GOVERNMENT OF INDIA

ARCHÆOLOGICAL SURVEY OF INDIA

CENTRAL ARCHÆOLOGICAL LIBRARY

ACCESSION NO. 7678

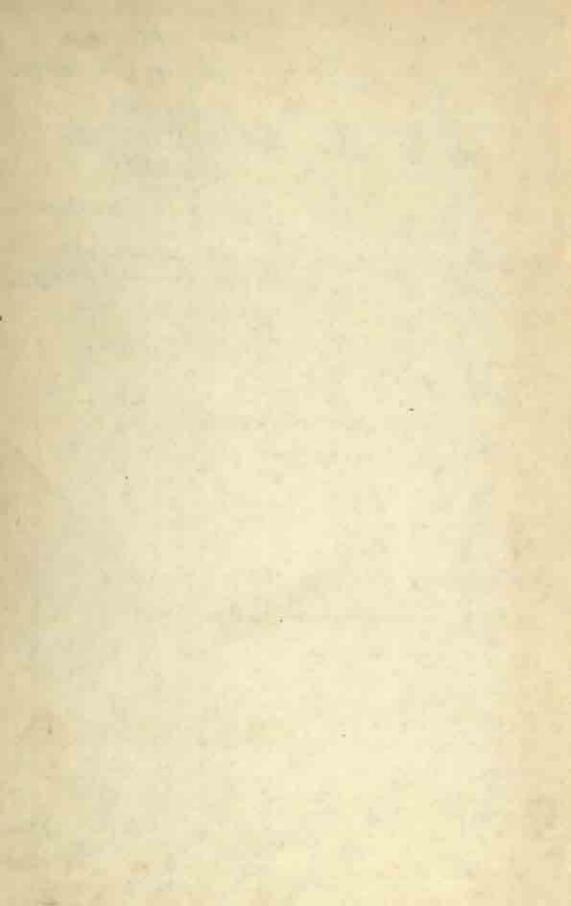

CALL No. 294-6

Airy

D.G.A. 79.

A CARL PURE DE LA CONTRACTOR DE LA CONTR

RADHA KUMUD MOOKERII ENDOWMENT LECTURES, 1946 ASPECTS OF THE SOCIAL AND POLITICAL SYSTEM OF MANUSMRTI

CHOCKICH UNINGRATE

WHORK KURUD HOCKENI ENDOWHERT LECTURES, 1346

SHECTS OF THE SOCIAL AND POLITICAL STREET OF

MANUSMICTI

ASPECTS OF THE SOCIAL AND POLITICAL SYSTEM OF

MANUSMRTI

BY

K. V. RANGASWAMI AIYANGAR of many or party are a creat

294.6_ Air

(RADHA KUMUD MOOKERJI LECTURES, 1946)

7678

Sa 53 Airy

LUCKNOW UNIVERSITY 1949 AVDITAGO OF A LIBER MIT RO ATTURA

MANUSMRTT

PRINTED AT THE MADRAS LAW JOURNAL PRESS.

MYLAPORE, MADRAS AND PUBLISHED BY

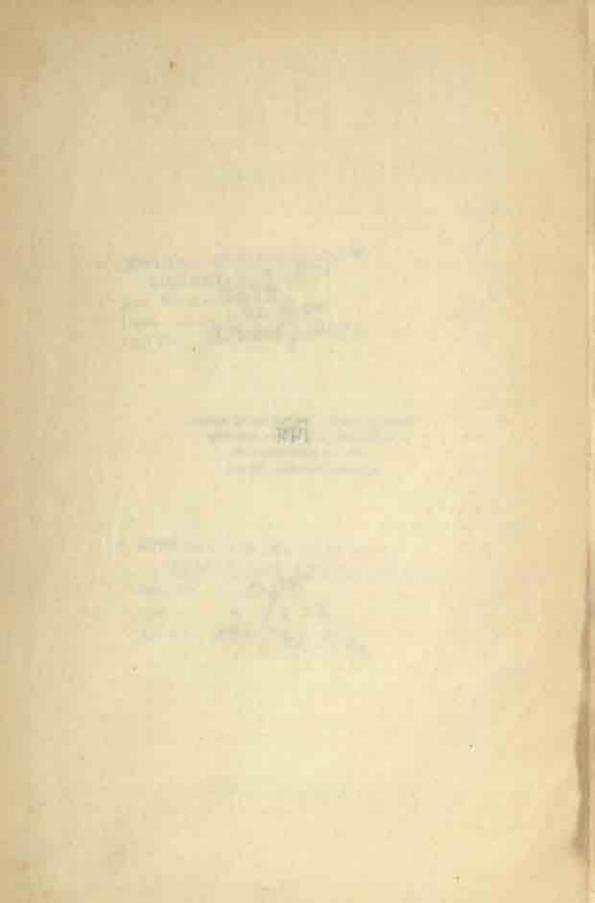

N. RAMARATNAM, M.A., B.L.

FOR THE LUCKNOW UNIVERSITY

Date 390 54 Any

पित्रे

35

PREFACE.

In the literatures of the world, Manusmrti has held for centuries a unique position. Even in its present recension it is admittedly above two thousand years old. For atleast a thousand years earlier the name of Manu was cited as the author of many floating dicta to which his name gave weight. Even in Arthasastra a school of thought springing from Manu was held in esteem long before the fourth century B. C. The book does not claim to be a direct utterance of God, but to have been revealed by the Father of Mankind to assembled sages through another sage (Bhrgu) to whom its terms had been communicated, and in the presence of the Patriarch himself. The inspirer of the work is one of fourteen Manus, who are divinely appointed regents of the universe for vast time cycles (manuantara), and who are immortal. By agreement, it has been accorded primacy among smytis, and dicta opposed to its are rejected. Its study is imposed as a duty on the leaders and teachers of society. Manu is said in Indian tradition to have been the first king of men, the greatest ruler ever born, and 'entitled to veneration by all who claim to be intelligent' (mānanīyo manīsiņām), in the words of Kālidāsa. For thousands of years Indian society has been moulded on the lines laid down in Manusmyti. To uphold Manu's words has been to uphold the Indian social order, to condemn his teachings to reject it. Accordingly, anti-Hindu propaganda dating from the advent of British rule in India, whether conducted by followers of alien religions or by Indians who desired to reform their own religion or society, has made Manusmrti the chief target of attack. At the same time, Hindu reformers like Swami Dayanand Saraswati, who have advocated a purification of Hinduism and of Hindu society, have turned to Manusmrti and have used it as a text-book for homilies to Indian leaders. Centuries ago it was carried over the seas by Indian colonists and conquerors and became the law of the lands over which they ruled, and the foundation of their social and political order. Even in the West, its wisdom and foresight have attracted the attention of men not borne down by convention and habit, like Nietzsche, who have looked for new light. after the agonies of two calamitous world wars, there are thoughtful men who find in its social system a model for remaking the world. Attempts have been made to study Manusmyti in the light of modern sociology, and to find how far its teachings and fundamental beliefs, (metaphysical, ethical and political) can help in a synthesis of a new order in our war-riven world,

The recognition of its commanding position in social literature is not new. The best minds of India, educated on traditional lines, and filled with a knowledge of its basic beliefs, have made it for centuries the subject of study and comment, so that its light may shed illumination on furture ages. Not a century has passed without a great commentary on Manusmyti being composed. At present, the oldest commentary that has survived is the Manubhasya of Medhatithi, which is at least 1200 years old. But Medhātithi used older commentaries like those of Asahāya (whose commentary on Nāradasmṛti has survived in fragments), Bhartryajña and Bhaguri, What is more significant is that the ancient smrti of Brhaspati, which is far older than commonly believed by many scholars, is virtually a lucid expansion of Manu's work-a kind of varttika. It explains crucial passages that puzzle modern writers who see in them inconsistency or suspect interpolation. V. N. Mandlik rendered a great service to the study of Dharmaśastra by collecting eight famous commentaries on the work and printing them in 1886. Where Sir William Jones had only the guidance of Kulluka, modern students of Manusmrti can use the erudition of Medhātithi, of whose work, besides Mandlik's somewhat incorrect edition, we have now two editions and an English translation by Sir Ganganath Jha. They can also find light in Govindaraja's brief but pointed notes. A new edition of this commentary is badly wanted. It is unfortunate that Dr. Jolly's extracts from the fikas on Manu could not proceed farther than the third book.

As compared with Indian scholars of the past, their successors labour under grave disabilties. A proper grounding in Nyāya and Mīmāmsa, as well as thorough mastery of Vedic texts and of the sūtra literature, was regarded in the past as essential to a proper study, or even a correct approach to the study and comprehension of Manu. The difference between one commentator on Manu and another is the relative command of this preliminary knowledge. Even ordinary pandits, who did not possess a mastery of Indian dialectics, science of interpretation and grammar, had enough of the necessary equipment to enable them to comprehend the work better than modern scholars. They had further the advantage of a familiarity with the beliefs, which constitute the religious and metaphysical foundation of Indian life, and naturally of the premier work which lays down the way of life to India's millions.

Today, except among those who have made a close study of Manusmṛti and of Dharmaśāstra generally, there is often lack of appreciation of its cardinal importance and wisdom. This is due to several causes. First among them, of course, is unfamiliarity with the technique of the composition of smrtis, and of the habitual forms of expression that have passed in India from common life to literary works. This defect is due to lack of training in the application of the traditional rules of interpretation collected in Mimamsa, as much as to superficial knowledge or even unfamiliarity with Indian modes of thought and expression. Next comes reliance on a knowledge of classical Sanskrit literature as enough for a comprehension of the smrti. A dictionary and a grammar cannot make a person interpret a legal treatise. Even the expositions of English law by Blackstone and Stephen postulate, for proper understanding of them, a knowledge of English life and traditions, of English beliefs, of the technique of English law and of English institutional and constitutional history. The position of the basic works in Dharmasastra, and of even the nibandha (digest) literature is not different in this respect, Nevertheless, smrtis are read, interpreted, translated, commented on, and praised or criticized, without a similar preliminary equipment in students and critics. Our smrtis are mostly in verse, which displaced the older aphoristic form as a convenient device for memorizing. Their language has a deceptive lucidity, like a well drafted modern statute. One who does not have a knowledge of the metaphysical and religious background of the smrtis will fall into many errors. A modern reader is apt to miss the form of Manusmrti; -its being a recitation addressed by a great sage named Bhrgu, a disciple of Manu, to an assembly of sages (rsis) in the presence of Manu himself. The audience was as familiar with the religious and metaphysical ideas of the land as the reciter. This absolved Bhrgu from the necessity to give a detailed exposition of the background, viz., the implied ideas on religion, cosmology, mythology and traditional history. Such an exposition is vital for our understanding of the work today. But Manusmrti has a plan, unity and order, like any carefully composed work of literature. It aims at being self-contained and complete regarded as an exposition of Dharma. Accordingly, some allusion or even a brief indication to the basic ideas, which formits back-ground, is necessary. The organization of life, as detailed in the smrti, was intended to help men to attain the summum bonum. The order of treatment follows the institutions that are held to help man in his upward march to the ultimate goal. viz., varna and asrama. Life in this world is a hyphen between a series of past existences and of future states. The work is also intended for all time and for all circumstances. Modern readers, who rely on translations, are apt to miss these features of the smrti. When in almost the same breath the smrti indicates an institution like niyoga (levirate), and the conditions which should govern its application, and also condemns it as an "animal practice" (paśu-dharma), viae Manusmṛti, IX, 59-63 and IX, 64-69, the juxta-position of apparently opposed views should be treated not as an instance of inconsistency, or carelessness in composition, or of interpolation, but, as explained by Bṛhaspati, as an indication of applicability and inapplicability to different time-cycles or yugas. Its claim to comprehensiveness in surveying human nature is responsible, on the one hand, for its eloquent pleas for the kind treatment of women (III-55-62) and for the indication also of the weakness and inclination to wickedness in women (IX, 14 ff.) in order that by care they may be protected from yielding to natural urges. Idealization of the sex should not make one overlook bad as well good members of the sex, and the causes that lead to their rise or fall.

Manusmṛti must be read in its literary context, i.e., along with works of the class in which it enjoys primacy and authority. It is not an isolated work. A great part of it is a repetition of material in the surra literature, which forms an adjunct to the Vedic (vedanga). Dharmasastra claims internal consistency, like all literature that ultimately rests on a revealed or semi-revaled source. Modern studies of Manusmrti often suffer from dealing with it in isolation and apart from related works of the same class. Byhaspatismyti, for instance, explains and supplements Manu's work, and is virtually a vartlika on it. This internal consistency, not only within Manusmrti but between it and other works of the class, must be looked for, and hasty assumptions of contradictions between smrti and smrti should not be made. Such assumptions lead to ideas of evolution of legal or constitutional theories in Indian smrtis and Arthéastra, which Indian tradition will not endorse. A familiar device to convey emphasis is to exaggerate. The description of the king as a god, does not make him literally one, and place him above Dharma. A modern myth of ancient Indian absolute monarchy is based on an understanding of such comparison or rhetorical statements, either in Dharmsastra or Arthasastra, and taking such exaggerations literally. Similar rhetorical statements regarding the first varna have inspired denunciations of the smṛti for upholding a heirarchy. Both the "divine" king and the "divine" Brahmana are made responsible for their actions with greater rigor than others, which is a serious modification of their "divine" position. Much of the animus against Manusmrti in our day is due to imperfect comprehension of its real teaching.

We have had several studies of Manu in recent times, to some of which a reference must be made. With matchless and wide learning. Dr. Bhagavan Das of Benares has expanded his Lectures on the Laws of Manu, published in 1910, and has made the work the chief basis of a study of Social Organization in the Light of Adhyatma-vidya (1932-1934), which he claims to be the proper guide to the modern world. Dr. Kewal Motwani's Manu in Hindu Social Theory (1934, 2nd Ed., 1937) is less profound, and is based on translations alone. It claims "to present Manu's social theory in terms familiar to students of modern sociology", and is in effect an attempt to vindicate the sociological soundness of the ancient work, even when judged by American standards. The late Dr. K. P. Jayaswal's Tagore Law Lectures on Manu and Yājñavalkya (1928) are chiefly concerned with the analysis of the jural ideas of the two works. It suffers from the hypotheses of a supposed rivalry between Arthasastra and Dharmasastra and of the superiority (in virtue of greater realism and humanity) of the former, as well as from conclusions based more on intuition than proof, like the theory of the present version of Manusmrti being a composition to justify the Sunga usurpation. None of these works gives a resumé of Manu's views, as traditionally understood and handed down from generation to generation in Bhāratavarşa. His wide knowledge of history and philosophy enabled the late Professor K. Sundararama Aiyar, who was familiar with the fundamental beliefs of the Hindus and whose own blameless life reflected the ideals of the great smrfi, to use Manusmrti largely in his Dharma and Life (2 vols., 1924) to vindicate the modernity of Manu's ideals and the claim of Dharmasastra to be for all time (sanatana).

The aim of the lectures now published is narrower and different, It is not designed as a defence of Manu or of the social and political ideas contained in his work and claiming to rest on a semi-divine authority. The lectures merely endeavour to present the salient features of the social and political system of Manusmrti-and of Indian society-as understood for centuries by those who drew their inspiration from the work. The only innovation is the presentation of the ideas in language and terms more easily intelligible to modern readers. One of their purposes will be realized if they serve as a stimulus to the revived study of this famous classic, which is more often cited than read and understood. The lectures constitute a prolegomena to the study of Manusmyti. They are part of the task that has been the author's for many years, and the continuation of lectures delivered before the universities of Madras, Benares, Calcutta and Mysore, and an anticipation of lectures delivered recently under the Maharaja Sir Sayaji Row Gaekwad Prize Endowment at Baroda. The author's interest in Arthafastra dates back to his college days half-a-century ago, and it has been continued later in studies of Dharmaśāsira, particularly in editing certain important digests. The realization of the widespread misapprehension of the ideas of Manu and of the social system that traces itself to his inspiration and authority, as well as of the need to correct the circulation and stabilization of erroneous views, in the interests of scholarship as much as of social peace, and to stimulate a study of the original authorities, was the main inducements to the lecturer to accept the invitation to give the lectures now published, at a time when he needed rest and new work was inadvisable. The suggestion of the theme of the lectures came from the Lucknow University, and emananted apparently from Dr. Radha Kumud Mookerii, in whose honour the Lectureship was founded.

A brief indication of the plan of the lectures may be offered. In the first lecture ("Manu and his rivals") the supposed rivalry between Arthasastra and Dharmasastra is examined. A number of problems that have to be solved by students of Manusmrti today before they can grasp his position and teaching form the subject of the second discourse. The third lecture attempts to describe the background against which the teachings of Manu and the Hindu social system have to be viewed in order to obtain a correct picture of them. The next two lectures deal with the basic ideas of varna and asrama, and their bearing on life. In the last lecture some salient features of the political system and ideas of ancient India, that may be gathered from Manusmrti, are outlined. A social and political set-up that has embraced a vast continental area cannot be dealt with even cursorily in a few lectures. The present attempt is therefore designed less to eonyey information than to furnish a stimulus for study of the great social classic. A reference to the lecturer's allied writings may be permitted for further elucidation of his own position and views in regard to the cardinal texts.

It remains to record the lecturer's obligations. To the University of Lucknow he owesthanks for giving him an opportunity to state the position which he regards as traditional in regard to the teachings of Manusmṛti, and to Dr. Radha Kumud Mookerji for inducing him to accept the invitation of the University. The lectures were delivered in March, 1946 on three consecutive evenings in the University Hall. To friends in Lucknow, who enabled the lectures to be so given without undue physical strain, the lecturer owes a debt. Weakening eyesight has made him depend on others for taking the book through the press. Chief among such helpers is Sri A N. Krishna Aiyangar, M.A., L.T. of the Adyar Library, a former pupil and a co-worker of the lecturer for many years. He not only corrected the proofs at every stage but has provided a full Index also. Sri N. Raghava-charya, M.A., L.T., formerly of the Madras Educational Service, has also helped with the proofs and advice. The Madras Law Journal Press, at which the lectures have been printed, has been subjected to some inconvenience through involuntary delays in passing the proofs and furnishing the index and preliminary matter. To its Proprietor, Mr. N. Ramaratnam, M.A., B.L., an expression of gratitude for overlooking the delay is due.

3, Asoka Road, New Delhi. 25th January, 1949 K. V. RANGASWAMI

100 April 100 to STREET, STREET

CONTENTS.

PREFACE		The second of th	PAGE.
LECTURE I. SOME PROBLEMS OF MANUSMRTI. 30—59  Pre-eminence and influence of Manusmrti 30—32 Manu in literature and tradition: Vedic tradition. Manu and the Mahabhārata 34—36 The Idea of Progress: Kalivariya: Philosophical background of the idea 36—46 Traditions of the origin of Manusmrti 46—53 Redactions of Manusmrti 53—54 Alleged interpolations in Manusmrti 54—56 Bühler's excisions 56—58 Date of Manusmrti 58—59  LECTURE III. FHE BACKGROUND OF MANU-SMRTI 60—93 Manu's Cosmology 63—68 The Law of Karma 68—73 Transmigration 73—76 The Aims of Life (Purusārthāḥ) 76—78 The Fourth Purusārthā—Mokşa 84—86 Sacraments (Sainskāra) 84—86 Sin and Atonement 86—87 Mixture of Crime and Sin 88—90 Excommunication (patana) 90 Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory 91—93  LECTURE IV. OUR SOCIAL HERITAGE 94—135 Varnāšrama 94—96 Origin of Varnas 99—103 Interdependence of Varnas 99—103 Interdependence of Varnas 99—103 Interdependence of Varnas 99—103 Interdependence of Varnas 99—103 Locupations of varnas 99—103 Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions 109 Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions 109 Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions 110—111 Varnasainkara 111—112 Influence of occupation 112—113 Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya 113—117 Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya 118—120	DEDICAT	10N	. v
LECTURE II. SOME PROBLEMS OF MANUSMRTI. 30—59  Pre-eminence and influence of Manusmrti 30—32  Manu in literature and tradition: Vedic tradition. 32—34  Manu and the Mahabhārata 34—36  The Idea of Progress: Kalivarjya: Philosophical background of the idea 36—46  Traditions of the origin of Manusmrti 46—53  Redactions of Manusmrti 53—54  Alleged interpolations in Manusmrti 54—56  Bühler's excisions 56—58  Date of Manusmrti 58—59  LECTURE III. FHE BACKGROUND OF MANU-SMRTI 60—93  Mann's Cosmology 63—68  The Law of Karma 68—73  Transmigration 73—76  The Aims of Life (Puruṣārthāḥ) 76—78  The Fourth Puruṣārtha—Mokṣa 78—84  Sacraments (Samskāra) 84—86  Sin and Atonement 86—87  Mixture of Crime and Sin 88—90  Excommunication (patana) 90  Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory 91—93  LECTURE IV. OUR SOCIAL HERITAGE 94—135  Varnāśrama 94—96  Origin of Varnas 99—103  Interdependence of Varnas 99—103  Interdependence of Varnas 99—103  Interdependence of Varnas scheme 99—103  Interdependence of Varnas scheme 99—103  Lecture of varnas 99—103  Interdependence of Varnas scheme 99—103  Interdependence of Varnas scheme 108—109  Vrātya 109  Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions 105—108  Correlated ideas of Varna scheme 108—109  Vrātya 109  Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions 100—111  Varnasamkara 111—112  Influence of occupation 112—113  Occupations of the Ksatriya and Vaisya 117—118  Duties of the Sūdra 118—120	PREFACE	The state of the s	. vii
Pre-eminence and influence of Manusmṛti 30—32 Manu in literature and tradition: Vedic tradition.  Manu and the Mahābhārata 34—36 The Idea of Progress: Kalivarjya: Philosophical background of the idea 36—46 Traditions of the origin of Manusmṛti 46—53 Redactions of Manusmṛti 53—54 Alleged interpolations in Manusmṛti 54—56 Bühler's excisions 56—58 Date of Manusmṛti 55—58 Date of Manusmṛti 60—93 Manu's Cosmology 63—68 The Law of Karma 68—73 Transmigration 73—76 The Aims of Life (Puruṣārthāḥ) 76—78 The Fourth Puruṣārtha—Mokṣa 78—84 Sacraments (Saṃskāra) 84—86 Sin and Atonement 86—87 Mixture of Crime and Sin 88—900 Excommunication (patana) 90 Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory 91—93 LECTURE IV. OUR SOCIAL HERITAGE 94—135 Varṇāśrama 94—96 Origin of Varṇas 99—103 Interdependence of Varṇas 99—103 Interdependence of Varṇas 99—103 Interdependence of Varṇas 103 Four Varṇaṣ, and no Fifth 103 Mixture of Varṇas: anuloma and pratiloma unions 105—108 Correlated ideas of Varṇa scheme 108—109 Vrāṭya 109 Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions 105—108 Correlated ideas of Varṇa scheme 108—109 Vrāṭya 109 Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions 105—108 Cocupations open to Brāhmaṇas in normal times 113—117 Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya 117—118 Duties of the Sūdra 118—120	LECTU	RE I. MANU AND HIS RIVALS	. 1-29
Manu in literature and tradition: Vedic tradition.  Manu and the Mahabhārata  The Idea of Progress: Kalivarjya: Philosophical background of the idea  Traditions of the origin of Manusmṛti Hedactions	LECTURE II. SOME PROBLEMS OF MANUSMRTI.
Manu in literature and tradition: Vedic tradition.  Manu and the Mahabhārata  The Idea of Progress: Kalivarjya: Philosophical background of the idea  Traditions of the origin of Manusmṛti Hedactions		Pre-eminence and influence of Manusmrti	30-32
The Idea of Progress: Kalivarjya: Philosophical background of the idea 36—46 Traditions of the origin of Manusmṛti 46—53 Redactions of Manusmṛti 53—54 Alleged interpolations in Manusmṛti 54—56 Bühler's excisions 56—58 Date of Manusmṛti 58—59  LECTURE III. FHE BACKGROUND OF MANU- SMRTI 60—93 Manu's Cosmology 63—68 The Law of Karma 68—73 Transmigration 73—76 The Aims of Life (Puruṣārthāḥ) 76—78 The Fourth Puruṣārtha—Mokṣa 78—84 Sacraments (Saniskāra) 84—86 Sin and Atonement 86—87 Mixture of Crime and Sin 88—900 Excommunication (patana) 90 Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory 91—93  LECTURE IV. OUR SOCIAL HERITAGE 94—135 Varṇāsrama 94—96 Origin of Varṇas 99—103 Interdependence of Varṇas 103 Four Varṇas, and no Fifth 103—104 Mixture of Varṇas: anuloma and pratiloma unions. 105—108 Correlated ideas of Varṇa scheme 108—109 Vrātya 109 Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions 110—111 Varṇasankara 111—112 Influence of occupation 0ccupations open to Brāhmaṇas in pormal times. 113—117 Occupations open to Brāhmaṇas in pormal times. 113—117 Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaisya 117—118 Duties of the Sūdra 111—112		Manu in literature and tradition: Vedic tradition	a. 32—34
hackground of the idea Traditions of the origin of Manusmṛti Redactions of Manusmṛti Alleged interpolations in Manusmṛti Bühler's excisions Date of Manusmṛti SMRTI SMRT			. 34-36
Traditions of the origin of Manusmṛti Redactions of Manusmṛti		The Idea of Progress: Kalivariya: Philosophica
Redactions of Manusmṛti
Alleged interpolations in Manusmṛti		Padagions of Mattennet!
Bühler's excisions Date of Manusmṛṭi
LECTURE III. THE BACKGROUND OF MANU- SMRTI		Ribbers aveicione
Manu's Cosmology  The Law of Karma  Transmigration  The Aims of Life (Purusarthah)  The Fourth Purusartha—Moksa  Sacraments (Samskāra)  Sin and Atonement  Mixture of Crime and Sin  Excommunication (patana)  Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory  Parnasrama  Origin of Varnas  Features of the Varna scheme  Functions of Varnas  Interdependence of Varnas  Four Varnas, and no Fifth  Mixture of Varnas: anuloma and pratiloma unions.  Correlated ideas of Varna scheme  Varnasamkara  Influence of occupation  Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaisya  Duties of the Sūdra  118—120  Manu's of the Sūdra  118—120		Date of Manuemet?
Manu's Cosmology  The Law of Karma  Transmigration  The Aims of Life (Purusarthah)  The Fourth Purusartha—Moksa  Sacraments (Samskāra)  Sin and Atonement  Mixture of Crime and Sin  Excommunication (patana)  Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory  Parnasrama  Origin of Varnas  Features of the Varna scheme  Functions of Varnas  Interdependence of Varnas  Four Varnas, and no Fifth  Mixture of Varnas: anuloma and pratiloma unions.  Correlated ideas of Varna scheme  Varnasamkara  Influence of occupation  Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaisya  Duties of the Sūdra  118—120  Manu's of the Sūdra  118—120	LECTII
Mann's Cosmology The Law of Karma  Transmigration Transmigration The Aims of Life (Puruṣārthāḥ) The Fourth Puruṣārtha—Mokṣa Sacraments (Samṣkāra) Sin and Atonement Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory  LECTURE IV. OUR SOCIAL HERITAGE  Varṇāṣrama Origin of Varṇas Features of the Varṇa scheme Functions of Varṇas Four Varṇas, and no Fifth Mixture of Varṇas: anuloma and pratiloma unions. 105—108 Correlated ideas of Varṇa scheme Vrāṭya Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions Influence of occupation Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya Duties of the Sūdra  118—120  Nanasanikara Influence of the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya Duties of the Sūdra  118—120	THE REAL PROPERTY.	SMRTI
The Law of Karma Transmigration The Aims of Life (Purusārthāḥ) The Fourth Purusārtha—Mokṣa The Fourthala San San San San San San San San San Sa		Manule Cosmology
Transmigration The Aims of Life (Puruṣārthāḥ) The Fourth Puruṣārtha—Mokṣa The Fourth Puruṣārtha—Mokṣa Sacraments (Samskāra) Sin and Atonement Mixture of Crime and Sin Excommunication (patana) Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory  LECTURE IV. OUR SOCIAL HERITAGE  Varṇāśrama Origin of Varṇas Features of the Varṇa scheme Functions of Varṇas Interdependence of Varṇas Four Varṇas, and no Fifth Mixture of Varṇas: anuloma and pratiloma unions. 105—108 Correlated ideas of Varṇa scheme Vrāṭya Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions Occupations open to Brāhmaṇas in normal times. 113—117 Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya Duties of the Sūdra  118—120		The Law of Karma	March Company
The Aims of Life (Puruṣārthāḥ) 76—78 The Fourth Puruṣārtha—Mokṣa 78—84 Sacraments (Samskāra) 84—86 Sin and Atonement 86—87 Mixture of Crime and Sin 88—90 to Excommunication (patana) 90 Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory 91—93  LECTURE IV. OUR SOCIAL HERITAGE 94—135  Varṇāśrama 94—96 Origin of Varṇas 99 Features of the Varṇa scheme 99 Features of the Varṇas 99—103 Interdependence of Varṇas 103 Four Varṇas, and no Fifth 103—104 Mixture of Varṇas : anuloma and pratiloma unions. 105—108 Correlated ideas of Varṇa scheme 109 Vrātya 109 Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions 110—111 Varṇasamkara 111—112 Influence of occupation 110—111 Occupations open to Brāhmaṇas in normal times. 113—117 Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya 117—118 Duties of the Sūdra 118—120		Transmigration
The Fourth Purusārtha—Mokṣa Sacraments (Samskāra) Sin and Atonement Mixture of Crime and Sin Excommunication (patana) Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory Farnāsrama Origin of Varņas Features of the Varņa scheme Functions of Varņas Interdependence of Varņas Interdependence of Varņas Four Varņas, and no Fifth Mixture of Varņas: anuloma and pratiloma unions. 105—108 Correlated ideas of Varņa scheme Vrātya Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions Influence of occupation Influence of occupation Occupations open to Brāhmaņas in normal times. 113—117 Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya Interdependence of the Sūdra Influence of the Sūdra		The Aims of Life (Purasarthah)
Sacraments (Samskāra) 84—86 Sin and Atonement 86—87 Mixture of Crime and Sin 88—90 to Excommunication (patana) 90 Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory 91—93  LECTURE IV. OUR SOCIAL HERITAGE 94—135  Varņāsrama 94—96 Origin of Varņas 96—99 Features of the Varņa scheme 99—103 Interdependence of Varņas 103 Four Varņas, and no Fifth 103—104 Mixture of Varņas : anuloma and pratiloma unions. 105—108 Correlated ideas of Varņa scheme 108—109 Vrātya 109 Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions 110—111 Varnasanīkara 111—112 Influence of occupation 112—113 Occupations open to Brāhmaņas in normal times. 113—117 Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya 117—118 Duties of the Sūdra 118—120		The Fourth Puruşārtha-Mokşa
Mixture of Crime and Sin Excommunication (patana) Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory  100 Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory  101 Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory  101 Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory  102 Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory  103 Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory  104 Social Theory  105 Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory  106 Social Theory  107 Social Theory  108 Social Theory  109 Social Theory  103 Social Theory  103 Social Theory  103 Social Theory  104 Social Theory  104 Social Theory  105 Social Theory  107 Social Theory  108 Social Theory  108 Social Theory  109 Social Theory  103 Social Theory  104 Social Theory  104 Social Theory  104 Social Theory  105 Social Theory  105 Social Theory  107 Social Theory  108 Social Theory  109 Social Theory		Sacraments (Samskāra)
Excommunication (patana) Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory  101—93  LECTURE IV. OUR SOCIAL HERITAGE  103—94—135  104—96  105—99  105—99  106—99  106—99  107  108—109  109—103  108—109  108—109  108—109  108—109  108—109  109  109  109  109  109  109  109
LECTURE IV. OUR SOCIAL HERITAGE 94—135  Varnāšrama 94—96 Origin of Varnas 96—99 Features of the Varna scheme 99—103 Interdependence of Varnas 103 Four Varnas, and no Fifth 103—104 Mixture of Varnas : anuloma and pratiloma unions. 105—108 Correlated ideas of Varna scheme 109 Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions 110—111 Varnasamkara 111—112 Influence of occupation 112—113 Occupations open to Brāhmaņas in normal times. 113—117 Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya 117—118 Duties of the Sūdra 118—120
LECTURE IV. OUR SOCIAL HERITAGE 94—135  Varnāśrama 94—96 Origin of Varnas 96—99 Features of the Varna scheme 99 Functions of Varnas 99—103 Interdependence of Varnas 103 Four Varnas, and no Fifth 103—104 Mixture of Varnas: anuloma and pratilama unions. 105—108 Correlated ideas of Varna scheme 108—109 Vrātya 109 Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions 110—111 Varnasamkara 111—112 Influence of occupation 112—113 Occupations open to Brāhmaņas in normal times. 113—117 Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya 117—118 Duties of the Sūdra 118—120		Some missing ideas in Hindu Social Theory
Varnaśrama 94_96 Origin of Varnas 96_99 Features of the Varna scheme 99 Functions of Varnas 99_103 Interdependence of Varnas 103 Four Varnas, and no Fifth 103—104 Mixture of Varnas : anuloma and pratiloma unions. 105—108 Correlated ideas of Varna scheme 108—109 Vrātya 109 Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions 110—111 Varnasamkara 111—112 Influence of occupation 112—113 Occupations open to Brāhmaņas in normal times. 113—117 Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya 117—118 Duties of the Sūdra 118—120	2 1131		. 91—93
Origin of Varnas	LECTU		94—135
Features of the Varna scheme 99 Functions of Varnas 99—103 Interdependence of Varnas 103 Four Varnas, and no Fifth 103—104 Mixture of Varnas: anuloma and pratiloma unions. 105—108 Correlated ideas of Varna scheme 108—109 Vrātya 109 Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions 110—111 Varnasankara 111—112 Influence of occupation 112—113 Occupations open to Brāhmaņas in normal times. 113—117 Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya 117—118 Duties of the Sūdra 118—120			94-96
Functions of Varnas 99—103 Interdependence of Varnas 103 Four Varnas, and no Fifth 103—104 Mixture of Varnas : anuloma and pratiloma unions. 105—108 Correlated ideas of Varna scheme 108—109 Vrātya 109 Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions 110—111 Varnasamkara 111—112 Influence of occupation 112—113 Occupations open to Brāhmaņas in normal times. 113—117 Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya 117—118 Duties of the Sūdra 118—120
Interdependence of Varnas 103 Four Varnas, and no Fifth 103—104 Mixture of Varnas: anuloma and pratiloma unions. 105—108 Correlated ideas of Varna scheme 108—109 Vrātya 109 Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions 110—111 Varnasankara 111—112 Influence of occupation 112—113 Occupations open to Brāhmaņas in normal times. 113—117 Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya 117—118 Duties of the Sūdra 118—120	A
Four Varnas, and no Fifth  Mixture of Varnas: anuloma and pratiloma unions. 105—108  Correlated ideas of Varna scheme  Vrātya  Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions  Manu's disapproval	1	Interdependence of Verner
Mixture of Varnas: anuloma and pratiloma unions. 105—108 Correlated ideas of Varna scheme 108—109 Vrātya 109 Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions 110—111 Varnasamkara 111—112 Influence of occupation 112—113 Occupations open to Brāhmaņas in normal times. 113—117 Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaisya 117—118 Duties of the Sūdra 118—120		Four Vamer and we Bilth
Correlated ideas of Varna scheme 108—109 Vrātya 109 Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions 110—111 Varnasamkara 111—112 Influence of occupation 112—113 Occupations open to Brāhmaņas in normal times, 113—117 Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaisya 117—118 Duties of the Sūdra 118—120		Mixture of Varnas: anuloma and pratiloma unions
Manu's disapproval of anuloma unions 110—111 Varṇasankara 111—112 Influence of occupation 112—113 Occupations open to Brāhmaṇas in normal times, 113—117 Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya 117—118 Duties of the Sūdra 118—120		Convoluted Ideas of Manus -turn
Varnasankara 111—112 Influence of occupation 112—113 Occupations open to Brāhmaņas in normal times. 113—117 Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya 117—118 Duties of the Sūdra 118—120
Influence of occupation 112—113 Occupations open to Brāhmaņas in normal times. 113—117 Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya 117—118 Duties of the Sūdra 118—120
Occupations open to Brāhmaņas in normal times. 113—117 Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya 117—118 Duties of the Sūdra 118—120		The state of the s
Occupations of the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya 117—118 Duties of the Sūdra 118—120			112-113
Duties of the Sudra 118—120
	-	Control of the Contro

