commit killing (panatipata) or such other offences, not to speak of the five extreme offences like matricide or patricide. Vasumitra perhaps speaks of the opinion of that section of the Mahasanghikas i.e., the Andhakas, who contemplate the retrogression of the Sotapannas while the Kvu. very likely speaks of the other section, according to whom the Sotapannas do not retrogress.

I Anusaya means that which lies in the mind in a latent state with the possibility of its coming into appearance if it receives an effective impulse, while pariyutthana means its actual appearance in the mind without however a corresponding response in the outer world. For further details, see p. 94f.

There are in Vasumitra's treatise two other statements, which also relate to the Srotaāpannas. They are,—

- (i) When one enters into the samyakatva-nyama, one may be said to destroy all samyojanas.<sup>2</sup>
- (ii) None of the dharmāyatanas<sup>2</sup> can be known or understood: they can be attained (only by those Aryan pudgalas above the darśanamārga).

The Kew. contributes no discussion on the above two points. The Theravadins also cannot but subscribe to these views.

- V (a). Do the Atthamakas have anusaya and pariyutthana? Relating to the Atthamakas, Vasumitra says that according to the Mahāsanghikas—
  - (i) In the eighth stage (astamaka-bhūmi) one can remain for a long time.

In the Kvu. (III. 5) the identical problem is discussed in these words:

(i) Atthamakassa puggalassa ditthipariyutthanam pahinan ti?

Masuda's comment on the first view seems to be wide of the mark, though he quotes 'Shu-chi as his authority.

The discussion in the Kathavatthu clears up the view thus:

t See above, p. 82.

<sup>2</sup> The three samyojanas are silabbataparāmāsa, vicikicehā, micebādiṭṭhi,

<sup>3</sup> The Dharmāyatanas are vedanā, samjītā, and samskārā. Cf. Abbi, Koša, p. 46.

<sup>4</sup> The atthamakas are those who have just stepped into the Sotipanna-hood, which is the eighth or the lowest stage in the fruits of sanctification.

<sup>5</sup> For the meaning of the term and its distinction from pariyatebana, see p. 91, fn. 1.

According to the Andhakas, an adept who is in the eighth stage i.e., sotāpatti-maggaṭṭha and not yet sotāpanna gets rid of diṭṭhipariyuṭṭhāna, sīlabbata-p. and vicikicchā-p. but not diṭṭhi-anusaya, sīlabbata-a., and vicikicchā-a., i.e., the anusayas may become active (uppajjissati) if they receive an impulse. The Andhakas by drawing this distinction between pariyuṭṭhāna and anusaya hold that an aṭṭhamaka may not get rid of the three anusayas and consequently remain away from the sotāpanna stage for a long time.¹

The Kathāvatthu also discusses the following two allied views attributed to the Pubbaseliyas and the Uttarāpathakas:

(i) Ditthisampanno puggalo sancicca panam jivita voropeyya ti? XII. 7 (Pubbaseliyas)

(ii) Ditthisampannassa puggalassa pahīnā duggatī ti? XII. 8 (Uttarāpathakas).

By the first view the Pubbaseliyas mean that a person by having sammādithi does not get rid of dosa (hatred), hence he can commit the sin of killing—a view wholly rejected by the Theravādins. By the second view the Uttarāpathakas assert that a person with sammādithi cannot be reborn in a lower form of existence; the Theravādins point out that it may be so, but he may have tanhā (desire) for objects and beings belonging to the lower forms of existences.

V (b). Are anusaya and paryavasthana associated with mind or not?

There are in Vasumitra two statements relating to anusaya and paryavasthāna, which will clear up the above problem further.—

1 Atthamaka puggalas have saddhā but not saddhindriya— Andhaka.

- (i) Anusayas (dormant passions or latent bias) are neither citta nor caitasika dharmas: and again they never become the object of thought (analambana).
- (ii) Anusaya is different from paryavasthāna (pervading passion) and paryavasthāna is different from anusaya. It must be said that the anusaya does not combine (samprayuj) with the citta whereas the paryavasthāna does.

Relating to the above topics, the Kun. has,

- (i) Anusayā anārammanā ti? (IX. 4) and cittavippayuttā
- (ii) Anusayā avyākatā ti (XI. 1)
- (iii) Añño kāmarāgānusayo aññam kāmarāgapariyuṭṭhānan ti? (XIV. 5)
- (iv) Pariyutthanam cittavippayuttan ti? (XIV. 6)

Masuda offers the following interpretation from the 'Shu-chi: The anusayas are really bijas (germs inborn in the mind) of rāga and other passions. They remain dormant unless excited by the corresponding impulse. They remain always in the mind, even in kusalacitta, so they are dissociated from the mind and do not require any object (ālambana) for support. When the anusaya is excited by a suitable impulse, it becomes paryavasthāna (pariyuṭṭhāna) and as such becomes a mental function (caitasika), and then only it becomes an impurity and clogs the way to spiritual progress. The interpretation given above is corroborated by the Kvn. A.¹ The Theravādins however do not distinguish between kāmarāgānusaya and kāmarāgapariyuṭṭhāna and maintain that as the anusayas are included in the Saṃkhārakkhandha, they are all sārammana. But according to the Andhakas some saṃkhāras are sārammaṇa (with basis) and some are anārammaṇa (without basis), but not so are the remaining four khandhas. The Andhakas further maintain that as a puthujjana having kusalāvyākata-citta is sometimes described as "sānusayo ti" when their anusayas are without any ārammaṇa, it must be admitted that anusayas may be anārammaṇā.

<sup>1</sup> Kon, A., p. 117: Tattha yesäm anusayä näma cittavippayuttä ahetukä avyäkatä ten' eva anärammanä 'ti laddhi seyyathä pi Andhakänañ c' eva ekaccänañ ca Uttaräpathakänam.

From the above discussion it is apparent that the anusayas, according to the Andhakas, are avyākata<sup>2</sup> i.e. neither good nor bad, and consequently they are citta-vippayutta, and also causeless (ahetuka). The Andhakas in the third discussion assert that anusayas are different from pariyuṭṭhānas, but in the fourth the Kvu. makes the Andhakas contend that pariyuṭṭhānas are also cittavippayuttas, which, however, apppear to be contradictory. Vasumitra says that the pariyuṭṭhānas according to these schools are cittasampayuttas, so we must dismiss the statement of the Kvu. as unwarranted.

"The world in its variety originates out of actions (karma) which accumulate on account of anuśayas. In the absence of anuśayas, karma is not capable of producing a new existence (punarbhava). Consequently the root of bhava or rebirth is karma, in other words, anuśaya." With these words Vasubandhu opens the fifth book of Kośa. (See Kośa, V, p. 1).

The Sarvāstivādins like the Theravādins regard anuśaya, paryavasthāna and kleśa as same, the only distinction being that anuśaya is the subtle, while paryavasthāna the manifest, state of rāga, dosa, moha, etc.

<sup>1</sup> Kuu., p. 407: Saṃkhārakkhandho ekadeso sārammaņo, ekadeso anārammaņo.

<sup>2</sup> The Andhakas, it seems, looked upon the anusayas as vipākacitta and treated the same as avyākata. Cf. Dhammasangani.

The Kośa too deals with the problem under discussion, viz., whether or not anuśaya (e.g. kāmarāgānusaya) is a dharma by itself dissociated from mind, the prāpti of kāmarāga, etc.? The answer of the Sarvāstivādins is in the negative as that of the Theravādins. The former quote as their authority the Jñāna-prasthāna-sūtra, in which anuśaya is shown to be associated with mind (cittasamprayukta). They assert that anuśayas are kleśas, and hence they cannot but be citta-samprayuktas.

In this connection the Kośa refers to the opinion of the Sautrāntikas, who hold that anuśaya is different from kleśa inasmuch as it is neither associated with, nor dissociated from, mind because it is not a dravya apart; it is a śakti left in certain individuals by the previously existing kleśas and has the power of reproducing further kleśas. According to the Sautrāntikas, kleśa when non-manifest is anuśaya and when manifest, an act, it is paryavasthāna (Kośa, V, p. 7).

VI. Can the Atthamakas have Saddhindriya?

Vasumitra does not mention this view among the doctrines of the Mahāsanghikas but it is stated in the Kou. that according to the Andhakas, atthamakassa puggalassa natthi saddhindriyan ti (III. 6), i.e., the atthamakas may develop saddhā, viriya, etc. but do not acquire saddhindriya, viriyindriya etc., a distinction which the Theravadios are not prepared to admit. The Andhakas mean that saddhindriya or viriyindriya, etc. is a faculty forming a part of the mind while saddhā or viriya etc. is only a passing phase of the mind.

<sup>1</sup> For exhaustive treatment of Anniayas, see La Vallée Poussin's Abbidbarmakoia, V.

VII. Are there worldly samyagdrsti and samyak-śraddhendriya?

Along with the above we may discuss the allied topic worded thus in Vasumitra's treatise,—

(i) There is neither laukikasamyagdṛṣṭi (worldly right view) nor laukikaśraddhendriya (worldly faculty of faith).

The corresponding passages of the Kon. arc,-

(i) Natthi puthujjanassa ñanan ti? (XX, 2);1 and

(ii) Natthi lokiyam saddhindriyan ti? (XIX. 8).2

The argument of the Theravadins is that a layman may have pañña and saddha of a kind which may be different from those of an adept, but pañña and saddha that he possesses do develop into paññindriya and saddhindriya. It may be that the layman's pañña or ñanam is confined to dana, sila, caga, etc., i.e. lokiya affairs and does not extend to the comprehension of lokuttara subjects like truths, maggas and phalas, hence according to the Theravadins there may be lokiya paññindriya and saddhindriya.

VIII. Is utterance of dukkha possible in meditation; and Does it belp perception of the truths?

The two statements of Vasumitra (i) "The path is realized by utterances" and (ii) "Even in the state of samāhita one can utter words" to which corresponds "samāpannassa atthi vacibbedo ti" of the Kathāvattha are explained by Buddhaghosa thus: According to the Saila schools an adept while in the first jhāna (meditation) and on the point of attainment of the Sotāpattimagga in some cases gives out an exclamation like "aho dukkhan ti." This, the adherents of the Saila schools account for by saying that in the first jhāna, there is vitakkavicāra, and because of vitakkavicāra there is vacīsamkhārā<sup>2</sup> i.e., discursive and discriminating thoughts cause vocal activity, hence there is the possibility of a meditator in the first jhāna uttering the word 'dukkha'. The Theravādins contend that as all physical activities of a meditator are set at complete rest, his giving out of an exclamation is an impossibility.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Attributed to the Hetuvadas only.

<sup>2</sup> Attributed in the Cy. to the Hetuvadas and Mahisasakas and they mean all the five indrivas, saddhā, viriya, sati, samādhi and pañña.

Along with the above we should take into consideration the other three doctrines of the Mahāsanghikas presented thus in Vasumitra's treatise,—

- (i) The words of suffering can help (the process of realization of the path);
- (ii) Suffering leads a man to the path;
- (iii) Suffering also is (a kind of) food (āhāra); and
- (iv) Through prajñā suffering is destroyed and final beatitude is obtained.

The corresponding expressions in the Kathāvatthu are as follows:—

- (i) "Idam dukkhan ti" vācam bhāsato "idam dukkhan ti" ñāṇam pavattatī ti? (XI. 4).
- 1 Cf. Vinaya, I, p. 15, in Yasapabbajjā, Upaddutam vata bho upassattham vata bho.
- 2 Cf. Kvm., IX, 9: Opinion of the Pubbaseliyas: Sabbaso vitakkayato vicārayato vitakkavipphāro saddo ti? The Cy. on it is: Yasmā vitakkavicārā vacīsamkhārā 'ti vuttā tasmā sabbaso vitakkayato vicārayato antamaso manodhātuppavattikale pi vitakkavipphāro saddo yevā ti. Cf. Majjbima, I, p. 301.
- 3 Cf. Kvu., XVIII, 8: Samāpanno saddam sunātī ti. As it has been said by Buddha that sound is a hindrance to the first jhāna and that one rises from the first jhāna by an external sound, the Pubbaseliyas inferred therefrom that one in meditation hears sound.

(ii) Dukhhāhāro maggangam maggapariyāpannan ti? (II. 6).

Both these statements repeat in a slightly different form what has been stated by Vasumitra. The Andhakas and the Sailas hold that when a meditator realises within his innermost heart that the world is full of suffering and is not worth living, an exclamation like "aho vata dukkham" spurts out of his mouth and then and there his insight (ñana) penetrates into the first truth "idam dukkhan ti" and as a result, he attains (pariyāpuṇāti) the Sotāpattimagga. So "dukkha" may be called an "āhāra" in respect of the realisation of the path as also an "anga" (limb) of the Sotāpattimagga.

The fourth doctrine mentioned above is, as Masuda explains, that dukkba can be removed not by means of the observance of moral precepts (sīlas) and practice of meditation (samādhi) but by the knowledge of the truth, causal law, and anatta of the things of the world. It is the basic teaching of Theravada, hence no reference is made to it in the Kuu.

IX. How Vijnanas function?

The following opinions are attributed by Vasumitra to the Mahasanghikas:

(i) Beings of the Rūpa and Arūpadhātu possess all the six sense-perceptions (sadvijnānas)2

(ii) The five vijnanas conduce both to attachment (sarāga) and freedom from attachment (viraga); and

(iii) The rupendriyas (organs of sense) are nothing but lumps of flesh: the eyes do not see colours, the ears do not hear sounds, the nose does not smell odours, the tongue does not taste flavour, and the body does not feel touch.

1 See fn. 1 above.

<sup>2</sup> Or şadvijñānakāya or the group of six sense-perceptions.

The Kon. deals with these topics thus:

- (i) Salāyataniko attabhāvo rūpadhātuyā ti? (VIII. 7) and
- (ii) Pañc' eväyatanā kāmā ti? (VIII. 4).
- (iii) Cakkhunā rūpam passatī ti? ...pe...kayena phoṭṭhabham phusatī ti? (XVIII. 9).

In the discussion relating to the six āyatanas (spheres of the organs of sense), the Kou. shows that the Andhakas took literally the expression: rūpī manomayo sabbaṅgapaccaṅgī ahīnindriyo ti and assert that there are in the rūpadhātu all the six indriyas and āyatanas with this difference from the Kāmadhātu, that out of the six āyatanas three, viz., ghāna, rasa and photthabba do not exist but their nimittas, i.e., the subtlest forms exist. In the Abhidhamma texts it is stated that the denizens of the Rūpadhātu have five khandhas and six (and not twelve) āyatanas while those in the Arūpadhātu have four khandhas and two āyatanas (manāyatana and dhammāyatana only). 2

Relating to the third point the Kow. contradicts Vasumitra and says that it is the Mahāsanghikas who held the opposite view, viz., the eyes see colours, ears hear sounds etc. by conceiving a pasādacakkhu, a subtle eye, which has not got the power of āvajjana (reflection) like cakkhuvinnāna but possesses just the power of knowing (patijānāti) objects. In this case also, shall we account for the contradictions by saying that the opinion of 'ekacce mahāsanghikā' is represented by Vasumitra while the opinion of the 'aññe mahāsanghikā' is noticed in the Kathāvatthu.1 The Theravadins and a section of the Mahasanghikas hold that the eyes, ears etc. are mere material conveyers of perception, the cakkhuviññāṇa, sotaviññāṇa, etc. being the actual percipients, in other words, eyes, cars etc. belong to the rupakhandha which is material, while cakkhuviññāna, etc. belong to the viññana-khandha, which makes a being aware of the things around him.

<sup>1</sup> Vibhanga, p. 405: În Kāmadhātu there are cakkhāyatana and rūpāyatana, sotāyatana and saddāyatana, etc., in all, twelve āyatanas.

<sup>2</sup> Vibbanga, pp. 405-7.

X. How many avyakatas are there?

The opinion of the Andhakas that "there is nothing which is indeterminate" (avyākrta) has been explained by Masuda as that the Andhakas admitted only two natures of things, good or bad and not a third, neither good nor bad. This interpretation does not appear to be sound as in the Buddhist texts the three natures of things are accepted generally. The avyakatas also refer to those problems which Buddha left unanswered as any answer to them whether in the affirmative or in the negative would mislead the enquirer, or treated the question as absurd and unanswerable. These avyākata problems are always mentioned in a stereotyped form in all Buddhist texts whether Hīnayāna or Mahāyāna.2 Nāgārjuna has utilised these problems in his Mādbyamika-kārikā to establish the Mahāyānic conception of Sūnyatā. If we accept Vasumitra's statement as correct, we shall have to say that the Sūnyatā conception was known to the Mahasanghikas, and so to them the so-called avyākata problems were not avyākata (inexplicable), but this way of looking at the statement of Vasumitra seems to me to be too far-fetched and so, I think, Vasumitra's statement is not complete. Perhaps it refers to the problem discussed in the Kvu.: ditthigatam avyākatan ti? (XIV. 8),—whether a person holding one of the unanswered views can be regarded as avyākata i.e. neither good nor bad. The answer of the Theravādins is that the holder of any one of the views is wrong, hence akusala and cannot be avyākata as supposed by the Andhakas and Uttarāpathakas.

1 See Infra.

<sup>2</sup> Sassato loko, asassato loko; antavă loko, anantavă loko; tam jivam tam sariram, aññam jivam aññam sariram; hoti Tathāgato param marană, na hoti Tathăgato param marnă; hoti ca na hoti caTathăgato param maranā, n'eva hoti na na hoti Tathāgato param maranā.

XI. How many Asamskṛtadharmas are there?

In the Pāli texts, as also in the Abhidharmakoša (of the Sarvāstivādins) the three asamskrtas are, (i) Pratisaṃkhyā-nirodha, (ii) Apratisaṃkhyā-nirodha and (iii) Ākāša. The Andhakas increase them to nine by adding the four āruppas¹ and āryamārgāngikatva.² Excepting the nirodha of two kinds, all other asaṃskṛtas of the Mahāsaṅghikas are not recognised as such by the Theravādins, whose argument is whether each of these asaṃskṛtas is of the same nature as Nibbāna, if not, they are saṃskṛtas. Strangely enough the Kvu. goes so far as to say that ākāša is not asaṃkhata. The attitude taken in the Kvu. (VI. 2, 4, 6; XIX. 3, 4) is that Nibbāna is tānaṃ lenaṃ accutaṃ amataṃ, (escape, refuge, infallible and immortal) so each of the seven of asaṃkhatas, even every member of the formulæ of the Paţiccasamuppāda, each of the four phalas must be tānaṃ

- The four aruppas are-
  - (i) Äkäšänantäyatana.
  - (ii) Vijñānānantāyatana;
  - (iii) Ākiñcanyāyatana; and
  - (iv) Naivasamjñā-nāsamjñāyatana.
- 2 Cf. Kośa, iii, p. 77-lenam accutam amatam, otherwise they are samkhatas (constituted). The Mahāsanghikas interpret, as presented in the Kou., that the asamkhata is that which is unchangeable (aneñja) but not tānam lenam, etc. In regard to the causal law, they rely on Buddha's statement: avijjā paccayā bhikkhave samkharā, uppādā va Tathāgatānam anuppādā vā Tathāgatānam thitā va sā dhātu dhammatthitatā dhammaniyāmatā idappaccayatā etc., and point out that by asamkhata they do not mean the links separately but the unchangeable law (a) of the origin a thing through a cause, and (b) of the unchangeable nature of dhammas, undisturbed by appearance (uppāda) or non-appearance (anuppāda) or continuity (thiti). As for the aryamargangikatva, the Kun. explains that Pubbaseliyas regard as asamkhata the fact of attainment (patti) of a magga or phala by the removal of certain mental impurities (kilesapahānam) and not the maggas or phalas by themselves. This, Vasumitra corroborates by using the term mārgāngikatva i.e. prāpti of a mārga and not simply mārga.1 In the Kon. there are a few other discussions relating to the asamkhatas to which we shall revert when dealing with the Mahīśāsakas.

XII. Other doctrines

The remaining three opinions of this group of schools, viz.,

- (i) There is no intermediate state of existence (antarābhava).
- (ii) Phenomena exist neither in the past nor in the future, and
- (iii) The nature of mind is pure in its origin: it becomes impure when it is stained by agantukarajas and upakleśas, are in accord with those of the Theravadins. Both these schools do not admit that between death and rebirth there is any intervening period in which the subtle khandhas wait for the selection of the parents or the states of existences. The Kow. says that the opinion of the opponents is formed through the miscomprehension of the meaning of the word 'antaraparinibbayi.' We shall revert to this topic while dealing with the Sammitiyas, with whom, the commentator says, the Pubbaseliyas agreed.

<sup>1</sup> In the Majjhima Nikāya, (I, p. 301) it is distinctly stated that atthangiko maggo is sankhato.

As regards the opinion that the past and future exist—the cardinal doctrine of the Sarvāstivādins, to be dealt with next, both the Theravādins and the Mahāsanghikas are emphatic in their protest against it.

The third point raises an important problem that is to say whether the mind at the beginning was pure or not. The Theravadins are decidedly of opinion that pubbakoti (beginning) and aparakoti (end) of beings are unknowable, and as such they have not gone into the question whether the mind is pure at any time before the attainment of vimutti. This doctrine of the Mahāsanghikas obtained its full development in the idealistic philosophy of Yogācāra in which the Ālayavijnāna is pointed out as the storehouse of pure consciousness which gets contaminated with worldly objects through the indriyavijnānas and mentally creates a world around it. It is by the removal of this mental creation that a person regains the ālayavijnāna in its pure original form and becomes an emancipated being—a Buddha.

XIII. Doctrines of the Saila Schools only

Vasumitra has attributed the following doctrines specially to the three Saila schools:—

t Cf. Atthasālini, p. 68: Cittam āgantukehi upakkilesehi upakiliṭṭham.

- (i) Bodhisattvas are average beings and are liable to be born in the lower states of existence,1
- (ii) Offerings made to a caitya are not necessarily of great merit.

The above dectrines are in direct contrast to those of a section of the Mahasanghikas and the Pürvaśailas or Caityakas (see above, pp. 49, 51, 81-2). Vasumitra evidently, had in mind only the later Saila schools, viz., Aparasaila, Caityasaila and Uttaraśaila and not the Pūrvaśaila.

Regarding the origin of Caityaśaila and Uttaraśaila schools, Paramartha<sup>o</sup> writes that two hundred years after Buddha's parinirvāṇa, a second Mahādeva appeared with heretical views. He slipped into the church stealthily (i.e. became a steyasamvāsīka) by ordaining himself. This event gave occasion for fresh controversies among all the branches of the Sthavira and Mahāsanghika schools, particularly on the question of the validity of ordination given by an ācārya, who is himself not regularly ordained. In this matter the Mahāsanghikas were in agreement with the Sthaviras and excommunicated Mahadeva. At this, Mahādeva got enraged and retired to another mountain and started the Caityaśaila and Uttaraśaila schools.

The Caityasailas therefore should be distinguished from the Caityakas, who were identical with the Lokottaravadins or the Pürvaśailas and were of earlier origin. The Caicyakas and

1 See above p. 8r.

3 Paul Demiéville, L'origine des sectes bouddhiques in Mélanges chinais es bouddhiques, vol. I. 1931-32.

<sup>2</sup> In the Mahāvastu and the Nāgārjunikonda inscr., erection, decoration and worship of cattyas find prominent place, for which I think the name Caityakas has been applied to the Pürvašaila school. Cf. Koša, IV. 121.

Pürvaśailas are referred to in the Nāgārjunikoṇḍa inscriptions, and not the later Saila schools mentioned above.

XIV. Nirvāņa in Nāgārjunikonda inscriptions

In the Nāgārjunikonda inscriptions, there are a few incidental remarks relating to Buddha and Nirvāṇa. These probably apply to the conceptions held by the Pūrvaśailas or Caityakas. Buddha is described here as jita-rāga-dosa-moha (one who has conquered attachment, ill-will and delusion) and dhātuvaraparigāhita (possessed of the excellent dhātu), and the donor expects as a result of his or her gifts merits which he or she can transfer (parināmetum) to his or her relatives and friends—an article of faith not recognised in the Pāli works where attadīpa attasarana is the maxim. The fruits expected are (i) religious merits, for himself, his relatives and friends resulting in their happiness in this world and the next (ubhaya-loka hita-sukhāvahananāya),—a merit which reminds us of the Asokan inscriptions: esa bādha dekhiye iyam me bidatikāye iyam mana me pālatikāye ti and (ii) Nīvāṇa-sampati (nirvāṇadom) for himself or herself.

The recording of the view that gifts may bring happiness to all, but nirvana only to oneself, deserves our careful consideration. The distinction drawn in this way is rather uncommon and is not made even in the inscription recording the gifts of the Queen of Vanavasi to the Mahisasakas<sup>a</sup> or in the long inscription of the Sinhalese donor.

Then the expressions, dhātuvara-parigahita or nivāna-sampati-sampādaka raise the presumption that the Andhaka-conception of Nirvāṇa was different from that of the Theravādins or their sub-sect the Mahīšāsakas. In the Kathāvatthu, there are two controversies (ix, 2; xix, 6), relating to the conception of Nirvana as prevailing among the Andhakas. The one attributed to the Pubbaseliyas is that the Amatapada (= Nirvāna), is "an object of thought of a person not yet free from bondage",1 and the other attributed to the Andhakas is that "the Nibbanadbātu is kuśala (good)" in the sense in which mental states are spoken as kuśala (good) and it is a faultless state.2 Both these statements bear the implication that the Pubbaseliyas or the Andhakas conceived of Nirvāņa as a 'positive faultless state'a conception which can hardly be accepted by the Theravadins, who speak of realizing the Nibbana within one's own self (paccattam veditabbo viññūbi) and not of grasping the same as some object producing pure happiness.3

<sup>1</sup> Ep. Ind., XX, pp. 16, 18, 19, 20, 21: "atano" or "apano."

<sup>2</sup> Ep. Ind., XX, p. 24. 3 Ibid., p. 22.

XV. Doctrines of the Bahukrutiyas only

Regarding the special doctrines of the Bahusrutiyas, the Kathāvatthu is silent. Though this school belonged to the Mahāsanghika group, it accepted, according to Vasumitra, many views of the Sarvāstivādins. Vasumitra adds that it held that Buddha's teachings relating to anityatā, dubkha, śūnya, anātman and Nirvana (transitoriness, suffering, non-existence of objects, absence of soul, and the ultimate goal) are lokottara (supramundane) while his teachings on topics other than those mentioned above are laukika* (mundane).

In Pāli texts the teachings and exercises connected with maggas and phalas are usually regarded as lokottara and the rest lankika.

t Mrs. Rhys Davids, Points of the Controversy, pp. 231-3-

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., p. 339-

<sup>3</sup> See Majjbima Nikāya, I, p. 1 f.: Mūlapariyāyasutta.

<sup>4</sup> Masuda, pp. 35-36.

This school according to Paramarcha, attempted a syncretism of Hinayana and Mahayana and attributed two meanings, probably nitārtha! (profound) and neyārthā? (superficial) to the teachings of Buddha. It adopted the Satyasiddhisāstra of Harivarman as their main text. In the Nāgārjunīkonda inscription, this school is mentioned.

XVI. Doctrines of the Prajnaptivadins only

Regarding the special doctrines of the Prajnaptivadins Vasumitra remarks that they agreed mainly with the Mahāsanghikas (i.e. later Mahāsanghikas). They held in addition the following opinions:

- (i) Skandhas and duhkha are not concomitant;
- (ii) The twelve ayatanas are not real;
- (iii) Either attainment of arya-marga or death is dependent on karma.

The Prajnaptivadins, as Paramartha tells us, appeared some time after the Bahuśrutiyas, and distinguished themselves as Bahuśrutiyavibhajyavadins. The main difference between the Prajnaptivadins and Bahusrutiyas is that the former partly like the Mahayanists held the view that Buddha's teachings as embodied in the Pitaka should be distinguished as nominal

- 1 Cf. Samādbirāja-tūtra, p. 78: नीतावेम्तानविभेष जानित स्वीपदिष्टा सुनर्तन स्नाता। विस्तिन पुन: पुन्नसम्बप्तस्थी नेवायेती जानित सर्वधर्मान ॥
- 2 Cf. M. Vr. p. 43: उक्तं चार्याचयमितगृते । कतमे इताला नेवार्याः कतमे नेवार्याः । ये मृताला मार्गान्ताराय निर्देश्यः रम उच्यले नेवार्याः । ये मृतालाः प्रलावताराय निर्देश्यः रम उच्यले नेवार्याः । यावर्ये कृतालाः ग्रूबतानिमित्रायचिद्वतानिमर्भकाराजातानुन्यादामावित्रामनिःसस्य निर्देशः व उच्यले नीतार्याः । Sce Prof. Vidhusekhar Sastri's Sandbābbājā in IHQ., IV, p. 295-
- 3 This school came into existence 200 years after the Mahāsanghikas (Koša, v, p. 24).

(prajñapti), teal (paramārtha), conventional (samurti) and causal (betuphala). This school, as against the Bahuśrutīyas, agreed more with the views of the Mahāsanghikas than with those of the Sarvāstivādins.<sup>1</sup>

XVII. Doctrines of the Rajagirikas and the Siddhatthikas

In the Kathāvathu, but not in Vasumitra's treatise certain special doctrines have been attributed to the Rājagirikas, and Siddhatthikas. To the former are attributed the following:

 (i) Natthi keci dhammā kehici dhammehi saṃgahitā ot sampayuttā (VII. 1 & 2)

There is no such thing as a quality attached to or adhering in another e.g. oil in mustard seeds, feeling in perception, and so forth.<sup>2</sup>

(ii) Natthi cetasiko dhammo (VII. 3)

This is a corollary to the previous opinion. It says that citta (mind) functions and there are no mental states associated with it,

(iii) Cetasiko dhammo danan ti (VII. 4)

(iv) Ito dinnena tattha yapenti (VII. 6)

By the former it means that gift is not material; the mind for making a gift is really giving. By the latter it holds that merits are accumulated, and that a person enjoys its fruits in after-life on account of such accumulation.

(v) Paribhogamayam puññam vaddhati (VII. 5)

The accumulating merits can go on increasing (by renewal of gifts of robes and other articles to monks, and so forth).

(vi) Natthi arahato akālamaccu (XVII. 2)

Arhats cannot die untimely, i.e. their death is also subject to the influence of karma.2

1 See Demiéville, op. cit., p. 49-50.

2 Cf. The topics of the Dhātu-kathā, (P.T.S.).

3 Based on the statement: kammuna vattati loko.

(vii) Sabbam idam kammato (XVII. 3)

Everything is subject to deeds.

(viii) Kappattho kappam tittheya (XIII. 1)

A being destined to live for an aeon lives for an aeon, as one consigned to purgatory for committing Sanghabheda.

XVIII. Doctrines of the Vetulyahas only

In the Kathāvatthu, the following doctrines are specially attributed to the Vetulyakas:

> "(i) Na vattabbam Buddho Bhagava manussaloke atthāsī This point has been discussed above (p. 75).

(ii) Na vattabbam Buddhassa dinnam mahapphalam hotz (XVII. to).

As Buddha as a person does not exist, it is meaningless to say that gifts to Buddha produce great merit.

- (iii) Na vattabbam "samgho dakkhinam patiganhati" (iv) Na vattabbam "samgho dakkhinam visodheti"
- (v) Na vattabbam "samgho bhuñjati pivati khādati sayati"
- (vi) Na vattabbam "samghassa dinnam mahapphalam hoti" (XVII. 6-9).

All the four opinions are of the same import. The question raised here whether Sangha is a body of individuals who have attained magga and phala (fruits of sanctification) or Sangha is identical with maggaphala. This school holds that Sangha does not exist apart from maggaphala and so it is not proper to say that Sangha receives gifts, or purifies it, or enjoys it, or a gift made to a Sangha is productive of great merits.1

r Cf. Milindapañha, p. 95 f.; Koša, iv. 32; also see L. de La Vallée Poussin's paper on La doctrine des refuges in the Mélanges chinois es bouddhiques, vol. 1. p. 64 f.

CHAPTER IX

DOCTRINES OF GROUP III SCHOOLS

The Mahiśāsakas, Sarvāstivādins, Dharmaguptakas, and other Schools

The third group of schools, according to the Pāli tradition, comprised the Mahimsāsakas and their offshoots, viz., Dhammaguttikas, Sabbatthivādins, Kassapikas, Sankantikas, and Suttavādī. According to this tradition the Mahimsāsakas were the earliest to secede from the Theravāda among its sub-sects. Out of the Mahimsāsakas, developed the Sabbatthivādins and gradually the other schools.

Vasumitra puts the appearance of sub-sects of this group a little differently. According to him Sarvāstivāda first branched off from the Sthaviravāda, and from the former appeared the Mahīšāsakas, Kāśyapīya and Saṃkrāntivādins one after another at the intervals of a century. Out of the Mahīšāsakas developed only the Dharmaguptakas.

Comparing the two traditions, it will be observed that the two lists agree excepting the first appearance of the Mahimsāsaka as stated in the Pāli texts. This anomaly can be easily explained thus: A reference to the doctrines of this school reveals that there were two Mahīšāsaka schools, one earlier and the other later. Vasumitra missed the earlier Mahīšāsakas while enumerating the sub-sects. He, however, points out that the earlier Mahīšāsakas agreed more with the Theravādins while the later with the Sarvāstivādins. It may be that the Pāli tradition was aware of the earlier division only of the Mahīšāsakas, and so naturally placed their origin before the Sarvāstivādins.

<sup>1</sup> See infra, p. 117.

THE EARLIER MAHĪŚĀSAKAS

The antiquity of the Mahīśāsakas goes back to the time of the first Buddhist Council, hence its origin is anterior to that of the Mahāsanghikas. The Vinaya texts of the Theravadins (in Pāli), of the Mahīśāsakas and of the Dharmaguptakas record the differences of opinion-relating to seven rules according to the Mahīśāsakas, and eight rules according to the Dharmaguptakas-between Mahākassapa and Purāna of Dakkhināgiri (near Rājagrha). The Mahīśāsaka Vinaya attached special importance to the person of Purana, his insistence on a second rehearsal which, according to this school, was complied with by Mahākassapa, as also the incorporation in the Vinaya of the seven rules relating to food.1 This shows clearly that Purāna and his admirers and followers formed a group by themselves, though probably not yet known by the designation, Mahīśāsaka. Prof. Przyluski has discussed this in his work Le Concile de Rājagrha (pp. 319 ff.) on the basis of the Mahīśāsaka and Dharmagupta Vinaya texts in Chinese.

He writes that the episode of Purāṇa of Dakkhiṇāgiri² in the account of the first council marks the difference between the Theravādins and the Mahīśāsakas. In course of time, that group of monks who held Purāṇa in high esteem formed the Mahīśāsaka school by including his seven rules not accepted by Mahākassapa in his Vinaya code. In the Mahīśāsaka Vinaya, the second place of seniority is awarded to Purāṇa, the first being given to Kauṇḍinya. The Mahīśāsakas assert that after the deliberations of the first council were finished, the texts were once more recited for the approval of Purāṇa, who accepted the same after adding his seven rules.

<sup>1</sup> See Indian Antiquary, 1908, pp. 5-6.

<sup>2 &</sup>quot;Purāna demeure dans le sud." Here by "sud," he means Dakkhināgiri, which is not really in the south.

Regarding the geographical expansion of the school, Prof. Przyluski points out that (i) Purāṇa refers to the people of Mahīsaka; (ii) that the alternative name of this school is Mahāvantaka; and (iii) that the Vinaya text of this school was found by Fa-hien in Ceylon.

On the basis of these facts he states that the line of expansion of this school was the same as that of the Theravāda, i.e. along the Kauśāmbi-Bharukaccha axis and that it gradually extended up to the sea-borne countries, and that it became particularly popular in Mahisamandala and Avantī, and ultimately reached Ceylon.

Prof. Przyluski's suggestions are supported by the Nāgār-junikonda inscriptions, in which it is stated that the queen of Vanavāsī erected a pillar and a monastery at Nāgārjunikonda for the benefit of the ācāryas of the Mahīśāsaka sect. Vanavāsī corresponds to North Kanara. There is also a village called Vanavāsī in the Shimoga District of the Mysore State and lies on the border of Mysore territory and North Kanara. Vanavāsī is also one of the countries which was visited by the mission of Aśoka's reign, and it was from this country that a mahāthera called Candagutta went to Ceylon at the invitation of Dutthar Tāranātha in his Geschichte (pp. 175, 273) speaks of the Avantakas as an offshoot of the Sāṇmitiyas.

&lt;sup>2</sup> El., XX, p. 36; cf. El., vol. III, p. 117; Vikramānkadevacarita, V. 23; Mahāvaṃsa, XII, 31; XXIX, 42; B. C. Law, Geography of Early Buddhism, p. 66.

gāmaṇi to take part in the celebrations for erecting the mahā-thupa. Hence, it may be concluded that the Mahīśāsakas became popular in Vanavāsī, i.e. in North Kanara and Mysore, and probably had some followers in Ceylon, as their school agreed with the Theravādins in fundamental doctrines and disciplinary rules. In short, this school had its sphere of influence in south-western India and Ceylon.<sup>1</sup>

The Kathāvatthu has not a word to say about the doctrines of this school. This silence, though a negative evidence, confirms our supposition that the Theravadins had little or no difference with the Mahīšasakas as far as their doctrines were concerned. Vasumitra furnishes us with the following information regarding the doctrines of this school.

Doctrines of the earlier Mabisasakas

The Mahīśāsakas rejected the "Sabbam authi" thesis of the Sarvāstivādins<sup>2</sup> and held that the present only exists. They made it more emphatic by stating that all samskāras perish at every moment and that entrance into the womb is the beginning, and death is the end, of human life. The material constituents of the sense-organs as also citta and caitasikas are subject to change. In other words, there are no real elements.

They do not enter into the question of Buddha's attributes and probably like the Theravadins held Buddha as an average human being.

Regarding Arhats, they state (i) a stotaāpanna has a chance of retrogression while an arhat has not and that (ii) arhats do not perform meritorious deeds. Both of these opinions are t Cf. Przyluski, op. cit., pp. 325, 327—Mahisamandala, Avanti and other sea-borne countries on the west.

<sup>2</sup> For Sarvāstivāda views, see infra.

directly opposed to those of the Sarvāstivādins and are partly in agreement with those of the Theravādins.

Re. Samyakatvanyāma, the Mahīśāsakas have nothing to say. They state against the opinion of the Sarvāstivādins that there is no deva who leads a holy life.

Re. Anupubbābhisamaya, the Mahīśāsakas held views contrary to those of the Sarvāstivādins. They state that the four truths are to be meditated upon at one and the same time. As against the opinion of the Theravādins, they held that transition from one jhāna to another is immediate (Kvu., XVIII. 6).

Re. Puthujjana, etc., the Mahīśāsakas held the following views in agreement with the Sarvāstivādins excepting the last:

(i) An average man is able to destroy raga and pratigha in the Kāmadhātu.

(ii) There is laukikasamyagdrsti (right view relating to worldly matter).

(iii) There is no laukikaśraddhendriya (faculty of faith obtained by a worldly man). This is discussed in the Kvu., XIX. 8 (see above, p. 97).

Re. Anusaya and Paryavasthāna, the opinions of the Mahīśā-sakas are directly opposed to those of the Sarvāstivādins and the Theravādins and are in agreement with those of the Mahāsaṅghikas:—

(i) Anusaya (dormant passion) is neither citta (mind) nor caitasika (mental).

(ii) Anusaya is different from pervading passion (paryavasthāna).

(iii) Anusaya is never an object of thought (anālambana).

(iv) Anusaya is dissociated from mind (citta-visamprayukta).

(v) Paryavasthāna is associated with mind (citta-sampra-yukta).

All these have been discussed in the Kathāvatthu in connection with the doctrines of the schools of Group II (see above, pp. 65, 93 f.).

Re. Meditation & Smrtyupasthāna, the only difference between the Mahīśāsakas and the Sarvāstivādins is that the former do not recognise any lokottaradhyāna. They agree with the Sarvāstivādins in holding that all dharmas (mārgāngas) are included in the four smrtyupasthānas (introspectional practices).

Re. Vijñāna, the Sarvāstivādins state that the five vijñānas (perception derived by the organs of sense) engender rāga (attachment) but not virāga (detachment). The Mahīśāsakas consider this unreasonable and hold that these conduce both to sarāga and virāga. Both the schools agree in holding that the six vijñānas combine with vitarka and vicāra (see above, p. 66-67).

Re. Asamskṛta & Antarābhava, the views of the Mahīśāsakas are all opposed to those of the Sarvāstivādins:—

- (i) There are nine unconstituted (asamskrta) dharmas, but this list is different from that of the Mahāsanghikas.
  - (ii) There is no intermediate state of existence (antarābhava).
- (iii) There is nothing which can transmigrate from one world to another.

There are a few other opinions which are also contrary to those of the Sarvāstivādins, viz.,

- (i) No heretic can gain the five supernatural powers.
- (ii) Good karma cannot become the cause of existence.

  In addition to the above the Mahīśāsakas held the following two views:—
- (i) Though Buddha is included in the Sangha, a gift made to Buddha is more meritorious than that to the Sangha.
- (ii) Buddhayāna and Śrāvakayāna have the same emancipation (vimukti).

THE LATER MAHĪŚĀSAKAS

We have already pointed out that there were two schools of Mahīśāsakas, one earlier and the other later. The views stated above were held by the earlier. The later Mahīśāsakas accepted the cardinal doctrine of the Sarvāstivādins that past and future exist, and asserted that skandhas, dhātus and āyatanas in their subtlest form are always present, so also are the anuśayas. They added that the earth lasts for acons. They agree with the Sarvāstivādins in holding that there is antarābhava. The later Mahīśāsakas, therefore, were as much in agreement with the Sarvāstivādins as the earlier Mahīśāsakas were with the Theravādins.

THE SARVĀSTIVĀDA

At the outset, it should be pointed out that the wide popularity of the Sarvāstivāda has put into shade all other schools, and that, particularly, for its propagation all over Northern India and in countries outside India, like Central Asia and China. Its origin should be placed some time after the Mahīśāsakas and the Mahāsanghikas. There is no doubt that it branched off from the Mahīśāsakas and not from the Theravādins directly as stated by Vasumitra and other writers of later days. These Sarvāstivādins should be distinguished from the Mūlasarvāstivādins, 1 who probably modified certain doctrines of the Sarvāstivādins, as also from the Vaibhāṣikas, in which name this school was latterly known from the time of Kaniṣka.2

I I-tsing speaks of the Mūlasarvāstivādins. See Takakusu, <sup>2</sup> In Kashmir there were both Vaibhāṣikas and Sautrāntikas (ye vinayavidādayaḥ Sautrāntikā bhadantādayaḥ). The latter are described Vasubandhu, in his Abhidharmakośa, has the Kashmir Vaibhāṣikas more in view than the early Sarvāstivādins. This is due to the fact that the Vaibhāṣikas became more popular since the days of Kaṇiṣka and became predominant in Kashmir and Gandhāra.¹ The popularity of the early Sarvāstivādins was confined to Northern India around Mathurā, where it had its origin.

Prof. Przyluski² rightly traces the origin of the Sarvāstivāda school in the grouping of monks, shown in the account of the Second Council. He says that the monks collected by Yasa hailed mainly from two centres, of which one was Kausambi-Avanti and the other Mathurā. The former developed into the Theravāda and Mahīšāsaka schools while the latter into Sarvāstivāda, and both were opposed to the Mahāsanghikas whose centre was at Pāṭaliputra and Vesāli.

Succession of Teachers

If we turn to the succession of teachers (ācariyaparamparā) as given in almost all Sanskrit traditions, preserved in Tibetan, it will be observed that after Sambhūta Śāṇavāsi, the succession is recorded differently from that in Pāli. Buston and Tāranātha,3 in the Kośa-Vyākbyā (VIII. 32) as Vinaya-vid. There were also Vaibhāṣikas who lived outside Kashmir referred to in the Kośa as "bahirdeśakā Vaibhāṣikā."

- r Prof. Takakusu writes (IPTS., 1904-5, p. 119) that the Sarvāstivādins were also distinguished in the Vibbāṣā as Kashmirian and Gandharian, but after compilation of the Mahāvibhāṣā the former eclipsed the latter and became known as Kāśmira-vaibhāṣikas, or simply Vaibhāṣikas.
  - 2 Przyluski, op. cit., p. 308.
- 3 See Buston, II, p. 108. He derived his information from the Vinayakşudraka of the Mülasarvästivädins.

tell us that Mahākassapa entrusted the guardianship of the Sangha to Ānanda, who in turn entrusted the same to Sambhūta Sāṇavāsi. The latter gave over the guardianship to Upagupta of Mathurā.¹ It is well-known that in the Sanskrit Avadānas, Upagupta is made the spiritual adviser of Aśoka as against Moggaliputta Tissa of the Pāli texts. This also lends support to the view that Mathurā became the first seat of the Sarvāstivādins soon after the Second Council, and that it was from Mathurā that the influence of the Sarvāstivādins radiated all over Northern India, particularly over Gandhāra and Kashmir.

The propagation of Buddhism in Gandhara and Kashmir has an independent history of its own. Both the Pāli and Sanskrit traditions state that Madhyāntika (Majjhantika) was responsible for the propagation of the religion in these two countries. Madhyāntika was a disciple of Ānanda and so he was a contemporary of Sambhūta Sāṇavāsi and senior to Upagupta. Madhyāntika is recognised as a teacher by the Sarvāstivādins. That Madhyantika preached there Sarvastivada Buddhism in Kashmir is corroborated by the testimony of Hiuen Tsang who tells us that Asoka not only sent Buddhist monks to Kashmir but also built monasteries at that place.2 He writes that during Aśoka's reign there was in Magadha "a subtle investigator of name and reality, and who put his extraordinary thoughts in a treatise which taught heresy.' An attempt was made to drown into the Ganges these monks who however saved themselves by flying through the air to Kashmir where they settled on the hills and the valleys. On hearing this, Aśoka felt remorse and requested them to return, and on their refusal, built for them 500 monasteries and "gave up all Kashmir for the benefit of the Buddhist church." The fact underlying this story is that the "investigators of name and reality" were none other than the Sarvāstivādins, whose principal tenet is that nāma and rūpa are real and are divisible into 64 elements which exist for ever (sarvam asti), and it is for this they had the appellation of Sarvāstivāda.<sup>2</sup> Then the statement that they resorted to the hills and valleys of Kashmir corroborates the flight of the Sarvāstivādin monks to the north in Kashmir.

I Upagupta was followed by Dhitika.

<sup>2</sup> Watters, I, p. 269.

Yuan Chwang must have fallen into confusion in regard to the name Mahādeva. There were very probably two persons of this name "one an influential abbot of Pataliputra" who preached the Devadūta-sūtra,4 and the other a monk who introduced the tenets relating to the imperfections of an Arhat.5 Mahadeva the investigator of name and reality must have been a Sarvāstivādin while the other Mahādeva, who attributed imperfections to an Arhat, was a Mahāsanghika. Yuan Chwang further confused the Theravadins with the Mahasanghikas when he wrote that Aśoka supported the Mahāsanghikas against the Theravadins, and that 500 Arhats left Pataliputra and propagated the Sthavira School in Kashmir, while the majority of the inferior brethren at Pāṭaliputra began the Mahāsanghika school.6 The Mahāsanghikas, as we know, lived originally at Vesali and later on passed on to the south, making their principal centre in the Andhra country at Dhanakataka (present Guntur District).

The statement that Aśoka became later on repentant and wanted the monks who fled to Kashmir to return to Magadha

<sup>1</sup> Watters, I, p. 267.

<sup>2</sup> See Infra.

<sup>3</sup> Watters, I, p. 269 .

<sup>4</sup> Majjhima, III, 179.

<sup>5</sup> Watters, I, p. 268. See above, pp. 64, 84-8.

<sup>6</sup> Watters, I, p. 269.

may be an indirect reference to the fact recorded in the Divyāvadāna¹ and Aśokāvadāna² that Aśoka made an attempt towards the end of his life to reconcile the monks of the different schools of Buddhist thought by convening a council to which he particularly invited the monks living at Tamasāvana in Kashmir. The Ceylonese chronicles maintain a discreet silence over this incident, and this is not unusual in view of the sectarian spirit permeating the chronicles.

The Sarvāstivādins also claim Aśoka as their patron. They ignore the name of Moggaliputta Tissa and put in its stead the name of Upagupta as the spiritual adviser of Aśoka. The Avadāna literature of the Sarvāstivādins is full of episodes dealing with the life and munificence of Aśoka. Tāranātha also speaks of his lavish gifts to the Sarvāstivāda monks of Aparantaka, Kashmir and Tukhāra. Kalhaṇa writes that Aśoka not only built Śrīnagarī but also covered Suskaletra and Vitastrā with numerous stūpas, one of which was so high that its pinnacle could not be seen. Yuan Chwang noticed four Aśoka topes, each of which contained relics of Buddha's body. The Avadānas record that Aśoka's liberality to the Buddhist monks was carried to such an excess towards the end of his life that his grandson Sampadi<sup>5</sup> who was in charge of his treasury refused to carry out

ा Divyā., p. 399 वसन्ति काम्मीरपुरे सुःस्थे ये चापि धीराक्षमसावनेऽस्मिन् :

IA., 1895, pp. 241 ff.

<sup>2</sup> Prof. Przyluski writes in his Légende de l'Empereur Aśoka, pp. 101, 117 that a council of 30,000 monks was held by Aśoka, his sources of information being the Aśokāvadāna and Tāranātha (Schiefner, p. 38) but we do not find any such reference in Tāranātha.

<sup>3</sup> Schiefner, p. 38. 4 Stein, I, p. 19.

<sup>5</sup> Divyā., p. 430. Tib. 45 3 1 It has been restored by Schiefner as Vāsavadatta, but it may also be Dhanadā or Sampadi.

his commands and even reduced his food to a myrobalan, half of which was the last gift made by him to the Buddhist Sangha.

Through the activities of the Sarvāstivādins, Kashmir became a centre of Buddhist philosophical studies<sup>1</sup> and was, according to Tāranātha, also the scene of the activities of Vatsa, the propounder of the Ātmaka theory (pudgalavāda) and the founder of the Vātsiputrīya or Sammitīya school.<sup>2</sup>

Geographical Expansion

At the time of Aśoka, therefore, we may hold that there were two centres of the Sarvāstivādins, one at Mathurā with Upagupta as the head of the Sangha and the other in Kashmir with Madhyantika as its founder. It may be that the latter centre became in course of time the seat of the Mūlasarvāstivādins and the Vaibhāṣikas. On account of the popularity of this school in the north, there is no reference to it in the early inscriptions of Central India. Among the donees mentioned in the Barhut and Sanci inscriptions, the name of this sect does not appear. a Its name appears in the inscriptions of later dates, like Kamasi inscription,4 Set Mahet Image inscription5 of the time of Kaniska or Huviska and inscriptions on the Mathura Lion Capital.6 In the Sarnath inscription it is incidentally stated that the Sarvāstivādins ousted the Theravadins there and they in turn were overrun by the Sammitiyas in 300 A.D. There is no reference to the Sarvastivādins in the Nāgārjunikonda and the Amarāvati inscriptions.

Very likely its progressive career had a set-back for some time during the reign of Pusyamitra as is evidenced by

<sup>1</sup> See Gilgit Ms., vol. I, Intro. 2 Schiefner, p. 44 See Infra.

<sup>3</sup> See JRAS., 1892, p. 597. 4 EL., II, p. 212.

<sup>5</sup> El., VIII, p. 111; IX, p. 29. 6 El., IX, p. 135.

<sup>7</sup> See Infra.

the Divyāvadāna a text of this school but the several donations made during this period by the devotees prove that it was professed by a large section of the people. Its revival came with the invasions of the Graco-Bactrians, Sakas, Pahlavas, Parthians and Yavanas. The Milindapañba, the original of which was in Sanskrit, very likely belonged to this school. The existence of this text shows that the Graco-Bactrian kings like Menander were interested in this religion. Its complete revival took place during the reign of the Sakas, and the popularity of this sect reached its climax in the reign of Kaniska.

Fahien (319-414 A.D.) noticed the existence of this school at Pāṭaliputra while Yuan Chwang (629-645 A.D.) found it "chiefly in Kashgar, Udyana, and several other places in the Northern Frontier, in Matipur, Kanauj, and a place near Rājagṛha and also in Persia." I-tsing came across the adherents of this school in Lāṭa, Sindhu, Southern and Eastern India, Sumatra, Java, China, Central Asia and Cochin China. From the above evidences it is apparent how widely popular was this school all over Northern India and outside India, but little known in Southern and Western India.

Buston's information about the School

According to Buston, the founder of this school was Rāhulabhadra of the Kṣatriya caste "renowned for his devotion to discipline." The mantle worn by the members of this school had 25 to 29 fringes, and their badge had an utpala (a lotus), a jewel, and the leaf of a tree.

<sup>1</sup> Abbidharmakośa-vyākhyā, ix, 12 (Jap. ed.), p. 708 refers to Nāgasena as pūrvaka-sthavira.

<sup>2</sup> IPTS., (Prof. Takakusu), 1904-5, p. 71; Legge's Fabien, p. 99: IRAS., 1891, p. 420; Takakusu's I-tsing, pp. xxii-xxiv.

<sup>3</sup> I-tsing, Intro. 4 Buston, II, p. 100.

He further writes "Just as the high classes establish the mundane laws and customs of a country or race, in a similar manner the Sarvāstivādins as they spoke in Sanskrit, the language of the higher classes, represent the foundation of the other sect."

It cannot be definitely stated whether Buston had the Sarvāstivādins or the Mūla-Sarvāstivādins in mind.<sup>2</sup>

Language and Literature

The Tibetan traditions corroborated by the recent finds of manuscripts in Eastern Turkestan leave no room for doubt about the fact that the Sarvāstivādins adopted grammatical Sanskrit (and not mixed Sanskrit) as the medium of their literature and that they possessed a complete canon of their own in three divisions Sūtra, Vinaya and Abbidharma. The sub-divisions of these three piṭakas were also substantially the same as those in Pāli.

Our main source of information regarding the literature of this school is the Chinese and occasionally Tibetan versions of the Tripitaka, supplemented by the find of manuscripts in Central Asia, Eastern Turkestan, Gilgit and Nepal, and by quotations found in works like the Lalitavistara, Mahāvastu, Madhyamaka-vṛtti, Sūtrālankāra of Asanga, Divyāvadāna, Abhidharmakośa with its Bhāṣya and Vyākhyā. It may be questioned whether the informations available about the literature of this school are of the Sarvāstivādins or of the Mūla-Sarvāstivādins. For the present it is not possible to distinguish between the two, but it seems that the Āgamas were common to both, so also were the Abhidharma texts. It is only in regard to Vinaya and a few Avadāna texts there might have some differences.

<sup>1</sup> Buston, II, pp. 99-100.

<sup>2</sup> Hiuen Tsang states that the Sarvāstivādins had a peculiar mode of wearing and colouring their robes not approved by the followers of several schools (Watters, I, pp. 150 ff. Takakusu, I-tsing).

SUTRAS: The Sutra-Pitaka of the Sarvastivadins was divided into Agamas corresponding to Nikāyas of the Pāli school. There were four Agamas called Dirgha, Madhyama, Samyukta and Ekottara. In the Kośa there are references to the Ksudraka implying thereby the existence of a Ksudrakagama too. Prof. Akanuma has compared the Agamas in Chinese with the Pāli Nikāyas¹ in detail and has come to the following conclusions: The Dirghagama contains 30 Sūtras as against 34 of the Digha Nikāya. Of the 13 suttas in the first volume of the Pāli Dīgha Nikāya, 3 only are omitted in the Dīrgbāgama viz., Mahālī (no. 6), Jaliya (no. 7) and Subba (no. 10). All the suttas of the other two volumes are contained in this Agama with a few in the Madhyamāgama. The order of arrangement of the sūtras in the Āgamas and Nikāyas differs widely, e.g., Mahāpadāna is the first sutta in the Agama in place of Brahmajāla of the Nikāya. In the Agama the order of sutras is as follows: Mahapadana, Mahaparinibbana, Mahagovinda, Janavasabha, Aggañña, Cakkavatti, Sībanāda, Pāyāsi, Udumbarika-Sībanāda, Sangīti, Dasuttara, Mahānidāna, Sakka-panha, Pātika, Singālovāda, Pāsādika, Sampasadaniya, Mahasamaya, Ambattha, Brahmajala, Sonadanda, Kūtadanta, Kevatta, Kassapa-sīhanāda, Tevijja, Sāmaññaphala, Potthapada, Lohicca. The Agama contains two other suttas.

Of these suttas, fragments of the Ātānāṭīya and Sangīti have been discovered in Eastern Turkestan² and quotations from the Brahmajāla and Sangīti appear in the Abhidharmakośa.

<sup>1</sup> The Comparative Catalogue of Chinese Āgamas & Pāli Nikāyas, Japan, (1929).

<sup>2</sup> Hoernle, Manuscript Remains of Buddhist literature found in Eastern Turkestan.

The relation of the sūtras of the Madhyamāgama to those of the Majjhima Nikāya is similar to the Dīgha. Of the 152 suttas in the three volumes of the Majjhima, only 19 suttas are omitted in the Agama, viz., Cūlasāropama (no. 30), Mahāsaccaka (no. 36), Saleyyaka (no. 41), Veranjaka (no. 42), Kandaraka (no. 51), Jivaka (no. 55), Kukkuravatika (no. 57), Abbayarājakumāra (no. 58), Apannaka (no. 60), Tevijja-Vacchagotta (no. 71), Ghotamukha (no. 94), Cañki (no. 95), Vāsettha (no. 98), Sangārava (no. 100), Pańcattaya (no. 102), Kinti (no. 103), Sunakkhatta (no. 105), Anupada (no. 111) and Bhaddekaratta (no. 131). In the Madhyamagama, there are in all 222 sutras, 82 of which correspond to the suttas in the Angustara, 10 to suttas in the Samyutta, 9 to those in the Digha and rest to suttas in the Majjhima. There are a few of these suttas in Pāli not found in the Agama., while a few stray suttas correspond to passages in the Suttanipāta, Thera-theri-gāthā and Vinaya (Mahāvagga). In view of the mixture of the suttas from two or three Nikāyas in this Agama we can hardly expect much agreement in the order of the arrangement of the sūtras.

Fragments of two sūtras of the Madhyamāgama, viz., Upāli and Śuka, have been discovered in Eastern Turkestan.

The agreement between the Samyukta-Āgama and Samyutta Nikāya is similar to that of the Madhyamāgama and Majjbima Nikāya. The Sagāthavagga (Sec. I) of the two pitakas has much in common but not the Nidānavagga (Sec. II); the 8th and 9th chapters of Nidāna, viz., Samana-brāhmana and Antarapeyyāla are wanting in the Āgama, while the 1st and 5th chapters (Buddha and Gahapati) show marked differences. In the same section, Abhisamaya, Dhātu and other samyuttas are almost passed over in the Agama, but there is much commonness in the following five Samyuttas: Anamatagga, Kassapa, Lakkhana, Opamma and Bhikkhu. In the Khandha-vagga (Section III) of the Agama, the following samyuttas are wanting: Okkantika, Uppāda, Kilesa, Sāriputta, Nāga, Gandhabbakāya, Valāha, Vacchagotta and Ibana. In the Salayatana-vagga (Section IV), the following are absent: Mātugāma, Moggallāna, Asankhata, Sammappadhāna, Bāla and Iddbipāda, while major portions of the Magga, Indriya and Sacca omitted.

<sup>1</sup> Hoernle, op. cit.

The Samyuktāgama, as it exists in Chinese, is divided into 50 sections and incorporates a large number of suttas of the Anguttara Nikāya and a few of the other texts. There are also a few sūtras which have no parallels in Pāli.

A fragment of the Śronasūtra of this Agama has been discovered in Eastern Turkestan while Prof. Sylvain Lèvi traced a few quotations from this Agama in the Sūtrālamkāra of Asanga,1 and identified the following fragments from the collection of Grünwedel: Kokanada-sūtra (= Anguttara, V, pp. 196-198); Anāthapindada-sūtra (= Anguttara, V, pp. 185-189); Dīrghanakha sūtra (= Majjhima, I, pp. 497-501); Šarabha-sūtra (= Anguttara, I, pp. 185-188); Pravrājaka Sthavirasūtra and Brāhmaṇasatyāni sūtra (= Anguttara, II, p. 185) — all included in the Chinese translation of the Samyuktagama.2

The Ekottaragama and the Anguttara Nikaya have very little in common. This is partly due to the fact that a large number of the suttas of the Anguttara is included in the Madhyama and Samyukta Agamas. The Pāli text is much more extensive than the Sanskrit and it seems that the growth of this part of the Pitaka took place independently of each other. From Akanuma's comparative studies, the following may be pointed out as being more or less common in the two piṭakas: Samacitta (I, pp. 61-9), Devadūta (I, pp. 132-150), Brāhmaṇa to Loṇaphala (I, pp. 155-258), Cakka (II, pp. 32-44), Muṇḍarāja (III, pp. 45-62), Nīvaraṇa (III, pp. 63-79), Āghāta (III, pp. 185-202), Devatā to Mahā (III, pp. 329-420), Avyākata to Mahā (IV, pp. 67-139), Gahapati (IV, pp. 208-235), Savitta (V, pp. 92-112), Upāsaka (V, pp. 176-210), Jānussoṇi (V, pp. 249-273), and Anussati (V, pp. 328-358). This is not an exhaustive list, for there are stray agreements in other sections.

<sup>1</sup> See Winternitz, p. 234 fn. 2 Toung Pao, V, p. 299.

A fifth Āgama was not recognised by the schools other than the Theravāda. In the Divyāvadāna (pp. 17, 331, 333) and elsewhere the Āgamas are referred to as Āgamacatustayam. In the Nāgārjunikonda inscriptions also, four Nikāyas are spoken of and not five. The Pāli Khuddaka Nikāya is really a collection not of discourses, short or long, but of a number of independent works which could not be included in one of the four Nikāyas. By Khuddaka, the Pālists probably meant "other works" or "miscellaneous works." Though the Sarvāstivādins did not have a fifth Nikāya, they had a few texts like the Udānavarga. Suttanipāta (Aṭṭhaka and Pārāyaṇa vaggas), Sthavira-gāthā, Dharmapada, Vimānavastu, and Buddhavaṃsa, which came later on to be collectively called Kṣudrākāgama (see above, p. 125).

VINAYA: Our information about the Vinaya texts of the Sarvāstivādins is derived solely from the catalogues of Chinese canonical literature. In Nanjio's Catalogue, we came across the following titles:—

- (i) Sarvāstivāda-vinaya-mātṛkā, translated by Sanghavarman (445 A.D.): Ta'sho, xxiii, 1441; Nanjio 1132.
- (ii) Sarvāstivāda-vinaya-vibhāṣā, translator unknown (350-431 A.D.): Taisho xxiii, 1440; Nanjio 1135, 1136.

 (iii) Sarvāstivāda-vinaya-sangraba, compiled by the venerable Jinamitra, translated by I-tsing (700 A.D.); Nanjio 1127.

(iv) Daśādbyāya-vinaya-nidāna, translated by Vimalākṣa (being the preface to the Daśādbyāya-vinaya).

Nanjio 1144.

(v) Dašādbyāya-vinaya-bhiksu-prātimoksa, translated by Kumārajīva (404 A.D.): Taisho xxiii, 1436; Nanjio 1160.

- (vi) Daśādbyāya-vinaya-bbikṣuṇī-prātimokṣa, compiled by Fa-yin (420-479 A.D.): Taisho xxiii, 1437; Nanjio 1161.
- (vii) Dašādhyāya-vinaya or the Sarvāstivāda Vinaya, translated by Puṇyatara together with Kumārajīva (404 A.D.): Taisho xxiii, 1435; Nanjio 1115.

The principal text of the Sarvāstivādins was the Daśādbyāyavinaya. Fa-hien writes that he came across a Sarvāstivāda-vinaya in verses, but the Chinese translation of the Daśadbyaya-vinaya attributed to the Sarvāstivādins is in prose. The Dasādhyāya (Taisho ed., xxiii, 1435) is divided into 14 sections. It opens with the eight sections of the Pratimoksa-sutra. The ninth section deals with "seven dharmas" viz., śiksāpada, poṣadha, pāpadeśana, varsavasa, carmavastu, bhaisajyavastu and civara (precepts, formightly ceremonies, confession, dwelling in the rainy season, use of leather-shoes, use of medicines, and robes of monks). The tenth section contains "eight dharmas", viz., Kathina, Kausambī, Campā, Pāndulobitaka, Sangbāvašesaparivāsa, Paticchādana, Sayanāsana and Asamudācārika-dharma (rules re. making of Karhina-robes, dispute at Kausambi, events at Campa, deeds of Pāṇdulobitaka-monks, atonement for Saṅghāvaseṣa-offences, concealment of irreligious acts, rules regarding bed and seat, and rules regarding proper conduct of monks).¹ The eleventh section entitled "saṃyutta", i.e. miscellaneous rules, deals with the dbūta and other extra-ordinary precepts observed by monks. The twelfth section is devoted to Bhikṣuṇī-prātimokṣa containing, as it does, 8 Pārājikā, 17 Saṅghāvaśeṣā, 30 Naiḥṣargikā, 78 Pāyantikā, 8 Prātideśanīyā and Aṣṭa-dharmā. The thirteenth section re-arranges the preceding rules in the Ekottara style, from one to eleven dharmas. The concluding section, the fourteenth, contains the Upāli-paripṛcchā, a well-known text on disciplinary rules.²

This text contains almost all the chapters of the vinaya of the Theravadins and the Mūlasarvastivadins, and apears to be a much shorter version of the text of the latter. From the title, one expects ten chapters, but actually there are fourteen, and so we have to assume that four of the fourteen chapters were later additions or were originally treated as supplements. The 11th, 13th and 14th chapters are no doubt later additions, but it is difficult to ascertain the fourth additional chapter. A close study of the Chinese translation along with the Sanskrit text of the Mūlasarvastivadins will reveal the actual position.

ABHIDHARMA: The Abhidharma literature of the Sarvāstivādins is fairly extensive. Apart from the well-known seven texts belonging to this school and the famous Vibhāṣā-śāstras of the Vaibhāṣikas, this school had to its credit a few other philosophical works written by Vasubandhu, Samghabhadra, Dharmarrata and Dharmottara. None of these valuable works are available in original Sanskrit except the Abbidharmakośa-vyākhyā of Yaśomitra. The Vyākbyā is no doubt a mine of information and contains most of the philosophical topics discussed in the Abhidharma literature of the Sarvāstivādins. It may also be regarded as a quintessence of the seven Abhidharma texts. For a general idea of the several texts at the present moment, we shall have to depend on the valuable analysis of the Chinese translations of the texts made by Prof. Takakusu in the J.P.T.S., 1904-5 and the notes left by Prof. Louis de la Vallée Poussin in his introduction to the French translation of the Abhidharmakośa. With the publication of the Vyākbyā it has become possible to comprehend the terms and nomenclatures suggested by Takakusu on the basis of the Chinese renderings and form a better idea of the contents of the texts. The seven texts claimed by the Sarvāstivādins as constituting their original Abhidharmapitaka are as follows1:-

<sup>1</sup> The titles of vastus (chapters) in the Mūlasarvāstivāda-vinaya are as follows: Pravrajyā, Poṣadha, Pravāraṇā, Varṣā, Carma, Bhaiṣajya, Civara, Kaṭbina, Kośāmbaka, Karma, Pāṇḍulobitaka, Pudgala, Pārivāsika, Poṣadbasthāpana and Samghabheda.

<sup>2</sup> See Bodhisattva-prātimokṣa-sūtra, Intro., p. 3 (IHQ., VII. 2).

<sup>3</sup> For further details, see introduction to the Mulasarvastivadavinaya, Gilgit Manuscripts, vol. III, pt. ii.

- (i) Iñānaprasthānasūtra of Ārya Kātyāyaṇi-putra with its six supplements, (sat pādāb), viz.,
- (ii) Prakaranapāda of Sthavira Vasumitra
- (iii) Vijñānakāya of Sthavira Devasarmā
- (iv) Dharmaskandha of Arya Sariputra
- (v) Prajňaptišástra of Ārya Maudgalyāyana
- (vi) Dhātukāya of Pūrņa and
- (vii) Sangīti-paryāya of Mahākausthila.
- (i) The Iñānaprasthāna-sūtra is attributed to Ārya Kātyāyaņīputra. In the Kośa it is stated that the actual author of the work is Buddha but the arrangements of chapters and topics had been made by Kātyāyaṇīputra and so its authorship is attributed to him. It was twice translated into Chinese, by Gotama Samghadeva of Kashmir and Chu Fo-nien, in the 4th century A.D. and by Hiuen-tsang in the 7th century. It is divided into eight sections. The first section contains exposition of laukikagradharmas, jñāna, pudgala, śraddhā, ahrīkatā, rūpa and its laksana, anartha (?), and caitasikas (= supramundane topics,1 knowledge, individuality, faith and reverence, lack of modesty, material constituents of the body and their characteristics, anartha (?) and mental states). The second section details the samyojanas or defilements which hinder the spiritual progress of an adept, and the causes of defilements. The third section is devoted to the acquisition of the knowledge (jñāna) (a) of doctrinal matters by which a sekha becomes an asekha, (b) of right and wrong views, (c) of the means of attaining six abhijñās, (d) of the four truths and of the acquisitions to be made in the four stages of sanctification. The fourth section details the evil words and acts with their consequences as also explains the vijñaptis and avijñapti2. The fifth section gives an exposition of rupaskandha, i.e., the four great elements and of things originating out of them, both internal and external. The sixth section analyses the 22 indriyas (predominant faculties) and the three spheres of existence viz., kāma, rūpa and arūpa, and explains in detail the sparsendriya, mula-citta, etc. The seventh section is devoted to the mental states developed by an adept while he is in samādhi, and gradually advances from Sakadāgāmi to Anāgāmi stage. The last, the eighth section explains the four smrtyupasthānas, the various wrong views, and such other matters.

<sup>1</sup> Koja, I, 9 & 11.

E Kośa (Fr. transl.), Intro., p. xxx. See Infra, p. 153-4.

<sup>2</sup> Kośa, I, 11.

Dr. Barua suggests that this work may be paralleled with the Pāli text Paţisambbidāmagga.¹ There may be a verbal resemblance between the two texts, but the Iñānaprasthāna is written more on the lines of Buddhaghosa's Visuddhimagga than on the Paṭisambbidāmagga. The title also suggests that the work is expected to contain topics leading to the highest knowledge, which, in other words, is purity or emancipation.

The second book is entitled Prakaranapada. Its authorship is attributed to Sthavira Vasumitra, who, according to the Chinese tradition, composed it in a monastery, at Puskarāvatī. It was translated into Chinese by Gunabhadra and Bodhiyasas of Central India (A.D. 435-443) and also by Hinen-tsang (A.D. 659). The work is divided into eight chapters. The first defines rūpa, citta, caitasikas, cittaviprayuktas and asamskrtas2 (material constituents, mind, mental states, non-mental states, and the unconstituted). The second deals with the same topics as those discussed in the last two chapters of the third section of the Iñanaprasthanasūtra. The third explains the sense-organs and their spheres of action while the fourth defines several terms, such as dhātu, āyatana, skandha, mahābhūmikas² (cf. Kośa, II, 23. III, 32), etc. The fifth chapter analyses the anniayas (dormant passions), while the sixth touches the vijneya, anumeya and anasrava dharmas (things to be known and inferred, and pure dharmas). The concluding chapter, the seventh, appears to be an index, containing all the technical terms with their meanings in short.

The third book, Vijnāna-kāya is attributed to Devaśarmā, who, according to Hiuen-tsang, compiled it at Viśoka near Śrāvastī, about a century after Buddha's death. It was translated into Chinese by Hiuen-tsang (649 A.D.). It is dvided into six chapters. It contains an exposition of pudgala, indriya, citta, kleśa, vijñāna, etc. as given by Maudgalyāyana, enumerates the different classes of beings, persons, etc., defines the function of mental states as hetu (cause) and ālambana (basis) of spiritual progress¹ and also of mental states of a perfect and an imperfect adept,² Prof. La Vallée Poussin remarks in his Etudes Asiatiques 1925 (i. 343-376) that the first two chapters contain the controversies relating to the existence of past and future, and of pudgala (soul).³

<sup>1</sup> Law, History of Pali Lit., I. p. 337. 2 Sec Infra, pp. 135, 141-2.

The fourth book is entitled Dharmaskandha. Its authorship is attributed to Sariputra. It was translated into Chinese by Hiuen-tsang (659 A.D.). In the colophon of the Chinese translation this text is described as "the most important of the Abhidharma works, and the fountain-head of the Sarvāstivāda system". This book it seems appealed to the Chinese not for its subtleness and depth of philosophical discussions but for its comprehensiveness as outlining the general course of spiritual training prescribed for a Buddhist monk. This work also can be paralleled to the Visuddhimagga of Buddhaghosa. Its 21 sections are as follows: Siksāpadas or Sīlas; attainments leading to Srotaāpatti; development of faith in the Triratna; the fruits of four stages of sanctification, four ariya-pudgalas; samyak-samkalpa of the eight-fold path; attainment of rddbipadas; practice of smrtyupasthānas; exposition of the āryasatyas; four dhyānas; four apramānas; four higher samāpattis (ārūpyas), practice of bhavana; exposition of bodhyangas, and then an exposition of indriyas, ayatanas, skandbas and dhatus. Its concluding chapter explains the twelve terms of the formulæ of causation (pratityasamutpāda).

<sup>1</sup> Kola, ii, 61-62.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Infra, p. 137 f.

<sup>2</sup> Kola, vii. 12.

The fifth book, Dhātukāya, is attributed to Pūrņa in the Sanskrit and Tibetan tradition, and to Vasumitra by the Chinese writers. Prof. Takakusu remarks that the original Sanskrit had probably more than one recension. It was translated into Chinese by Hiuen-tsang (663 A.D.). The object of the treatise is to enumerate the dharmas, considered as 'reals' by the Sarvāstivādins. The dharmas are classified under the heads: 10 mahābhūmikas, 10 kleša-mahābhūmikas, 10 parittaklešas, 5 klešas, 5 drṣṭis, 5 dharmas, etc. This classification differs slightly from that found in Pāli texts or the Abhidharmakośa.¹ Prof. La Vallée Poussin thinks that this must be a very old text, which may be regarded as the source of the Pāli Dhātukathā also, as it discusses the sampayutta and vippayutta relations of the dharmas as has been done in the Dhātukathā.

The sixth book Prajňaptisāstra is attributed to Maudgalyāyana. It was translated into Chinese at a very late date (10041055 A.D.) by Fa-nu (=Dharmapāla) of Magadha. The Chinese text is incomplete. In Tibetan version this treatise is divided into three parts, viz., lokaprajňapti, kāranaprajňapti and karmaprajňapti. The lokaprajňapti appears in a well-digested form in the Abbidbarmakoša (III). Prof. La Vallée Poussin has analysed the first two prajňaptis in the Cosmologie bouddhique (pp. 275-350). In the lokaprajňapti the cosmological ideas of the Buddhists are given, in the kāranaprajňapti the characteristics that make a Bodhisattva are discussed while in the karmaprajňapti there is an enumeration and classification of different kinds of deeds.

The seventh book Sangībiparyāya is attributed to Mahākauṣṭhila by Yaśomitra and Buston, and to Śārīputra by the

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Košā (Transl.), ii. p. 150 fn. Sec Infra, p. 141-2.

<sup>2</sup> Kośa, Intro. p. xxxvii ff.

Chinese writers. It was translated into Chinese by Hiuen-tsang (660-663 A.D.). This text was compiled, according to the introductory remarks, immediately after Buddha's death to avert disputes among the disciples regarding the Buddhist teachings and disciplinary rules. The scene of this text is laid at Pāvā, where the dissensions among the Nigaṇṭha Nāṭaputtas started after the death of their teacher. It arranges the dharmas both doctrinal and disciplinary, numerically in the Ekottara style, i.e., gradually increasing the number of dharmas from one to ten. The contents of this text agree to a large extent with those of the Saṅgīti and Dasuttara suttantas¹ of the Dīghanihāya.

Besides these seven recognised texts of the Sarvāstivādin Abhidharmapiṭaka, there were a few other digests and commentaries dealing with the topics of the Abhidharma. The exhaustive commentary on the Iñānaprasthāna-sūtra was, of course, the Mahāvibhāṣā, compiled according to Paramārtha, by the Kātyāyanīputra himself with the assistance of Aśvaghosa of Sāketa. Among the digests, the most important work is Vasubandhu's Abhidharmakośa, which has got a bhāṣya written by Vasubandhu himself and a oyākbyā written by Yaśomitra. Then there are two other texts viz., Abhidharma-nyāyānusāra and Abhidharma-samaya-pradīpikā, attributed to Saṃghabhadra an opponent of Vasubandhu. Saṃghabhadra wrote these works to refute some of the theses of Vasubandhu, specially those which were in support of Sautrāntika views.

There was an earlier digest called the Abbidbarmasārawritten by Dharmaśri. It contained eight chapters, viz., dhātu, saṃskāra, anuśaya, ārya, jūāna, samādbi, miscellaneous, śāstravarga or vāda-varga<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Dasottara-sútra in Abbidharmakola-vyākhyā (Jap. ed.), p. 590.

<sup>2</sup> For details see La Vallée Poussin's Intro. to the Kosa, p. briii.

Among other works of note belonging to this school we may mention Sārīputrābhidbarma, Abhidbarmāmṛtašāstra of Ghoṣa, Abhidbarmabṛdaya of Dharmottara and Lokaprajñāpti-abhidbarmaśāstra of an unknown author.

Doctrines

In the history of the secession of schools, it has been shown that the Sarvāstivādins belonged to the orthodox group, hence there are many points of agreement between the Theravada and Sarvāstivāda doctrines.

1. Sabbam atthi

The principal point of difference between the two schools is that the Sarvāstivādins maintain the existence of 5 dharmas in their subtlest forms at all times, whether in the past, present or future, while the Theravādins deny any such existence. The former accept the fundamental creeds of Buddhism, viz., anatta and anicca of all worldly things, and their contention is that the things constituted out of the dharmas at a particular time are subject to disintegration but not the dharmas themselves, which always exist in their subtlest state. Vedanā, for instance, may be kušala, akušala or avyākṛta at a particular time and place but it exists at all times.<sup>1</sup>

The Kathāvatthu (I. 6) presents the arguments and counterarguments of the Sarvāstivādins and the Theravādins thus: The Sarvāstivādins maintain that all dharmas exist but not always and everywhere and in the same form. In reply to the question whether khandhas which are all different by nature exist uncombined (ayogam), they answer in the negative. This, however, gives an opportunity to the Theravādins to show the fallacy that if all exist then both micchādiṭṭbi and sammādiṭṭbi exist together. Then again by equating past and future to present, the Theravādins show that if past and future exist then their existence should be predicated in the same way as of the present, which the S. deny, saying that past and future exist but not exactly in the same way as one would speak of the present.

<sup>1</sup> See Points of Controversy, Appendix, pp. 375-7

The Th. take recourse to the second argument saying that let the 'present material aggregate' (paccuppanna-rūpa) be treated as one inseparable object; now, after some time has elapsed, this material aggregate becomes past, i.e., gives up its presentness (paccuppannabhāva) to which the S. agree; then in the same way can it be said that the material aggregate also gives up its materiality (rupa-bhava)? The S. deny the latter inference, reasoning thus,-let a piece of white cloth, be regarded as one inseparable object; now, when this cloth is coloured, it gives up its whiteness (like 'paccuppannabhāva' in the former case), but does it give up its clothness (like 'rupabhāva' in the former case)? This disarms the opponents. The Th. however follow up this argument of the S. by suddhikanaya (pure logic) saying that if the material aggregate (rupa) does not give up its materiality (rūpabbāva),2 then rūpa becomes permanent, eternally existing like nibbana-a conclusion not accepted by the S., as according to the latter rupabhāva is different from nibbānabhāva.

The next question put by the Th. is whether past (atīta) gives up its pastness (atītabhāva)? The S. answer in the negative, but take care to note that when they say that atītabhāva exists they mean that anāgatabhāva (futurity) and paccuppannabhāva (presentness) do not exist like the atītabhāva, and similarly when they predicate existence of anāgatabhāva, they mean atīta-bhāva and paccuppannabhāva do not exist like anāgatabhāva. This general statement is then applied to each of the khandhas. The Th. round up the discussion by their usual suddhikanaya saying that atīta or atītabhāva then would be the same as nibbāna or nibbānabhāva a conclusion rejected by the S. The Th. then take to vacanasodhana (clearing up of verbal errors) saying that (1) if the existence of past (atīta) and non-past (nvātīta) as also future (anāgata) and non-future (nvānāgata) is denied then the S. should not say that past and future exist; so also (ii) if they do not accept the identity of atīta, paccuppanna and anāgata, they cannot say that atīta and anāgata exist.

This is repeated with each of the khandhas.

<sup>2</sup> Cy. rūpakkhandhena samgahitattā.

The next argument of the Th. is that if the S. admit that paccuppannañāṇa (present cognition) exists and it has the function of knowing things (paccupannam ñāṇam atthi, tena ñāṇana ñāṇakaranīyaṃ karoti) and then why not the atītañāṇa and anāgatañāṇa, the existence of which is affirmed by the S., should not have the function of knowing things in analogy to that of paccuppannañāṇa?<sup>2</sup> This the Th. consider as illogical and reject the contention of the S. that 'atītaṃ ñāṇaṃ atthi'.

The Th. now take up the cases of the Arhats, Anagamis, etc., and show that according to the S. who state atita raga exists in an Arhat, that atita byāpāda exists in an Anagami and so forth, an Arhat should be sarago, an Anagami should be byāpannacitto and so on, but this inference is not accepted by the S.

t By taking recourse to the discussion whether hutoā hoti hutoā hoti and na hutoā na hoti, na hutoā na hoti, the Th. show logically the untenability of the assertion of the S.

<sup>2</sup> In the text, this argument is elaborated by the application of this general statement to each of the sense-organs, (paras 23-28) as also to battha, pāda, pabba, kāya, āpo, tejo and oāya (paras 47-49).

The last argument resorted to by the Th. is that if the existence of atīta, paccuppanna and anāgata khandhas, dhātus, āyatanas be admitted, then the S. should say that there are (3×5 or) 15 khandhas, (3×18 or) 54 dhātus, (3×12 or) 36 āyatanas which the S. reject saying that they may accept the position that atīta or anāgata exists from one standpoint and does not exist from aother standpoint (atthi siyā atītam or viyā nvātītam or nvanāgatan ti). The Th. then bring in their suddbīkanaya by citing the instance of nibbāna and establishes the futility of the assertion of the S. that past and future exist. Both the Th. and S. then quote passages from the Sutta Piţaka in support of their own contentions, one however remaining unconvinced by the other. From the controversies dealt with above the following may be taken as the opinion of the S.:

- 1 The past and future, as usually understood, do not exist, though they are perceptible in the present.<sup>1</sup> In the same sense, the non-past and non-future should also be taken as non-existing.
- a It is the bhāoa of each of the five khandhas and not the khandhas persist in the past, present and future.
- 3 An object (vastu) may lose its pastness, presentness, or futurity but not its objectness (vastutva) but that objectness is not identical with nibbāna or nibbānabbāva.
- 4 An Arhat e.g., for instance, has atita rāga but he is not therefore to be regarded as 'sarāgo'.2

The S. admit impermanency (anityatā) of the constituted things but they contend that the "dharmas" (or bhāvas) of the t E.g. anagatam butva pacenppannam boti but anagata is not identical with pacenppanna in the ordinary sense, though in pacenppanna there is (the dharma of) anagata so in that sense pacenppanna is anagata.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. the views of Saila schools re. anusaya, pp. 92-94.

past are transmitted into the present and likewise the "dharmas" of the future are latent in the present. This we may illustrate, by citing the example of a sweet mango-the past mango seed transmits into the present "mangoness" if not the "sweetness" and similarly the "future mango" receives its "mangoness" from the present: the mango seed can never produce any other fruit though there may be a change in the quality and shape and colour of the mango. The S. speak of a being in the same way. According to them a being is composed of five dharmas (not five khandhas), viz., (1) citta (mind), (ii) caitasika (mental states), (iii) rūpa (matter), (iv) visamprayuktasamskāra (státes independent of the mind), and (v) asamskrtas (the unconstituted).2 The five dharmas (not elements as usually understood) persist in a

I In Vasumitra this appears also as a separate opinion of the S.: The phenomena jāti, jarā, sthiti, anityatā are clttavisamprayuktas but included in samskāraskandha. One of these four items, viz., jarā is discussed in the Kou., (VII. 8) in the topic "jarāmaranam vipāko ti?" an opinion of the Andhakas, the Kuu., supporting the opposite view that "jarāmaranam" is not vipāka.

2 These five are sub-divided into seventy-five thus: -

(b) indriya (5) (c) avijnapti (1) I. Rūpa (11): (a) visaya (5) (i) rūpa (i) caksurindriya (ii) śrotrendriya (ii) śabda (iii) ghrānendriya (iii) gandha (iv) jihvendriya (iv) rasa (v) kāyendriya (v) sparša II. Citta (1)

III. Caitasikas (46):

(a) Mahābhūmika (10)

(vi) mati or prajnā (i) vedanā (vii) smrti (ii) samjñā (viii) manaskāra (iii) cetană (ix) adhimoksa (iv) sparśa

(x) samādhi (v) chanda being, the present being the resultant of the past, and potential of the future. An adept after becoming a sotāpanna remains so

(b) Kuśalamahābhūmika (10)
(i) śraddhā	(vi) alobha
(ii) vīrya	(vii) adveśa
(iii) upekṣā	(viii) ahimsā
(iv) hri	(ix) praśrabdhi
(v) apatrāpya	(x) apramāda
(c) Kleśa-mabābbūmika (6)	(d) Akuśala-mahābhūmika (2)
(i) moha	(i) ahrikatā
(ii) pramāda	(ii) anapatrāpya
(iii) kauśidya
(iv) aśrāddhya
(v) styāna
(vi) auddhatya
(e) Upakleša-bbūmika (10)	(f) Aniyata-bhūmika (8)
(i) krodha	(i) kaukṛtya
(ii) mraksa	(ii) middha
(iii) mātsarya	(iii) vitarka
(iv) irsyā	(iv) vicāra
(v) pradāśa	(v) rāga
(vi) vihimsā	(vi) pratigha
(vii) upanāha	(vii) māna
(viii) māyā	(viii) vicikitsā
(ix) śāṭhya
(x) mada
V. Citta-viprayukta (14):
(i) prāpti	(viii) jāti
(ii) aprāpti	(ix) sthiti
(iii) sabhāgatā	(x) jarā
(iv) asamjñika	(xi) ənityatā
(v) asamjñi-samāpatti	(xii) nāmakāya
(vi) nirodha-samāpatti	(xiii) padakāya
(vii) jivita	(xiv) vyañjana-kāya ākāśa
(ii) pratisamkhyā-nirodha
(iii) apratisaṃkhyā-nirodha.
See Resembers Die	1 1 10

See Rosenberg, Die probleme der buddhistischen philosophie, pp. 128-9. Rähula Sänkṛtyāyana, Abhidharma-kośa, Table III.

in his following existence proving thereby that his past dharma continues and the three samyojanas¹ remain ineffective. It may be argued by the Th. that the three samyojanas have altogether disappeared; then the Sarvāstivādins may cite the instance of the Sakadāgamin as a better illustration. A Sakadāgamin reduces rāga, dosa and moha to the minimum, and in his following births that state continues, proving thereby the continuity of past "dharmas". Now we may pass on to the case of Arhats. The Arhats, it will be seen, become completely free from rāga, dosa and moha; according to the Th. they are destroyed for ever but according to the S., these rāga, dosa and moha persist though in an ineffective form and these may reappear and cause an Arhat fall from the Arhathood—a topic discussed in the Kvu. (I. 2) and attributed by Buddhaghosa to the S., viz., Parihāyati arabā arabattā tir².

In Kātīkas 25-27 of the fifth Kośasthāna of the Abhidharmakosa,<sup>3</sup> there is a detailed exposition of the main thesis of the Sarvāstivādins, viz., Sarvam asti: The contention of the S. that the dharmas exist in the past, present and future rests on certain statements found in the Āgamas, one of which is as follows:—

रूपमनित्यमतीतमनागतम् । कः पुनर्वादः प्रत्युत्पन्नस्य । एवंदर्शी श्रुतवान् त्रार्यशावकोऽतीते रूपेऽनपेत्नो भवति । त्र्यनागतं रूपं नामिनन्दति । प्रत्युत्पन्नस्य रूपस्य निर्विदे विरागाय निरोधाय प्रतिपन्नो भवति ।

1 Viz., sakkāyaditthi, sīlabbataparāmāsa, vicikicchā.

2 For its exposition, see ante, p. 84f.

3 See Stcherbatsky, Central Conception of Buddhism, Appendix, pp. 76-91; La Vallée Poussin's Fr. transl. of Kośa, V. 25-27; Rāhula Sānkrityāyana, Abbidharmakośa.

The exposition given in the Kathāvatthu speaks of "bhāvānyathātva" of Dharmatrāta, see p. 145.

[Rūpa (material constituents of a being) whether past or future is impermanent, not to speak of the present. A learned Srāvaka, who realises this, remains unconcerned of past rūpa, does not rejoice at his future rūpa and exerts to rid his mind of the present rūpa].<sup>1</sup>

On the authority of this statement taken literally (kanthatah) the S. contend that if past rūpa do not exist, there is no necessity of instructing an adept to remain unconcerned of the same. In the same way it may be said of the future and the present.<sup>2</sup>

The same statement when interpreted (arthatah) yields a further argument, viz., every vijñāna (perception, cognition) requires the combination of two things, the sense-organ and its object. Now, one speaks of mano-vijñāna (mental perception, cognition) of past acts or things. This also implies the existence of past acts or objects, otherwise how could there be mano-vijñāna of the same. The same argument is applicable to future acts or objects.

Then again if there be no past, how can one speak of an effect due to past good or bad deeds. At the moment

1 See M. Vr., p. 444; cf. Bhaddekaratta-sutta in Majjhima, iii, p. 187:

Atitam nänvägameyya, nappatikaikhe anägatam Yad atitam pahinam tam, appattañ ca anägatam, Paccuppannam ca yo dhammam tattha tattha vipassati Asamhiram asamkuppam tam vidvä manubrühaye.

३ Kois-vyākhyā (Jap. cd.), p. 468: अतीतं विशिवनो वर्ष नामनिष्याय युनवानावैयानको अतीतं वर्षेऽनपेचोऽमेनिष्यत्। यस्मानचैयानतीतं वर्षम्। तस्मान्द्रतनानावैयानको अतीतं वर्षेऽनपेचो भवति। अनाततं वर्षं वर्षे नामनिष्यतः युनावानावैयानको वर्षात्राम् वर्ष्यत्। यस्मानचिष्यतः वर्षे नामनिष्यतः युनावानावैयानकोऽनामतं वर्षे नामनिष्यति । प्रमुप्यम् चेदं मिचनो वर्षं नामनिष्यदिति निस्तरः ।

3 Ibid., p. 469: न दयं प्रतीत्व मनोविज्ञानं स्वात्। यदतीतानामतालम्बनमिति विशेषः । ततो विज्ञानमेव स्वात पालस्वनामावदिति । when the effect is produced there is the vipākahetu, which is past.1

For the reasons stated above, the S. affirm the existence of past and future dravyas only and not of bhāva, lakṣaṇa, or avasthā.

Among the Sarvāstivādins again, there are four different opinions, which are as follows:—

- (i) bhāvānyathātva: Bhadanta Dharmatrāta maintains that the past, present and future are differentiated on account of the non-identity of bhāva and not of dravya e.g. when a vase of gold is broken and transformed into a figure of gold, colour remaining the same or when milk is transformed into whey, changing the taste, strength and digestibility but not its colour. In the same way when future dharma is changed to present, the anāgatabhāva only is abandoned and the vartamāna-bhāva is acquired, dravya remaining identical; in the same way the change of the present into past may be explained, i.e., when the present bhāva is abandoned and the past bhāva is acquired, the dravya remains identical.
- (ii) lakṣaṇānyathātva: Bhadanta Ghoṣaka and others maintain that the dharmas in their transition from past to present, and present to future, undergo changes in characteristics (lakṣaṇas) only. A dharma, when it is past, is associated (yukta) with the lakṣaṇas of the past, but it is not dissociated (aviyukta) from the lakṣaṇas of the present and future, so also a future dharma is associated (yukta) with the lakṣaṇas of the future but not dissociated from the lakṣaṇas of the present and past; in the same way one can speak of the present. By way of illustration, it may be said that when a man is attached (rakta) to a woman, he is not detached (avirakta) from other women.

<sup>1</sup> Kośa-vyākbyā, (Jap. ed.), p. 469: विद्यमान-खलचर्च ग्रुभाग्रभमतीतं कर्म। विपक्तिकाल उत्पद्यमानफललात्। वर्चभान धर्मवदिति।

(iii) avasthānyathātva: Bhadanta Vasumitra and others maintain that past, present and future of a dharma is indicated by its difference in condition (avasthā). If in a certain state (avasthā) a dharma is not active (kāritram na karoti), it is future (anāgata), if the dharma is active it is present (vartamāna) and if the dharma has ceased after being active (krtvā niruddhah), it is past. In short, there is change of states (avasthāntara) but not change of objects (dravyāntara). A dharma is described as past, present and future, in accordance with the state attained by it at a particular moment, and not on account of the differences in characteristics.

Changes in dharma occur also on account of changed conditions (avasthāntara) due to change in places (sthānāntara), but actually there is no change (nasvabhāvānyathātva), e.g., when a cipher is put in the place of ten or hundred or thousand, it carries different values, but it actually remains the same, hence there is avasthāntara and not svabhāvāntara.

- (iv) anonyathātva: Bhadanta Buddhadeva and others maintain that the past, present and future are spoken of relatively<sup>2</sup> i.e., a dharma is described as past, present or future with reference to that which precedes and that which follows. Future is established relatively (apeksya) to past and present; the
- ा Kośa-vyākhyā (Jap. ed.), p. 470: तदाया पुरुष एकस्यां स्त्रीयां रक्षः श्रीपास्त्रविरक्षः इति। एकस्यां स्त्रीयां अस्य रागाध्यवसानं वर्तते। श्रीपासु स्त्रीयु रागप्राप्ति-रेवास्ति। न ससुदाचार इति।
- 2 This, according to Fa-pao, is the opinion of Samghabhadra. According to P'ou-koung this opinion is also expressed in the Vibhāṣā. Cf. Kośa-vyākhyā, p. 470: पूर्वमपरं चापेच्यातीतानागतवर्तमाना उच्चन्ते। पूर्वमिवातीतं वर्त्तं मानं वापेच्यानागत इति। पूर्व वातीतमपरं वानागतमपेच्य वर्तमान इति। भूपर्यमेव वर्तमानमागतं वापेच्यातीत इति। पूर्वपरापेचीऽन्थथान्यविकस्य व्यवहारः। past relatively to present and future and the present relatively to past and future.<sup>1</sup> The same woman, e.g., is called a daughter and mother, when she is referred to in relation to her mother and daughter respectively. Hence there is actually no change in a dharma (na dravyāntaraḥ); past, present and future of a dharma indicate only its relation to other dharmas.

Vasubandhu regards the first opinion (bhāvanyathātva) as similar to that of the Sānkhyan thinkers and takes it as upholding the theory of transformation (parināmavāda). The second opinion he criticises as marked by confusion of time (adhva-samkara) because the characteristics (lakṣaṇas) of past, present and future are always present. According to the fourth opinion, he says, all the three past, present and future exist at the same time, so it is wrong. He therefore accepts Vasumitra's opinion (avasthānyathātva) and rejects the other three.<sup>2</sup>

II. Maitri (love) and Karuna (compassion)

The S. in consonance with the Th. regard Buddha as a human being but they attribute to him divine, sometimes superdivine, powers. They look upon the Bodhisattvas as puthujjanas, who must destroy the worldly ties like an average adept in order to step into the samyakatvaniyāma or sotāpannahood

According to the S. "sentient beings are not objects of maitri and karunā and so forth on the part of the Buddha," and further "if anyone adheres to the view that there are sentient beings he cannot realize emancipation."

The former opinion is opposed in the Kvu. (XVIII. 32: Natthi Buddhasa Bhagavato karunā ti) on the ground that the 1 See Kośa-vyākhyā (Jap. ed.), p. 470-1.

<sup>2</sup> Santaraksita in his Tattva-sangraha has criticised the opinions of all the teachers mentioned above, including that of Vasubandhu.

Buddha is described in the texts as 'kāruniko' and that he sometimes enters into mahākarunāsamāpatti and so he has karunā for sentient beings. In the Pāli texts, the practice of four brahmavihāras: maitrī, karunā, muditā and upekkhā form an essential part of the Theravāda code of spiritual practice. It is by means of brahmavihāras that an adept is able to look upon all beings as one and the same, in other words, develops samatājāāna.

As regards the second opinion we may state that the doctrine of anattā teaches that there are actually no individual beings, and that it is avijjā which makes one think of the existence of beings. The S. are only stating the axiomatic truth that in Buddha's eye, no individual beings exist and as such they cannot be the object of his maitri and karunā.

There are three other views relating to Buddha's teachings, which are opposed to those of the Mahāsanghikas' and are in consonance with the human conception of Buddha. They are,

(i) The Buddhas cannot expound all doctrines with a single utterance.

(ii) The world-honoured One utters words which are not always in conformity with the truth.

(iii) The sūtras delivered by Buddha have nītārtha² and there are even some anītārtha-sūtras.

III. Arbats

According to the Sarvāstivādins, Vasumitra says,-

- A srotāpanna has no chance of retrogression while an arhat has.
- r All these views have been discussed before, see ante, pp. 74 f.
- 2 The word nitārtha means expressions which do not convey the real sense directly as the neyyārtha would do. Nitārtha corresponds to sammuti or samurti-satya.

- (ii) All arhats do not gain anutpāda-jñāna.
- (iii) An arhat is governed by the pratityasamutpādānga (members of the causal law).
- (iv) Certain arhats perform meritorious deeds.
- (v) Arhats are not free from the influence of past karma.
- (vi) Arhats gain naivasaiksa-nāsaiksajñāna.
- (vii) Arhats gain the four fundamental dhyānas: they cannot realse the fruits of dhyāna.

The first opinion that arhats may have retrogression is the same as that of the Mahāsanghikas and others (discussed above, pp. 64, 85). The S, like the M. postulate the existence of two classes of arhats with different degrees of attainments. According to the S., all arhats are not completely perfect—an opinion not accepted by the Theravadins though the latter have no objection to distinguish arhats as Sa(=sva)-dhammakusala and Paradhammakusala. It is interesting to find this opinion discussed also in the Milindapanha, where it is said that there are arhats who may not be aware of the name and gotra of any and every person, the various roads and so forth, but there may be some conversant with the vimuttis.

<sup>1</sup> See Kośa, vi. 64: The Ubhayatobhāgavimutta-arhats realise nirodhasamāpatti and remove both kleśāvaraṇa (obstacle of passions) and vimokṣāvaraṇa (obstacle to the knowledge of akarmanyatā of nāma and rūpa) while the Prajñāvimukta-arhats are those who remove only kleśāvaraṇa by means of prajñā; see also ante, p. 86. For the six kinds of arhats, see Kośa, vi. 56ff.

<sup>2</sup> Milindapañba, p. 267: Avisayo mahārāja ekaccasa arahato sabbam jānitum na hi tassa balam atthi sabbam jānitum. Cf. Kvu., II, 2 in ante, p. 86.

<sup>3</sup> The five vimuttis arc,—(1) tadangavimutti or vippasanañana attained by removing the misconceptions of nicca, nimitta etc.,

The second opinion reiterates the first in another form. The S. hold that some and not all arhats gain the anutpādajñāna (lit. knowledge of the cessation of rebirth) but all may have kṣayajñāna (lit. knowledge of the extinction of all impurities in oneself). The M. assert that only Buddhas and not arhats can have both kṣayajñāna and anutpādajñāna.

Regarding the third opinion, Mr. Masuda on the basis of 'Shu-chi says that of the twelve members of the causal law, four, viz., nāmarūpa, ṣadāyatana, phassa and vedanā—(or, according to another interpretation, only vedanā) remain active in the case of arhats, the other members, i.e., avijjā, saṃkhārā, taṇhā, upādāna, bhava, jāti, and jarā-marana becoming ineffective. The Chinese interpretation can be accepted, only if "vedanā" is limited to "adukkha-asukha-vedanā" for an arhat is chalupekkho² (endowed with indifference in respect of the six indriyas) i.e. the organs of sense come into contact with the respective objects but produce neither good nor bad feeling.

The fourth opinion speaks of the puññopacaya of an Arhat. The Th. and Mahīśāsakas reject it; so also do the Mahāsaṅghi-kas. The Arhats are said to have done all that is to be done (katakaraṇīya) and are beyond merit and demerit, good or bad; hence to speak of some of them as collecting merits shows that the S. like the Andhakas do not look upon all arhats as completely perfect.

The fifth opinion that arhats are subject to the influence of past karma is perhaps based upon some instances found in the

<sup>(2)</sup> vikkhambhanavimutti or paccavekkhanañāna, (3) samucchedavimutti or maggañāna, (4) patipassaddhivimutti or phalañāna, and (5) nissaraṇavimutti.
1 See above, p. 78-79.

<sup>2</sup> See Digha, iii, p. 245. Majjhima, i, p. 219.

<sup>3</sup> See ante, p. 88.

Piṭakan stories that Arhats like Angulimāla and Mahāmoggallāna suffered pain on account of their past karma.<sup>1</sup>

In the sixth opinion, the word naivaśaikṣa-nāśaikṣa as translated by Mr. Masuda appears to be ambiguous,<sup>2</sup> and preference should be given to the meaning "nirvāṇa" as assigned to it by the Mahāvyutpatti. The sense would then be that according to the S., some and not all arhats attain Nirvāṇa (full emancipation).

The seventh opinion has not been taken up for discussion in the Kvw. The Kośa (viii. 6) tells us that there are eight fundamental dhyānas (maulasamāpattidravyāni), i.e., four dhyānas and four ārūpyas (higher dhyānas). The contention of the S. is that all arhats complete the four dhyānas but all do not necessarily attain the fruits of the four dhyānas, which are detailed in the Kośa (viii. 27-28), thus: by the first dhyāna, one obtains drṣṭa-dharma-sukhavihāra, by the second jñāna-darśana, (or divya-cakṣurabhijñā); by the third prajñā-prabheda, and by the fourth anāsravatā.

1 See Milindapañba, p. 134: Na hi mahārāja sabbantam vedayitam kammamūlakam. See also Kvu., viii. kammahetu arahā arahattā parihāyatīti?

2 "For arhants there are things which are no longer to be learnt and things which are still to be learnt." Asia Major, p. 49-

3 Digha iii. 222, Ang., ii. 4: Atth' āvuso samādhibhāvanā bhāvitā bahulikatā diṭṭhadhammasukhavihārāya saṃvattati ñāṇadassanapaṭilābhāya satisampajaññāya āsavānaṃ khayāya saṃvattati.

4 lit, enjoyment of happiness in the present body (Pāli: dittha-dhammasukhavihāra).

5 lit, insight into the real state of things i.e. free from any vikalpa. (=Pāli: ñāṇadassana).

6 lit. special or detailed knowledge of the things of the world—the corresponding Pāli expression is satisampajāññā.

7 lit. purity (Pāli: āsavānam khaya).

IV. Samyakatvanyāma1 (destined to attain nirvāṇa)

Vasumitra attributes the following opinions to the Sarvāstivādins:—

(i) A person can acquire the samyakatvanyāma through the meditation of śūnyatā and apranibitatā; a person in the samyakatvanyāma is called pratīpannaka up to the fifteenth (or the last) moment of the daršanamārga. In the sixteenth moment he is called phalastha when he is in bhāvanāmārga.

 (ii) A person can acquire the samyakatuanyāma and can also gain arhatship independently of the four dhyānas.

(iii) A being (in Rūpa or Arūpa-dhātu) can gain arhatship but not samyakatvanyāma. It is only when he is in Kāmadhātu that he can have samyakatvanyāma as also arhathood.

Allied to the above three, there are two other views attributed to the S., viz.,

- (iv) There are also certain devas who lead a holy life.
- (v) There is no one who is free from passion in the Uttarakuru. No saint is born there or in the Asaññisattvaloka.

The first three views raise the question of samyakatvanyāma, i.e., of persons who are destined to attain Nirvāṇa, and have no chance of being diverted from the Aryan path and going to lower states or joining heretical sects. An adept in samyakatvanyāma is the same as sotāpattimaggapatipanna, i.e., one after destroying the three samyojanas (impurities), viz., sakkāyadittbi (belief in a self), sīlabbataparāmāsa (belief in the efficacy of rituals) and vieikiechā (lack of faith in the Triratna) is on the way to sotāpattiphala. According to the scheme of the S., an adept remains sotaāpattiphala-pratipannaka for the first fifteen moments, i.e., up to the development of mārge anvayajñāna-kṣānti, when he completes the darśanamārga; from the 16th moment he is in bhāvanāmārga and is a srotaāpattiphalastha or srotaāpanna.

<sup>1</sup> For references see Kola, vi. p. 181 f.n.

The first opinion raises the question whether one can become a srotaāpattiphalapratipannaka by the meditation of sūnyatā (i.e. anattatā) and apranihitatā i.e. duhkhatā and anityatā<sup>2</sup> and not of animittā;<sup>3</sup> the answer given by the S. is in the affirmative.

The second deals with the problem whether samyakatvanyāma followed by arhathood can be attained without the practice of the four dhyānas, the S. asserting that it is possible to attain arhathood by means of certain practices other than the usual four dhyānas, e.g. by means of satipatthāna or brahmavihāra and so forth.

The third is concerned with the problem whether gods in the Rūpa or Arūpadhātu can gain samyakatvanyāma as also arhathood. The S. hold that they can attain the latter but not the former which can only be attained by a being while in the Kāmadhātu. This problem is discussed in the Kvu. (I. 3): N'atthi devesu brahmacariyāvāso ti?—an opinion held by the Sammitīyas. The opinion of the S. is upheld by the Th. In the Kvu. it is contended that "brahmacariyāvāsa" does not mean merely "pabbajjā" (ordination), "muṇdiyam" (shavenheadedness) and so forth as held by the Sammitiyas, but includes "maggabhāvanā." The Th. and the S. hold that the Anāgāmis do not come to the Kāmadhātu but they remain in Rūpa or Arūpadhātu and by maggabhāvanā there, they become Arhats, without becoming a samyakatvanyāma.

<sup>1</sup> See infra, p. 151. 2 Cf. Asia Major, II, p. 40, n. 9.

<sup>3</sup> Mr. Masuda on the basis of Fa-jen states that Dharmagupta held that one cannot attain samyakatvanyāma without animittasamādhi, Asia Major, p. 40, n. 9.

The fourth opinion of the S. is that the gods except the Asāññīsattas can have maggabhāvanā, though not pabbajjā, mundiyam, etc.

The fifth opinion is based on a passage of the Aig. Nik. (iv. 396) and cited in the Kvu. (I. 3. p. 99) in which it is said that the inhabitants of Jambudipa surpass those of Uttarakuru and Tāvatiṃsa heaven in courage, mindfulness and in religious life (brahmacariyāvāsa); from this it has been inferred that there cannot be any saint in Uttarakuru. It has been mentioned above that the S. as well as the Th. exclude the Asaññisattas from the gods who follow a religious life, and so, among the Asaññisattas also there cannot be any saint.

V. Anupubbābhisamaya (gradual realisation of the truth) Vasumitra attributes the following views to the Sarvāstivādins:—

- (i) The four truths are to be meditated upon gradually.
- (ii) The catur-śrāmanyaphala are not necessarily attained gradually.
- 1 Points of Controversy, p. 73.
- 2 The S. are making an anomaly in drawing the inferences. If Uttarakuru cannot have any saint how the Tavatimsa can have any?
- 3 Mr. Masuda points out (in the f.n. Asia Major, p. 46) that Uttarakuru is regarded as a land of pure happiness and the Asaññisatras as the highest devaloka with long life and happiness; hence the beings of these two abodes need not take to religious life.

(iii) If one is in samyakatvanyāma, he can attain (at once) the fruits of sakṛdāgāmi and anāgāmi on account of (the completion of) the laukikamarga.