Theory of Privileges and Disabilities (M	lagnifica-tion of the Brahmana)	•••	124-128
Discrimination in favour of Brahmanas		128-129
The Sudra's position		130-131
Brāhmaņa and Sūdra in Criminal Law		131-132
Conclusion		132-135
Busin digina
LECTURE V. THE ASRAMA SCHEME	144	136—166
Varna scheme comprehends Āśrama		136-137
Four Aśramas; legend of their creation		137
Airamas sequential and obligatory		138 - 139
Reasons for imposing sequence		139
Why Sannyāsa is not obligatory		139
Lifelong celibacy deprecated		140
Life of the Sannyasin	200	140-141
The Hermit		141-144
The First Asrama and Upanayana		144-153
The Householder		154
Marriage and Gärhasthya		155-156
Marriage obligatory for women		156-157
Marriage: eligibility and tests; gotra and s	apindya:
cross-cousin marriages; pre-puberty	marriage
for girls: Why? Some aspects of a	narriage.	TOD 000
Eight forms of marriage		158 - 162
The Grhastha's rules of conduct and life		162
The position of women in Manusmrti		163-166
ECTURE VI. THE POLITICAL SYSTEM	1000	167-200
Utility of the study of Ancient	Political Institutions		167-168
Rajadharma		168-169
Basis of Manu's Polity		169-170
Different scales of values		170-171
Theories of the Origin of the State		171—173
Implications of the theories		173—174
Glorification of the King		175—177
Personal responsibility of the King		177-179
How royal absolutism was checked		179—183
Royal power to change the Law: examin	nation of alleged precedents; influence of	torcign	10. 22.
dynsaties		183-189
The Elements of the State		189-193
Elaboration of Policy (Upāya)	200	193-194
The Council of Ministers		194-195
Administration		195-196
Law and Justice	200	196-197
Conclusion		197-200
		201 204
INDEX		201-204

LECTURE I

MANU AND HIS RIVALS

I MUST at the outset thank the authorities of your University for inviting me to address you on a Foundation, which commemorates the services to scholarship and to the University of my distinguished friend Dr. Radha Kumud Mookerjee. When I gave out the results of my studies of Ancient Indian Polity in lectures under a similar foundation over forty years ago in my own University,1 he was one of the very small band of Indian scholars who had made contributions to the subject.2 My pleasure and honor in being associated with the Mookerjee Lectures is increased by two circumstances. The inaugural lectures were given a year ago by my life-long contemporary and friend, the Hon'ble Sir S. Varadacharya, who is justly regarded not only as one of our foremost lawyers and judges, but as one whose scholarly interests extend much beyond his special studies and whose discriminating love to Hindu Dharma is an outstanding feature of a blameless life. Though this is my first visit to your city and University, I can claim a shadowy connection with both; for, when your University was started, I was invited by the first Vice-Chancellor, the late Rai Bahadur Dr. G. N. Chakravarti, to accept the Professorship of History, which has been filled with so much distinction by Dr. Mookerjee. I would like to regard my present lectures as in a belated way associated with a chair which I could not then occupy.

I have been asked to speak on the Political and Sociological System or Ideas of the Manusmṛti. In as much as the selection is the work of the authorities who direct the Endowment, under which the present lectures are delivered, neither explanation nor apology for the choice of the subject is required of me. But, I may be permitted to say that, had the choice been left to me, I could not have made a better one. There are many grounds for a review to-day of the social system which is popularly attributed to Manu. His work was naturally one of the first to attract the attention of European orientalists. The translation of Manusmyti, which Sir William Jones gave to the world in 1794, opened the eyes of historians of the West to a valuable source for the reconstruction of ancient Indian society. Its all-pervading influence over the Hindu masses, and the allegiance it commanded justified his description of it as a Code and its provisions as "Laws". It was not a mere relic of a civilization that had passed away; for it still guided the lives of millions in the sub-continent where it had been dominant for centuries. Its dicta had become part and parcel of the Hindu scheme of life, for as long as historical memory could reach. Few books, other than the gospels of wide-spreading religions, had had so widespread a power to mould the minds and lives of men. It had been carried to lands over the sea to which Indians had emigrated for trade or conquest, and had become the basis of the social synthesis attempted in those far-off lands by the incomers, who established their dominion over the older inhabitants. For hundreds of years it has been the foundation of Burmese law.1 Memories of it are found in the far too few epigraphical records of the Greater India which Indian emigrants created in the Far East.2 Even to superficial and alien criticism, inspired by a sense of cultural and religious superiority, it disclosed features of unexpected 'modernity' and reasonableness. The great literature that the further researches of Orientalists exposed to view, were seen to be based on it. It seemed to be the bed-rock of Hindu civilization: As an authentic historic source, in the category of literature and 'law', it seemed to have no rivals. From James Mill and Elphinstone to Max Duncker, historians of eminence drew upon it, almost to the exclusion of other sources, for their pictures of ancient Indian society.

Sir Subrahmanya Aiyar Lectures on "Some Aspects of Ancient Indian Polity", 1914.

<sup>2.</sup> e. g. his Introduction to N. N. Law's "Studies in Ancient Hindu Polity", 1914.

This position would have remained unchallenged but for the great advance in Indian studies which revealed other sources, Buddhist and Brahmanical, and which brought to light a subject even more directly bearing on social and political life than the smrti literature from which it seemed to be distinguished by the absence of non-secular features and aims. This was Arthaśāstra, whose existence as a distinct branch was all the time known but vaguely, till the accidental discovery of its most important representative, the Arthaśātra or Arthaśāstra of

1. The Burmese are governed by Dhammtats, which are based on Manusmrti. See Forschammer, "Sources and Development of Burmese Law", 1885.

<sup>2.</sup> Manusmrti is still used as an authority in the island of Bali. In A. Bergaiene's "Inscriptions Sancrites de Campa et du Cambodge," p. 423, we have an inscription in which occur verses one of which is identical with Manu, II, 136 and the other is a summary of Manu, III, 77-80.

Kautilya, the great Mauryan king-maker and minister. The intensive study of this work, in relation to other surviving works of the class, dates from 1889. Its discovery has been even more memorable in the history of Indian sociology than the accidental finding of the Institutes of Gaius at Verona by Niebuhr was to the study of Civil Law. It was natural that in the first flush of enthusiasm Arthasastra should be applauded for features which seemed to be present in it alone. Little attempt was made by the new enthusiasts to discover, by closer examination of both this subject and of its "rival", whether the aspects were distinctive of it only. The difference between it and Dharmasastra was likened to that between the work of a statesman and a priest. Much was made of its 'secular' outlook and features, as contrasted with the 'religious' or 'superstitious' attitude of its rival. Even more was claimed for Arthasastra. In it alone was to be found the "real and theoretical Materialism of India". In it are Indians seen "emancipated from their prejudices", their sole point of view becoming human and a-moral. The traditional exponent of Indian Materialism, Brhaspati, was identified with the pre-Kautilyan authority of the name in Arthasastra. Each critic singled out for commendation the feature of Arthafastra which fell in with his own bias. It was praised for its 'modernism'. It was lauded for its considerate treatment of women, and was acclaimed as their special 'charter'. The provisions of Kautilya's work, which condemned harshness to women, protected them by stringent penalties from insult, assault and slander, gave married women rights of judicial separation and divorce, and of separate property and rights in inheritance, were held up as special illustrations of its greater humanity. It was pointed out that women were not secluded in Arthasastra, that under its provisions the maintenance of destitute women was a first charge upon their relations and families, and ultimately upon the State, and that no woman could be abandoned. Like a magic mirror, Kautilya's work presented to every student the lineaments of his own favorite bias. It was pacifist in outlook and prescription. It reflected the historic spirit-so notoriously absent in Indian literature. Its schedule of penalties is less harsh than that of smrtis. It stands up for the supremacy of the State. Its author is the upholder of constitutional safeguards against absolutism. Like Machiavelli, he is a nationalist, a patriot, ready to adopt any means, however dubious, for securing his noble ends. Some of these generalizations are mutually incompatible. Others ignore the fact that what was praised as a specific contribution of Arthasastra is equally conspicuous in Dharmasastra, and that in some respects Manu is even more considerate to women than Kautilya. They were however right in explaining the apparently immoral doctrines of the Mauryan minister as mere statements of fact, or of tradition, as well as of possibilities which no sane statesman can afford to overlook, and that distinct injustice was done to Kautilya, when he was ridiculed by Bana and Dandin for his love of detail, 'immoral' doctrines and crooked practices (which seemed to justify the pun on his name Kautilya made by the dramatist)1 because these facts were overlooked, and a confusion of the subjunctive and the imperative led to wrong deductions, in such matters as in the specification of modes of embezzlement, of doing away with obnoxious ministers, of getting the better of one's enemy or of winning a ruler's confidence or favour. It has been argued that works like Kautilya's attained greater popularity than works like the Manusmrti (an unproved assertion!) because of their freedom from sacerdotal considerations, higher sense of realities, absence of mere idealism in them, and their greater logic and reasonableness. The grounds adduced would indeed be valid to-day. In the milieu of India of the past, however, it is very doubtful if they would have made for the popularity of Arthasastra. The fact remains that this subject has remained in the background, as compared with smrti literature, and that its most important work has been all but lost. That Arthasastra became more acceptable because Sūdra or atleast non-Kṣatriya dynasties came to thrones, and members of the last varna became opulent through economic changes are also generalizations of doubtful validity. In a consideration of the modern eclipse of Dharmasastra by Arthasastra they have value, as the features are such as appeal to modern minds.

Such views, however speculative they may prove to be on critical examination, are relevant in a consideration of the obstacles to a clear perception to-day of the contribution of smrtis like those of Manu to the evolution of an organized social order and of its upkeep through the centuries. In every praise of Arthasastra there runs an implication of corresponding deficiency in works like those of Manu, and of a silent hostility supposed to have run through history between the two sastras. The underlying assumption is contrary to Indian tradition, which has regarded the two not as rivals but as complementary, and as differentiated merely by their method of approach to problems and not by a difference in fundamentals and basic hypotheses. It will be seen also to be ill-founded if the character and background of the two are correctly apprehended, and if the identity of their fundamental beliefs is realized. It has however helped to create, along with other influences, to which reference will be made later on, an atmosphere of prejudice and misunderstanding of the character, aims, origin and value of Dharmaśāstra literature as a whole, and of its best known work, the Mānava-Dharmaśāstra. Errors have great vitality, especially when they take the form of dogmatic generalizations.

<sup>1. &</sup>quot;Kautilyah kutilamatih" (Mudrārākṣasa, ed. Telang, p. 61).

In upholding the superiority of Kautilya's work over a great smrti, the arguments relied on are usually three; that the former is 'secular' while the latter is steeped in 'religion'; that the former is free of the taint of 'orthodoxy'! while the latter is its champion; that there is more 'realism' in the former and 'more idealism' in the latter. The last criticism is that which has been voiced also by writers like Sir Henry Maine, who in denouncing Manusmṛti and its class have described them not as stating what actually was the law but as what an interested class wished to become the law or to be known as the law.

The argument of the 'secular' character of Kautilya's work, as a representative of its class, is based on a few instances from his work. I dealt with them at some length twelve years ago, when I gave some special lectures2 before the Calcutta University, when I showed how they crumble on examination. The data adduced in favour of the thesis are briefly these. Kautilya does not provide a place for the royal priest (purohita) among the seven elements of the State (braketi). He does not include in his enumeration of the threefold 'power' (śakti) on which a king has to rely, the spells of the purohita to ward off dangers. In the enumeration of the subjects of study for the future king, Kautilya mentions Materialistic Philosophy (Lokāyata),3 Among the triple aims of life (trivarga) he gives the first place to Artha. In his enumeration of the four vidyas, he gives a place to two 'secular' subjects, Vārtā and Dandantti. He condemns the king who is 'always questioning the stars' (nakşatram ati prechantam).4 He overlooks methods of 'divine proof' (divya) or ordeals, which figure prominently in smrtis, while allowing torture. The king is advised to

 &quot;The Code of Manu does not represent a set of rules actually administered. It is in great part an ideal picture of that which in the view of the Brahmins ought to be the law." (Ancient Law, 1861, ed. Pollock, p. 15).

<sup>2. &</sup>quot;Indian Camerlaism", March, 1934. The lectures are being printed.

<sup>3.</sup> A. K. Sen, "Studies in Hindu Political Thought", 1926, pp. 1-16:
A. M. Pizzagalli, "History of Materialism in Ancient India" (in Italian), 1907, p. 86, holds that Nitisastra contains the real theoretical Materialism of India and that in it alone were the Hindus emancipated from all prejudices, as "their sole point of view was human, which often led to the sacrifice of the moral" (p. 69).

<sup>4.</sup> Kaufillya Arthaśdstra, 1st Edn., Mysore, 1909, p. 349. All references to the work are to this edition.

trade on the credulity of people. The State is allowed to run gambling dens and slaughter houses,1 which Manu condemns as adhārmika. He permits women to remarry and allows divorce (moksa), which Manu refuses.2 These arguments are found to be weak when seen in their right context. The purchita is a member of the council of ministers, which is one of the seven prakrtis.3 His salary is considerable and reflects his value to the State. In unambiguous language Kauţilya praises the king whose wisdom is reinforced by the counsel of his chief priest. Like all ancient writers Kautilya believes in the potency of spells and incantations from the Atharva Veda, and the purohita is expected to be an adept in them. A king should take the world as he finds it, and if it is full of unbelievers, it is good policy for a ruler to learn their tenets and their philosophy. But the danger of his succumbing to the heretical views is warded off by the provision that philosophy is to be learnt by the prince only from men of orthodox learning (sista)-a precaution that provides for both a knowledge of heresyand the arguments against it. Safeguards against atheistical influences are provided for the king, whose duty is to maintain Dharma. The value of each element of trivarga is also canvassed by Manu, who does not under-rate the value of wordly studies or the pursuit of the means of well-being. The pre-occupation of Kautilya is with artha and his placing it first is only the technique of a specialist. He does not under-rate either Dharma or kama, which have their due place in life, or moksa, which is the highest and ultimate aim, for the fulfilment of personality.6 Kautilya condemns-not belief in astrology, but the addiction to it of the spineless fatalist. He contrasts it, as do smrlis, in which the relative value of daiva and purusakara are considered, with utthana, the spirit of self-reliance and energy.7 Kautilya's Ihid. p 196 and p. 329 (gambling); p. 122 (slaughter-house).

 For Manu's attitude, see Buehler, "Laws of Manu" (S. B. E., Vol. XXV, 1886), pp. lxx-lxxi.

<sup>2.</sup> Kautilya denies divorce for the first four forms of marriage, amokso dharmavivahanām, p. 155.

<sup>3.</sup> Ibid., p. 15.

<sup>4.</sup> Ibid., p. 245. Kautilya places the acarya, rtvik, and purchita in the highest class along with the prime-minister, commander-in-chief, heir-apparent, queen-mother and queen-consort, on a salary of 48,000 panas a month. See Ancient Indian Polity, pp. 40 and 159.

<sup>5.</sup> Anviksikim ca śistebhyah (p. 10).

<sup>6.</sup> वर्मायांविरोधेन काम सेवेत न निःसुकः स्यात् । समं वा विवर्णमन्योऽस्यानुषन्थम् । एको वि जल्यासेवितो धर्मार्थकामानानात्मानांमतरी पीटयति । अधं एव प्रवान इति कौटिस्यः । अवंसुकी वि धर्मार्थकामाविति ॥ (की. १२)

<sup>7.</sup> Ibid., p. 258.

questionable means for circumventing enemies and treasonable subjects are restricted in their application to disloyal or unrighteous persons. The supervision of slaughter-houses is necessary for sanitation, when meat is allowed to be eaten, and of gambling dens in the interests of the police. Mere prohibition of gambling will only drive it underground; it is best to deal with it openly and, as in the case of the sale of intoxicants to-day, make resort to it dear. Divorce is permitted only in the lower forms of marriage, among the lower classes of the population, whose practices are tolerated even by smrtis, and he expressly excludes from divorce marriages celebrated according to Dharma precepts, i.e., the first four types (a-moksyo dharma-vivāhānām, )1 It is noteworthy that Kautilya makes the same teachers who give instruction in the Vedas (trays) to the prince, teach him anviksiks. (Logic and Metaphysics) and Lokayata. The prince is to be saved from the sophist (hetusastrajna) who questions the validity of the Vedic injunctions, and who is denounced by Manu (II, 11).2 Manu has no animus against the logician as such, since he gives him a place in the parisad or tribunal which is to settle doubtful points of Dharma (XII, 111).3 The attempted differentiation between smrti and Arthasastra is seen in its unreality, when it is found that on almost all points there is really agreement, where disagreement is postulated. In the discussion of the triple aims of life (trivarga), Manu holds that all three are good, and should be pursued together (II, 224)4 though in case of opposition to or incompatibility with Dharma, the remaining two should be discarded. (IV, 176).5 This is not contradicted by Kantilva. While by advising concentration in the pursuit of wealth (artha) 'like a heron', Manu stresses its value, Kautilya inveighs against the transitoriness of wealth, when compared with more vital aims of life (kā hi anitye dhane dayā, XII, 1). The questionable

Citations from Manusmeti will give only the references to chapter and verse and not mention the name of the work, as in the case of citations from other books.

Ibid., p. 155.
 Manu, II, 11:

बोडवमन्येत ते मूने हेतुशासासयाद् दिनः।

स साधामेनेशिकायों नास्तिका वेदानिन्दका ॥

त्रिविषो हेतुकस्तकी नैनस्को धर्मपाठकः ।
 त्रवाधाश्रमिणः पूर्वे परिषत् स्वादशावरो ॥ (१२, १११)

<sup>4.</sup> धर्माओं उच्यते क्षेयः कामायीं धर्म एवं च। अर्थ एनेड वा जेयः जिनमें बति तु स्थितिः ॥ (२,२२४)

परिल्वेनदर्भकामी थी स्वातां धर्मवर्थिती । धर्म चाप्यमुखोदकं कोकविकृष्टमेव च ॥ (४, १७६)

expedients, that are not endorsed by Dharmaśāstra, are specifically qualified as 'improper' (adhārmika) by Kauţilya himself; they are to be used only for unavoidable emergencies and on no other occasions (evam dūşyeşu adhārmikeşu ca varţeta, na itareşu, V, 2). Improper taxation is to be aimed (according to Kauţilya) only at the accumulations of profiteers and other anti-social elements.

As regards the assertion of the 'modern mind' of Kautilya, as disclosed by his rejection of astrology, etc.,2 we must recall his own reputation as a master of incantation and spells, through which he was supposed to have overthrown, as by a thunder-bolt (abicara-vajrena) the Nanda, as proudly claimed by his own admirer and follower Kāmandaka,3 It may also be noted that the title wedhas that Kāmandaka applies to Kautilya is the highest that an orthodox Brāhmana teacher can claim. Mantrašakti has a double import in both smrti and nitisastra: it stands for the potency of wise counsel as well as the power of magic formulae. Kālidāsa labels the sage Vasistha, the preceptor of the kings of Ayodhya, atharva-nidhi4 (the treasury of Atharva lore)4. Such beliefs are common to the age, and Kautilya shared the belief. The best Brahmanas were believed to have acquired and to possess this power. In a remarkable passage, which recalls the belief, Manu (XI, 31-33) enjoins a Brahmana who has suffered wrong, not to carry his complaint to the King for redress, but chastise the offender himself out of the plenitude of his own skill in Atharvamantra, as explained by Medhatithi,5

From what has been said above, it will be seen that the description of Kautilya as a secularist is incorrect. This evidence is but negative. Positive evidence will consist in proof of his orthodoxy. Some evidence in favour of this also may now be given. Kautilya is a confirmed believer in the traditional system of varna and aśrama. He upholds it and declares that the world goes right only when the King does his duty and upholds varnaśramadharma (I, 4). The king is the appointed

<sup>1.</sup> Arthasāstra, p. 244.

Varāhamihira's Brhajjātaka (Ed. Allahabad, 1912, pp. 131-2) refers to a work on astrology by Visnugupta (i.e., Kautilya) while the commentator Bhattotpala cites verses on astrology ascribed to Cāṇakya (i.e., Kautilya). See Anct. Ind. Polity, p. 32.

<sup>3.</sup> Misara, I, 5-7 cited supra, p. 13.

<sup>4.</sup> Raghuvamśa, I. 59.

न माम्रणोऽवेदयेत किंसिन्नाजीन धर्मनित्।
 स्वतीयेण तान् शिष्यान् मानवानपकारिणः ॥
 मुतीरथवीकिरसीः कुमीदित्यविचारयन्।
 बामश्रसं व माम्रणस्य तेन इन्यादरीन् क्रिनः॥ (११,३१,३३)

guardian of the system (III, 1) and attains heaven when he rules according to Dharma (p. 165). Improper miscegenation (pratilomya) is the effect of regal failure to maintain Dharma (p. 165).1 His attitude to varnasamkara is identical with that of Manu (VIII, 172) who promises heaven to the ruler who prevents it2. Kautilya rates neglect of sastra in a king as the highest fault, which will ruin his kingdom and himself. In describing the ideal king he stresses the possession of a devout mind (daivika-buddhi) and attachment to Dharma (dhārmikatvam)3. Even a woman, or a father, who is ordinarily entitled to be maintained by the family, forfeits the right to maintenance by becoming an outcaste (patita); and only the mother is exempted from the rule.4 In filling the treasury, the king is enjoined to do so in Dharmic ways; the rule applies even to an inherited treasure (dharmādhigatah pārvaih svayam vā),5 Even ascetics should be compelled by kings to adhere to the rules of asceticism laid down by smrtis.6 Like Manu he calls on the king to cast into the waters or give to Brahmanas fines unjustly levied in trials? (p. 234). He will brand a Sudra who masquerades as a Brahmana, which recalls the penalty of Manu for the Sudras who take the emblem of the 'twice born' (śūdrāmśca dvija-linginah).

Kautilya's ban on suicide is stern as that of Dharmaŝāstra.8 A Brāhmaṇa's land is not to be subjected to emergency increase of land tax from a sixth to a fourth or even a half of the out-turn, Remissions of

त पते प्रतिकोमाः । स्वथमांतिकमाद्रावः सम्भवन्ति । (कीटि. ज. धा., p. 165)
 स्वयमः स्वर्गायामन्त्याय च । तस्वातिकमे सद्वरादुच्छियेत । (Ibid., p. 8)

स्वादानाइणंसंसर्गास्ववजानां च रक्षणाद । वर्ण संजायते राषः स प्रेत्येह च वर्षते ॥ (८,१७२)

<sup>3.</sup> Arthaśāstra, p. 285.

<sup>4.</sup> भागांपितरा ... अविभागः शक्तिमतः द्वादशपणी दण्डः । सन्यत्र पतितेन्योऽन्यजमातुः । (कीटि, न, शा., p. 48.)

<sup>5.</sup> Ibid., p. 256.

Ibid., p. 191 प्रकाशास यथा चारान् राजा दण्डेन नारवेद ।

Ibid., p. 234:
अदण्डण्डण्डले राज्ञो दण्डास्त्रपुणीं मसि ।
वर्णाय प्रदातन्यो आक्रणेन्यस्त्रतः परम् ॥
Also Manusmṛti, VII, 128:
राजा दण्डणां स्वादण्डवन् । जयशे। महदामोति नरकं देव गण्छति ॥

<sup>8.</sup> Kautilya prescribes post-mortuary punishments for suicides (p. 217).

tax are to be granted for the worship of gods and the manes (p. 240). The lands of śrotriyas (Brāhmaṇas of learning and character) are not liable in any circumstances to confiscation (p. 240). A Brāhmaṇa who drinks wine or eats forbidden food is to be excommunicated, if he does so of his own accord; if he is made to do so, the person who compels or induces him to do the forbidden act is to be severely punished. The cattle belonging to temples or gods cannot be impressed into service (p. 238). Heavier punishments are provided for the seduction of women of higher caste by men of lower castes, than the other way round. Kautilya roundly declares that a king must enforce Dharma, and not deviate from it himself, as eternal prosperity can result only from every one following his own duty (svadharma6).

The orthodoxy of Kautilya is not personal. It is common to him along with other writers on Arthasastra. His admirer and sollower Kamandaka affirms that a king prospers only when Dharma is maintained, and he enjoins the king to live up to Dharma. Some passages have usually been cited from the Sukraviti (which in its present form seems to be a late work) to show Sukra's freedom from orthodoxy. But, on inspection, they are seen not to be singular to Sukra or writers of his class. Sukra's declaration that caste counts only for marriage and interdining, merely repeats a Dharma doctrine. Every smrti condemns birth unaccompanied by ācāra or vidyā, and the practice of forbidden occupations by the Brāhmaṇa. (See Manu III, 64-65, 150-166, VIII, 102, XII, 71 etc.). Sukra's declaration that for office caste should not count has to be construed with his own rule excluding the Sūdra from being a judge or general. The self-

<sup>1.</sup> देविषद्वनादानार्थं गवार्थं वा . . . परिहरेयु: । (Ibid.; p. 240)

<sup>2.</sup> अरण्यजातं श्रोतियस्वं च परिवरेत् । (Ibid., p. 240.)

<sup>3.</sup> ब्राह्मणमंपेयममध्यं वा सङ्ग्रासयत उत्तमो दण्यः । (Ibid., p. 231)

<sup>4.</sup> जासाण्यामग्रासायां (अभिचरतः) श्रतियस्योत्तमः, सर्वस्यं वैश्यस्य, श्रूहः कटाशिना दक्षेतः। (की. अ. शा., p. 234)

<sup>5.</sup> स्वधमे: स्वर्गायानन्ताय व । तस्यातिकमे लोकसंकराडुव्लिक्षेत ॥ तस्माद स्वधमे भूतानां राजा न व्यक्तिचारवेद । स्वधमे संद्रवानी हि बेस्य चेह व नन्दति ॥ व्यवस्थितायमर्थाद: इतवर्गालम-स्थिति: । त्रस्या हि रक्षितो लोक: प्रसीदित न सीदिति ॥ (की. अ. सा., p 8.)