An adept, according to the S., develop insight into the four truths in a gradual order! in 15 moments thus:-

Darsana-marga:-

- (i) Duhkhe (or five skhandhas, nāma-rūpe) dharmajñāna-kṣānti²
- (ii) Duhkhe dharmajñana
- (iii) duhkhe anvayajñāna-kṣānti3
- (iv) Duhkhe anvayajñana

Srotaapatti-pratipannaka-darsanamarga:-

- (v) Samudaye (sāsravadharmānām hetu i.e., karmakleśe) dharmajñāna-kṣānti } confined to Kāmadhātu.
- (vi) Samudaye dharmajñāna
- anvayajñāna-kṣānti (vii)
- anvayajñāna (viii)
  - (ix) Nirodhe (pratisamkhyā-nirodha or karmakleśa-kṣaye) dharmajūānaksanti.
  - (x) Nirodhe dharmajñana

1 Cf. Kośa, vi. 2:

सत्यक्षानि चलारि दु:खसस्दयसया। निरोधी मार्ग: एतेयां यथाभिसमयं कम: ॥

- 2 Kṣānti means "faith (kṣamate=rocate, Koia, vi. 18). An adept at the first moment thinks that he has realised (though actually he has nor realised) the fact that the things of the Kāmadhātu i.e. the skandhas are undesirable. It is in the second moment that he realises that the skandhas are undesirable. He acquires now dharmajñana.
- 3 After the realisation of the actual state of skandhas of the Kāmadhātu, the adept extends his inner vision to the skandhas of Rūpa and Arupa-dhatus to realise in the next two moments that skandhas of the higher worlds are also undesirable and hence existence in any of the worlds is to be avoided. In the same way, the other three truths are to be understood.

confined to Kāmadhātu.

extended to Rūpa and Arūpadhātus.

extended to Rūpa and Arūpadhātus.

confined to Kāmadhātu

(xi) Nirodhe anvayajnānaksānti extended to Rupa and (xii) anvayajñāna (xiii) Mārge (śaikṣā aśaikṣā dharmā or samatha-vipasyanāyām) dharmajñā-paksānti

(xiv) Mārge dharmajñāna

(xv) Märge anvayajñānaksānti Srotaāpatti-pratipannaka-darianamārga; __ } extended to Rūpa and (xvi) Mārge anvayajñāna¹ Arūpadhātus.

From the above table it is evident how the S. mark the gradual stages of the development of insight into the four truths. In the Kun. the controversies: Anupubbābhisamayo tið (II. 9) and Odhisodhiso kilese jahātīti? (I. 4) and also Vimuttam vimuecamānan ti? (III. 4), support the view of the S. about the gradual realisation of the truths. The problem discussed is whether an adept realises the four sāmaññaphalas including vimutti gradually or not? The Th. contend that there is no bar to the realisation of all the phalas at one and the same time. The S. subscribe to this view as will be apparent from the second opinion of the S. quoted above, except that they do not include the fourth phala, viz., arbathood or vimutti.3 Buddhaghosa should have pointed out this discrepancy as far as the S. are concerned. According to him, the opinion that the realisation of the phalas happens gradually is held by the Sammitiyas.

In the third point, it is stated that according to the S., those adepts only who have completed the laukikamarga" attain the second and third phalas at one and the same time. The Th. hold 1 Cf. Vibbanga, pp. 235, 315, 329.

2 There may be ascetics who obtain the four fruits gradually (anupürvena catuhphalaprāpti). Kola, vi. 45.

3 Kola, vi, 45: The bbavana-marga is of two kinds: laukika or sāsrava and lokottara or anāsrava.

that bhāvanāmārga which commences from the srotaāpattiphala stage is lokottara and cannot be laukika; the S., however, contend that it may be either laukika or lokottara. A topic allied to this is discussed in the Kvu. (I: 5), which will be dealt with hereafter.

VI. Puthujjana, Laukikamārga or Laukikāgradbarma

The S., as pointed out by Vasumitra, hold:-

- (i) An average man is able to destroy raga and pratigha in the Kāmadhātu.
- (ii) A puthujjana can die in a good state of mind.
- (iii) There is laukikasamyagdrsti and laukikasraddbendriya.
- (iv) The laukikāgradharma is a stage lasting but one moment (ekakṣaṇikacitta).

In the Buddhist texts a puthujjana (an average man), whether a householder or a recluse, who has not yet destroyed the three samyojanas viz. sakkāyadiṭṭbi, vicikicchā and sīlabbata-parāmāsa¹ in order to become a sotāpanna, can hardly be expected to destroy rāga, dosa, moha which impurities are normally removed when an adept reaches the anāgāmi stage. The S. hold that a puthujjana is able to remove from his mind rāga and pratīgha which is the same as dosa or vyāpāda. The Th. discuss this view in the Kvu. in these words: Jahati puthujjano kāmarāgabyāpādan ti? (I. 5) concluding that a puthujjana cannot completely eradicate from his mind rāga (attachment) and byāpāda (hatred), gross and subtle. In course of this discussion, the Th. taise the other question: Puthujjano kāmesu vītarāgo saha dhammābbisamayā anāgāmiphale sanṭhāti tið (Kvu. I. 5, p. 112), i.e. whether an average man who is free from kāma attains with the realization of the truth the anagami stage or not? The S., as we have seen above, answer the question in the affirmative, but they do not think that such a puthujjana can attain arhathood, but he can attain all the other three phalas at one and the same time. In other words, the contention of the S. is that a puthujjana's attainments through laukikamārga may be of so high an order that the moment the truth flashes in his mind he becomes an anāgāmi, when he completes all the necessary conditions for anāgāmihood, including those of the lower two phalas.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See above, p. 152

The second opinion that an average man dies with a kusalacitta is based on many instances of upasakas dying with a good mental state. The Th. also subscribe to this view, and hence there is no discussion in the Kvu.

The third opinion is the same as that of the Th. and is opposed to that of the Saila Schools (see ante, p. 97).

The fourth opinion is not touched in the Kou. but has been dealt with fully in the Kośa (VI. 19) thus:-- # कामाप्तदुःखविषयाऽधिमाला एकच्चा तु सा । तथाग्राः etc.

If the conviction (kṣānti) concerning duḥkha (=skandhas) of the Kāmadhātu be the strongest, it lasts only for a moment; so also are the agradharmas, i.e., laukikāgradharmas,² which though sāsrava (impure) are the highest of the worldly dharmas and lead one to the darśana-mārga (way to the realisation of truths).

The point is that a puthujjana, according to the S., may attain spiritual progress up to the anagami stage by taking to satipatthana and such other practices which are laukika so long as they are practised by one who is not yet in one of the maggas and phalas.

<sup>1</sup> See Kun., pp. 113-4.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Sūtrālankāra, xiv. 23: laukikāgradhetmāvasthā=ānantarya-samādhi. Kośa, vi. p. 166, n. agradharma=dharma-smṛṭyupasthāna.

VII. Anusaya and Paryavasthana

The S. are of opinion that: -

 All the anusayas are caitasika; they are cittasamprayukta and are also objects of thought (ālambana).

 (ii) All the anuśayas can be included in the paryavasthānas but all paryavasthānas are not anuśayas.

The above two opinions are diametrically opposed to those of the Mahāsanghikas, and in full agreement with those of the Th. The topics are dealt with in the Kvu. fully (see ante, p. 94f.), in which it is shown that anusayas are not without ārammana; they are not avyākata (neither good nor bad); they are the same as the paryavasthānas (= pariyuṭṭhānas) which again are not cittavippayutta. The S. distinguish the anusayas from paryavasthānas, saying all paryavasthānas are not anusayas while the vice versa is true.

VIII. Meditation

The Sarvāstivādins hold that

- (i) In the state of samāhita one can utter words.
- (ii) No man ever dies in the state of samābita.
- (iii) It may be said that four smrtyupasthānas can include all the dharmas.
- (iv) All the dhyanas are included in the smrtyupasthanas.
- (v) There are four lokottara-dhyānas.
- (vi) The bodhyangas are acquired in seven samāpattis and not in others.

The first opinion is in agreement with that of Saila schools, and as such has been refuted by the Th. in the Kvn. (see ante, pp. 97-98).

The second is opposed by the Rājagirikas and the Th. and as such is discussed in the Kou. (XV. 9): Saññāvedayita-nirodham samāpanno kālam kareyyā ti? The Th. contend that a meditator while in the saññāvedayitanirodhasamāpatēi cannot have any death-like (maranantiko) contact, feeling, perception, etc. or is not affected by poison, weapon-stroke or fire; hence to speak of him as dying while in meditation is wrong. The opponents contend that there is no such law (niyāma) that a meditator while in saññāvedayitanirodha will not die.

The third topic is discussed in the Kon. (1. 9): sabbe dbammā satīpaṭṭbānan ti?—an opinion attributed by Buddhaghosa is that the opponents meant by satīpaṭṭbāna the objects which form the basis of satī (satīyā paṭṭbāna, satīgocara, satīyā paṭṭṭbāna).¹ In this sense the second opinion may be explained as that the satīpaṭṭbānas include all forms of meditation, i.e., an adept practising satīpaṭṭbāna needs not have recourse to other meditational practices. The S. may well point to the well-known statement found in many places of the Nikāyas (vide Majjbima, 1, pp. 55-6), that there is only one way to the attainment of purity and that is the practice of satīpaṭṭbāna (ekāyano ayam maggo satīānam visuddbiyā......yadidam catīāro satīpaṭṭbānā).²

The fourth opinion needs hardly any comment. It refers to the first four dhyānas when they are practised by adepts who are in one of the maggas and phalas. The dhyāna of a maggattha or phalattha is regarded as lokottara (supramundane).

The fifth opinion evidently refers to the contention discussed in the Kośa (VIII. 6) that of the eight dhyānas or samāptīis, the first seven are capable of elevating the mind of the adept to the purest state but not the eighth in which samjñā is in the feeblest form and as such the meditation of naivasamjñā-nāsamjñāyatana is ineffective. Consequentley the attainment of the bodhyangas takes place while the adept rises from one dhyāna to the next up till the seventh leaving nothing for the eighth.

<sup>1</sup> Koša, vi. 14: Le smṛṭyupasthāna est triple: smṛṭyupasthāna en soi (svabhāva), par connexion (saṃṣarga), en qualité d'object (ālambanasmṛṭyupasthāna).

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Kola, vi. p. 158. n. 1: एकायनोऽयं भिष्यवो मार्गो यद्त स्थल्यप्या-नाति । जैवलोऽयं क्रमलरामिः यद्त चलारि स्थलपस्थानानि ।

IX. Vijñāna

The S. assert, as stated by Vasumitra, that

(i) The five sense-perceptions (pañcavijñānakāyas) conduce to attachment (sarāga) and not to detachment (virāga), because these only perceive the characteristics (lakṣaṇas) of objects and have no independent thinking faculty of their own.

If the reason adduced by the S. that the vijñānakāyas by themselves cannot produce virāga, how can they induce sarāga? Hence, the reasoning of the Sarvāstivādins is not quite clear, and it would be better to accept what the Kvu. says on the point (see ante, p. 99-100).

X. Avyākrta, Asamskrta, and Antarābhava

The following opinions are attributed to the Sarvāstivādins: —

- (i) There are indeterminable problems (avyākṛtadharmas).
- (ii) The law of causality (pratītyasamutpādāngikatva) is undoubtedly constituted (samskṛta).
- (iii) The samskrtavastus are of three kinds; the asamskrtavastus are also of three kinds.
- (iv) Only in Kāma- and Rūpa-dhātus there is an intermediate state of existence (antarābhava).

The first two opinions are opposed to those of the Mahāsaṅghikas and agree with those of the Th. (discussed above, pp. 101-2).

The third also is not accepted by the Mahasanghikas and agreed to by the Th. (see ante, pp. 101-2). The difference between the Th. and the S. lies in the fact that the latter makes the modification in accordance with their doctrine "sabbam atthi" discussed before (pp. 137 f.), according to which, the constituted things (samskṛtavastu) should be classified as three, viz., those of the past, those of the present and those of the future (see Masuda, p. 40, n. 2).

The fourth opinion of the S. that there is antarābhava in the Kāmadhātu and Rūpadhātu is neither accepted by the Mahāsanghikas nor by the Th. (see ante, p. 102). It has some agreement with the opinion of the Sammitīyas.

XI. Other opinions

There are a few other opinions held by the S. These are,-

- (i) All the dharmāyatanas (i.e. vedanā, samjñā, samskārā) can be understood and attained.
- (ii) Even heretics can gain five supernatural powers (see above, p. 116; Wassilijew, Der Buddhismus, p. 272, n. 3).
- (iii) Good (karma) can also become the cause of existence an opinion objected to by the Mahīšāsakas.<sup>1</sup>

THE DHARMAGUPTAS

The third in importance among the schools of this group is the Dharmaguptas. It has been shown in the account of the First Council that certain supporters of Purāṇa and Gavampati did not accept in toto the Vinaya rules as adopted by Mahākassapa.<sup>2</sup> In the Abhidharmakośa (iv. 39) there is a reference to the Dharmaguptas mentioning that they would not accept the Prātimokṣa rules of the Sarvāstivādins as authoritative on the ground that the original teachings of Buddha were lost. About the literature of this school, the only information we have is that it had a Vinaya text of its own (Nanjio, 1117) and that the Abbiniṣkramaṇa-sūtra belongs to this school. This sūtra was translated into Chinese between 280 and 312 A.D.¹ Prof. Przyluski furnishes us with the information that the canon of this school had the following divisions:

Vinaya-piṭaka

Bhikṣu-prātimokṣa Bhikṣuṇī-prātimokṣa Khandhaka Ekottara

Sūtra-piţaka

Dirgha-āgama Madhyama-āgama Ekottara-āgama Saṃyukta-āgama Ksudraka-āgama

Abhidharma-pitaka

Difficult (texts)
Not difficult (texts)
Samgraha
Samyukta

Prof. Przyluski, on the basis of the commentary of K'ouei-ki on Vasumitra's treatise, remarks that this school was noted for its popularity in Central Asia and China. De Groot remarks in his Code du Mahāyāna en chine (p. 3) that the Prātimokṣa of the Dharmaguptas was actually in use as the disciplinary rules in all the convents of China. The first formulæ translated into Chinese in 152 A.D. by K'aung-seng-kai who was a Sogdian, belonged to this school, so also was the other text (Kie-mo) translated in 254 A.D. by T'an-tai, who was a Parthian. Hence, it is inferred that this school was established in the Iranian countries in the third century A.D. Buddhayaśas, a native of Kipin (mod. Kashmir), introduced the Vinaya of this school into China and from this Prof. Przyluski concludes that this school had its centre in the north-west.<sup>2</sup> He also identifies Dharmagupta with Yonaka

<sup>1</sup> Translated into English by Beal under the title "The Romantic Legend of Sākya Buddha."

<sup>2</sup> Le Concile de Rājagrha, p. 325-6.

Dhammarakkhita, mentioned in the Ceylonese chronicles as the apostle sent to Aparantaka. The reason adduced by him for this identification is that the region between the North-West and Avanti was traversed by the Yavanas, Sakas and Pallavas about the beginning of the Christian era, and the preacher is described as a Yonaka and then again Dhammarakkhita and Dharmagupta are identical in meaning (i.e. rakkhita = gupta).

Doctrines

About the doctrines of this school. Vasumitra writes that these were mainly the same as those of the Mahāsanghikas, though it was a branch of the Sarvāstivādins. The doctrines specially attributed to them are as follows:—

- (i) Gifts made to the Sangha are more meritorious than those to the Buddha, though Buddha is included in the Sangha.¹ This is a view contrary to that of the Mahīśāsakas and also to that expressed in the Dakkhināvibhangasutta² inspite of the fact that Buddha asked Mahāpajāpati Gotamī to offer the robe meant for him to the Sangha.
- (ii) Gifts made to a stupa are meritorious. This opinion is opposed to that of the Saila schools (see above, p. 105).
- (iii) Vimukti (emancipation) of the Śrāvakayāna and Buddhayāna is the same, though there may be difference in the paths leading to emancipation. This opinion is in agreement with that of the Sarvāstivādins.<sup>3</sup>
  - (iv) Heretics cannot gain the five supernatural powers.4
  - (v) The body of an arhat is pure (anasrava).5
  - 1 See above, p. 116, also Kośa (Fr. Transl.), iv. 117.
  - 2 Majjhima, iii, p. 253. 3 See above, p. 116.
- 4 See above, pp. 116, 161; for opinions of other schools on this point see Masuda, p. 42 n.
  - 5 See above, p. 89 n., also infra, p. 169.

(vi) Realisation of the truths (abisamaya) takes place not gradually but all at once. This is contrary to the opinion of the Sarvästivädins (discussed above, p. 154-5) but is in agreement with that of the Theravädins.<sup>3</sup>

THE KÄŚYAPĪYAS

The Kāsyapīya school was known by three other names, Sthāvirīya, Saddharmavarṣaka, or Suvarṣaka. It issued out of the Sarvāstivādins on account of certain opinions which were more in agreement with those of the Sthaviravādins or Vibhajyavādins than with those of the Sarvāstivādins. This seems to be the cause of their being called a Sthāvirīya. Its third name, Suvarṣaka, appears in the works of Tāranātha and Ch'enlun, while Saddharmavarṣaka in Bhavya's treatise.<sup>2</sup>

About the literature of the Kāśyapīyas Prof. Przyluski writes that it had a canon similar to that of the Dharmaguptas, and had the following divisions:

Vinaya-pitaka

Bhiksu-prātimoksa Bhiksuni-prātimoksa Kathina Mātrkā Ekottara

Sütra-pitaka

Dirgha-āgama Madhyama-āgama Ekottara-āgama Samyukta-āgama Ksudraka-āgama

Abhidharma-pitaka

Sapraśnaka-vibhanga Apraśnaka-vibhanga Samgraha Comparative tables

1 This doctrine is not mentioned by Vasumitra. It is found in the Koia, vi. 27, see Vyākhyā (Jap. ed.), p. 542-

2 Prof. Przyluski identifics the Kăśyapiyas with the Haimavatas (see infra. p. 170).

Doctrines

To the Kāśyapīyas Vasumitra attributes the following doctrines:—

- (i) Arhats have both kṣayajñāna and anutpādajñāna, and are not subject to passions.
  - (ii) Samskāras perish every moment.
- (iii) The past which has not produced its fruit exists, the present exists, and some of the future exists. This opinion is discussed in the Kathāvatthu (I. 8) and is the only doctrine attributed in this text to the Kassapikas.

THE SAMKANTIKAS OR SAUTRANTIKAS

In the Pāli tradition the Saṃkantikas are described as an offshoot of the Kassapikas, and from the Saṃkantikas branched off the Suttavādīs. Vasumitra writes² that at the beginning of the 4th century (i.e. after Buddha's death), one school named the Sautrāntika, otherwise called the Saṃkrāntivāda, issued again from the Sarvāstivāda; (the founder of this school) declares himself: "I take Ānanda as my preceptor." From these two traditions, it seems that the Suttavādīs are identical with the Sautrāntikas, having branched off from the earlier school the Saṃkantikas, who may also be equated to the Dāṛṣṭāntikas of Vasubandhu.

Doctrines

Vasumitra characterises the Sautrantikas as the school which admits the transference of skandbamātras from one existence to another as distinguished from the Sammitiyas who maintain the transference of pudgaļa. Both of these views are wholly opposed to the cardinal doctrine of the early Buddhists, viz.,

- 1 Kvn. I. 8: Avipakkavipäkam atthit, vipakkavipäkam natthiti anägatam atthiti ädisu ekaccam atthiti uppädinadhamme sandhäya vadatiti.
  - a Masuda, p. 17. 3 See Kola, Index.

kṣaṇika (momentary) existence of skandhas (constituents of a being), i.e., the skandhas disintegrate every moment to give rise to another. The Sautrāntikas, in deference to this old kṣaṇika theory, add that the skandhas in their gross form do not pass from one existence to another; the mūlāntika (original or the subtlest form of) skandhas all the five of which are of one nature (akarasa), in other words, which are in reality one substance and not five different substances pass from one existence to another. Bhāvaviveka in his Tarkajvāla (see Obermiller, Analysis of the Abhisamayālankāra, pt. iii, p. 380) states that the school admitted the reality of the individual which is something inexpressible but neither identical nor different from the skandhas.

The second doctrine attributed by Vasumitra to this school is "apart from the aryan paths there is no eternal destruction of the skandhas." This shows that according to the Sautrāntikas, the skandhas, gross or subtle end in nirvāṇa. This view is also allied to the doctrine of the Sammitīyas that the pudgala ceases in nirvāṇa. So we may state that according to the Sautrāntikas, the subtle skandhas like the pudgala of the Sammitīyas may continue through several existences but totally cease to exist in Nirvāṇa.

For this doctrine of transference of skandbamātras through several existences, the Sautrāntikas are also called Saṃkrāntivādins or Saṃkrāntikas.

Kośa on the Sautrantika doctrines

Though Vasubandhu belonged to the Sarvāstivāda school, in his writings occasionally he gave preference to the Sautrāntika views. For this, he was severely criticised by Saṃghabhadra, who was a staunch Sarvāstivādin. In the Koša, Vasubandhu has referred to the Sautrāntika doctrines on several occasions and pointed out the differences between the Sarvāstivāda and Sautrāntika views. Prof. La Vallée Poussin has summed up these references in his introduction to the French translation of the Kośa. As these throw welcome light on the Sautrāntika doctrines a gist of the same is given here:—

- (i) The Sautrāntikas do not accept the Abbidbarmapijaka of the Sarvāstivādins as authoritative (Kośa, i. 3). On this point Vasubandhu supports the Sautrāntikas.<sup>1</sup>
- (ii) The asamskṛtas have no real existence. There is a long controversy in the Kośa (ii. 55) between the Sarvāstivādins and the Sautrāntikas as to whether the asamskṛtas have any cause or fruits.
- (iii) The Sautrāntikas deny the citta-viprayuktas (i.e. sams-kāras not associated with mind, e.g. prāpti, sabhāgatā, jīviten-driya, etc.) as real as contended by the Sarvāstivādins (Kośa, ii. 35-36).
- (iv) The Sautrāntikas like all other schools reject the Sarvāstivāda view that past and future exist (Kośa, v. 25).
- (v) By admitting the existence of the past and of prapti, the Sarvāstivādins explained the function of causality. The Sautrāntikas denied both of these and asserted instead the existence of the subtle citta or bija or vāsanā and explained thereby the working of the formulae of causation (Koša, ii. 36, 50).
- (vi) The Sautrantikas carry the kṣaṇikatva doctrine to the extreme point, asserting that it almost verges on zero, and as such, objects can have, in fact, no duration (sthiti). It further asserts that as destruction of objects takes place almost immediately, there is no necessity of any effective cause.<sup>2</sup>
- 1 Acc. to the Sautrāntikas, buddhavacana is vāg-vijnapti, sce Kola, i. 25; iv. 2.
- 2 See Koša, iv. 2-3. The Şaddarianasamuccaya cites this passage from a sūtra of the Sautrāntikas: पर्धमानि भिष्यः संज्ञानातं प्रतिज्ञानातं संवति-मातं व्यवहारमातं। कतमानि प्रथा कतीतोऽका घनावतीऽका पहितृकी विनायः प्राक्षाञ्चं

- (vii) The Sautrantikas deny the existence of avijnapti (non-communicating corporeal and vocal acts)<sup>1</sup> as a real (dravya). They hold in agreement with the Theravadins that an avijnapti act is mental (cetana), a kayasamcetana.
- (viii) According to the commentary of the Vijnaptimātratāśāstra, the Sautrāntikas are divided in their opinion relating to the conception of citta (mind) and caittas (mental states). According to the Dārstāntika-Sautrāntikas, citta only exists but not the caittas, but according to other Sautrāntikas caittas also exist and their number according to some is three, viz., vedanā, samjñā and cetanā, while according to others it is four, ten or fourteen. Some Sautrāntikas admit the existence of all the caittas of the Sarvāstivādins (for details, see Kośa, transl., ii. 23, fn.).
- (ix) The Sautrantikas hold that the body of an arhat is pure, as it is produced by knowledge.2
  - (x) There may be many Buddhas simultaneously.3

THE HAIMAVATAS

Bhavya and Vinītadeva enlist the Haimavatas as a branch of the Mahāsanghikas (Group I Schools) while Vasumitra remarks that the principal doctrines of this School were the same as those of the Sarvāstivādins. He adds that the original (mūla) Sthavıravāda changed its name to Haimavata. In the Ceylonese chronicles, however, the Hemavatikas are counted as one of the later sects, which came into existence some time after the appearance of the first eighteen schools. In view of these con-gum un 1 Cf. Vedāntasūtra, ii. 2, 23; Nyāyavārttikatātparyaṭikā (Viz. S.S.), 383. See also Kośa, ii. 46; Madbyamakavṛtti, pp. 29, n. 5; 173, n. 8; 222, 413.

- 1 For details, see Kośa, iv. 3. 2 See above, p. 89 n. 164.
- 3 See above, p. 75. 4 Masuda, p. 53.

5 Masuda, p. 16; Points of Controversy, p. xxxvii.

170

flicting statements, and the acceptance of some doctrines of the Mahāsaṅghikas, it seems that this school might have branched out of the Sarvāstivādins or Sthaviravādins but doctrinally was inclined more towards the Mahāhaṅghikas than towards the Sarvāstivādins.

Prof. Przyluski, however, identify the Haimavatas with the Kāśyapīyas on the following grounds:—

 (i) In the Ceylonese chronicles, the apostles sent to Himavanta are Majjhima and Dundubhissara of the Kassapagotta.

 (ii) On the relic caskets discovered in the stūpa of Sonari and Sanci are inscribed (a) sapurisasa Kāsapagotasa savabemavatācariyasa and (b) sapurisasa kotiputasa Kāsapagotasa savabemavatācariyasa.

 (iii) There are other inscriptions which mention Majjhima and Dundubhissara.

He adds that there can be no doubt about the fact that the monks of Kassapa-gotta were responsible for the propagation of Buddhism in the Himavanta. This school also claims Kassapa as its founder, so the same school was known by two names, one local as Haimavata and the other after its founder Kassapa as Kassapiya (= Kāśyapīya). The former name fell into discutude, and so the Chinese pilgrims refer to it by the other name only, the Kāśyapīyas.<sup>1</sup>

The conclusion drawn by Prof. Przyluski from the inscriptional evidences does not appear to be logical. In the inscriptions it is stated that some monks of the Kassapagotta propagated Buddhism in Himavanta but there is nothing to show that the Kassapagotta monks necessarily belonged to the Käśyapiya school. Hence the identification of Käśyapiyas with the Haimavatas is not tenable.

Doctrines

Vasumitra treats the Kāśyapīyas and the Haimavatas as separate schools upholding different doctrines. He attributes to the Haimavatas a few doctrines which are in close agreement with those of the Sarvāstivādins, e.g.,

- (i) The Bodhisatrvas are average beings (pṛthagjanas);
- (ii) Bodhisattvas have neither raga nor kāma when they enter their mothers' womb;
  - (iii) Heretics cannot gain the five supernatural powers;
  - (iv) There is no brahmacariyāvāsa among the gods; and
- (v) Arbats have ignorance and doubt; they are subject to temptation; they gain spiritual perception with the help of others; and the path is attained by an exclamation.¹

THE UTTARAPATHAKAS

From the geographical evidences collected by Dr. B. C. Law<sup>2</sup> about the Uttarāpatha, it appears it might have originally indicated the high road running north from Magadha to the northwest but later on it denoted the area west of Pṛthudaka (Pehoa, about 14 miles west of Thaneswar) and "comprised the Punjab people including Kashmir and the adjoining hill states with the whole of eastern Afghanistan beyond the Indus, and the present Cis-Sutlej States to the west of the Saraswati."

The name "Uttarāpathakas" appears only in the Kathāvatību-aṭṭbakathā and not in any other text, not even in the Ceylonese chronicles. Evidently Buddhaghosa had in mind some monks who could not be classed as adherents of the doctrines of a particular school or probably he meant, like the Andhakas, a

- 1 The last two opinions are in agreement with those of the Mahāsanghikas. See above, p. 85.
  - 2 Geogr. of Early Buddbism, p. 48-9-
  - 3 Cunningham's Ancient Geogr. of India, p. 13.

group of schools popular in the north. From the several doctrines attributed by Buddhaghosa to the Uttarāpathakas, it appears it was an eclectic school having doctrines taken from both the Mahāsanghika and Theravāda groups and really mark an intermediate stage between Hīnayāna and Mahāyāna. The following are some of such doctrines:—

Re. Buddha. It is the attainment of bodhi or knowledge of the maggas and omniscience alone that make a Buddha (iv. 6) and that Buddhas are above maitri and karunā<sup>1</sup> (xviii. 3, 4).

Re. Bodhisattvas. On the basis of the stories of the previous births of Gautama Buddha the U. remark that the Buddhas are always endowed with the mahāpurusa lakṣanas (iv. 7).

Re. Arbats. All dhammas (not his body, dress, etc.) possessed by an arhat are pure (anāsavā) (K. iv. 3). The arhats are able to end their lives in the same way as Buddha did, (xxii, 3), as described in the Mahāparinibbāna-sutta. They admit there may be persons claiming arhathood falsely (xxiii, 2). Taking the instance of Yaśa's attainment of arhathood they held that a householder (gibī) can attain Arhathood without giving up the householder's life. The Th. point out that Yaśa may have the gibī signs externally but his mind was free from the ties of a householder (iv. 1). Then on the basis of the existence of Upabacca(Uppajja)-parinibbāyīs, the Uttarāpathakas hold that a being, usually a god, at the very moment of his birth, can attain arhathood. They also hold that beings while in the womb or beings just born may attain arhathood on account of their acquisition of sotāpannahood in their previous lives.<sup>2</sup>

Re. Samyakatoanyāma: The putthujjanas, who are aniyata (not destined to attain Nibbāna) or who are doers of evil acts, may ultimately become niyata and realise the truth. This they state on the basis of some statements of Buddha who foretold to certain puthujjanas that they would realise the truth ultimately, e.g., in the case of Angulimala (v. 4; xix, 7).

Allied to the above views, there are two other views of the Uttarāpathakas: one is that the persons who have to take seven more births to attain Nibbāna (sattakkhattuparama) can reach the goal after seven births and not earlier or later. The Th. are not prepared to accept this view on the ground that such persons may quicken their space by greater exertion or retard their progress by performing evil deeds (xii. 5). The second is that an adept may attain the four fruits of sanctification by one magga. The Th. contend that an adept can attain the phalas of the corresponding maggas only, i.e., a sotāpanna gets rid of sakkāyadiṭṭbi, etc. and he cannot attain the phalas of the sakadāgami or anāgami magga, i.e., elimination of rāga, dosa and moha. The Uttarāpathakas do not subscribe to the latter view (xviii. 5).

Re. Anusayas. According to the U. anusayas are anarammana and cittavippayutta (see above, p. 94) (ix. 4); past dharmas may be arammana (ix. 6).

Re. Asamkbatas:

(i) nirodhasamāpatti is unconstituted (vi. 5)

(ii) space of all kinds, is unconstituted (vi. 6).

Re. Immutability (niyata): All dharmas like rūpa and vedanā do not change their nature (xxi. 7); karmaie effects also are unalterable (xxi. 8).

Re. Gatis (spheres of existence): The U. count the asūragati as one additional to the usual five, totalling in all six gatis.

Re. Buddhavacana. The U. assert that the religious teachings were revised thrice in the three Councils (xxi. 1).

CHAPTER X

DOCTRINES OF GROUP IV SCHOOLS

The Vātsīputrīya-Sāmmitīyas, Dharmottarīyas and other Schools

This group of schools comprised mainly the Vajjiputtakas or Vātsīputrīyas, Dhammuttarīyas, Bhadrayānikas, Channagarikas and Sammatīyas. Of these the Vātsīputrīyas, later on known as Vatsīputrīya-Sāmmitīyas,1 became the most prominent school of this group. The monks adhering to these schools were probably those Vajjiputtakas who submitted to the decisions of the Second Council and gave up their heresies as distinguished from those who preferred to remain apart and form a distinct Sangha of their own.2 We do not hear much about this school in the early history of Buddhism excepting a few criticisms of its radical doctrine of the temporary existence of a self (prajñapti-sat-pudgala) apart from the five skandhas. This school became popular and most widespread during the reign of Harsavardhana (606-647 A.D.) and it is said that the king's sister Rājyaśrī joined the school as a bhiksunī. The Chinese travellers also testify to its wide popularity in India. The earliest evidence to the existence of this school is furnished by a Gupta inscription discovered at Sarnath,3 which states that this school ousted the Sarvāstivādins about 300 A.D., who had established themselves there after supplanting the

<sup>1</sup> ERE., XI, p. 168; Kośa-vyākbyā, IX, 3 (Jap. ed.), p. 699: Vātsīputrīya Āryasammatīyaḥ.

<sup>2</sup> See Infra.

<sup>3</sup> El., VIII, p. 172; Sahni, Catalogue of the Museum at Sarnath, p. 30.

Theravādins. This inscription is interesting from more than one point of view. It shows that Sarnāth was a centre of the Theravāda group, the earliest popular school, which gradually yielded its place to the next popular school, Sarvāstivāda. Though Sarvāstivāda retained its popularity and influence all over Northern India it had, at least at Sarnāth, given place to the Sāmmitīyas.

The Sāmmitīyas ascribed the origin of their school to Mahā-kaccāyana, the famous monk of Avantī. This established their close connection not only with the Pāli school but also with Avantī, for which their alternative name is given in some sources as Avantaka.<sup>2</sup> Their robes had 21 to 25 fringes and their badge was Sorcika flower like those of the Theravādins.<sup>3</sup>

Yuan Chwang writes that he carried to China 15 treatises of this school<sup>4</sup> while I-tsing speaks of its separate Vinaya rext.<sup>5</sup> The latter tells us further that this Vinaya had rules regulating the use of undergarment, girdle, medicines, and beds for the members of the sect in a way peculiar to itself. The only treatise that is expressly mentioned as belonging to this school in Nanjio's Catalogue and extant in Chinese translation is the Sāmmitīya-śāstra or Sāmmitīyanikāyaśāstra containing the tenets of this sect. Most of the passages cited in the Kathāvatthu as giving the views of the Sāmmitīya school are traced in the Pāli Piṭaka. It is very likely that the Sutta-piṭaka of the Sammitīyas was substantially the same as that in Pāli.

<sup>1</sup> See Infra.

<sup>2</sup> According to Vinitadeva, the Sāmmitiyas were sub-divided into three sects, Kuru-Kullakas, Avantakas and Vātsiputriyas. See Buston, II, p. 99.

<sup>3</sup> Buston, II, p. 100.

<sup>4</sup> Watters' Yuan Chwang, I, pp. 20, 21.

<sup>5</sup> Takakusu, I-tsing, pp. 7, 66, 140.

Kapila and Uluka believe in the existence of a permanent soul, which according to them, is different from the constituents of a being and is not a term indicating the flux of elements (skandhasantāna). The soul, the Buddhists assert, can neither be established by direct perception (pratyakṣa) nor by inference (anumāna).

Vasubandhu (henceforth abbreviated as V.) first defines the contention of the Vātsīputrīyas (henceforth abbreviated as Vā) thus: Is the pudgala of the Vā. real (dravya) or nominal (prajñapti)? By real (dravya) existence he means existence like that of rūpa and such other elements and by nominal (prajñapti) he means existence like that of milk, house or army, which has no separate existence of its own apart from its constituents.

If the soul of the Vā. be of the former category (dravya), it would be different from the skandhas as vedanā is from rūpa, and is not also all the skandhas taken together. Now, in that case it should be either saṃskṛta (constituted), or asaṃskṛta (unconstituted). It cannot be the latter, for it would make the Vā. hold the Sāśvata view, which is heretical.

If the soul of the Va, be of the latter category (prajñapti), its existence is dependent on the skandhas and so cannot have any independent existence of its own, i.e. it does not exist (pudgala iti prajñaptir asat-pudgalaḥ prāpnoti).

The Va. contend that their Soul is real (dravya) but it is neither identical with, nor different from, the skandhas as fire is to fuel. Fire exists as long as the fuel lasts, so also soul

1 Vyākbyā (Jap. ed.), p. 697 quotes this stotra: साइडार मनसि न शमें याति जन्मप्रवसी नाइडारयलित इदयादाक्षहणी च सलाम्। चन्यः शासा जगति च यतो नासि न राज्यावादी नान्यसरमाद्वशमविधेस्तन्यतादिस मार्गः॥ (pudgala) exists as long as there are skandhas otherwise pudgala would be either asamskṛta (unconstituted), śāśvata (eternal) or samskṛta (constituted), aśāśvata (=necheda—annihilating). Fire is different from fuel inasmuch as it has the power of burning an object to ashes or producing light, which the fuel does not possess.

Vasubandhu argues that fuel and fire appear at different times (bhinnahāla) like seed and sprout. Hence fire is impermanent, and the difference between fuel and fire is one of time and characteristics (lakṣaṇa), and again one is the cause of the other.

He then states that according to the Va., fuel is constituted of three mahābhūtas while fire is of the fourth (tejas) only, then it follows that fire is different from fuel.

The Va, reply that fire and fuel are co-existent and the latter is a support of the former (upādāya; āśritya), and that one is not wholly different from the other, for fuel is not totally devoid of the fiery element; in the same way pudgala should be distinguished from skandbas. Vasubandhu challenges the Va. by citing the instance of a burning log of wood and saying that it represents both fuel and fire and hence they are identical (ananya).

According to the Va., pudgala is neither to be described as anitya, which is sub-divided into past, present and future nor nitya, eternal. It is avaktavya, indeterminable, inexplicable. It is not included in the list of constituents of a being but is perceived when only all the constituents are present.<sup>2</sup> t Cf. the quotation in the Kvn. p. 34:— Khandhesu bhijjamänesu 30 ce bhijjati puggalo Ucchedā bhavati ditthi yā Buddhena vivajjitā Khandhesu bhijjamänesu 110 ce bhijjati puggalo Puggalo sassato hoti nibbānena samasamo.

z Ibid., p. 700: स्क्रमत: स्पष्टमन्दल' प्रतिश्रायने वासीपुतीये: ह

The question next raised is, can the pudgala of the Va. be cognized by any sense-organ (indriya), if so, by which? The Va. reply that it is perceived by all the six sense-organs. They contend that eyes do not care to see rupa (object) or recognise it unless mind (mana indriya) is there. Eyes act as the dominating factor when the visual action takes place, hence it is not correct to say that eyes alone see rupa, or for the matter of that, each of of the five sense-organs cannot function in their respective spheres independent of the mind.1 For cognition of pudgala, the Va. state that all the sense-organs point out to the mind indirectly that there is a pudgala; eyes, e.g., discern the rupa (colour-figure) of a body and thereby induces the mind to cognize the presence of an individual (pudgala), but that pudgala is neither identical with, nor different from, rupa.2 V. argues that if rupa be the cause of cognition of pudgala (रूपाणां कारणत्वमधिकियते) one should not say that rupa and pudgala are different (anyam),3 again, if cognition of rupa leads at once to the cognition of pudgala' ( रूपार्युपादाय पुद्रलोपलव्धिरिति ) one should also say that rupa and pudgala are identical (ananyas)4 in other words, one is only a modification of the other ( ह्यान्तरवत ). The Va., however, would neither identify rupa (colour-figure) with pudgala nor treat them

- 1 See above, p. 101; also Masuda, p. 23 n.
- 2 चचुर्विभे यानि इपाणि प्रतीय पुद्रलं प्रतिविभावयतीत्वृपलचयित तदुपादानत्वात्। नो तु वक्तव्यो इपाणि वा नो वेत्येतक्कचणत्वाद्वक्रव्यत्वाच। See Kośa (Fr. transl.) ix, p. 238 fn.
- 3 Just as light, eyes and mind which cause a visualisation of an object are not different from the object यदि तावद्रपाणि पुद्रलोपलकेः कारणे भवन्ति न च तिथोऽन्यो वक्तव्यः एवं तर्ष्टि ६पमध्यालोकचचुरमनसिकारिथोऽन्यं न वक्तव्यम् Ibid., p. 238 n. See Vyākhyā, p. 701.
- 4 भय दपारुयुवलभनान: पुद्रलसुवलभते किं तथैवीपलक्ष्योपलभते भाहीस्विद्रन्यया । यदि तथैव दपादभित्रस्थभावः पुद्रलः प्राप्नीति रूप एव वा तत्प्रचितः। इदं रूपमयं पुद्रलः क्षयमिदं परिक्कियते। Ibid., p. 239 n. See Vyākhyā, pp. 701-2.

as different; in the same way they would neither regard the perception of rūpa (colour-figure) as identical with the perception of pudgala nor look upon them as different.

V. asserts that if pudgala be an entity, it should be either material (rūpa) or non-material (nāma), but Buddha says rūpa or vedanā or samjñā or samsārā or vijñāna is not self—all dharmas are without self—there is no pudgala. He further states that sattva, jīva, or pudgala is a prajñapti (designation) applied to the false notion of a self cherished by the unenlightened.

The Va. in reply state that they were not prepared to accept the statements attributed to Buddha as authentic' as these were not to be found in their Piţaka. They referred to statements, in which Buddha spoke of a person's past existence or recognised pubbenivāsañāna² as one of the higher acquisitions of an adept, and asked, who is it that remembers? Is it pudgala or the skandhas? They further argue that if Buddha be regarded as omniscient, i.e. he knows everything past or present, of every place, of every being etc. it also implies a continuity of something, in other words, it implies the existence of a pudgala. The Va. further state that unless there were some form of pudgala why the disciples should be instructed to avoid thinking of rūpavān aham babbūvātīte 'dhvani (in the past I possessed a body) and so forth.²

V. refutes this contention by saying that pudgala here refers only to skandha-santāna (continuity of skandhas) and not to anything else. The Vā. then cite the Bhārahārasūtra, and assert ı Cf. Vyākbyā, सूलसंगीतिभं शातु ।

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Majjbima, I. p. 22: so evam samāhite citte parisuddhe pariyodāte anangane...pubbenivāsānussaratināņāya cittam abhininnāmeti.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Mājjbima, I, p. 8: ahosin nu kho aham atītam addhānam, .....kim hutvā kim ahosim nu kho atītam addhānam, etc. etc.

that by bhāra is meant the constituents (skandhas) of a being and by bhārahāra the individual (pudgala) who is known by a name, gotra etc. If bhāra (=skandhas) included bhāra hāra (=pudgala), there was no need of distinguishing the two and so pudgala exists apart from skandhas, it is neither identical with not different from skandhas.

The Vā. admit the existence of aupapādika beings and antarābhava,<sup>2</sup> and prove thereby the existence of pudgala. They also cite the passage "ekapuggalo bhikkhave loke uppajjamāno uppajjāti bahujanahitāya (Anguttara, 1, 22) and lay stress on the word "puggala", saying this "puggala" is born (uppajjāti) and hence there is besides the skandhas something, which may be designated as "puggala". V, refutes all these by appropriate quotations and arguments.

The Vā. further state that if the pudgala is only a word meant to designate the five skandbas, then why Bhagavā did not identify fiva with śarīra. V. cites the discussion on the topic from the Milindapañba. The Vā. further argue that why pudgala has been declared by Buddha as indeterminable (avyākrta), well, if it does not exist, then why Bhagavā did not declare that fiva does not exist absolutely. V. in reply comments on the Vatsagotra sūtra and other sūtras dealing with the indeterminable problems.

The Va. point out that the statement ātmā does not exist in reality (satyatah sthititah)<sup>a</sup> is a wrong view, it indirectly implies the admission of the existence of pudgala.

- r Cf. Vyākbyā (Jap. ed.), p. 706, bhāraḥ katamaḥ. pañcopādānaskandhāḥ. .....bhārahāraḥ katamaḥ. pudgala iti syād vacaniyaṃ yo 'śav āyuṣman evaṃnāmā evaṃjātya evaṃgotra etc.
  - 2 Cf. Kaia, iii. 10, 12, 18-19, quoting समस्य द्वारतिस्त ।
  - 3 Cf. Majjhima, i. p. 8: Atthi me attā ti vā 'ssa saccato thetato

The Va. next raise the question, if pudgala does not exist, who it is that transmigrates from one existence to another. If the elements only exist, how do you explain when Buddha says "I was at that time the master Sunetro and in that statement why 'I' of the past is identified with 'I' of the present; does it indicate that the elements of the past are the elements of the present?" V. refuted it by saying that just as fire passes from one wood to another, the fire never remaining the same, so the elements pass from one existence to another, nothing remaining identical. If, according to the Va., Buddhas admit the existence of pudgala they would be subject to the wrong belief of satkayadrsti.

The Va. now ask, how can memory be explained withour the conception of 'pudgala'. Who is it that remembers; V. answers that it is samjñā that remembers—samjñā with attention directed to the object, an idea etc. similar to, or connected with it, provided there is no corporeal pain to impair its capacity.

The Va. are of opinion that there must be an agent, a doer, a proprietor of the memory. There must be a cognizing agent, an action must have a doer. 'Devadatta walks' implies the exis-ditthi uppajjati, natthi me attā ti vā 'ssa saccato thetato ditthi uppaijati, etc.

- 1 Sunetro nāma šāste ti. Saptasūryodayasūtre yam eva Bhagavān rsih Sunetra nāma babhūveti. See Koša (transl.), V, p. 271; Košavyākhyā, p. 710.
- 2 Kośavyākbyā, p. 710: यथा तु थिबकोऽधिरिति विकारः। स च देशानरी-स्वशिसंत्रवा संचरतीलुचते। तथा सच्याकाल्यसमुदायसृचीपादानः।
- 3 Ibid., p. 710: तदाभीतम्हण-सम्बन्धि-मंत्रादिमाधिनविशेष: । "भादि" यहसेन प्रविधाननिवसाभ्यामादिग्रहणम् । भावयविशेषय भीकत्य न्याचैपतवादिरियामिति भावयविशेषशीकत्याचे पादीनि । तैरनुपहतप्रमावधिनविशेष: ।

tence of an individuality. V. replies that it is not so. He states that just as when a fire traverses from one forest to another, no question of individuality arises, similarly Devadatta is a prajūapti (like fire) applied to a conglomeration of elements passing from one existence to another and has no individuality.

Now, we shall pass on to the arguments of the Vā. and the counter-arguments of the Theravadins as presented in the Kathā-vatthu, which being of a much earlier date than that of the Kośa, follows a form of controversy, quite different from that of the medieval and modern dialectricians.

The first question put by the Theravadins to the Vatsiputriyas, known in the Pali texts as Sammitiyas, is as follows:
Can the puggala be known in the same way as that which is real and ultimate, e.g. Nibbana (or Rūpa) is known? (para 1). In other words, the Theravadins want to ascertain whether the Sammitiyas (henceforth abbreviated as Sam.) admit the existence of the puggala either as the unchangeable, ever-existing reality like Nibbana, or as a constituted (sappaccaya-samkhata) object like rūpa, or regard it as false as a mirage (māyāmanīcī viya), or look upon it simply as a hearsay. The Sam. deny practically all the four possibilities though they assert that the puggala is known as a real and ultimate fact (saccikatthaparamatthena).

The Sam, now assail the Th. with the counter-question whether the latter would admit that the puggala is not known in the same way as that which is real and ultimate. The Th. answered in the affirmative as according to them puggala is not even an object like rūpa; it is a mere paññatti (conventional term), a sammutisacca (so-called truth).

<sup>1 &</sup>quot;Para" refers to the paragraphs marked in the P.T.S. edition of the Kathāvatthu.

But when the same question is repeated by the Sam. (as in paras 2 and 6), the Th. reply in the negative by saying "na h' evam", because the answer is to be given to a question which included both sammutisaeca (conventional truth) and paramatthasaeca (the highest truth). The questions and answers which follow next have mixture of both sammuti and paramattha truths, and so they appear contradictory to a superficial reader.

Now the Th. give up the logical tricks and put the question straight (para 11) thus: whether puggala is a paramattha-sacca, or not, i.e. whether or not the puggala is known in the same way as the real and ultimate everywhere (sabbattha) in and outside rūpa (material parts of the body), always (sabbadā) in this and the following existences, and in everything (sabbesu) i.e., in all khandhas, āyatanas, dhātus etc. The answer of the Sam. is also definitely in the negative, i.e., they do not consider "puggala" as real in the highest sense, and as existing everywhere, always and in everything as pointed out by the Th.

The next attempt of the Th. is to find out whether the Sam. regard puggala as something existing like any of the 57 elements, rūpa, vedanā, saññā, etc. The Sam. deny it saying they do not admit puggala as an element apart from the 57 elements, and in support of their contention they quote from the Nikāyas (Dīgha, iii, 232; Majjhima, i. 341; Anguttara, ii. 95) the passage "atthipuggalo attahitāya paṭipanno", which indicates that puggala z The question is,—Yo saccikattho paramattho tato so puggalo n'upalabbhati saccikattha-parametthanāti ti?

<sup>1</sup> The remaining paras 3-5 and 7-10 are mere logical rounding up of the questions and answers put in paras 1 & 2.

<sup>3</sup> Perhaps like the jivatman of the Vedanta School of Philosophy.

<sup>4</sup> Samayasuttavirodham disvä patikkhepo paraväslissa, Aţihakathā, p. 16.

exists but not apart from the elements. The Th. also do not clearly state that puggala (as a paññatti) is different from the elements, the reason assigned by Buddhaghosa' being that the questions of the opponents have a mixture of sammuti and paramattha truths and as such the Th. have no other alternative but to leave them unanswered (thapaniya)."

The next attempt of the Th. is to show that the Sam. should advocate either Uechedavāda or Sassatavāda. With this end in view the Th. put the questions whether puggala is identical with rūpa, or different from rūpa, or puggala is in rūpa (like the container and the contained) or rūpa is in puggala. The Sam. reject all the four propositions as otherwise they would become either an Ucchedavādin or a Sassatavādin. Though, according to the Sam., puggala is of the same nature (ekadbammo) as rūpa and other elements, they would not treat it as an element separate from, and independent of, the 57 elements.

The Th. now assail their opponents by questioning on lakkhanas of the puggala, and ask whether the puggala is sappaceaya (caused) and samkhata (constituted) like rūpa, or is appaceaya (uncaused) and asamkhata (unconstituted) like Nibbāna. The Sam, deny both and ask how the Th. would explain the 'puggala' in the statement of Buddha: "Atthi puggalo attahitāya paṭipanno ti." Is the puggala referred to in this passage sappaceaya, samkhata or appaceaya, asamkhata? The Th. deny both, as in their opinion the term puggala is only a sammutisaeca, and as such it is non-existing.

<sup>1</sup> See his Atthakatha, p. 16.

<sup>2</sup> Paras 130-137 dilate on the above question, comparing it with each of the 57 elements.

<sup>3</sup> Atthakathā, p. 18.

The next argument put forward by the Th. is whether the statement "puggala perceives" is the same as the statement, "that which perceives is puggala" i.e. whether the two statements are identical as citta is with mano or different as rūpa is from vedanā. Buddhaghosa interprets the position of the opponents thus: the Sam. hold that puggala perceives but not everything that perceives is puggala, e.g., rūpa, vedanā, etc. are not puggala but that puggala perceives and that which perceives referred only to the percepient (puggala), and not to rūpādi. The opponents, however, rely on the statement "atthi puggalo attahitāya paṭipanno ti" which, again is counteracted by the Th. by saying that the Sam. should equally rely on the statement "suññato lokam avekkhassu, etc." and admit that there is no puggala.

The Th. now proceed to examine the paññatti (description) of puggala. In answer to the question whether the puggala of the Rūpadhātu is rūpī and likewise of the Kāmadhātu is kāmī and of the Arūpadhātu, arūpī, the Sam. affirm the first and the third but not the second. The Sam. argue that puggala = satta = jīva and kāya = satīra. Though they do not admit either the identity of, or difference between, jīva and sarīra, they hold, though not logically tenable, that kāya must be different from puggala as there are such statements as 'so kāye kāyānupassī viharati and so forth', in which so cannot but refer to puggala.

<sup>1</sup> Puggalo upalabbhati (yo yo) upalabbhati (so so) puggalo ti?

Kun. p. 24-

<sup>2</sup> Aţţhakathā, p. 20: The opponents say: Mama puggalo atthi puggalo 'ti satthuvacanato upalabhati. Yo pana upalabhati, na so sabbo puggalo. Atha kho ke hi ci puggalo ke hi ci na puggalo 'ti. Tattha kokāratthe kekāro hikāro co nipātamatto. Koci puggalo koci na puggalo 'ti ayam pan' ettha attho. Idam vuttam hoti: puggalo pi hi rūpādisu pi yo koci dhammo upalabhati yeva. Tattha puggala 'va puggalo rūpādisu pana koci pi na puggalo 'ti.

The next discussion relating to upādāpaññatti (rebirth) of puggala raises the question of transmigration. The Sam, affirm that puggala passes from this world to the next but it is neither the self-same puggala nor a different puggala—a statement similar to what the Th. would say about the passing of the khandhas—avoiding the two heretical opinions of sassatavāda and uechedavāda as also the ekaccasassatikavāda and amarāvikkhepadiṭṭbi,¹ In support of their contention the Sam, quoted the passages in which a "puggala" is said to pass from one world to another (sandhāvati saṃsarati).

Accepting the opinion of the opponents that the self-same. or a different, puggala does not pass from one existence to another, the Th. point out that they admit that some form of puggala referred to in the above-mentioned passages does pass from one existence to another. This puggala can then have no death, it once becomes a man and then a god and so forth, which is absurd.11 In reply the Sam, point out that a sotapannamanussa is known to take rebirth as a sotāpanna-deva and question how can this sotapanna-hood pass from one existence to another unless there exists some form of puggala to carry the qualities. In order to show the unsoundness of the statement, the Th. ask whether the passing puggala remains identical in every respect<sup>a</sup> and does not lose any of its qualities.<sup>a</sup> The opponents first negative it on the ground that a man does not continue to be a man in the devaloka. But on second thought they affirm it in view of the fact that the carrier of certain qualities from one existence to another is a puggala, an antarābhavapuggala.¹ The Sam, take care to keep clear of the two extreme views: tam jīvam tam sarīram and aññam jīvam aññam sarīram. They affirm that the transformed khandhas and puggala and not the identical khandhas and puggala pass from one existence to another. The khandhas are, however, impermanent and constituted while the puggala is not so but it is not also permanent and unconstituted. Without khandha, āyatana, dhātu, indriya and citta, puggala cannot remain alone but for that reason, the colour and other qualities of the khandha, āyatana, etc. do not affect the puggala. Again the puggala is not a shadow (chāyā) of the khandhas.

<sup>1</sup> See my Early Monastic Buddbism, I, pp. 51 ff.

<sup>2</sup> Anañño = sabbākārena ekasadiso.

<sup>3</sup> Avigato=ekena pi ākāreņa avigato.

In reply to the question whether puggala is perceivable in every momentary thought, the Sam. answer in the affirmative but they would not accept the inference drawn by the Th. that the puggala in that case would have momentary existence (khanika-bhāvam) i.e. would die and be reborn every moment like citta (thoughts).