तरसादमं पुरस्कृत्व यतेताकांच भूपतिः । अमेंच वर्धते राज्यं तस्य स्वादफर्क श्रियः ॥ (कामन्द्रकांच नातिसार, १,१८)

न जाला न कुलेनेव नेव्हलं प्रतिपचते ।
 विवाहे भोजने निल्लं कुलगातिविवेचनम् ॥
 ( श्रक्तगीतिसार, २,८७)

government that Sukra advocates for guilds is just what smrtis grant when they allow such bodies to be judged by their own by-laws. Sukra's declaration that castes are innumerable owing to caste admixture is only a generalization from such miscegenation as is specified at great length by Manu (X, 6-56). Manu describes the ways in which each mixed caste arose, and determines the duties for each such caste, those of the most general ethical character alone being appropriate to castes springing from pratiloma unions.

In a zealous advocacy of the higher value of Arthaśāstra, it is forgotten that like Dharmaśāstra it is also part of the accepted canon. Saunaka classes Arthaśāstra as an upa-veda of Atharva Veda, i Apastamba upholds this view. He adds that it is part of knowledge open to women and to Sūdras, to whom Vedic learning is closed. To such persons the epics and purāṇas are the substitutes for the Veda. Kautilya harmonizes the two views by bringing Arthaśāstra as well as Dharmaśāstra under the epics (itihāsa), which he declares to be the fifth Veda. Lakṣmīdhara regards Arthaśāstra as one of the eighteen Vidyās, which are enumerated in the Purāṇas, of which fourteen are those with a-drṣta-phala and the other four (Āyurveda, Dhanurveda, Gāndharva-veda and Arthaśāstra,) are of dṛṣṭa-phala, and are authoritative,3

To postulate a hostility between the two sastras is foreign to the spirit of the Hindu canon. A basic belief of Hinduism is that in the triple aim of existence (trivarga)—duty (Dharma) well-being (Artha) and pleasure (Kāma). Writers on Arthasastra and on Kāmasastra declare that the pursuit of their special aim is lawful only when it does not run against Dharma. The precepts of Artha and Kāma are governed by Dharma, and are valid only when they harmonize with it. The division of life into āśramas shows the stage at which each may be lawfully and advantageously pursued. It is only in the life of the householder (grhastha)—in the second āśrama that Artha and Kāma have validity. The other orders are mendicant āśramas and ban Kāma. The pursuit of well-being and pleasure is lawful and proper, only when regulated by Dharma. This is why the spiritual guide of the king, the purohita, is required to be eminent in both Dharma

(वरणञ्चूहम् ४)

तत्र वेदानामुप्वेदाखत्वारी मवन्ति । ऋग्वदस्य आयुर्वेदोपवेदः, यजुर्वेदस्य धनुर्वेदोपवेदः, सामवेदस्य गान्धवेवेदोऽपर्वनेदस्यार्थशास्त्रम् ।

<sup>2.</sup> अध्वेबदेतिशासवेदी न वेदाः (की. म. शा, p. 7).

<sup>3.</sup> बहाचारिकाण्ड, р. 22.

and Arthasastra, as well as Jyotisa (Astrology).1 The position, which is well-recognized in Indian literature, has to be made clear today owing to the misapprehensions that have been created. The differences are due to both the mode of approach to the fundamental problems of life, which are the same for both, as well as difference of emphasis for immediate as contrasted with ultimate ends. They differed also in the circles for which they were intended. Dharmasastra was designed for the guidance of all; while Arthasastra was intended for the guidance of those who lived a wordly life, and did so within the limits laid down by Dharma. The craving for material well-being and the satisfaction of emotions is natural, and its satisfaction is not condemned by Dharma or religion. Such gratification or satisfaction should, however, be governed by the higher ends of life. Kāma and Artha are only proximate ends, while Moksa (as will be developed in the next lecture) is the highest as well as the ultimate end of existence. The accepted Indian view of the relative values of the ends is correctly stated by the Mahābhārata (XII, 165, 8): 'the wise declare the highest end is Liberation (Moksa), the middle is Well-being (Artha) and the lowest Pleasure (Kāma)'. All the three are said to spring from Dharma.2 In ringing words the author of the great Epic has asked why Artha is not pursued when both it and Kāma are derived from Dharma,3 The chief exponents of the two wordly sciences-Kautilya and Vatsyayana, endorse this view, though they insist that for a king, who has to regulate the ordinary life of man, Artha is the immediate and important aim. While every one among the intellectual may accept Moksu as the real and only aim of existence, even they cannot be converted to a life of asceticism and to a contempt for economic and emotional satisfactions. The subordination of the lower aims to the higher must be part of the discipline of life.

पुरेशितं जादितोदितनुष्ठशांलं परक्षेपेदे देवे निर्मित्त दण्टनीत्यां वाभिविनातं लापदां दैवमानुषाणामधर्वाभिक्षायैः मित्रतारं कुर्वात । तमाचार्यं शिष्यः पितरं पुत्री मृत्यः स्वामिनामेव चानुवर्तेत । (की. अ. आ. p. 15.)

शर्मो राजम् युगः क्षेत्रो मध्यमो सर्थ उच्यते ।
 कामो यगामानित च प्रवदन्ति मनीविगः ॥
 (शान्तिपर्व, १६७, ८)

कथ्वंबाहुविरान्येव न कश्चिष्ठ स्थाति में ।
 पमाद्रयंत्र कामश्च स किसवें न सेन्यते ॥
 न जातु कामाज मयाज लेग्याद्रमंद्यतेका
 जावितस्यापि हेतोः । नित्यो धर्मः, सुखदःखे ।

जीवितस्वापि हेतोः । नित्नो धर्मः, मुखदुःखे त्वानित्ये जीवो नित्यो हेतुरस्य त्वानित्यः ॥ (स्वर्गारोहणपर्व, ७,८७-८६)

The planning of life must not miss its aim. To every science, Dharma is the common denominator regulating action. Expediency must give way to the morally right (Dharma). It is to be noted that Indian tradition ascribes a divine origin not only to Dharmasastra, as represented by Manusmrti but to Arthasastra and Kamasastra the first works in both having been promulgated by or under the inspiration of the Supreme Being. The ultimate source and sanction of all three are the Vedas (Sruti). For all three the end of the human incarnation is the same. Both individual welfare, in the highest sense, as well as that of the world (loka-samgraha) require conformity to Dharma, and to the discharge by every one of his appointed duty (svadharma) as determined by his birth and station. This is why Kautilya lays down: "The king should permit no neglect by living beings of their appropriate duty (svadharma). Society (lokah) prospers and does not decay only when it upholds the conduct of Aryas (vyavasthita-ārya-maryādah), stabilizes the (established) order of caste and stage of life (krta-varnāśrama-stitih) and finds refuge in the Vedās (traiyā hi raksitah)1." In everyday life it may be possible to take a lower standard but that is not permissible when it conflicts with Dharma. This is why Kautilya has himself laid down that when there is a discord between the art of ordinary life (vyāvahārikam śāstram) and Dharmaśāstra, the rule of Artha (which is usually followed) should be construed in harmony with the rule of Dharma2. An enjoined duty admits of no argument; it must be done. Conduct laid down by Arthasastra is justified by manifest advantages, (drstaphala) and feasibility. There can be differences of opinion in regard to it. Everything in a smrti is not based on adrsta-phala. There is a large Artha core in most smrtis. In fact, a considerable portion of Rajaniti and Dandaniti in Manusmrti, for example, is Artha in character. This is frankly recognized by the commentators. The same imperative character does not attach to such parts as to the rest on śruti-pramāna or on adrsta-phala. But, as a Dharmašāštra is not, at the same time an Arthasastra, Vijfianesvara correctly interprets the rule in Yājñavalkyasmrti (II, 21)3 on the superiority of Dharma-

व्यवस्थितार्थमयाँदः कृतनणांभगरियतिः ।
 श्रव्या हि रक्षिता लोकः प्रसीदति न सीदति ॥ (श्री.अ., शा. p. 8.)

संस्था वर्मशासेण शास वा व्यावदारिकम् । विसम्बर्धे विरुच्येत वर्मणार्थं विनिध्येत् ॥ (की. अ. शा, p. 150)

अर्थशासास्त्र नक्ष्यद्वमंशास्त्रमिति स्थितिः ।
 (याश्यत्क्षपरमृति, २,२७)

sastra to Arthasastra-as an enunciation of not a mere obvious proposition but of the non-mandatory character of Artha rules in a smrti, when they conflict with Dharma dicta1. The illustration of the seeming conflict between rules of the two kinds that may be found in a smrti that has been given by Vijnanesvara-namely the permission to kill a Brāhmana assailant and the prohibition of the slaying of a Brāhmana implied in the dictum that there is no expiation for the offence (brahmakatyā) may be supplemented by many others. Some of the statements that are found in smrtis and are regarded as mere "glorificatory exaggerations" (arthavāda), which are not to be taken at their face value, come under the Artha category. There is for instance the dictum that a father must give his daughter in marriage, and the other rule which makes marriage for a girl obligatory, being a sacrament. As against this, there is the declaration of Manusmrti that a nubile girl may remain unmarried all her life (amaranat tistet) in the parental home rather than be married to a man devoid of merit (quanhina)3. The first two are Dharma rules and are obligatory; they have adrstaphala; the last has drstaphala, a rule of practical wisdom, which is arguable, and therefore an Artha precept. A parent will not stand excused if he does not get his daughter married, merely on the ground that he could not get a bridegroom whom he considers altogether satisfactory; but, the dictum enforces the parental duty not to give away a daughter, without careful enquiry into the character and

भमंद्यास्तान्त्रसारिकेस्वनेतेव स्रीयनसम्बर्धयासस्य निरस्तातात् धमंद्रास्तान्तर्गतमेव राजनीति-लक्षणमधेद्रास्त्रास्त्र विवाधितम् । अर्थशास्त्रधमंद्रास्तरमृत्योविरोधे अर्थशास्त्रात् धमंद्रास्त्र वल्लवितिः ' रिषतिः' मर्यादा । यपपि समानकत्त्रतया अर्थशास्त्रधमंद्रास्त्रयोः स्वरूपमतो विशेषो नास्ति तथापि प्रमेयस्य धमंस्य प्राधान्याद्रयेस्यापाधान्याद्यसंद्रास्त्र वल्लवित्तामायः । तस्माद्रमंद्रास्त्राध्यक्षास्त्रयोः विरोधे अर्थशासस्य वाध एव, न निषयन्त्रवस्या मापि विकायः ॥ (मितास्तरा)

<sup>2.</sup> काममा सरणाचिष्टेत् गृहे कन्यतुमावाप ।

न चैतेनां प्रवच्छेत गुणहीनाव काहिचत् ॥ (२,८९)

This is construed by modern writers as making marriage optional for women, and as permitting them to remain spinsters for life. See e.g. A. S. Altekar, Position of Women in Hindu Civilization, 1938, pp. 64-65. Varadarāja (Vyavahāranirnaya, p. 389) correctly points out that the verse is an arthavāda (devise for emphasizing) on the preceding śloka (IX, 88) which lays on a parent the duty to bestow his daughter in marriage on an excellent and good-looking suitor of equal caste, in accordance with the prescribed law, though she may not have attained the proper age:

उत्स्थायाभिक्षाय वराय सद्भाव च । अमाप्तामपि तां तस्मै कन्यां दचायवाविचि ॥ antecedents of the suitor. The common aim of bringing about the enforcement of varnāšrama-dharma through a competent authority, unites both šāstras in upholding the state and Rājadharma. Both deal with the king's duties, general and specific, but Arthašāstra does it with greater fulness, as it takes the view-points of feasibility and expediency and of the advantage of the community than of an individual's duty.

The question of differentiation between the two sastras has to be viewed from another angle. A fundamental postulate of criticism of a work is internal consistency. In a closely reasoned scientific statement there will ordinarily be no room for inconsistent statements from the same source. Scholiasts in India act upon this hypothesis in dealing with cardinal works. The principle becomes obvious when a work or works claim direct or indirect inspiration from divinity. It will be absurd to postulate inconsistent statements of the Omniscient. If two statements, both of which claim the same divine source, appear to be inconsistent, the rule of Mimamsa is that the conflict is only apparent and can be resolved by research, and that if it seems to evade investigation, an option (vikalpa) is afforded. This rule will apply not only to internal consistency in statements from the same inspired work, but it will apply equally to different works all of which claim a divine or inspired source. As both Arthasastra and Dharmaśāstra claim canonical origin, and are classed under śruti, it is not permissible to postulate any real and insoluble conflict between the two, "The hypothesis of divine origin invests both with the qualities of universality, consistency and permanence."1 elsewhere dealt with the results of the application of this principle to both fastras to bring about a harmony in their findings and points of reconciliation, the causes that led to the presence of an increasing Artha core in smrtis, and the gradual supersession of Artha-$astra by Dharmasastra2. It was the new era which witnessed this change that saw the exaltation of Manusmrti and made it the ambition of Hindu kings to live up to it. The scope of Arthasastra was narrowed down to embrace only maxims of polity, or Nifisastra. Kāmandaka (who has been identified by Dr. Jayaswal with Srīkarasvāmin, the minister of Candragupta II) describes his own work as "churned from the ocean of Arthasastra (arthasastra-mahodadhi)," and a comparison of it with the Kautiliya will show how the chapters on law and administration as well as economics, which are the most parts of the older work now most valued have been dropped in Kämandaka's recast. Though Arthasāstra has canonical sanction, its chief exponents were not sages like the authors of Dharmasāstra but distinguished men of affairs. This is why it is not cited in dharma-nibandhas by purists like Lakṣmīdhara. To them even Kauṭilya would have been an ādhunika (one of recent times). It may be noted, in passing, that citations from the extent Manusmṛti are found in Kāmandaka's Nītisāra.

<sup>1.</sup> See Rajadharma. 1938, pp. 13-14.

<sup>2,</sup> Ibid., p. 14.

The discussion of the alleged "secularism" of Arthasastra may now be closed by a consideration of the place of secular elements or sides in Hindu thought and life. It will be noticed on a careful review of both that the distinction between "secular" and "religious" is alien to Indian tradition; even the familiar distinction between laukika (what pertains to the worldly life) and vaidika will be found to be more popular than sastraic. The Veda is eternal and uncreated. The sages, whose names are associated with particular hymns, are not believed to be the authors of the hymns, but as those who "saw" them intuitively; they were literally "seers." The Veda is the basis of all knowledge. Veda and Vidyā are derived from the same root, 'vid,' to know.' All relevant knowledge is comprised either in the Vedas, the Upa-Vedas and the Vedangas, or in knowledge derived from or based on them. Sastra is derived both from " sas" "to command" or from " sas" "to teach". In the former etymology, śūstra will mean knowledge that the Veda has 'commanded,' in the latter it will mean a co-ordinated body of knowledge that can be 'taught," i.e., a 'science.' We find the expression vedasastra used in the sense of Vedic metaphysics. In the Indian conception of the matter, the distinction between 'physical' and 'super'- or 'metaphysical' has no place. To import the terms into ancient Indian thought would be to put into it concepts which are incompatible with its fundamental hypotheses. Similarly, we have no word in Sanskrit for "religion." "Mata" is "view" and " Aryamata" the sum total of Arvan belief. In English-Sanskrit dictionaries, the words "religion" and 'religious', are rendered by compound expressions of which the first qualifying part is dharma, or bhakti, which mean 'duty' and 'faith' 2 The power of knowledge has been held in such regard that the highest knowledge, para vidya, is that of the Supreme Wisdom, Knowledge is held to be so potent that it has been deemed unwise to scatter it, so that he may pick it who chooses to do so. The secrets of nature are not to be broadcast but to be imparted with safeguards, in close intimacy between teacher and learner. The word Upanisad describes an attitude of the learner in which the wisdom of the Vedas was conveyed to the pupil by the teacher. The description of the ceremony of initiation of the young dvija into Savitri is by the term upanayana, 'leading.' In the ritual of initiation a curtain is drawn round teacher and pupil, and the words of power are whispered by the ours to the acolyte. There is thus, in Indian tradition, the distinction between exoteric and esoteric or secret knowledge. The best in wisdom is guhya, rahasya, 'hidden', secret.1 It is conveyed orally and not by books. The gifts of books to mathas, which late smrtis recommend, are for the creation of reference libraries in days when learning had decayed and memory was not what it had been. Madhavācārya cites a verse 2 attributed to Nārada which condemns (because it will not convey debating competence) knowledge acquired from books, and not orally. Reliance on books was not inappropriately compared to laziness and sleepiness, among six obstacles to learning.3 Oral instruction and transmission had two advantages: It ensured grasp of the subject, as the teacher would not proceed till the pupil was perfect in comprehension and retention of what had been taught; and it safeguarded knowledge by preventing its communication to unfit persons, or those lacking a sense of moral responsibility. A famous and ancient verse, which is cited by Yaska, mentions how knowledge (Vidyā) approached the Creator and made this petition: "Save me from being communicated (mā brāyā) to the man of envy, untruth, idleness, for I am your trust, and must retain my power."4 Apastamba excludes from initiation (upanayana) the person given to wicked pursuits (dusta-karmā).5

<sup>1.</sup> Nilakantha cites Kāmandakīya Nilisāra in his Nitimayūkha.

<sup>2.</sup> Cf. Mulgaokar's English-Sanskrit Dictionary, 1936, p. 563.

Certain results, which flowed from this distinction between secret and open doctrine and knowledge, must be noted for a proper appreciation of some aspects of our ancient literature, which have been missed by

<sup>1.</sup> Bhagavadgitā, IX, 1-2:

इदं तु ते गुझतमं प्रवहवान्यनसूषवे । शानं विद्यानसहितं सन्दात्वा मोक्यसेऽशुमात् ॥ राजविधा-राजगुश्चं पवित्रमिदमुत्तमम् । प्रत्यक्षावनमं धन्वं सुसुक्षं कर्तुमञ्चयम् ॥ Also Ibid., IV. 3, रहस्यमेतदुत्तमम् ।

पुस्तकप्रत्ययापीतं नापीतं गुक्सिकिपी । आजते न सनामध्ये जारगर्भ इत स्थियाः ॥ (पराश्वरमाध्याय, Bom. Sansk. Series., I, i, p. 154)

वृतं पुस्तकद्युश्या नाटकासक्तिरेव च । स्थियः तन्द्री च निद्रा च विद्याविज्ञकराणि
 वृतं पुस्तकद्युश्या नाटकासक्तिरेव च । स्थियः तन्द्री च निद्रा च विद्याविज्ञकराणि
 वृतं पुस्तकद्युश्या नाटकासक्तिरेव च । स्थियः तन्द्री च निद्रा च विद्याविज्ञकराणि
 वृतं पुस्तकद्युश्या नाटकासक्तिरेव च । स्थियः तन्द्री च निद्रा च विद्याविज्ञकराणि
 वृतं पुस्तकद्युश्या नाटकासक्तिरेव च । स्थियः तन्द्री च निद्रा च विद्याविज्ञकराणि
 वृतं पुस्तकद्युश्या नाटकासक्तिरेव च । स्थियः तन्द्री च निद्रा च विद्याविज्ञकराणि
 वृतं पुस्तकद्युश्या नाटकासक्तिरेव च । स्थियः तन्द्री च निद्रा च विद्याविज्ञकराणि
 वृतं पुस्तकद्युश्या नाटकासक्तिरेव च । स्थियः तन्द्री च निद्रा च विद्याविज्ञकराणि
 वृतं पुस्तकद्युश्या नाटकासक्तिरेव च । स्थियः तन्द्री च निद्रा च विद्याविज्ञकराणि
 वृतं पुस्तकद्युश्या नाटकासक्तिरेव च । स्थियः तन्द्री च निद्रा च निद्रा च विद्याविज्ञकराणि
 वृतं पुर्व पुष्तकद्याविज्ञकराणि
 वृतं पुष्तकद्याविज्ञकराणि
 <l>वृतं पुष्तकद्याविज्ञकराणि
 वृतं पुष्तकद्याविज्ञकराणि

<sup>4.</sup> विद्या इते नामाणमाजगाम गोपाय मां शविष्टेऽइमस्मि । असुसकावानुअवेबताय न मां नूया वीर्येवती तथा स्वाम् ॥ (निरुक्त, २,८,१)

अञ्ज्ञाणामदुष्टकर्मणाञ्चपायनम् (आपस्तम्बगृद्धमातः, १,१,५.)

most writers, and which are responsible for several wrong conclusions. In the old Indian system of education the pupil had to live, during the period of education, with his teacher or guru. It was gurukula-vāsa. Till he had mastered all that his teacher could impart to him, he lived there. The normal period was twelve years, for the education to be over. The ceremonial lustration (snana) which, with the permission of the preceptor, marked the end of the period of learning under the first guru, was equal to graduation. The 'accomplished student' was termed snātaka and received many marks of recognition and honour. Manu (IV, 31) lays down that householders "must worship by gifts of food, sacred to gods and manes, those who have become snatakas after studying the Veda, or after completing their vows have become householders and śrotriyas." Like a king or a venerated relation or a son-in-law, the snataka is to be received with madhuparka (III, 119).1 Way must be made for a snātaka (II, 138-139) as for the king, and if the snataka and the king meet, the latter must make way for the former. It is a regal dereliction of duty if a snataka perishes of hunger. It was an honour to be classed with a snataka and nine such persons (among them a student of the Veda) are named by Manu (XI, 1-2) to whom gifts must be made in proportion to their learning. Ordinarily one did not change his guru, except after becoming a arhastha, or after becoming a snataka and engaging in what would now be termed "post-graduate studies." The teacher was paid nothing for his teaching and the food, which was collected by the pupils by begging from suitable households.

Oral instruction under the roof of a teacher implied two things: all necessary knowledge was imparted by one and the same teacher; secondly, devices had to be made for oral instruction and retaining what was taught in the memory. Each teacher had therefore to be a store-house of all the knowledge of the day. This is the reason, as I have explained elsewhere, for the rise of self-contained schools, which bore the names of the founders, whose disciples bearing still his name carried on the work, and continued the tradition and teaching. This feature will explain the baffling attribution of works on different subjects like astronomy, Dharmaśāstra, grammar, chemistry (rasāyana) to a school bearing a common name. Thirty years ago, I pointed out that we have to postulate the existence of schools which gave instruction in a circle of sciences and arts, and did not restrict themselves to single subjects. Affinity will be commoner in social sciences, and schools which dealt directly with those branches of knowledge which treated of the four purusarthas or atleast with trivarua. Each school might develop individual features in detail or doctrine, while maintaining common features with other schools. The competition of teachers must have contributed to the progress of knowledge, and the system of transmission to its spread. Even in subjects traced back to revelation, points of difference might arise, and even more easily differences of emphasis due to differences of valuation. It will become necessary to compose manuals in aphoristic prose (sūtra), which will fulfil the dual purpose of keeping lecturers and learners on tracks (like modern syllabuses) and also indicate adjustment of values. They were indispensable aids to teaching and transmission of knowledge, from generation to generation. Thus arose sutra books, first in Brahmanic literature, and then by imitation in Buddhist. Max Muller, whose special field was Vedic literature, noted that each Vedic carana or school had its own compendium or kalpasatra, in which sacrificial, domestic and semi-public duties and rites were dealt with. Only two or three complete specimens of kalpasatra have come down. The old theory that every school had its complete kalpasūtra, consisting of Srauta, Grhya and Dharma satras is not now accepted. There are satras which stand alone e.g. Gautama and Vasistha Dharmasütras. The point is of some importance because by applying the principle universally, missing sections have been predicated to extant sutra works. Manusmrti has been regarded as a version of a lost Manava-dharmasatra.1 We have a Manava Grhyasatra, which has been edited twice. Some parallels between it and Manusmyti have been pointed out by Bradke, but they are few and inconclusive. The Grhyasatra of the Manavas contains matter not found in Manusmrti. It deals with Vināyakašāntī (like Yājñavalkyasmṛti) and tests for selecting a bride (which correspond to Afvalayana Grhyasatra, 1, 5, 5-6) but the topics are not found in Manusmyti, MM. P. V. Kane has given a number of instances, in which the doctrines of the Grhyasutra and the Smrti differ. Most scholars now share today his scepticism of the existence of a Mānavadharmasātra, which was the original of Manusmṛti.2

वेदविधानतस्मातान् अमितवान् गृहमेविनः । पूनवेद्रश्यकन्येन विपरीतांश्य वर्जयेद् ॥ (४,३१)

<sup>2.</sup> See Ancient Indian Polity, 2nd ed., 1935, p. 131.

The utility of a satra book lay in its compactness and easy retention in the memory. A properly constructed satra book will string

G. Buhler has argued elaborately that a Manava-dharmasutra once existed. See the Introduction to his Laws of Manu passim.

<sup>2.</sup> P. V. Kane, History of Dharmasastra. Vol. I (1930), pp. 79-85.

together the sutras in an order which will make them interdependent and render repetition of words unnecessary. The aphorisms served as guides to memory during recitations. In the case of the Vedic literature public recitation of the satras must have been a practice. The Buddhists adopted it and the convocations of the Saingha were occasions in which such public recitations took place, in order that by such recital the accuracy of the canon might be tested and guarded. The chief value, from the standpoint of those who wished to keep the knowledge contained in a satra book within the school, lay in its unintelligibility without the oral interpretation of the teachers, which itself was transmitted traditionally from generation to generation. In later times, such explanations were reduced to writing, from the prodigious memory of students who could repeat entire lectures without error. Extant commentaries on satras, in all branches of knowledge, are largely based on such oral expositions of the cryptic original aphorisms. Variations between commentators reflect more often the traditional variations that grew up in the process of oral transmission of the aphorisms and comments than the differences in the personal opinion of commentators themselves. The developed literature of every sastra will reveal the existence of a multiplicity of aphoristic works and their oral commentaries. In course of time, it will become necessary to standardize the teaching in the sastra, and the teachers who undertook the task will compose sutra works in which differences of ancient opinion will be noted. Unless, as in the case of the aphorisms of Panini,1 extra-ordinary skill is shown in condensation and stringing up aphorisms, there is a tendency for sūtra books to become diffuse. Loose prose passages are not easy to memorize. Verse, in the familiar śloka form, furnishes a mechanical rhythm that enables the words to stick to the memory. It is also possible to make a śloka more intelligible than a prose aphorism of a very condensed character. The sloka thus becomes a rival of the satra for recording teaching and replaces it gradually.

The theory of Max Müller that originally all sastraic works were in satra form and that the works in sloka form came later is now discredited. Yaska cites a sloka of a smrti; it shows that smrtis in sloka form existed even in his day. In the most ancient satra works we find slokas. The mixture of satra and sloka in the same book is not uncommon. We find the mixture not only in comparatively late works of the satra class of smrti like those of Vispu and Vasistha, but we find it in the earliest also. Indian tradition gives a hoary antiquity to the śloka, making its discovery occur in a moment of intense emotion, as a divine accident, that befell the author of the Rāmāyaṇa.¹ We may reject the story, but find in it the belief, now seen to rest on credible evidence, of the great antiquity of the use of the śloka.

circa 650 B. C. Dr. S. K. Belvalkar will place him about B.C. 750, Systems of Sanskrit Grammar, 1915, p. 7.

A feature of the sūtra books is that from the space assigned to a topic it is not just to estimate the importance assigned to it by the author or founder of the school to which the saira work belongs. A correct estimate is possible only when the entire oral exposition is available. If any interruption occurs in the oral transmission of doctrine, it may lead to wider diversity of opinion among those who reconstruct the views of the school from a book. He who composed a salra work-and many adhunikas attempted to do so-ran this risk of being misinterpreted by later commentators. That the risk was real and grave is seen from the precaution which a famous satra writer is said to have taken to guard against the misinterpretation of his own views by composing himself the commentary on the sutras, This was done by Kautilya, according to a verse which appears at the end of his Arthasastra. "Having observed the discordant views attributed to the same author by commentators on his satras, Visngupta (i.e. Kautilya) himself composed both the satras and the commentary.2" It is immaterial if this verse is by a disciple and not (as is equally probable) by Kautilya himself. It states what must have been a well-known fact. Dr. T. Ganapati Sastri held the first chapter of the extant book-the prakaranadhikarana-samuddesa to contain the satras; every chapter heading is a satra. The title given to the first chapter -"the list of chapters and sub-sections."-is not found at the end of the chapter; it is not part of the book. Each section is headed by a sutra, which now serves as a chapter or section heading.

An alternative form of composition to the combination of satra and bhāṣyā, as in the Kauṭiiīyā, by the author himself—which dispenses with the need of vārttikas [as in the case of the daršanas (philosophy) and vyākarana (grammar) aphorisms] is that of a verse-compendium, which gives a comprehensive exposition of the views of a writer or school. Such works are known as sanhitas. Manusmṛti is often referred to as Manusanhitā, Elaboration and intelligibility (springing from comprehensiveness) are the features of a sanhitā. A sanhitā will not need much explanation, at any rate on the scale of a commentary on a suira work. But, in spite of the care lavished in the composition of a sanishita, it may present apparent contradictions and obscurities, springing in some instances from brevity of treatment. This has happened in Manusmṛti. The smrti, which passes by the name of Brhaspati, is not simply based on Manu's work; it is, as recognized by scholars, virtually a vārttika on the older smrti. In many cases Brhaspati is obviously explaining, illustrating or elaborating the laconic statements of Manusmṛti. He has done for Manu's work what Patañjali claims to have done for Panini's: vis. removed misunderstandings or strictures passed on it by explanations, illustrations and resolutions of apparent contradictions. The reconstruction that I have attempted1 of Brhaspati's lost smrti is still a torso; but it is already nearly as large as Manusmrti. The study of the two smrtis side by side will prove a useful corrective to a disposition to see inconsistency and contradiction in ancient works. I may have to refer later on to specific instances of supposed contradictions in the text of Manu, which are held to prove that it passed through the hands of several editors or redactors.2 But, it may be stated now that critics, who fasten on instances of apparent conflict in statement or doctrine in an ancient Indian work, which has been held to be divinely inspired, very often overlook probabilities. Indian scholars and commentators do not betray either lack of acumen or independence in discovering flaws in the works they deal with. If they do. their readers and critics will not overlook their failure. Carelessness will not be attributed to a divine being, and if instances of apparent slips occur in a work that claims divine authorship or inspiration, it will be treated by our writers either as proof of the unauthenticity of the work or of the unreality of the contradiction. A feature of ancient India was the wandering scholar, as in mediaeval Europe, who travelled from place to place displaying his erudition and critical powers before assemblies or kings and challenging everywhere scholars of repute settled there. The discussions would develop acute critical powers and result in many exposures of wrong interpretations, citations or inferences. Real defects will seldom escape the vigilance of Brhaspalismrti (Reconstructed), Gaekwad's Oriental Series, Vol. LXXXV, 1941.

<sup>1.</sup> Bālakānda, 2, 15-20.

हम्बा विप्रतिपत्ति बहुधा सास्त्रेषु माध्यकाराणाम् ।' स्वयमेव विष्णुगुप्तथकार सूत्रं च माध्यं च ॥ (की. व. शा. p. 429).