The Sam. now ask the Th. whether they would admit that one (yo) who sees something (yam) by means of an organ of sense (yena) is the puggala or not. The Th, after assenting to it as a conventional truth (sammutisacea), put the same question in the negative form thus: One (yo) who does not see anything (yam) by means of an organ of sense (yena) is not a puggala. The Sam., however, without arguing further quote a few passages in which Buddha said: I (i.e. the puggala) see by means of my divine eyes (dibbena cakkbuṇā) beings appearing and disappearing and so forth, and infer therefrom that the seer is the puggala.

2 E.g., a blind man, an asaññasatta.

r The self which exists between death and rebirth. See above p. 103-4.

Their next discussions related to purusakāra. The Th. do not admit any doer, so they asked the Sam. whether the latter would subscribe to the same opinion. On their denial, the Th. ask whether the Sam, would admit the existence of the doer, and a creator of the doer, which is negated by the Sam. on account of the heretical doctrine of issaranimmana (god the creator of the world) but on second thought affirmed it in view of the fact that the parents, teachers etc. are also in a sense the makers (kattākāretā) of a person. The Th., without going into the implied sense of the replies, say that such a state of things, i.e., a doer having a doer and a deed implies not just a deed but also a doer, would lead to the conclusion that so long there is deed (kamma), there is its doer (kārako puggalo) and hence there can be no end to puggalaparampara and that would falsify the fact that by the stoppage of the wheel of actions, dukkba can be brought to an end. Then again nibbāna, mahāpathavi, etc. must also have a doer. All the inferences drawn by the Th. are rejected by the Sam. In conclusion the Sam. deny that the deed and the doer can be distinct, just to avoid admitting that the puggala has mental properties.

In the above, the doer of a deed is enquired into, while in the following discussion identity of the doer of a deed with the enjoyer of its fruit is enquired into.

The Th. deny the existence of a feeler or enjoyer apart from vipākapavatti, (that which is realised, the fructification of an effect). The Sam. hold that patisamveditabba is vipāka (result) but the puggala is not vipāka. They further state that Nibbāna or Mahāpathavi, etc. is not vipāka like divine bappiness (dibba-

t Bur it may happen that puggala who is in the enjoyment of his fruits, say, merits, may be again an object of enjoyment of another puggala, e.g. a son enjoying the fruits of his actions may be the object sukha) or human happiness (manussasukha) so none of them is an object of enjoyment of the puggala but again the Sam. do not admit that sukha is distinct from the sukha-enjoyer. The Th. logically wanted to make their opponents admit that there must be not only an enjoyer of a fruit but also an enjoyer of the enjoyer of the fruit and so on an endless chain, in other words, according to them, as shown above dukkha can have no end.

The Th. now put the crucial question thus: whether the doer of a deed is identical with, or different from, the enjoyer of its fruit. The opponents first deny both to avoid contradiction of Buddha's saying: sayam katam param katam sukhadukkham, etc. but on second thought in view of their theory that there is a common element keeping the link between the present and the future life, they admit it. In short, the Sam. affirm that there is a kāraka (doer) and vedaka (feeler or enjoyer) of a deed, but the two are neither identical nor different, neither both identical and different, nor not both identical and different.

The Sam. next apply the test of abbiññā (supernormal powers), ñāti (relatives) and pbala (attainments) and put the propositions thus:

(i) How can a person perform certain miracles keeping his organs of sense etc. inert and inactive, unless there is something else as puggala.

(ii) How can one recognise the existence of parents, castes, etc. without positing that there is a puggala, and of affection of his mother and so forth. This explanation of Buddhaghosa should be compared with the above like the kāretā of kattā.

(iii) How can a phalastha continue to be the same in his more than one birth, unless the existence of a puggala is admitted.

The Th. avoid the issues by putting the counter-arguments that one who cannot perform miracles is not a puggala, and in this way they refute the other two propositions.

The next question of the Th. is whether puggala is constituted (samkhata) or unconstituted or neither constituted nor unconstituted (n'eva samkhata nāsamkhata). The Sam. affirm the last alternative but would not treat puggala as something apart (añño) from the samkhata-khandhas. They state that the puggala has certain aspects of samkhata, e.g., it is subject to sukha, dukkha, and so forth; again it has certain aspects of asamkhata, e.g., it is not subject to birth, old age and death (jāti, jarā, and maraņa).

In reply to the Th.'s question whether a parinibbuto puggalo exists in Nibbāna or not, the Sam. negative both as the affirmation of either would make them either a Sassatavādin or an Ucchedavādin.

Now the Sam. put the counter question: does not a person say that he is feeling happy or unhappy and so forth, how can a person say so unless he is a puggala and not a mere conglomeration of separate khandhas. In refuting this contention, the Th. put the same question in a negative form thus: well, if a person does not feel happiness or unhappiness, then there is no puggala. The Th. further ask whether Sam. would treat sukha and puggala as something separate and distinct. The Sam. evade a direct answer and ask, well, when a puggala (koci or so) is said to be kāye kāyānupassī viharati, does it not affirm the existence of a puggala?

The controversy is then closed by citations of passages from the Nikāyas, the Th. quoring only those which clearly express anattā of all things while the Sam. quote those in which the word puggalo or atthabita or so appeared.

Through these controversies it is apparent that the Sam. are seeking to establish that the five khandhas which are distinct from one another cannot give rise to the consciousness of I-ness, a unity. The facts that a person acts or thinks as one and not as five separate things, and that in many passages Buddha does actually use the words so, atta and puggala, and that a person's attainments like sotapannahood continue to be the same in different births, that one speaks of his past births and so forth, do lead to the conclusion that besides the five khandhas there exists some mental property which forms the basis of I-ness, and maintains the continuity of karma from one existence to another. That mental property, however, is changing with the changing khandhas but in view of the fact that one can think of his past, even of the events of his past births, the changing khandhas alone cannot be made responsible for the memory. The Sam, therefore affirm the existence of a sixth mental property and call it puggala which can remain only along with khandhas and so must disappear when the khandhas disappear in Nibbāna. As this mental property or puggala is not kṣanika like the khandhas, it has not all the properties of a samkhata (constituted object) and again it is not also unchanging and ever existing like Nibbāna so it is not asamkhata. Therefore the puggala must be said as neither samkhata nor asamkhata.1

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Obermiller's Analysis of the Abhisamayālamkāra, III, p. 380, referring to Tarkajoāla and Schayer, Kamalašīla's Kritik des Pudgalavāda. Obermiller writes 'the Vātsiputriyas, Bhadrayānikas, Sāmmitiyas, Dharmaguptas and Samkrāntivādins are those that admit the reality of the 'individual.' They say that the 'individual' is something inexpressible, being neither identical with the five groups of elements nor differing from them. It is to be cognised by the six forms of vijāānas, and is subject to vamsāra (phenomenal existence).

Vasumitra summarises the doctrine of the Sammitiyas or the Vatsīputrīyas thus:

- The pudgala is neither the same as the skandhas nor different from the skandhas. The name pudgala is provisionally given to an aggregate of skandhas, äyatanas and dhātus.
- Dharmas cannot transmigrate from one world to another apart from the pudgala. These can be said to transmigrate along with the pudgala.

Other doctrines

Vasumitra attributes to the Vätsiputrīyas a few other views which have already been discussed. These are,—

- (i) The five vijnanas conduct neither to saraga (desire) nor to viraga (removal of desires);1
- (ii) To become free from desire (virăga) one must relinquish the samyojanas which can be destroyed by an adept when he reaches bhāvanāmārga and not while he remains in darianamārga;
- (iii) When one has entered the samyaktvanyāma he is called pratipannaka in the first twelve moments of the darianamārga and when he is in the thirteenth he is called phalastha.<sup>2</sup>
- (iv) There is antarābhava.<sup>3</sup> The Sammitiyas like the Sarvāstivādins hold that every being be he destined for Kāmaloka or Rūpaloka by his karma, remains for some time in an intermediate state of existence. At that time the body takes no material form not even the skandbas. It is not an independent state

1 See ante, pp. 99-101.

2 Cf. Masuda's notes in the Asia Major, II. p. 56. In short, the Sammitiyas count in all fourteen moments instead of Sarvästivädin's sixteen; so the 13th moment of the Sammitiyas corresponds to the 15th of the Sarvästivädins; see p. 155-6.

3 See ante, pp. 103-4, 162.

of existence but just a waiting stage preliminary to his existence in one of the two lokas. The Sammitīyas add that those beings who are destined for hells, or Asaññī sphere or Arūpaloka have no antarābhava.

- (v) Parihāyati arabā arabattā ti (Kvu. 1. 2).1
- (vi) N'atthi devesu brahmacariyavāso ti (Kvu. 1. 3)."
- (vii) Odbisodbiso kilese jabatīti (Kun. I. 4).3
- (viii) Jahati puthujjano kāmarāga-byāpādan 11? (Kon. I. 5).4

DHAMMUTTARÎYA, BHADRAYÂNIYA AND CHAN-NAGARIKA

Vasumitra skips over the special doctrines of these three schools, mentioning in verse only that they differed regarding the attainments of an arhat, and the consequent chances of fall from arhathood. It seems that in other matters, these three schools agreed with the views of the Sammitiyas.

VIBHAJYAVADA

This is one of the schools enlisted by Bhavya and Vinitadeva, but not by Vasumitra. It does not also appear in the list of schools of the Ceylonese chronicles. Bhavya and Vinitadeva treat it as an offshoot of the Sarvästiväda school, Prof. La Vallée Poussin has traced in the Chinese commentary of the Vijnaptimātratā-siddhi a passage in which Vibhajyavādins are identified with the Prajnaptivādins. This apparently refers to the Bahuśrutīyavibhajyavādins, by which name the Prajnaptivādins distinguished themselves from the Bahuśrutīyas. Prof. Poussin has shown that the position of the Vibhajyavādins cannot be clearly made out as their doctrines have much in com-

- 1 See ante, pp. 85 f., 149 f.
- 3 See anse, p. 156.
- 5 See ante, pp. 48-9.
- 7 Sec above, p. 108,

- 2 See unte, p. 152.
- 4 Sec ante, p. 157.
- 6 Kośa, Intro., p. lv.

mon with the doctrines of the Sarvāstivādins, Mahāsanghikas, Sammitiyas and others. To add to this confusion, we have the Ceylonese traditions, in which the Pali School, i.e. the Theravādins preferred to call themselves, Vibhajyavādins.1 This anomalous position of the Vibhajyavadins, it seems, may be explained by regarding them not as an independent school, but as a term to denote those who did not accept the doctrines of a particular school in toto.2 To wit, it may be shown that those Sarvāstivādins who did not accept the sarvam asti thesis in toto and held instead the opinion that the past which has not yet produced its fruits and the future does not exist were known as Vibhajyavādins, i.e. Sarvāstivāda-vibhajyavādin just as we have Bahuśrutiya-vibhajyavādin. On this analogy we may explain that among the Theravadins perhaps, there were some dissenting groups who were distinguished as Theravada-vibhajyavādins. The Ceylonese monks of Mahāvīhāra probably preferred to call themselves Vibhajjavadin as we find it clearly expressed in the versified table of contents of chapter III of the Cullavagga3 and in the colophon of the commentary on the Tikapatthana,4 as also in the Dipavamsa, (xviii. 41, 44). In the

<sup>1</sup> Mahavamsa, p. 54-

<sup>2</sup> See Koša, Index, p. Ivi; V. p. 23-24 fn. quoting Arthapradipa, 3. p. 48. "Les Vibhajyavādins ou bien sont des maîtres divergents du Grand Véhicule, ou bien toutes les écoles du Petit Véhicule sont nommées Vibhajyavādins: ceux-ci ne sont pas une école déterminee. Par conséquent, dans le Mahāyānasamgraha (Nanjio 1183), les Vibhajyavādins sont expliqués comme Mahišāsakas; dans la Vibhāṣā, comme Sāmmitiyas."

<sup>3</sup> Sec Vinaya, CV, pp. 72, 312: ācariyānam Vibhaijavādānam Tambapannidipapasādakānam Mahāvihāravāsinam vācanā saddhammatthitiyā ti.

<sup>4</sup> Tika-patibāna (Cy), p. 366: ācariyānam vādam avihāya account of the Third Council, as given in the Ceylonese chronicles<sup>1</sup> as also in Buddhaghosa's commentaries,<sup>2</sup> the Vibhajjavädins were declared as orthodox monks.<sup>2</sup>

As Vasumitra does not count the Vibhajyavādins as one of the sects, he has not mentioned any special doctrines of theirs. It is only in the Abhidharmakośa that we come across certain doctrines attributed to this sect. Evidently Vasubandhu had in his mind the Sarvāstivāda vibhajyavādins. The doctrines as summarised by Prof. La Vallée Poussin are in short as follows:—

- i Sound is an effect (saddo vipāko, Kun. xii, 3; Kośa, i. 37)
- ii The faculties 'of faith, memory etc. (Sraddhendriya, Smrtindriya etc.) are pure (anāsrava). (Koša, ii. 9).
- iii There is no intermediate state of existence (antarābhava) (Kośa, iii. 10).
- iv The pratīryasamutpāda is unconstituted (asamskṛta) (Kośa, ii. 28).
- v Abhidhyā, vyāpāda, m'thyādṛṣṭī are physical acts (kāyika).

Vibhajjavädisissänam etc.; p. 367: theravamsappadipänam theränam Mahävihäraväsinam vamsälankärabhüteha vipula-visuddhabuddhinä Buddhaghuso ti ..... therena katä.

- 1 Mahāvamsa, V, 271.
- 2 Kathāvatību-aṭṭhakathā, p. 6.
- 3 Before Vibhajjavāda came to refer to a sect, it simply meant one who dealt with the metaphysical problems analytically, from a particular standpoint as opposed to one who solved the problems straightaway (ekamsavādin) by a direct answer. See Majjhima, II, pp. 99, 107; cf. EMB., I, p. 124: Vibhajjavyākaraniya and Ekamsavyākaraniya. In the Majjhima, I, p. 163; Papañeasūdani, II, p. 171, Buddha declared that he knew theravāda, which, according to Buddhaghosa, meant thirabhāvavāda (mental steadiness). Though these two terms Vibhajjavāda and Theravāda were used in the Nikāyas, they did not denote any sect, but we may take them as the source, from which the sectarian name issued later on.

vi Bhagavan is always in meditation (Kośa. Fr. transl. iv. p. 40 n) and has no middha (Ibid).

vii Vibhavatṛṣṇā is abandoned by bhāvanā (Kośa, iv. 10-11). viii Arhats have no fall (Kośa, vi. 58).

ix There are 41 Bodhipakṣika-dharmas (Kośa, vi. p. 281n: the four additional dharmas are the four ārya-vaṃsas. See Mahāvyutpatti).

x There is rūpa (matter) in the Ārūpya-dhātu (Kośa. viii. 3. See Fr. transl. p. 135 n.).

Some schools like the Andhakas, Mahāsanghīkas, Mahīśāsakas point our that rūpa exists in arūpyadhātu but in a very subtle state. The contention of the Vibhajyavādins is possibly the same as that of the Tāmrapatnīyas<sup>3</sup> (Kośa. i. 39) who state that mano-dhātu is a material organ, which they call hadayavatthu (see Visuddhimagga, p. 447). This basis of the manodhātu, which is material, exists in the Arūpyadhātu.

xi The Ārya of the 4th Ārūpya (i.e. nevasamiñānāsamiñāyatana) obtains arhathood without the aid of the magga, This is a doctrine of the Mahišāsakas.

xii There are twelve viparyāsas, (see Vyākhyā, p. 454) of which eight are removed by darśanamārga and four by bhāvanāmārga (Kośa, v. p. 23 n.).

xiii Iñāna is the same as dharmas which are good by nature (svabhāvatah), while vijñāna means those dharmas which are good by association (samprayogatah), i.e., associated with jñāna (Kośa. iv. p. 33 n. ix, p. 248 n).

xiv Realisation of the four truths takes place all at once and not gradually (Kośa, vi, pp. 185, 123).

: Vyākbyā, p. 39: तासपैयीयापि इद्यवस् मनोविज्ञानधातीरायसं कल्पयाल । तबादप्यधालपि विद्यत इति वर्षयाल । सादप्यधालपि हि तेवा द्यम्मिप्रेतम्।

2 See above, pp. 154-6.

CHAPTER XI

DOCTRINES OF GROUP V SCHOOLS

Sthaviravada or Theravada

(including Mahāvihāravāsins and Abhayagirivāsins)

According to both Pāli and Sanskrit traditions, the original school, which the Ceylonese chronicles<sup>1</sup> would not count as a schismatic, was called Theravāda or Sthaviravāda.

An alternative name of the Sthaviravādins is given as Vibhajyavādins. It is doubtful whether any independent school went by the name of Vibhajyavāda. It has been shown above that Vibhajyavāda was sometimes affixed to the name of a school to show that certain adherents of a school differed in minor points from the principal doctrines of a particular school and preferred to distinguish themselves as Vibhajyavādin of that particular school. In this way we may explain the Vibhajjavāda of the Ceylonese tradition, that is to say, the Ceylonese did not accept in toto the doctrine of Theravāda and preferred to distinguish themselves as Sthavira-vibhajjavādī or simply Vibhajjavādī,<sup>2</sup> In the Kathāvatthu the term Sakavāda is used instead of Sthaviravāda or Vibhajjavāda.<sup>3</sup>

Hiuen Tsang speaks of a group of monks as Mahāyānists of the Sthavira school. From his records, 4 it seems that he divided the monks of Ceylon into two groups, calling the Mahāvihāra-

<sup>1</sup> Dipavamsa, V. 51: Sattarasa bhinnavādā eko vādo abhinnako. See Watters, I, p. 164.

<sup>2</sup> See above, p. 196.

<sup>3</sup> Points of Controversy, p. xli.

<sup>4</sup> Watters, II, p. 234-

vāsins as Hīnayāna-Sthaviras and the Abhayagirivāsins as Mahāyāna-Sthaviras. He came across such Mahāyānist Sthaviras in the Mahābodhi-sanghārāma, built in Gaya by a king of Ceylon, in Kalinga and Surat. In the monasteries of Samatata, 4 Drāvida,5 he says, the monks belonged to the Sthavira school without any mention of Mahāyāna. He was aware of the split of the Buddhist church into two schools, Sthaviras and Mahasanghīkas,6 and quite deliberately used the expression Mahāyanist Sthaviras. His remarks about the division of monks in Ceylon remind us about the Ceylonese tradition that the Abhayagiri monastery became for some time a centre of the Vetulyakas, the immediate forerunners, we may say, of the Mahāyānists, and very probably the Chinese pilgrim referred to the Vetulyakas or the monks generally living in the Abhayagiri monastery as Sthaviras of the Mahāyāna school. By Mahāyanist Sthaviras Hiuen Tsang probably meant those monks who followed Vinaya rules of the Sthaviravadins but held views of the Mahāyānists like Suññatāvāda of the Vetulyakas.

In the Abhidharmakośa and its bhāṣya,8 certain erudite monks are referred to as Sthaviras e.g. Sthavira Saṃghabhadra, Sthavira Vasubandhu, Sthavira Śrīlāta while the Chinese commentators on the texts point out that by "nikāyāntara," the text referred to the Sthavira school. In the Kośavyākhyā (p. 705), there is a reference to the Tāmraparṇīyanikāya. These references, however, are too inadequate for drawing any conclusion.

Leaving aside for the present the Haimavatas, or the Mahāyānist Sthaviras let us turn to the original Sthavira school which

- 1 Watters, II, p. 138.
- 3 Ibid., II, p. 248. .
- 5 Ibid., II, p. 226.
- 7 See above, p. 110.
- 2 Ibid., II, p. 109.
- 4 Ibid., II,p. 188.
- 6 Watters, I, p. 164; II, p. 161.
- 8 See Kośa, Index, s.v. Sthavira.

claimed the Pāli scriptures as its own, or to be more precise, to the Sthaviravādins of the Mahāvihāra of Ceylon. Vasumitra has passed over the doctrines of this school while the Kathāvatthu refers to them by the word sakavāda. For the purpose of finding out the distinctive doctrines of this school, we shall elicit from the Kathāvatthu the views of the Sakavādins as against those of other schools on any particular doctrine.

Centres of popularity

The Tibetan traditions ascribe the foundation of this school to Mahākaccāyana¹ who was a native of Ujjeni, son of the priest of king Caṇḍa Pajjota of Avantī. The Pāli traditions, however, give prominence to Upāli, and speak of the succession of his disciples, the chief of whom was Dāsaka. The latter's disciples were Siggava and Caṇḍavajji who were young at the time of the Second Council.²

The events of the Second Council, in which the Theravadins became separated from the main body, indicate that the monks of the west, specially of Kausambi and Avanti, formed the nucleus of this sect. The biography of Mahinda, who is mainly responsible for the propagation of this school of Buddhism in Ceylon, also shows that this school was more popular in the west than in the east. Taking into consideration all these facts, it may be stated that the Theravadins had one centre at Paţaliputra along with other schools but were chiefly concentrated in and t See also Mahākarmavibbanga, p. 61-2.

<sup>2</sup> Atthatălini (p. 32) however gives prominence to the disciples of Săriputta, the chief of the Abhidhammikas thus: Săriputta-Bhaddaji-Sobhita-Piyajăli-Piyapāla-Piyadassi-Kosiyaputta-Siggava-Sandeva-Moggaliputta, etc. Moggaliputta Tissa was a disciple of Siggava and Candavajii. See Samantapāsādikā, I, p. 40.

around Ujjeni, which became its second but more important centre.

In the Sarnath inscription, there is a reference to the existence of the Theravadins at that place in the early days, while in the Nāgārjunikonda inscriptions, mention is made of the activities of this sect in the propagation of Buddhism. In the Manimekhalai, we find that it had its popularity in countries around Kāncī, which became one of their principal centres in the post-Christian eras.1 The fact that Buddhaghosa and Dharmapāla had their training at Käńci goes to show that Käńci became later on the educational seat of the Theravadins. After Mahinda's demise the school obtained a firm footing in Ceylon and made the Mahāvihāra its chief academic centre, Hiuen Tsang saw one hundred monasteries of the Sthavira school in Dravida, and also in Samatata. He says that Dharmapala was born in the Dravida country.2 From this survey, it may be stated that the school originated at Pāṭaliputra, became popular in the western countries, making Ujjeni its second centre and then it gradually made headway towards the south, settling in and around Kānci, and was ultimately established in Ceylon.

Language

According to the Tibetan traditions, this school had its Piţaka in the Paiśāci dialect. There is much value in this tradition. Grierson holds that Paiśāci had its home in the North-West (Kekaya and Gandhāra i.e. near Taxila) and that it gradually made its way to the western countries upto the Konkan coast.¹ Guṇādhya, who belonged to Ujjeni, it is said, wrote Bṛhatkathā in Paiśāci.² On philological ground Sten Konow localises Paiśāci around the Vindhya hills. He holds that Pāli is the literary form of Paiśāci. The traditions preserved in the Ceylonese chronicles also indicate that Pāli had its home somewhere in Avantī. So it is quite possible that the Tibetan tradition refers to Pāli as literary Paiśāci.

<sup>1</sup> See Aiyangar, 'A Buddhist School at Kañci (Proceedings of the 4th Oriental Conference, Allahabad).

<sup>2</sup> Watters, II, p. 226.

Literature

The whole of the Pāli literature belongs to this school and as such it hardly needs any further comment. The only information that we should add is that Hiuen Tsang records that he carried to China fourteen volumes of the Sthavira Sūtras, Sāśtras and Vinaya. No Sinologist has so far dealt with this literature and we are still in the dark about the Sthaviras whom the Chinese pilgrim had in view.

Doctrines

The Theravada doctrines are fairly well known and have been given in detail in the first volume of this work (chs. xii-xv). Our object here will be to mention the differences which this school had with the other schools, as pointed out by Vasumitra and Buddhaghosa. These differences are discussed in detail in connection with the doctrines of each school and so these are not repeated here. It should be noted that the doctrines of the Sarvastivadins, Sammitiyas, Mahīšasakas, Sautrantikas and the Mahāsanghikas have been mainly kept in view.

2 ZDMG., LXVI, (1910), pp. 114f.

<sup>1</sup> Bhandarkar Commemoration Volume, pp. 119-120; see also IRAS., 1921, pp. 244-5; 424-8.

The views of the Theravadins as against the opinions of the above-mentioned schools are as follows:—

Re. Buddhas:

- (i) Buddhas possess rūpakāya and worldly attributes and are subject to all the physical frailties of a human being; it is the attainment of bodbi that makes a being a Buddha.
- (ii) Buddhas are above maitri and karunā, but they do show maitri and karunā to beings.
- (iii) Buddhas cannot expound all the doctrines by a single utterence.

Re. Bodhisattuas:

- (i) Bodhisattvas are average beings, and are subject to klešas.
- (ii) They are not self-born (upapāduka).

Re. Reals:

Past and future dharmas do not exist, not even their dharmatua. To say that Arhat has atita raga though it is ineffective is wrong.

Re. Arhats:

- (i) Arhats are perfect beings, hence they cannot have a fall from arhathood. They possess both kṣayajñāna (i.e. the knowledge that they have no more kleśas) and anutpādajñāna (i.e. the knowledge that they will have no more rebirths). There are, however, two grades of Arhats, viz., svadharmakuśala and paradharmakuśala (see above, p. 86-7).
- (ii) Arhats, having reached the stage which is beyond merit and demerit, cannot accumulate merits, or be subject to influence of the past karmans.

- (iii) All Arhats practise the four dhyanas and enjoy their fruits.
- (iv) All Arhats attain Nirvana.

Re. Puthujjana:

An average being does not fully eradicate from his mind attachment (rāga) and hatred (doṣa) but he may die with a good state of mind.

Re. Meditation:

- (i) In the state of samābita, one cannot utter words.
- (ii) An Arhat cannot die while in the highest samādhī (saññāvedayitanīrodha).

Re. Antarābhava:

There is no intermediate state of existence (antarābbava) in the Kāma and Rūpa dhātus.

Re. Pudgala:

- (i) Pudgala does not exist in the highest sense.
- (ii) There is nothing which can transmigrate from one world to another.

Re. Anusayas and Paryavasthanas:

Anusayas (dormant passions) and Paryavasthānas (pariyutthāna in Pali = pervading passions) are caitasika (mental states), citta-samprayukta (associated with mind), and become objects of thought (na anārammana).

Re. Vijnanas:

The five vijnanas conduce to attachment to the things of the world as also to detachment from the same.

Re. Asamskrtas:

There are three asamskṛtas (unconstituted, viz., pratisamkhyā-nirodha, apratisaṃkhyā-nirodha and ākāśa) and not nine (see above).

Re. Brahmacarya of gods:

The gods except the Asaññisattas may practise maggabhāvanā though they may not have ordination according to the Vinaya rules.

Re. Anupubbābbisamaya:

- (i) The adepts realise the truths gradually.
- (ii) They get rid of klesas (impurities) also gradually.
- (iii) They may, only in exceptional cases, realise the four sāmaññaphalas including vimutti all at once.

Re. Laukika and Lokottara:

All the practices and fruits after śrota-āpattiphala are supramundane (lokottara) and not wordly (laukika).

CHAPTER XII

PLACE OF LAITY IN EARLY BUDDHISM

The principles of early Buddhism did not make any special provision for the laity. Its mission was to persuade householders to embrace the life of a recluse, and Buddha was so successful in his mission in Magadha that people of the country raised a hue and cry over it, saying that Samana Gotama was bent upon making the families sonless, women widowed and line of succession discontinued. Many householders retired from the worldly life because of the teaching that the life of a householder was impure and an obstruction to spiritual progress while that of a recluse was pure, open and free, and besides it was not easy for a person living a householder's life to follow the teachings propounded by the teacher and to lead the thoroughly pure life of a brahmacārī. Thus, it is evident that

2 Vinaya, i. p. 37: caratha brahmacariyam sammā dukkhassa antakiriyāyā ti.

<sup>1</sup> See "Early Buddhism and Laity" in Studies in Indian History and Culture by Dr. N. N. Law. See above pp. 89, 97 for stray references to the laity.

<sup>3</sup> Vinaya, i, p. 37: aputtakāya paţipanno samano Gotamo, vedhavāya paţipanno samano Gotamo, kulūpacchedāya paţipanno samano Gotamo.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Majjhima, i. p. 344: Sambādho gharāvāso rajāpatho abbhokāso pabbajjā, nayidam sukaram agāram ajjhāvasatā ekantaparipunnam ekantaparisuddham sankhalikhitam brahmacariyam caritum, Cf. Majjhima, ii, p. 55: Yathā yathā khvāham Bhagavatā dhammam desitam ājānami nayidam sukaram gharam ajjhāvasatā etc. as above.

the new religion was primarily meant for those who would retire from the household life. For householders generally some rites or ceremonies are provided, or some form of worship is recommended, by the founder of a religion but there was nothing of the kind in Buddhism. On the other hand the householders were asked to eschew rites and ceremonies (sīlabbata)<sup>1</sup> and this was made one of the primary conditions for becoming a devotee of Buddha.

At the same time, it has to be admitted that the Buddhist Sangha must have a lay-community for its very existence, some supporting families from which the members could have the bare necessaries of their life. In ancient India, however, the formation of a lay-community need not be a condition precedent to the formation and growth of a body of recluses. Without any distinction of caste and creed, the householders welcomed every ascetic approaching them for food and dress, and hence the Buddhist monks at first did not experience any difficulty to get their requirements from the existing families. As time went on, they picked up some householders who showed them more veneration and who were more prompt in making offerings to them than others. These householders were designated upāsakas or upāsikās and received special attention of the Buddhist monks. In the early days of Buddhism, these householders looked after the needs of the monks during the rainy-season retreats (vassā-vāsa) and got opportunities to come into frequent contact with them and to listen to their discourses. Such closer contacts led to the institution of certain rites and ceremonies which Buddhism wanted so much to avoid at its inception. The rites and ceremonies observed by these householders were as follows:-

<sup>1</sup> Sans. Sila and Vrata.

- (i) To utter the formula of Trisarana,
- (ii) To listen to religious discourses on uposatha days,
- (iii) To observe eight sīlas occasionally, and
- (iv) To offer robes to the monks on certain occasions, specially at the end of the rainy season retreat.

Later on, the faithful persons were advised,

- (v) to visit the four places of pilgrimage,1 and,
- (vi) to worship the stupas, particularly those containing the relics of Buddha.2

The six rites mentioned above, it should be noted, came into vogue gradually. We are told that Tapussa and Bhallika were the first to become upasakas (dvevācikā) while Yasa's father became the third upāsaka with Trisarana (tevācika).* Henceforward several Khattiyas, Brāhmanas and Gahapatis became upasakas by uttering these words:-

"Abhikkantam bho Gotama, abhikkantam bhc Gotama, Seyyathā pi bho Gotama nikujjitam vā ukkujjeyya, paticchannam vā vivareyya, mūlhassa va maggam ācikkheyya, andhakāre va telapajjotam dhāreyya: cakkhumanto rūpāni dakkhintīti; evam evam bhotā Gotamena anekapariyāyena dhammo pakāsito. Ete mayam bhavantam Gotamam saranam gacchāma dhamman ca bhikkhusanghan ca upasake no bhavam Gotamo dharetu ajjatagge panupete saranagate ti."

2 Ibid., p. 142.

<sup>1</sup> Mahaparinibhanasutta, p. 141.

<sup>3</sup> Vinaya, i. p. 4. i.e. they took refuge in Buddha and Dhamma only, as the Sangha had not yet been formed.

<sup>5</sup> See infra, pp. 210-213. 4 Ibid. p. 17.

(Excellent O Gotama, excellent. Just as one who turns the upturned, opens the covered ones, shows the path to the deluded, holds a lighted lamp in darkness, you have preached the doctrine in such a way that those who possess eyes (of knowledge) can see the actual objects. We seek refuge in you. O Gotama, in your Dhamma and in your Sangha. Accept us as your life-long lay-devotees).

The extract cited above appears verbatim at the end of almost every discourse addressed to a householder or a group of householders. It should not however be taken as indicative of a person's actually changing his creed and becoming an upāsaka. Several brāhmanas and gahapatis expressed their appreciation of the discourses by these set words, and did not care to follow up the declaration by observing the moral precepts and performing the duties specially prescribed for the Upāsakas and Upāsikās.

The Three Parisas

This class of devout listeners to Buddha's discourses is referred to in the Nikāyas as Khattiya parisā, Brāhmaṇa-parisā and Gahapatiparisā. There are occasional references to the four castes<sup>2</sup> as well but the more common way of referring to this class of people was by the above-mentioned three parisās (assemblies). In some passages the word 'parisā' is replaced by

- 1 Majibima, i, p. 72: Abhijānāmi kho panāham Sāriputta, anekasatam khattiya-parisam upasarikamitā, tatra pi mayā sannisinnapubbañ c'eva sallapitapubbañ ca sākacehā ca samapajjitapubbā.
- 2 Angustara, iv. p. 259: Sabbe khattiyā aṭṭhangasamannāgatam uposatham upavaseyyum sabbe pi brāhmanā...sabbe pi vessā...sabbe pi suddā aṭṭhangasamannāgatam uposatham upavaseyyum.
  - 3 The other parisas are Samaņa-parisa, Catummahārājika-parisa,

'mahāsāla' (nobles or rich men)' Not unoften is the word 'paṇḍitā' (wise men) used instead of 'parisā'. The juxtaposition of the word 'gahapati' to 'khattiya' and 'brāhmaṇa' suggests that it meant usually the settbis (bankers) or businessmen or men who have taken to some vocations, such as agriculture, carpentry, smithy and so forth.

In the Anguttara-nikāya¹ the distinctive features of the three parisās are pointed out thus: All the three classes of men seek wordly enjoyment (bhogādhippāya) and try to acquire knowledge (paññupavicāra). The Khattiyas rely on their prowess (balādhiṭṭbānā), is bent upon acquiring lands (paṭhavībhinivesā) and aim at dominance (issariyapariyosanā), the Brāhmaṇas depend on hymns and chants (mantādhiṭṭbānā), is attached to sacrifices (yaññābhinivesā) and aim at reaching Brahmaloka, while the Gahapatis depend on arts and crafts (sippādhiṭṭbānā), remains engaged with their works (kammantābhinivesā) and aim at fruition of their works (niṭṭhita kammantapariyosanā).

Aims and objects of Gahapatis

Of these three parisas, the largest number of devotees of Buddha came from the Gahapati parisa, few from Brāhmaṇa and Tāvatimsa-p., Māra-p., Brahma-p. See Majjhima, i, p. 72; Dīgha, ii, p. 109; Saṃyutta, v, p. 51.

t Samyutta, i, p. 71: Khattiyamahāsālā and Brāhmaṇa-mahāsālā have ample gold and silver and other treasures. Anguttara, iv, pp. 104. 130, 239; Digha, iii p. 146

2 Khattiya-pandită etc. Samyutta, iii, p. 6; Majjbima, i, p. 176;

Anguttara, iv, pp. 104, 130, 239.

3 Cf. Kassakagahapati in Anguttara, i, p. 229.

4 Anguttara, iii, p. 363.

a very few from the Khattiya. About the characteristics of the Gahapatis, the Nikāyas say that they were keen about accumulation of gold, crops, buildings, lands, wife, male and female servants.1 Their happiness consisted in possessing worldly objects, in enjoyment of the same, and in remaining free from debts and faults.2 In short, the Gahapatis enjoyed all worldly pleasures derivable through the five organs of sense.3 Dighajānu Koliyaputta said that the householders sought worldly objects, sons and wife, unguents, garlands and other articles of luxury, gold and silver; he wanted instructions from the Teacher as to the ways and means by which the householders could be happy in this life and the next. The reply was that the householders should be energetic in his vocation (utibanasampada), take good care of the wealth earned righteously by the sweat of his brow (ārakkhasampadā), associate with men having faith, good morals, charitable disposition and wisdom (kalyāṇamittata), and try to acquire their good qualities and be like them (samajīvitā). Tapussa gahapatis was frank enough to admit that the gahapatis were afraid of retirement, and given to worldly pleasures because they had not realised the evil consequences of attachment to worldly objects. Potaliya gahapati6 thought that as he had retired from his works (kammanta) and business (vohāra), leaving his possessions to his sons, and as he had been living on bare requirements of food and dress, he

<sup>1</sup> Majjhima, i, p. 452.

<sup>2</sup> Anguttara, ii, p. 69: atthisukha, bhogasukha, ananasukha and anavajja-sukha.

<sup>3</sup> Majjhima, i. p. 505.

<sup>4</sup> Anguttara, i. p. 281-2; iii, p. 45-

<sup>5</sup> Anguttara, iv. p. 438.

<sup>6</sup> Majjbima, ii, p. 359

should not be called a gahapati, but Buddha would not listen to him as he had not yet fulfilled the elementary conditions of a retired life. Though the householders remained engrossed in their wordly possessions, some of them were religious minded and approached different religious teachers for instructions. The Brāhmaṇas and Gahapatis of the village Sālā¹ said that they had listened to the teachings of different teachers and had not yet made up their mind to accept any of them as their spiritual guide. They approached Buddha and his disciples and listened to their instructions now and then, and some of them avowed themselves as upāsakas of Buddha, but not necessarily complying with all the conditions to be fulfilled by an upāsaka.

Discourses to Gahapatis

In every Nikāya, excepting the Dīgha, there is a Gahapativagga,<sup>2</sup> in which Buddha administered instructions to a particular gahapati or delivered discourses for the benefit of gahapatis in general. There are also discourses dealing incidentally with the general rules of morality, effects of karma, ideals of a householder and his wife, and the fundamental principles of Buddhism. The Gahapativaggas are found to contain discussions on all aspects of Buddhist ethics and philosophy. There were also many learned Brāhmaṇas, Khattiyas and Gahapatis who took part in abstruse discussions with Buddha and his disciples. In the Gahapativagga of the Majihima Nikāya,<sup>3</sup> there are ten suttas. In the Kandarakasutta, Pessa

<sup>1</sup> Majjhima, i, p. 401.

<sup>2</sup> Majjhima, i, pp. 339-413; Samyutta, ii, pp. 68-80; iv, pp. 109-124; Anguttara, iv, pp. 208-235.

<sup>3</sup> Majjhima, i, pp. 339-413.

Hatthärohaputta spoke in appreciation of the four satipatthänas and said that he and other householders occasionally tried these four practices.1 He was then told about the various ascetic practices prevalent in the country, and the superiority of the practices and acquisitions of Buddhist monks. To Dasama Gahapati was explained how a monk attained the anagami and arabatta stages, and practised the four brahmavibāras and arūpasamāpattis.2 The Sakkas of Kapilavatthu, specially Mahānāma, listened to a discourse on what made a sekba (i.e. a monk progressing towards Nibbāna). Potaliya gahapati felt offended at being called a gahapati in his so-called retired life and he was made to understand how one ceased to be a householder according to Buddha's law (ariyassa vinaye). Iivaka could not believe that Buddha was taking meat specially prepared for him and on enquiry he was told how could the Buddha, perfect in the four brahmavihāras, do so. In the Upālisutta, one of the longest discourses, the teachings of Nigantha Nataputta were discussed, and Upāli gahapati, a distinguished disciple of Nigantha Nataputta, was convinced of the superiority of Buddhist teachings, and was won over to the Buddhist faith. Punna Koliyaputta and Acela Seniya listened to a discourse on the effects of kamma,3 gave up their austerities and joined the Buddhist order. Abhayarājakumāra, a lay disciple of Nigantha Nățaputta, wanted to cross words with Buddha at the instigation of his teacher but ultimately succumbed to Buddha's arguments. Pañcakanga thapati would not recongnise the adukkhamasukha-vedanā as the third vedanā, the two other being sukha and dukkha. Buddha explained that sukha was a relative term and then gave an exposition of the stages of sukha through which a monk passed in order to reach the highest state of mental concentration. In the last sutta of this Gahapativagga is given an exposition of the views of a few heretical teachers as well as the wrong views held about Arūpa-brahmaloka and Nibbāna; at the end of this discourse all the Brāhmanas and Gahapatis of the village Sālā expressed their desire to become devotees of Buddha.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Majjbima, p. 340: Mayam pi hi bhante gihi odätavasanä kälena kälam imesu catusu satipaṭṭhānesu supatiṭṭhitacittä viharāma.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., i, pp. 350-353.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid., i, p. 389.

There are two Gahapativaggas in the Samyutta-nikāya.<sup>2</sup> In the first, the Gahapatis were admonished to observe the five moral precepts, develop faith in the Triratna, and comprehend the law of causation including the four truths. Incidentally the question of the identity and difference of soul and khandhas is discussed. In the second Gahapativagga, there are discourses on hindrances (samyojanas) which kept one away from Nibbāna, on watchfulness over body (kāya satipaṭṭhānā) and its movements, on restraint in act, speech and thought, and on feelings of pain and pleasure derived through the organs of sense. There is a reference to the fall of Brāhmaṇas from their ancient ideal which was similar to the Buddhist ideal of self-restraint.

As regards the duties of a gahapati it is stated in this Nikāya that a gahapati should (i) maintain his parents; (ii) rever elders of the family, (iii) use gentle words; (iv) avoid malicious talks; (v) discard miserliness; (vi) be open-handed; (vii) be truthful and (viii) never be angry.

<sup>1</sup> Majjhima, i, p. 413.

<sup>2</sup> Samyuttta, ii, pp. 68-80; iv, pp. 109-124-

In the Gahapativagga of the Anguttara Nikāya,1 the duties of a gahapati are dealt with more than the general principles of Buddhism. The eight special virtues of a gahapati are given as follows:-(i) firm faith in Buddha; (ii) appreciation of the Dhamma; (iii) regard for the Sangha; (iv) charitableness even to the extent of giving away one's wife, (v) open-handedness in distributing property among the saints; (vi) keenness to listen to religious discourses, (vii) lack of pride due to spiritual success; and (viii) removal of the five impurities (orambhāgiyas). The gahapatis are expected to possess seven other virtues, viz., faith (saddbd), moral restraint (sīla), modesty (biri), shame (ottappa),2 learning (bahussuta), charitable disposition (caga) and knowledge (pañña). Some of the gahapatis practised the four samgabavattbus3 viz., gift, sweet words, beneficial acts and treatment of others as his equals, and thereby obtained a large circle of friends.4 Hatthaka of Alavi was the chief of those who practised the samgaha-vatthus.8

Though there is no Gahapativagga in the Dīgha Nikāya, there are two suttas (Lakkhaṇa and Sigālovāda) which deal with the duties of a gahapati. In the Lakkhaṇa-sutta, the virtues or duties of a gahapati are mentioned though not in a systematic form, e.g., a good man should perform good deeds, restrain himself in body, speech and thought, be charitable, observe uposathas, take care of parents, Samaṇas and Brāhmaṇas, practise the four samgahavatthus, exert for others' good, both moral

<sup>1</sup> Ainguttara, iv. pp. 208-235. 2 Cf. Samyutta, ii, p. 197.

<sup>3</sup> Dāna, peyyavāca, atthacariyā and samānattatā.

<sup>4</sup> The last four discourses in this Vagga have nothing to do with the duties of Gahapatis and so they are passed over here.

<sup>5</sup> Anguttara, i, p. 26. 6 Digba, iii, p. 145. 7 Ibid., p. 152.

and secular, approach Samanas and Brāhmanas for instructions, never harbour any anger or hatred, try to bring about concord among quarrelsome persons and help others in increasing their faith, moral virtues, knowledge, charity, religiosity, wisdom, and secular possessions, look upon others with friendly eyes, never utter an untrue, malicious, harsh or useless word, or never cheat others, and so forth.

In the Sigālovādasutta, the following duties are prescribed for a gahapati:—(i) abstinence from killing, speaking false-hood, stealing and adultery; (ii) avoiding commission of offences through strong will (chanda), hatted (dosa), delusion (moha) and fear (bhaya); (iii) refraining from drinking and merry-making, evening shows, dramatic performances, dice-plays, evil friends and idleness; (iv) avoidance of enemies posing as friends and obtaining sincere friends; (v) looking after parents, teachers, sons and wife, friends and advisers, servants and workers, Samanas and Brāhmaṇas.<sup>5</sup>

Gahapatānī

There are not many discourses specially devoted to the duties of the female members of a household. In the Samyutta-nikāya<sup>6</sup> a woman is enjoined to earn merits by good deeds, so that she may be reborn in a good family, be married in a good family, have no co-wife, be blessed with sons, and possess influence over her husband. Her strength, it is said, consisted in her appearance  $(r\bar{u}pa)$ , wealth (bhoga), relatives  $(\tilde{n}ati)$ , sons (putta) and moral virtues  $(s\bar{s}la)$ . The Like the gahapatis, they should also develop faith

- 1 Digha, III, p. 154.
- 2 Ibid., p. 157. 4 Ibid., p. 160.
- 3 Ibid., p. 159. 5 Cf. Samyutta, i, p. 231.
- 6 Ibid., iv, p. 249-250.

7 Ibid., iv, p. 246.

(saddhā), observe moral precepts (sīla), listen to religious discourses (suta), be charitable (sāga) and acquire knowledge (paññā). They should be quier, gentle and obedient.

Women generally are more miserly (macchariyā), envious (issuki), more strongly attached to worldly objects than men, their knowledge also is less than that of men. They must drive away from their minds anger, hatred and disrespect for others, and be chaste, diligent, modest and bashful. They must not be greedy, wish others' evil, indulge in malicious, harsh or useless talks, and discard wrong views.

There are certain special directions given to women, which are as follows:—

They should (i) be well-wisher of their husbands, cater to their comforts and be sweet and attractive to them. (ii) respect the parents of the husband, and rever the Samanas and Brāhmanas revered by the husband's family, (iii) be efficient in household work, e.g., in spinning, (iv) look after the needs of the servants and workers of the household and feed them properly, (v) protect paddy, gold and other articles brought by her husband, (vi) become an upāsikā by taking Trisaraṇa, (vii) observe the five precepts, and (viii) be charitable and (ix) acquire knowledge. The first five bring her success in this life and the succeeding four (i.e. saddbā, sīla, suta and paññā) make her happy in the next.

- 1 Samyutta, iv. p. 250; Anguttara, iv, p. 270.
- 2 Majjbimo, i, p. 125. 3 Samyutta, iv, p. 240.
- 4 Samyutta, iv, p. 240. It is said that for these deficiencies they were not allowed to sit in the assemblies.
- 5 Anguttara, ii, p. 203: Kopa, dosa and appaceaya. See also Sansyutta, iv, p. 240 f.
  - 6 Anguttara, v, p. 286. 7 Samyutta, iv, p. 246.
  - 8 Angustana, iv. p. 265-266; iii. p. 37-

The conversation that Nakulamātā gahapatānī had with her husband in deathbed shows how spiritually advanced sometimes the gahapatānīs were. Nakulamātā said to her husband that (1) death with anxiety is disapproved by Buddha and so he should not die with any anxiety (sapekho) for her as to how she would meet both ends and rear her sons; she knew spinning and shaving hair (venim olikhitum) and by plying that trade,1 she would be able to tide over her difficulties. (ii) He need not apprehend that she would go to another family, for both of them knew that they had been living as brahmacārīs for the last 16 years. (iii) He must not think that she would not care to approach Bhagavan or his monks after his death; on the other hand, she would be more eager to approach them, or (iv) that she would not observe the moral precepts; on the contrary she would be no less energetic than the best of the householder-disciples of Buddha. (v) He must not have any doubt that she would not attain mental tranquillity (cetosamatha); on the contrary she would be the best of those upāsikās who practised ceto-samatha. (vi) He must rest assured that she was deeply interested in this doctrine and was not wanting in deep faith in Buddha, Dhamma and Sangha.2

There were other upāsikās also like Sujātā, Visākhā, Khujjuttarā, Sāmāvatī, Uttarā Nandamātā, Suppavāsā Koliyadhītā, Suppiyā Kātiyānī, and Kālī of Kuraraghara, who were extolled by Buddha as leading female devotees for having some extraordinary virtues.3 In spiritual attainments, the female lay-devotees vied equally well with the male-devotees.4

<sup>1</sup> It seems that Nakulapitā was a barber by profession.

<sup>2</sup> Anguttara, ii, pp. 295.

<sup>4</sup> See Infra, 233 f. 3 Anguttara, i, p. 26.

Upāsakas and Upāsikās

The Gahapatis mentioned above were more or less devout listeners to the moral or religious discourses delivered by the monks. They offered food, clothing and other necessaries of life to the monks. Occasionally at the end of a discourse, they signified their appreciation by saying that they would take Trisarana and become upasakas till the end of their lives. A number of Brāhmaņas, Gahapatis, Gāmaņīs, Paribbājakas, nobles and princes1 are found to say that they would become upasakas, but there is nothing to show that they actually followed the moral code and performed the duties prescribed for the Upasakas. These may be taken as lay-supporters of the Buddhist Sangha. The fact that there was a large number of such supporters is evidenced by the remark in the Mabāparinibbānasutta that Buddha should choose for his parinibbāna one of the towns like Campā, Rājagaha, Sāvatthi, Sāketa, Kosambī, and Vārānasī where are many Khattiya, Brāhmana and Gahapati mahāsālas to worship his relics.

Out of this body of lay-supporters appeared a group of persons who were more earnest in their devotion to Buddhism, and naturally tried to follow the principles of Buddhism as far as compatible with their life as a householder. In order to distinguish this body, Mahānāma the Sākyan raised the question as t E. g. Cańki brāhmaņa (M. ii. 177); Ghoţamukha-br. (M. ii. 163); Assalāyana-br. (M. ii. 157); Brahmāyu-br. (M. ii. 145); Citta-Gahapati (S. iv. 301); (for other Gahapatis, see above); Vekhanassa paribbājaka (M. ii.); Susima-paribbājaka (S. ii. 120); Madhuro Avantiputra (M. ii. 90); Bodhirājakumāra (M. ii. 97), For Gāmanis, see Gāmani-Saṃyutta in Saṃyutta-Nikāya, iv.

to what should be the marks of an upāsaka.1 Buddha's answer, however, was not very helpful for he simply said that anyone taking the Trisarana was an upasaka. In another context, however, it is stated that an upasaka must have not only faith in the Triratna, observe moral precepts, and do good to people in return but also not resort to auspicious rites, and offer gifts to persons outside the Buddhist Sangha.2 There are instances to show that some householders eschewed their old teacher and became an upāsaka of Buddha. Pukkusa Mallaputta, a disciple of Alāra Kālāma, Upāli Gahapati and Abhaya Rājakumāta, a rich upāsaka of Nigantha Nataputta,4 a gahapati-devotee of an Ajivaka3 changed their teachers and became upasakas of Buddha. There are evidences to show that a number of householders was distinguished as devout upāsakas, and that their number was large in certain localities.6 The stereo-typed remark found in the Nikāyas that Buddhist upāsakas do not like noisy discussions shows that some householders were distinguished as Buddhist upāsakas. Then passages like "yavatā kho pana samanassa Gotamassa sāvakā gihī odātavasanā Sāvatthiyam patīvasanti, ayam tesam aññataro Pañcakango thapati" (Puñcakango the architect is one of the distinguished white-dressed householder disciples of Gotama residing at Sāvatthī) leave no room for doubt that some persons were marked out as Buddhist upāsakas.

<sup>1</sup> Anguttara, iv. p. 220; Samyutta, v. p. 395: Kittavatā nu kho bhante upāsako tī ti?

<sup>2</sup> Digha, ii, p. 132-3.

<sup>3</sup> Majjhima, i. p. 379

<sup>4</sup> Anguttara, i, p. 219.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Aiignttara, iv. p. 59: Campeyyakā upāsakā approached Sāriputta for requesting Buddha to deliver a discourse to them.

<sup>6</sup> Majjhima, ii, p. 23.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid.

The members of these families received the special attention of the Buddhist monks, who, prescribed for them certain moral duties, which were classified under five heads, viz., Saddhā (faith), Sīla (observance of moral precepts), Cāga (charity), Suta (listening to religious discourses) and Paññā (comprehending the higher truths).

- (i) By Saddhā is meant that an upāsaka must have firm faith in the Buddha, Dharma and Sangha. There is a set formulae to express that faith, which is, in short, as follows:—Bhagavā the perfectly enlightened endowed with knowledge and good conduct is the highest, the knower of the world, the leader of men and gods. His Dharma is well-preached, produces fruit in this life, knows no limitation of time and is realisable within one's ownself. The Sangha of his disciples, who are in one of the eight stages of sanctification, is well-established in good conduct, is bent upon acquiring knowledge, is worthy of gifts, praise and reverence and is a fit recipient of gifts.
- (ii) By Sīla is meant that an upāsaka must abstain from killing, stealing, adultery, speaking falsehood and indulging in drinks and metrymakings.<sup>2</sup> He must discard all mental impurities like excessive greed (abbijjhā), hatred (vyāpāda), slothfulness (thīnamiddha), flurry, (uddhaccakukkucca), and doubt (vicikicchā).
- (iii) By Cāga is meant that an upāsaka should be charitable, provide the monks with food, robes, beds and medicinal requisites.1 He should be open-handed, prone to giving gifts2 to the needy.

<sup>1</sup> Majjhima, i, p. 467; iii, p. 99; Samyutta, iv, p. 250; Anguttara, i, p. 210; iv, p. 270.

<sup>2</sup> Angustara, iv, p. 220.

- (iv) By Suta is meant that an upāsaka should reverentially listen to religious discourses and moral teachings imparted by the monks.
- (v) By Paññā is meant that an upāsaka should try to comprehend the origin and decay of worldly objects,3 in other words, realise the four truths and the law of causation.4

The above mentioned five practices are fully described in the Gahapativaggas and elsewhere. Ugga Gahapati said that his saddbā was of such an order that the moment he saw Buddha even from a distance, his mind obtained satisfaction (pasidi). He observed the five sikkhāpadas, and thereby completed the practice of sīlas. He approached bhikkhus and listened to their discourses with due respect (sakkaceam eva sunāmi no asakkaccam). For the sake of sacrifice (caga) he would give away his young wives and divide his property among the religious people, and while giving gifts to the monks he would not discriminate between one monk and another on account of their spiritual attainments. He would listen to the higher teachings of Buddhism and thereby become paññavã.