Buhler laboured under this belief, and tried to discriminate (Introduction to his Laws of Manu, pp. lxvi-lxxii,) between supposed older and later parts of Manusmrti. He held that it had undergone Several revisions (Ibid., pp. xcii-cviii).

such public contests, in which an original work that is cited is construed to establish its internal consistency as well as the validity of its doctrine. A work will not escape in ancient India sharp criticism of obvious defects and their exposure merely because it claims divine inspiration. MM. P. V. Kane (following Buhler) cites six instances of conflicting statements in Manusmyti, and I venture to affirm that in every one of them a reconciliation is possible,1

One of the subjects which has exercised the minds of modern students of Dharmasastra is the difference in subjects dealt with in different smrtis and difference in stress on certain topics, as reflected by the space given to them in the books. Conclusions as to relative chronological position or the evolution of doctrines have been hastily drawn from such differences between smrti and smrti. If a topic is omitted in a sulra work, is it conclusive evidence to show that the topic was unknown in the epoch or to the author, or that the author deliberately omitted it as unimportant? It is a matter of daily experience to those who give oral expositions of sciences that they vary the stress or expand or contract treatment of specific topics, according to the nature of their audience-its capacity, bias or mental equipment. If the discourses are reproduced verbatim every year, variations will be seen in the relative position given to topics and the stress laid on them. Will it be valid to infer from these a constant change in the stand, or in the opinions of the lecturer? The point is relevant. In the earlier Dharmasatras the treatment of law and politics is meagre or scrappy, This feature is generally attributed to the following causes. The authors were Brahmanas concerned more with ritual and penance than with politics or law; or they left these topics to be learnt from Arthasastra: and the 'other-worldly' outlook of the authors and their disciples was reflected in a becoming contempt for civil institutions. Such explanations overlook some features of the schools, the purpose of the works and the milieu in which they were composed. In the Indian view, as will be elaborated later on, to distinguish between the matters that appertain to this brief life and to the lives to come is both a delusion and a snare. With the exception of the atheist (nastika) the derider of Vedic philosophy (vedanindaka), the heretic (pasanda), and the materialist (Lokāyata), who are anathema to smrtis which treat them as social outlaws, every one else in society shared this belief. If the omitted topics were to be learnt from Arthasastra, why should they be mentioned at all? Was it not the aim of the teacher to give a complete education to the student, so that on the termination of his education the 'accomplished student' (snātaka) may be in a position to enter upon his duties as an active member of society, discharging with capability both his religious and civil duties? The educated Brahmana had many judicial and other duties imposed on him by the State. How was he to discharge them without training in the only period in which he was segregated for education? In the present chaotic state of our knowledge of the chronological position of beliefs, it is a sign of courage to make confident assertions that such things as the presence of Vināyakaśānti and Ganapatipaja (which occur in smrtis usually regarded as separated by centuries-like those of Apastamba and Yājñavalkya for instance) make the works in which they appear comparatively late compositions. The bane of false or hasty generalizations from inadequate data, which Sir Henry Maine deplored, is very much in evidence in the treatment of the mutual relations and position of the works in our smrti literature. We have the testimony of Megasthenes to the frequent consultations held by the king with learned śrotriyas, who lived in the woods outside the city. Were these appeals made to persons ignorant of law and polity? Out of the 28 chapters in Gautamasmrti only 4 deal with law and polity. Did the school of Gautama turn its back on these subjects and train its members to do so in life? How were the two aims of discharging one's duties (svudharma) and of bringing about the best for society (lokasamgraha) fulfilled by persons who had been taught to neglect subjects of ordinary daily occurrence in the world in which they had to live and serve? It is because of the lop-sideness of satra literature that sanihitas came to be composed, and later on digests (nibandha) and commentaries (bhāsya), in which complete pictures of social duties were furnished to students of Dharmasastra, by piecing together the dicta in different smrtis (including Dharmasatra works). A good nibandha, which covers the entire field of Dharmaśāstra furnishes a rough picture of what the substance of oral discourses in an ancient gurukula on the subject would have been like.

<sup>1. &#</sup>x27;History of Dharmaśāstra', I, pp. 148-149.

It now remains to consider a different class of arguments used for establishing the in-utility of study of a work like Manusmyti. Referring to smytis as a class and the varnāśrama-dharma that they upheld, Sir Henry Maine declared: "The impression left on my mind by the study of these books is that a more awful tyranny never existed than this which proceeded from the union of physical, intellectual and political ascendancy." Assuming for argument, that the purpose of the smytis is to uphold a priestly oligarchy, how does it detract from the need for making a study of the smytis and their influence? Maine has described 'Brahmanical India' (the India of smytis) as persisting "at a stage at which a rule of law is not discriminated from a rule of religion" and transgressions of religious ordinances are visited by civil penalties while "a violation of a civil duty exposes the delinquent to Divine correction."1 The charge may have force if it is made against a modern code of law. But, as a description of an ancient jural system, it will fall into line with description of other ancient systems or with the surviving traces of the combination of law and religion even in modern law. Apostacy and blasphemy were offences in English law till the other day. It was only in the 19th century that in English law excommunication was relieved from civil penalties other than imprisonment for six months. It was not only in India that rulers have felt themselves, under the influence, or direction of Dharmasastra, under a duty not only to maintain peace within the country but promote religion and morality. It has admittedly been so in England, If ancient Hindu rulers took delight in styling themselves Dharma-Mahārāja (as the Pallavas, Gangas and Kadambas did in Southern India)2 the occupant of the British throne still counts among his titles that of " Defender of the Faith." Marriage and divorce are still within the purview of semi-ecclesiastical jurisdictions, in modern England, In modern countries in which Roman Catholicism is the recognized religion of the people and of their Government, Canon Law still governs the lives of the people in a large number of matters, which are strictly civil in nature. It is so in Islamic law and in countries in which it prevails. The religious background of smrtis will not therefore make them singular instances of archaic survivals. The religious bias that we find in ancient systems of jurisprudence has its parallel in the economic or political bias of modern laws. As Vinogradoff shrewdly pointed out many years ago-" If individualistic civilization were to give way before one based on socialistic conceptions of the social tie, all the positions of our jurisprudence will have to be reviewed." It has happened so in Soviet Russia. While it is yet too early to estimate the extent of the change that has crept, as the result of five years of war experience, into our conceptions of what man owes to man-and to woman-it cannot be gainsaid that we are now on the threshold-not only of social and political changes which will reflect the war experience of the world. perhaps in different ways in different countries, but of changes in some fundamental conceptions or principles on which legislation may proceed. When A.V. Dicey wrote on the "Fundamental Principles of Modern Legislation," his idea was that the type of modernism was

<sup>1.</sup> Ancient Law, ed. Pollock, p. 28.

<sup>2.</sup> Rājadharma, pp. 144-145. Bhadravarman, the Kaundinya, King of Campā, styled himself Dharma-Mahārāja (R. C. Majumdar, Campā, III, p. 3).

England with its legal system, and the idea behind the fundamental changes was Benthamism. We have travelled far from Dicey's position. Our search for ' fundamental principles ' may drive us-not to the dominant ideas of the 19th century Europe-but further back to ancient systems like those of India. The errors of writers like Maine are due not merely to the sense of superiority, which was a common failing among English writers of his day when they dealt with alien or ancient cultures and systems, but to inadequate perception of the lines of jural development, in the infancy of historical study of jurisprudence in their days. It is also not improbable that the translation of the title Manusmrti or Manavadharmaśastra as ' code of Manu,' suggested that it should, as a code, possess features of modern codes like the Code Napoleon. When Maine's later studies extended to primitive systems he was not slow to discover that there were resemblances between the Indian smrti and the Hebrew 'law books', in the detailed rules laid down for all situations in life from birth to death. This is the declared purpose of Dharmasastra; only it goes beyond birth itself to prenatal ceremonies beginning with the rites of conception. In a more correct view, its work ends only with the indication of the ways of securing 'release' (moksa), and it is in this sense that a nibandha like the Kalpataru has understood its scope.

There remains one more criticism of Dharmasastra which has derived great publicity from Maine's enunciation of it in his vivid phraseology. The description of the chief work of the class—as an idealized picture of what a selfish priestcraft desired to see established as the world-order—has been seized upon for discrediting both the work and its class. A student of law wants laws for study; the laws which were actually administered, not the laws of Utopia! The criticism may be dealt with in two parts. First, is an ideal unworthy of study even in jurisprudence? Next, how far did ideals and realities tally in the Hindu systems of law and polity?

To take the first point first. Men with a desire to be known as practical minded persons did not like to be described as idealists. Idealism suggests the visionary. They prefer men who have their feet firmly planted on the earth! An idealist had to confront a hostile environment. The days are changed. Half the discredit of ideals came from the circumstance that they were not tested in practice. The scope for social experimentation with ideals seemed once so small. It is now otherwise. We have seen, in the field of politics and social reconstruction, ideals translated into facts. The strength of an ideal lies in the belief it inspires and its power of reflecting correctly human experience as well as human needs. He who knows where he has to go, and the route he has to take, gets to his destination quicker than he who merely drifts along. We are in the age of plans, and have seen the end of Laisser Faire. The 'plan' is to the modern administrator what the compass and the chart are to the mariner. To implement plans we need more than knowledge; there must be a driving force behind it. "One person with a belief is equal," said J. S. Mill, "to ninety-nine persons with only interests." In the field of legal reform, we now look more forward than backward-to ideals than to tradition. Those who were formerly afraid of even small changes now support large plans as the more effective; the bigger, the wider the reach in space and time, the greater certainty of success and permanence! In this view, there must be utility in the study of a smrti, which expounds or enjoins social planning on a scale so wide that it is not for a long period of time but for all time (sanātana), and to bring within its ambit not one nation but the entire world. The principles of social construction underlying varnāšrama-dharma, as expounded by smrtis, may have uses in plans for reconstruction even to-day, as I pointed out elsewhere some years ago, though it is the part of the old system that has come in for most criticism in modern times. In that sense, a study of the social and political systems of Manu will have its uses, even if they are regarded as having in them an element of unreality-of unrealized idealism.

But, as a matter of history, it cannot be denied that smrtis had as much influence in guiding the lives of men and women in India, and still in a large measure have, as if they emanated as laws from the state. The sanction-the power of imposing penalties-of the State is not always necessary to make laws of rules of conduct accepted by a community, or at least by the bulk of those who lead them. We have instances of 'laws' behind which there is no State as originator or sustainer; and in which breaches of such 'laws' are visited by public opinion with a power of implementation not inferior to that of a State.1 We have out-distanced, in the light of comparative and historical jurisprudence, the Austinian conception of law. But, even in the Austinian sense, Dharmasastra can be said to have attained the rank of a law book in ancient and mediæval India. The responsibility of an Indian king was personal, and it extended to all that befell the people over whom he ruled. As a corollary, it implied supervision of the lives of the people and ensuring their conforming to established usages or rules. In this sense, the specific duty of the king (Rajadharma) came to coincide with a knowledge of the duties of all in the kingdom. Sarve dharmah rājadhārme pratisthāh (all duties are implicit in the duties of the king).1 It became a matter of pride for rulers to excel in maintaining Dharma and to describe themselves as such. In the case of kings who were not of kşatriya lineage, or of 'Aryan' birth, the desire to excel in enforcing Dharma was even keener than in those whose titles were faultless. In the place of a multitude of smrtis, we have had under royal patronage, or in the expectation of royal patronage, digests of Dharmasāstra, which resolve the seeming contradictions in smrtis, fill up the blanks in one smrti from what is given in others, and present a coherent picture of the Dharma, which the people might follow and kings enforce. When such digests or commentaries which are virtually digests (like the Mitaksara), were composed under regal direction, and were upheld in the states in which they were first composed, and afterwards in others, can they be denied the title of laws even in the Austinian sense? Among kings who have promulgated nibandhas of Dharma, composed by themselves, we have Bhoja, Apararka and Prataparudradeva. Among writers of nibandhas commissioned by kings ,we have Laksmidhara-the author of the Krtya-Kalpataru, the most complete digest of Dharma, and the oldest now extant, Vijnaneśvara, Madhavacarya, Hemadri, Candeśvara and Vacaspati. The need to follow the old law, which was accepted by the people and followed by them (even under foreign rule), is behind the nibandhas of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and it is significant that in the case of three of them-those composed in the name of Todarmal and under orders of Warren Hastings and T. E. Colebrooke-(by Jagannātha Tarkapañcānana)-we have proof of the validity of smrtis even when India was ruled by foreigners who differed from the foreign conquerors of earlier times, in not adopting the religion of India or accepting its culture and ideals. The desire to excel in enforcing smrti rules is shown in South India, which has always had a population less influenced by Aryan elements than the rest of India, and in which a modern school loudly demands the replacement of Aryan features by Dravidian. One of the oldest classics of Tamil literature, the author of which (Tiru-valluvar) bears a name suggesting his low varna, reflects a mastery of Manusmyti and a reasoned loyalty to Manusmrti. The most famous of South Indian dynasties (the Cola) claims descent, like the kings of Ayodhya, from Manu himself, and a title which Tamil kings have delighted to bear is 'the king who does not swerve from the Laws of Manu' (Manu-neri-tavarāda-mannan). It will recall Kālidāsa's description of Dilīpa as one who did not swerve even by a line from the path blazed out by Manu.

J. Bryce, Studies in History and Jurisprudence. Vol. I. (Primitive Iceland) Vol. I, p. 334.

<sup>1.</sup> Santiparva.

We are seeing in modern Russia not only the power of ideals to create and transform social institutions but to reclaim and raise, in the cultural scale, millions of backward races or peoples. We have forgotten that the same work had been done silently and slowly in India itself in the past, when under the wide wings of Dharma room was found for measures for the uplift of communities and for their cultural and spiritual elevation. One instance of the zeal with which backward peoples or tribes took advantage of the scope that the social system outlined in Manusmrti and works of the class of which it has been the outstanding representative, is seen in the desire to drop their own group customs and usages and adopt those prescribed for the varnas in such personal matters as marriage and inheritance. The rules of Manusmrti and of Dharmasastra generally were not imposed on those who did not come under the catur-varna, and considerable freedom was given to tribal, family and sub-caste usages, particularly to those who were not within the regular varna scheme. The 'Aryanization', or what its modern detractors term the 'Brahmanization' of such peoples has been done, not by fiat of the State or by dictation of a hierarchy, but by acquiescence of those who realized that the scheme of the smrtis presented the best means for their social, spiritual and cultural uplift. No higher tribute to the genius or inherent power in Dharmasastra is possible. History knows of the raising of the human levels of submerged populations by a higher type of religion. The silent transformation effected by the influence of Hindu Dharma is not as easily recognized, because it is also due to the feature, which has often been condemned as inherent in it, namely the basing of law and polity firmly on the foundations of morality, religion and philosophy.

Raghuvamsa, I, 17:—
 रेखामात्रमपि धुण्यादामनीवेत्मेनः परम् ।
 न व्यतीयः प्रवास्तस्य नियन्तनेमिकत्तयः ॥

LECTURE II

SOME PROBLEMS OF MANUSMRTI

Manusmrti has had a position of pre-eminence not only in Dharma-Sastra but even in the literature of Hindu speculation. Alone among the smrtis, its dicta have been cited as authority in the literature of Indian philosophy. The designation of the class of which it is the most illustrious work, viz., smrti, is given in Indian philosophical literaturecontrary to Manu's own definition of Sruti and smrti, to even the ancient depositories of tradition like the Puranas.1 One of the attractions of the Great Epic, for which its semi-divine author (Vyāsa) made the claim-" all that is is in this work, and all that is not in it is not",-is that it has been regarded as a Dharmasastra. To-day, the parts of the Muhābhārata which are most frequently read or cited are, after the Bhagavadgita, not the attractive narrative sections or the sublime and simple poetical interludes, or the homilies, but those, which like the smrtis deal with the duties (dharma) of all, in the sense of Rajadharma. What the Mahābhārala holds up by express precept and description, by parable and story, by homily and narrative, as regards the duties of men,-which Dharmasastra, deals with-is done by way of concrete illustration in the older epic, the Rāmāyana, For conduct and behaviour that rise to the highest levels of Dharma, we look to the practice of Sri Rama and of those who saw in his physical and moral perfection the warrant of manifest Divinity. The points in the story on which even to-day its commentators and readers are most exercised are those in which practice (as depicted in the poem)-for example the suicide of the saintly Sabaria, the slaving of Tataka,3 the honour shown to the nisada Guha,4 the instruction to Sumantra to give Dasaratha an explanation that was not true5, the performance of funeral rites for <sup>1.</sup> Rāmānuja (Srībhāṣ ya, I, i, 1) describes his citations from the Bhagavadglīd as from smṛti but seems to differentiate between smṛti and purāṇa. Sainkara, following Brahmasūtra, IV, ii, 21, describes sāinkhya and yoga smṛtis, and cites Bhagavadglīd, VIII, 24-28 as from a smṛti (see Thibaut's Vedānta Sūtras, Vol. II, p. 381).

<sup>2.</sup> Rāmāyaņa Āraņyakāņāa, LXXIV, 33.

<sup>3.</sup> Ibid., Bālakānda, XXVI, 26.

<sup>4.</sup> Ibid , Ayodhyakanda, L. 33 ff.

<sup>5.</sup> Ibid., XL, 46-47.

Jatāyu,¹ the salutation of a kṣatriya by Hanumān disguised as a bhikṣu,² ambushing Vāli,³ and Sitā's denial of knowing the identity of Hanumān⁴—seem to conflict with the ethical injunctions in smṛti. The accounts given of srauta śrāddha, and domestic rites in the Rāmayaṇa tally with those in extant grhya and śrauta works, and it is against probabilities to suppose that they were interpolated from the latter. It demonstrates only the antiquity of the ritual.

The influence which Manusmrti has had on the lives and ideals of Hindu India for centuries can well be compared in regard to its extent and thoroughness to that of Confucius in China, But the Chinese sage was a historical person, and the teachings attributed to him are probably those which actually emanated from one who was raised above his contemporaries by his superior wisdom and moral elevation. The 'author' of Manusmrti, if Manu can be so called, in spite of the tradition recorded in the smrti itself,5 is a semi-divine being about whom conflicting traditions had sprung up even in remote antiquity. Modern students of comparative religions and laws have pointed out a resemblance, which is more than merely phonal, between Menes, Manu and Moses, as the traditional lawgivers of three ancient peoples. A modern student of Manusmyti, who has made a comparative study of the landlaws and the trade regulations of Manu and of the ancient Sumerians, has suggested that the source of the latter lay in the former; and he is for putting back the work of Manu or at least the substance of it, to the third millennium B. C. The discoveries at Mohenja-daro and Hārapa have disclosed the existence in so early an epoch, which is usually held to have preceded by a long interval the 'invasions' of the Aryans, of a type of culture which shows considerable advance in agriculture and trade, and in legal ideas connected therewith. This is only an illustration of the manner in which the intense study of the smrti reacts on some minds. Scholars who are facile in finding the sequential relations of legal works from the 'advanced' or 'primitive, character of the jural ideas found in them, would be puzzled to explain some features of Manusmrti, which disclose ideas more modern in substantive and adjective law, and especially in criminal law, than those found in advanced modern communities. A lawyer who has made a careful study of the works named after Manu and

<sup>1.</sup> Ibid., Āraņyakānda, LXVIII, 22-31.

<sup>2.</sup> Ibid., Kişkindakanda, II. 2-3.

<sup>3.</sup> Ibid., XVI, 37; XVII, 14-52 (Väli's indictment of Śrī Rāma).

<sup>4.</sup> Ibid., Sundarakānda, XLII, 8-10.

<sup>5.</sup> Manusmyti I, 58-61, 102, 119; V, 1-3; XII, 2, 126,

Yājñavalkya has pointed out how in some respects these ancient books have anticipated recent developments in law, and have been found good enough to guide modern judges in laws other than personal, in which of course it would be natural to seek for light in ancient smrtis, even after the personal laws of the Hindus have been changed out of recognition by judicial decisions". I Normally a legal treatise will reflect the ideas of the time in which it appears. This will be true of at least a great part of it; for, it may contain ideas of a bygone age, which appear as survivals; or it may be in advance of the times. The second feature is unlikely in a work that aims at wide influence.

In any attempt to appreciate the teachings of Manusmṛti a correct understanding of its background—religious, economic, political and social—is apre-requisite. But certain questions relating to the authorship of the Manusmṛti, its age and antiquity, causes of its widespread reception, authenticity and homogeneity demand a prior consideration.

Manu in literature and tradition ; Vedic tradition.

The name Manu goes back to the Rg Veda. He is the hero who is the father of the race of man, 'Father Manu', after whom men are known as manavah. One tradition represents him as the son of the Aditya Vivasvat (hence his title Vaivasvata), and another as the son of the Selfexistent Supreme Being (hence his title Svayambhuva). He is called also Savarni because he was born to Vivasvat by a female of his own varna (savarnā). In the Taittirīya Samhita (III, 2, 8, 1; IV, 1, 9, 1), he is invoked in sacrifices as a Prajapati ('Lord of Creatures', i.e., creator of living beings).2 In the Maitrayana Brahmanopanisad (V, 1) he is identified with the Supreme Self, Brahman. These are his aspects as a divine being. On the human side he appears as a rsi (Rg Veda, I, 80,16,1. I,12,16),3 or as the hero-king of the great flood in which the human race was destroyed, leaving him as the only survivor, and who recreated through Ida (who sprang from his sacrifice) the human race, or as a father who divided his property between his sons in his own lifetime4 (Tait. Sam. III, 1, 9, 4) and as a man following the prescribed customs (Sata, Br. I, 8, 1). He is referred to as a king, the father of king Pururavas by Ida, the father also of a king named Saryata and of king Iksvāku (the ancestor of the famous Solar dynasty of Ayodhyā),

<sup>1.</sup> K. P. Jayaswal, Manu and Yajiiavalkya, 1930, passim.

<sup>2.</sup> प्रजापतये मनवे स्वाहा (ते तिरीयसंहिता, १, २, ८, १, ; ४, १, ९, १.)

वामवर्ग मनुष्यता दध्यक् वियमलत (क्यवेदसंहिता, १, ८०, १६;)
 वामिः पुरा मनवे गातुनीषशुः (ib, १,११२,१६)

<sup>4.</sup> मनु: पुरेन्सी दार्व व्यमतए (ते. सं., सं., १, ९, ४)

and as anointed as king by Prajapati himself. He is said to have introduced the fire-sacrifices and śrāddhas. He is credited with the discovery of several Vedic hymns. The designation of Sraddha-deva applied to Manu in the Mahābhārata (XII, 121, 29) is reminiscent of the legend. The Chandogya Upanisad states that its last section was first revealed to Kasyapa Prajapati by Brahma (Hiranyagarbha), who communicated it to Manu, who broadcast it to mankind. In the Bhagavadgitā the Lord (Bhagavān) states that the yoga was first communicated by him to Vivasvat, who communicated it to Manu, who passed it on to Ikşvāku, from whom 'royal sages' derived it in succession from generation to generation (IV, 1-4)1 till knowledge of it became lost to men. The oft-repeated Vedic dictum- Whatever Manu has spoken is medicine '2-implies that Manu was the author of many injunctions or rules of conduct whose beneficial effects are testified to in the statement. That his practice created a precedent to be followed is signified in the passage in Taittiriya Sainhitā (111, 1, 9, 4), which declares that he divided his property between his sons, or the sloka in the Nirukta (III, 4) which affirms that "according to the sacred law, inheritance goes without distinction to sons and daughters, as declared by Manu Svayambhuva at the beginning of creation."3 That the rule here ascribed to Manu is not only not found in Manusmrti but is opposed to its rules of inheritance, is irrelevant, as the point in the statement is that Manu was believed to be an authority on the law. In the citations of the very words of Manu in Dharmasatras, in regard to mutually contradictory doctrines as well as to doctrines for which there is no parallel in Manusmrti, we have to see (as Bühler pointed out)4 the beliefs in laws originally, laid down by Manu and the indisputability of any dictum or practice

इमं विवस्त्रते वीमं प्रोक्तवानद्यसम्।
 विवस्त्रान्मनेदे प्राद्य मनुरिक्ताकवेऽनवीत्॥ (भगवद्यीता, ४,१); also Ibid., IV, 2.

यह किंच मनुरम्बीच् तद्रेषजम् (तै. सं., २, २, १०, २);
 मनुवै वर्तिकचिदवदत्तद्वेषज्ञम्तायौ (ताण्क्यमाक्षणं, २३, १६, १७)
 य: कश्चित्कस्यचिद्धमाँ मनुना परिकारितः ।
 स सवाँऽभिद्दितो वेदे सर्वज्ञानमयो हि सः ॥ (२,८)

अविशेषेण मिधुनाः पुत्रा दायद इति । वदेतदृक्—कोकाम्यामम्युक्तम् । <sup>44</sup> अङ्गासंगविस दृदयादिश्वायते । आत्मा वै पुत्र नामासि स जीव शरदः शतम् ॥'' इति ।

&quot; अविशेषेण पुत्राणां दायो भवति धर्मतः । भिञ्जनानां विसर्गादी मनुः स्वायंसुवोऽअशीष् ॥ (निक्कस्, १,४=p. 251. Ed. Bhadamkar).

<sup>4.</sup> Bühler, Laws of Mans, p. LXIII.

that could claim his authority. This is the spirit in which the very words of Manu ('Manurabravit') are cited in Dharmasütras. The Vedic legend of Manu's invention of Sraddha is explicitly stated thus in Apastamba: "Formerly men and gods lived together in this world. Then the gods in reward for their sacrifices went to heaven, but men were left behind. Those men who perform sacrifices in the same manner as the gods dwell (after death) with the gods and Brahma in heaven. Now, seeing men left behind, Manu revealed this ceremony, which is designated by the word śrāddha." Gautama (XXI, 7) cites a rule that is found in Manusmyti (XI, 194-92, 104-105).2 The Vedic text of the equal division of his property between his sons by Manu is mentioned by both Apastamba (II, 14, 11) and Baudhayana (II, 3, 2). The authority of Manu is apparently relied on by Baudhayana for the sin of the father who keeps his daughter unmarried after she attains puberty (VI, I, I3).3 Vasistha has several citations from or references to Manu. The legend of Manu's revealing the śrāddha may be compared to the declaration of Manu in Manusmṛti that the ten sages, whom he created (I, 37), created in their turn the manes (bitarah) for whom śrāddhas are intended.

Manu and the Mahabharata.

The close affinity between the Great Epic and Manusmṛti makes the occurrence in it of the name of Manu of special significance. Twenty-four citations from Manu occur in it. Of these, sixteen simply refer to a Manu, without any descriptive epithet; one refers to an opinion of Manu Prācetasa in his 'account of the duties of kings' (rājadharmeṣu); seven are ascribed to Manu Svāyambhuva, and they relate to ordinary smṛti topics. The Epic makes Manu Vaivasvata, the hero of the Deluge. He is said, in another legend in the Epic, to have been given by the Creator a sword which contained Dharma within it (dharma-garbha). He was to protect all creatures

सहदेवमनुष्या अस्मित्तीके पुरा वभृतः । अध देवाः कर्मभिदिवं नग्मुरहीयन्त मनुष्याः । तेषु
 के कर्माण्यारमन्ते सह देवैनेकाण चानुष्मिन् लोके मवन्ति । अधैतन्त्रनुः आदशस्य कर्म प्रोबाच ।
 अवामिनेयसं च ॥ (आपरतन्त्रधर्मसूत्र, २,१६,१)

<sup>2.</sup> त्रीणि प्रथमान्यनिदेश्यानि सनुः (गीतमथमैस्त, ११,८,)

The reference is to the three first mahapatakas, as defined in Manusmrti, IX, 235 and XI, 56.

त्रीणि वर्षाण्यृत्वमती वः कस्यां न प्रयच्छति ।
 स तुल्वं भूगवत्यावै शेषसृच्छलसंश्यम् ॥ (४,१,१३)
 Compare Manusmrti, IX, 90-91.

with this sword. As Manu is a king, his receiving this sword is a symbol of his being vested with the power of punishment, and it recalls the similar legend (i.e. of the creation by Brahma of Danda or Punishment) and of the king being made to wield his rod (danda-dhara). The Bhagavadgita refers to the 'four Manus' (catvara Manavah). The Puranas develop the lists of Manus and make them out to be fourteen in all, each of whom is 'regent' of a vast time-cycle (manuantara). Of them six have already ruled, with seven more yet to come before the kalpa is finished. Of these, the Svavambhuva is the first, and Vaivasvata, the regent of our time, is the seventh. The six are descendants of the first Manu (Svāyambhuva) and are named respectively Svarocisa, Auttama, Tāmasa, Raivata, Cāksusa and Vaivasvata (I, 61-63). Sväyambhuva claims (I, 33) to have been created by Virāt and to have himself created ten sages (Marīci, Atri, Angiras, Pulastya, Kratu, Pracetas, Vasistha, Bhrgu and Nărada) who, in turn, created seven (?) other Manus (1, 36). It will be noted that Prācatesa Manu, whose dicta on rājadharma are quoted in the Mahabharata, is not in the list of seven or fourteen Manus, but among the ten sages, who created the Manus, but a Manu created by him would be Pracetasa Manu. In the account of the Creation given briefly in Manusmyti (I, 1-110), and more fully in the Puranas, vast time-cycles of the duration of many billions of human years are mentioned, for each of which a Manu is creator and guardian. He not only creates all animals, plants, etc., but makes regulations for them. "Manu Svavambhuva composed the institutes of sacred law that pass by his name in order to settle clearly the duties of the Brahmana and those of other castes." (I, 102). The varnadharmas are therefore held to rest ultimately on divine sanction, and their institution is also the work of Divinity. The task of Svayambhuva Manu was to declare the duties laid down by the Supreme Being. The ultimate sanction for the dharma outlined in Manusmrti is thus held to rest on God, who is also (according to the Purusasūkta and its paraphrase in -Manusmyti, I, 87) the author of the varnas, each varna having been born from a part of his divine person.2 For each cosmic period or manvantara, the Manu of the epoch is the expounder rather than originator of the system of the Universe and its regulations.

तस्य कमीनिवेकार्य शेषाणामतुपूर्वशः ।
 स्वायंभ्रवो मनुवामानिदं शास्त्रमकल्पवत् ॥ (१,१०२)

सर्वस्थास्य तु सर्गस्य गुण्यर्थे स महाण्यिः । सुखवाहृस्यकानां पृथक् कर्माण्यकण्यवतः ॥ (१,८६)

Immortality is postulated in the Puranas for all the Manus, and the original sages who were created by Svāyambhuva Manu. It makes them the eternal custodians of tradition and the appointed regulators of laws. "The knowers and doers of Dharma, well-instructed and distinguished beyond others, who remained behind at the end of the previous manuantara and now stay on in the world cycle, in order to maintain unbroken this chain of worlds, kingdoms and races, and to preserve the ancient dharma from falling into decay and ruin, by constantly instructing the newly created in their duties-these are the Manus and the seven sages. Out of his memory of past ages, our Manu declared the Dharmasastra suited for the present cycle."1 The Manus of past manuantaras do not pass away, and the Manus of the future are already born and await the time for their assumption of regentship. The word 'Manu' is therefore, as has been pointed out by Medhātithi, the name of an office rather than of a person. An unbroken tradition is maintained by the succession of Manus, and the chief function of a Manu is to keep it up. The work of the first Manu continues in that of the seventh, Vaivasvata, who governs the current manuantara. This is why Manusmrti claims to be revealed by the original Manu of this kalpa, even though it is intended for those under the sway of his seventh successor. To support the infallibility of the original Manu, whose dicta are held to be contained in the present smrti, he is referred to as omniscient (II, 7), as identical with Agni, Indra, Vayu and the Eternal Brahman, (XII, 125) and as a king who gained sovereignty by righteousness. The ultimate source of all knowledge and all rules is the Veda (VII, 42). All that Manu says must be regarded as contained in the Veda. Brhaspati declares that pre-eminence is due to Manu's work on dharma because it is filled with the Veda, and any smrti opposed to the sense of Manu is not esteemed.3

The Idea of Progress.