To Brāhmaņa gahapatis of Veludvāra, Buddha delivered a

1 Cf. Anguttara, ii, 65.

2 Anguttara, ii, p. 65; Muttacāgā payatapāni vossaggaratā yācayogā dānasamvibhāgaratā.

3 Anguttara, iv. p. 271: Udayatthagāminiyā paññāya samannāgato ariyāya nibbedhikāya sammādukkhakkhayagāminiyā.

4 Anguttara, v. p. 184; Samyutta, v. p. 61; Anguttara, ii. p. 67. For Nivaranas, see Samyutta, v. pp. 60, 146.

5 Anguttara, iv. pp. 209 ff.

discourse dilating on the five precepts referred to above. He said that an upasaka in order to become a sotapanna should bear in mind the following dhammas:—

- (i) Realising how painful is one's own death, a person should not cause other's death.
- (ii) Remembering how a thief is hated by one whose possessions are stolen, a person must not steal other's property.
- (iii) Knowing how much a person is hated by the man with whose wife he commits adultery, one must not commit adultery.
- (iv) As a liar is disliked by everybody so one must not speak a lie.
- (v) As a man who by malicious words brings about dissension is abhorred by everybody, so one should not utter malicious words.
- (vi) As a person is disliked for harsh words, so one must avoid uttering the same.
- (vii) As a person is looked down for his frivolous talks, one must not indulge in the same,1

A person should not only practise the seven dhammas mentioned above for his own benefit but also persuade others to do the same.<sup>2</sup>

An upāsaka is further prohibited from trading in (i) weapons; (ii) livestock; (iii) meat; (iv) wine and (v) poison.3

In the Milindapañha<sup>4</sup> there are a few additional instructions given to the upāsakas. These are as follows:—

An upāsaka should (i) feel happy or sad at the joy or

<sup>1</sup> Samyutta, v. p. 353-

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Anguttara, iv, p. 221.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid., i, p. 208.

<sup>4</sup> Milindapañha, p. 94-

grief of the Sangha; (ii) make the dbamma the leading factor of his life; (iii) share his gain with others as far as possible; (iv) exert his best for the growth of the religion of the teacher whenever its decline is noticed; (v) hold the right view; (vi) avoid performing any auspicious rite or venerating another teacher even for the sake of his life; (vii) observe restraint in acts and words; (viii) be keen in maintaining concord; (ix) discard jealousy and (x) avoid hypocrisy in following the religion.

In the Vinaya<sup>1</sup> are enumerated the gains obtained by a householder by observing the sīlas, viz., (i) wealth and property; (ii) fame; (iii) boldness in any social congregation; (iv) death with consciousness up to the last moment; and lastly (v) heavenly existence.

Lay-devotees and Monks

Apart from the moral precepts to be observed by the upāsakas and upāsikās, they were enjoined to supply the members of the Saṅgha with robe, food, bed and medicinal requisites.<sup>2</sup> As a result of such gifts they were given the hope that in the next world they would have long life, good appearance, happiness and strength.<sup>3</sup> In making these gifts, however, they must not have any selfish end in view (sāpekha).<sup>4</sup> Some of the upāsakas and upāsikās visited the several ārāmas to find out if any one was sick and needed medicines which they procured to the best of their abilities.<sup>5</sup> The monks on the other hand were warned that with complete self-restraint they should approach householders for food and robe, or for any other purpose. They

<sup>1</sup> Vinaya, i, p. 227-228.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid., ii, p. 64

<sup>5</sup> Vinaya, i, p. 216.

<sup>2</sup> Anguttara, ii, p. 66.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid., ii. p. 59-

were not to associate themselves with the joys and griefs of householders,1 for there were instances of monks having got entangled with women2 by such association. They were also advised not to accept alms from those householders who had at any time attempted to bring about evil plight to the monks, or injure them in any way, or oust them from their residence (āvāsa), or have abused them or tried to cause dissension between one monk and another, or have spoken ill of Buddha, Dhamma and Sangha.3 The monks were further instructed to avoid those householders who would not welcome them with gentle words, or show respects to them, or offer them seats kindly, or conceal their possessions, give little and bad things though they have ample and good things, offer gifts irreverentially, not approach monks for listening to discourses, and dislike instructions.4 At the end of the rainy season the Sangha held a ceremony called Pavāraṇā and Kathina at every avāsa. On these occassions, the upasakas were advised to offer robes and were told that gifts on such occasions carried special merits.

Uposatha of the Upasakas

On the uposatha days, the more devout upasakas were advised to observe eight precepts instead of five. They sometimes spent a few days in a monastery in company of the monks. The eight precepts were,—

- 1 Samyutta, iii, p. 11.
- 2 Anguttara, iii, p. 259; iv, p. 54. 3 Ibid., iv, p. 344.
- 4 Ibid., v, p. 387.
- 5 Anguttara, iv, p. 254:

Pāṇaṃ na haññe na cādinnam ādiye musa na bhāse na ca majjapo siyā

- (i) complete abstention from killing by laying aside all weapons, and developing a kindly and friendly feeling towards all beings;
- (ii) complete abstention from stealing, and remaining pure and satisfied with what is given;
- (iii) total abstention from sexual enjoyments, and living the life of a true brahmacārī;
- (iv) total avoidance of untruth, and remaining always anxious to be truthful;
- (vi) refraining from all kinds of drinks and merrymakings;
- (vi) taking only one meal a day, and refraining from afternoon meals;
- (vii) keeping away from all places of amusement having dance and music, also non-use of scents, unguents and garlands and lastly;
- (viii) sleeping on low beds or grass mats and discarding high beds.

Some of the advanced upasakas were able to attain concentration of mind. This concentration was induced in them by their deep faith in Buddha, Dhamma and Sangha. This faith engendered in their minds deep satisfaction that they had achieved something good. Through this satisfaction, their mind abrahmacariyā virameyya methunā rattim na bhuñjeyya vikālabhojanam mālam na dhāraye na ca gandham ācare mañce chamāyam vasayetha santhate etam hi atthangikam āh' uposatham Buddhena dukkhantagunā pakāsitam.

became serene and concentrated.¹ They practised the jhānas one after another and perfected themselves in all the four jhānas. Cittagahapati² and Uttarā Nandamātā³ became highly proficient in the jhānas. Some of the upāsakas practised the four brahmavihāras and four satipaṭṭhānas.⁴ Sirivaddha and Mānadinna were advised to practise satipaṭṭhānas in order to overcome acute pain due to disease.⁵ Sāmāvatī upāsikā⁶ was the chief of those female lay devotees, who practised mettā. Khujjuttarā upāsikā acquired *paṭisambhidā*¹ and abilities in learning Buddha's words.⁶ Nandamātā upāsikā was so spiritually advanced that her mind was not moved when she saw her husband reborn as an ogre. Her chastity was unimpeachable and there was no occasion for her to confess (paṭidesitā) any transgression of the moral laws. Nandamātā mastered the four jhānas and removed all the five orambhāgiya impurities.

Teaching imparted to lay-devotees

In delivering discourses to the householders, Buddha and his disciples uniformly observed an order (anupublikatham). They first expatiated on the merits of giving gifts (dānakatham), and of observing moral precepts (sīlakatham), and of the reward

- 1 Anguttara, v, p. 330.
- 2 Samyutta, iv, p. 281 f.
- 3 Anguttara, i, p. 26; iv, p. 66.
- 4 See above, p. 214.
- 5 Samyutta, v, p. 176.
- 6 Anguttara, i, p. 26.
- 7 Visuddhimagga, p. 442.
- 8 It is said that she could recite the Itivuttaka heard by her from the teacher.

obtained thereby, viz., a heavenly existence (saggakatham). Then they dilated on the evils of enjoying worldly pleasures (kāmānam ādīnavam) and the merit of retirement from the world (nekkhamme ānisamsam). When they found that the teaching had made a good impression on the mind of a householder, they passed on to the next higher teaching, the exposition of the four truths, dukkha, samudaya, nirodha and magga, and made them realise that whatever has origin must have decay (yam kiñci samudayadhammam sabban tam nirodhadhamman ti).1

There is a rule in the Pātimokkha (Pācittiya no. 4) that to an uninitiated the dhamma is not to be preached syllable by syllable. The upāsakas were advised to avoid reading Suttantas.<sup>2</sup> It is however clear that the householders were as far as possible kept away from the deeper teachings, lest they should be frightened away from taking interest in the religion. But again, we find Nandamātā upāsikā reciting the Pārāyaṇa at dawn³ and Sāriputta explaining to Hāliddikāni gahapati the verses of the Aṭṭhakavagga.<sup>4</sup>

There were however lay-devotees, who took interest in the deepest problems of Buddhist philosophy. Cittagahapati was complimented for being able to understand the subtleties of Buddhist philosophy<sup>5</sup> while Anāthapindika was told that topics not to be explained to a householder were being laid before him for his edification.1

The first discourse was delivered by Buddha to the Brāhmaṇa gahapatis of Magadha. See Vinaya, i, p. 37. Cf. Majjhima, i, p. 379; ii, p. 145.

<sup>2</sup> Samyutta, v, p. 407. 3 Anguttara, iv, p. 63.

<sup>4</sup> Sutta Nipāta, p. 165. 5 Samyutta, iv, pp. 282 f.: Suladdham te gahapati yassa te gambhīre buddhavacane paññācakkhu kamatī ti.

When Anāthapindika was in his deathbed. Sārīputta delivered to him a discourse on Buddhist philosophy so that he might overcome the extreme pain. In the discourse he pointed out that a person must not cling to the six organs of sense, or to the perceptions and feelings derived through the organs of sense, or to the dhātus like earth, water, fire, air, space (ākāsa) and consciousness (viññaṇa), or to the five constituents of a being, or to the four Arūpadhātus, or to this world or the next, or to things seen, heard, thought or known. Buddha explained to Nakulapitā how the unenlightened persons identified soul with one or all of the khandhas and thus suffered from the misconception of the existence of a self. Mahākaccāna explained to Hāliddi-kāni the following stanza of the Atthakavagga:—

"Okam pahäya aniketasäri gäme akubbam muni santhaväni kämehi ritto apurekkharäno katham na viggayha janena kayirä."

[A monk should give up clinging to the five constituents, remain unattached to the characteristics of the perceived objects (aniketasārī). He must not associate himself with the weal and woe of householders, discard love, desire, attachment and despair, not speculate about his future existence (apurekkharāno) and never quarrel with other monks regarding correctness and incorrectness of a dhamma or a rule of discipline.]

In all the discourses delivered to Citta, Nakulapitā and

<sup>1</sup> Majjbima, iii, p. 261: Na kho gahapati gihinam odätavasanānam evarūpi dhammakathā paţibhāti.

<sup>2</sup> Majjhima, iv, p. 258 f. Cf. Samyutta, iv, p. 115 f.

Hāliddikāni, the main topic dealt with was that a person must not take pleasure in the origin of khandhas, which were subject to decay; that an unwise person misconceived one or all of the khandhas as soul, and developed a notion of I-ness. A true disciple of Buddha should not cate for his past khandhas, nor think of his future khandhas and must not have any attachment to his present khandhas. Ugga gahapati and others were taught that those who were engrossed with the sense-objects would not attain Nihbāna. Soṇa gahapati was taught that the khandhas were impermanent and impermanence was grief, and that none of the khandhas or all the khandhas taken together was soul. In the Citta-samyutta, we have practically all the abstruse discussions on Buddhist philosophy. These are as follows:—

- (i) Neither the organs of sense nor their objects are worldly ties—the tie is thirst that arises out of the contact of the two.
- (ii) The distinction that lies between the organ of sense, its object, and the perception caused by the contact of the two.
- (iii) The sixty-two non-Buddhistic doctrines are nothing but the outcome of the misapprehension of one or all of the khandhas as soul.
- (iv) The exact implications of sankbarā in Kāya- Vacī and Citta-sankbārā,
- (v) The method by which a meditator induces and discontinues the meditation in which perception and consciousness become inactive (saññāvedayitanirodha).

Samyutta, iii, pp. 1f. 2 Ibid., iv, p. 109.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid., iii, p. 48. 4 Ibid., iv, pp. 281 f.

and the distinction between death and saññavedayi-tanirodha.

- (vi) The meaning of mental emancipation (ceto-vimutti) through realisation of the absence of desire (akiñcañña), of substancelessness (suññatā), and characteristiclessness (animittatā) of worldly objects.
- (vii) Exposition of the four brahmavihāras viz., love, compassion, joy at other's success, and equanimity.
- (viii) Elucidation of the four meditations: savitakkasavicāra, avitakka-avicāra, etc.

From the above, it will be observed that the advanced house holders tried to comprehend the deepest problems of Buddhist philosophy, and on occasions even entered into discussions with the teachers of other sects<sup>1</sup>. Though still in white robes they were as spiritually advanced as a monk.

Upāsaka's Spiritual Attainments

The goal that was held before the householders was rebirth in one of the heavens! or as Sakka, the king of gods. This conception was already existing in the pre-Buddhist days, and all religions which accepted the theory of karma endorsed it. A householder should be first instructed to make gifts and to observe the precepts, and he is to be convinced that as fruit of this he would be reborn in the heavens (sagga). The Nikāyas are full of instances of good householders, who by leading a virtuous life were reborn as gods, and then there is the whole of t Citta gahapati crossed words with Nigantha Nătaputta. See Samyutta, iv, p. 298 f.

<sup>2</sup> Majjbima, i, p. 505: Householders enjoying worldly pleasures by good conduct goes to sagga.

the Vimānavatthu to illustrate this theory of karma. Aśoka also upheld this view, and did not like to go beyond. But the principles of Buddhism could not support it fully. Immediately after saggakhatham, the householders were to be instructed in looking upon worldly pleasures as evil and retirement as the best course of life (nekkhamme ānisamsam). Hence it is evident that the ideal held by Buddhism even before the householders was not rebirth in one of the heavens but retirement from the worldly life. In the Mahāparinibhānasutta, Buddha is heard to say about the Iruits attained by some of his departed upāsakas. He said that Sudatta (=Anāthapiṇḍika) and ninety others had become Sakadāgāmi, while Sujātā and 500 others Sotāpanna. Kakudha upāsaka reached the Anāgāmi stage, so also did Kālinga, Nikaṭa, Katissabho, Tuṭṭha, Bhadda, Subhadda and several others.<sup>1</sup>

The next lower fruits attained by the upasakas are detailed in the Ianavasabba Sutta<sup>2</sup> where it is stated that those who take the trisarana and observe the silas are reborn as Paranimmitavasavatti, Nimmāṇarati. Tusita, Yama, Tāvatimsa and Cātummahārājika<sup>2</sup> gods, and that the lowest state in which an upāsaka is reborn is that of Gandhabba. The merit of observing the uposatha with eight precepts is immense happiness surpassing even that of the kingship of all the sixteen provinces of India. He is reborn as one of the gods of the heavens mentioned above. A man or a woman who has observed the uposatha and earned the least merit will be reborn as a god.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Digha, ii. pp. 92-93, 200-1. 2 Ibid., ii, p. 212.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Anguttara, iv, pp. 252 f. 4 Ibid., iv, p. 255: Tasmā hi nārī ca naro ca silavā aṭṭhangupetam upavass uposatham puññāni katvāna sukhudrayāni aninditā saggam upenti thānan ti.

It is evident therefore that the fruits earned by an upasaka ranged from the Anagami stage to rebirth as a Gandhabba. An advanced upasaka naturally did not wish to have re-existence however happy it might be. Citta Gahapati when in deathbed was tempted by the gods to wish to have a future existence as a Cakkavatti, but he convinced them that the life of a Cakkavatti was impermanent and hence it was also not a desirable state.<sup>1</sup>

The upasakas and upasikas, though retaining their white dress, aspired for the fruits obtained by the monks and nuns, viz., Sotapatti, Sakadagami and Anagami. Like the monks they had not the opportunity of following a particular way of life, but still they were held out the hope that by fulfilling the duties prescribed for them they could attain three of the four fruits attained by a monk or nun.

The first fruit attained by a monk is Sotāpatti. It could also be attained by an upāsaka or upāsakā by practising saddbā, sīla, suta, cāga and paññā explained above.<sup>2</sup> The condition precedent to the attainment of this fruit is the removal of three hindrances, viz., belief in the existence of a self (sakkāyadīṭṭbf),<sup>3</sup> belief in the efficacy of rituals (sīlabbataparāmāsa) and lack of faith in the Triratna (vicikiechā). There are instances of several upāsakas and upāsikās who attained sotāpatti.

<sup>1</sup> Samyutta, iv. pp. 301-4-

&lt;sup>2</sup> Pp. 222-3; for details, see Samyutta, ii, p. 681 also Samyutta, v p., 411. In addition to the above five-fold practices the lay-devotees were recommended to cultivate the following four habits: association with wise men, listening to religious discourses, proper mental exertion (yoniso manatikara) and observance of all major and minor rules of morality.

<sup>3</sup> That the self is identical with one or all of the khandhas. Sec Samyutta, iv, p. 287.

It is rather interesting to read of an instance of a lay-devotee addicted to drinking attaining the fruit of Sotapatti. The reason shown is that he had so much faith in the Triratna that he could not be reborn in any of the lower planes of existence and was destined to sambodbi.<sup>1</sup>

The second fruit attained by a monk is Sakadāgāmi. The conditions precedent to the attainment of this stage was the reduction of attachment (rāga), hatred (dosa) and delusion (moha) to the minmum (tanutta). A large number of lay-devotees complied with this condition and attained the Sakadāgāmi stage, i.e., they would come once more to this world, and then attain Nibbāna.

The third fruit attained by a monk is Anāgāmi. To attain this stage one must completely remove rāga, dosa and moha. The usual condition laid down for a lay-devotee is that he is to remove the five impurities of the lower category (orambhāgīyas) to attain this fruit. The five impurities are the three samyojanas, mentioned above viz., sakkāyadītthi, sīlabbataparāmāsa and vicikiccbā, the other two being kāmarāga and byāpāda in other words, rāga and dosa. By reaching the Anāgāmi stage, the lay-devotee does not return to the world but is reborn only once in one of the heavens to attain Nibbāna (tatthaparinibbāyī).

The fourth fruit arbatta is not attained by any householder, hence it is beyond the range of achievements of a lay-devotee.

In view of the several statements in the Nikāyas about the afterlife of an upāsaka, it is clear that no upāsaka attained arhathood, i.e., Nibbāna. In the Aggivacchagottasutta<sup>1</sup> it is explicitly stated that no householder without giving up the householder's life can end his suffering at the time of his death. In other words, he can be only at the most an Anāgāmi, i.e., he must be born once more as a god to attain Nibbāna.

There was a controversy between the Theravadins and the Uttarapathakas, and recently between Prof. de la Vallée Poussin and Dr. B. C. Law2 on the point whether a householder could become an athat (Gibi 'ssa arabā ti?).3 The Uttarāpathakas and Dr. B. C. Law relied on certain passages of the Nikāyas, in which a few householders are mentioned as having become arhats. The Uttarāpathakas cited the instances of Yasa Kulaputta, Uttiya gahapati and Setu Māṇava,4 while Dr. B. C. Law drew his support from the Ariguttara Nikāya (iii, p. 451), in which it is said that Sudatta gahapati (= Anāthapindika), Citta gahapati, Uggo gahapati and a few other householders realised the immortal (amataddaso), i.e. Nibbana. The remark in the Majjhima Nikāyaa that a householder could realise the excellent truth is discussed in the Milindapañha (p. 243), in which Milinda raised the question that if a householder or a recluse could attain the truth by following the right course, there was no necessity for a person to become a monk. Again he questioned if countless householders visualised the truth, what was the good of taking recourse to the ascetic practices (dhutangas).6 Nagasena gave an

<sup>1</sup> Majjhima, i. p. 483: Natthi koci gihi gihisamyojanam appahäya käyassa bhedä dukkhass' antakaro 'ti.

<sup>2</sup> Annals of the Bhandarkar Oriental Institute, xiv. p. 72.

<sup>3</sup> Kathavatthu, iv, 1. 4 Ibid.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Majibima, ii, p. 197: gahattho ārādhako hoti ñeyam dhammam kusalam. 6 Milindapañba, p. 350.

evasive answer and dilated on the merits of renunciation and observance of dhutanga precepts, and avoided the issue by stating that those householders who realised the truth had practised the dbutangas in their previous lives.

The passage relied on by Dr. B. C. Law no doubt speaks of the gahapatis having been amataddaso, but in the same Nikāya and elsewhere Buddha declared at Nadika that none of the Upāsakas mentioned there became arhats. Nakulapitā and Jīvaka became a Sotāpanna, Sudatta a Sakadāgāmi, 1 Ugga and Citta became Anāgāmis.2 The Theravādins3 contended that a householder in the enjoyment of worldly pleasures could not normally be expected to become arhats. In the similar strain Nagasena stated that on the very day that a householder attained arhathood, he must either die or take the yellow robe.4 Prof. de la Vallée Poussin also held the opinion that a layman, however faithful or virtuous he might be, could not attain Nibbāna. 5 Buddhaghosa explained the anomaly by saying that Yasa, Uttiya and Setu were mere householders in name, in external dress but not spiritually; they were free from all worldly ties though they had not yet discarded the white dress of a householder.6 The conclusion that should be drawn from the conflicting statements in the Nikāyas

I See above, p. 233.

4 Milindapañha, p. 265. 3 Kathavatthu, iv. 1.

5 The Way to Nirvana, p. 150-151.

<sup>2</sup> Samyutta, iv. p. 301. Cf. Malalasekera, Dictionary, s.v., Citta, Nakulapitā, Jīvaka.

<sup>6</sup> Cf. Papañcasūdani, iii, p. 196: Santati the minister, Uggasena the banker's son, Vitasoka the young boy attained arhathood while in householder's dress, but the householder's dress (gibilingam) cannot uphold the merit of an arbat and so they must either die or retire on the very day arbathood is attained by them.

about the attainments of an upāsaka and the controversies in the Kathāvatthu and the Milindapañha, is that normally a house-holder could not become an arhat, but there were exceptional cases of householders who became so spiritually advanced that they deserved arbathood but the convention was that no house-holder unless he gave up his household life would be recognised as an arhat. Upāsakas like Citta and Hatthaka, and Upāsikās like Khujjuttarā and Nandamātā were more spiritually advanced than many monks and nuns, but still they were sekhas and not asekhās (= arhats). They are said to have destroyed the oram-bhāgīya impurities² but not the five uddhambhāgīyas: viz., rūpa-rāga, arūparāga, māna, uddhacea, and avijjā, and hence, they could not attain arhathood.³

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Visuddhimagga, p. 442: Cittagahapati, Upāligahapati, Dhammika-upāsaka, Khujjuttarā upāsikā acquired patisambhidā of the Sekbabhūmi.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Majjhima, i, pp. 467. 490-1.

<sup>3</sup> In the Anguttara, (iv. p. 456), it is stated that one cannot be an arhat without removing raga, dosa, moha, kodha, upanāha, makkha, palāsa, issā, and macchaniya.

CHAPTER XIII

THE MAURYAS AND BUDDHISM

Mahāpadma Nanda. according to the testimony of the Bud-dhist historians, patronised Buddhism and died as a true Buddhist (see above, p. 24). That he was not well disposed towards the Brāhmins is evidenced by the episode of Cāṇakya, whose claim as the leading Brāhmaṇa of the time in Pupphapura¹ on account of his extraordinary proficiency in the Brāhmaṇical lore was rejected by Mahāpadma Nanda. It is also not improbable that for his Buddhist leanings he lost his throne through the machinations of his Brahmin ministers. His reign was however marked in the Buddhist ecclesiastical history by several controversies and appearance of un-orthodox views within the Sangha. These controversies went on unabated and gave rise to several new sects, a survey of which is given in the previous chapters.

Candragupta

The story of the accession of Candragupta to the Magadhan throne with the help of Brāhmaṇa minister Cāṇakya is too well-known to be repeated here.<sup>2</sup> Dr. Ray Chaudhuri identifies the 1 Vamsattbappakāsini, pp. 182 ff.

2 In the Vamsatthappakāsinī, p. 181, the story of the meeting of Cāṇakya with Candragupta is given as follows:—Cāṇakya went to Puṣpapura for entering into disputation with the learned brāhmaṇas of the place, and by defeating them wanted to become the chief brāhmaṇa (Saṅghabrāhmaṇa). King Nanda, however, was displeased with his uncourth appearance and turned him out of the assembly of brāhmaṇas. Cāṇakya thereupon fled and took shelter at the palace of the Moriyas of the Mahāvaṃsa tradition with the Moriyas of Pippahalivana mentioned in the Mahāparinibhāna-sutta as one of the claimants to the relies of Buddha and holds that Candragupta belonged to the Moriya clan of Pipphalivana, who were Kṣatriyas.¹ Candragupta carried on a long struggle to wrest the throne from the Nandas as also to extend his dominion from the Panjab to as far south as the northern border of Mysore, and from Magadha to Surāṣtra in Western India.²

It is apparent that Candragupta's reign was a reign of conquests and that he had hardly any peaceful respite. Though he was surrounded by Brāhmaṇa ministers, it seems that his faith was not wholly Brāhmaṇic. It is said that he sought the air of a Jațila ascetic to quell certain disorders in his dominion and that towards the end of his life, he preferred to live the life of a Jaina ascetic and retired to a lonely place in the southern border of his empire."

Candragupta, as the tradition goes, abdicated the throne in favour of his son, Simhasena. It was however not Simhasena but Bindusāra who succeeded to his throne. It may be that Candragupta, for his non-brāhmaṇic leanings in the latter part of his life, lost the confidence of Brāhmin ministers, who, in defiance of his wishes, placed another son of his on the throne—a son who son of Pabbatarāja. From there he escaped to the Vindhyā forest, where he collected money and also came across Candragupta, who was then being brought up by a hunter. He found him more suitable for kingship than the son of Pabbatarāja, and so he bought him up by 1000 kahāpaṇas and gave him the requisite training.

- 1 Political History of Ancient India. 3rd ed., p. 181.
- 2 Ibid., pp. 182-4.
- 3 Shah, lainism in North India, p. 131; Mookerji, Candragupta Maurya and his times, p. 23.

was more sympathetic towards Brāhmanism and perhaps promised support to the Brahmin ministers.

In the Mañjuśrīmūlakalpa (p. 612), Candragupta is given the credit of making the kingdom free from enemies. He is described as a righteous and meditative person and a seeker of the truth, but on coming into contact with evil friends, he killed many living beings and ultimately died, putting Bindusāra on the throne surrounded by evil ministers.

The chief evil minister whom the author of the Mañjuśrimūlakalpa had in mind was of course Cāṇakya the arch enemy of the Buddhists. He writes that Cāṇakya perfected himself in the Yamāntaka-siddhi and was the personification of anger. He lived long and acted as the minister not only of Candragupta but also of his son and grandson.<sup>1</sup>

Bindusāra

Bindusāra, influenced and surrounded as he was by the Brāhmaṇa ministers, the chief of whom was Cāṇakya, lent his support to Brāhmanism. In the Samantapāsādikā, as also in the Mahāvaṃsa it is stated that Bindusāra fed 60,000 brāhmaṇas and members of the brāhmanical religious orders. The Buddhist historians have mostly passed over the name of Bindusāra, proving thereby the king's lukewarmness if not antipathy towards Buddhism. Inspite of Bindusāra's back of interest, the progress of the religion did not suffer any serious set-back. The

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Buston II, p. 118: "King Nanda's reign will dure 56 years and his friend will be the Brāhmin Pāṇini. Then there will appear the king Candragupta, and after him his son Bindusāra who will rule for 70 years. The minister of these kings, Cāṇakya, will depart to hell."

<sup>2</sup> Samantapāsādikā, I. p. 44. 3 Mahāvamsa, V. 34-

<sup>4</sup> Tāranātha (German transl., p. 89) states that Bindusāra with the chief centre of Buddhism remained in Magadha, although the new sects, which came into existence a few decades ago, preferred to move away from this ancient centre to find a home for themselves in different parts of India. We may say that during the reign of Bindusāra, the Theravādins shifted their centre to Avantī, the Sarvāstivādins to Mathurā, the Mahīśāsakas to Mysore, and the Mahāsanghīkas to the Andhra country, but all of them had their adherents living in the monasteries of Magadha.

Aśoka

The two outstanding Maurya rulers, Candragupta and Aśoka, put into shade the glories of the other rulers of this dynasty. Candragupta again was surpassed by his grandson Aśoka, who not only extended his dominion but also consolidated his vast empire and brought peace and happiness to his innumerable subjects. He had the rare courage and intelligence to see through the aims and activities of his ministers and never allowed himself to be ruled by them. Untramelled by the agelong traditional beliefs and customs, he freely exercised his power of judgment in order to distinguish the right from the wrong, be it a secular or a religious matter. No reliable history of this great ruler, to our regret, has come down to us but help of Cāṇakya extended his dominion from the eastern to the western ocean.....During the reign of this king a monastery called Kusumā-lankāra was built at Kusumapura. In this monastery lived Ācārya Mātrceta, who spread both Hīnayāna and Mahāyāna. About this time Bindusāra's brother's son king Śricandra erected a temple of Avalokiteś-vara and maintained 2000 monks of the Mahāyāna school. Tāranātha, it seems, had made some confusion of the name of Bindusāra with that of a later king.

many distinguished scholars have reconstructed the history of this great man from the several inscriptions left by him, and the traditions preserved in the Buddhist-Sanskrit and Pāli texts. These traditions have not been so exhaustively studied as the inscriptions and so we have thought it fit to give them here in bare outlines to enable the readers to find out from the mass of legends the common nuclei which might be taken as authentic.

Buddhist-Sanskrit Traditions

Succession: Bindusara married a brahmin girl and had by her two sons Aśoka and Vītaśoka.2 One day he enquired of Pingalavatsa, an Ajīvaka monk, as to which of his sons would ascend the throne after him, and found out from Pingalavatsa's hint that Asoka would succeed him. Pingalavatsa, after making this prophecy, left the place for a border country for safety. About this time, there was a revolt at Takṣaśilā. To quell the revolt Bindusāra deputed Aśoka, who carried out the mission successfully. Meanwhile, Bindusāra's ministers became displeased with the manners of Susīma, the eldest son of Bindusāra, and wanted to place Aśoka on the throne, though it was not the will of the old king. A fight ensued between Aśoka and Susīma, and the latter was ultimately killed and Aśoka seized the throne. Susīma's valiant soldiers, who were left alive, entered the Buddhist Sangha as monks, and in course of time, became arhats.

p. 287; Divyā., p. 369.

<sup>1</sup> There are four Aśokan stories in the Divyāvadāna (pp. 369-434), viz., Pamsupradāna, Kunāla, Vitašoka and Aśoka.

2 Wassiljew's notes in Tāranātha's Geschichte des Buadhismus, Conversion: After accession to the throne, Asoka put the old ministers, excepting Rādhagupta, to death. He made Rādhagupta his chief minister.1 At his advice he appointed a hangman called Candagirika, who by nature was cruel and ferocious. Asoka built for him a house, into which, it was ordained, whoever should enter would be put to death by Candagirika. The house was similar in conception to the hell described in the Buddhist text called Balapandita Sūtra. One day, a bhiksu called Samudra unknowingly entered into the house and was placed on fire, but he could not be burnt to death. On the other hand, he showed some miracles and reiterated the prophecy of the Teacher that one hundred years after his parinirvana, Aśoka would become the monarch with his capital at Pataliputra, and that he would propagate the religion widely by erecting stupus over the relics of the Teacher. On hearing this episode of Samudra, Aśoka became repentant, confessed his sins, and asked for pardon. He ultimately took refuge in the saint, in the Buddha and in his Dharma.2 After developing faith in the Triratna he used to salute the monks everywhere, whether alone or in the midst of many, much to the chagrin of his minister Yasas, who, although a devotee of Buddha, wanted the king to discriminate among the monks by their original castes but Aśoka resented the idea and explained to him how mistaken was his notion.3

Erection of Stūpas: At this time, Bhikṣu Yaśas was the Saṅghatthera at Pāṭaliputra, where was situated the monastery

z. In one of their previous lives, it is said that Rādhagupta approved the gift made by Aśoka when as a child he gave some mud as rice-gruel to Buddha who accepted the gift and foretold that Aśoka would be reborn as a king of Pāṭaliputra and disseminate his religion. See Divyā., p. 402. 2 Divyā., p. 380. 3 Divyā., p. 382.

Kurkuţarama. Aśoka approached him and expressed his desire to erect stūpas over the relics. He had the relics deposited in the stūpas erected by Ajātaśatru and others opened up, dividing them into several portions for constructing stūpas over them at different places. All these stūpas were completed on the same day and hour, and from that day onwards Aśoka came to be known as Dharmāśoka instead of Caṇḍāśoka.

About this time he heard the name of Upagupta, the renowned monk of Mathurā, and probably the Sanghatthera of the place, and became anxious to make his acquaintance. Upagupta also, on coming to know of Aśoka's change of heart and desire to propagate the religion, came down to Pāṭaliputra and was royally received by the king. Aśoka laid bare his heart before him and declared that he was prepared to sacrifice his self, son, house, wife, treasury and kingdom for the sake of the religion and that he wanted his help to propagate the religion further by marking the spots sanctified by the Teacher by his presence on different occasions during his life-time. A detailed geographical account of the peregrinations of Buddha was then given by Upagupta, and Aśoka marked every spot sanctified by Buddha's presence by a stūpa.

The spots sanctified by the demise of Sārīputra, Maudgalyāyana, Mahākāśyapa, Vakkula and Ānanda were also pointed out by Upagupta and marked by Aśoka with stūpas.

<sup>1</sup> Divyā., p. 388:

भाकापुतं रहः दारान् पृथियो कोशमेव च । न किखिदपरित्यकं धर्मराजस शासने ॥ Cf. also, pp. 403, 429.

<sup>2</sup> He was first taken to Lumbinivana, then to the different sites of Kapilāvastu, then the meeting places of Gautama with Bimbisāra. Ārāda, Rudraka, Nandabālā. Then he was shown Bodhimūla, the way to Vārānaši, Rsipatana and Kušinagara. Cf. Watters, II, p. 91.

Quinquennial ceremonies of gifts: Aśoka then instituted the quinquennial assemblies of Buddhist monks<sup>1</sup> for offering gifts to monks of all quarters which included Tamasāvana (in Kashmir), Revataka (in Mahāvana), Sairīṣaka (in Anavataptahrada), and Gandhamādana mountains. After taking bath he used to put on new clothes with wide borders,<sup>2</sup> observe the eight sīlas prescribed for the lay-devotees, and then make his offerings to the monks of all quarters.

In the quinquennial assembly, he came across two Ubhaya-tobhāgavimuktan arbats, and out of deep veneration for them, he started offering robes to the monks in addition to food.

Bathing Bodhi-tree: Besides his offerings to the monks, he worshipped the Bodhi-tree and spent large sums on its worship. His devotion to the Bodhi-tree rose to such a pitch that it even roused the jealousy of his queen Tisyaraksitä, who once contrived to have the Bodhi-tree destroyed. At the instance of Pindola Bharadvāja he instituted the ceremony of bathing the Bodhi-tree, before offering gifts to the monks.

Buddha's Image: While holding the quinquennial ceremony of gifts, he found out that the oldest monk living at the time was Pindola Bharadväja, who was then residing at a place on the north of Sararājya in the Gandhamādana mountains, and that he had seen Buddha many times. He listened to his description of Buddha's figure, which was endowed with all the major and minor signs. He was highly pleased with the account

- ा Dioyā., p. 398: चार्यसंघछ च करियामि सन्कार पधनार्थिकम् ।
- 2 Divyā., p. 398: खालाइतानि नासांसि ननानि दौषदेशादि प्राक्ष्याचात्र-समन्वागतस्यवासस्योष्य etc.
- 3 Divyā., p. 404. For the two classes of Arhats, see Aspects of Mahāyāna Buddhism. p. 276.

but there is no mention of Aśoka's attempt to make an image.

Conversion of Vitasoka: When Asoka had become an ardent devotee of Buddha, erected several stupas, instituted the quinquennial offerings to the Sangha and gave alms daily to countless monks, his brother continued to be an adherent of a non-Buddhist sect, condemning the Sakyaputriya Sramanas as unfit for attaining emancipation on account of their easy going life.1 In order to convince Vītašoka of the excellence of the Buddhist way of life, Asoka put his brother on the throne with all the royal parapharnelia for one week on the condition that he would be put to death after that time. Vītaśoka could not enjoy his royalty due to fear of death and became emaciated. Then Asoka, pointed out to him that how the Buddhist monks, who constantly cogitated on the end of their lives, could enjoy food and other articles of use. Vītašoka realised the value of Asoka's instruction and became a convert to Buddhism. He was ordained by Yasas, the Sanghasthavira of Kurkutārāma. He, however, being a member of the royal family, received too much attention from the people of Pātaliputra, and so seeking solitude he went to a monastery in Videha to complete his spiritual exercises. After attaining arhathood, Vitasoka paid a visit to Aśoka, and delivered to him and Rādhagupta a discourse.

Beheading of Ascetics: Vītašoka went to a border country Pundravardhana where he fell ill, but was cured by the medicine sent by Aśoka. During his illness, his hairs, nails etc. grew, and his look and dress appeared like that of an Ajīvaka ascetic. At this time, certain Nirgrantha (Ajīvaka) devotees of Pundravardhana showed disrespect to a Buddha-image. This enraged Aśoka, who ordered the death of all Ājīvakas, and even fixed the price of one dinara for every head of a Nirgrantha. Vītaśoka was mistaken as a Nirgrantha ascetic and was beheaded. This gave a very rude shock to Aśoka.

ा Divyā., p. 419: नासि शाकापुतीराणां मीच इति। Cf. Watters, II, pp. 93 ff.

Last days of Aśoka: Aśoka began to multiply his gifts to the Saṅgha, and this drained the treasury so much that his gifts had to be forcibly stopped by the Crown-prince Sampadi, son of Kuṇāla. Evidently Aśoka was now in his dotage and could no longer exercise his royal power freely, and had to remain satisfied by giving to the Saṅgha whatever he could lay hold of. Rādhagupta continued to be his minister up to his last days.

Pāli Traditions

The following traditions are preserved in the Ceylonese chronicles in Pali.

Succession: The family priest Janasana ajivaka foretold that Asoka would succeed Bindusara to the throne. This Ajivaka monk was later ordained by Assagutta at Vattaniya hermitage

1 According to the Jaina tradition, Aśoka was followed by Kunāla and Samprati. The latter, as Smith observes, promoted the cause of Jainism as Aśoka did of Buddhism. See K. T. Shah, Jainism in North India, pp. 138, 144-5. The inscriptions on Nāgārjuni Hill too indicate that Daśaratha's leanings were towards the Ajivakas, an offshoot of the Jamas. See Infra., p. 254.

According to Divya., p. 432, the successors of Asoka were Samapadi-Brhaspati-Vṛṣasena-Puṣyadharma-Puṣyamitra, the last of whom announced 100 dināras for every head of a Buddhist monk.

According to the Vāyn Purāṇa, Kuṇāla reigned for eight years. He was followed by his son Bandhupālita. His successors were Indrapālita-Devavarman-Satadhanus-Brhadratha. See Infra. p. 254-and became the preceptor of Aśoka in his early days.<sup>1</sup> Aśoka was at Ujjeni when his father was in the death-bed. He hurried back to the capital and, after killing 99 step-brothers, seized the throne of Magadha. The eldest son of Bindusāra was Sumana. It took him four years to consolidate his powers. He formally crowned himself as the king of Magadha and made his uterine brother Tissa the Crown-prince.

2 Cf. Watters, II, p. 99.

Conversion: He was continuing the family tradition of feeding several brāhmaṇas, but he became dissatisfied with the unseemly manner of the brāhmaṇas. At this time, he met Nigrodha Sāmaṇera, who was a posthumous son of Sumana, the eldest son of Bindusāra. He listened to his discourse on Appamāda (diligence) and was very much impressed by Nigrodha's demeanour and arranged daily food for him and his fellow brethren, in place of the non-Buddhists whom he had been feeding so long.<sup>2</sup>

Erection of Stūpas: Learning from Moggaliputta Tissa, that there were 84,000 dharmas, he decided to build one monastery for each dharma. He made lavish gifts to the Triratna. All these monasteries were completed on the same day and hour. He built caityas on the spots sanctified by Buddha's presence. He ordered that all men observing uposatha

<sup>1</sup> Vamsattbappakäsini, I, p. 192-3: This incident is recorded in the Sibalattbakatbā in the commentary on Cūlasihanādasutta of the Majjbimasangīti. This however is not found in Buddhaghosa's commentary.

<sup>2</sup> This information is derived from Vinayatthakathā and not Mahāvamsatthakathā. See Vamsatthappakāsīnī, l. p. 207-

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Divyā., p. 419: यदा राजायोजन भगवष्णसने यहा प्रतिस्था तेन चतुरमीतिधनराजिकासङ्खं प्रतिष्ठापितं पश्चवार्षिकं च क्रतम् etc. see also p. 429.

<sup>4</sup> Mahavamsa, V. 175 should congregate for worship.<sup>1</sup> From that day onwards, he became known as Dharmāśoka instead of Caṇḍāśoka.<sup>2</sup>

Buddha's image: He had an image of Buddha endowed with all the major and minor signs made by Mahākāla Nāga. Then he instituted the ceremony of the worship of Buddhaimage.

Conversion of Tissa, the Crown-prince: Tissa doubted the efficacy of the Buddhist way of life. In order to convince him of its excellence, Aśoka put him on the throne for seven days on the condition that he would be put to death after that time. Tissa became pale and emaciated and could not enjoy his royalty. The king then pointed out to him how the monks, who constantly thought of death, could enjoy worldly pleasures. Tissa was converted and was ordained by Mahādhammarakkhita the Yonaka. After Tissa, Aggibrahmā, the nephew and son-in-law of Aśoka, as also Aggibrahmā's son, Sumana, took ordination. Then followed the ordination of Mahinda and Saṃghamittā. Moggaliputta Tissa became the upajjhāya of Mahinda, Mahādeva the ācariya, and Majjhantika gave the kammavācā.

Medicines: On hearing that a bhikkhu called Tissa died for want of medicine, Aśoka made arrangements for giving medicines to the monks.

Beheading of unorthodox monks: Asoka ordered that all monks should observe the fortnightly uposatha. On the refusal of the orthodox monks to carry out the order of the king, his minister began to behead them, when the king's brother Tissa intervened by offering his head. When this was brought to the notice of the king, he was shocked and sought advice for exoneration from such a hineous act. This led to the arrival of Moggaliputta Tissa, who had retired to the forest, at Pāṭaliputra.

The two traditions compared

The above two traditions preserved in Sanskrit and Pāli, evidently have a common basis, which may be briefly stated thus:—

- (i) Aśoka's mother had Ājīvaka leanings though Bindusāra followed the brāhmanical religion.
- (ii) Aśoka secured the throne of Magadha after a fatricidal war, in which all of his step-brothers were killed, leaving a posthumous son of his eldest brother, and his uterine brother called Vītaśoka in the Sanskrit, Tissa in the Pāli tradition.
- (iii) Aśoka was converted to Buddhism by Samudra or Nigrodha. The former probably belonged to the entourage of the eldest son of Bindusāra, as it is said in the Sanskrit tradition that the valiant soldiers of Susīma (in Pāli Sumana) became arbats. Nigrodha also is described as the posthumous son of Sumana. Hence the conversion was made by somebody connected with Susīma or Sumana.
- (iv) Aśoka erected several monasteries, and stūpas over the spots sanctified by Buddha's presence.
- (v) In the Sanskrit tradition, emphasis is laid on the worship of Bodhi-tree while in Pāli on the worship of Buddha's image.
- (vi) The story of the conversion of Aśoka's brother Vītaśoka or Tissa is almost identical.
- (vii) In Sanskrit, the story of the quinquennial assembly of monks is given in detail and seems to have a historical basis as it is echoed in the Aśokan inscriptions.<sup>1</sup> The Ceylonese chronicles very probably utilised this tradition of quinquennial assembly for their story of the Third Council and edification of the Theravada sect.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Rock Edict III.

- (viii) The story of the beheading of ascetics including Vītaśoka is echoed in the Ceylonese tradition of the beheading of the unorthodox monks, but the former story appears to be more plausible. In any case, the underlying fact is that Aśoka did commit the blunder of ordering death of some ascetics.
- · (ix) In both the traditions, there is no mention of Aśoka having taken ordination and joined the Sangha. All that we have is that on ceremonial occasions Aśoka observed the eight śīlas like a good upāsaka.
- (x) Aśoka's gifts to the Sangha were endless. In Ceylonese tradition, however, the enormity of gifts is not so much emphasised upon as his consent to the ordination of his son and daughter, who were responsible for propagating Buddhism in Ceylon. It may be that the Sanskrit writers were not interested in this propagation and so passed over the incident as unimportant.
- (xi) The Sanghatthera of Pāṭaliputra is called in the Sanskrit texts as Yaśas while in Pāli, it is Yonaka Dhammarakkhita. Prominence is given to Upagupta of Mathurā in the Sanskrit traditions and Moggaliputta Tissa in Pāli. This is evidently a result of the sectarian bias. Upagupta was a Sarvāstivādin and so he is mentioned in the Sanskrit texts belonging to the Sarvāstivādins. He is ignored in the Theravāda tradition preserved in Pāli, which puts up the name of Moggaliputta Tissa in stead. Both Upagupta and Moggaliputta Tissa might be historical persons, but their position as a religious adviser of Aśoka should be discounted.

<sup>1</sup> See Infra.

(xii) In conclusion, it may be remarked that Aśoka might not have been as tolerant as he posed to be in his Edicts, at least in his early days. It may be that in his old age he realised his mistake of supporting one sect as against another and felt repentant, and in order to atone for his misguided deeds, he began to preach toleration.

Aśoka's successors (232-185 B.C.)

There is yet a great deal of uncertainty about the successors of Aśoka. From the Seventh Pillar Edict it is evident that Aśoka had many queens and sons. This is corroborated by the Buddhist legends about Aśoka as also by Tāranātha, who writes that Aśoka had eleven sons.¹ Names of four sons have come down to us. These are:—

- (i) Tīvara, son of Queen Kāruvākī of the Aśokan inscriptions; he was the viceroy of Takṣaśilā, Ujjayinī, Suvarṇagiri and Tosali.<sup>2</sup>
- (ii) Kuṇāla (also known as Dharmavivardhana and Suyaśas), son of Queen Padmāvatī; he was deputed to Takṣaśilā for suppressing the rising of the Frontier Tribes, and was rendered blind through the machinations of his step-mother Tiṣyarakṣitā.<sup>3</sup>
- (iii) Mahinda, son of the Vidisa lady married by Aśoka when he was the viceroy at Ujjayini; he was the famous apostle to Ceylon;<sup>4</sup> and
  - 1 Schiefner, Geschichte des Buddhismus etc., p. 48.
  - 2 Raychaudhury, op. cit., p. 237.
- 3 Raychaudhury, op. cit., p. 238; Watters I, p. 246; Przyluski, La légende de l'empereur Aśoka, p. 109; Schiefner, op. cit., p. 48.
- 4 See Mañjuśrimūlakalpa, p. 610; Schiefner, op. cit., pp. 40, 48; Bu-ston, II, p. 118; Divyāvadāna, p. 430; Watters, II, p. 100; Raychaudhury, op. cit., p. 238, Przyluski, op. cit., p. 240.

(iv) Jaluka of the Kashmirian tradition.

Of the grandsons of Aśoka, the names of only two have come down to us:—

- (i) Sampadi or Viśoka¹ (restored by Schiefner from Tibetan as Vītāśoka or Vigatāśoka), son of Kuṇāla; he acted as Aśoka's treasurer and stopped the emperor's unending largess to the Buddhist Saṅgha, and later succeeded him; and
- (ii) Daśaratha of the Purāṇic tradition and Aśokan inscriptions; he was a patron of the Ājīvakas.

There is very little information about the succeeding rulers of the Mauryan line,<sup>2</sup> the last of which is said to be Bṛhadratha, whose assasinator is wrongly recorded in the Divyāvadāna (p. 433) as the Maurya king.<sup>3</sup>

The lavish gifts made by the Emperor on the various religious organisations and specially on the Buddhist Sangha met with a natural reaction in the hands of his successors. They disavowed the religion patronised by Aśoka and indicated their antipathy by supporting Jainism, Ajīvakism and Sivaism to the exclusion of Buddhism.

1 Schiefner restores Vigatāśoka from Tibetan 🗗 👼 🔊 🔊 which may be restored as Viśoka as given in the Mañjuśrīmūlakalpa, p. 610.

Nanda (573 ) is described as the grandson of Visoka and son of Sūrasena (not Virasena). See Mmk., p. 613; Watters, II, p. 97; Schiefner, p. 53.

2 According to Tāranātha, Aśoka was succeeded by his grandson Viśoka followed by Viśoka's son Sūrasena—his son Nanda, who was a contemporary of Pāṇini—then Mahāpadma (see Schiefner, p. 52) whose contemporaries were Sthiramati, Bhadra and Vararuci.

There is another tradition (Schiefner, op. cit., p. 287): Sampadi-Bṛhaspati-Vṛṣasena-Puṣyavarman-Puṣyamitra.

3 See Raychaudhury, op. cit., p. 240.

Jalauka

The story of Jalauka, as given in the Rājataraṅgiṇī, reveals that he supported the Nāga and Siva cults of Kashmir and persecuted the Buddhists.¹ In the legend of Kṛtyā he is referred to as one who persecuted the Buddhists and destroyed the vibāras. His heart, however, was softened by the Bodhisattva ideal—the new aspect of Buddhism that had just then emerged. The Hīnayāna Buddhists are painted in black and they are described as bent on taking revenge for his cruel acts. He built the Kṛtyāśrama vihāra and dedicated it not to Buddha but to the sorceress Kṛtyā. He directed his energies and munificence to the erection of Siva temples and, possibly, it was an attempt to resuscitate Sivaism, which had waned in Kashmir owing to the popularity of Buddhism under Aśoka's patronage.

Dasaratha

The anti-Buddhistic spirit of Dasaratha may be inferred from his gifts to the Ājīvakas and the silence of the Buddhist texts about his reign.

Sampadi

The anti-Buddhistic spirit of Samapadi is apparent from his disapproval of Aśoka's gifts to the Buddhist Sangha as also from the Jaina accounts of his activities for the propagation of Jaina faith and the establishment of vihāras for śramaṇas in the non-Aryan countries.<sup>2</sup> Tāranātha's discreet silence over the events of his rule indicate also his unfavourable attitude towards the Buddhists.

- 1 Rājat. I, pp. 136, 140-4; see Ksemendra, Samaya Mātṛkā, v. 61.
- 2 Roychaudhury, op. cit., p. 239; see also I.H.Q., 1930, p. 343.

Pusyamitra

The climax of anti-Buddhistic feelings of Asoka's successors is narrated in the Divyāvadāna and Aśokāvadāna, in which Pusyamitra is described as wishing to surpass his renowned predecessor Asoka by undoing the works done by him.1 He razed the stupas and vihāras to the ground and put the price of 100 dinaras on the head of every Buddhist śramana. Mr. Havell, however, offers a valuable suggestion in explanation of this violent attitude of Pusyamitra towards the Buddhists. He writes that Pusyamitra's animus was not against "Buddhism as a religion but against the Sangha as a political power. If there is any truth in the Buddhist tradition, it is likely that some members of the Sangha were concerned in conspiracies against the Sunga dynasty",2 and it was they who kindled the fire of wrath of the new sovereign. There is much reason in this view of Mr. Havell, for Buddhism as a religion did not suffer a very serious set back during or after Pusyamitra's reign. The Buddhist monuments of the pre-Christian era that have so far been discovered, the composition of the Buddhist works like the Milindapanha, Lalitavistara and Mahāvastu about the 2nd or 1st century B.C., the development of the Abhidhamma literatures of the different schools of thought, and the multiplication of Jātaka and Avadāna stories a little before or after the beginning of the Christian era prove beyond doubt that the strength of the religion, which it had already acquired by sending its roots deep down and wide into the several regions of the land of its birth continued unabated notwithstanding the lack of sympathy of Aśoka's successors. The story of the persecution of Pusyamitra can be taken as suggesting that the religion, which almost monopolised the patronage of Aśoka, was disowned by the state during Pusyamitra's reign, for many reasons, one of which, as apprehended by Mr. Havell, was the probable political moves of the Buddhist monks against the advent of the new line of kings, not in favour of the Buddhists.

<sup>1</sup> Przyluski, op. cit., p. 301-2; Divyā., p. 434; Schiefner, op. cit., p. 81.

<sup>2</sup> Havell, History of Aryan Rule in India, p. 123.

CHAPTER XIV

Aśoka's Dhamma

There is nothing in the Edicts nor in the Buddhist traditions to prove that Aśoka took up the cause of Buddhism as against Brahmanism, though there are ample evidences to show that Asoka had a great, if not the highest, regard for Buddha and his teachings. During the first few years of his reign, he maintained the family tradition of feeding the brahmanas1 which even now is regarded as a meritorious act. This institution came into vogue for supporting a spiritually minded cultured class, who were unmindful about earning their livelihood. In course of time, it became a ritualistic affair, the original object of which was lost sight of. It did not however take Asoka long to find out that the essential object of feeding the brāhmanas was more overlooked than observed. With his discriminating vision he took the right course of replacing the undeserving brāhmanas by deserving monks or ascetics, brāhmanical or non-brāhmanical. He no doubt deviated from the traditional convention, and it behoved a man of his courage and conviction to do so. That Asoka was an out and out radicalist and a rationalist is clearly revealed in his Edicts. He cared neither for the brahmanical rituals and traditions nor for the Jaina or Buddhist forms of ceremonies and observances. He was neither fond of a brāhmanical guru nor of a Buddhist thera nor of a Jaina sadhu. He had his own ideals of religion-an

1 Cf. Mahāvamsa, V, 34: Pitā saṭṭhisahassāni brāhmane brahmapakkhike bhojesi, so pi te yeva tini vassāni bhojayi. R.E. VIII, says "Aśoka gave gifts to brāhmanas and ascetics." ideal which would not bear a sectarian name. In forming the conception of his ideal, he was undoubtedly influenced by the Buddhist and Jaina teachings, but he was not enamoured of the Buddhist or Jaina ideal of retirement from worldly life. He stood against the brāhmanical practice of killing animals for religious purposes, and dissuaded his subjects from performing brāhmanical rituals, which to him were meaningless. From a study of his inscriptions we may outline his religion (Dhamma) thus:—

- (i) Heavenly life hereafter: Asoka repeatedly stressed upon the desirability of a happy life hereafter, and for that he advised his subjects to be virtuous, to make gifts and to earn merits, as these would bring about happiness in this as also in the next world. There is no pessimistic vein in his teachings nor does he speak of the impermanence of worldly objects. Nowhere do we find in the Edicts any reference to the attainment of Nirvāṇa or the Absolute as the summum bonum of life. This shows that Asoka espoused the religion of the laity and not that of the recluses, to whom heavenly existence was as much undesirable as worldly existence.
- (ii) Ethical teaching (elementary): The ethical teachings imparted by Aśoka were the usual day to day rules and customs followed by an average householder. These were,—hearkening to parents, reverence to teachers, liberality

R.E. VI: That they may gain heaven in the next world.
R.E. IX: With this, it is possible to attain heaven (G.D. & J.
Texts); it begets endless merit in the next world (K.S. & M. Texts).

R.E. XIII: That which concerns the next world, the Beloved of the gods esteems as alone bearing great fruit.......That (the conquest through Dhamma) is for here and hereafter (p. 332). See Bhandarkar's Aśoka (3rd ed.), pp. 331-2, 340, 341, 342.

and seemly behaviour towards friends, acquaintances and relatives, and towards Brāhmaṇa and Śramaṇa ascetics, and also towards slaves and servants.¹ This teaching, as pointed out by Profs. Bhandarkar, Barua and others is an echo of the instructions given by Buddha to Sigāla the householder, and may be traced in the Dhammapada, Suttanipāta, Anguttara Nikāya and other works, in passages which were addressed to some householders and had nothing to do with the precepts prescribed for the Buddhist monks and laymen. It will be observed that Aśoka imparted this teaching only in the earlier years of his reign, the Edicts being dated mostly in the 12th year.

(iii) Ethical teaching (higher): Aśoka wanted that some of his subjects should reach a level higher than that of an average householder and it was from these he expected sādhave (much good), apāsinava (freedom from evils) such as strong desire (chamdiya), cruelty, anger, conceit, and envy (P. E. III), dayā (mercy), dāne (liberality), sace (truthfulness), socaye (purity), and mādave (gentleness). (Bhandarkar, p. 104). In this list of duties and virtues there is nothing particularly Buddhistic, and if, as Prof. Bhandarkar suggests, that Aśoka utilised the Lakkhanasutta, it should be observed that he omitted the words śīla and uposatha, occurring in the verse referred to,² indicating that his dhamma was different from that of the lay-Buddhists.

(iv) Ethical teaching (highest): There

1 Bhandarkar, op. cit., p. 124.

2 Digha, III, p. 147: Sacce ca dhamme ca dame ca samyame Soceyya-silālay-uposathesu ca Dāne ahimsāya asāhase rato daļham samādāya samattam acari. were in Aśoka's dhamma some teachings which were meant, it seems, for the recluses living within his domain. He wished them to live a saintly life by practising self-restraint, purity of mind, gratefulness (katamñatā), by cultivating regard for all sects and by keeping themselves engaged in the preaching of dharma. For them self-restraint (samyama) was more important than gifts and worship, and their gifts should be the gifts of religious instructions (dhammadāna).

- (v) Rejection of rites and ceremonies as also of Samājas: Aśoka discouraged rites and ceremonies, specially those performed by women on auspicious occasions, or for averting evils. He condemned Samājas (festive assemblies), which indirectly gave occasion for "drunkenness, revelry and infatuation" (See Barua, Inscriptions, ii, p. 226). It is very likely that Aśoka's dislike of rites and ceremonies was derived from the Buddhist teaching of the avoidance of śīlavrata-parāmarśa (contagion of rules and rituals) and that of Samājas from the admonitions found in the Sīgālovāda-Sutta (Dīgha, iv, p. 163; Cf. Sīvālakasūtra in the Mahākarmavibhanga, p. 56).
- I By bhāvasuddhi Aśoka perhaps had in mind cittasuddhi (mental purification), a discipline which Buddhism and all other religions insist immediately after brahmacarya (physical purity) which is attained by kāyika and vācasika samyama. Bhikkhus attain cittasuddhi by means of meditation whereas the laity have it by love (mettā) and toleration.
- 2 Katamñatā (=Pāli Kataññutā) means gratitude. Bhandarkar explains Kritajñatā, as knowing what is right. See his Aśoka, p. 321.

Cf. Anguttara. i, p. 61: Kataññū=Katavedi.

- 3 Bhandarkar, op. cit., p. 320.
- 4 Cf. Dhammapada: Dhammadanam sabbadanam jinati.

(vi) Aśoka's toleration: There can be no doubt that though Aśoka was favourably inclined towards the Buddhists, he was not therefore unmindful of the interests of the other religionists. In the Edicts, he harped on the virtue of toleration, which even the Buddhists lacked inspite of Buddha's prohibition of attukkamsanā (self-praise) and parapamsanā (other's denunciation). He appointed officers (dhammamahāmātras) to look after the interest of the members of all sects (R.E.V.). Their main duty was the promotion of dharma among the different sects as also to make money-grants to them. He himself paid visits and made gifts to the brahmanical and nonbrāhmanical ascetics (samanas) (R.E. VII). But he wanted that all religious men, irrespective of their creed, should freely dwell at all places (R.E. VII) provided they exercised self-restraint, possessed purity of mind and knew what is right. In R.E. XII, he is more explicit regarding toleration. He says that he honoured members of all sects, ascetics, and even non-ascetics (laydevotees) and he expected that there should be not only absence of sectarian squibbles but also they should meet and try to acquaint themselves with, and if possible appreciate, one another's views. There must be mutual appreciation, and he enjoined his Dharma-mahāmātras to promote it as far as possible. He did not insist that the several sects should agree regarding their ultimate views but they must all be pure in speech, thought and action. (See also P.E. VI). In the seventh Pillar Edict, he specifically mentioned the Ajīvikas, Nirgranthas and the Buddhists (Sangha), for whose welfare he appointed the Dharma-mahāmātras. It is remarkable that he would not distinguish between ascetics and householders, if the latter be religious. In his opinion all religious men, whether ascetics or not, were good and as such should be looked after for their spiritual development, which he believed, consisted mainly in the purity of speech, thought and action, and in avoiding self-praise and other's denunciation, in other words, mutual appreciation of one another.

(vii) A ś o k a's practical measures: Aśoka did not merely express pious wishes for the moral and spiritual uplift of all religious men. He introduced several practical measures to see that his wishes might be effectively carried out. Some of these measures were, (a) Mandatory orders prohibiting slaughter of animals for sacrifice; (b) Appointment of Dharmamahāmātras to look after the moral uplift of the people and to give relief to the people in distress; (c) Directing officers like the Yuktas, Rajjukas and Prādesikas to undertake special tours of inspection every five years for propagating his Dhamma,<sup>2</sup> and (d) An empire wide organisation to see that the people of his empire as well as those living in border countries might be righteous and become godlike.

(viii) A ś o k a 's attitude towards Bud-dhism: Aśoka as the emperor showed toleration to all religions, although he had a personal fancy for Buddhism, and very probably he became a Buddhist upāsaka. In R.E. VIII issued in the 10th year of his reign, Aśoka says that he paid a visit to the Sambodhi, by which he probably meant Gayā, the place where Buddha attained Sambodhi. In the 14th year of his reign he enlarged the stūpa of Kanakamuni, and in the 20th year he worshipped the stūpa of Kanakamuni as also the birthplace of Buddha (Vide Nigliva Inscr. and Minor Pillar Edict). In the Bhabru edict, he expressed his admiration for Buddha's teachings and recommended certain texts for special study of the monks while in the Sarnath and Sanchi inscriptions, he revealed his solicitude for the well-being and concord of the Sangha. In the Allahabad Pillar inscription he directed his officers to avert any schism in the church, Lastly, towards the end of his reign when 256 years had elapsed after the death of Buddha, he admitted that out of the two and a half years that he formally became an Upāsaka, he observed the śālas (i.e., eight śālas) for only one and a half-year,—the period he lived in a monastery with the monks. There is nothing in the inscriptions to show that Aśoka became an ordained monk nor is there any reference in the Buddhist traditions to such a possibility. He remained a lay-devotee, and very likely he resided in a monastery as such for a certain period of time.

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Majjhima, I, p. 409: n'ev' attān' ukkaṃseti na paraṃ vambheti.

<sup>2</sup> See Barua, op. cit., pp. 181, 254.

CHAPTER XV

THIRD BUDDHIST COUNCIL

It is only in the Atthakathās1 and the Ceylonese chronicles that we get an account of the third Buddhist Council held during the reign of Aśoka. The omission of this Council in the Chinese and Tibetan accounts, in other words, in the texts of the non-Theravada sects, signifies that it was a sectarian affair, for which it was ignored by all sects except the Theravādins, to be more precise, Theravāda-Vibhajjavāda sect of Ceylon.2 It is rather remarkable that Hiuen Tsiang or Itsing also has not referred to it though both have mentioned the names of different sects and the spheres of their influence.3 V. A. Smith (Early History of India, 3rd ed., p. 161) dismisses the account of the Ceylonese chronicles as fictitious on account of the fact that it is not mentioned in the Asokan Pillar edicts. Prof. Kern has doubts about the actual session of the Council, and he thinks that if the Council was at all held, it was only a party meeting. Mrs. Rhys Davids regards the traditional

I Samantapāsādikā, I, p. 53 f.; Kathāvatthu-aṭṭhakathā, p. 5-6. In the Cullavagga, there is no reference to this council. It may be argued by some that the Cullavagga was composed before the third council.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Cullavagga, p. 72: Ācariyānam Vibhajjapadānam Tambapannidīpapasādakānam Mahāwihāravāsinam vācanā saddhammaṭṭhitiyā ti.

<sup>3</sup> Dr. R. C. Mazumdar thinks that Hiuen Tsiang's account of the rivalry between the heretics and the Buddhists in connection with the Institution of the Gong-Call Tope may have some connection with this Council. See B. C. Law, Buddhistic Studies, p. 68-69.

account of the Council as something quite different from what actually took place. In her opinion the Pitaka was revised by eight monks and not by a thousand, and the expulsion of monks was carried out after the session of the Council. Dr. Thomas is also inclined to take the account of the Council as an invention of the Ceylonese writers.1 The traditional account of the Council may not be pure history but the circumstances which led to the Council appear to have a historical basis. The breach between the Theravadins and the Mahasanghikas took place in the Second Buddhist Council,2 and it grew wider and wider till it became almost impossible for the two sects to live together in the same Avasa. The controversies recorded in the Kathavatthu have been corroborated by Vasumitra, Bhavya and others,3 hence their authenticity cannot be denied. The main business of the Council was the refutation of the doctrines of the more important non-Theravada schools from the standpoint of the Theravadins. In the Second Buddhist Council the disciplinary rules only were taken exception by the orthodox party, and in this Council interpretation of the doctrines was challenged. From the Nikāya-sangraha we learn that the Mahāsanghikas did not pay heed to the refutations and that they met together at Kosambi to confirm their own views. The refusal of the orthodox monks to hold Uposatha with the unorthodox monks appears to be authentic and was very likely the main cause for the session of the Council. After expelling the unorthodox monks, the Theravadins met together to establish the contentions of the Theravadins, and the result was the compilation of the Kathāvatthu, which might have been slightly smaller in extent than the present text.

<sup>1</sup> E. J. Thomas, History of Buddhist Thought, p. 35.

<sup>2</sup> See above, Ch. V. 3 See above, Chs. VIII-XI.

The Traditional Account

The story of the Council as given in the Chronicles runs as follows: About 200 years after Buddha's death, a large number of non-Buddhists joined the order for the sake of gain. They held unorthodox views in matters of both doctrine and discipline. The orthodox monks refused to perform in their company, the uposatha ceremony, one of the primary conditions of which was that the members present must declare at the outset of the assembly that they were pure, and had not committed any breach of the disciplinary rules, or if they had, confessed the same and taken formal absolution. For full seven years, as the Pali tradition goes, no uposatha could be held at Pātaliputra. Aśoka deputed one of his ministers to persuade the monks at Aśokārāma to hold the uposatha. On the monks' refusal to comply with the king's wishes, the minister had them seated in a row and began to behead them one after another. At this, Asoka's brother Tissa, who was also a monk, residing in the same monastery, intervened by taking a seat in the row. The minister got puzzled, and approached the king for direction. Asoka was stunned at the news, for he never thought that his orders would be carried out in the manner his minister did. He approached the monks to ascertain whether he or his minister or both were guilty for the henious act of his minister. He did not get satisfaction at the different answers given by the monks, and so at their advice he decided to invite the oldest and the most learned of the monks of the time, Moggaliputta Tissa, who was then staying in a forest, to the Aśokārāma in order to get his doubts solved by him. Moggaliputta Tissa arrived in due course of time and convinced him of his innocence on the ground of the absence of his intention to have the monks beheaded. At his advice, Asoka decided to weed out the unorthodox monks from the Sangha. He and Tissa called the monks one by one and asked each of them whether Buddha was a Vibhajjavādin or not? Those who answered in the affirmative were allowed to remain within the Sangha while the rest were compelled to give up their yellow robes. After thus purging the Sangha of unorthodox elements, a Council was held by the orthodox monks, and in that Council the three Piṭakas were recited as was done in the 1st and 2nd Councils. On this occasion Moggaliputta Tissa composed the Kathāvatthu, one of the seven texts of the Abhidhamma Piṭaka, with a view to refute the various doctrinal views held by the non-Therayādins.<sup>1</sup>

In the Nikāya-sangraha, a late Sinhalese work, there is the additional information that the monks who were compelled to leave the Sangha of the Theriya Nikāya (=Theravadins) became members of the non Theravada sects, particularly the Mahāsanghikas. In course of time they became subdivided into nine sub-sects, viz., Hemavata, Rājagiriya, Siddhatthaka (see above, p. 109), Pūrvaśaila, Aparaśaila (see above, p. 74 f.), Vājiriya, Vetullaka, Andhaka and Anya-Mahāsanghika. In the Mahavamsa the first six sects are mentioned as some of the later schools which came into being after the first eighteen. The Saila schools on account of their location in the Andhra country were also known as the Andhakas (see above, p. 49). The Vetullakas or the Vaitulyas (see above, p. 110) and the Anya-Mahāsanghikas referred to in the Kathāvatthu as ekacce Mahāsanghikā (see above, p. 74) were also later offshoots of the Mahāsanghikas with stronger pro-Mahāyānic views.

<sup>1</sup> Mahāvamsa, Ch. V.

By scrutinising the above two traditions, we may draw the following conclusions:—

- (i) The heretics (titthiyas) are none other than those Buddhists who were Ācariyavādins, i.e., the Mahāsaṅghikas and their offshoots.
- (ii) The Ācariyavādins differed from the Theravādins not only in disciplinary rules but also in doctrinal principles.
- (iii) Monks holding different views about the Pātimokkha rules could not reasonably agree to perform the Uposatha in one Āvāsa. According to the Pātimokkha code of every sect all the members present and the labsentees by proxy must declare that they had not, during the preceding fortnight, committed any breach of the rules embodied in the Vinaya Code accepted by them. If this condition be strictly enforced, a Theravādin would be impure according to the Mahāsanghika Code and vice versa. Hence no two sects could hold the Uposatha at the same sitting.
- (iv) Aśoka not conversant with the Vinaya rules wanted to see that the uposathas were held in his Ārāma. He also did not approve of the existence of different sects and probably wanted that they should make up their differences which were in many cases of a minor character.
- (v) The main cause of the Council was the disagreement between the Mahāsaṅghikas and the Theravādins about the Vinaya rules. The members of the Mahāsaṅghika sect were considered impure by the members of the Theravāda sect, and so the latter wanted to expel the former from the Saṅgha.
- (vi) The Mahāsanghikas were already a powerful body with a large following. They probably left Magadha to make their seat in the Andhra country.

- (vii) Aśoka's anxiety for averting schism in the Buddhist church was very probably created by the differences that existed between the Theravadins and the Mahasanghikas.
- (viii) It is unlikely that Aśoka sided with the Theravādins as against the Mahāsanghikas. Hence Aśoka's part in the Council as recorded in the Ceylonese traditions may be dismissed as imaginary.
- (ix) The Kāthāvatthu was definitely the outcome of the deliberations of the Council.
- (x) Moggaliputta Tissa was the Sanghatthera of the Theravāda vibhajjavāda sect¹ at the time while Upagupta was the Sanghatthera of the Sarvāstivādins.²
- (xi) The Theravada-vibhajjavadins<sup>3</sup> only, to the exclusion of the adherents of other sects, met together and reaffirmed their acceptance of the Theravada-Piṭakan collection.

Propagation of the religion

The second part of the Ceylonese tradition about the third council deals with the propagation of Buddhism<sup>4</sup> in different countries. It is said that Moggaliputta Tissa after the termination of the Council despatched nine missionaries to nine different places for the propagation of the religion. The names of the monks and the countries to which they were deputed are given as follows:—

<sup>1</sup> On the basis of the inscription Sapurisasa Mogaliputasa in a relic casket found in the Tope no. 2 of the Sanchi group, Dr. Geiger concludes that the tradition about Moggaliputta Tissa is authentic. See his Translation of the Mahāvamsa, p. xx.

<sup>2</sup> It is rather remarkable that in the Papañcasudani (II, p. 139) Majjhantikatthera is described as the Sanghatthera on the day on which the festivity on the completion of Aśoka's monasteries took place.

<sup>3</sup> See above, p. 199.

- (i) Majjhantika (=Madhyāndina)
- to Kāśmīra-Gandhāra (=Mod. Peshwar and Rawalpindi Districts).<sup>1</sup>

(ii) Mahādeva to Mahisamaṇḍala (=Māhismati, a district south of the Vindhyas).

(iii) Rakkhita

- to Vanavāsī (=North Canara).
- (iv) Dhammarakkhita (a Yonaka)
- to Aparanta (Western Countries like Alor, Broach, and Sopara).
- (v) Mahādhammarakkhita
- to Mahāraṭṭha (=Mod. Mahārāṣṭra).
- (vi) Mahārakkhita
- to Yona countries (=the foreign settlements of the N.-W. Frontier Province).

(vii) Majjhima

- to Himavanta.
- (viii) Sona with Uttara
- to Suvannabhūmi.2

(ix) Mahinda

to Tambapanni (=Ceylon).

In the Mahākarmavibhanga (p. 61-62) there is a similar tradition about the conversion of different countries. It is as follows:—

(i) Mahākātyāyana

Avanti (with capital Ujjayini) and other Western countries.

(ii Madhyāndina

Kāśmīra.

(iii) Gavāmpati

Suvarnabhūmi.2

- 1 For identification, see B. C. Law, Geographical Essays, p. 69.
- 2 The identification of Sūvarṇabhūmi (mentioned in the two traditions) with Burma cannot be accepted. We must identify it with a country within India. The association of the name of Gavāmpati with Suvarṇabhūmi indicates that the place is not far from Magadha. In the Milindapañba, p. 359, Suvarṇabhūmi is mentioned after Kolapaṭṭana as a seaport.

(iv) Pindola Bharadvāja Pūrva Videha.

(v) Mahendra Simhala.

(vi) Pūrņa Maitrāyaṇiputra Surpāraka (=Mod. Sopara).

The author of the Mahākarmavibhanga has evidently mixed up the earlier tradition with the later. To the earlier tradition belong Mahākātyāyana (Avantī), Gavāmpati (Suvarṇabhūmi) and Pūrṇa Maitrāyaṇīputra (Surpāraka) while to the later belong Madhyāndina (Kāśmīra) and Mahendra (Siṃhala). Though the date of composition of the Mahākarmavibhanga is a matter of uncertainty, the tradition preserved by it is authentic.

The question is how far the Ceylonese tradition about the despatch of missionaries to different countries can be relied on. The find of the relic-urn, on the inner and outer lid of which appear the following two inscriptions respectively: Sapurisa [sa] Majhimasa and Sapurisa [sa] Kāsapagotasa Hemavatācariyasa is a definite proof of the fact that Majjhima with Kassapagotta Thera propagated the religion in the Himalayan countries. In view of the fact that Mahāvihāra became the repository of the Pāli Piṭaka and a centure of the Theravāda sect, we may accept the traditional accounts about the missionary activities of Mahinda in Ceylon as fairly authentic. That the members of the Theravada sect or the Theriya Nikaya as they are called in the Nikāya Sangraha (see above, p. 268) were imbued with a missionary spirit is amply corroborated by one of the Nāgārjunikonda inscriptions (3rd or 4th century A.D.); It runs as follows: -

"Sidham. Namo Bhagavato.....Ramño M[āṭha]riputasa..... ācarīyānam Kaṣmira - Gaṃdhāra - Cīna - Cilāta - Tosali - Ava raṃta - Vaṃga - Vanavāsi - Yava [na]. Da [mila - Pa] lura -Taṃbapaṃṇi - dīpa - paṣādakānaṃ theriyānam Taṃbapa (ṃ) ņakānam suparigahe Siripavate Vijayapuriya - puva - disā -bhāge vihāre Cula - Dhammagirīyam cetiyagharam sapaṭa - samtharam sacetīyam sava - niyutam kāritam uvāsikāya Bodhisiriya"......

Translation: "Success. Adoration to the Lord Buddha. In the 14th year of King Mathariputa.....For the benefit of the masters and of the fraternities (of monks), of Tambapamna (Ceylon) who have converted Kashmir, Gandhāra, Cīna, Cilāta (=Skt. Kirāta), Tosali, Avaramta (=Skt. Aparānta), Vanga, Vanavāsī, Yavana (?), Damila (?), Palura (?) and the Isle of Tambapamni (Ceylon). At Siripavata (=Sriparvata) on the east side of Vijayapuri at the Convent on the Lesser Dharmagiri a Caitya hall with a flooring of slabs, with a Caitya and provided with all the necessaries, was caused to be made by the female lay-member Bodhisiri (= Skt. Bodhiśri) ......." (Dr. Hirananda Sastri in Epigraphia Indica, XX, pp. 22, 23). This inscription not only corroborates the Ceylonese tradition that the members of the Theriya Nikāya or the Theravada sect, who later settled in Ceylon, propagated Buddhism in many countries but also proves that their missionary activity went on unabated and they were able to introduce Buddhism into a few other places like Cīna(?). Tosali (in Kalinga), Vanga (Bengal), Palura (Dantapura?) and the Tamil countries. In the other inscriptions discovered at Nāgārjunikonda the names of a few other Buddhist sects are mentioned but they are not given the credit of taking up actively the task of propagation of the religion. In view of the above quoted inscription of Nagarjunikonda and the inscriptions on the lid of the relic-urns, we think the Ceylonese tradition about the despatch of missionaries has a historical basis.

Apart from the propagation made by the Theriya Nikāya we know that several sects which came into being after the Second Buddhist Council migrated to different countries from Magadha and each sect selected a centre for itself. The Mahā-saṅghikas and their offshoots, for instance, migrated southwards and came to be known as the Andhakas, which fact indicates that they propagated Buddhism in the Andhra countries. The Mahā-śāsakas and the Theravādins moved together for some time till the former settled in Mahiṣamaṇḍala and Vaṇavāsi, and the latter in Avantī, and ultimately in Ceylon. The Sammitīyas or the Vātsīputrīyas bore the local name of the Avantakas, and so it seems that this sect selected the northern part of Avantī and Vatsa country as their fields of activities. The Sarvāstivādins proceeded northwards to Mathurā and thence to Gandhāra. Those of the Sarvāstivādins, who proceeded further north to Kāśmīra, were probably the Haimavatas or the Mūlasarvāstivādins, who had the other local name, the Uttarāpathakas.

Thus we see that by the time of Aśoka, Buddhism had spread eastwards and southwards up to the Andhra countries, North Canara and Mähismati, westwards up to Broach and Sopara, and northwards to the N.-W. Frontier Provinces and Kāśmīra. It was on account of the peaceful state brought about by Aśoka's rule that it was possible for Buddhism to reach all the parts of India and to become a dominant force in the history of religions in India.

CHAPTER XVI

POPULAR BUDDHISM

Aśoka as a ruler gave preference to the popular religious ideal, producing good citizens, and not to the spiritual, making the people unsocial. It cannot be ascertained how far Aśoka had a hand in the matter of making Buddhism popular but the history of the religion shows that after the days of Asoka, it developed new aspects which became so very popular that the reoriented religion spread all over India, marking every notable spot with magnificent structures of rare artistic value, and ultimately reaching countries beyond the borders of India. Early Buddhism of the pre-Asokan days, though propagated in different provincial dialects, was not appreciated by the commonfolk.1 The insistence on retirement from wordly life was a great handicap in the way of its popularity; so during the first century of its existence, it remained confined to the recluses and monasteries, and hardly reached the home and the hearth. It was perhaps about a century after Buddha's death that the religion became dynamic, assimilating some of the ideas and thoughts current around and stepped down from its high pedestal of exclusiveness and abstruse ideals to appeal to the more intellectual and faithful among the common-folk. This move towards popularity too did not proceed far as we find that it just allowed a little scope for rituals of a sober character, a little of faith and t Cf. Grünwedel, Buddbist Art in India, p. 67: "Originally, Buddhism was only a philosophy, no religion; But therein consisted the weakness of the Buddha doctrines, which speedily became unpopular on that account."

worship, and a slight relaxation from the stringency of disciplinary rules. There are, in fact, two stages in the course of its attainment of popularity, one of the pre-Asokan days and other of the post-Asokan.

1. Pre-Asokan Period

The pre-Asokan form of the religion provided no scope for emotion, nor for devotion or worship, not to speak of rituals. Its dry-as dust ethical principles and doctrinal teachings based on so-called reason hardly attracted the attention of the common-folk. Among the householders it was only the cultured few like Anāthapindika and Visākhā, Jīvaka and Āmra-pālī, Citta and Nakulapitā who took interest in the religion and worked for its success. Among the recluses and intellectuals also there were not very many who could dive deep into the truths of the religion, and it was probably this lack of appreciation of his teachings that made Buddha hesitate to preach the religion to one and all.

Ecclesiastical Rituals

In course of time, however, there was some accretion of rituals in the form of (i) trisarana, (ii) lower and higher ordinations, (iii) observance of uposatha, (iv) vassāvāsa, pavāranā, and kathina. These rituals attracted some converts of a mediocre type and appreciably helped the enlargement of the body hitherto known as Sākyaputtiya Samanas. Around this body grew up a number of house-holders, who impressed by the saintly character of some of the monks as also by the simple ethical teachings of the religion, and the rituals of Trisarana, and other ecclesiastical functions like Pavāranā requiring the services of laymen, avowed themselves as upāsakas and upāsikās.<sup>1</sup> It is rather remarkable that the religion did not yield to the wishes of the mass any further, by providing objects of worship or by allowing the laymen to take any part in the ecclesiastical functions.

- (i) Trisarana. There was no form of prayer except an expression of faith in the Triratna. The three articles of faith, compulsory for every monk and nun or layman and lay-woman was the thrice utterance of the formula,—
  - (i) Buddham saranam gacchāmi
  - (ii) Dhammam saranam gacchāmi
  - and (iii) Samgham saranam gacchami.

There has been a good deal of discussion among the Buddhist scholiasts about the meaning of sarana and Buddha, Dharma and Sangha. The best and the earliest interpretation is found in a few couplets preserved in the canonical texts.<sup>2</sup> These are.—

> बह्दः शरणं यान्ति पर्वतांश्व बनानि च । श्वारामंश्वेत्यदृत्तांश्व मनुष्या भयतर्जिताः ॥ न होतच्छरणं श्रेष्ठं नैतच्छरणमुत्तमम् । नैतच्छरणमागम्य सर्वदुःखात् प्रमुच्यते ॥ यस्तु बुद्धं च धर्मं संघं च शरणं गतः । श्वार्यसत्यानि चत्वारि पश्यति प्रश्चया सदा ॥ दुःखं दुःखसमुत्यादं दुःखस्य समितिकमम् । श्वार्यं चाष्टाश्विकं मार्गं चेमं निर्वाणगामिनम् ॥ एतद्धि शरणं श्रेष्ठं एतच्छरणमुत्तमम् । एतच्छरणमागम्य सर्वदुःखात् प्रमुच्यते ॥

r See Vol. I, chap. xii.

<sup>2</sup> Dhammapada, pp. 188-192; Udānavarga, xxvii, 28-30; Divyāvadāna, p. 164; Abhidharmakośa, iv, 80, etc. See L. de la Vallée Poussin, Doctrine des Réfuges, in Mélanges chinois et bouddhiques, i, (1931-32), p. 75.

In these couplets, saranam means 'seeking protection' from evils. In the formulae of Triratna, the protection that one seeks is not from the worldly evils but from the suffering to which a human being is destined.\(^1\) Such protection can be secured by developing faith in Buddha, Dharma and Sangha, and by realising the four truths and the eightfold path, and not by leading solitary meditative life in the hills or forests nor by visiting temples and shrines (caityas).

The faith in the Triratna is usually expressed in these terms:

(i) Iti pi so Bhagavā araham sammāsambuddho vijjācaraņasampanno sugato lokavidu anuttaro purisadammasārathi satthā devamanussānam.

(Bhagava, the enlightened, is endowed with knowledge and good conduct, he is the knower of the world, the guide in disciplining men, the incomparable, the teacher of men and gods).

 (ii) Svakkhāto Bhagavatā dhammo sanditthiko akāliko ehipassiko opanayiko paccattam veditabbo viññūhi.

(The Dhamma preached by Bhagavā produces fruit in his life, invites everybody; has no limitation of time, leads one to the goal and is realisable only by the wise within one's ownself).

(iii) Supațipanno Bhagavato sāvakasangho yad idam cattări purisayugăni atthapurisapuggală, esa Bhagavato săvakasangho āhuneyyo pāhuneyyo dakkhineyyo anjalikaraniyo anuttaram punnkkhettam lokassa.

<sup>1</sup> Sumangala Vilāsini, I, p. 230.

(The Sangha consists of monks, who are in one of the four stages of sanctification, are righteous, exerting for knowledge, observing good conduct, who are worthy of gifts, praise and respects, and who are fit recipients of gifts from laymen).

The Buddhist scholiasts who were imbued with the principles of early Buddhism, were at a loss to justify the avowal of these three articles of faith. Some of them, who looked upon Buddha's mortal body as impure, said that 'Buddha' in the formulae implied a collection of dharmas and not Buddha the individual; Dharma implied the last two truths only viz., duhkhanirodha and the astāngikamārga, which are pure, and not the other two which are impure dharmas. Sangha in the formulae implied ŝilas or the mortal duties which make a person an arhat, and not merely a member of the order. It is doubtful how far this interpretation of the scholiasts appealed to the common-folk. We know that the utterance of the Trisarana formulae was made compulsory for both monks and laity, and that this utterance alone transformed a non-Buddhist to a

1 See L. de la Vallée Poussin, Mélanges chinois et bouddhiques. (1931-32). In the Iñānaprasthāna sūtra, we find the following exposition:—

(i) The real dharmas, which have for name or appellation or designation the expression 'Buddha'—those who take refuge in the Aisakṣadharmas, which make the Buddha, are said to take refuge in Buddha.

(ii) The real dharmas, which have for their name, appellation or designation the word 'Dharma'—those who take refuge in the removal of thirst, i.e., destruction, detachment, Nirvāṇa, are said to have taken refuge in Dharma.

(iii) The real dharmas, which have for their name, appellation or designation the word 'Samgha'—those who take refuge in both the Saihsa and Aiaiksa-dharmas, are said to have taken refuge in the Samgha. Buddhist.<sup>1</sup> Hence, we may safely state that these three articles of faith served as a means of popularising the religion, and these were also looked upon as spells (paritta) for protection from evils. or evil destiny.

The utterance of the Trisarana is usually followed nowadays by taking the vow of observing the first five ŝilas and then by chanting the Mangala Sutta. In the canonical texts, however, there is no indication of this procedure.

- (ii) Uposatha. It is admitted in the Vinaya® that the idea of holding fortnightly meeting was suggested to Buddha by Bimbisāra whose object was that the monks should deliver religious discourses to the people at large on certain days of the month. These assemblies however soon turned into ritualistic institutions, requiring monks to be present at the meetings and confess their sins, if any committed during the preceding fortnight, after the formal recital of the Pātimokkha rule.® This ceremony undoubtedly gave satisfaction to a class of monks who viewed the observance of Pātimokkha rules as more important than the inner spiritual development and attracted some men of the mediocre type.
- (iii) Pabbajjā and Upasampadā. The ceremony of ordination was originally a very simple affair. It was done by Buddha by the mere utterance of ehi bhikkhu. Gradually it turned into a fairly long ceremony with two ordinations, one lower (pabbajjā) and the other higher (upasampadā).* This ceremony, which required shaving of head, donning of yellow robes and living in a monastery, attracted some men who could not fully comprehend the philosophical teachings. In the Sāmaññaphala Sutta there are also some hints about the gains and honour received by an ordained person, e.g. it is said that the immediate gain of a person, whatever his status might be before his ordination, is that he is respected by kings and nobles, and obtains robes, food, bed, medicine and other requisites.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See ante., ch. XII. 2 Vinaya, i, p. 617.

<sup>3</sup> For details, see Vol. I, pp. 289-f. 4 Ibid., pp. 280-281.

(iv) Vassāvāsa, Pavāranā and Kathina.2 The other ceremonial functions which gradually crept into the religion were the formal observance of the rainy season retreat. The monks were required to stay during the three months of the rainy season at a fixed abode. At the close of the retreat, the monks performed the Pavāranā ceremony, which is similar to the Uposatha, but on account of the occasion on which it is performed, special importance was attached to it. and householders were told that gifts made on this particular occasion were more meritorious than at other times. With this Pavāraņā ceremony was associated another ceremony called Kathina in which the making of robes formed the chief object. These two ceremonies Pavāranā and Kathina served to popularise the religion not only among those who wanted to join the order but also among the householders, who patiently waited for these days for making their gifts, particularly robes, and thereby assured their happiness in this existence and rebirth in the heavens.

The ceremonies mentioned above were no doubt useful for the spiritual development of a person, but strictly speaking, were not in consonance with the principles laid down for the attainment of spiritual perfection. It has got to be admitted that these ceremonies were introduced in imitation of, or competition with, other contemporary religious systems in order to secure more converts, and it is not improbable that by these ceremonies, the religion attracted more men than it would otherwise have done.

<sup>1</sup> Digha, i. p. 61-62. 2 For details, see Vol. I, p. 292-3.

Worship of Cetiya and Stupa

Neither in the Vinaya nor in the Sutta-pitaka, except the Mahāparinibbānasutta there is any direction for making and worshipping Cetiyas and Stūpas. In the Vinaya there is mention of two Cetiyas¹ where Buddha stopped, while in the Pāṭikasuttanta² as also in the Mahāparinibbānasutta,² there are references to the Cetiyas situated around Vesāli, viz., Gotamakacetiya on the south, Sattamba-cetiya on the west, Bahuputtacetiya on the north. The other Cetiyas mentioned in the Mahāparinibbānasutta are Udena, Sarandada, Cāpāla,⁴ Ānanda,⁵ (in Bhoganagara), and Makuṭabandhana® of the Mallas.

From the list of cetiyas given above, it is apparent that long before Buddhism made its appearance, there was the prevalence of worship of cetiyas, which might be a tree, a stone and a spot believed to be sanctified or haunted by a good or evil spirit. The existence of Cetiyas is taken as an admitted fact by Buddha himself.

Apart from the Cetiyas, there was also the ancient custom

2 Digha, iii, p. 9-10.

3 Ibid., ii, pp. 102-3, 118.

4 Ibid.

5 Ibid., pp. 123, 126.

6 Ibid., p. 160-1.

<sup>1</sup> Vinaya, i, p. 35: Suparittha cetiya near Rājagaha; ii, p. 172: Aggālavacetiya at Ālavi.

<sup>7</sup> See the găthās cited above p. 277-8. Also Gisbert Combaz, L'evolution du stūpa en Asie in Mélanges chinois et bouddhiques, ii (1932-33), pp. 168 ff.

of erecting mounds (stupas) on the relics of saintly persons or distinguished kings, princes and nobles as also over the sites sanctified by a saint's presence. It was this ancient custom which we find re-iterated in the Mahāparinibbāna-sutta. Buddha is made to say that stupas should be erected on the relics of (i) a Tathagata, (ii) a Paccekabuddha, (iii) a Tathagatasāvaka and (iv) a monarch (cakkavattī) evidently with a view to make the Buddhists refrain from erecting and worshipping any mound sanctified by a spirit or a non-Buddhist saint. The most suitable site recommended for the erection of stūpa, is the crossing of four highways. Worship of such four kinds of stupas by garlands, scents, or coloured powders was regarded as meritorious, as it gave an expression to one's deep faith in the religion. Along with these directions, there is the description of the manner in which the earthly remains of a Tathagata should be cremated. The erection of stūpas over Buddha's relics has created history, and even today the sight of the relics deposited in some of the monasteries is a matter of awe and inspiration to the devotees.

The whole account of the erection and worship of stūpas, particularly over Buddha's relics and the merit accruing therefrom was undoubtedly incorporated into the Mabāparinibbānasutta after Buddha's demise and had nothing to do with the great Teacher, who evidently could not have thought of what would become of his relics and who would be their claimants. This idea of erection and worship of stūpas was undoubtedly a post-Buddha development. The interpolator, who put in the directions for worshipping cetiyas and held out the hope that by such worship one would be reborn in the heavens, realised the inconsistency with the principles of the religion, and immediately corrected himself by adding the remark that the advanced monks were not to occupy themselves with such worship of stūpas, and that they must exert to attain the goal while the worship of stūpas should be left to the laity alone, the wise brāhmaṇas, khattiyas and gahapatis. The traditions about Aśoka's zeal to collect the relics and erect stūpas over them also prove that the stūpa-worship became widely prevalent. It is very likely that by Aśoka's time, the stūpa-worship became a regular feature of the religion.<sup>2</sup>

Four Places of Pilgrimage

Like the worship of cetiyas and stūpas, it must be sometime after Buddha's parinirvāṇa that the idea of pilgrimage came into the minds of some Buddhist monks, at whose instance, some imaginary discourses attributed to Buddha were incorporated into the Mahāparinibbāṇa Sutta. A religious teacher like Buddha, who was all along averse to any form of worship and taught attadīpo attasaraņo anañnasaraņo dhammadīpo dhammasarano anañnasaraņo do on anything else; depend on the dhamma as the light, as the refuge and not on anything else; depend on the dhamma as the light, as the refuge and not on anything else) could not have admonished his disciples to earn merit by visiting the four places sanctified by his (i) birth, (ii) attainment of bodhi, (iii) promulgation of dhammacakka and (iv) parinirvāṇa. The inconsistency is at once quoted in the Bodhicaryavatara, p. 483.

<sup>1</sup> Digba, ii, p. 141.

<sup>2</sup> See the account in the Divyavadana, pp. 389ff.

<sup>3</sup> Digha, ii. p. 138: Na kho Ānanda ettavatā Tathāgato sakkato vā hoti garukato vā mānito vā pūjito vā apacito vā etc.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Mabāvastu, X, p. 334. Also compare धाला हि पालानी नावा की न नावा परी भनेत्। पालाना हि सुदानीन सन्दे पात्रीति पश्चितः ॥ apparent in the fact that one of the places recommended for visit is the site of his demise. Hence, there can be no doubt that the idea of pilgrimage was not that of Buddha but was of his disciples and of a time when Buddha had passed away. The idea, however, caught the imagination of the people, particularly, of the lay-disciples. The most remarkable an instance is that of Aśoka who paid a visit to the birth-place of Buddha, evidently with the hope of earning some merit. Throughout the history of Buddhism since the days of Aśoka, the idea of pilgrimage appealed strongly to the Buddhists, both monks and laymen, and even today the Buddhist devotees from far off countries like Burma and Ceylon. China and Japan regard this pilgrimage as an act of great merit.

Nirvana through Faith

In the earliest form of monastic Buddhism the only means recommended for the attainment of emancipation was perfection in the satipatthāna practices was recognised as another means for reaching the goal, but nowhere saddhā and practice of brahmavihāna were recognised as such. It is therefore striking that we should find in the Majjhima Nikāya a discourse in which saddhā is made the basic, and perfection in the brahmavihāna sas the ultimate, factors for the attainment of Nirvāna. This new path, which attached less importance to the observance of the Pātimokkha rules, was definitely a step towards making the religion popular among a certain section of the people, who were not able to lead the life of a bhikkhu.

- 1 See Vol. I, pp. 199 f.
- 2 Majjbima, i, p. 55: Ekäyano ayam bhikkhave maggo sattănam visuddhiyā yad idam cattāro satīpaṭṭhanā.
  - 3 Vatthupamasutta, Majjhima, i, p. 36f.

Saddhā (faith), as expressed in the formulae Trisaraṇa, is mentioned as an essential element for spiritual progress, but that saddhā was looked upon only as an antidote to inclination to non-Buddhist religious faith. It was an antidote to vici-kicchā or doubt about the greatness of Buddha, excellence of his teaching and uprightness of his disciples. In the Vathhapamasutta, the process of attainment of Nibbāna through saddhā is detailed thus:—

- (i) An adept should first get rid of the mental impurities, such as abhijihā (undue desire for gain), macchanya (miserliness), makkha (hypocrisy), māyā (decitfulness) sātheyya (double-dealing), thambho-sārambho (pride and haughtiness), māno-atimāno (conceit and over-conceit), mada (pride or excitement caused by attachment to one's own acquisitions), and pamāda (carelessness).
- (ii) After the removal of the above-mentioned impurities, the adept is required to develop unflinching faith (saddhā) in the Tritatna.
- (iii) The more the mental impurities are removed the stronger becomes his faith (saddbā) in Buddha, Dhamma and Sangha. Such faith produces in his mind the satisfaction that he has achieved something good. Such satisfaction in turn produces joy and deep pleasure (pītt) which makes the body calm and the mind serene, and ultimately leads to mental concentration.

Faith in Buddhism' in Buddbistic Studies, p. 329.

Cf. Saddhāya tarati ogham appamādena anņavam viriyena dukkham acceti paññāya parisujihati, Suttanipāta, v. 184.

<sup>2</sup> See above, p. 278.

<sup>3</sup> Majjhima, i, p. 36 f.

- (iv) After developing perfect concentration of mind, the adept is required to practise the four brahmavihāras, in other words, he must practise mettā (love), karuņā (compassion), muditā (feeling of joy at others' success) and upekkhā (equanimity) towards all beings of all corners of the world.<sup>1</sup>
- (v) After attaining perfection in the four brahmavibāras, the adept realises the four truths, removes the three impurities (āsavas) viz., kāma (desire), bhava (desire for rebirth) and avijjā (ignorance of the truth). He then feels convinced that he has completed his task, and will have no more rebirth, i.e., he attains Nirvāna. Thus we see that by saddhā and brahmavibāra one could achieve Nibbāna and this path could be taken by the householders as there was no question of renunciation or observance of Pātimokkha rules. This new process was really a move to make the religion popular among the householders and a product of a time in between Buddha and Aśoka.

It may be argued that saddhā is not devotion (bhakti)<sup>2</sup> and hence it has no fitting place in the popular form of the religion. There is some force in this argument, but what is needed to be pointed out is that saddhā eliminates the long process of observance of ŝīlas, i.e., the pātimokkha rules, and the process dealt with above eliminates many of the arduous tasks imposed upon a monk to attain perfection in the four jhānas, and to comprehend the anattā and anicca theories. It brings a new element, the brabmavihāras, which so far had no place in early Buddhism. In short, it is a new and shorter process suited to a person who is not necessarily a monk or nun, and that it was meant so is clear from the remarks in the above mentioned sutta that a person taking recourse to this new process may take luxurious food as that of a householder and that it would not stand in his way of attaining the goal. This is significant of the fact that the process was intended more for the laity than for the recluses, and actually we find this particular course recommended to the householder, Mahānāma,1 who was addressed by Buddha in these words: "O Mahānāma, when you bear in mind that you have unflinching faith in the Triratna, when you realise that you have observed the precepts fully, when you are convinced that you are great in charity and when you feel assured that you possess saddhā, sīla, suta, cāga and pañña as that of the gods, you would surely be reborn as a god. Again, when your mind becomes free from attachment (raga), hatred (dosa) and delusion (moha) and you will feel that you have achieved something good, you will have joy and serene pleasure, which in turn will make your body calm and at ease and your mind will get concentrated." In another discourse<sup>a</sup> the same Mahānāma was told that an upāsaka by firm faith could become quick-witted (bāsapaññā javanapaññā) and attain emancipation by the realisation of akiñcañña (desirelessness whether for heavenly life or Nibbana), suññata (essencelessness of worldly objects) and animittatā (characteristiclessness of worldly objects). In the Majjhima Nikāya,3 however, it is pointed out that some monks by saddbā attain the Anāgāmi stage only, because they regard Bhagava as omniscient and that his teaching excellent and they exert strenuously so that their bodies become dried up into skin, bones and sinews. It seems, therefore, that saddba gradually rose in the estimation of the

<sup>1</sup> See infra and Vol. I, p. 228 f.

<sup>2</sup> Contrast Har Dayal's remarks in his Bodbisattva Doctrine, p. 32.

<sup>1</sup> Anguttara, v. pp. 320-332.

<sup>2</sup> Samyutta, v, pp. 376 f.

<sup>3</sup> Majjhima, i, p. 480-481.

Buddhist monks and came to be recognised as a means to the goal. The importance of saddbā in the life of laymen has already been dealt with; it assured them rebirth in one of the heavens, and it was only a step further that saddbā combined with the perfection in brabmavihāras brought them full emancipation.

The early Buddhists were aware of the practice of brabmavihāras, which they classed as appamaññas (immeasurables). By this practice one developed a sublime mental state,-in which, he could look upon all beings of the world with the same feeling of love and compassion as one would have towards his son; -in which, he felt happy at the spiritual or material success of every person, be he a friend or foe; and -in which, he remained unmoved by weal or woe. The brahmavihāras, however, were not included in the list of thirty-seven bodbipakkbiya and other dbammas which Buddha declared as his own teaching.1 In the Visuddbimagga, their place is given after the four jbanas (meditations) and before the four samapattis (higher trances),2 but in any case, their practice was not regarded as compulsory for the attainment of Nibbana. The trend of the remarks in the Pali texts is that their practice led to rebirth in one of the Brahmalokas only, i.e., the highest form of existence in the constituted sphere, in other words, it did not conduce to Nibbana. These remarks point to the fact that practice of brahmavibaras did not form a part of original Buddhism.

Mrs. Rhys Davids, it seems, was justified in writing that it was taught by the "unknown co-founder of Buddhism."

<sup>1</sup> Majibima, ii p. 11 E. 2 See Vol. I, p. 228 f.

<sup>3</sup> Majjbima, ii, p. 76; Digha i, p. 251; Anguttara, ii, p. 129.

<sup>4</sup> C. A. F. Rhys Davids, Gotama, p. 180; IRAS., 1928, p. 271.

The fact that these practices appear also in the Yogasūtra of Patañjali leads us to infer that these originated among the non-Buddhist or pre-Buddhist thinkers. The nature of mental practices envisaged in the brabmavibāras also suggests that these were meant more for the householders than for the recluses. In the Saddharmapundarīka¹ the practice of brahmavibāras is given a place next to the pāramītās. While in the Mahāvastu³ it is stated that a monk can attain nirvāṇa by practising the four brahmavibāras. In the Dašabhūmikasūtra, the practice of brahmavibāras is placed next to the four dbyānas in the exercises prescribed for the attainment of the third bhūmi.³ A bodhisattva is expected to continue this practice of four brahmavibāras up to the seventh bhūmi,⁴ in which he realises the tāthatā, and goes beyond the training stage.

Relaxation of Disciplinary Rules

There is a hint, in the path of saddhā and brahmavihāra, that for the attainment of Nirvāṇa, one need not always be a strict observer of the monastic rules of discipline (see above). Buddha no doubt laid more emphasis on the control of the mind than on the control of body and speech, though it was far from his intenton that his followers should show laxity in observing monastic rules. A century after Buddha's death, appeared the Mahāsanghikas who put a new interpretation on Buddha's directions, and set on foot a movement against the rigid orthodoxy of the earlier disciples, whose over-zealousness for the r p. 142. 2 iii, p. 421.

<sup>3</sup> Aspects of Mahāyāna, etc. p. 267.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid., Ch. IV.

<sup>5</sup> Majjhimā, i, p. 372: Imesaṃ tinnaṃ kammānaṃ evam paţivibhattānaṃ manokammaṃ mahāsāvajjataraṃ paññāpemi.

observance of monastic rules led to the sacrifice of essentials. It is an indication that a group of thinkers attached more value to the purification of body and mind and the study of logic than to the punctillious observance of Vinaya rules. We have on the authority of Paramārtha, the following statement attributed to the Kaukulikas an off-shoot of the Mahāsanghikas that "a bhikṣu may or may not have three robes for covering his body; may or may not reside in a monastery; and may or may not take his meal within the time limit. The Vinaya rules about residence and food were abrogated by Buddha; it is clear that the real teaching of Buddha was not Vinaya but the study of the logical principles (nyāya), i.e., Abhidharma." According to the Dharmaguptas, the Prātimokṣa rules were lost when the saddharma disappeared hence there are no more rules, sīmābandba and karmānta.<sup>2</sup>

It is not improbable that this new viewpoint attracted a large number of recruits and helped to increase its followers. The relaxation in the monastic rules, of course, had nothing to do with the laity, and so whatever appeal, it could have, was confined to the monks and nuns.

We may now sum up the factors that made Buddhism popular in the pre-Asokan period thus:—

(i) Trisarana came to be regarded as the three articles of faith.

(ii) The ecclesiastical ceremonies gave satisfaction to the less philosophically minded disciples.

(iii) Worship of Caityas and Stippas allowed some scope for the expression of devotion (bhakti).

<sup>1</sup> See Paul Demieville, L'origine des sects bouddhiques in Mélanges chinois et bouddhiques, vol. I, (1931-32), pp. 19. 46. 2 Abbidharmakola, iv. 39.

- (iv) Visits to the four places of pilgrimage were looked upon as attractive means of earning merit.
- (v) Saddhā and brahmavihāra practices were regarded by some persons as the simpler and shorter means for the attainment of Nibbāna. And lastly,
- (vi) Relaxation in the stringency of the Vinaya rules appealed to a class of persons who did not approve the rigid orthodoxy of the earlier schools of disciples.

II. Post-Asokan Period

The few deviations from the earliest principles of Buddhism dealt with above were hardly enough to make the religion popular. The persons who took to saddhā and brahmavihāra path for emancipation were few and far between; the emphasis was still on the monastic life. The cult of cetiya- and stupaworship made very little progress and the householders with their Trisarana and other rituals still remained outside the Buddhist fold as mere suppliers of material needs of the monks and nuns and as faithful listeners to the moral discourses delivered to them by the monks on certain occasions. The Aśokan edicts reveal no change in this austere attitude of the early Buddhists-the only relieving feature being that Asoka favoured the view that the people should not care very much for recluse-life and should perform good deeds (kuśalakarmapathas) to ensure them an after-life in the heavens. Hence we may say that the real move to make the religion popular among the common-folk was taken after Asoka. This movement consisted mainly in the following five directions:-

- (i) Deification of Buddha.
- (ii) Compilation of Jātaka-literature.
- (iii) Sanction of Image-worship.

- (iv) Introduction of Pāramitā-cult. And
- (v) Promulgation of Bodhisattva Doctrine.

Deification of Buddha

In the pre-Aśokan days, Buddha had already come to be looked upon as the highest god superior to Brahmā, Viṣṇu or Siva. This deification should be attributed first to the Mahā-saṅghikas and the Andhakas, and then to the Sarvāstivādins. It has been shown' while discussing the doctrines of the Mahā-saṅghikas and their off-shoots that Buddha had been given all the attributes of the highest god, whose apparitional body occasionally appeared in this world. This body took birth as Siddhārtha Gautama, went through all the ways of a householder and ultimately renounced the world to become a saint just in order to follow the ways of the world (lokānuvartana). Buddha was supramundane (lokottara) and was made of pute dharmas. Everything of the great rṣi was transcendental including his advent into the world. In the Mahāvastu, he is described thus:—

लोकोत्तरा भगवतो वर्या लोकोत्तरं कुरातम्लम् ।
गमनं स्थितं निषशं रायितं लोकोत्तरं मुनिनो ॥
यत् तत् सुगतरारोरं भवते भवस्य बन्धनत्वयकरणम् ।
लोकोत्तरं तद्पि भो इत्यत न संशयः कार्यो ॥
वोवरधरखं मुनिनो लोकोत्तरं अत संशयो नास्ति ।
आहाराहरणमथो लोकोत्तरं अत संशयो नास्ति ।
सशाना गरनागानां सवैलोकोत्तरः मता ।
यथातथं प्रवद्यामि माहात्म्यं वरबुद्धिनाम् ।
देशकालवशं प्राप्य परिपाकं च कमंगः ।
सत्यं वा अभिनिर्शृतं धमं देशेन्ति नायकाः ॥

लोकानुवर्तनां बुद्धा अनुवर्तन्ति लोकिकीम् । प्रश्निमनुवर्तन्ति यथा लोकात्तरामपि ॥ etc.

The above and other passages in the Mahāvastu leave no room for doubt that about the time of its composition (i.e., and century B.C.), Buddha had already become the highest god, at least, to a large section of the Buddhists.

The account of Buddha's life in the Lalitavistara, the accredited text of the Sarvästivädins, does not extol Buddha so much as has been done in the Mahāvastu. It is more realistic though it attributes divine and super-divine qualities to the Teacher. It says that Buddha while staying in the womb of his mother was enclosed in a casket and from there he delivered discourses to the gods who paid him visits. After his birth, he appeared to dwell at the same moment in all the houses built for him by the faithful. He paid the customary visit to the temples but the gods therein bowed down to him. In his boyhood, he was so learned that the teacher staggered in his presence. In his youth, he possessed already all the kingly powers and skill and surpassed everybody in strength. In this text, he is eulogized thus:—

जातस्य महा इय कम्पितः विसहसः। शक्ष ब्रह्मा सुराध महोरमाध ॥ चन्द्रध सूर्य तथ वैश्ववणः कुमारो । मूर्द्याक्रमेषु निपतिल्य नमस्ययन्ते ॥ कतमोऽन्य देव मम उत्तरियो विशिष्टो । यस्मिन् सम प्रणायसे त्वसिहाय अस्य ॥

<sup>1</sup> Winternitz, History of Indian Literature, II, p. 247.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. also Mahāvastu, I, p. 214

<sup>3</sup> R. L. Mitra, Lalitavistara, pp. 136, 142.

देवातिदेव श्रष्टु उत्तम सर्वदेवैः । देवो न मेऽस्ति सदशः कृत उत्तरी वा ॥ लोकानुवर्तन प्रतीत इति श्रम्ब यास्ये । दृष्ट्वा विकुर्वित ममा जनता उदग्रा ॥ श्रिषमात्र गौरव करिष्यति विचितकारो । ज्ञास्यन्ति देवमनुजा स्वयमेव देवः ॥

शास्त्राणि यानि प्रचरन्ति च देवलोके
संख्या लिपिश्च गणनाऽपि च धातुतन्त्रम् ।
ये शिल्पयोग पृथुलौकिक अप्रमेयास्तेष्वेषु शिचितु पुरा बहुकल्पकोट्यः ॥ किन्तू जनस्य अनुवर्तनतां करोति
लिपिशालामगतुं सुशिच्चित-शिच्चणार्थम् ।
परिपाचनार्थं बहुदारक अप्रयाने
अन्यांश्च सत्त्वनियुतानमृते विनेतुम् ॥

Though this text maintains a more sober outlook than the Mahāvastu, there is no doubt that Buddha was regarded by the Sarvāstivādins as a divine being though not the highest god. Though he was proficient in everything, he followed the ways of the world to educate the people. The time of composition of this work, according to Winternitz, spread over a long period commencing from the early Christian eras.<sup>1</sup> It may

I See Winternitz, op. cit., p. 255-6: "It is therefore only correct to say that the Lalitavistara offers us very old traditions concerning the Buddha legend, as well as some which are centuries later"........"It is, however, most informative as regards the development of the Buddha legend from its earliest beginnings when only the chief events in the life of the great founder of the religion are adorned with miracles, down to that boundless deification of the Master, in which, from the beginning to the end of his career he appears mainly as a god above all gods."

therefore be safely stated that in the 2nd and 1st centuries B.C., a certain section of the Buddhists regarded Buddha as the highest god while another section as a great divine being, endowed with all possible virtues and knowledge.