In the tradition thus recorded, it is explained that each kalpa repeats what happened in a previous kalpa, and there is continuity in tradition between manuantara and manuantara. What we crudely call 'creation' is in the Hindu view but the systole and diastole of the

<sup>1.</sup> मत्स्वपुराण, अ. १४५

<sup>2.</sup> सर्वशानमयो हि सः (२,७)

वेदाधैप्रतिबद्धत्वात् प्रामाण्ये तु मनोः स्मृतम् ।
 मन्वर्थविषरीता तु सा स्मृतिः सा न श्रस्पते ॥
 (ब्रह्मपतिस्मृतिः, G.O.S. LXXXV, संस्कार, १३)

Universe, its evolution and involution, coming up after a mahā-pralaya and proceeding to another such dissolution. Within a manyantara we have vast cycles of time known as yugas, which form a quartette of tapering lengths of years for each of the four and of diminishing virtue. The first is the Golden Age and the last the Iron Age, 'the age of. Kali.' We are now in it. The regulations that are made are providentially devised to suit the conditions of each age. Men were not only more virtuous in the earlier ages than in the later, but they were more long-lived. Their powers of overcoming the drag of sin were greater. The rules that are suited to one age may be unsuited to others. This is picturesquely stated in the dictum that for each age there is force in one predominating moral quality or action, vis., austerity (tapas) in the first age, divine knowledge (jñāna) in the second, sacrifices (yajña) in the third and charitable gifts (dana) in the last. The implication is not that one alone has to be practised in an age, but that all are prescribed for all time, the one indicated for a particular age having more power in overcoming the defects of men in that epoch. In western countries the Golden Age was put in the remote past. In Hindu belief the Golden Age is both in the past and in the future, because the Age of Iron must, in the unending cycle of ages, be succeeded by the Golden Age. Another implication of the yuga theory is that duties are adjustable to circumstances. They are not to be changed by human volition. Different modes and morals are divinely indicated for each period. Diminishing power makes it impracticable for the degenerate men of a later age to bear the moral strain of the earlier. Hence many rules that are found in smrtis even now are to be rejected on the ground that they refer to another age (yugantara-visayam). The permission or duty to slay a manifest assassin, even if he is a Brahmana, which we find in the same smrtis which prescribe Brahamana immunity from capital sentence, is dismissed as suited not to the present age but to a former.1 The theory of 'age-contraction' (yuga-hrāsa) implies not merely a diminishing length for each yuga but a corresponding diminution, in longevity, strength and stamina for those who live in it. In course of time, this doctrine (of which the germs are found in Manusmrti) was developed by later smrtis and commentators into a long list of nearly fifty-five forbidden usages of Kalivuga (Kalivariya). The first digest in which the enunciation and enumeration occur is the Smrtyarthasara of Sridhara (c. 1200 A.D.) but the ideas are in the germ even in the Maha-

See my paper on "Atatāyivadha or the Right of Private Defence in Dharmasāstra" in the Kunhan Raja Presentation Volume, 1946, pp. 196-232.

bharata and Manusmrti, The idea is that increasing weakness, physical and spiritual, demands relaxation of rules in favour of those who live in the later ages. The recommendation of gifts (dana) and faith (bhakti), in preference to yajña (sacrifice) and prayaścitta (expiatory penance or rite), the adoption of the principle of substitution (pratinidhi), by which in the absence of anything that is prescribed a substitute for it can be used instead (in a kycchra penance, for example, a money gift to the person who is supposed either to do the penance in the place of the donor or to take over the demerit for which the brechra is indicated) and a recommendation to drop certain institutions or ceremonies on the ground that they are unsuited to the growing weakness of Kaliyuga (kalivarjya) are illustrations of the action of the principle, Under the principle, women and Sudras (owing to their physical and spiritual weakness) are given lighter penances and easier means of attaining the same results as men of higher castes. We find it already in operation in the distinction between dvija (twice-born caste) and Sudra and the literature open to each class. The famous rule of Manu (II, 24)1 which permits a Sudra to live anywhere (i.e., in regions in which a dvija is not allowed to live) is an instance in point. So is the rule of Manu (X, 126)3 that a Sudra does not commit any offence entailing loss of caste, e.g., by eating garlic, or drinking wine. The religious instruction that a dvija acquires painfully through a long period of studentship, the Sudra can get by hearing recitations of the epics and Purānas. The śloka which indicates for each yuga a special dharma-pravartaka, which occurs in Parasarasmytis and is ascribed by the Acararatna to Brhaspati ( in Krtayuga the duties to be followed are those laid down by Manu, in Treta-yuga by Gautama, in Dvāpara-yuga by Sankha-Likhita and in the Kaliyuga by Parāšarasmrti') is not a denial of the value of all smrtis (including Manusmrti) in all ages, but a recommendation of one specific smrti for the Kaliyuga, viz., that of Parasara, who has laid down (1, 33) that the twice-born in every yuga only reflect the dharma standard of that age, and cannot be reproached for it.4 The sacrifice of cows

<sup>1.</sup> खूदस्तु यस्मिन् कारिमन् वा निवसेद्वतिकशितः । (२,२४)

न शुद्रे पातकं किंचिक च संस्कारमहीति । नास्याधिकारो धर्मेऽस्ति न धर्मप्रतिषेषनम् ॥ (१०,१२६)

कृते तु मानवा धर्माकेतावां गीतमाः रमृताः ।
 बापरे शाह्मकिकिताः कठी पाराशराः रमृताः ॥ (पराशरस्मृति, १,२५)

धुने युने च वे धर्मास्तव तव च वे दिया: ।
 तेषां निन्दा न कर्तव्या धुनक्षा हि ते दिजा: ॥ (पराश्चर, १, ३१,) and many dubious acts done in ages of the past, which now perplex us, are explained away by the principle that such acts did not bring misfortune to those who did them in the ages long past because of the power of their superior lustre' (tejovišesa) which enabled them to overcome the bad effects. A married woman has many domestic duties which stand in the way of her performing numerous vratas (vows) involving starvation and other austerities. Parāšara (IV, 17) prohibits them for married women1. The Sudra may clear himself of the effects of a sin by a mere gift, instead of doing the elaborate penances that are prescribed for dvijas (VI, 51).2 The idea is different from that which lays on a king a personal duty to enforce Dharma on all his subjects. As he does it well or ill, his epoch becomes analogous to a Golden Age or the reverse, and it is signified by such expressions as the much misunderstood dictum of the Mahābhārata (XII, 69, 103)-rājā kālasya kāranam (the king is the creator of the age) or of the Sukraniti (IV i. 90 ff)-yugapravartako raja (the king starts the age).3 Acting under the sanction allowed to the conventions of those learned in Dharma (darmajilasamaya), a number of ceremonies, which seem to be beyond the capacity of the men of our times, or practices that are abhorrent to our sense of right, (like the levirate or niyoga) are placed outside the duty enjoined for those in Kaliyuga. In Manusmeti, niyoga is treated as an existing practice, and sons by the device are named and dealt with for inheritance, but the institution is explicitly condemned (IX, 64-68) for dvijas. Manu mentions that this 'paśu dharma' ('morals of the farmyard') had been in vogue in the days of a bad king of the remote past,4 in whose time the dread mongrelism (varna-

पत्नी नीवति या नारी स्पोध्य मतमाचरेत् । आञ्चष्यं इरते भतुः सा नारी नरकं मजेत् ॥ (Ibid., ४,१८)

<sup>2.</sup> बादाणां ने।पवासः स्वात् शहो दानेन शब्यति । (Ibid., p. ६,५१)

<sup>3.</sup> See the Note on these dicta in my Rajadharma, pp. 102-104.

<sup>4.</sup> नान्यस्मिन् विधवा नारी नियोक्तव्या दिजादिमिः ॥ (९,६४) अयं दिजीहि विद्वाद्विः पशुधमों विगहितः ।

मनुष्याणामि प्रोक्तों वेने राज्यं प्रश्वासित ॥ (९,६६)., स महीमखिलां सुजन् राजिषमवरः पुरा ।

वर्णानां सङ्करं चके कामोपहतचेतसः ॥

ततः प्रस्ति यो मोहात् प्रमीतपतिकां खियन् ।

नियोजयलपत्यार्थं तं विगर्दन्ति साधवः ॥ (९,६७-६८)

sanikara) became common. Brhaspati (p. 194) explains Manu's position in condemning the levirate, after mentioning its continuance, as due to the view that in the first two ages (Kṛta and Tretā) men were endowed with power springing from their austerity and learning, of which those of Dvāpara and Kali ages are lacking, resulting in lack of power to overcome consequences of the acts,1

Among modern writers there is a disposition to commend the rules of Kalivariya on the score of their being progressive. The ancient attitude to them is fundamentally different from the modern. The practices, which (though upheld by smrti) are treated as unsuited to our degenerate age, are also condemned but as wanting in authority. By the convention of the elect (dharmajña-samaya) they are considered as beyond the shrinking strength and stamina (physical and moral) of our times. Every one of the practices, whose discontinuance is urged under this rule of Kalivariya, will not appeal to a social reformer. Thus, among the practices that are to be dropped are the remarriage of widows, intercaste anuloma marriages and sea voyages. Their rejection in the modern view, is not only unprogressive but reactionary. The rejected items are not on a par with other inhibited practices like human sacrifice, religious suicide, drinking of spirits, pious improvidence (asvastanika) and needless asceticism. It is puzzling to see both humane and retrograde customs, rejected on the same principle in Kalivarjya!

The modern difficulty in appreciating the constituents of Kalivarjya, and in reconciling the progressive and reactionary elements in it, arises from lack of understanding of fundamental differences of outlook, leading to the adoption of altogether different scales of values.

Like a modern thinker, the ancient Hindu aimed at the good of the world (lokasamgraha) and put a premium on unselfish, altruistic work.

He attached equal importance to provision of charitable works of public utility (parta) as to ritual sacrifices (ista). In modern estimation, the aim of social advance is to secure the maximum of increase

उक्तो नियोगी मनुना निषिद्धः स्वयमेव तु ।
 नुगहासावश्यम्योऽवं कर्त्तं सर्वेदिवानतः ॥
 तयोशानसमानुकाः कृते नेतानुगे नराः ।
 दायरे च कली नृष्णं शक्तिशानिविनिर्मिता ॥
 (ब्रहस्पति, व्यवः, २५,१६-१७)

in wealth and the material objects of well-being, an increase in our knowledge of the secrets of nature and greater command over nature's forces, with wider application of science to war and industry. Our standards are material and largely external. The old Indian belief was different. The contrast between the East and the West comes out in many ways, even on a superficial comparison. Religion dominates all Indian ideas, While happiness (in a Hedonistic sense) is the Western criterion, duty is the Indian. In the Indian view man is a soul disguised in a body. The body perishes but the indweller, the 'self', survives eternally. What is 'good' is not what seems 'good' to the perishable, but is 'good' to the imperishable. Worldly prosperity is no index of man's advance. It is delusive, and is dsuri, demoniac, not daivi, divine. Indian thought thinks not in terms of countries, nations or peoples, but of the universe; not of the short span of human life but of eternity. The only advance that is real and lasting is the spiritual, the 'ascent,' of the self. An advance in spirituality coupled with one in morals, is the real index of progress. The self (ātman) has a goal so remote in Time that it is invisible, and is gained by conquest of the trend to re-birth (and all that it implies) and the ultimate approach to and merger in the Supreme. Nothing that is thought, felt or done is lost; all make a permanent impression, and their effects cling to the self through Time. The supreme purpose of those who enjoy a vision that is denied to ordinary folk is to indicate the ways in which the ultimate goal can be reached. Anything that makes his approach to the distant goal easier, quicker and more certain is what one should do; anything that retards it is what one must avoid. The catalogue of duties, which constitute Dharmasastra, is intended to help in the attainment of this end. The purpose of social organization, and the disciplined life of the āśramas have also the same aim. The appointed means are mainly disciplinary, and the inculcation of standards of value different from our present day scales. They take note of the strength and weakness of every person and appoint means suited to each. They are integrated to a complete philosophy, and the declaration of their derivation from a divine source is only an emphatic way of asserting their supreme necessity for the uplift of the self. Dharmasastra and Darsanasastra (philosophy) share this aim, and their prescriptions are the same, with stress on the superior validity of one or another means of grace. They agree in indicating the ways to the goal by the broad roads of Yoaa, Bhakti, Karma and Jnana. Leaving aside the precise definitions in the darsanas, the purpose of the four may be stated to be the training of the mind, the heart and activity, and their sublimation.

The methods of approach in smrti and philosophy to the means of attainment of the end differ. A smrti merely describes the modes and indicates the outlines of the processes or technique of each; the darsana expounds the principles and supports them by reference to reason as well as scriptural authority. When philosophical schemes were elaborated for study and differentiated from one another, antagonism, or atleast inherent rivalry, was postulated between them. This seemed obvious by the stressing of its own mode of realization by each darsana. It is otherwise in a smrti. Its approach is synthetic and inclusive, with an emphasis naturally on karma, in the sense of both moral duty and enjoined rites, as they accord best with the concept of Dharma based on Vedic injunction. With the exception of the Bhaktimarga, we find the other three in Manusmrti. Indian thought realizes that the self has a body, which is liable to weakness and temptation and needs to be trained. The appropriate training to enable it to reach its goal is behind the constitution and rules of every parna and every asrama. Discipline is the common denominator of all the rules and the entire system of varnāśrama-dharma. It is the universal regulator. Pleasure, if it is not coarse and does not retard the progress of the self, is permissible. Aimless asceticism is not the teaching of Dharma. Higher ends and means must prevail over lower. Acute study and knowledge of the relations between mind and body and between man and his environment, and of the physical bases of emotional, intellectual and spiritual life, are behind the meticulous regulation of such things as time for connubial intercourse, continence of man and woman, lawful and forbidden food and drink, clothing, the quantity and type of nourishment that is permissible to different persons, the modes of life for different persons according to their adhikara (duty or function), the amusements that are lawful, and the detailed code of ethics and etiquette. In Indian belief a person's relations extend both vertically and horizontally, in space as well as in time. He is a link between ancestors and descendants. Man is midway between the sub-human and super-human worlds. There is belief in the inter-connection between action in one plane and in others. Such relationship has to be conceived as not of two, or even three dimensions but of many. Cosmic relationships defy human analysis. Their realization is either intuitive or empirical. What the sages have said is based on both. The wide scope given to the intuition of the erudite and the elect (not of the half-human or savage being) in the determination of Dharma-ranging from spiritual to civic duties-is due to the hypothesis of the reliability of the intuitions of such persons. Since the vehicles in which the self can march to the goal are the body and the mind, both have been subjected to intensive study by the framers of the rules of Dharma. It is not only in the rules for the observation of the conduct of witnesses in an enquiry or in those for the determination of persons fit to be chosen as partners in marriage that we find proof of profound study, and of empiricism which has been translated into tradition. We find it also in a study of sex-behaviour, of the psychology of adolescence and of those who have reached the climacteric, and of the reaction of function on mental content and disposition. Details, which look wearisome, when crudely translated and superficially studied, will be found to be based on time-worn experience. In every detail or rule, there is only one aim; how to come nearer the attainment of the summum bonum, and how to conserve the spiritual strength, overcome weakness, and lift up the self. Whether in any specified condition or circumstance the path of activity (pracrtti) or that of renunciation (nivrtti) is the better, and whether one may be satisfied with being raised by good deeds or scrupulous attention to enjoined rites to the bhoga-bhumi of the world of the gods, or should aim higher, are matters that come within the scope of Dharmasastra. It will be noticed that a phala (result) is specified for every act, good or bad, and for every omission of enjoined duty that is unexpiated. Their enumeration in a smrti is wearisome to a modern reader. But for one who knows Dharmasastra and looks to it for guidance, they are of great significance. So are the catalogues of sins, and of the means of expiation of sins. In general, a sin springs either from an infringement of enjoined duty (Dharma) or the omission of a duty that is imposed on a person. The ways of overcoming sins are seven : by undergoing suffering, either as the natural consequence of the offence or otherwise, by undergoing civil penalties (since punishment purifies), by post-mortuary suffering in other worlds ('Hells'), by countervailing measures which create a stock of merit to balance the sins (as by charity, pilgrimage, penances, austerities, vows, Manu, XI, 236-240), by prayers and ritual, by penitence and public confession (e.g., Manusmṛti, XI, 228-233) and above all by leading a life of virtue and unselfishness. There is the belief that in determining his future birth a man's actions in this life have a decisive influence. The recital of the forms which various offenders assume in the next incarnation. which is wearisome for us to read, is part of a smrti; for, it was part of the wide-spread belief of the times.

The mistakes that are usually made by modern students of Dharmasastra are mainly two: they judge the ideas and belief of other days by those of their own; they do not often appreciate the rationale behind injunctions or institutions that do not appeal to them. There is also the temper of superiority or condescension which is difficult to overcome, and which makes a modern student miss the significance of what sympathetic understanding might reveal. These are sins against the historic spirit, often committed, like common sins, in the name of the virtues they transgress. The combined effect of these is not only insufficient understanding or inaccurate perception of the value and meaning of rules or institutions and their effects, but application of faulty methods of textual criticism.

Though a smrti is not expected to prove a work of philosophy or theology, and expound a complete scheme of life, it must be based on the acceptance of one. It must have a metaphysical background, In Hindu belief, all wisdom and all knowledge are contained in the Veda, To challenge the omniscience of the Veda is implety and exposes the doubter to the charge of heresy. No amount of doctrinal divergence will make a Hindu a heretic, if he does not deny this. If he does, he is a heretic (veda-bāhya, veda-nindaka), and an atheist (nastika). The highest compliment that can be paid to any canonical work is to describe it as containing the cream of the Veda. The puranas, the epics and smrtis claim to be so. The wisdom of the Veda is not to be gathered from a superficial understanding of its verbal meaning, though to know even that is better than learning the Veda only by rote. It is the proud claim of Manusmrti (II, 7) that all the duties described by it are based on the Veda, for its 'author' Manu was omniscient (sarvajñānamayo hi sah). It is unnecessary to try to find a passage in the Veda for every statement in Manusmṛti. It is in the sense of the Veda as expanded in itihāsa and purana that its source may be found. The two types of literature are among the springs of tradition and duty. They are the records of cosmic history, in a sense more profound than and different from our conception of world history. They deal with the rhythmic swing of the coming and going out of Being (pravrtti and nivrtti). Their concern is not merely with the story of short-lived generations of men, which pass away far too quickly, or with the genealogy and story of regal lines. Creation, dissolution and the ages of the world are not less, in fact more, their concern. History (limited to what it now is) is the story more of the bodies than of the souls of men. The body dies but the soul, the self, is immortal. Death is not extinction. To know the story of one cycle of time is to know all, because the repetition of the cycles stretches from infinity to infinity. Seen against the background of the story of cosmos, the struggles and the rise and fall of empires and dominions seem petty and futile. The great conquerors and kings have passed away. The author of the Visnupurāna repeats in ringing words the disappointment of the study of human or dynastic history, that it has retailed, and condemns it as the vanity of vanities.\(^1\) What survive are not the body and perishable institutions, but the punya or pāpā, merit or sin, that result from action (karma) and that adhere to the self till it is absorbed. The most practical of studies will therefore be that which enables the self to transcend its obstacles and reach its goal. Among the ways discovered for realizing it is the pursuit of duty (Dharma). Intuition of it is enshrined in the Veda and cognate literature, from which Manu's work and others of the kind must, according to Hindu belief, be interpreted.

This is the reason why (without any trace of self-consciousness) Manusmrti prescribes its own study for the teachers and custodians of knowledge and tradition, viz., the Brahmanas.2 If the wisdom of the teacher, who by example and precept, by instruction and practice, guides the lives of those whom he is appointed to train, is ensured, then that of the community is safeguarded. He who learns the smrti must be already erudite (vidvān). He must be a man of austere righteousness; 3 for acara (conduct) is the transcendent law4 (ācārah paramo dharmah) whether it is in harmony with what is enjoined by the Veda or the smrti. The man who is soulful (dtamavan) should conform to the highest tradition in his own conduct, i.e., adherence to principles. Manusmṛti is comprehensive, for in it has been stated "the good and bad qualities of human actions and the immemorial rules of conduct (sasvatah acarah) to be followed by all the four varnas" (I. 107).5 It details the svadharma of every one. By daily study of it and by teaching it daily a learned Brahmana will increase social welfare and his powers of understanding, earn fame. and attain longevity and ultimately supreme bliss (nis-śreyasam param). The student of Manusmrti is further said to sanctify his Visnupurāna, IV, 24, 123-151. Dr. Jayaswal, "History of India, 150 to 350 A. D." p. 209, has cited with a free translation extracts from this eloquent passage.

विद्वा त्राक्षणेनेदमध्येतव्यं प्रयक्षतः ।
 शिधेन्यश्च प्रयक्तव्यं सम्यक्तान्येन केतवितः ॥ (१,१०३)

१६ं शास्त्रमधीयानी नासणः शंसितनतः । (१,१०४)

<sup>4.</sup> बाचारः परमो धर्मः बृत्युक्तः स्मातं प्रव च । तस्मादास्मिनतदा युक्ते निलं स्यादात्मवान् द्वितः ॥ (१,१०८)

अस्मिन् धर्मोऽखिलेनोक्ती गुणदोषी च कर्मणाम् ।
 चतुर्णामपि वर्णानामाचारश्रैव शाखतः ॥ (१,१०७) ancestors for seven generations and his descendants for seven generations.1 "He alone merits the whole earth" (prtvim api so arhati, I, 105). He who studies the work diligently and lives up to its injunctions is untainted by sin, from thought, word or deed (I, 104).2 The daily recitation of the work will ensure virtuous conduct and the attainment of all one's wishes (XII, 126).3 It is noteworthy that while the earlier statements are made of the teacher, who has to be a Brāhmana (as the smrti is like a Veda, which a Brāhmana alone can teach), the fruits of daily recitation are promised to all the twiceborn (dvija). The same destiny is held out to the diligent teacher of Manusmrti as to the Brahmana who combines austerity and Vedic learning (XII, 104).4 It is only those who know their own duties and the duties of others that are efficient wardens of society. It is in this sense, and not in that of upholding (as suggested by Dr. K.P. Jayaswal) the Sunga usurpation, which contravened the fundamental varna-dharma as well as the sāmānya-dharma laid down by himself, that Manu declared: "Command of armies, royal authority, the office of judge and sovereignty of the whole world he only deserves who knows the Veda science (vedošāstravit XII, 100).5 The source of all dharma is the Veda, and he who has mastered the Veda, is a master of Dharma lore. As all dvijas are entitled to a knowledge of the Veda, and it is upto one of the second and third varna to attain (as King Janaka did) mastery of the Veda the glorificatory statement will apply equally to him. It is in essence only a magnification of Dharma and its revealed source.

Traditions of the origin of Manusmrti.

The present text of Manusmrti is divided into twelve books of unequal length, and comprises 2695 ślokas. It is the largest smrti extant. It gives a short enumeration of its chief titles or topics at the

युनाति पर्वार्ते बंदबांश्च सप्त सप्त परावरान् । पृथिवामिष नेवेमां क्रास्नामेकाऽपि सोऽदंति ॥ (१,१०५)

<sup>2.</sup> मनीवान्देश वैनित्यं कमेदोपैनं किप्यते । (२,१०४)

इत्येतन्मानवं शास्त्रं मृतुपोक्तं पठन् दिनः । भवस्याचारवाजिलं विषयं प्राप्तुवाद्वाकिम् ॥ (१२,१२६)

<sup>4.</sup> तथा विधा च विप्रस्य निःश्रेगसकरं परम्। तपसा किल्विमं इन्ति विध्याऽस्तमस्त्रेते ॥ (१२,१०४)

सेनापलं च राज्यं च दण्यानेतृत्वमेव च ।
 सर्वलोकाधिपलं च वेदशास्त्रविद्देशि ॥ (१२,१००)
 Jayaswal, Manu and Ydjñavalkya, pp. 43-45.

end of the first book (I, 111-118), which tallies with the actual contents. This specification of contents was obviously intended to prevent the incorporation of other subjects. This practice is not unusual; for example the Arthasastra of Kautilya gives a visaya-nirdesa at the commencement of the work. In later times, every nibandha (digest of Dharmasastra) followed the practice. The oldest extant commentary on the smrti is that of Medhātithi, who lived probably in the 9th century A.D., about two centuries after Asahāya, whose commentary on Manusmrti has not survived. Other commentaries on the smrti seem to have existed in the days of Medhātithi, which are also lost (e.g., Bhaguri, Bharty-yajña) and the text seems to have been settled before their time. It is almost identical with that which later commentators followed, and which now passes as Manusmrti. We have in the verses of Brhaspati a check on the doctrines of Manu, and the reconstructed Brhaspati 1 confirms the text of Manu which has come down to us. It has undoubtedly been deemed authentic for over fifteen centuries atleast. "No one can doubt for a moment that the extant Manusmyti was an authoritative work in the seventh century."2

The work gives an account of its own derivation. Its contents were communicated by Brahma to Manu Sväyambhuva, the first Manu. who taught them to the ten sages who were appointed by him to create living beings (1, 35, 58). Manu had himself composed the sastra, and when he was approached by the sages to declare the eternal laws, he commissioned his mind-born son and disciple Bhrgu (one of the ten sages) to recite the laws to the other sages. It is therefore in the form of a monologue by Bhrgu, occasionally interrupted by the sages, who ask for elucidation of some points (V, 1-3; XII, 1-2). The implication is that the substance of the original composition of Manu was conveyed by Bhrgu practically in Manu's words. There are eighteen instances in which Bhrgu cites the actual words of Manu, and they occur in seven out of the twelve books,3 The subjects dealt with in these citations are not however of such importance or uniqueness as to demand the very words of Manu. The description of the quotations as the actual words of Manu has no special significance, except as implying that the rest of the work represents a paraphrase or condensation of the original composition of Manu. Its authoritativeness is equal to that of the original, as it was recited in the presence of the semi-divine author. An invocatory śloka, which is found in some editions of Manusmrti, has led to the explanation that the text of the smrti, as we now have it, is the reproduction of what was recited by a pupil of Bhrgu, who must have been among those to whom the work was taught by that sage.

G.O.S., Vol. LXXXV, 1941.

<sup>2.</sup> P. V. Kane, 'History of Dharmasdstra', Vol. I, p. 150.

<sup>3.</sup> III, 222; IV, 103; V, 41, 131; VI, 54; VIII, 124, 139, 168, 204, 242, 279, 292 and 339; IX, 158, 182, 239; and X, 63 and 78.

The significant points in the tradition, which rests on statements in the smrti itself, are: firstly, it contains the Dharma laid down by the Supreme Being and taught to Manu Svayambhuva in the beginning of this cosmic cycle (kalpa), billions of years ago; secondly, its authenticity and authority are vouched for by the legend that it was recited in the presence of Manu himself, by a pupil deputed to recite it before sages who wished to get the revealed law from the fountain head; and in its present form it represents the third or fourth version of the original divine dictation. Apart from Manu's own declaration that he had received the law from the Supreme Being (as a guide to his own regentship and that of future Manus), at the very beginning of things, the supreme authority that attaches to Manu's work is reflected in the Vedic Statements commending all that Manu said, in the claim to omniscience made by Manu himself and in the dicta of Brhaspati and Angiras that no rules opposed to those of Manu have validity.

There is evidence in Manusmṛti itself which seems to go against the claim it makes to so remote an antiquity. There are references in it to the Vedas, Vedāngas, Dharmaśāstra ("Dharmaśāstra is śmṛti", II, 10), works on Dharma (dharmaśāstrani), khila of the Veda (e.g., Śrīśūkta), histories (ākhyāna), the epics (itihāsa) and the purāṇas, which the performer of a śrāddha is asked to recite for the benefit of the manes (III, 235),2 the experts in Mīmāmsa (mīmāmsaka), and etymology (naīrukta) as well as he who can recite Dharma-śāstra (dharma-pāṭaka) and the logician (hetuka), who are among those required to constitute the pariṣad (XII, III),3 to the opinions

स्वायं मुवे नमस्कल महाणेऽमितते नसे ।
 मनुष्रणातान् विविधान् धर्मान् वस्थामि शासतान् ॥

स्वाध्यायं आवयेत्विभ्यं अमैशालाणि चैव हि ।
 आल्यानानीतिहासांश्र पुराणानि खिलानि च ॥ (३,२३२)

श्रीविषो हेतुसस्तक्षी नैक्को धर्मपाठकः ।
 श्रवस्थासमिणः पूर्वे परिषदस्यादशावरा ॥ (१२,१११)

of authorities on Dharma like Atri, Gautama ('son of Utathya'), Saunaka and Bhṛgu, as to when a Brāhmaṇa who marries a Sūdra woman becomes an outcaste (III. 16),1 to the teachings of Vikhanas (who is said to have laid down the rules for hermits, (VI. 21)3 and to the rate of interest fixed by Vasistha (VIII. 140), which is given in the extant smrti of Vasistha (II. 51).3 Of these, three (Atri Vasistha and Bhrgu) are among the ten great sages created by Manu Svåyambhuva, who in turn created the seven Manus (1.35-36).4 There are allusions to heresy, heretics and heretical books5 and to "despicable systems of philosophy not founded on the Vedas" (XII. 95),6 There are references to the atheist (nāstika)7, atheism (nāstikyam)8 kingdoms over-run by atheists9 (nāstikākrāntam rastram) and Brahmanas who are atheists 10. The caviller of the Vedas (vedanindaka)63 and works on duty composed by those who deny the Veda (Veda-bāhyāh smrtayah), are mentioned, a description that might appear to fit the Vinaya-pitaka and Abhidammapitaka of the Buddhists. Divergences of doctrine are alluded to, e.g., option on the disposal of the śrāddha-pinda;11 the relative claims of the soil'

- ा. श्रुविदी पतस्यत्रेश्तय्यतनयस्य च । श्रीनकस्य सुतीत्पस्या तद्यत्यतया भूगीः ॥ (३,१६)
- वेखानसमते रियतः । (६,२१) 2.
- वसिष्ठविद्यां वृद्धि स्वेत् विश्वविवर्धनीम् । 3. अशीतिमार्ग गृक्षीयात्मासाद्वापुषिकः शते ॥ (८,१४०)
- 4. मरोजिमन्यक्रिरसी पुलस्त्यं पुलद्दं कतुम् । अचेत्रसं वसिष्ठं च भूगं नारदमेव च ॥ पते मन्स्य सप्तान्यानस्जन्म्रितेजसः । देवान् देवनिकायांक्ष मह्यीक्षामिततेजसः ॥ (१,३६-३६)
- पापण्डिनो विकामस्थान् वैडाळजितकाञ्चाठान् । बेतुकान् वकष्ट्तीश वाज्यात्रेणापि नाचेयेत ॥(४.३०)

See also IV, 61, V, 89-90, IX, 225, XI. 66 and 8, 30, XII. 95-96

ये वेदबाह्याः स्मृतयो यावा कावा कुदृष्टयः (१२,९५)

- 6. II. 11.
- 7. IV. 163; XI. 66.
- 8. VIII. 22.
- 9. III. 150.
- 10. II. 11; HI. 161.
- पिण्डानिनंपणं केचित्परस्तादेव कुर्वते । H वयोभिः सादयन्यन्ये प्रक्षिपन्त्यमछेऽप्ता वा ॥ (३,२६१) and the 'seed's and to the interpretation of the term bhartr or lord in relation to a father's rights over a son,2

Such allusions and references will appear incongruous in a work which claims to represent the dicta of the 'father of mankind 'and to be incompatible with the primeval age of the law emanating from him. It is noteworthy that this aspect has not struck the acute commentators on Manusmrti or later Hindu writers, who have accepted without question the legend of its origin and its paramount authority. We, who do not share the faith in these, will see in such references only proof of the composition of the entire work in an age in which such knowledge of the matters or persons alluded to would have been natural, and in which divergences of view might be predicated along with heresy in its many forms. It is otherwise with the scholiasts. Omniscience is claimed by Manu for himself, and it is admitted by the orthodox, among whom the commentators on Manusmrti and writers on Dharma would be classed. Omniscience implies a knowledge of the past as well as of the present and the future. A work on Dharma has to lay down the conduct appropriate to epochs in which Dharma decays, and heresy becomes rampant as well as schismatic views. Further, the theory of the repetition of the features of each cyclic period of creation in all future cycles, would make the memory of Manu of the past degeneracy an indication of future decadence. Indian commentators (like Sabara, Viśvarūpa and Medhātithi) are acute and critical by nature, and are not likely to overlook obvious inconsistencies. Medhātithi, for instance, did not seem to have held the view (as pointed out by Dr. Jayaswal)3 that all that is found in Manusmrti represents the very words of the divine sage. He refers to the author as "a man named Manu" (Manur nāma kascit purusa-visesah, I. 1).