We need not discuss the conception of the Sthaviravadins, who tried to maintain even at this day that Buddha was after all a human saint but with attributes surpassing those of the gods and that in purity and knowledge he was the highest of all constituted beings.¹ This school of thought maintained the realistic conception throughout its long history but it did not gain the same amount of popularity as the Mahāsaṅghikas and the Sarvāstivādins did in the southern and northern parts of India respectively. However realistic the Theravādins might have been, they had to yield to the popular demand of Buddhaworship, and in course of time they allowed the placing of images of Buddha in their temples, and in one of their late texts the Mahāvaṃsa, there is also an elaborate description as to how the first image of Buddha was made and how grand were the ceremonies and festivals for putting up the image.

Image-Worship

In the Mabāvastu and the Lalitavistara Buddha is deified but there are no directions for making images of Buddha. The earliest literary evidence relating to image-making is yielded by the Divyāvādāna, in which Asoka is found to be consulting Pindola Bharadvāja regarding the features (mahāpuruṣa-sabbabhibhu sabbavidu'ham asmi sabbesu dhammesu anupalitta sabbamjaho tanhakkhaye vimutto sayam abhiññāya kam uddiseyyam. Cf. Mabāvastu, iii, p. 326.

lakṣaṇa) of the image.1 In the Mahāvaṃsa2 too is recorded a similar attempt of Aśoka who consulted the Nāga king for an account of the image. One need not be so credulous as to take these traditions as authentic, but the fact is that the practice of image-worship was taken up by the Buddhists sometime before the 4th century A.D. about which time the Divyavadāna and the Mahāvamsa were composed. We may now pass on to the monumental evidences. In the Sanchi and Barhut sculptures there are no images of Buddha. The most significant fact is that the seats of Buddha are shown as vacant. The earlier methods of indicating Buddha's place in a scene were by depicting his Vajrāsana, Bodhi tree or pādukā (wooden slippers) or stupa. If the date of Sanchi and Barhut sculptures be placed in the 2nd and 1st century B.C. we have to admit that image-worship did not prevail at that period. The practice of image-worship therefore came into vogue about the 1st or 2nd century A.D. at the earliest. The Amaravati sculptures, belonging to the Mahāsanghikas and their offshoots, are studded with numerous Buddha-images but the dates of these sculptures are placed by the archaeologists in the and century A.D.3

Though the image of Buddha is wanting in the earlier sculptures there are ample evidences to show the wide prevalence of symbol worship. The artists probably did not make an image of the omniscient refulgent Buddha with all the signs of great men (mahāpuruṣa), but the feeling of adoration to Buddha was there, and this they expressed by concourse of men and gods and even animals, bowing down reverentially to the stūpas, Bodhi-tree or the Vajrāsana, or offering flowers and garlands. In the post-Christian eras, however, the Buddha images not only came into vogue, but practically the Buddhist centres were flooded with such images, some of the most exquisite Gandharan art while others of indigenous local developments. Merit accrued to both the artist and the donor of an image, and so it was quite natural there should be such an exuberance of Buddha-images in the post-Christian eras. Both the Hīnayānists and the Mahāyānists started making images and temples and decorated the stūpas with countless images.

<sup>1</sup> Divyāvadāna, p. 400. 2 Mahāvamsa, p. 37-3 Buddhist Remains in Andhra, etc. by K. R. Subramanian, 1932, p. 15.

Jātakas and Avadānas

In the Mahāvastu and the Abhiniskramaņasūtra we have not only a biography of Buddha but also a number of stories dealing with Buddha's supposed previous existences as also other traditions. The underlying object of the stories of Buddha's previous births is to show that each event in this life was the result of a past deed of his. These stories served not only to establish the law of karma which Buddhism had borrowed from the pre-Buddhistic thoughts but also to convince the commonfolk that any act of theirs would similarly be fruitful, and it may be that some of them might sow the seeds of merit like Siddhārtha Gautama and ultimately attain Buddhahood. In the latter case, they would be Bodhisattvas as was Siddhārtha Gautama in his previous lives. The Lalitavistara refers to the meritorious deeds performed by him in his previous existences' but

I Lalitavistans (R. L. Mitra), p. 192:—
पुरि तुम सुपुरुष स्विष्य सद्मृदि ज तव उपगत भव मम शर्थम् ।
भिष्य स्विष्य विजयर नरिष्यु उपनी व्यक्ति स्वय स्वित तनु न च दिल व्यवसी ॥
स्वर स्विष उपगत पुरि दुभनिलये रुचि भिष्य तहरु कति इम गथ्यो । सुविदित सुगणित यथ तक्षि निश्वता तय तव चितव समिन्द रिचता ॥ does not give the stories in detail which were to be found partly in the Vinaya piṭaka of the Sarvāstivādins, and partly in the Avadana collections. The biographies, and particularly the Jātakas, made a strong appeal to the mass, kindled their devotion and gave them an opportunity to express the same by depicting the stories indelibly on stone. These made them feel within their innermost heart that Buddhahood for them was not an impossibility as had so long been preached by the early Buddhists. The task, of course, was arduous and the path long covering several existences and entailing extreme self-sacrifices. This literature therefore gave a new and forceful impetus to the mass, and paved the way for the glorious days which Buddhism had for a long time in the early Christian eras. Observing the effect of the Jataka stories on the mass, the Sarvastivadins began to multiply them and produced large collections of these, calling them Avadanas. They incorporated in it stories dealing with the previous birth not only of Buddha but also of his noted disciples. The puritanic Theravadins could not help following them and started making a collection of stories without intermingling them with the biography of Buddha. They however supplied the events of the present life by way of introduction (paccuppannavatthu) and ended the stories by identifying the characters with Buddha and other persons. The object of all these collections was identical, viz., the edification of the mass and popularisation of the religion.

Strangely enough all these lātakas and Avadānas are non-Buddhist in character. This have nothing to do with the fundamental teachings of Buddhism—there is not a word about soul, component elements of a being, law of causation, ātman, skandhas, paticcasamuppada or nirvāna. These stories deal in a general way with moral virtue but not with the śilas, as detailed in the Pitakas. These speak highly of a retired life but do not discountenance the life of a householder. On the contrary, the stories are concerned mainly with the social life of the householders and not with the unsocial life of a recluse. These do not breathe a word about monks or their life in monasteries. If not for the use of the term 'Bodhisattva' in every story, the collections could not have been recognised as forming a part of the Buddhist literature. It is really a universal literature dealing with universal moral principles, and a large number of the stories belongs to the common heritage of the Indians of the pre-Asokan period. These stories teach more altruistic moral principles than negative ethical ideals (veramanis) as was the practice with the Buddhists. The stories well-known to the common folk of the then age were found to be a convenient medium for propagating the Bodhisattva conception and along with it the greatness of the Teacher.

Pāramitā-cult

The Jātaka-stories, according to the late Buddhist traditions, had in view Bodhisattva's attainment of perfection<sup>1</sup> in six or ten virtues, viz., (i) liberality (dāna) (ii) righteousness (šīla) (iii) forbearance or endurance (kṣāntī) (iv) mental strength (vīrya) (v) mental concentration (dbyāna) and (vi) realisation of the truth (prajñā). The number was latterly raised to ten by the addition of (i) skilfulness in expedients (upāyakaušalya) (ii) vow or resolution (pranidhāna) (iii) attainment of certain powers (bala) and (iv) knowledge (jñāna).<sup>2</sup> The above list is to be t Pāramitā, as suggested by Har Dayal should be derived from 'parama' (highest, excellent, extreme). A Bodhisattva makes most extreme exertion or sacrifice for acquiring the virtues of gift, etc.

<sup>2</sup> Dr. Har Dayal rightly describes these four as supplementary found in Buddhist-Sanskrit works while the list in the Pāli texts is slightly different. It agrees with five of the above, viz., dāna, sīla, khanti, viriya and paññā. The remaining five are (i) renunciation (nekkhamma), (ii) truthfulness (sacca), (iii) resolution (adhiṭṭḥāna), (iv) love (mettā) and (v) equanimity (upek-khā). Of these five, adhiṭṭḥāna may be taken as a synonym of praṇidhāna of the supplementary list. The agreement of the two lists in five of the ten pāramitās indicates their comparative antiquity. It seems that the list was not a pre-meditated one. The stories were originally written just to illustrate that the episodes of Buddha's life were not untoward events but the outcome of the deeds of his previous existences. In course of time these stories were multiplied without any definite plan.

The earliest mention of the six pāramitās is found in the Mahāvastu (iii, p. 226), Lalitavistara (p. 340), and Aṣṭasāhasrikā Prajñāpāramitā (p. 194) while that of ten in the Mahāyāna Sūtrālankāra, Daśabhūmikasūtra, Bodhīsattvabhūmi, and Samādhirājasūtra. In the Mahāvastu again, mention of the six pāramitās is few and far between² while the word pāramitā has been used in the ordinary sense (viz. perfection) in compounds like garbhāvakrāntipāramitā³ (the last entrance of the Bodhisattva into the womb), sarvakušaladharmavasibhāvapāramitā (perfect attainment of domain over all good actions)⁴ and prajñāpāramitā, (i.e. perfection in Śrāvaka's knowledge).⁵ This shows that păramităs. See his Bodhisattva Doctrine etc. pp. 167, 168. See also his remarks re. five păramităs.

5 Ibid., iii, p. 67.

<sup>1</sup> See Har Dayal, op. cit., p. 167.

<sup>2</sup> Mahāvastu, i, p. 214; ii, p. 296; iii, p. 226.

<sup>3</sup> Mahavastu, ii, p. 17.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid., ii, p. 261.

the word 'paramita' did not carry the meaning attributed to it in the later texts. Like pāramim gato in Pāli, there are several uses of the phrase 'pāramiprāpta'1 and 'paramīm gato,'2 in the Mahāvastu. In speaking of Bodhisattva's several attainments, perfection in the six pāramitās3 as a condition precedent to a Bodhisattva's progress from a lower to a higher bhūmi, is not insisted upon,4 as has been done in the Dasabhumikasutra.5 At the time of composition (2nd century B.C.) of the Mahavastu,6 the doctrine of pāramitā, it seems, was not well developed. Unlike the Mahāvastu, we have in the Lalitavistara, not only frequent references to the six pāramitās, but also eulogistic accounts of the deeds of Boddhisattva for attaining perfection in the six pāramitās.7 These gāthās imply wide currency of the lātaka-stories as also a great popularity of the pāramitā-doctrine.8 In the Astasāhasrikā-prajñāpāramitā, the six pāramitās are systematically mentioned in the enumeration of Bodhisattva's attainments, with the rider that these perfections are not to be taken as reals (paramartha). Thus, we may say that the doctrine of pāramitā was fully developed before the time of composition of the Lalitavistara and the Astasāhasrikā, i.e. about 1st century A.D. and after the date of the Mahāvastu, i.e., 2nd century B.C.

<sup>1</sup> Mahāvastu, i, p. 152. 2 Ibid., i, p. 74, etc.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid., i, p. 133-4. 4 Ibid., i, pp. 89 ff.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Aspects of Mahāyāna Buddhism etc. (henceforth abbreviated as AMB.), pp. 267, 270 f.

<sup>6</sup> Winternitz, History of Indian Literature (Cal. Uni.), II, p. 247.

<sup>7</sup> Cf. e.g. Lalitavistara (R. L. Mitra's ed.) pp. 38, 60, 185, 188, 199, 212, etc.

<sup>8</sup> Cf. e.g. Ibid., p. 60.

<sup>9</sup> See e.g. Astasāhasrikā Prajnāpāramitā, p. 194-

The practice of pāramitās occupies an important place in the Mahāyānic code of discipline. In the Saddharmapundarīka, one of the early Mahāyāna texts, it is repeatedly stated that the teaching for the Srāvakas consisted of the four truths, law of causation, which put an an end to suffering and led to Nirvāṇa, while the teaching for the Bodhisattvas consisted of the practice of pāramitās, leading to the highest knowledge or omniscience. In the Daśabhūmika-Sūtra, the practice of a particular pāramitā is enjoined for the attainment of a particular bhūmi. Thus we see that the pāramitās formed one of the fundamentals of the Mahāyānic code of discipline and spiritual progress.

The doctrine of pāramitā is not mentioned in the early Pāli texts, and was very likely unknown to the early Buddhists. The words 'pāramim gato or pāramippatto' (attained perfection) occur in the Nikāyas but nowhere in the Pāli Tripitaka, barring the Khuddakanikāya, the pāramitās are mentioned. The number of pāramis, listed in the later Pāli texts, is ten and not six. Dhammapāla, in his commentary on the Cariyāpiṭaka, contributes on the ten pāramis a long dissertation, in which he tells us that there were various ways of classifying the pāramis. There was also the system of enumerating the pāramis as six viz., dāna-sīla-khanti-viriya-jhāna-paññā, which is exactly the list as given in the Buddhist-Sanskrit texts. He writes that

<sup>1</sup> Saddbarmapundarika, pp. 17 f. 334 f.

<sup>2</sup> See AMB., ch. iv: dāna in 1st bhūmi (p. 259), šila in the 2nd (p. 262), kṣānti in the 3rd (p. 267), virya in the 4th (p. 270), dhyāna in the 5th (p. 27) and prajñā in the sixth (p. 275).

<sup>3</sup> See AMB., p. 12.

<sup>4</sup> Suttanipāta, vv. 1018, 1020; Majjbima, iii, p. 28.

<sup>5</sup> Paramatthadipani, p. 321.

according to this enumeration, 'sīla' includes nekkhama (renunciation) as also sacca (truthfulness), the latter being only an aspect (ekadeso) of sīla; paññā includes ñāna while jhāna and paññā together include upekkhā; adhiṭṭhāna he says, is associated with all the six pāramis. Though Dhammapāla was aware of this sixfold classification of pāramis, the Pāli texts usually mention ten and it seems that this list was made out by the Theravādins some time after the currency of the six pāramitās among the sects other than Theravāda. The supplementary four pāramitās of the later Buddhist Sanskrit texts and the Pāli list of ten pāramitās were very likely the products of the same period.

This doctrine of paramita is evidently a later accretion to the fundamental principles of Buddhism, and this took place about the 1st century B.C. Of the several sects that appeared after the Second Council, the Mahāsanghikas and their offshoots, the Andhakas, were the first to deify Buddha and introduce the conception of Bodhisattvas. The object of this group of sects was not only the deification of Buddha but also to find a place for the laity within the religion, to create an interest among the householders in Buddhism. This doctrine of paramitā was meant primarily for householders; three of the pāramitas were already included in the duties prescribed for the laity, viz., šīla. cāga (=dāna) and paññā.1 The remaining three paramitas are kṣānti, virya and dhyāna. These, it will be observed, are included in the subsidiary practices prescribed for the laity. The distinction between the paramita-practices which made a Bodhisattva and the practices prescribed for the laity is that the former practices had to be carried to the extreme that one can conceive of, while the latter was meant only as a general moral training. The doctrine of pāramitā illustrated by the Jātaka stories made a strong appeal to the common-folk, and became instrumental in propagating the religion among the mass. The success of the Mahāsanghikas and their offshoots in increasing their followers led other schools like the Sarvāstivādins and Dharmaguptas, and later the most orthodox of the schools the Theravādins to incorporate this new doctrine into their code, though it was not consistent with their teachings and ideals. The Sarvāstivādins, however, changed their outlook in the altered circumstances of the day, and produced an extensive literature in the shape of Avadānas to popularise this new cult.

<sup>1</sup> The other two are saddba and suta. See above, p. 222-3.

Bodhisattva-doctrine

As has already been mentioned, the Mahāsanghikas were the first to usher in the conception of Bodhisattva, viz., that a being in any form of existence can have or develop the determination to attain bodhi (bodhicittotpāda) at sometime or other, however long and arduous the process may be, no matter even if it entails self-immolation, not once but several times in different existences. This conception is not quite clearly expressed in the Mahāvastu, where we find the first attempt to detail the career of a Bodhisattva, which is as follows:—

- (1) Prakṛti-caryā (duties while a common man)
- (ii) Pranidhāna-caryā<sup>1</sup> (duties when taking the vow for attaining Buddhahood)
- (iii) Anulomacaryā (duties for spiritual progress to Buddhahood)
- 1 After bodbicittotpāda and pranidbāna, there must be lalso vyākarana (prophesy) by a Buddha that such and such a being will become the Buddha.

(iv) Anivartana-caryā (duties for remaining firm in a particular stage of spiritual progress).

These four caryās1 are explained in detail thus:

- (i) Prakṛti-caryā² has no corresponding practice in the full-fledged Mahāyānism. A Bodhisattva is a common man (puthujjana) while he is in prakṛti-caryā. This caryā requires a Bodhisattva to be a good, if not an ideal, householder, fulfilling the duties towards his parents, recluses and Brāhmanas, respecting the elders of the family, observing the ten moral rules,³ admonishing others to be charitable and virtuous, worshipping Buddha and Śrāvakas, but not developing the mental state to attain bodhi.⁴ Gautama Buddha was in his prakṛticaryā during the time of Aparājitadhvaja Buddha.⁵
- 1 În the Bodhisattvabhūmi, the four caryās are given differently thus, Bodhipakṣya caryā, Abhijñācaryā, Pāramitā-caryā, Sattvaparipākacaryā. Dr. Har Dayal has followed this scheme of Caryās in his Bodhisattva Doctrine, p. 76. See also Thomas, History of Buddhist Thought, p. 201; AMB., pp. 286-289.

2 Mahāvastu, i, pp. 46-47, 81 cf. Cariyāpiṭaka Cy., p. 162.

3 See Mahāvastu, i, p. 107, ii, pp. 14-16. The daśa kuśala-karma-pathas are:—Refraining from (i) prānātipāta (killing), (ii) adattādāna (stealing), (iii) kāmamithyācāra (misconduct), (iv) anrtavacana (speaking falsehood), (v) piśunavacana (malignant speech), (vii) paruṣavacana (harsh speech), (vii) sambhinnapralāpa (frivolous talk), (viii) abhidhyā (avariciousness), (ix) vyāpannacitta (malevolence) and (x) mithyādṛṣṭi (wrong view).

4 Mahāvastu, pp. 47, 81:

नैव ताव जनयन्ति मानसं अयपुद्रक्षगतं नरीत्तमा ।

नेव ताव जनयन्ति मानमं सर्वधमीवदुताय पिछताः ।

नैव ताव जनयन्ति मानसं ज्ञानसागरताय नायकाः। 5 Mahāvastu, i, p. 1; but see p. 60 where it is said that he (ii) Pranidhāna-caryā corresponds to bodhicittotpāda of the developed Mahāyānism. While in this caryā, a Bodhisattva takes the vow that by the merits that have so far accrued to him, he may become omniscient, that his zeal in keeping his vow may not flag, that he may end his past evil acts by suffering pains, and that he may wander over this world like the Buddha untouched by the worldly objects as the incomparable teacher, revered by men and gods, and ultimately he may roll the wheel of law, preach the truth, and train up beings like the Buddha the lamp of this world.

Gautama Buddha first took this vow during the time of a past Sākyamuni Buddha after offering him a drink of gruel. He took the vow for the second time during the time of Samitāvi Buddha, and later as the monk Abhiya during the time of Sarvābhibhu Buddha. In this way he took this vow five times.

(iii) Anuloma-caryā corresponds to Bodhi-prasthāna-citta of the Bodhicaryāvatāra (p. 23). A Bodhisattva immediately after taking the vow, mentioned above, commences performing the duties prescribed for his spiritual progress. The duties to be performed and the virtues to be acquired by a Bodhisattva are offered valuable robes to Aparājitadhvaja Buddha and prayed for attainment of sambodbi.

1 Мавачахи, і, р. 50:—

एवमई जीकमिमं चरेशं यथा वर्श चरति वर्शनमानसी। चर्कं प्रवर्तेशं चनन्यसाडमी भवेशमई देवसनुष्यपुजिती॥

2 Ibid., p. 54:-

षर्थं वर्रेशं लीके देवमनुष्णानां देशिय धर्म। एवं विनेश सत्तां यथा वर्षे लोकप्रयातो ॥ endless. In some texts<sup>1</sup> an attempt has been made to arrange the duties and virtues in a gradual order in ten stages (bhūmis). The keynote of the Bodhisattva practices is self-sacrifice for the good of others with a firm resolution for the attainment of bodhi. The practices mentioned in the Mahāvastu are not only much less elaborate than those found in the later texts, but also are not in a progressive order. Briefly, these are as follows:—

In the 1st bhūmi (Dūrārohā)<sup>2</sup> the Bodhisattva cultivates charity (tyāga), compassion (karunā), unweariness, (aparikheda), conceit-lessness (amāna), love for study (sarvaśāstrādhyāyitā), valour (vikrama), knowledge of the worldly ways (lokānujñā) and patience (dbrti).

In the 2nd bhūmi (Baddhamānā) the Bodhisattva develops twenty kinds of strong inclinations (adhyāśaya) viz., excellent (kalyāṇa), quiet (snigdha), sweet (madhura), etc. Each of these inclinations is explained in verse.<sup>3</sup>

In the 3rd bhūmi (Puṣpamaṇḍitā) the Bodhisattva exerts for making all beings happy without seeking happiness for his ownself, and sacrifices everything even his life for listening to wise sayings.

In the 4th bhūmi (Rucirā) the Bodhisattva refrains from commission of any of the extreme offences, viz., patricide, matricide and arhanticide, and dissension in the Sangha, and stūpadesecration; he avoids heretic views, performs the ten good deeds<sup>4</sup> (kuśalakarmapatha); does not use any magical spell for

- 1 Daśabhumikasūtra; Bodhisattvabhūmi; Sūtrālankāra of Asanga.
- 2 See Mahāvastu, i, pp. 85-89.
- 3 A bodhisattva while in the first bhūmi remains a prthagjana (common man), but deserving gifts. See Mahāvastu, i, p. 78.
  - 4 See above, p. 306 n. 3.

injuring others, does not get depressed in danger nor becomes elated in success, remains pure in physical, mental and vocal acts, as also in his inclinations (adhyāśaya).

In the 5th bhūmi (Citravistarā) the Bodhisattva realises the fact that worldly existences are ablaze with attachment (rāga), hatred (dosa), and delusion (moha).

In the 6th bhūmi (Rūpavatī) the Bodhisattva comprehends that existence in the world is unhappy and painful.

In the 7th bhūmi (Durjayā) the Bodhisattva attains complete self-control and wishes for the good of all beings.

In the 8th bhūmi (Janmanirdeša) the Bodhisattva sacrifices everything including the dearest things which are very difficult to part with. From this bhūmi onwards the Bodhisattva should be looked upon as the Samyaksambuddha as he has mastered the higher meditational practices, acquired full knowledge and delivered wise discourses.

In the 9th and 10th bhūmis (Yauvarājya and Abhiseka)<sup>1</sup> therefore the Bodhisattva has nothing more to attain. Now he can take rebirth in whatever form he likes; he can also become a universal monarch. These two bhūmis, evidently, were reached by Gautama Buddha in his last two existences in the Tusita beaven and in the mortal world.<sup>2</sup> He decided to take rebirth as a human being for imparting instructions to men and gods, leading them to arhathood or other attainments. In the later Mahāyānic texts, the Bodhisattva in the eighth bhūmi becomes a Buddha in esse, a member of the Buddha family with Buddha gotra, and guarded henceforward by the gods and Vajrapāṇi.<sup>3</sup> In the 9th bhūmi, according to these texts, the Bodhisattva becomes a dharma preacher, a guide to other beings. In the 10th bhāmi he obtains the resplendent body and omniscience while in meditation; he is now consecrated as the Samyaksambuddha and so this bhāmi is called Abhiseka.

<sup>1</sup> Mahāvastu, i, pp. 105-6.

<sup>2</sup> Thomas, History of Buddhist Thought, p. 203.

<sup>3</sup> AMB., p. 282.

(iv) Anivartana-caryā of the Mahāvastu is equated by Dr. E. J. Thomas2 to the Avaivartya-caryā of the later Mahāyānic texts. In the Mahāvastu, however, it carries a different sense. In this text some lapses are pointed out as causes for retrogression of a Bodhisattva from a higher to a lower bhūmi, and so a Bodhisattva is warned about these lapses in connection with every bbumi that may be reached by him. The word avaivartya is used as an adjective of the Bodhisattvaa in every bhāmi, implying that the resolution of the Bodhisattva for attaining bodbi remains unflinching all along. Incidentally the text mentions that the Bodhisattva while in one of the first seven bhumis may, for any serious lapse, be reborn in one of the lower forms of existence. In the later Mahāyānic texts, the 8th bhumi is called Avaivartya or Acala, from which the Bodhisattva can never have any retrogression; he is destined to attain bodhi and become a samyaksambuddha, and so it is quite different from the anivartana-carya of the Mahavastu.

The Bodhisattva conception apparently was not fully developed in the Mahāvastu. The conception presented in the text is half-way between Hīnayāna and Mahāyāna. The Bodhisattva, it has in view, is the previous existences of Gautama t AMB., p. 283. 2 History of Buddbist Thought, p. 201.

<sup>3</sup> Mahāvastu, i, p. 82: यं पुनर्भी जिनपुत चनैवर्तियो वोधिसस्त्रो प्यर्भ चित्रसृत्पादयति etc.; p. 83: ये बनै भी जिनपुत चनैवर्तिका वोधिसन्त्रा तैवनकानि ते प्रयमायां भूमी स्थिते: दुष्करानि झतानीति etc.

<sup>4</sup> Mahävastu, i. pp. 102-4.

Buddha.1 It makes no reference to the acquisition of paramitas i.e., the inconceivable and immeasurable virtues acquired by Bodhisattvas in the several bhūmis, as detailed in the Dašabhūmikasūtra2 or the Bodbisattvabbūmi.3 There can be no doubt therefore that in the Mahāvastu, we have not only the earliest speculations about the life and career of a Bodhisattva, but also the earliest Jataka stories. It is in the Saddharmapundarika that we find a fairly developed conception of the Bodhisattva. The Sravakas in this work are not disparaged as is done in the later Mahāyāna texts, and a hope is held out to them, that by taking recourse to certain Bodhisattva practices they could still achieve Buddhahood. The new ideals preached in this text electrified the mass, made Buddhism an all-India religion, and we may say that the popular form of Buddhism reached its climax about the time of composition of this work, i.e., about the 2nd century A.D.

Grhī Bodhisattvas: In the early Mahāyāna texts, there is no express mention of householder-bodhisattvas.<sup>5</sup> In the Saddharmapundarīka (p. 20), a Bodhisattva is said to have 800 disciples (antevāsins), but it is not known whether they were householders or recluses. In the Daśabhūmikasūtra, it is stated that in the fourth bhūmi, the Bodhisattva takes ordination, which

- 1 Cf. Thomas, History of Buddhist Thought, p. 201: "The conception of the career in the Mahāvastu also shows more primitive features. It is described not as a career for any bodhisattva, but as having been the career of Säkyamuni and previous Buddhas."
  - 2 See AMB., ch. IV.
  - 3 Bodbisattvabbāmi (cd. Wogihara), Tokyo-
  - 4 Saddbarmapundarika, p. 221.
- 5 Cf. Bodbisattvabbāmi (cd. Wogihara), p. 138: तत कतगद बोधि-मलस्य सर्वेगीलम्। समासती वोधिमलस्य स्टाइयचनतं प्रवातितपचनतं च बीलं सर्वे-योलसित्युचते। implies that he could remain a householder up to the fourth bhūmi, or the practice of vīrya-pāramitā. The dhyāna and prajñā pāramitās are to be accomplished after a bodhisattva becomes a monk. In the later Mahāyāna texts like Ugradattapari-prechā and Sikṣāsamuccaya, a special code has been framed for the conduct of the householder-bodhisattvas.\(^1\) The pāramitās, it seems, were meant more for the householders than for the recluses. In actual practice, as is found in the Jātaka stories, the pāramitās were being accomplished by laymen, gods and animals, and rarely by ascetics. In the Mahāvastu and other early Mahāyāna texts, the duties of Grhi-bodhisattvas are not distinctly prescribed, but in course of time this desideratum of a code was removed and the career of a householder-bodhisattva was clearly chalked out.\(^2\)

Conclusion: In the pre-Asokan days Buddhism hardly became a popular movement. It was confined to recluses, the number of which increased to a certain extent owing to the slight deviations made from the austere principles of the earliest form of Buddhism. In his edicts Asoka did not fully approve of the emphasis laid by early Buddhism on retirement from household life. This attitude of Asoka might have some effect on the religion. During Asoka's reign, the caitya and stūpa worship of Buddha's images got currency. About two centuries had elapsed since Buddha's demise, and during this long period, Buddha came to be deified inspite of all the textual injunctions to the contrary. The laymen expressed their devotion by erecting stūpas and decorated them with images of Buddha. The laity, however, still remained outside the Buddhist fold, and earned merits only by making gifts to the monks and offering worship to the Buddhist stupas. They were held out the hope of rebirth in one of the heavens, but not emancipation. At this stage, about the 2nd century B.C. appeared the Jātakas and Avadānas depicting the previous lives of Buddha and his disciples. These stories caught the imagination of the generality of the people who now hoped that they could become Bodhisattvas and earn necessary merits to become a Buddha in the long run. Their hopes were further strengthened by the doctrine of paramitas, and special texts were composed to show that the perfection in the pāramitās assured one Buddhahood and that the practice of pāramitās was open to all, recluses or householders. The laymen now felt that they could become actual followers of the religion and derive the benefits. The self-sacrifice preached in the paramita doctrine had a wide appeal and made Buddhism an all-India religion. It was through the propagation of this pāramitā cult that the religion reached the pinnacle of its glory.

1 AMB., pp. 295-301.

<sup>2</sup> For further details, see AMB., pp. 295 f.; and Bodbisattus Prātimokṣa Sūtra.

GENERAL INDEX

Abhassarā (gods), i 51 f. Abhayagirivāsins, ii 199 f. Abhayarājakumāra, i 143 Abhidharmakośa, ii 131, 136, 200; Sautrantika doctrines in, ii 167-9; Vätsiputriya doctrines in, ii 177 Abhidharmasāra, ii 136 Abhiniskramanasūtra (of the Dharmaguptas) i 103 n. ii 163. 298 Ācārangasūtra, i 276 Ācariyavādins, ii 269 Acela Kassapa, i 144 Afghanistan, ii 58 Aggibrahmä, ordination of, ii 250 Aggika-Bharadvāja, i 162 Ajātasattu, i 134; conversion of. i 155 f.; first Buddhist Council in the reign of, i 335, ii 1; relics deposited by, ii 245; successors of, ii 2-4 Ajita Kesakambali, teaching of, i 37 f. Ajívakas, ii 247-8, 251, 262; rivalry of, i 159 Ajnāta Kaundinya, i 102 Alavi, i 169 Allakappa, Bulis of, i 114 Amaravati, ii 60 Ambapāli, i, 114 Anagami, ii 288; laymen attained, ii 235; retrogression of, ii 91 Ananda, i 108, ii 119; charges against, i 329; death of, ii 27; order of nuns at the instance of, i 179; training of, i 133 Anāthapindika, ii 230, 233; Buddhism patronised by, i 165 f, 285 Anattasutta, i 103 Andhakas, ii 52, 60, 76, 83, 91 f. 171, 198, 268, 293. See Saila schools. Andhakavinda, i 155 Andhavana, i 168 Andhra country, ii 60 Anga, Brāhmanism in, i 185 f. Angulimāla, ii 173: conversion, of, i 166 Anya-Mahāsańghika, ii 268 Anuruddha, training of, i 132; king, ii 3 Apana, place-name, i 186 Aparanta, country, ii 271, 273 Ārāda Kālāma, i 95 f. Āranyakas, Brāhmanism in, i 29 Arhat, ii 64, 1114; attainments of, ii 88; classes of, ii 87; failings of, ii 85 f.; full emancipation of, ii 84 f.; house-holder may become, ii 82 n., 172; imperfections of, ii 120; Mahāsanghika view about, ii 64-5: retrogression of, ii 90; Sarvāstivada view about, ii 148-151; Theravāda view about, ii 204 Aryans, settlements of, i 2 f .: outlook of, i 7f. Aśokārāma, ii 267 Aśoka, i 119, ii 119 f., 242-53. 265, 267, 275, 292, 312; conversion of, ii 244, 249; grandsons of, ii 254; dhamma of, ii 258-61; ethical teachings of, ii 250 f.; pilgrimage of, ii 285; practical measures of, ii 263; queens of, ii 253; quin-quennial ceremonies of, ii 246; successors of, ii 253 f.; toleration of, ii 262; topes of, ii 121; upāsaka-life of, ii 252, 263-4 Assagutta, monk, ii 248 Assaji, monk, i 139, 142 Assapura, country, i 187 Astasāhasrikā-prajñāpāramitā, pāramitās in, ii 302 Atman (soul), skandbas distinguished from, i 84 f., 87 f., Nāgārjuna's view about, i 92; non-existence of, i 85 f; I-ness the basis of, i qt; upādāna distinguished from, i 56 Atmaka theory of Vatsa, ii 24 Avadāna literature, Buddhism popularised by, ii 299; non-Buddhistic character of, ii 299 Avanti, i 193, ii 19, 113, 175, 271, 274

Bāhiya, a monk, ii 9 Bahuśrutiya, doctrines of, ii 107 f. Bahuśrutiya-vibhajyavādins, ii 108, 195 f. Bālapanditasūtra, ii 244 Barhaspatyas, views of, i 66, 74 f. Bāvari, route of, i 5; disciples of, i 162, 165 Bhaddā, queen, ii 4 Bhaddā Kapilāni, i 197 Bhadrayānika, sect, ii 174, 195 Bhaggas, clan, i 114, 181 Bhallika, disciple, i 99 Bhānaka (reciters), ii 14 f. Bhārahārasūtra, ii 181 Bhāvaviveka, writer, ii 176 Bhikkhu-Pātimokkha, i 305-310. See Pätimokkha. Bhikkhus, disciplinary measures for, i 302 f.; dress of, i 286-8; punishments of, i 200 f.; residence of, i 284 f. Bhikkhuni, order of, i 294-7; restrictions imposed on, i 295 f. Bhikkhuni-Pātimokkha, i 310-2. See Pätimokkha Bhiksu-Sütra, i 275 Bimbisāra, i 95, 111; successors of, ii. 4 Bindusära, ii 241-2, 243, 248 Bodhirājakumāra, conversion of. i 181 Bodhisattva, i 19, 118, ii 63; conception of, ii 81 f.; four caryas of, ii 305-8; ten bbūmis of, ii 308-310

Bodhisattva-doctrine, ii 311

Bodhisattva-doctrine, ii 305-12
Bodhisattva-householders, ii 311-2
Bodhi-tree, bathing of, ii 246
Brahmā, conception of, i 15
Brahmaloka, i 14 f.

Brähmana, asceticism practised by, i 17; Aśoka's attitude towards, ii 258; dhammas observed by, i 10; schools of, i 10; Suttanipāta account of, i 8 f.; parisā of, ii 210; animal sacrifice disliked by a section of, i 12 f.

Brāhmanical ascetics, Aśoka's gifts to, ii 262

Brāhmanism, among the Licchavis, i 175; among the Mallas, i 185; in Anga, i 185f.; in Kośala, i 160 f.; in Magadha, i 140-1

Buddha, ascetic practices in vogue before, i 31, 97; attributes of, ii 147-8; austerities made optional by, ii 20; Bhaddavaggiyas converted by, ii 148; birthplace of, i 93; Brähmanas converted by, ii 162 f.; 193; deification of, ii 293; disputations disapproved by, ii 127 f.; dissensions apprehended by, ii 7 f.; first discourse of, ii 101; first lay-disciples of, ii 99; kings converted by, ii 112, 165; nobles and bankers converted by, ii 113;

paribbājakas converted by, i 144 f.; proselytizing activities of, i 116 f.; image of, ii 246, 250, 296-8; Lalitavistara account of, ii 294-5; Mahāvastu account of, ii 293; Mahāsanghika conception of, ii 62, 64: method of training of, i 126 f., 134; medium of instruction of, i 130 f.; method of disputation adopted by, i 130; places visited by, i 3. 95 f.; 191 f.; occult powers of, i 121-3; order of nuns sanctioned by, 1 179; quarrel between the Sakyas and Koliyas settled by, i 182; relics of, i 4; training imparted by, i 131-4; ways of exposition of, i 124 f.; rules framed by, i 276 f., 125 f. self-culture stressed by, i 106; scenes of activity of, i 147 f.; supporters of, i 113 f.; Theravada conception of, ii 80, 204, 296; transcendental conception of, ii 74 f.;

Buddhadeva (a Sarvästivädin). opinion of, ii 146

Buddhism, Asoka's attitude towards, ii 263; Bodhisattvadoctrine popularised, ii 311; catholicity in, i 121; causes for the popularisation of, ii 312-3; causes for the spread of, i 104-123; decline of, ii 2; ecclesiastical rituals in, ii 27682; pāramitā for popularisation of, ii 305; place of laity in, ii 206-38; Jātakas popularised, ii 299; formation of schools of, ii 16 f.; fundamental principles of, i 248 f.; principal centres of, ii 27; propagation of, ii 270-4; proselytizing in, i 116 f.; Puşyamitra's animus against, ii 256; time of advent of, i 104-6 Buddhist church, absence of supreme head in, ii 12-4; disruptive forces in, ii 5 f.

Buddhist Council (first), i 32440; causes of, i 327-30; dissentients in, i 331; authenticity of, i 336 f.

Buddhist Council (second), ii 31-46; causes of, ii 42; business of, ii 34 f.; Mahādeva's propositions in, ii 41; authenticity of, ii 45; ubbāhikā process followed in, ii 33 f.

Buddhist Council (third), ii 265-270; authenticity of, ii 265 f.; cause of, ii 269; sectarian differences in, ii 268; Ašoka's part in, ii 269-70

Buddhist literature, specialisation in branches of, ii 14-18 Buddhist schools, ii 31, 47 f. Buddhological speculations, ii 75 f

Bu-ston, on Sarvāstivādins, ii 123

Caitya. See Cetiya Cairyikas (sect), ii 61 Campă, i 185-6 Canakya, ii 239 f. Candagirika, ii 244 Candasoka, ii 245, 250 Candragupta, ii 239-41 Carakas (wanderers), i 31 Cariyāpitaka commentary, pāramitäs in, ii 303-4 Cătuddisa-sangha, i 317 Cedi, i 190 Central Asia, i 119 Cetiya (Caitya), ii 24, 291 f.; worship of, ii 282; list of, ii 282 Ceylon, ii 113 Chan-nagarika, (sect) ii 174, 195 Cina, ii 273 Citta gahapati, ii 228 f. Council. See Buddhist Council Cows, sacrifice of, i 12 Cunda Kammāraputta, i 183 Dabba Mallaputta, i 152, 183; beds for monks arranged by. ii 15 f. Damila, ii 273 Därstäntikas, ii 166, 160 Daśabhūmikasūtra, ii 311 Daśadbyayavinaya (in Chinese), ii 129-30 Dasaratha, grandson of Asoka, ii 254 f. Devadaha, i 172, 174

Devadatta, episode of, ii 5f.;

stringent rules for monks insisted by, i 208 f., ii 6f.; training of, i 134 Devadūtasūtra, ii 120 Devasarmā, author, ii 133 Devayānists, i 30 Dhammacakkapavattanasutta, i 101 £, 137, 198 Dhammakathikas, ii 14 f. Dhammarakkhita, preacher, 164, 271 Dharmas (acc. to Sarvāstivādins), ii 137 f., 141 n. Dharmagupta (sect), ii 36, 40, 47. 305; doctrines of, ii 164-5; literature of, ii 163-4; seat of, ii 163 Dharma-mahāmātras, ii 262 Dharmapāla, ii 202 Dharmaskandha (text), contents of, ii 134 Dharmasūtras, date of, i 275 Dharmatrata, a Sarvāstivādin. opinion of, ii 145 Dharmottariya (sect), ii 174, 195 Dhārukāya (text), contents of, ii 135 Dighanakha, i 145 Dighajānu Koliyaputta, ii 212 Dighatapassi, i 129 Dirghāgama, Dīghanikāya compared with, ii 125 Disciplinary rules, relaxation in, ii 18-19. See Pätimokkha. Disciples, succession of, ii 3; leading, ii 16-17 Disputation, Buddha's attitude towards, i 127-130; conversion by, i 128; rules of, i 129 Divyāvadāna, Buddha's image in, 11 297 Dundubhissara, monk, ii 170 Ekanālā (village), i 141, 154 f. Ecelesiastical acts and punishments, i 298-304 Ekottaragama, ii 127 Exposition, four ways of, i 124 Gahapatāni, instructions meant for, ii 217 Gahapari, aims and objects of, ii 211-3; discourses suited to, ii 213-7 Gahapati-parisā, ii 210 Gahapativaggas, ii 213 f. Ganas, i 33 Gandhabba, ii 235 Gandhamadana, ii 246 Gandhāra, ii 271, 274 Gautama Buddha, ii 309. Buddha Gavampati (monk), i 331 f.; ii 10, 271 Gayā, Buddha in, i 148f. Gayasirsa Hill, i 96 Ghosaka, a Sarvāstivādin, opinion of, ii 145 Ghotamukha's gift, i 139 Gifts, Aśoka's quinquennial, ii 246; Dharmaguptas' view about, ii 164 Gosingasālavana, i 178 Gijjhakūta-pabbata, i 150 Graeco-Bactrians, ii 123

Grhi-Bodhisattvas, ii 311-2 Guntur District, Buddhist inscr. in, ii 61 Haimavata (sect), ii 169-71, 200; doctrines of, ii 171 Heavens, names of, ii 233 Himavanta, ii 271 Householders, ii 276; duties of, ii 288; rites and ceremonies of, ii 208; discourses to, i 125 Huviska, ii 58 Iksvāku, sacrifices performed by, i o Inscriptions, Sarvāstivādins mentioned in, ii 122 Isipattana. See Rsipattana Jaggayapeta inscription, ii 60 Jainas, monastic system of, i 276; Syadvada of, i 40 Jalauka, king, ii 254, 255 Jātakas, Buddhism popularised by, ii 299; non-Buddhistic character of, ii 299; object of, ii 298-300 Jatilas i 148, ii 240 Jetavanavihāra, i 167 Jivaka, conversion of, i 156 Jnanaprasthanasūtra, contents of, ii 131-2; commentary on, ii 136 Kajangala (village), i 185, 188 Kākavarni, king, ii 22, 45 Kālasilā, i 143 Kālāsoka, king, ii 22 f., 33, 42, 45; sons of, ii 23 Kallavālamuttagāma, i 155

Kammassadhamma, village, i 195 Kanakmuni Buddha, ii 263 Kanci a centre of the Theravādins, ii 202 Kaniska, i 119; ii 123 Kapila, ii 178 Kapilavastu, i 93, 135, 173 Karle (cave), ii 59 Karma (deeds), ii 65; arhats not subject to, i 23; carrier of, i 24f.; law of, ii 298; skandhasantāna subject to, i 22 Kashmir ii 118 f .; ii 271, 274 Kāśi, conversions at, i 136 f. Kassapagotta, ii 170 Kāśyapiyas, ii 166, 170, 171; literature of, ii 165; doctrines of, ii 166; Haimavatas identified with, ii 170 Kathavatthu (text), ii 270 Kathina (ceremony), i 293-4, ii Kātyāyanīputra (author), ii 131 Kausambi, ii 29; disruptive forces at, ii 5 f.; hermitages in, i 188 f. Keśaputta, Kālāmas of, i 170 Khānumata, village, i 141 Khattiya-parisā, ii 210 Khema, conversion of, i 197 Khemiyambavana, i 139 Khiddāpadosikā (gods) i 53 Kimbila, training of, i 132 Kitagin, i 139 Koliyas, i 114, 182 Kosala, Brāhmaņas of, i 160; lay-devotees of, i 165; non-brahmanical teachers in, i 158 ft; paribbājakas of, i 163 f.; Buddhism in, 1 157-67

Kotigama i 154 Ksudrakāgama, ii 128 Kunāla, ii 253 Kuru country, Buddha in, i 195 f. Kusinārā, i 113, 183 f. Lakkhanasutta, ii 216, 260 Lalitavistara, Buddha's life in, i 95 f., ii 298; Buddha described in, ii 294-5; pāramitā in, ii 302 Lay-devotees, relation of monks to, ii 225-6. See Householders Licchavi country i 113, 175; Brahmanism and Jainism in, i

175 f.; Buddhism in, i 179 f. Lokāyatikas, i 74 f.; doctrine of, i 66

Lokottaravadins, ii 61, 63 f., 76 Madda country, Buddhism in, i 197

Madhyamagama, Majjhima Nikāya compared with, ii 125 Madhyandina, ii 271

Madhyantika, ii 119; Kashmir converted by, ii 4

Magadha, Brāhmanas of, i 140-1, lay-devotees of, i 146 f.; nonbrāhmanical sects of, i 141-4; paribbajakas of, i 144-6 Buddha in, i 147 f.

Māgandiya (paribbājaka), i 190, 196

Mahācetiya, ii 61

Mahādeva, ii 271; five propositions of, ii 24, 41 f., 32; two monks of the name of, ii 120 Mahādhammarakkhita, ii 250,

Mahākaccāyana, i 108, ii 175, 201, 271; conversion of, i 193

Mahākappina, i 197

Mahākassapa, i 108, ii 3, 10 f. Mahākausthila, author, ii 135 Mahāļi, Buddha invited to Vesāli by, i 177

Mahāpadma Nanda, ii 24 f., 239 Mahānāma, lay disciple, ii 288

Mahārattha, ii 271

Mahāsāla Brāhmanas, i 28 f. Mahāsangīti, ii 33, 54, 58

Mahāsanghikas, ii 21 29, 44, 47. 51 f., 198, 266 290, 293, 304; centres of, ii 53, 242, 58-61; doctrines of, ii 62 f.; ekacce, ii 268; Mahāyānic features in, ii 63 f.; Kathāvatthu attributes opinions to, ii 68-73; origin of, ii 53; literature of, ii 54-6; Vinaya of, ii 56; see Saila schools

Mahāvastu, Buddha's life in, i 95 f., ii 54, 58, 63, 298; Bundha described in, ii 76-7, 293; bbūmis in, ii 308-9; pāramitā in, ii 301-2

Mahāvamsa, Buddha's image described in, ii 296-7 Mahāvihāravāsins (sect), ii 199.

201

Mahāvibhāṣā, ii 136 Mahāyāna, i 118-9, 265, ii 63 f. Mahinda, ii 253, 272 Mahisāsaka (sect), ii 11, 36, 40, 106, 198; centre of, ii 242; earlier, ii 112; offshoots of, ii 111; seven rules of, ii 112; Vinaya of, ii 112; later, ii 117; doctrines of, ii 114f.; line of expansion of, ii 113 Mahisamandala, ii 113, 271 Māhissati, i 193 Majjhantika, ii 271. See Madhyāntika. Majjhima (monk), ii 170-271 Majjhima-desa, boundary of, i 3, 185, 188 190-1 n. Makkhali Gosala, i 24; doctrines of, i 36 Mallas, i 113, 183 f. Malla Roja, conversion of, i 110 Mallikā (queen), i 165 Mändhatä, i 56 Manimekhalai, ii 202 Manopadosikā (gods), i 53 Manu, the first sacrificer, i 11 Mathura, ii 20 Mātikādhara, ii 14 f. Maudgalyāyana, author, ii 135 Mediration, i 212-247; subjects of, i. 217-8; spiritual preceptor in, i 233; mental states of a candidate for, i 235-8; successive steps in, i 239-47 Sarvāstivāda views about, ii 159-160, 286

Mental impurities, ii 286 f. Metempsychosis, i 24-5, viññāna in, i 24f. Middle Path, i 198 f. Milindapañha, Upāsaka's duties in, ii 224 Mithilii, i 180 Moggallana, i 107 f., 133 Moggaliputta Tissa, i 109. 117; ii 119, 121, 249 f., 267 f. Monasteries, office-bearers in, i 321 f.; no ownership of, i 320 f. Monks, beheading of, ii 250, geographical division among, ii 27 f. Moriyas, i 114 Mucilinda Nāga, i 99 Mülasarvāstivāda, ii \17, 122. See Sarvāstivāda Munda, king, ii 3-4, 22 Nadika, i 154 Nāga, bhikşu, ii 24, 42 Nagadasaka, son of Munda, ii 4 Nāgārjuna, śāśvatavādins and others refuted by, i 57 f. Nagarjunikonda inscriptions, ii 60, 122, 272-3, Mahisasakas mentioned in, ii 113; Nirvāņa in, ii 160-7; Theravadins mentioned in, 11 202 Nakulamātā, ii 219 Nālaka, i 193 Nālandā, i 153 Nanda, training of, i 132 Nanda, king, ii 23 f.

Nibbanadhatu, whether kusala, 11 107 Nigantha Nățaputta, i 142 f., ii 22; teachings of, i 40 f. Nigrodha, i 144. ii 249, 251 Nigrodha-paribbājaka, i 32 Nikāyasangraha, (text), ii 266, 268 Nikāyas, ascetic practices as mentioned in, i 18f. Nirgranthus, ii 262 Nirvāna, i 74, 118; ii 259, 289; not attainable by laity, ii 236-8; faith leading to attainment of, ii 285-9; Nāgārjunikonda inscriptions mention, ii 106 Okkāka (Iksvāku), i 9, 11 O gans of sense. See Indriya Pahlavas, ii 123 Paiśāci, ii 203 Pajjota, king, i 112 Pakativādin, i 265 Pakudha Kaccayana, doctrines of, i 39 Pāli text, pāramitā in, ii 303-4 Pāli traditions re. Aśoka, ii 248-51 Pāṇini, ii 25 f.; date of, ii 26 Paramārtha, author, ii 108, 291 Päramitäs, earliest mention of, ii 301; six and ten, ii 300-1; cult of, ii 300-5; Bodhisattva and laymen practise, ii 304-5 Paribbājakas, i 119, 144, 149 Paribbājikā, i 33 Parisa, three, ii 210-1

Parisuddhi, declaration of, i 201 Parivrājaka, i 31-3, 275 see Paribbājaka Parthians, ii 123 Pasenadi, king, i 111, 164-5 Pătaliputra, ii 29 f., 58, 153 f. Patiecasamuppāda, i 264-273 Pātimokkha, i 204, 291 f., ii 19f., 229 Pávă, i 183 f. Pavāranā, i 293, ii 281 Pāyāsi, i 38 Perception, see Viññāna. Pilgrimage, four places of, ii 284-285 Pindola Bharadvāja i 117, 190; ii 246, 272, 296 Pingalavatsa, an Ajivaka, ii 243 P pphalivana, Moriyas of, i 114, ii 240 Potaliputta, i 145 Polura, country, ii 273 . Prajapati, the supreme god, i 15 f. Prajnaptisastra, contents of, ii 135 Prajnaptivādins, ii 195; doctrines of, ii 108 Prakaranapāda, contents of, ii 133 Pubbārāma, i 167 Pubbaseliyas (sect), ii 93 Pudgalavāda, ii 177 Punabbasu, i 139 Pundravardhana, ii 248 Punna Mantaniputta, i 108, 117. ii 272

Purāna, i 331 f., ii 10; a teacher of the Mahisasakas, ii 112 Pūrana Kassapa, i 24; doctrines of, i 35 f. Pūrna, author, ii 135 Pūrva Videha, ii 272 Pusyamitra, ii 256; Havell on persecution of, ii 256 Puthujjana, Sarvāstivāda views about, ii 157-8; Mahiśāsaka views about, ii 115 Quinquennial assembly of Aśoka, 11 251 Quorum in a Sangha, i 317-8 Rādhagupta, minister of Aśoka, li 244 Rāhula, i 94; training of, i 131-2 Rājagaha, i 135, 149 f., hermitages around, i 150 f. Rājagirikas (sect), doctrines of, 11, 100 Rakkhita (monk), ii 271 Rāmagāma, Koliyas of, i 182 Ratthapāla, conversion of, i 196 Reality according to Buddhism, i Revata (monk), 1 109 Revataka, country, ii 246 Rgveda, Brāhmanas of the time of, 11; conception of notbeing in, i 16; conception of unity in i 16 Rites and ceremonies, Asoka's views about, ii 258, 261 Rsis (ancient), names of, i 10 Rsipattana, i 136 f.

Rudraka Rāmaputra, 1 96 Sabbakāmi bhikkhu, i 316 Sacrifice (yajña), i 12 f. Sadānīrā (river), i 2, 180 Saddhā (faith), ii 286, 289 f. Saddharmapundarika, Bodhisattva conception in, ii 311; paramitās in, ii 303 Saddharmavarsaka (=Kāśyapīya), ii 165 Sāgala, i 197 Sahajāti (country), i 190 Saila schools, ii 61, 74; doctrines of, ii 105; arhats as conceived by, ii 85 f. Sakadāgāmi, attained by laity, ii 235; retrogression of, ii 91 Sakuludāyi, i 145 Sāketa, monasteries at, i 168 f. Śākyas, monasteries of, i 174; converts made among, i 171, 113; Nigantha Nātaputta among, i Sāmagāma, i 174 Sāmāvatī queen, i 112, 115, 189

Samavati queen, i 112, 115, 189
Sambhūta Sānavāsī, i 109 ii 3, 27, 118 f.
Sambodhi, Aśoka visited, ii 263
Samkantika (=Sautrāntika), ii 166-9; doctrines of, ii 166 f.
Sāṃkhya, i 265; Sassatavāda differed from, i 50 f.
Saṃkrāntivāda, ii 166, 176
Sāṃmitiyas, ii 47 f., 166, 174 f.; origin and history of, ii 174-

5; literature of ii 175. See Vätsiputriyas.

Sampadi, grandson of Aśoka, ii 254 f., 248

Samudra, bhiksu, ii 251, miracle of, ii 244

Saṃyuktāgama, Saṃyutta Nikāya compared with, ii 126-7.