Besides the story of its origin that Manusmyti itself furnishes there are other legends, which bring a work of Manu on Dharma among

बीजमेके प्रशंसन्ति केशमन्त्रे मनीविणः ।
बीजमेके तबैवान्ये तिश्रमं तु न्यवस्थितिः ॥
अक्षेत्रे बीजमुत्सहमन्तरैव विनवस्यति ।
असीजकमिष क्षेत्रं केवलं स्विण्डलं भवेत् ॥
सरमाद्योजप्रमावेण तिर्परना ऋषयोऽमयन् ।
पृजिताक्ष प्रशस्ताक्ष तस्माद्योजं प्रशस्तते ॥ (१०,८०-८२)

<sup>2.</sup> मर्तुः पुत्रं विज्ञानन्ति अतिहैतं तु भर्तरि । आहुस्त्यादकं केचित्रपरे क्षेत्रिणं विदः॥ (९,३२)

<sup>3.</sup> Manu and Yajñavalkya, p. 44.

those divinely composed on the purusarthus. Thus the Mahabarata 1 gives two accounts. In one the Supreme Being is said to have composed a huge work on Dharma which was summarized successively by Manu Svavambuva, Usanas and Brhaspati. In the other legend Brahma is credited with the composition of a work in a hundred thousand chapters, which dealt with Dharma, Artha and Kama, and this was successively abridged into 10,000, 5,000, 3000 and 1,000 chapters by Viśalāksa (Šiva), Indra, Bāhudantaka, Brhaspati and Usanas, A similar tradition as regards Kāmašāstra, along with works on the other two purusārthās is given by Vātsyāyana.3 The introduction to one version of Naradasmrti states that "holy Manu" composed a book in 100,000 slokas and 1,080 chapters and delivered it to the sage Nārada. Reflecting that so huge a work could not be remembered by mortals, Nārada condensed it into 12,000 slokas, and delivered the abridgement to Markandeya, who reduced it to 8,000 slokas, and delivered the abridgement to Sumati, son of Bhrgu, who realizing that the longevity of men had been reduced in the transit of the ages. reduced the work still further to 4000 slokas. The last abridgement is meant for mortals, while the original work still exists in the worlds of gods and superhuman beings. The extant Naradasmrti (to which this preface is attached) claims to be the ninth book of the original (in twelve thousand verses) that Narada had composed. The present text of the Smrti is about a thousand slokas long, and deals only with law proper, and the claim seems to be supported.3 The approximation of the length assigned to Bhargava Sumati's version of the extant Manusmyli makes Dr. Jayaswal regard it as the composition of a historic person, Sumati, who composed the persent version of Manu in the Sunga age.4 A fifth tradition found in two puranas (Bhavisya and Skanda) states that there are four versions of the original smrti of Manu Svavambhuva, and these are respectively by Bhrgu, Narada, Brhaspati and Angiras.5 This tradi-

<sup>1.</sup> Sāntiparva CCCXXXVI, 38-46; LIX, 80-85.

प्रजापतिहि प्रजाः स्ट्वा तासां रियतिनिवन्धनं त्रिवर्गस्य साधनम् अध्यासानां शतसद्ग्रेण प्रीवाच । तस्यैकदेशं स्वायनुवी मनुः धर्माधिकारिकं पृथक् चकार । वृहस्पतिः अधीधिकारम् । महादेवानुच्यक्ष नन्दी सहस्राणामध्यायानां पृथक् कामस्त्रं प्रोवाच ॥ (वास्यायनीयकामसूत्रम् ,१,१,५-८)

<sup>3.</sup> Naradasmrti, ed. Jolly, 1880. pp. 1-3.

<sup>4.</sup> Manu and Yajñavalkya, pp. 44-45.

The following śloka from Bhavisyapurāna occurs in Hemādri's Dānakhanda (Bib. Ind.), p. 528.

मार्गेवाया नारदीया च गार्डस्थल्याहिरसस्यपि । स्वार्थभुवस्य शासस्य चतसः संदिता मताः ॥

tion probably springs from the obvious foundation of the extant smrtis of Nārada and Bṛḥaspati on Manusmṛti, which they supplement. The order of enumeration, however, places Nārada before Bṛhaspati (a sequence generally accepted by modern writers) but I have tried to show that it should be reversed, as Bṛhaspati is cited by Nārada. The version of Nāradasmṛti (which is only about two-thirds the length of Jolly's text) with the ancient commentary of Bhavasvāmin, shows many variants from the Nāradasmṛti for which the ancient commentary of Asahāya is partially available. Bhavasvāmin's text clearly has the tradition in mind, as it is decribed as Nāradīya Manusamhitā, the Nārada version of Manu's work. I have found most of the quotations in the Kṛtya-kalpataru, as often in the version of Bhavasvāmin as in that of Asahāya.

The legends have this significance. They establish the ancient belief in the divine origin of Dharmasastra and its authentic promulgation by Manu Svavambhuva, from whose work later versions were derived. Manusmrti, as we now have it, by claiming to be the authentic work revealed to Bhrgu, gained the power to over-ride all rivals by its emanation from the Father of Men and the Creator, The claim of divine origin or inspiration has had several consequences. By referring back all laws to one primary source, of which an authentic text exists and can be consulted, it secured uniformity in usages and law. The older customary laws tended in course of time to approximate themselves to those of the divine smrti, and though the bewildering variety of customs did not altogether disappear, there was a tendency for their gradual reduction and amalgamation. The theory of divine origin secured for the injunctions of smrtis both a stability and a force that they could not have otherwise obtained. as mere human works. The supersession of the older saira works by smrtis, for daily guidance, was the result. Basing laws on a source that does not admit of change contributes to social stability. But it is at the expense of unadaptability to altered conditions, as civil authority has no power to change laws by legislation. But the pressure of hard necessity finds a way out. The hypothesis of a divine, and infallible, source, carries with it the corollary that the laws promulgated will suit all times and circumstances and will be just and equitable. Where they apparently fail in these respects, investigation or interpretation can discover ways of reconciling them with the demands of the moral imperatives. The smrti contains the warning against literal interpretation, and advises the use of logic (nyāya) and intelligent interpretation (yukti) as well as the institution of bodies (parisad) to resolve disputed points of law and give decisions on matters that are not dealt with in the book itself.

<sup>1.</sup> See my Introduction to Brhaspatismrti (1941), pp. 138-141.

Published by Sāmbasiva Sāstrī in the Trivandram Sanskrit Series in 1929. Dr. Kane does not use it but Dharmakośa does. More of the citations in the Krtyakalpataru from Nārada are found in this version than in the text of Jolly, based on Asahāya.

Reductions of Manusmrti

Tradition by describing the passage of the contents of the original divine smrti through Manu, Bhrgu and possibly a pupil of Bhrgu, may appear to open a way for modifications of the original rules in the process of transmission. This is ruled out by the ascription of the recapitulation to persons with divine power. Modern students of Manusmrti consider that revisions of the work are proved by the presence of contradictory views in certain matters: e.g. niyoga (IX, 59-63 and 64-69), a Brāhmana marrying a Sūdra woman (III 12-13.14-19), forms of marriage appropriate to each varna (III, 23-26), eating meat (V. 27-56), the relative status of teacher and father (II, 145-146), and the birth of Bhrgu (I, 35 and IX, 32-56). It does not appear to be right to take such instances as proving the incorporation of contradictory statements, at different times, in successive editions of the work. It ascribes clumsiness to editors, In a revision one would expect obsolete matter to be cut out, not controverted. It is more natural to take such cases as reflecting actual or possible differences of view, which the smrti tries to resolve, Mm.P.V. Kane rejects the theory that Manusmerti underwent several recasts, and considers that one revision will account for the conflicting' statements in the smrti on which the inference is based.2 He rightly draws attention to the traditional practice of setting side by side conflicting or divergent views, and indicating either preference or option. The story in the Naradasmiti that it is a version of Manu's original code looks plausible, as it explains the fragmentary character of Narada's extant work, which deals only with Vyavahāra and omits other topics deemed by general agreement to be necessary in a complete smrti. But it makes the extant fragment not part of the Code meant for men, but that which is intended for the gods! It thus proves too much. Bhavasyamin is unaware of the story, or atleast does not give it, though the colophon

<sup>1.</sup> For the constitution of a Parisad see Manu, XII. 108-113.

<sup>2.</sup> History of Dharmāśastra, Vol. I., pp. 148-151, of his commentary describes it as that on the Naradiya Manusamhita, His text is only about two-thirds the length of that dealt with by Asahāva. While the modern view of revisions postulates additions to the content and elaboration, the old traditions, utilizing the belief in declining powers in succeeding yugas, represent each succeeding recension as a condensation of the preceding. The stories are unknown to the author or editor of the extant Manusmrti, and are suspect, on the ground that they attempt to give other smrtis the authority that Manu's enjoys. The many verses which pass as those of Brhan-Manu and Vrddha-Manu may be genuine in atleast some cases and represent floating ślokas in circulation and ascribed popularly to Manu. which are not found in Manusmrti, like the verses ascribed in the Mahabharata to Manu and not found in Manusmrti. The declared aims of Manusmrti are comprehension and completeness in detailing the duties of every one. It is addressed to all persons, and its study is described as a duty of Brahmanas, particularly of those who have to teach others. It has not the narrow audience of a kalparatra before it. Constant study of a work, which was made an obligatory study. in epochs in which there were expert reciters of smrti (dharmapataka) would safeguard the text from corruption and stabilize it.

Alleged Interpolations in Manusmyti.

Dr. Buhler, after an exhaustive survey of the contents, rejects about half the extant text as interpolation. His arguments are in substance two: Manusmrti is a versified form of a sutra book which belonged to the same school as that to which Visnusmrti belongs. Accordingly, by a comparison with sūtra books and Visnusmṛti, the portions of Manusmytt which may be regarded as added can be separated and rejected. Secondly, certain topics are Puranic in character and not relevant to the subject of the smrti. The theory of Buhler that Manusmrti is a versified version of an original Manava Dharmasatra is now rejected as unproved and improbable. It overlooks the purpose of both the older sutra form of composition and the later versified Dharmasastras like the smrtis bearing the names of Manu, Yājñavalkya and Brhaspati. In a sūtra book, which serves the purpose of a syllabus for oral exposition, the space given to any item should not, properly speaking, he deemed to reflect its importance in the view of the author or head of the school; nor can differences of viewpoint be inferred between two schools by merely comparing their respective aphoristic syllabuses. The versified samhita aimed at a wider audience than the kalpasatra and at an audience which would not be under the guidance of a teacher. Its greater fulness is not a proof of the importation of new mateer, that was unknown to those who orally expounded the dharma and grhya aphorisms. Even versified samhitas differ from one another in the space given by them to the elaboration of particular topics, for, they too would be subject to oral exposition, on which later on commentaries will be based. That such bhasyas existed for other branches of learning we know. That they existed for Dharmasastra is a permissible deduction from the lines of development of Indian literature. The individuality of writers will be indicated by their improving on existing works, by incorporating more of the matter passing orally, in their works than other, older, writers. Yajnavalkya's smrti is fuller on Youa than Manu's. His language is more precise. It is not right to postulate development of doctrine merely from differences of views on any specific matters between smrti and smrti. They can differ in precision of expression and capacity to convey unambiguously what they intended to teach. The view now generally held is that legal ideas become more developed in course of time, and the development is reflected in the larger space given to definition, classification and elaboration of details in later smrtis than in earlier. in Brhaspati. Nărada and Kâtyāyana for example, as compared with Manu and Visou. It seems plausible, but it overlooks the fact that every smrti did not necessarily reflect current practice or jural ideas that emanated from the brain of its author. The first view is contradicted by the presence of archaic and modern matter in the same work, and of developed doctrine in earlier and undeveloped in later works. The second view overlooks the fact that most writers on Dharma must have cherished the belief that they were incompetent to innovate. The more natural explanation is that a later writer supplies, not from his own experience or inner consciousness, matter not found in earlier treatises, and seeks to make up for omissions or summary statements, by his own fuller exposition of the legal or ceremonial practices that were current and held to be based on valid authority and to be consistent with the extant corpus of Dharma. A comparison of the Kautiliya and a smrti far removed from it in age, like Yaifiavalkyasmrti will not reveal any marked difference between the two ages in the way of refinement of legal and moral ideas and development of institutions. In a vast country like India, there have been many different cultural levels at the same time in different parts of the country. That fact has always been taken note of in Dharmasastra and Arthasastra in the recognition of usages that do not conflict with Dharma or morality. In the Introduction to my reconstruction of Brhaspati's lost smrti, I have tried to show that (contrary to accepted ideas of their relative chronological position) the smrtis of Brhaspati and Katyayana are older than that of Narada notwithstanding the circumstance that in elaboration of civil law Kātyāyana is fuller and more precise than even Nārada, and possibly Yājfiavalkya. If all smṛtis said the same things with the same emphasis on specific points, there will be no scope for individuality or for new smṛtis. The purpose of a new writer is not to create new laws but to state more fully or better what has been stated by earlier writers. Historical writers who reconstruct the social life of a period do so on the basis of smṛtis the composition of which is ascribed conjecturally to that period. On the other hand, they assume that the views in such works are personal. Both points of view overlook the repercussion on life of centuries of study and adherence to works on Dharmaśāstra, and the probabilty of the evolution of conformity to it in actual life. They also miss the hypothesis (which is not a legal fiction') of concord in all works on of Dharmaśāstra.

Buhler's Excisions.

When Buhler wrote forty years ago, the Arthalastra of Kautilya was unknown. It will take us far out, if we undertake a review of the data for establishing the authenticity and date of this remarkable work. Even without the commentaries (as in the case of smrtis) that would elucidate its provisions, it reflects a very highly developed administrative and legal system. In many respects it is in accord with Manusmeti, and differences are explainable on the score of divergence of view-points between the two sastras. I have already dealt with the erroneous views which have become popular about the nature and authority of Arthasastra and of the wrong interpretation of such ideas as secular and religious in regard to allied forms of complementary literature. Had Buhler lived after the discovery of the Kāutiliya, some modification in his point of view and conclusions will have been made. The small space given to procedure or adjective law in Manu is held to indicate its early date (Buhler, p. xcix)." As regards procedure" (says he) "the Manusmyti pays more attention to the moral side of the duties incumbent on the judge and the other persons concerned, than to the technicalities, which are more clearly and minutely described in the Dharmasastras of Yajñavalkya and Nărada." This is an indication of difference of aim, not of difference of knowledge or of evolution of ideas on law and procedure, Buhler ascribed Manu's work, as it now exists, to c. 100 B.C. at the earliest. Is it meant that no elaboration of procedure had taken place then or earlier? It is not a justifiable use of the argument of silence.

Throughout Manusmrti the stress is on general, moral and mataphysical points. It might savour of bathos if a revealed book of enjoined duty became, in spite of its already large bulk, a work on judicial procedure. Adjective law largely depends on conditions in which the administration of justice is carried on and the persons who are affected by it. These are more liable to change than fundamental, ethical and legal principles, which are the prime concerns of Manu.

Among the portions of Manusmrti that Büehler considered to have been interpolated the most conspicuous are the cosmological, metaphysical and theological parts comprising almost the entire first parts of the second (89-100) and twelfth books. He declares that no Dharmasatra begins with an account of its own origin, much less with an account of creation. This overlooks two points: that a Dharmasatra represents the syllabus of a small part of the instruction given to a pupil, and that the rest of the kalpa as well as the subjects of the curricula of the average Brahmacarin would supply just the missing theological or metaphysical knowledge. Such knowledge is basic. Manu attributes the social danger of heresy and infidelity to an absence of such beliefs. The unbeliever is a social danger and has to be externed from the state, as his lack of belief in the ultimate basis of social and ethical duties constitutes him into an antisocial person. India has never placed any embargo on the mind. But a social thinker is entitled to point out the risk to society of a mere attitude of negation (nāstikya) leading those who hold it to defy the conventions on which social order is built. Manu notes the existence of heretics in large numbers, and of the unstable condition of the kingdom in which they abound.1 It is to overcome the results of an unchecked tendency to question the very foundations of religion and morality that he condemns those who apply dialectics to the authority and sanctity of Veda and smrti, while he has no prejudice as such against hetusāstra, and provides for a logician in every parisad, which is to declare the law (XII, 111) and accepts the fundamental pramanas of Nyaya (XII, 105). The satras are textbooks by human authors. Manusmeti claims divine authority behind it, and aims at a universal appeal. The validity of its authority, no less than its teachings, rests on theological and metaphysical foundations. The divergent duties imposed on varnas and asrmas, have all of them their foundation, or justification, in fundamental assumptions that constitute the background of the minds of those who laid down the laws, and those who followed them. As a book that is one of many taught in a complete scheme of education, a Dharmasutra can merely allude to these beliefs and assume knowledge of them in the learner and teacher. But it is not so in a work intended for wide study.

बडाइं स्ट्रभूषिष्ठं नारितकाकान्तमदिवस् । विनवस्याध्य तत् क्रन्तं युनिखन्यावियोजितन् ॥ (८,२२)

The suggested rejections, on the score of interpolation, are curiously just those parts of the smrti which are needed to supply the background for the social and political system which it is the object of the book to uphold. Among the other unwarranted suggestions for omission as interpolations are the account of Karma (II, 1-11) which has to be taken with that of transmigration and karmavipāka and the verses on the onikara and savitri (II, 76-87). The account of the 21 hells is rejected, and in short the entire background is rejected. The two grounds usually adduced for eliminating passages are either that it is wanting in Dharmasatra works or goes into details. It is needless to expatiate on the theory. It is evident that the text of Manusmrti, as we now have it, has been unchanged practically from the date that Buehler and others assign to it, viz. c.100 B.C. It is curious that the passages that are to be rejected, because they have a philosophical or theological flavour reminiscent of the Upanisads, are deemed worthy of being treated as interpolations, according to MM, P. V. Kane (I, p. 149) because they "have the flavour of modernism (?) about them."

We may close this lecture with a few words about the date of Manusmrti. For external evidence, we have citations from it by Aśvaghosa and the Dhammapada, an anonymous citation of a verse from it in the Mahabhasya, an early Cambodian inscription which cites Manu (II, 136) without naming him, and gives the gist of Manu (III, 77-80), and Vātsyāyana's reference to Manu. One of the aspects not touched on is the similarity in many passages between Manu and Kautilya, and in the Tamil aphorisms of the early Tamil ethical writer, Tiruvalluvar, for whom a date in the 2nd century A.D is assigned. In internal evidence, reliance is laid on the alleged mention of the Chinese, Parthians, Yavanas, and Sakas (X, 43-45) in the enumeration of kşatriya tribes or people, who had become vrsalas, by neglect of their enjoined duties (kriyalopat). In Medhatithi, the name Pallavas appears as Panhavas, and in Bharata's Nātyaśāstra as Pahrava.1 Such passages, containing enumerations, are easily interpolated or altered, in the interests of invaders who wished to be brought into Manu's scheme. If they are genuine and not interpolated, the extant version cannot be older that the 2nd century B.C. and would approximate to the date suggested by Buehler as an upper limit,

<sup>1.</sup> Manu and Yöjñavalkya, p. 27.

It is noteworthy that, judging entirely from its content viz. ignorance of places south of Hindusthan, when Ceylon was occupied in 500 B.C., the omission to refer to the worship of Puranic deities like Siva (who are mentioned in early Buddhist literature), imperfect knowledge of the six darsanas, omission to mention the names in the great epics, Max Duncker1 was inclined to date Manusmyti soon after 600 B.C. Undoubtedly, a work that denounces the Licchavis cannot have been composed in the Gupta period, when the emperors boasted of their Liechavi connection. Its "awkwardness" in enunciating rules of judicial procedure, which is taken along with its omitting two out of the usual eighteen titles of law, is held to be a sign of early date. If we accept Büehler's dictum that Manusmrti shows a period in which the systematic treatment of law had begun but had not advanced, the argument can be used for putting Manusmrti before the Kautiliya, Speculations about the native country of the author are inconclusive. They are also irrelevant. The feature of historical validity in Manusmrti is that for nearly two thousand years it has enjoyed a position of paramountcy among the books which aimed at guiding the daily lives of Indians, and its social and political systems have had remarkable constructive results.

The reasons for its great influence, apart from its claim to be divinely inspired, are obvious. It deals more with civil matters (982 slokas out of 2685) than any older work. It is non-sectarian. It was not composed by order of any ruler, and so had no limited influence. It relies on the oldest sanctions, vis. those of the Veda. It nowhere inculcates the worship of Puranic deities. Its tone is ethical. It deliberately aimed at wide influence by being prescribed for study by those, who, in the social order, were the teachers and leaders of society. Above all, it enjoyed the prestige and power natural in a work that claimed as its author the parent of mankind.

<sup>1.</sup> Max Duncker, History of Antiquity, Trn., Abbot, Vol. IV, pp. 95-196.

LECTURE III

THE BACKGROUND OF MANUSMRTI

Institutions have validity only in their context. Even modern codes of law can be properly appreciated only in relation to their unspecified but well-understood presumptions and postulates. Right and wrong are terms that have meaning generally in relation to a particular social set-up. Few institutions or laws have a universality of application that will make them good for all times and circumstances.

In the case of a work like Manusmrti, the chief cause of much defective perception of the purpose or justification of its dicta or rules has been the failure to grasp, at the outset, the difference between the modern standpoint and that of the smrti. Even in ancient times, when dissent had created groups that did not share the beliefs that Manusmyti deems fundamental, the dissidents framed for themselves rules of conduct modelled on the older Dharma works. with such modifications as were necessitated by the change of outlook and hypotheses.1 We can see it in the modifications in Buddhist dhamma for the laity and the clergy that had to be made in the older rules of Brahmanical Dharma to suit the changed outlook of the Buddha. Today the law of inheritance for Buddhists and Jains is largely identical with that of their Hindu brethren, but it is because in regard to it the outlook between the older and the newer religions was not meterially different. Modern laws relating to property, marriage, inheritance and relations to the state may show material variations in a capitalistic and socialistic environment. With changes in economic attitude such things as laws regarding industrial combinations, have, for instance, been altered and are being altered day by day. Even in the field of morals, it is now urged that the idea of evolution must, if applied, lead to a revision of accepted ideas of right and wrong. In the light of the repercussion of circumstances on moral ideas, no moral code has universality or can claim to be based on eternal principles.

<sup>1. &</sup>quot;Buddhist countries like Burma themselves borrowed their laws of succession from Manusmṛti." (p. 560). "Buddhists had hardly any independent set of juristic ideas or works different from those of the Brahmanical jurists, and in mediaeval times countries like Burma professing Buddhism turned to Brahmanic codes like that of Manu for regulating succession, inheritance and allied matters." (P. V. Kane, History of Dhamasastra, Vol. III, 1946, p. 640). In regard to the share of an adopted son after an aurasa son is born, Jains follow (Ibid., p. 698) the rule of Vasistha and Baudhāyana giving the adoptee an one-fourth share.

Modern ethics is becoming not only evolutionary but behaviouristic. We look not to pyschological imperatives but to the adjustment of individual conduct to what society demands. Subjective treatment is giving place to the comparative and historical.

It is this which necessitates an inquiry into the basic assumptions of the code of conduct that passes as Manu's. It is only by looking at the rules in relation to such postulates that their meaning and significance can be properly comprehended.

In this respect Manusmrti offers us a help in our study that Dharmasatras will not give, at any rate to the same extent. A Dharmasatra is part of a bigger syllabus dealing with domestic and srauta rites and duties, along with the rules of ordinary conduct.1 It was intended for guidance in oral instruction, and was not meant to be read. Those who followed it would be familiar with many foundational ideas, on which the dicta of the satra rest. Manusmrti belongs to a different class of composition. It was not meant for oral exposition, in a narrow Vedic school (carana). Its appeal was to the entire community. It was intended to be studied by itself, not as part of wider curriculum. It was meant for grown-up householders, and in a special way to the learned Brahmanas, who were society's appointed teachers and spiritual guides, members of committees for determining doubtful points of dharma, assessors in courts of law, judges and advisers of kings. It also assumes an antecedent knowledge of the basic beliefs of those to whom it would appeal or apply, in those who read or use it, but it is more self-contained and aims at greater completeness in enunciation, explanation and prescription. Nevertheless, much in it would remain obscure to non-Hindus.

To begin with, Manu's eulogia on the Vedas are not rhetorical. The religious and philosophical ideas of Manu are Vedic. Its ritual is Vedic. Its fundamental beliefs go back to the Veda. Its similarity to parts of the Mahābhārata and the Bhagavadgītā is due to common obligation to a Vedic source. It is a claim of Hindu Dharma that it is for all time and circumstances: sanātana, But that there may be areas or people who will have ideas that go against Hindu dharma, is tacitly admitted in definitions of the areas from which alone correct precedents for action can be drawn. If Dharma depends on revelation (bruti), tradition (smrti), the customs of "good" men and conscience (atmanastusti), as laid down by Manu, a further definition of valid customs and of the elect, whose inner monitor is the Judge for them and others as to what is Dharma and what is not, becomes necessary. The traditions of Brahmavarta, handed down from generation to generation, as regards both the approved varnas and varnas not so approved, constitute the valid criterion.2 The usages of Brahmarsidesa furnish the standards for the dharma of the stages of life (asramas). In a broader sense, the land between the Himālayas and the Vindhyas and between ocean and ocean is the area of approved persons (aryavarta), and areas outside the limits of the habitat of the spotted antelope are those of barbarians.3 The skin of the antelope (Krsnājina) is needed for sacred rites,4 and as the area over which it can live is virtually the whole of India, the limits are extended thereby. The test is extended by a purana to include all areas in which articles necessary for dally ritual, like the kusa grass and barley (yava) are found along with a further test, namely the prevalence of the system of the four varnas and four asrmas in the area,5 and this criterion is stated also by Visnusmrti,6 The discussion

For example, Apastamba's Dharmasūtra only forms chapters 31 and 32 of the Kalpasūtra.

वेद: स्पृति: सदाचार: स्वस्य च प्रियमारमगः । एतवातुर्विषं प्राष्ट्र: साक्षाद्रमस्य छक्षणम् ॥ (२,१२)

तिसमेदेश य आचारः पारपर्यक्रमायतः । बणीनी सान्तराज्ञानी स सदाचार उच्यते ॥ (२,१८)

इसमाइत्यास्थ वाप्तान् विनञ्जादि ।
 प्रत्योव प्रयागाय सम्बदेशः प्रकृतितः ॥
 भासमुद्रात्त वै प्रवृद्धासमुद्रात् प्रक्षिमात् ।
 तसारिवान्तरं गियोः भाषावतं विदुर्वेषाः ॥
 कुष्णसारस्त चराते सृगो वत्र स्वनावतः ।
 स हयो यदिवी देशो क्लेक्छेदशः ततः परम् ॥ (२,११-२३)

<sup>4.</sup> Krandjina "has been throughout the ages a symbol of holiness and Vedic culture: vide Sat. Br. I, 1, 4, 1-2, where yajña is said to have escaped from the gods and wandered about as the black antelope, and the white, black and yellow bairs of the antelope are said to respectively Rg. Saman, and Yajus." (Kane, History of Dhamaidstra, II, p. 1026, f.n.)

कृष्णसारैः वर्वदर्भैः चातुर्वण्यांश्रमैः तथा ।
 समुद्रो पमंदेशः स्यादाश्रमेरिनवश्रितः ॥
 (आदित्यपुराण, वीरामेन्नोदयसस्कारत्रकार्धे, प. ५०)

भात्रवेण्यं व्यवस्थानां यत्र देशों न विद्यते ।
 म्केच्छदेश तु जानीयाद आयांवर्तमतः परम् ॥ (विष्णुरमृति, ८४,४) leads back to the recognition of varnāsramadharma as the final proof of the acceptability of an area, Per contra it has been argued by Medhātithi that if in any area the system disappears through foreign occupation, it ceases to be a holy land. If a Hindu ruler conquers a country outside the limits specified and introduces the varnāsramadharma there, it becomes a Hindu area. The historical significance of Manu's holy land is according to Dr. Jayaswal, that it came under alien occupation in the 2nd century B.C., and it would then have ceased to be "holy." But there is nothing to show that the customs of the elect had changed during foreign rule. The interpretation of Medhātithi is an extension of Manu's criteria on the lines of Visnusmṛti.

Manu's Cosmology.

The cosmological beliefs of Manu have relevance to his views. He recognizes one Supreme Being, who is immanent, and from whose sport (Iilā) the evolution and involution of Cosmos take place. He alone is. He is infinite, eternal, beginningless and endless, unchangeable. He is the first cause, the cause of both mind and matter. He can be realized, or experienced by the supreme wisdom that man may acquire by leading a pure life. God bears the world but is not lost in it. (Bhūtabhrt na bhūtasthah): "The world is in God, and not God in the world."3 In his account of the evolution or creation of the universe, Manu does not postulate an Absolute standing aloof from creation and another functioning as creator, a kārya-brahman and a kāraņa brahman, as in the Vedānta of Sankara. Nor does he treat the world as unreal, and as overcome by Maya (illusion). He takes the synthesized Samkhya-Nyaya-Vedanta standpoint. He is a realist and admits the authority (pramana) of perception (pratyaksam), inference (anumana) and scripture (sastra) as the only valid means of knowing; and he lays down that he who desires to understand the pure Dharma should master the three 4 The moral law is an expression of His justice and uncapriciousness, He is beyond concrete description, and the sages of the Upanisads

यदि कर्याचिद्रशावतांदिदेशमपि म्लेच्छादयः भाकमेतुः, तत्रैवावस्थानं कुर्युः, मवेदेवासं।
म्लच्छेदशः। तथा यदि कश्चित् श्रत्रियादिवातीयो राजा साध्याचरणो म्लेच्छान् पराजवेत्, चातुर्वेण्यै
वासवेत्, म्लेच्छांश आर्थावर्तमिव चाण्डाचान् न्यवस्थापवेत् सोऽपि स्वायश्चिमः। वतो न मूर्मिः स्वतो
दुष्टाः, संसर्गाढि सा दुष्यत्वमेध्यापदतेव (मेपातिथिः, २,२३)

<sup>2.</sup> Manu and Tajnavalkya, p. 32.

<sup>3.</sup> Bhagavadgita, IX, 5; Radhakrishnan, Hindu View of Life, p. 71.

प्रसाक्षं चानुमानं च वेदशास्त्राविरोधिना । बसाक्षेणानुसंघत्ते स धर्म वेद नेतरः ॥ (१२,१०५)

could only define Him negatively (neti,neti). He is realized by the muttering of the pranava, (aum) with the three vyāhrtis (bhāḥ bhuvaḥ suvaḥ), which "the Lord churned out of the triple Vedas." The recitation of these along with the Sāvitri mantra, and the suppression of breath, while muttering words of power (Prāṇāyāma) confer vast occult powers of purification on him who utters them. The praṇava is itself an esoteric Veda.4

The power of recitation of such mantras is both positive and negative; they confer powers, and they wash off sins, as by expiation. Sacrifices, great and small (mahā and pāka-yājñas) have similar powers. The five minor sacrifices which the householder (grhastha) has to perform every day, have this cleansing property, and one of their effects is to remove the taint, born of using five domestic articles, whose daily use for cooking destroys life and makes them so-to-speak "five slaughter-houses" (pañca-sūnāh).5 The five minor sacrifices are offered to Brahman, the manes (pitr), the gods (devāh), all living beings (bhātāh) and guests (nr-yajña). Learning and teaching the Veda is the sacrifice to Brahman; the offering of water and food is the sacrifice to the manes; the home (fire rite) is the sacrifice to the gods; the Bali is the sacrifice to living beings; and the sacrifice to men is the hospitable reception of guests.6 Mann upholds the Vedic belief in the effect on other worlds of enjoined rites done in this world. Thus, he enunciates the old belief (which we find in Kälidäsa and in the Bhagavadgita) that sacrifices cause rain and fertility.7 "An oblation thrown daily into the fire, reaches the sun;

<sup>1.</sup> बहदारण्यकोपनिषत्, २,३,६१३,५,२५,४,२,४,४,४,४,२२,४,५,३५

अकारं चाष्युकारं च सकारं चं प्रजापतिः । वेदत्रयाद निरवृदद् सूनुयःस्वरितीति च ॥ त्रिस्य पत तु वेदेस्यः पाद पादसपृदृद्दत् ॥ (२,७६-७७)

<sup>3. 2,00-62</sup>

आवं यद न्यक्षरं नग्न नवी यस्मिन् प्रतिष्ठिता ।
 स गुक्रोऽन्यश्चिष्टेरो यस्ते वेद स वेदविद ॥ (११,२६६)

पश्चस्ता गृहस्थस्य चुळीपेपण्डुपस्करः ।
 कण्डनी चोदक्रमस्य वथ्येत वास्तु वाहयन् ॥ (३,६८)

मध्यापनं महायवः पितृयवस्तु तर्पणन् ॥ (३,६८)
 होमो दैवो विष्: मौती मृथबोऽतिथिप्तनम् ॥ (३,८०)

इदोह गां स वद्याव सस्वाव मनवा दिवस् ।
संपाद्रिनिमयेनोनी दमतुर्भुवननवस् ॥ (रप्पवंशन्, १,२६)
अक्षाद्भवन्ति भृतानि पर्नन्यादत्रसंसवः ।
बद्याद्भवति पर्वन्यो यद्यः कमसमुद्भवः ॥ (भगनदीता, ३,१४)

from the sun comes rain, from rain food, therefrom living creatures derive their subsistence" (III, 76).1 A Vedic injunction requires no justification for its validity except itself. It is held self-proven (svatassiddhah). An allied idea is found in the ancient Vedic doctrine of the triple debt in which every one is born, the debt to the gods, (deva-rna). the sages (rsi-rna) and the ancestors (pitr-rna), which are discharged by offering sacrifices to the gods, according to one's ability, having studied the Vedas in accordance with rules, and begotten sons 'according to Dharma' (VI, 37).2 The implication of the doctrine of debts is that on every regenerate man there rests a lifelong duty to conserve and spread traditional knowledge, derived from those who had contributed to it in the past, to keep society going by adding in lawful ways to the population, and to make a grateful return to divine beings for the blessings they shower on mankind by commemorating them in ritual sacrifices. The triple obligation is held as so important that he who omits to discharge them is "fallen" (patita)3 both in this life and in the future. It is noteworthy that Manu rules that in making the offering to the gods (vaiśvadevam), who are named in detail (III, 84-90), no Brahmana should be entertained with the cooked food, and that what remains after the offerings made to each god by name, should be placed on the ground "for dogs, outcasts, Candalas (śvapāka), those who are afflicted with diseases as punishments for sins committed in former births, crows and insects." (III, 92).4 Compassion for living beings should know no limits. The Vaiśvadeva offering is a daily reminder that the feeling should ever be uppermost in the mind of the householder, who is born a dvija through his good actions in past lives, and is able to maintain himself in health and affluence. In the field of life, the migrations of the self have no limits. Every animal, however despicable, and every man, however lowly and unfortunate, is an atman (self) to be redeemed, as well as fortunately placed men to whom nothing seems denied. The bonds

अझौ प्रास्ताद्वतिः सन्यगादित्यमुपतिष्ठते ।
 आदित्याच्यायते दृष्टिः दृष्टेरतं ततः प्रवाः ॥ (२,८६)

वायमानी इ नाह्मणाक्षिमिः कणैवा नावते, नदावयण कािम्यो यहेन देवेन्यः प्रजयः पित्न्य एव वा अनुणो यः पुत्री यच्या नद्यानाितासाः ॥ (तै. सं, ६,३,१०,५) । अन्यील द्विजो वेदानननुत्पाय तथा प्रजाम् । अनिष्ट्वा चैव यहेश मोक्षमिण्डन्त्रसत्ययः ॥ (६,३-४) which unite soul and soul, in mutual service, pass the bounds of transient forms.

<sup>3.</sup> Failure to discharge the triple debt is a pôtaka ( ९९,६६)

श्रुनां व पतितानां च श्वपचां पापरोगिणाम् । बायसानां क्रमीणां च शनकेनिवेपेद्वति ॥ (३,९२)

The feeding of learned Brāhmaņas in śrāddhas and sacrifices as well as of one who comes as an unexpected guest is ascribed mystic effects. "An offering made in the mouth of Brāhmaṇas, rich in sacred learning (vīdyā-tapas-samṛddha) and austerities, saves one from misfortune and grave sins." (III, 98). But it is not to be promiscuous and indiscriminate hospitality; it should not be shown to ignorant Brāhmaṇas, "who are mere ashes" (bhasmībhātṣu vipreṣu, III, 97). A Brāhmaṇa house-holder cadging for food is condemned (III, 104).3

The principles underlying the belief in the three-fold or five-fold debt are, firstly the impossibility of getting rid of an obligation except by discharging it in an appointed way (there being no way in Hindu theory of the redemption of an undischarged moral insolvent), and the connection between visible and invisible (adrsta) effects, which pass beyond this brief life, and cling to the self. The latter is not a subject for argument or proof. Its being enjoined is enough for its validity. The Cârvâka scoffs at making offerings to dead ancestors and asks why, if they are efficacious, offerings should not be made for absent travellers or persons at a distance. Such men who question the foundations of belief are dangers to society. Their atheism refuses to recognize a proper sanction behind moral rules. It is noteworthy that the typical Carvaka is credited with saving: "Let us borrow money (without meaning to repay it) and drink clarified butter." Denial of funeral rites to atheists, of distribution to them of oblations first offered to gods and manes (III, 150), and retention in good society (II, 11) are the lot of the atheist and scoffer of the Veda in Manusmrti.4 Basing morals on

विचातपःसमृद्येषु द्वतं विममुखामिषु । निस्सारयति दुर्गाच मद्यतेथैव किल्बियात् ॥(३,९८)

नद्द्यन्ति इञ्चक्तव्यानि नराणामविज्ञानताम् । सरमीभृतेषु विशेषु मोइवत्तानि दात्तभिः ॥ (३,९८)

खपासते वे गृष्टस्थाः परपाकमनुख्यः ।
 तेन ते प्रेल पशुतां वजन्तवावदाविनाम् ॥ (३,१०४)

<sup>4.</sup> अतिरत् वेदो विवेषो धर्मशासं तु वै स्मृतिः । ते सर्वार्थेश्वीमांस्ये ताश्वां धर्मो हि निर्वशो ॥ धेऽवमस्येते ते तुमे हेतुशास्त्राक्ष्याहितः । स साधुमिवेहिकायो नास्तिको वेदानिन्दकः ॥ (२,१०-११) वे च नास्तिकहत्त्वः । तान् इध्यकन्ययोविधानहीना न् मनुरत्रवीत् ॥ (१,१५०)

revelation keeps them out of the reach of question by the orthodox, but not of the scoffer, reviler of the Veda, and the unbeliever. If such a person can question some dicta of the scriptures, he can challenge the constitution of society and the state, which rests on revelation. It is this which necessitates his externment.

A fundamental difference between modern ideas of the relation of man and environment, and of the ancient Hindu view lies in this : we regard man as liable to be influenced by his surroundings, while Hinduism regards it as perfectly possible for the external world to be changed by the invisible effects springing from impious or pious acts. The inculcation of a proper regard for such acts or rites, whose effects are widespread, is the purpose of Dharma and society. In Hindu belief the margin that divides the natural from the supernatural is thin, and one merges into the other. It is not only mind that, in the Virgilian sense, moves matter; morals also do so. If we find physical changes or degeneration in our surroundings their causes have to be sought in psychical changes and moral deterioration in a people or its rulers. The seasons are propitious when kings rule righteously, and their subjects imitate the virtues of the rulers. Anarchy in life produces anarchy in nature. We know how mistakes or misrule of the governors of men result in widespread misfortune. The identical principle is upheld in Hindu belief, with an extension of the scope of errors to include similar negligence of enjoined duties (Dharma).

The rhythmic swing of the systole and diastole of creation and dissolution proceeds through uncountable ages. The constituents of the universe, primeval matter and spirit (prakyti and puruşa) by their union bring the worlds and their content into life. The transmutation of the primordial elements (pañcabhūta) proceeds. The primary creation by the Lord is followed by the secondary by Manu and the Prajāpatis. Names, actions and conditions for all created beings were assigned in the primary creation itself by the Supreme (I, 21). The gods were created, and the Vedas were drawn forth from Vāyu and Sūrya (I, 23), and so were qualities and relationshsip (1, 23-26) and the distinction between right and wrong (dharma and a-dharma) pleasure and pain (sukha and duhkha, 1, 26),1 Whatever course of action or quality He assigned in the first instance, was repeated in them in each new creation (1, 28).2 He created for the "progress of the worlds" (loakanam vivyddhyartham), the four castes and decreed their functions.3 He divided Himself into male and female, and with the latter produced Virāj, who produced Manu, and Manu in turn the Prajapatis, who made the third creation (1, 36 ff.). It is implied that plants, for example, are evolved so, in view of their past karma, and are possessed of consciousness.4 Bhrgu, in describing creation again, refers to the creation of the four varnas from the mouth, arms, thighs and feet of the Supreme Being (1, 87), and pronounces an eulogy on the first varna. He is the vehicle for conveying to the gods and manes sacrificial viands (I, 95),5 He is born for the protection of the treasury of Dharma (dharmkośasya guptaye, I, 99), i.e., for conserving and preserving the revealed Dharma, by assiduous study of Manu's work teaching it (1, 103), and by practising it, as conduct (more than precept) is highest law (acarah paramo dharmah, I, 108). It may be noted, as related to the time when the Manusmyti was recited, that Bhrgu, who made the communication in the presence of the first Manu, mentions (1, 62) the next six Manu's, ending with Vaivasvata Manu, as already created.

पर्व स जाग्रस्त्वमान्यामिदं सर्व चराचरम् । संजीववति चाजस्तं प्रमापयति चाज्ययः १,५७

सर्वेशां तु स नाम।नि कमांणि च पृथक् पृथक् । वेदशब्देश्य प्वादी पृथक् संस्थाश निर्मेगे ॥ (१,२१)

The Law of Karma.

A cardinal belief of the Hindu is that it is man's privilege to lead a moral life. Life below the human is not held as

कमेणां त विवेदाय धर्माधर्मी स्थवेषणत् । इदेरयोजयेखमाः सुखदुःखाविभिः प्रजाः ॥ (१,२६,)

मं शु कर्मणि यश्मिन्स न्ययुक्त प्रथम अनुः । स तदेव स्थयं भेने सम्बगानः पुनः पुनः ॥ (१,२८)

छोकानां तु विष्टव्ययं मुखवात्र्यादतः ।
 ब्राह्मणं श्रविषं वैषयं सुदं च निर्वर्तयत् ॥ (१,३१)

गुम्छगुल्मं तु विविधं सबैव तुमजातयः ।
 वीजकाण्यस्याण्येव प्रताना वस्य एव च ॥
 तमसा बहुरूपेण विदिताः कमेंद्रेतुना ।
 अन्तःसंश्रा मवन्त्येते सुखदुःससमन्वताः ॥ (१,८४-४९)

बस्थास्थेन सदाश्रन्ति इच्यानि त्रिदियोक्तः ।
 कच्यानि चैव पितरः कि मृतमार्थकं ततः ॥ (१,९५) governed by moral imperatives. It is guided by instinct, not by volition, based on standards of right and wrong. It is by his own action that man can rise or fall. It is this which makes human birth a thing to be coveted even by the gods. Their condition does not admit of change for the better by one's own effort. Man can raise himself to the level of the gods, and to heights that cannot be reached by them. The law of consequences is universal; it holds in all spheres of life, in its most extended term, so as to include all that is created. Minerals, vegetation, lower animals and superhuman beings are what they are, in virtue of their own past actions. But such actions have been spontaneous. In human beings alone there is deliberate choice, which enables them to be architects of their own fortune. Man can use the law of consequences to lift himself up. He has the scope for the moral life. The power to lead a moral life is made by Manu himself (1, 96-97) the criterion for the gradation of living beings. "Among created beings, those with sentience are the highest; among them those with intelligence (buddhi); among these human beings; among men Brahmanas; among Brahmanas the masters of learning; among the learned those who recognize the need to do enjoined rites (krtabuddhayah), and among them those who do perform them: and of these (last) those who realize the Brahman,"1 The purpose of human intelligence is to know what to do, and to make one do it in enjoined ways, which lead to the knowledge of the ultimate Reality. Samkara (in the (Vivekacadamani) makes the aspiration for liberation (moksa) the highest possession, and the most difficult to acquire in men.2 The function of enjoined duty (Dharma) is to guide man towards the highest, to lead the self to self-realization. The heaven of the gods is the place of enjoyment of results (bhogabhami). When one is lifted to it by his sat-karma, he dwells in it, as long as the accumulated merit (punya) lasts, as a lamp burns as long as there is oil in it to feed the flame, and then he drops out, to begin again the soul's pilgrimage. Even perpetual enjoyment of pleasure can cloy and tire; and yet this is the lot of the gods, from which

भूतानां प्राणिनः लेखाः प्राणिनां सुद्धिजीविनः । इदिमास नराः लेखा नरेषु जावाणास्स्मृताः ॥ जावाणेषु च विद्यसः विद्यस्य कृततुद्धपः । कृततुद्धिषु कर्तारः कर्तुषु जवाबादिनः ॥ (१,९६-९८)

दुर्लमं वनमेवेतदेशसुप्रश्रेतकम् ।
 समुख्यत्वं मुमुझत्वं महापुरुषसम्बदः ॥
 (विवेकच्यामणिः, ३)

there is no way out for them. This earth is better, because it is the vantage ground for the performance of actions (karma)—the theatre of moral life (karma-bhāmi) (Adiparva, 64, 39).1

The dominating conception of Hindu theory of life is the law of Karma and its corollary, the belief in transmigration (samsāra), The law is an enunciation of causality in the sphere of ethics, and of the law of conservation of energy in the field of morals. Consequences follow action with the inevitableness of a physical law; and no action (karma) is lost-be it of thought, word or deed. One reaps only as he sows. A good deed is never lost; nor a bad one, be they ever so minute. Even a little of righteousness will save one from the great fear, says the Gita (II, 40).2 Even he who makes the great effort to raise himself and slips-the yoga-bhrasta-is not lost altogether.3 A had end is not for him who endeavours to do the right (na hi kalyāṇakṛt Kaścit durgatim tāta gaccati, VI, 40). God is the supreme judge of action (karmādhyaksa).4 In the eternal and invisible moral scales all action is weighed and credited to the doer. Every day is a day of reckoning. Judgment is not in the remote future of Time, when all souls are mustered up to hear their dooms. A criminal may escape the policeman and the judge, but not the inexorable action of his karma. Actions pass beyond the physical plane. Divine justice is certain; it defies evasion. To the self are given possibilities for both good and bad action. He who sins denies the endowment of his soul. We are propelled, we are directed, by our own past action. The unborn self carries with it vasanah, antenatal tendencies, which develop after the self takes the form determined by its past. But its destiny after its reincarnation has yet to be decided by its own acts. The law regards the past as finished, but the future is left a possibility, a potential. Within the bounds of his nature, man has freedom to shape his destiny by his own effort. He can overcome his instincts,

(श्वेताश्य. उपनि १६,११)

कर्मभूमिरतु मानुष्यं नोगभूमिरिलिविष्टपम् ।
 इद पुण्यक्रतो यान्ति स्वर्गलोकं न संशयः ॥
 इद लोके दुष्कृतिनो नरकं गान्ति निर्पणाः ॥ (आदिपर्व, ६४,३९०४०, p. १११)

नेदामिकननाशोऽस्ति अलगायो न विश्वते । स्वश्यमप्यस्य धर्मस्य आयेते मद्दतो भयात्॥ (भगवग्रीता, २,४०)

आप्य पुण्यकृतान् क्षेत्रानुषित्वा शासतीः समाः ।
 श्रुवानां भीमतां सेदे वीगम्रहोऽनिजायते ॥ (मगल्द्राता, ६,४१)

पत्नी देवः सर्वभृतेषु गृदः सर्वभ्यापी सर्वभृतान्तरात्मा ।
 कर्माध्यक्षः सर्वभृताऽथिवासः साक्षी नेता केवलो निर्मुणम ॥

the drive of even his past. The self (ātman) is raised only by the self (ātmanā); and lowered only by itself. Man is 'the master of his fate, the captain of his soul.'

The power to shape his own destiny, if he follows the moral routes, stresses man's freedom, and does not make him the blind instrument of destiny. In one aspect, the universe is subject to the future that has been determined for it at creation. It includes all who are of the universe. The beginning of karma, which has set the wheel of consequences in regard to the self in motion, is lost in the dimmess of the primeval past. The inevitableness of consequences of action seems to make the law of Karma the determining agent in the government of the universe. It seems to stress the necessity of effect following cause, and thereby to abolish the intervention of God and the freedom of the self. But the very emphasis on the force of action brings out the importance of human agency. Daiva (divine power) and purusakara (self-effort) are both needed for the fulfilment of the law. Freedom and destiny are not opposed, but co-operating agencies. The best soil (ksetra) will lie barren unless seed (blia) is thrown on it; and the best seed will fail to germinate in barren soil; and so, without human effort, destiny fails to find fulfilment (Anuŝāsanaparva, IX, 9).1 A small fire becomes a conflagration when fanned by the wind; so is the effect of past action when helped by individual effort2 (Ibid., IX, 45). The smrti and the Arthasastra stress the need for their co-operation. A car moves not on one wheel; so daiva does not move without purusakāra says. Yājñavalkya (I, 351),3 If man merits success by his actions, he commands his success. Fate is nothing but the influence of past action (Yājňavalkya, I, 349),4

Action (harma) is classified in two ways, according to its relevance to time and to purpose. In the former, it is of three kinds; accumulated (sancita), "in being" (prarabdha) and "doing" (kriyamāṇa). The first is capitalized merit; the second, the action

बमा बीचं विना क्षेत्रमुप्तं मनति निःष्ठलम् । तथा पुरुषकरिण विना देवं न सिक्क्यति ॥ (लानुशासनपर्व, ९,६)

सथाऽधिः पत्रनोझतः सुस्हमोऽपि महान् भवेत् ।
 तथा कमसमायुक्तं दैवं साथु विवयते । (Ibid., १,४८)

यथा ग्रेकेन चकेण रथस्य न गतिमैनद ।
 यन पुत्रकारण विना दैनं न सिळ्यति ॥ (याष. स्यू, १३,५१)

देवे पुरुषकारे च कमेलिकिच्यैवस्थिता ।
 यद्र देवममिन्यक्तं पौर्वयं पौर्वदेशिकम् ॥ (वास स्छ., १,३४९) that has begun to manifest itself in its effects, which we call fate; and the action that we can now do. In regard to the last alone is man free, though even there his prenatal disposition (vāsanā) will show itself; it eliminates the risk of mere chance action, impelled by the will. The aim of action makes it of two different kinds, when it is purposive and when it is selfless-kāmya and niskāmya. These are termed in Manusmrti-pravrtta and nivrtta, "Acts which secure the fulfilment of wishes in this world or in the next are called pravrtta (i.e., that "continue") and acts performed without any desire for a reward, preceded by the acquisition of true knowledge (jffana-parva) are declared to be nivrtta (i.e., that "end").1 The reference to the result here is to the continuance or the cessation of rebirth. For he who does pravetta or kāmya acts, attains the promised worlds of enjoyment (heaven). The man who does nivrtta actions, attains moksa. The superiority of non-egoistic action is thus indicated in the distinction. The injunction in the Gita not to think of the effect of karma or its fruit (karmaphala) has the same aim.2 The world of life is a web in which the beings of the past, the present and the future are strands, forming the warp and the woof. The "triple debt" (rnatrya), which has to be discharged in order that the atman may be redeemed, is one way of stressing this interdependence that permeates creation. The injunction to make offerings daily to the bhittes and to the Visvedevas, and to give the offerings to the lowest of the low among men and animals is another device to show it. "He prayeth best, who loveth best both man and bird and beast ".3 On the same ground, the preparation of cooked food, as if the only persons to consume it are the householder and his family is condemned. (Manu, III, 118).4 The philosophical foundation of the duty to humanity. of altruism, is the unity of the self and the self. One who sees everything in God, and God in everything never loses his hold on God (Bhagavadgitā, VI, 29-30).5 Manusmṛti works out the idea in

<sup>1.</sup> इह बाडमुत्र वा नाम्ये प्रकृतं कर्म कीर्यते। निश्कामं वानपूर्वे ह्य निवृत्तमुपदिश्यते॥(१२,८९)

कमंण्येवाधिकारस्ते मा फलेषु कदाचन ।
 मा कमंफलदेतुर्भूमों ते सङ्घोऽस्त्वकर्मणि ॥ (भगवद्गीता, २,४७)
 बुक्तः कमंफल समस्ता शान्तिमामोति नैष्ठिकीम् ॥ (५,११)

These constitute two additional debts linking the Self with all creation.

<sup>4.</sup> अधं स केवलं मुक्के यः पचलात्मकारणादः ॥ (३,११८) detail in many places by injunction and by implication. But, it is significant that the distinction between the two ways of "doing" is followed up by this declaration: "He who sacrifices to the Self, recognizing the Self in all beings, and all beings in the Self becomes a master of his soul (svārājyam adhigaccati, XII, 91).1 Altruistic action makes for liberation.

<sup>5.</sup> सर्वमृतस्थमारमानं सर्वमृतानिचारमानि । देखते योगयुक्तारमा सर्वत्र समद्द्यमः ॥ यो मा परयति सर्वत्र सर्व च मापि परयति । तस्यादे न प्रणदयामि स च मे न प्रणदयति ॥ (भगवद्रीता, ६,२९-१०)

Transmigration.

A law which does not enunciate the sanctions by which it is enforced will cease to be respected. There must be a visible or intelligible retribution for breaches of even an ethical code. Dharmasastra is a guide to correct conduct. It is based ultimately, on Sruti, i.e., the Veda, which represents the spiritual visions of gifted superhuman beings, and on smrti, which is the authentic record of the experience of ancient sages. It rests also on revelation and on empiric data furnished by records of tradition (itihāsa, purāna). The inexorable nature of the Law of Karma is signified by the fruits that follow deeds. What they are may be experienced in life. Sin is defiance of or dereliction of duty (Dharma). A diseased frame is the consequence of a defiance of a law of health. Effects of action may be immediate or ultimate, appearing in this life and in after lives. Thus in ordeals, the appearance of disease or of misfortunes in the family circle of the man who forswears himself. is asked to be noted.2 Intense sin and super-virtue may manifest their effects even in this life. But in Hindu belief the main effect is on future births. Life, to the person gifted with real vision, is painful and disgusting. Subjection to countless births, through millions of years, is indescribable misery.3 The self is condemned to such rebirths by its karma. Action is retributive in two ways : in other worlds, and in future births. Every act, if it is to have any effect in the hereafter, must give indications of its power even in the present. The result which follows karma, is either an imperceptible accompaniment of the deed or an antecedent condition of its future effect. It is termed apūrva4 (Sārīrakabhāsya of Śańkara, III, 2, 38). For the good deeds the self may enjoy a sojourn in heaven; or for its sins it may suffer in one of the hells. But there still remains

सर्वभृतेषु चारमानं सर्वभृतानि चारमनि ।
 समं पदमकारमयाजी स्वाराज्यमाविगच्छति ॥ (१२,९१)

<sup>2</sup> न चातिमुच्छति क्षिप्रं स शेवः शपवे शाचिः ॥ ८,११५)

<sup>3.</sup> See the citations in chapter VIII (वैदान्यम्) in मोद्यवाण्ड (G.O.S. CII, M. ६६-८४)

<sup>4.</sup> ग्रहरमान्य, ३,२,३८–३९

a residue of action (anusaya) which precipitates the self in new forms of life! (B.S., III, 1, 8). Ritual and moral deeds have an influence in determining the forms of rebirth; and their converse also.

In the scale of ascent in evolution, we proceed from so-called inanimate or mineral matter to lower forms of life, and from them step by step ascend to man, and higher still to superhuman beings. The characteristics of such beings or forms of life are settled at Creation (Manusmyti, I, 28);2 that is to say the possible forms into which mutation may drive the self were fixed at the very beginning.3 When the body dies, the self first undergoes its appointed purgation by suffering for its lapses (XII, 17-18) and then re-enters the five elements composing the material body in new form,4 according to the rules determining the births of different types of actions, springing from mind, speech and body (XII, 3),5 though really mind is the instigator of all action, whether mental or bodily. The threefold definition of sources of action is intended to enforce the need for control over the body, mind and speech, if one is not to lapse into sin. The ascetic, who aims at liberation and bears a triple staff (tri-danda) as the emblem of his status, must bear it symbolically to represent this triple restraint that alone will help in gaining freedom.4 Sins are defiances of Dharma. They are so-called supreme sins (mahāpātaka)—whose number is usually given as five, but whose number is enlarged by analogy, and ordinary sins (upapatakas). Purgation in after-life or post-mortuary purification of the self may be reduced in intensity by remedial acts in this life

इताखेदेऽतुशयबान् वृष्टरवृतिभ्यां बवेतमंतनं च (मग्रस्त, २,११८)

<sup>2.</sup> See footnote 2 of page 68, supra.

तेनासुभूव ता वामीः अरीरेणेड वातनाः ।
 तास्वेव मृतमात्रासु प्रकायन्ते विमाणकः ॥
 सोऽनुभूव सुन्तोदकान्दोवान् विषयस्त्रज्ञानः ।
 व्ययतकस्मवोऽन्वेति तावेवोमी महीनसी ॥ (१२,१७-१८)

<sup>4.</sup> स जीवो वीतकत्मपः । तान्वेव पञ्चमृतानि सुनरम्बेति भागशः ॥ (१२,२१)

धुमाधुमकडं कर्म मनोवाग्देदसंभवन् ।
 कर्मवा गतया नृजां कत्त्रशाममभ्यमाः ॥ (१२,३)

बाग्दण्डोऽथ मनोदण्डः कर्मदण्डस्तदेव च ।
 अस्वैते निहिता दुढी विदण्डाति स उच्चते ॥ (१२,१०) भाग्दण्डो मीनमातिष्ठेष् कर्मदण्डस्त्वदिसनम् ।
 भानसस्य तु दण्डस्य प्राणायामो विशेषते ॥ (१२,११) itself. These constitute the means of redemption that are called penitential or expiatory (prayascitta).

A common denominator of all classifications of action or physical, spiritual and mental states in smrti and philosophy in India is the division into gunas: sattva, rajas and tamas. They are primordial in origin, and according to the GIta are of Divine creation (VII, 12).1 They are qualities rather than substance. Sattoa is characterized by purity (nirmalatva) and brightness; rajas by energy and passion; tamas by sluggishness and darkness. The categories are of universal application. In regard to conduct they will represent goodness, egoism and badness. The qualities may develop in the self. He who has been a sattvika will attain the pure worlds of those who know the Highest. The rajasic self is reborn, in active lives; and the tāmasic is reborn among the ignoble and the deluded Gita (XIV. 11-15). Sattva stands for wisdom, rajas for greed, and tamas for delusion (Ibid., XIV, 16). He who attains liberation (mukti) is one who has transcended the gunas (Ibid., XIV, 20).2 Such qualities attach themselves to environment and are normally transmissible from father to son. The division into the four varnas or hereditary castes is stated in the Gita (IV, 13) to be according to guna (innate quality) and function (karma).3 Manusmrti develops the idea of the determination of future states of the disembodied self, in accordance with the gunas and their sub-divisions into highest, middling and lowest types (XII, 40-50). The outward marks of the possession of the qualities are indicated also in detail. (XII, 31-38). The purpose of the enumerations is to warn off persons from becoming slaves of the wrong types of qualities, and to ask them to cultivate the better; for, if they do not, they will suffer not only in the trends of their dispositions in this life (which will have effects on future states of existence) but also determine their future states of existence, which again, as they are high or low in the scales of created "life," will imply a contraction or an expansion of the vast stretches of time that will be taken before the self attains its liberation from rebirth. Sudras are born of middle type of tamasic quality, and (XII, 43) Ksatriyas of the middle type of Rajasic quality (XII, 46), and Brahmanas from

वे चैव साल्विका माना राजसास्तामसाक्ष वे।
 मश्च प्रवेति तान् विक्रिन त्वहं तेषु ते निवे॥ (भगवद्गीता, ७,१३)

<sup>2.</sup> गुणानेवानतील बीन्देदी देदसमुद्भवान् । जन्ममृत्युवराष्ट्रःवैविमुक्तोऽसृतमस्तुते ॥ (भगवद्गीता, १४,२०)

<sup>3.</sup> चातुर्वेण्ये मया सृष्टं गुणकमेनिमागशः । (भगनद्रीता, ४,१३)

sativic qualities. To the same type belong incarnations of those who become kings and royal priests. The lowest guna type produces persons who pursue ignoble professions, become drunkards and gamblers. Even the celestials, who lead lives of sensual pleasure (Gandharva, Guhyaka, Apsarasas) are only the fruits of Rājasaguna (XII, 47). The list is illustrative, and is developed in great detail by other smrtis. Sensual lives and omission to do appointed duties lead to low types of birth (XII, 52). As in criminal law, a first moral offence entails lighter penalty than repeated offending (XII, 73). The degrading forms in which criminals or sinners are cast in their next janna are detailed next. (XII, 54-69.) The twice-born who neglect their Dharma have terrifying destinies (XII, 77-78).