Samgha, ii 262; admission into, i 281 f.; beginning of, i 278; constitution of, i 313-23; early dissensions in, ii 5-8; causes of dissensions in, ii 12 f.; no quroum in, i 317 f.; office-bearers in, i 321; selection of head of, i 315-7; voting in, i 319 f.

Samghabheda, ii 15; definition of, ii 9f.; Samgharāji distinguished from, ii 10

Saṃgharāji, ii 10 Saṃghārāma, i 314 f.

Sanghatthera, i 316, ii 252 Sankha Likhita, authors, i 275

Sangitiparyāya, contents of, ii

Sañjaya Belatthiputta, i 40, 120,

Sarana, meaning of, ii 279 Săriputra, author, ii 134 Săriputra, i 107, 117; Rāhula ordained by, i 279 f.; training of, i 132

Sarişaka, country, ii 246

Sarvāstivāda, ii 27, 36, 40, 47, 104, 111, 117 f., 293, 295 f., 305; Abbidbamma literature of, i: 130-6; ägamas of, ii: 125 f.; controversy of Theravāda with, ii: 137 f.; doctrines of, ii: 137 f., origin of, ii: 118; succession of teachers of, ii: 118 f.; Vinaya of i: 184, ii: 128 f.; controversy of Vātsiputtrīyas with, ii: 177 f.; four different opinions of, ii: 145-7; expansion of, ii: 122-3; language of, ii: 124; seat of, ii: 242; two centres of, ii: 122; revival of, ii: 123

Sarvāstivāda-Vibhajyavādins, iš

Sassatavāda, i 50 f., ii 186, 192 Saryasiddhiśāstra, ii 108 Sautrāntika; see Saṃkantika Sāvatthi, i 135, 167-8 Schools, authors of the history of, ii 47 f.

Sects, Buddhist, ii 47 f. Setu, a householder who became an arhat, ii 89 n.

Siddhatthakas, sect, doctrines of, 109

Siggava bhikkhu, i 108
Sigāla the householder, ii 260
Sigālovādasutta, ii 216, 261
Siha, conversion of, i 176 f.
Sūtra-pitaka of the Sarvāstīvādins, ii 125-8
Silānka Jaina conventator

Silāņka, Jaina commentator, i 35 Silas, kinds of, i 203; non-mental acc. to Mahāsanghikas, ii 69 f. Simhala, ii 272

Simhasena, son of Candragupta, 11 240 Skandhas, ii 174. i 24; attā distinguished from, i 89 £; Nāgārjuna's comment on, i 88 f.; pudgala exists apart from, i 83: Tathagata distinguished from, i 78 f., 81; two classes of i 24. 78 Skandhamātra, existence of, ii 166-7 Skandhasantāna, i 22, 62, ii 181 Sona, (monk) ii 271 Sonadanda, i 185 Sona Kolivisa, i 186 Sotāpatti, attained by laity, ii 234 Soul, skandhas distinguished from, ii 230 Saddhā, ii 222 Sriparvata, ii 273 Srotāpanna, retrogression from, ii 90 Sthavira, ii 29; Mahāyānist, ii 199 f.; see Thera Sthaviravāda, ii 199-206 Sthāviriya (=Kāśyapiya), ii 165 Sthiramati, ii 25 Stupa, ii 291 f., worship of, ii 209, 283; erection of, ii 244-5, 249; relics for, ii 245 Suddhodana, i 172 f. Sujātā, i 97 Sumana bhiksu, ii 250 Sunăparânta, i 195 Sunakkhatta, i 178

Sürasena, ii 23 f. Susima, son of Bindusāra, ii 243 Susunāga dynasty, ii 22 f. Nipāta, i 194; ancient Sutta Brähmanas depicted in, i 8f. Suttantika, ii 14f. Suttavādi, ii 166 Suvannabhūmi, ii 271 Suvarsaka (=Kāśyapiya), ii 165 Taksasilā, ii 243 Tamasāvana, ii 121, 246 Tambapanni, ii 271, 273 Tāmrapamiyas, ii 198, 200 Tapussa gahapati, ii 212 Tarkajvāla of Bhāvaviveka, ii 167, 176 Tathagata, i 21; skandhas distinguished from, i 79 f. Tathāgatagarbha, i 98 Theravada. See Sthaviravada Theravada, controversy of Sarvästiväda with, 137 f .: rature of, ii 203 Theravāda-Vibhajjavāda, ii 265, 270 Theravadins, ii 44, 48, 269, 305; centre of, ii 242, 201; doctrines of, ii 203-6; controversy of Vatsiputriyas with, ii 184 f. Theriya Nikāya, ii 272, 268 Thullakotthita, i 195 Tissa the Crown prince, ii 250 f., 267 Tisyaraksitä, ii 246 Tivara, prince, ii 253

Tosali, ii 273 Trances, stages in, i 242-7 Tripitaka of the Sarvāstivādins, ii 124 f.

Trisarana, ii 209, 277-80, 291. See Sarana.

Truths, realisation of, ii 67-8 Ubbhāhika system, i 318, ii 33 Ucchedavāda, i 71 f., ii 186, 192 Udāyibhadda, king, ii 1 f. Udena, i 109, 112, 189 f. Ujjeni ii 201 f, 249 Ukkala, i 136 f. Ukkatthā, i 169-70 Upagupta, ii 3, 119, 245 Upāli, i 143, 201 Upanisads, i 20 f., 26 f., 30 f. Upāsaka, ii 208 f.; deeper problems of Buddhist philosophy explained to, ii 230-2; spiritual attainments of, ii 232-6; Nirvana unattainable by, ii 236-8; Gahapatis distinguished from, ii 220; duties prescribed for, ii 222 f; uposatha of, ii 22-f.; teaching imparted to, ii 228 f.

Upāsikās, names of distinguished, ii 219; defined, ii 221; special attainments of, ii 219. 228

Upasampadā (higher ordination). ii 280

Uposatha, ii 209, 266 f., 280; assemblies for, i 289 f., Upāsakas', ii 226 f.

Uruvela, i 96, 148 f., 137 Uluka, non-Buddhist teacher, ii 178

Uttara (monk) ii 271 Uttarā Nandamātā, ii 228 f. Uttarāpathakas, ii 76, 93, 171-3; doctrines of, ii 172-3

Uttiya, ii 89 n. Vaibhāsika, ii 27, 118, 122

Vaišāli, see Vesāli

Vaitulyas, ii 268. See Vetulya-

Vaikhānasa, i 275 Vajjian monks, ii 32-3 Vajjiputtaka, ii 174

Vajrāsana, ii 298 Vanavāsi, ii 113, 271, queen of, ii 106

Vanaprastha, i 20, 275 Vanga, ii 273

Vararuci, ii 25 f.

Väsabhakhattiya, i 111

Vasuladattă, i 190

Vāsistiputra Siripulumāyi, ii 59 Vassakāra, minister, ii 13

Vasubandhu, 167-8, 11 Vasumitra's views accepted by, ii 147 Vasumitra, author, ii 133: views of, ii 146

Vatsa, atmaka theory of, ii 24 Vātsiputriya, ii 24, 194-5; controversy of Theravadins with, ii 184 f.; see Sammitiya.

Vedas, i 6f.; śākhās of, i 10, 12. See Rgveda.

Vekhanassa, i 275 Veludvāra, Brāhmana gahapatis of, ii 223 Verañja, location of, i 191 Vesāli, i 135 ii 29, 38; conversions at, i 177-9; order of nuns sanctioned at, i 179 Vetulyakas, ii 200; conception of Buddha according to, ii 75: doctrines of, ii 110 Vibhajyavāda, ii 195, 268; Bahuśrutiya, Sarvāstivāda and Theravada, ii 196; doctrines of, ii 197 Vibhāṣā-śāstra, ii 130 Videgha Māthava, i 2 Videha, Buddhism in, i 180 Vijnānakāya, contents of, 133-4 Vijnaptimātratāšāstra, ii 169, 195 Vinayadhara, ii 14 f.

Vinaya Pitaka of the Sarvāstivādins, ii 128-130 Vinaya rules, leniency in, ii 35 f., 291 Viśākhā, i 114, 166 Višoka, ii 23, 254 Vitaśoka, ii 243, 251, conversion of, ii 247 Voting in a Sangha, i 319-320 Yamantakasiddhi of Canakya, ii 241 Yānas (two), vimukti of, ii 164 Yasa, householder, i 109, ii 89, Yasa of the second Council, ii 28, 32 Yasa the Samghatthera, ii 244. 247 Yavanas, ii 123 Yona countries, ii 271

Index of Pali & Sanskrit Words

akiriyavāda (theory of non-action i.e. soul is not affected by actions), i 35 f., 39 f. akuśalamūla (demerit-roots, viz., raga, dosa and moba), ii 71 f. acetasika (non-mental), ii 69 ajñānavāda (agnosticism), i 39 aññāna (ignorance of an arhat), ii 41, 71, 85 f. aññam jivam aññam sariram (soul is different from body), i 46 f., 88; ii 189 atthakathā (commentaries on the Păli texts), ii 265 atthangika-magga (the eightfold path leading to Nibbana), i 102, 139, 198-202 atthamaka (one who is in the lowest one of the eight stages of spiritual progress, same as sotāpanna), ii 91 f., 96 addhayoga (pinnacled house), i 284 attavada (belief in the existence of soul). i 272 attă, see ătmani attharana (carpet, rug), i 286 adasakam nisidanam (borderless seat), one of the ten rules discussed in the 2nd Council, ii 36, 38 adukkhamasukha (neither painful nor happy), i 18, ii 214-5 addhariyā (a Vedic Sākhā), i 10. 12 adhikaranasamatha (settlement of ecclesiastical disputes), i 307-8, adhiccasamuppannikavāda (theory of fortuitous origin), i 36, 46 f. 65 f. adhirthana (resolution, vow, same as praņidhāna-pāramitā) 1 291 11 301 adhipaññā, ii 20 adhisila, ii 19 anattă (manătman, absence of soul), i 17, 20, 92, 150, ii 99. 107, 137, 148, 176 Anattasutta, i 103 anantavā loko (theory that the world is infinite), i 46 f. anantarapaccaya, ii 71. See paccaya (cause) anantariya (the five extreme heinous crimes, viz., patricide, matricide, arahanticide, dissension within the sangha, and spilling blood of the Buddha), ii 82, 91 anagami (the third stage of sanctification), ii 91, 214, 234 anărocană (an ecclesiastical restriction), i 303 anasrava (free from impurities), i 77, ii 74 f., 151, 164, 172 anicca (=anitya, impermanent), i 8, 150 ii 107, 140 animittată (characteristics-lessness), ii 153, 232, 288 anivartanacaryā (certain practices for which Bodhisattvas do not recede from a stage of advancement), ii 310 aniyata (a kind of ecclesiastical offence) i 306 anutpādajñāna (the knowledge acquired by an arhat that he has no more rebirth), ii 79, 149, 166, 204 anupubbābhisamaya (realisation of the truth gradually), views of different schools about, ii 67, 115, 154, 165, 206 anupubbikathā (gradual discourses meant for new recruits or householders), i 125, ii 228 anumatikappa, one of the ten rules discussed in the 2nd Council, ii 35, 39-40

anusaya (dormant passion), views of different schools about, ii

65, 91 £, 94 £, 115, 159, 173,

205, see pariyutthana

anumodanā-kappa, one of the ten rules discussed in the 2nd Council, ii 40 anurūpavihāra (suitable places for meditation), 234 f. anulomacaryā (duties to be performed by Bodhisattvas for spiritual progress), ii 307-8 anusāsanī, one of the three occult powers, i 123 anussati (cogitation of the merits of Buddha, Dhamma, Sangha, Sila, Cāga and Devatā), i 223-7 antarābhava (intermediate existence between death and rebirth), views of different schools about, ii 103, 116 f., 161, 176, 182, 189, 194 f., 197, 205 antava loko (the theory that the world is finite), i 46 f. antānantikā, i 59 f. antevāsika (disciple), i 284 aparakori (end of being or existence), ii 104 appana (fixing attention by a meditator on a subject), i 240-2 apranihitată (desire-less-ness), ii 152 f. apratisamkhyā-nirodha (emancipa-abbhāna (readmission into the Saṅgha), i 298, 303 abrahmacaryāvāsa (leading impure lives), i 37, see brahmacariyāvāsa tion without knowledge), ii 68, abhijjhā (=abhidhyā, undue desire for gain), ii 197, 286

abhiññā (=abhijñā, higher knowledge), i 43, 49, 54, 331, ii 132, 191

Abhidharmakośa (text), ii 136, 162

Abhidharmanyāyānusāra (text), ii 136

Abhidharmasamayapradipikā (text), ii 136

Abhidharmasāra (text), ii 136 Abhidharmahrdaya (text), ii 137 Abhidharmāmṛtasāstra (text), ii

Abhinişkramanasütra, ii 163 amata (=nibbāna, immortal), ii 107, 235 f.

amathita-kappa, one of the ten roles discussed in the and Council, ii 35, 37 amarāvikkhepikā (cel-wobblers those who do not give a definite answer to a question), i 40. 63 f., ii 188 avatthuka (having no basis for origin), ii 66 avicāra, ii 232, see jhāna.

avijjā (=avidyā), non-realisation of the truth, i 102, 267 f., ii 72, 148, 238 aviñnatti (=avijnapti, non-intimation), ii 70, 132, 169 avitakka, see jhäna avipäka (unaccompanied by any result), i 254 f., ii 69

Aviruddhaka, a sect, i 33

avaivartya-caryă. See anivartana-caryă avyākata (=avyākṛta, indeterminable), i 39, 44 f., 83, 100; ii 69, 94 f., 101, 159, 161 ariyamagga (path of sanctification), ii 82 f.

ariyasacca (=āryasatya), the four truths, i 139, 261-4 artipa (non-material), i 68, 70, 96; ii 65, 69, 99 f.

artipa-samapatti (the four higher meditations), i 230-2, ii 214 arhant (=arahat), the fourth stage of sanctification, different views relating to, ii 41, 64, 85 f., 89 n., 90 f., 109, 114, 148 f., 164, 171 f., 195, 204, 243; different types of, ii 86

aśāśvata, see asassata

Aśvamedha (sacrifice), i 9 asṭāṅgika-mārga, see aṭṭhaṅgikamagga asamkhata (=asamskrta), unconstituted, ii 102 f., 116, 133, 161, 168, 173, 178, 197, 206, 192 f.

assiniisattä (=asamini-sattvä, beings with inactive perception), ii 152, 206 assassato loka (a view that the world is impermanent), i 45 f. asubha (unpleasant objects of meditation), i 222-3 asekha (one who has nothing to learn=an arhat), ii 238

104 ākāsa (space), i 37. ii 102, 230 ākāsānañcāyatana (sphere of unbounded space), the fifth meditation, i 72, 86, 95, 230 f. ākincannāyatana (sphere of desire-less-ness or nothingness). the seventh meditation, i 231. 11 232, 288 acariya (spiritual preceptor), i 281, 11 250 ācariyhparamparā (succession of teachers), ii 118 acinnakappa, one of the ten rules discussed in the and Council, 11 35, 38-9 ājīvapārisuddhisila (rules for purity in taking food), i 205 ätman (soul, individuality), i 17, 20, 56, 102, ii 63, 122; discussions re, i 84 f. Ādittapariyāya (sutta), i 148 adesana, one of the three occult powers, i 123 anapanasati (observation of inhalation and exhalation), i 134 aparti (ecclesiastical offence), i 200 ārannaka (forest-dweller), one of the dhutangas, i 210, ii 20

ārāma (hermitage), i 163, 321 āruppa (=ārūpya), higher meditations, i 218, 230-2, ii 102, 151, 198

ārammana (=ālambana, basis), ii

65, 159

āsava (=āsrava, impurity), four kinds, viz., kāma (desire), bhava (desire for rebirth), avidyā (ignorance of the truth), and drsti (wrong views) i 97; ii 287 äśrama (hermitage), i 170 f. äyatana (sphere, region), i 102, 259-260, ii 100, 108, 117, 133, 140, 194 äyu (length of life), i 86, 97 n., ii 74 ähāra (food), i 25, ii 98 f.

āryamārga, ii 102 f., 108, see ariyamagga āryasatya i 97, 102, see ariyasacca ālayavijāāna (store-consciousness, -the substratum of samsāra), ii āvaijana (reflection), ii 100

āvāsa (parish), i 290 f. 321, ii 35, 39, 226, 266, 269 idappaccayatā (this-conditioned, all worldly objects are caused and conditioned), i 265, ii 103 iddhi (miraculous power, =rddhi), i 24, ii 18, 73 iddhipāda (four psychic powers), ii 73
indriya (faculty, organ of sense), i 37, 72, 260-1; ii 67, 96, 100, 132, 180

indriyasamvarasila (precepts for controlling the organs of sense), i 205 indriyavijinana (perception through the organs of sense), ii 104 iriyapatha (=iryapatha, four ways of deportment, viz., walking, standing, sitting and lying down), ii 63, 76 issaranimmana (the theory that the world is a creation of the God), ii 190 ukkhepaniyakamma, an ecclesiastical punishment, i 302 f. ucchedavada (the view that there is no future existence), i 38 f., ii 186 f. uddesabhatta (specified food), i 322 uddosita (outhouse of a monastery), i 296 uddhambhāgīya (the second five samyojanas, fetters, viz., rūparāga, arūparāga, māna, uddhacca and avijjā) ii 238, see orambhāgiya uddhacca (=auddhatya, haughtiness), ii 238 upakkilesa (=upakleśa, minor impurities), i 189, ii 103 upacāra (the first attempt at concentration of thoughts), i 239-40 upajjhāya (=upādhyāya, teacher), i 281 upatthānasālā (assembly room or chapel), i 109 upanissaya (qualificatory condition), i 273 upapāduka (self-born), ii 62, 204 upasampadā (higher ordination),

i 281, ii 280

upassaya (=upāśraya, hermitage), i 296 upahaccaparinibbāyī (=upapadyaparinirvāyin, one who attains emancipation, immediately after rebirth), ii 172 upādāna (substratum or constituents), i 56, 63, 79 f., 90, upāsaka (lay-devotee), i 111, ii 208 f. upāsikā (female lay-devotee), i 112, ii 208 f. upekkhā (equanimity), i 74) ii 287 uposatha (sabbath), i 290-1, ii 13, 209, 226 f., 250, 266 f., 276, 280 ubbāhikā (selection of a body of referees), i 319, ii 33-4 ubhatobhāgavimutta, a class of arhats, ii 86 f., 149 n., 246 usmā (heat of the body), i 86 rsi (hymn-composer), names of, i IO ekaccasassatika (partial lists), i 46, 51 f., ii 188 ekaksanikacitta, (momentary thought), ii 157 ekarasa (same taste or nature), ii ogha (flood of passions, =āsava), i 176 olārika (gross), i 85 (the first five orambhāgiya

kāyaditthi, samyojanas, fetters, viz., sak-vicikicchā, sīlab-bataparāmāsa, kāmacchanda and vyāpāda), ii 216, 228, 238, see uddhambhāgiya osāraņā, an ecclesiastical punishment, i 302 aupapāduka, ii 182, see upapāduka kańkhā (doubt), ii 41, 85 f. kathina, an ecclesiastical ceremony, i 293-4, ii 281 kappa (=kalpa, acon), ii 73, 77, kappiyakāraka (monk-officer in charge of provisions etc.), i 289 kappiyakūti (a house outside the compound of a monastery for storing articles for monks' use), i 285 kappiyabhūmi (the compound for kappiyakūṭī, q.v.), i 289 kamma (deed), i 24 f., 36, 145 f., ii 68 f.

kammaṭṭhāna (subject of meditation), i 133 f., 232 f., 217-8, 237-9 kammavācā (the text containing directions for ecclesiastical acts), i 296, ii 250 kammavāda, i 121, 144

kammavipāka (fruition of action), i 23 karma, (actions which regulate future life) i 18, 22 f., 41, 84, ii 62, 108 f., 116, 150, 162, 193, 232 karmakānda (religious rites), i 105 karuṇā (compassion), ii 84, 147, 172, 204, 287

kaṣāya (five evils), i 96 n.

kasina (object of meditation), i 65, 218-222 kalyāṇamitta (spiritual guide), i 233 kalyāṇavākkaraṇa (ple asant speech or conversation), i 28 kāma (desire), i 96, ii 67, 72 kāmarāga (strong desire, lust), ii 94 f., 235 kāmaloka (the lowest strata of worldly beings), ii 65 kāyakamma (physical acts), i 143 kāyadanda (control of physical acts), i 41, 143, ii 18

kāya-satipaṭṭhāna (minute observation of physic and physical movements), ii 192, 215 kiriyavāda (theory of karma), i 36, 41

kilesa (=kleśa, impurities), ii kutūhala-sālā (place for discussions), i 26, 32, 128 kuśalamūla (merit-roots, viz., alobha, adosa, amoha), i 98 kuśalakarmapatha (the ten abstentions from evil acts), ii 292, 306 n.

kusalāvyakatacitta (indeterminable thought but producing good effect), i 254, ii 95 kṣaṇika (momentary existence of constituents), i 24, ii 167 f., 189, 193 kṣayajñāna (the knowledge of an arhat that he will have no more rebirth), ii 78, 150, 166, 204, see anutpādajñāna kleśa (impurity), ii 206

kleśa-bija (seed of impurity) ii 68 kleśavaraņa (the veil of impurity), ii 88 khajjaka-bhājaka (monk in charge of the distribution of eatables), i 322 khandha (=skandha, constituents of a being), i 24, 61 f., 77 f., 83, 86 f., 89 f., 102, 150, 249 f., ii 100, 108, 117, 132 f., 167 f., 174, 176, 179, 181 f., 194, 215, 230 f.

gaṇa (a religious body), i 34 gati (sphere of existence), ii 173 gahapati (householder), ii 211 f. gahapatāni (female householder), ii 217 gāmakhetta (parish), ii 13 gāmaņi (head of a village), i 147: ii 220 gămantara-kappa, one of the ten rules discussed in the 2nd Council, ii 35 gihi (householder), ii 172, 236 guru (spiritual preceptor), ii 258 guhā (cave-dwelling), i 284 gotrabhūmidharma (the stage in which one becomes a member of the Buddha family, i.e. a sotāpanna), ii 90 cankamasālā (place for walking while meditating), i 285

cakkavāļa (world), i 59

cakkhu-viññāṇa (visual perception), ii 100-1 catuskotika (four-fold extreme positions), i 60

caraka (wanderer), i 31, see paribbājaka caryā (four ways of life of a Bodhisattva), ii 62

cāga (gift), ii 222 f., 234 cătuyămasamvara (four kinds of restraint observed by the Jainas), i 41, 145 cătuddisa-sangha (monks of the four corners of the world), i 317, 320 citta (=mano=viññāṇa, mind, thought, mental state), i 54. 200 f., ii 19, 73, 91, 114 f., 133, 168 f.

citta-vippayutta (or viprayukta or visamprayukta), (dissociated from mind or thought), ii 65, 69, 71, 94 f., 115, 133, 141-2, 168, 173 citta-vimutti or ceto-vimutti (mental emancipation), i 19, 132, ii 232 citta-samprayukta (associated with mind or thought), ii 96, 115, 159, 205 civara (monk's robe), i 155 civara-nidāhaka (keeper of robes), i 287 civara-patiggähaka (receiver robes), i 287 cīvara-bhājaka (distributor robes), i 287, 322 cetasika (=caitasika mental), ii 91, 109, 114f., 132f., 159, 169 cetiya (=caitya, memorial mound), i 113, 178, ii 24, 51, 105, 249 ceto-samatha (tranquillity o f mind), ii 219 chanda (strong desire), i 95 chanda (consent), i 317 Chandokā, a Vedic śākhā, i 10, 12 chalābhijāti (six grades beings), i 37 chalupekkha (indifferent in respeet of the six organs of sense), ii 150 Japila, a sect, i 33 jalogimpātum, one of the ten rules discussed in the Council, ii 35, 37 jätarüparajatam (gold and silver), ii 36, 38 jāti (birth), i 273 jätibhümi (birthplace of Buddha), i 173 jiva (soul), i 68, 85 f., ii 181 jantāghara (bathroom), i 285 jñāna (knowledge), ii 198, 132 jñānadarśana (knowledge and insight), ii 151 Jñānaprasthāna-sūtra, ii 133 jñeyāvaraṇa (veil covering the truth), ii 88 jhāna (=dhyāna, meditation), ii 65, 74, 86, 137, 156, 228 ňatti (=jňāpti, announcement), 1 299 ñāṇa (=jñāṇa, q.v.), ii 71, 98 ñăti (=jñăti, relative), ii 191 tam jivam tam sariram (soul is identical with the body), i 38, 46 f., 73, 88 ii 189 tajjaniyakamma (censure), i 299tanhā (=trsnā), i 25, 271 f., ii 93 tattva (identity), i 87 tatthaparinibbāyī (an Anāgāmi who attains nibbana in the heaven in which he is reborn), 11 235 tathatā (thatness, the reality), ii 88 tathāgata (=Buddha), i 46 f., ii 8o tathagatagarbha (the source of all tathāgatas), i 98 tapasyā (religious austerities), i 18, 30, 41 tassapāpiyyasikā (an ecclesiastical method of settling dispute), i tinavatthäraka, (an ecclesiastical method of settling dispute), i 309 Tittiriya, a Vedic śākhā, i 10, 12

Tittiriya, a Vedic śākhā, i 10, 12 titthiya (heretic, non-Buddhist), i 145, 159, 189

Tedandika, a sect, i 33

trikāya (three bodies of Buddha), viz., nirmāņa or rūpa (apparitional), sambhoga (celestial), dharma or svabhāva (real), ii 62 tridhātu (the three spheres of existence), i 42 triratna (Buddha, Dhamma and Sangha), ii 21, 215, 235 f., 244, 249 trisarana (the three refuges in the triratna), ii 209, 233, 277-280 trisāhasra-mahāsāhasra lokadhātu (innumerable worlds), i 99 thambha (pride), ii 286 thullaccaya (serious fault), i 290 thera (=sthavira, a fully ordained monk), ii 17, 258

Dakkhinävibhangasutta, ii 164
daršana-märga (the sixteen moments of the comprehension of the truth leading to bhävanämärga) ii 92, 152, 155, 158, 108 dana (gift), ii 109 f.

ditthadhammanibbānavādins (the view that nibbāna is attained in the present life), i 74 f. ditthi (=drsti, religious or philosophical views), i 140, 272, ii 93 dibba-cakkhu (superhuman vision), ii 16 dukkha (unhappiness), i 18, 262-3, ii 40, 97 f., 107 f., 229, dukkata (fault), i 290 duskaracaryā (austere practices), i 97 drstadharmasukhavihāra (enjoyment of happiness in the present body), ii 151

Devadhammika, a sect, i 33 devayānist (forest-dweller seeking heavenly existence), i 30 dosa (=dveṣa, hatred), ill-feeling, i 23, 148, ii 93, 95, 235, 288 dravya (substance), ii 96, 145, 169, 178 dvangula-kappa, one of the ten rules discussed in the and Council, ii 35, 37 dhamma (=dharma, religion, things of the world, practices, truth or reality, elements), i 9 f., 108, 117, 192, ii 109, 137 f., 141 n., 172, 224, 229 dhammatthitatā (sameness of objects), ii 103 dhammāyatana (anything that comes within the sphere of mind), ii 92, 100, 162 dharma, ii 68, 78, 81, 173, 204, five, ii 137, 141 dharma=mārgaṅga, ii 116 dharmakāya (the real body of Buddha, the truth, the reality), ii 76

dharmacakra (the wheel of law), i 101, 103 dharmatathatā (sameness of objects), i 98

dharmadhātu (the reality), i 98 dharmasūnyatā (absence of characteristics of objects, non-existence of the phenomenal objects), i 48, ii 62, 88

Dharmaskandha, a text, ii 134 dhātu (component elements of a being, also world), i 102, 132, 258-9, ii 17, 117, 133, 140,

194, 230
Dhātukāya, a text, ii 135 dhūtangas, the thirteen austere practices, i 206-11, 236 f., ii 20 dhūtavāda (a follower of the 13 ascetic practices), i 195, ii 16 f. dhyāna, ii 64, 91, 151, 160, 205, see jhāna navakammika (supervisor of erection work in a monastery), i 296, 322 navatattva (nine substances in Jaina doctrines), i 40 nāmarūpa (mind and matter), i 24, 249, 269, ii 120 nibbāna (=nirvāṇa), ii 102, 107, 138 f., 140 nimitta (characteristics of an obnimitta (characteristics of an object), i 68, 239, ii 66, 100 niyata (destined), ii 83 f., 173 niyatisangatibhāva (doctrine of fatalism), i 36 niyāma (law, order), ii 82, 160 restraint) nirodha-samāpatti (meditation in which perception ceases), ii 64, 173 nirodha=nirvāṇa, i 263, ii 229 nirvāṇa, i 62, 98, ii 106, 205 nissaggiya-pācittiya, a section of the Pātimokkha, i 306, 311 nissaya (resources, requisites), i 281 f., 296, 300 nissāraņā, an ecclesiastical punishment, i 302 nitārtha (deeper meaning), ii 78, 108, 148 nekkhamma (=naişkramya, renunciation), ii 72 nevasaññanāsaññāyatana (the sphere in which perceptive faculty remains inactive, i.e. there is neither perception nor non-perception), i 72, 86, 06, ii 161, 108

neyārtha (superficial meaning), ii naivaśaikṣa-nāśaikṣajñāna (knowledge which is neither that of a perfect nor that of a nonperfect), ii 149, 151 paccaya (24), (cause or condition).

paccaya (24), (cause or condition), ii 71-2, 73 paññatti, see prajñapti pannatti, see prajnapti pannatti, see prajnapti pannatti, see prajnapti

201-2, 218, 222 f., 234, ii 19, 98, 151 patikassanā (restrictions to begin over and over again), i 304 patikkosanā (reproving), i 302 patigha (repugnance, anger), i 72. 11 115, 157 paticcasamuppāda (theory of origin through cause and condition), i 25, 264-73, ii 62, 102, 161, 197 paticchanna (a concealed offence). patinna (formal confession of a wrong), i 308 patisambhidā (4), (analytical knowledge), attha, dhamma, nirutti and patibhāna, i 331, ii 228 Paţisambhidāmagga (a text), ii 133 patisäräniyakamma (act of making one ask for pardon), 1 301 pattha, a kind of measure, i 192 pabbajjā (ordination), ii 280 pabbäjaniyakamma (temporary removal from the monastery), 1 301 paradhammakuśala (knowledge of others' attainments), i 86, ii 149, 204 paramattha (= paramārtha, the real meaning, the highest, absolute) ii 78, 100, 185 paravitāraņā (acquisition of knowledge through others' help), ii 41, 85 f.

parikamma (preparation for meditation), i 239 parinibbāna (=parinirvāṇa). 105, 220, 244 paribbājaka (wanderer), i 31 f., ii 220 paribbājakārāma (hermitage wanderers), i 26, 32, 128 paribbājikā (female wanderer), i pariyutthāna (=paryavasthāna. appearance of the passion so long dormant), ii 91 n., 92 f., 96, 115, 159, 205 parivāsa (probationary period, an ecclesiastical punishment). 300, 303 parivena (large monastery), i 322 parisă (assembly), ii 7, 210 palibodha (hindrance to meditation), i 216-7 pavāraņā (a religious ceremony after the rains), i 293, 298, ii pācittiya, a section of the Pātimokkha, i 306, 311 pacinakā (monks of the west), ii 27 patidesaniya, a section of the Pätimokkha, i 306, 312 pāṭihāriya (marvels), i 123 Pätimokkha (the monastic code). 1 155, 305-312 pātimokkha-saṃvara-sila, i 204 păramită (six or ten virtues acquired by a Bodhisattva), ii 83, 300 f. pārājikā, a section of the Pātimokkha, i 305, 310, 333 f. Pārāsāriya, a sect, i 33 Pārāyana, a text, ii 229 parisuddhi (declaration of purity in a Pärimokkha assembly), i 200 £, 340 pitryana (path of sacrifices), i 30 pindiyalopabhojanam, i 288-9 puggala (=pudgala, soul) i 25, 83, 102; ii 92, 132, 166, 168, 176, 179 f., 182, 184, 189, Igi f. punna (=punya, merit), ii 88, 100, 150 puthujjana (=pṛthagjana, has not yet reached the sotapatti stage), ii 81, 95. 147, 157, 171, 195, 205 pudgala, see puggala pudgala-nairātmya (absence soul), i 84 pudgala-śūnya (non-existence of soul), i 48, 103 pubbenivāsa-ñāna (knowledge of former births), i 49, 54, ii 181 purusakara (human effort), ii 190 purusamedha, a sacrifice, i o purohita (priest), i 13 pütimurlabhesajfam (cattle-trine used as medicine), i 288 Prakaraņapāda, a text, ii 133 prakrti (the original source of the material world), i 35, 50, 91 prakrti-caryā (the primary practices of a Bodhisattva), ii 306 prajňapti (=paňňatti, concept, nominal existence), ii 109, 174. 178, 181, 184, 187 f. Prajňaptiváda, a text, ii 195 Prajňaptišástra, a text, ii 135 pranidhāna-caryā (the practices of a Bodhisattva), ii 307 pratisamkhyā-nirodha (emancipation through knowledge), ii 68, 102 pratyekabuddha, ii 80 prityāhāravyūha-samādhi (meditation in which the bliss of emancipation is enjoyed), i go phala (fruits of sanctification), ii 90 f., 102 f., 107, 152, 160, 173. 191 phala-bhājaka (monk in charge of distribution of fruits), i 322 phassa (=sparśa, contact), i 271 bala (power), ii 74, 79 f. Bavharija (=Bahvrca), a Vedic šākhā, i 10, 12 bahussuta (vastly learned), i 133. 11 17 Bārhaspatya, i 66 bija (root, seed), ii 94, 168 Buddhayāna (=Mahāyāna), 116, 164 bodhicitta (the vow to attain the highest knowledge) ii 83, 305, 307 bodhijňána, i 98 bodhiprasthānacitta (the mental state of a Bodhisattva, who has already commenced the practices), ii 307 bodhipakkhiya dhamma (the thirty-seven practices recommended for the attainment of full knowledge), ii 8 n., 62, 198 bodhyanga (=bojjhanga), the seven acquisitions which qualify a person to attain full knowledge), viz., smrti, dharmapravicaya, virya, priti, prasrabdhi, samādhi, upekṣā, ii 62, 159, 161 brahmacariyāvāsa (pure religious life), ii 153-4, 171, 195 brahmacāri (those who live a holy life), i 12, 65, ii 82, 207, 219, 227 brahmadeyya (offer made to a Brahmin teacher), i 169

brahmavaccasi (cf. brahmavaṇṇi, one having complexion like that of Mahäbrahmä), i 28 brahmavihāra, (four practices leading to concentration of mind which enables one to reach Brahmaloka, viz., metrā, karuṇā muditā and upekkhā), i 15, 228-230, ii 148, 153, 214, 228, 232, 285, 287, 290-292

brahmaloka (the sphere of Brahmā gods), i 30

Brahma-sahavyatā (union with Brahmā), i 10, 14 byāpāda (malevolence, angry thought), ii 235

bhakti (devotion), ii 287, see śraddhā bhaṇḍāgārika (store-keeper in a monastery), i 287, 322 bhattuddesaka (distributor of meals), i 322 bhava (desire for existence), i bhāvanā (meditation), i 228, ii 198 bhāvanāmārga (the moment or stage following the darśanamārga q.v.), ii 152, 157, 198 bhūtakoti (the limit of existence), i 98 bhūmi (ten stages of sanctification), ii 62, 308-310 macchariya (miserliness), ii 286 malkha (hypocrisy), ii 286

magga (path, stages of sanctification), i 199, 263, ii 69, 99, 103, 107, 110, 160, 173, 198, 229 maggabhāvanā (higher meditational practices), ii 66, 70, 153, 206

Majjhima-desa (middle country of the Buddhists), i 3 majjhimā patipadā (middle path), i 137, see atthangika-magga mada (pride), ii 286 manāyatana (sphere or scope of mind), ii 100 manokamma (mental actions), i 143 manodanda (control of mind), i 41, ii 18 manudhātu (mind), ii 198 manomaya (mental), i 72, 85, ii manovijnana (mental perception), II 144 mahākaruņāsamāpatti (meditation induced through great compassion), ii 148 mahājanapada (=province), i 4 Mahäthūpa, ii 114 mahāpurusalaksaņa (physical signs of a great man), i 43, 180 mahābhūta (the great elements), i 37 mahābhūmika (broad divisions of mental states), ten, ii 141 n. Mahāvibhāsā (commentarial literature), ii 136 mahāsāla (rich), i 28, 220 mahiddhika (possessed of miraculous power), ii 17 Māgandika, a sect i 33 mātukā (=mātikā, synopsis), ii 55 māna (pride), ii 238, 286 manatta (suspension for an ecclesiastical offence), i 300 märge anvayajñāna (gradual realisation of the truth), ii 153

māyā (deceit), ii 286

micchatta (=mithyātva, false), i 98 ii 82 micchāditthi (=mithyādrsti wrong view, i.e. all non-Buddhistic views), i 48, ii 138 middha (sluggishness, drowsiness), ii 198 muttăcăra (an ascetic practice, lit. free from conventions), i 18 muni (hermit), i 30 mudită (joy through appreciation), ii 287. See brahmavihara mudindriya (mrdu+indriya, monk of weak faculty), ii 65 mūlāntika (original or the subtlest form of skandhas), ii 167 mūlāya patikassanā (renewal of probationary period), i 300, 303 mettă (=maitri, feeling of amity, love, affection, etc.), i 110, 228, ii 84, 147, 172, 204, 228, 287. See brahmavihāra moksa (emancipation), i 140, ii 177 moha (delusion), i 23, 148, ii 95, yāgubhājaka (monk in charge of distribution of gruel), i 322 yati (ascetic), i 105 yebhuyyasikā (settlement of disputes by votes) i 308 yoga-śāstras (texts on meditation), i 196 yoniso manasikāra (concentrated attention) ii 71 răga (desire, attachment), i 23, 148, ii 41, 66, 85 f., 95, 115 f., 157, 194, 235, 238 rūpa (matter, form), i 24, 74, 85 £, 249 £; ii 67, 133, 138 £, 144, 180, 184 £, 198 rūpakāya (=nirmāṇa-kāya, apparitional body of Buddha), ii 74. 204

rūpa-dhātu (sphere of form, material sphere), ii 99 f. rūpa-loka, ii 65 rūpaskandha (material constituents of the body), ii 132 rūpendriya (material organs of sense), ii 99

lokadharma (the eight factors which govern a wordly man's life, viz., läbha, aläbha, yasa, ayasa, pasaṃsā, nindā, sukha and dukkha), i 98

Lokaprajñapti-abhidharma śāstra, ii 137

Lokāyatika, i 66

lokiya (= laukika, worldly), ii 65, 70, 97, 107, 206 lokuttara (=lokottara, transcendental), i 96, ii 63, 70, 73 f., 81, 107, 206 lokottaradhyāna (meditation of the supramundane sphere), ii 116, 159 łaukika-mārga, (practices of a common man for reaching the goal), ii 156 f.

laukika-samyagdṛṣṭi, (right view of a common man) ii 157

laukika-śraddhendriya (the faculty of faith of a common man), ii laukikāgradharma (subtle wordly mental states), ii 132, 157-8 vacibheda (vocal activity), ii 97 vacisarikhāra (=vacibheda), ii 98 vaccakuṭi (privy), i 285 vassā (rainy retreats) spent by Buddha, i 164, 167, 169 vassāvāsa (rainy retreats of vassāvāsa (rainy retreats of monks), i 110, 292-3, ii 208, 281 väjapeyya, a sacrifice, i 9 vänaprastha (renunciation), i 105 väsanä (subtle mental state), ii 168 vikālabhojana (afternoon meal), i 139 vicikicchā (doubt about the excellence of the triratna), ii a35 f.

vijfiapti (=vififiatti, intimation, communication), ii 68, 70 f., 132 vijnāna (=vinnāna, function of mind), i 24 f., 85 f., 251, 269, 255, ii 66, 71, 99, 101, 116, 133, 144, 161, 170, 230 of mind or consciousness), i 72 vijňānavāda (=yogācāra, the theory that the conscious principle is real), i 20, 60 viññāṇa, see vijñāna vinnanarthiti (classes of beings), 1 42, 73 vitakka (reflection), i 74, 98, 116 viparyāsa (reverse views), ii 198 vipassană (introspection), ii 86 vipāka (fruit, maturity), ii 88, 145, 190 vippavāsa (living alone in a monastery), i 303 vibhavatrsnā (desire for annihilation), ii 198 Vibhāṣā-śāstra (commentarial literature), ii 26 vimutti (=vimukti, emancipation), i 17. 36, 78, 98, ii 80, 104, 116, 149, 164, 206 vimokkha (=vimoksa, the eight stages of emancipation), i 196, ii 86 viraga (detachment), ii 67, 71, viriya (=virya, energy, exertion), i 36, 95, ii 96 vivadādhikarana (ecclesiastical disputes), i 319 vihāra (monastery), i 152, 321 Vekhanassa, a sect, i 33 vedanā (feeling, sensitivity), i 85 f., 145, 251, 271, ii 137 vohāra (action, speech), ii 77-8 vyakaraniya (ways of exposition), i 124

vyāpāda (ill-will), ii 197 śakti (latent power, energy), ii 96 śabdaśāstra (grammar), ii 26 Săriputrăbhidharma, a text, ii 137 śāśvata (eternal), i 199 f., ii 178 sīksā (training in the fundamental principles), ii 19 śūnyatā (non-existence of phenomenal objects), i 48, 60, 132 ii 152 f., 200, 232, 288 śraddhā (faith), i 30, 98, 139 ii 132, 218, 222, 234, 285-7 śraddhendriya (faculty of faith), 11 96, 115, 197 śrāmanyaphala, see sāmaññaphala śrāvaka (a disciple, a Hīnayānist), 11 26, 84 Srāvakayāna (=Hīnayāna), ii 116 164 sanikapparäga (desireful intention), ii 67 sankaramaka (transmigrator), i samkhata (=samskrta, constituted), i 249 f., ii 103, 162, 178, 192 samkhārā (=samskāra, impressions, aggregate of the conditions or essential properties for a given process or result), i 58, 85 f., 257 f., 268 f., ii 72, 94, 166, 231 Sangitiparyāya, a text, ii 135

Sangitisuttanta, i 184, ii 136

samiña (perception, awareness), i 65 f., 85 f., 218, 257, ii 183 samtananuvrtti (continuity of characteristics), i 57 samvara (restraint), ii 68 samvrti (conventional), ii 78, 100, 184 f., 189

saṃsāra (transmigration), 58 saṃylojana (=saññojana, fetter), ii 88 f., 92, 143, 152, 157, 215 saṃskṛta, see saṃkhata sangahavatthu (four means of gaining popularity, viz., dāna, peyyavāca, atthacariyā, samānattatā), ii 216

sanghatthera (head of a congregation of monks, the seniormost monk of a particular parish), i 316 f., ii 24, 244 f., 252

sanghaparināyaka, see sanghatthera sanghapitara, see sanghatthera sanghabhatta (food offered to a congregation of monks), i 321 sanghabheda (dissension in the monastic organisation), i 292, 332, ii 5, 9 sangharāji (a dissension but not recognised as sanghabheda), ii sanghādisesa (=sanghāvašesa, an ecclesiastical offence), i 303, 305, 310, 333 f.

sanghārāma (residence of monks), i 313 f. sakadāgāmi (the third stage of sanctification), ii 91, 234 sakavāda (=Theravāda or Vibhajyavāda), ii 199, 201 sakkäyaditthi (=satkäyadīsti, belief in the existence of a self), i 48, 84, ii 177 f., 234 f.

sagga (=svarga, heaven), i 17, ii 232 f.

saggakatham (talk re. heavenly life), i 126; ii 229

saññá, see samjñă saññavedayitanirodha (meditation in which perception and sensitivity cease), ii 160, 205, 231 sati (=smṛti, memory, awareness), ii 74, 95 satiparthāna (smṛṭyupasthāna, a meditational practice for keeping the mind alert), i 186, 195, ii \76, 116, 132, 153, 158£., 160, 214, 228, 285 sativinaya (an eccelesiastical way of settling dispute), i 308 sattakkhattuparama (one who will not be reborn more than seven times), ii 173

saddhā, see śraddhā

saddhindriya (faculty of faith), ii santhägåra (meeting place), i 175 sabhägå (those who lead the same mode of life), ii 15 samana (= śramana, novice), i 187 samatājñāna (knowledge of sameness or equality), ii 148 samathābhinivesa (inclination to quietude), ii 86 samayavimutta (finally emancipated), ii 65 samādhi (meditation), i 23, 78, 95, ii 99, 205 samāpatti (higher meditational attainments), i 95, 230-2; ii 64 f., 159 samāhita (concentrated), ii 97, 159 samudaya (origin), i 263, ii 229 samodhāna (a combined, inclusive probation), i 303 sammatta (=samyakatva, right), sammāditthi (right view), ii 93, sammappadhāna (right exertion), ii 76 sammukhavinaya (a method of settling ecclesiastical dispute), i 308 sammuti, see samvṛti sammutisacca (conventional truth), ii 185 sambhogakāya (refulgent or celestial body of Buddha), ii 76 samyakatvaniyata (destined to proceed along the right path) i 98, 101 samyakatvanyāma (leading to the right goal), ii 82, 92, 115, 147, 152 f., 172, 194 samyāprāsa, a sacrifice, i 9 sambodhi (full enlightenment),

ii 91, 235

sambojjhanga, see bodhyanga saraga (with attachment), ii 67, sarvam asti (all exist), ii 196 sarvajňatā (omniscience), i 98, 100 sarvākārajnatā (full knowledge in detail), ii 80 salākā (stick for voting or distribution of food), i 289, 317, 319, 322 salāyatana (spheres of the six organs of sense), i 270 f., ii savitakka (with reflection), ii 232 savicara (with mental examination), ii 232 sassatavāda, i 45 f., ii 186, 188 sātheyya (double-dealing), ii 286 sādhanā (practice of religious duties), ii 18, 83 f. sābhogā (associated with mental enjoyment), ii 66 sāmaññaphala (fruits of the life of a recluse), ii 65, 154, 156 206 sārambha (haughtiness), ii 286 sārammana (with basis), ii 95 sāsrava (impure), i 77, ii 74 sikkhāpada (precept), i 295, 330, 335, 339, ii 223 singilonakappa, (one of the ten rules discussed in the 2nd Council), ii 35 f. sīmā (limit of a parish), i 290 sila (precept), i 19, 78, 199 f.,

ABBREVIATIONS

Abhidharmakośa. See Kośa

Abhi, S. = Abhidhammatthasangaha (P.T.S. ed.)

Ang. = Anguttara Nikaya

Asia Major. See Masuda

Aspects = Aspects of Mahāyāna Buddhism and its Relation to Hinayana by N. Dutt

AMB. See Aspects

Atthas. = Atthasalini (P.T.S. ed.)

Br. Up. = Brhadaranyaka Upanisad

Bu-ston = History of Buddhism (Chos-byung) by Bu-ston, translated from Tibetan by E.

Obermiller

Chā. Up. = Chāndogya Upaniṣad

Cv. = Cullavagga of the Vinaya Piţaka

Divyā. = Divyāvadāna edited by Cowell and Neil

El or Ep. Ind. = Epigraphia Indica

EMB. = Early Monastic Buddhism by N. Dutt

IHQ. = Indian Historical Quarterly

Ind. Ant. = Indian Antiquary

I-tsing = I-tsing: Records of the Buddhist Religion by

Takakusu

= Iournal of the Pali Text Society

JPTS. = Journal of the Pali Text Society

JRAS. = Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society

Kośa = L'Abhidharmakośa de Vasubandhu traduit et annoté par Louis de la Vallée Poussin

Kośa-Vyākhyā = Abhidharmakośavyākhyā of Yaśomitra edited by Wogihara

=Kathāvatthu (P.T.S. ed.)

Kvu.

Kvu. A. = Kathāvatthu Aṭṭhakathā (P.T.S. ed.) Lal. Vis. = Lalita Vistara (-ed. R. L. Mitra)

Masuda = Origin and Doctrines of Early Indian Buddhist Schools—a translation of the Hsüan Chwang's version of Vasumitra's treatise by J. Masuda published in the Asia Major,

vol. II (1925)

Mmk, = Manjuśrimulakalpa edited by T. Ganapati Sāstrī (Trivandrum Sanskrit Series)

Mtu. = Mahāvastu edited by E. Senart

Mv. = Mahāvagga of the Vinaya Piṭaka

M. Vr. = Madhyamakavṛtti edited by Louis de la Vallée Poussin

Pațis. = Pațisambhidāmagga (P.T.S. ed.)

Schiefner = Tāranātha's Geschichte des Buddhismus translated into German by A. Schiefner

Stein = Stein's Translation of Kalhana's Chronicle of Kashmir (Rājataranginī)

Sum. Vil. = Sumangala Vilāsinī (P.T.S. ed.)

Tāranātha. See Schiefner

Vamsattha, = Vamsatthappakāsinī (P.T.S. ed.)

Vasumitra. See Masuda

Vism. = Visuddhimagga (P.T.S. ed.)

Vyākhyā. See Kośavyākhyā

Watters = On Yuan Chwang's Travels in India (629-645 A.D.) by T. Watters

Winternitz = History of Indian Literature by M. Winternitz (Calcutta University edition)

Printed and published by J. C. Sarkhel, Manager, Calcutta Oriental Press, Ltd. 9, Panchanan Ghose Lane, Calcutta. 204 f., ii 70, 99, 209, 218, 222 f., 234, 264 silacittapaññā (=the eightfold path), i 199, ii 285 silabbata (=silavrata, rituals), i sihanādikā (monks described as lion-roarers), i 117, 190

106, 272

suññată, see śūnyată.

suddhantaparivāsa (a probation for complete purification), i 303 suta (=śruta, learning), ii 223 sekha (one who is still learning, i.e. not yet an arhat), i 169, ii 238 sekhiya, a section of the Pātimokkha, i 306, 312 senāsanagāhāpaka (receiver of bed and seat), i 322 senāsanapaññāpaka (regulator of bed and seat), i 286, 322 sotāpatti (=srota-āpatti, the first stage of sanctification), ii 97, 99, 153, 193, 206, 224, 234

skandha, see khandha skandha-santāna (continuity of the subtle constituents of a being), i 22, ii 166, 178, 181 stūpa (telic-mound), ii 164, 209, stūpa (relic-mound), ii 164, 209, 244 f.

steyasamvāsaka (one who lives clandestinely with the monks), ii 105 smrti, see sati.

smṛtyupasthāna, see satipatthāna srota-āpanna, see sotāpatti hadayavatthu (heart as the scat of feeling), ii 198

hammiya (a large building), i 284 OTHER WORKS BY THE SAME AUTHOR

1. ASPECTS OF MAHĀYĀNA BUDDHISM AND ITS RELATION TO HINAYANA with a foreword by Prof. Louis de la

Vallée Poussin. Demy 8vo. pp. xiii+358. Price Rs. 12/-Chap. I: A historical survey of the period of transition from Hīnayāna to Mahāyāna.—Chap. II: General observations on the relation between Hinayana and Mahayana.-Chap. III: Doctrine of Hinayana and Mahayana compared (a) Preliminary, (b) Doctrine of Kāya, (c) Doctrine of Nirvāna, (d) Doctrine of Truths.—Chap. IV: The stages of spiritual progress-Chap. V: The Vinaya of the Mahāyānists. Appendix: A note on the Prajñāpāramitā.

2. SUMANGALA-VILĀSINĪ (Commentary on Dīgha Nikāya), Suttas VIII-XV, Fasc. I Super Royal 8vo. Price Rs. 2/-

 PANCAVIMSATISĀHAŚRIKĀ PRAJNĀPĀRAMITĀ, Vol. I. Edited for the first time from original manuscripts with critical notes, introduction and résumé. Demy 8vo. pages xxxvi+269. Price

4. BODHISATTVAPRATIMOKSA-SÜTRAM edited for the first time from an original ms. deposited in the Cambridge University Library with an Introduction. Price Re. 1/-

5. EARLY MONASTIC BUDDHISM, Vol. I, Demy 8vo. pp.

viii+340. Paper bound Rs. 6/-

The Buddhist, (April 1942) of Ceylon writes: "Dr. Dutt has done a distinct service to English readers in bringing together a variety of valuable information on kindred topics in a compendious volume decidedly scholarly."

6. GILGIT MANUSCRIPTS, Vol. I. This volume is critically edited for the first time from the original Buddhist-Sanskrit manuscripts discovered at Gilgit in the territories of H.H. the Maharaja of Jammu & Kashmir.

7. GILGIT MANUSCRIPTS, Vol. II, Samādhirāja-sūtra (part i, Chs. 1-16) also called the Candrapradipa-sūtra. A critical edition based on the Mss. discovered at Gilgit, with an Introduction in English containing a résumé of the 16 chapters. Pages xxii+214.

8. GILGIT MANUSCRIPTS. Vol. III, Mülasarvästivädavinayavastu) pt. 1, containing the Bhaisajyavastu (fragments) including Sthaviragatha (also in fragments).

 GILGIT MANUSCRIPTS, Vol. III, (Mūlasarvāstivādavinayavastu) pt. 2, containing the Civaravastu, Kathinavastu, Kośambakavastu critically edited with Introduction and their résumé in English. Pages xxii + 222.

10. GILGIT MANUSCRIPTS, Vol. III, (Mūlasarvāstivāda-vinayavastu) pt. 3, containing Pandulobitakavastu, Pudgalavastu, Parivasikavastu, Posadhasthapanavastu, & Sayanasanavastu.

[N.B.—The three volumes of Gilgit Manuscripts have been published by the gracious permission of His Highness Shri Rajarajeshwar Maharajadhiraj Maharaja Shri Harisinghji Bahadur, G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., K.C.V.O., L.L.D. of Jammu and Kashmir].

Calcutta Oriental Book Agency

9, PANCHANAN GHOSE LANE, CALCUTTA.

"ATALOGUED.

Central Archaeological Library,

NEW DELHI. 7344

Call No 294.8 / Desp.

Author— 73445 Dest.

Author— 73445 Dest.

Title— Fayly monaski

Buddhish. w.l. II.

"A book that is shut is but a block"

RCHAEOLOGICAL

GOVT. OF INDIA

Department of Archaeology

NEW DELHI.

The property of Archaeology

NEW DELHI.

Please help us to keep the book clean and moving.

5. 8. 148. N. DELHI.