The Aims of Life (Purusarthah).

Behind the institutions of Dharmasastra lies another fundamental concept; the fourfold aim of life, the purusarthas. They are Dharma, Kama, Artha and Moksa. These stand roughly for Morality. Pleasure or Desire, Wealth and Well-being and Liberation. Each is so vital a feature of life and its aspirations that it has become specialized in detailed studies. Social organization reflects the fourfold aims: the first varna is dedicated to Dharma, the second and third to Artha, Kāma, usually taken as sex-attaction or desire, stands for all pleasure, among which that from the union of the sexes is fundamental to created beings. There is nothing ignoble about any of them. The Supreme Being divided himself into male and female, (I, 32),1 and in Indian belief there is always a feminine aspect of every god, which is represented as a goddess. The union of Purusa and Prakrti, from which sprang the universe, is likened to a union of male and female, A personal god has always a consort. The institution of marriage is thus raised to celestial levels. The attraction of sex is not condemned, as it is both natural and necessary for the upkeep of the species. Desire is at the back of all activity. Modern psychopaths do not underline the power of sex more than Hindu writers. The inclusion of Kama among the recognized ends of life is an admission of it. The dominance of each of the three (Dharma, Artha and Kama) as a motive of activity has obtained advocacy. Of the three, Kāma alone is common to all living beings. It is a primary instinct. Manu begins his exposition of Dharmasastra proper, with a defence of pleasure in its widest sense, as the most powerful of life's attractions and as the prime

द्विचा कुल्बात्मनी देवमधेन पुक्कोऽमवत् ।
 स्रोम नारी सस्यो स विराजमस्यान्त्रमु: ॥ (१,३२)

motive of all effort. "It is not praiseworthy to act only from a passion for pleasure (kāmātmatayā); but to do so is natural; for, freedom from desire is nowhere to be found in the world. "On desire is founded the study of the Veda, and the performance of actions prescribed by the Veda. Desire is at the root of resolution to take action (sanikalpamala); sacrifices are the results of resolution. Vows, the rules of morality laying down enjoined activity and restraint (yama-niyamāh), are all based on resolution. Not a single act in the world is done, uninspired by desire (Kāma). All that man does is inspired by it." (II, 2-4).1 Life will end, if it was not perpetuated through the action of Kama. What is required is not eradication of Kama from human nature, as that is both impossible and undesirable but its regulation and sublimation. It is worthy of note that while the leading treatise on Artha is by a statesman, that on Kama is ascribed to a sage.2 The craving for comfort is equally a human, almost an animal instinct. Even the performance of acts of Dharma or the gratification of lawful desires is impossible except in association with the acquisition of the material requisites of well-being. Here again, lest their pursuit may not pass beyond the bounds of moral law they should be regulated and refined. Dharma must regulate both, If an entire population takes to sex-abstinence, national suteide must follow. The State must be kept up. It is necessary that the student must be protected from sex-temptations during studentship; but when education is completed he must marry and settle down. The age of marriage, and even the intimacies of wedded life, must be regulated with a social, and not an individual aim. The differences in levels of culture between section and section of the population may need recognition of marriage-forms that do not conform to the higher standards of morality. They have nevertheless to be recognized and regulated. Savarna unions of the sexes may be the ideal; but asavarna unions have also to be recognized to prevent widespread concubinage, which will provide for sex unions of the कामात्मता न प्रशस्ता न चैनेद्दारलकामता ।

 काम्यो दि नेदाधिगमः कर्मयोगस्य वैदिकः ॥
 सङ्कल्पमूलः कामो ने यशाः संकल्पसंभवाः ।
 वता नियमयमांस्य सर्वे सङ्कल्पजाः स्मृताः ॥
 अकामस्य किया गाचिद्दृश्यते नेद्द कर्षिचित् ॥
 यथि कुल्ते किचित् तत्तत्वामस्य चेटितन् ॥ (२,२-४)

Kautilya composed his Arthasāstra. Vātsyāyana composed his Kāmasūtra.

kind, but fail to regulate and control them in the interest of the weaker partner and her offspring. Lawless surrender to seximpulses, which lead to violence and crime, have to be protected against. Vedic ritual, no less than proper family life, requires that there should be constant association of wife and husband. Conjugal duties are therefore within both ethical and civil regulation. The protection of sex becomes a matter for state and society.

Similarly with Artha. With social planning on a world-wide scale and for all-time, Dharmaśāstra recognizes the right of Property; while stressing the moral obligations of wealth, and of the affluent it prescribes no special schemes for taxing excessive wealth, guarantees the transmission of property by inheritance, and in every way provides for a stable and prosperous economic order. But, the profiteer, the sweater of labour, the exploiter of husbandry, and the usurer are not held up to scorn. Dharma is alive to the possibilities for abuse in mere pursuit of wealth and well-being. Competition is regulated and occupations are fixed, as far as feasible. A proper scale of permanent values is also set up by Dharma by which mere wealth confers neither social rank nor political power. Social bankruptcy is provided against by restraining the economic classes from giving up economic pursuits and productive activities.

The harmony of the elements of trivarga is what is demanded; or rather basing Artha and Kāma under the regulation of Dharma, Manusmṛti does not maintain the superiority of Dharma to Artha and Kāma. It refers to the extreme advocacy of each, and concludes (II, 224) that the harmony of all the three is demanded in the interests of man.

The repercussions of the trivarga theory on the varna and asrama organizations are noteworthy. The third varna is the economically prosperous one; wealth is concentrated in it; while the last varna is conscripted for service to the others. The first and last asramas are mendicant and uneconomic as is the third also. Society is borne by the second varna alone. Generally speaking, the four varnas would, on the guna criterion, place the first varna in Sattvika, the second and third in Rajasa, and the last in Tamasa.

The Fourth Purusartha-Moksa.

The last aim of life, liberation (mokşa) stands by itself, in view of its supreme importance and its forming, like Dharma, the common denominator or criterion of values of the others. While the problems of producing, conserving, distributing and using up the material requisites of well-being by individuals, groups and by the state and society must be subordinate to certain fundamental requirements of ethico-social standards, represented by Dharma, that "conscience keeper, director, and interpreter of proprieties" must itself be adjusted to the demands of the ways and means of the self fulfilling its destiny by progressing towards liberation. The adjustment of Kama and the proper functioning of its imperious demands to social and ethical norms are no less important than making it subserve the aim of helping men and women to their ultimate goal, for in the Hindu view, woman is not infector to man in spiritual needs, nor is ultimate liberation less required for the self embodied in woman than for that in man. The criteism that Dharmasastra is andro-centric. in stressing only what is needed for the economic, political and spiritual evolution of men, and not women, is not just. While innate differences in the physical and psychological make-up of the two sexes are admitted by Hinduism, and the weakness of woman, necessitates special measures for her protection, the inequality is not regarded as making for unequal rights to the realization of mukti. If woman's physical weakness and her burden of domestic duties as wife and mother will not allow her to go through the elaborate spiritual discipline and education of man, they are borne in mind in providing for her easier ways of attaining the goal, suited to her weakness, functions and pre-occupations. There is no more justification for deeming the rules of Dharma as intended only for men, because they alone are commonly referred to in specification of duties and obligations, than for regarding modern codes as man-centred because only the male sex is alluded to. Dharmaśāstra recognizes woman's power to raise herself or to lower herself in the spiritual plane. The special devices for protecting woman and the strict rules for safeguarding her purity are really compliments to woman.1 In the words of the Gita, social danger is in the offing, when women are corrupted (strīsu dūstāsuvārsnyea jāyate varnasamkarah, 2, 1, 41). Her need is equal to man's in spiritual advance; but, as her powers and opportunities are restricted, easier modes of advance are devised for her by Dharmasastra, What is denied her, equally with man, is dealing with her as a unit, separated from the male, and functioning apart from the male. As the interests of society demand that perpetual celibacy in the male should be restrained by the prohibition of dirghakāla brahmacarya, so the life of a celibate woman, who lives the life the modern bachelor-girl, is denied her. The denial is on grounds of social loss, and the social risk of unsexing woman. Atman (self) is neither male nor female. In the name of what Treitschke caustically termed the "insane doctrine of female emancipation" Dharmasāstra, which was not blind to her ultimate and highest interests, would not provide for a specious and superficial equality with the other sex, which would make her morally and spiritually sterile.

<sup>1.</sup> धर्माबोद्द्यते अयः कामाधी धर्म प्रव वा। अर्थ प्रवेद वा अयः विवर्गदित तु स्थितिः॥ (२,२२४)

 &quot;The stricter code of morality applied to women is really a compliment to them, for it accepts the natural superiority of the women," (S. Radhkrishnan, Hindu View of Life, 1927, p. 89).

It is on similar social grounds that the conscripted labour class of Sūdras is prohibited from leaving its appointed and duties betaking itself to ascetic mendicancy, which is both unnecessary and futile for it, judged from the standpoint of the attainment of liberation; and the dvija is prohibited from becoming a hermit or an ascetic, till he has discharged the duties of Brahmacārin and Grhastha (VI, 36-37).

It is noteworthy that in his concluding words, the author of the Kāmasātra declares that a mastery of his science will result only in a proper comprehension of sex-desire and its control as well as the proper uses of desire, and contribute to one's triumph in this world and in the hereafter.<sup>2</sup> Kauţilya affirms the need to practise the trivarga by a harmonious co-ordination of its elements.<sup>3</sup> The lawful satisfaction of appetites is not inimical to the attainment of the highest end; on the other hand it can and does help it. In this belief the three śāstras concur.

Liberation (moksa) is not merely the last and highest aim of life. It is the sole aim. It represents the end, and the other three

(कीटिस्य, अ. जा., १,८, p. 12)

अधील निधिनय नेदान् पुत्रांश्वीत्वाय धर्मतः ।
 इच्ट्ना च शक्तिता यशैः मनो मोश्वे निनेश्वेषयः ॥
 अन्धील दिजो नेदाननुत्याच तथा प्रजाम् ।
 अनिच्ट्ना चैन यशैश्व मोश्विमिच्छन् जजत्यथः ॥ (६,३६-३७)

<sup>2,</sup> रखन्यमाँथंकामानां रियति स्वां लोकवार्तनीन् । सस्य शास्त्रस्य तस्त्रश्चो सवलेव जितेन्द्रियः ॥ तदेताकुश्चलो विद्रान् भर्मार्थाववलोकयम् । नातिरागात्त्रकः कामी प्रयुक्षानः प्रसिष्यति ॥ (कामसूत्र, ८,५८-५९)

असीबीबिरोधेन कार्म सेवेत न निःमुखः स्वाद । समं वा त्रिवर्गमन्योन्यानुबन्धम् ।
 एको सलासेवितो धर्मार्थकामानास्मानामितरौ च पीडयति ॥

only means to its attainment. Their value is merely instrumental. Man attains his full stature when he realizes the destiny. The dtman is free only when the fetters that bind it to rebirth (samsāra) are broken. So great a purpose cannot be allowed to be overlooked at any part of one's life. It should be uppermost in the mind at every stage of life and in the midst of every activity. Action must be purposive, in the sense that its ultimate object is the attainment of this freedom. Release (mukti) is the highest good; for, with it are finished the endless cycle of birth and death, and intermediate suffering, spread through milliards of lives in countless forms. There should be only this purpose behind every action and every institution. Mokşa is the touchstone. It tests the fitness of action or institution or motive; it passes the gold and rejects the dross.

The aspirant for freedom is termed the mumuksu. Every living being is a potential mumuksu, an aspirant for release. In the action-consequence dominated universe, ordered society and life and the organization in varna and asrama, are divinely provided so that he who climbs to his high destiny may do so, step by step through them, as by a ladder. Every duty or rite points to it. Rarely is one born like Sukha or Prahlada with the divine spark of knowledge that redeems. In the travail of timeless wandering, the self will not shrink from the discipline of an ordered scheme of life that will contribute to its final peace. In the lonely forest, as in the snapping of worldly ties that had till then bound the wandering ascetic (Sanyāsin), one may find that freedom from distraction which can generate the mental calm, in which the vision of reality that redeems will appear. But, one need not fly the world, and the duties of his station, if his mind is properly directed to the end-in order to attain it. The social order is devised in order that it might help, and not impede self-realization. Every one can do this bit to help others and himself, in the march to the winning post. It is not he who flies from duties, but he who performs them, that is certain of arrival at the goal. The mumuksu is neither selfish nor asolitary. The etymology of the term defines his attitude; he strives not only for his release but for the release of all others :

Moktum ca vayam, anyāmsca moksayitum icchā mumuksā.1

Salvation is not through selfishness. The Indian ideal is not that of Bunyan's hero running away from his family to escape "the wrath to come." Even the hermit (vānaprastha) and the ascetic (sanyāsin), who seek in solitude the seclusion and mental calm that the distractions of the world fail to give them, take on their modes of life, because they cannot do otherwise. Of the four stages of life the last two are optional. Entry into them is only for the person, who has passed through the first two, finished his spiritual training and done his duty as a member of society (grhastha), and thereby discharged his natal debts. Manusmṛti definitely denies mukti to the person who thinks only of his salvation and runs away from his duties in society (VI, 37), and its view is endorsed by other smṛtis e.g. (Baudhayāna) and the great Epic.

<sup>1.</sup> Cited by Dr. Bhagavandas, Science of Social Organization, 1932, p. 59.

In order that one may consciously devote his efforts to the attainment of the summum bonum, he should know what liberation has to offer and envisage the nature of mukti (release). The end of life is not the destruction of illusion, as stated by some thinkers. It is not Manu's view. Knowledge of reality is one of the ways of attaining mukli; it is not the only way. Moral worth is an essential condition of it. The "Tenfold Law of Duty" VI, 92, (dasa laskanāni dharmasya)-which enforces the obligation to cultivate contentment (dhrtih), forgiveness (kṣamā), self-control (dama), abstention from unrighteous appropriation of the property of others (astheyam), purity (saucam), control of the senses (indriva-nigrahah), wisdom (dhih), learning (vidya), truth (satyam), and freedom from anger (a-krodha)-must be first fulfilled before one can contemplate entry into the life of the hermit. It is only those who know the ten-fold law and practise it that become free (lit. "enter the highest state" (yanti paramam gatim, VI, 93). Training in the Law is possible only in social life.

Society itself is adjusted to enable the realization of both the means to the end and ultimately the end itself. The child, hardly out of his mother's leading strings, is taken from her and inducted into the elements of self-knowledge (adhyātma-vidyā) by his teacher, who takes the place of the father. The brahmacārin is not less the son of the ācāryā, who implants in him the spark of redeeming knowledge, than of the parents who implanted in him his physical life (II, 144).2 Birth in spiritual learning is superior to physical birth. Both the teacher and the natural parent (janaka) are fathers (pitarau) but the teacher is greater than the father. Natural birth is the fruit of sex-attraction (kāmātmatā) and is subject to decay and death; not so the spirirual birth through Sāvitrī, which is ageless and immortal (ajarāmarā, II, 147-148).1 The termination of studentship is made the occasion for a ceremornial lustration (snāna). Entry into the householder's life is made in a sacramental form. Conception of the unborn child is made similarly. Every step in life is guarded in the interests of the ultimate end. The duties, which are detailed in the smrti, are declared as extending over the entire duration of life, and they are to be done with Vedic mantras for the twice-born who are alone entitled to study the smrti.2 Mere virtuous conduct is not enough, even if reinforced by vairagya, (dispassion, freedom from desire). There must be knowledge of cosmic law, the relation of the self to the Self, and of modes of intuiting Reality. Lack of insight drags the self into new births.3 The fourth stage in a Brahmana's life is termed the moksaśrama, because its only purpose is to concentrate attention on liberation. But even before it is entered, the Vedanta (i.e., the Upanisads, which reveal the way of the self after disembodiment) must be mastered, according to Manu; that is, the study must be pursued by the householder.4 The hermit (vānaprastha) is also enjoined to study them 'in order to attain complete union with the Supreme Soul' (VI 29). It is one of the six means of attaining supreme bliss (niśśreyasam param; XII, 83), the others being austerity (tapas) wisdom (jñānam), control of mind and body (indrivaniyama), abstention from injuring any one (ahinisa) and service to the spiritual guide (gurusevā). The list is selective and illustrative, not exhaustive. The vision of Reality frees one from the taint of action.5 The correct performance of rites enjoined by the Vedas, austerities (tapas), the mood of detachment from the senses (asanga) and alimsa are next declared as leading to liberation.6 Mere

<sup>1.</sup> See 5, 20.

व आवृण्यसितमं जवाणा अवणातुमी । स माता स पिता वेयः तत्र दुवेतकदाचन ॥ (२,१४४)

कामान्माता पिता चैनं चदुत्पादयतो मिथः । संमृति तस्य तो विधायधोनाविमवायते ॥ आचार्यस्त्वस्य वो जाति विधिवतेदपारगः । अपादवति सावित्या सा सत्या साऽवराऽमरा ॥ (२,१४७-१४८)

निवेकादिश्मशानान्तो मन्तैर्वस्योदितो विधिः ।
 तस्य शालेऽधिकारोऽसिन् क्षेयो नान्यस्य कस्याचित् ॥ (१,१६)

<sup>3.</sup> दर्शनेन विद्रानस्तु संसारं प्रतिपत्रते । (६,८४)

<sup>4.</sup> बेदान्तं विधिवण्यस्या संस्वसेत् । (६,९४)

<sup>5.</sup> सम्बन्दर्शनसंपन्नः कर्ममिने निक्च्यते । (६,८४)

<sup>6.</sup> अहिसयेन्द्रियासीविदिक्षेत्रैव कमीनः । तपसव्यरणेख्योत्रैः साथयनतोह तत्पदम् ॥ (६,७५)

renunciation of the world (tyaga) will not enable one to attain it. The statement in the upanisad that immortality is not obtained by rites (na karmana), by sons (na prajaya), by charity (na dhanena) but only by tyaga (abandonment) is not one that will harmonize with the teachings of Manu; it will be treated only as a glorificatory exaggeration, meant to stress the value of renunciation.1 The getting of sons and having grandsons has not only the visible advantage of perpetuating the family, but it is held to confer the invisible benefit of immortality, and higher existences than ourse (IX, 137). Gifts are lauded by Manu for their unseen effects (IV, 229-233). The gift of the Veda, i.e., teaching it is praised as securing the giver union with Brahman (IV, I33),3 He holds the view that enjoined duty cannot be renounced, as a form of tyaga, and that what one can, and should give up is not activity that is enjoined (karma) but the fruit to activity (karma-phala). The best form of action is the disinterested (niskāmakarma). It has both a specific and an instrumental value; for of it springs knowledge of the truth about the self. He who is ignorant of the nature of the Self (an-adhyāimavit), similarly, does not reap the reward of the performance of enjoined karma (kriyāphalam na aśnute, VI, 82). Karma and Jhana are correlated; they are complementary. They are neither antagonistic nor mutually exclusive. It is in this sense that tradition sees a unity in the two Mimamsadarsanas, which begin with an exploration of Dharma and end with the discovery of the way of non-return to life.4

Sacraments-(Samskara).

The use of the body by the self entails the contraction of taints to which a material frame is liable. For the steps in the approach to the ultimate goal of life, vis., liberation, it is necessary that the individual should take it in a condition of purity, physical and invisible. Physical cleanliness is ensured by daily baths or by special baths (snāna). Ritual purity is implied in the rules that one should bathe before the mid-day prayer, daily tarpanas to gods, sages and the manes, and when one has become contaminated by

न कमेणा न प्रथमा धनेन त्यागेनैकेऽस्तत्वमानशः।
 परेण नार्क निष्टित सुदामा विभावते प्रथमते विश्वन्ति ॥ (नारावणोपनिषद, १०५)

पुनेण लोकाम् जयति पीत्रेणानन्त्यमञ्जूते । अस पुत्रस्य पीषेण अधस्यामीति विष्यम् ॥ (%,१३७)

<sup>3.</sup> सर्वेषामेन धानानां अक्षदानं निशिष्यते । (४,२३३)

<sup>4.</sup> See मोधनाण्ड, Introduction, p. 5

the touch of any object, place or person that communicates a taint e.g., a cremation ground, a dead-body, etc.<sup>2</sup> The day must begin with ablutions which include the bath (IV, 152). Baths should be in rivers, ponds, lakes and springs (IV, 203). A bath is imposed for purification when one has touched a candāla, a mensturating woman, a patita (outcaste), a woman in child-bed, or one who has touched a corpse. Water is the physical means of purification (V, 109).<sup>2</sup> The acamana (sipping water, muttering certain mantras) is the appointed means of purification (after a bath), and before any rite is begun. The prohibition of nude bathing<sup>3</sup> and of bathing after meals<sup>4</sup> is obviously hygienic.

There are, however, impurities of an 'invisible' nature, which cling to the self, from birth. Their origin and exact character are obscure, but that they have to be removed by special rites is the traditional belief. The result of doing them is believed to confer a special excellence on the person (self). In a yāga it implies a purificatory act. The Dharmasātras give a list of about forty saniskāras5 for the purification of the body and its sanctification6 by the removal of the taint (ena, lit. 'sin') springing from the seed and dwelling in the womb (baijika, gārbhika). By the sacraments, starting with those done in pregnancy and ending with upanayana is the taint removed in the case of dvija males, all the saniskaras being done with mantras. They cannot overcome heritage derived from parents, who are sinners. The first saniskāra for the unborn self is garbhādhāna and the last is āntyeşti (II, 16).

The significance of the samskara is that it has adrstaphala and should be deemed obligatory. For non-performance of samskara of a minor character, the later smrtis imposed penances or penitential expiations, like krechra and vyāhrti-homa, before rectifying the

दिवाकीर्तिमुद्दस्यां च पतितं स्तिकां तथा ।
 श्वं तत्स्पृष्टिनं चैन स्पृष्ट्वा स्नानेन सुध्यति ॥ (५,८५)

अद्विगांत्राणि शुप्यन्ति मनः सत्येन शुप्यति । विवातमोभ्यां भूतात्मा तुद्धिकानन शुप्यति ॥ (५,१०९)

न नम्नः सानमाचेरा (४,४५)

<sup>4.</sup> न सानमाचरेद्रमुक्ता (४,१२९)

Gautama (VIII, 14-24) mentions forty samskāras, but in most smṛtis only Sixteen are described.

वैदिकै: कर्मामि: पुण्यैनिषेकादिद्विजन्मनाम् ।
 कार्थः श्ररीरसंस्कारः पावनः प्रेल नेह न ॥ (२,२६)

<sup>7.</sup> वेजिकं गार्मिकं वेनी दिजानामपमृत्यते । (२,२८)

omissions. The only sainskara for which a light penance was unavilable was the upanayana or initiation into Savitri. A dvija who had not undergone it could not be married. Marriage is a samskara, the most important for a woman, as it takes the place of upanayana for her. All sacraments should be performed for female as well for male dvijas, with the difference that in the case of those for women or girls, they should be done (except in the case of marriage) without Vedic mantras. Manu rejects them for those of sankara-jati (mixed caste), pratitoma or anuloma equally.1 Manu declares that the Sudra does not merit samskaras (na ca samskaram arhati); he has neither the obligation to do dharma rites, nor is he prohibited from doing them. Sudras, who are filled with the desire to practise dharma, and who understand dharma, may imitate the practise of virtuous dvijas, i.e., do the sainskāras but without uttering Vedic mantras (mantravarjam). Not only do they incur no sin by doing so but they gain praise for it (X, 127),2 Marriage is not a compulsory samskara for the male dvija, according to Manu, as it is open to him to take up, after finishing his education, the vow of life-long celibacy (naisthika brahmacarya). Manu seems to regard marriage as obligatory for women,

The purpose of samskāras has to be inferred from the stress laid on each of them. Generally, they may be regarded as developing the personality of the person for whom they are done, as external symbols, or reflections of inward (and invisible) changes that take place as the consequence of doing them. Upanayana brings the child into the group of the elect, who cultivate brahma knowledge, and confers a status and lays duties on the acolyte. Samskāras like garbhādhāna (impregnation) and pumsavana have a mystic significance, while vivāha signifies the merger of two personalities into one, in the interest of the discharge of common obligations to society and god.

Sin and Atonement,

Basing duties on revelation or divine authority makes 'Sins' of derelictions of duty. Where obligations are laid by Dharma on any person failure to fulfil them constitutes also sin. Obligations that we would regard as 'civil' have also a supernatural basis. A taint or guilt attaches itself to the person who either fails to do what he is enjoined to do, or does what is interdicted by Dharma. Where the omissions or acts affect others, they become offences against man as well as against Dharma, i.e. God. Under the inexorable law of Karma, the expiation of an offence is only by its being worked out in its consequences, in as many births as the gravity of the offence needs. Manusmrti (XI, 228 ff.) indicates five ways of expiating sin : by confession, by repentance, by austerities (tapas), by reciting the Veda (adhyayana) and by charities (dana). The confession has to be open. If an offender does a penance, and pretends that he is only keeping a vow, he fails to expiate the sin,2 Repentence must be sincere and by the resolution not to offend again.3 Genuine repentance may cancel the taint, but if the sinner is not satisfied that it is, he may perform the prescribed atonements or pravascitta. Austerity (tapas) has miraculous powers, which can be used for redemption of sin.4 Besides the daily study of the Vedas, Manu prescribes the performance of the great sacrifices, according to one's ability as expiation and patient suffering. 5 Austerity means subjection to severe physical strain and pain. In degenerate times one may not rise to the level of those who performed tapas in past ages. On the principle of substitution, Manu suggests substitutes for tapas ; knowledge (Jñāna) for the Brāhmaņa, protection of others (raksana) for the Ksatriya, the proper pursuit of trade and agriculture (vārtā) for the Vaisya and service (sevanam) for the Sudra.6 As these are the prescribed duties of the castes, the implication is that expiation lies in diligent pursuit of one's own varna-dharma, caste duty.

ताबुमानप्यसंस्कायांविति धर्मी न्यवस्थितः । वैगुण्याकानमनः पुनै कत्तरः प्रतिकोमतः ॥ १०,६८)

म खुद्रे पातकं किंचित् न च संस्कारमधीत । नात्याधिकारो अमेंऽस्ति न अमॉत्प्रतिपेशनम् ॥ अमेंसवस्तु धर्मकाः सर्ता वृत्तमनुष्ठिताः । मन्त्रवर्ते न दुष्यन्ति प्रश्नेसां प्राप्नुवन्ति च ॥ (१०,१२६-१२८)

- क्यापनेनानुतापेन तपसाध्ययनेन च । पापकृत्युच्यते पापाच्या दानेन चापदि ॥ (११,२२८)
- न धर्मसापदेशेन पापं इत्वा वर्त चरेत्।
   वर्तन पापं प्रच्छाच कुवैन्सीश्रद्धन्मनम् ॥ (४,१९८)
- 3. Manusmṛti XI, 230-233.
- 4. Ibid., XI, 234-236.
- वेदाभ्यासोऽन्वहं शक्त्या महायमकिया क्षमा ।
   नाम्रयस्यासु पापानि महापातकज्ञान्यपि ॥ (११,२४६)
- आक्षणस्य तपी जानं तपः क्षत्रस्य रक्षणम्।
   बैश्यस्य ता तपो वार्ता तपः सहस्य सेवनम्॥ (११,२३६)

Mixture of Crime and Sin.

The standard classification of moral offences is into great and small sins (mahāpātāka and upa-pātaka). The five major sins are the slaving of a Brahmana, drinking spirits (sura), theft of gold (svarna-steya), adultery with the teacher's wife (quru-talpaka), which is constructive incest, as father and guru are equated and association with such offenders. The number of minor sins (upa-pātaka) in Manusmrti is large, about 22 in all, but the list is not exhaustive. The effect of the commission of the offences is loss of caste-status (patanam), which means social outlawry. Among the upa-patakas are heresy, apostasy and reading of heretical books. In a society, which bases itself (or claims to do so) on revelation, the heretic is on a par with a rebel in modern states, and the offence is like treason. The practice of dancing, singing, and acting, as professions, is upa-pataka. They cannot be civil offences, but may be held to lower the public standards of morality. The inclusion of large mechanical undertakings and the working of mines under the category is inexplicable. Assaulting a Brahmana, pederasty, cheating and smelling spirits lead to loss of caste. Usury, theft, non-payment of debts. murder and destruction of the virginity of unmarried girls are all lumped together under this category. For these there are civil penalties. Besides these offences, there are a large number that are classified under each of the major and minor sins, from the standpoint of the expiation that should be made for each of them. Elaborate penances are described for the different classes of offences, and a great part of the eleventh book of Manusmrti is devoted to their atonement in ways described in older Vedic literature. For some offences, which involve the loss of dvija status, re-initiation (punar-upanayana) is prescribed (XI, 151). The normal forms of penance for minor offences is the performance of one of the five types of penitential rite, known from the hardship involved as krechra, which are described (XI, 212-216), and gradual starvation. following the course of the moon, and accordingly known as candrayana (X1, 217-218). Redemption is through suffering. Its effects being physical and psychological can be regarded 35 reformative.

The prescription of penances for what we would call offence against society, and of civil penalties for religious offences is old and illustrations of it are to be found in Samavidhana Brahmana. The sentences must be pronounced by a board of three assessors, who will fit the penance to the offence.1 Among the civil offences for which Manu indicates penances are murder, adultery, incest, unnatural sex offences, abortion, procuring, seduction, rape, abduction of women and children, perjury, cruelty to animals, theft of every kind, and criminal misappropriation. There are inexpiable crimes, which correspond to capital offences. It is to be noted that penance and civil penalties are not alternatives. As every crime is an offence against society as well as against God, both sentences run concurrently. A penance is not a substitute for punishment; it is a penalty. The Indian attitude to punishment comes out in the identity of outlook. The purpose of punishment is not to vindicate the outraged majesty of law or the State, or the application of a principle of retaliation; it is remedial. The criminal and the sinner have souls. The punishment of the body of a sinner can hardly go far; it is limited by one life, in the most extreme cases. Punishment purifies; it purges the offence.2 One may escape the civil power of the State, after committing a crime; but he cannot escape the law of Karma. Grave sins or crimes, in Indian belief, show their effects even in this life. Retribution follows even in this existence, and in any case is inescapable in the next birth.3 Diseased nails, black teeth, pthisis, deficiency in limbs, stinking breath, dyspepsia, dumbness, leucoderma, lameness, partial or total blindness, oedema, idiocy, deafness and physical deformity result from the sins of past lives,4 Such features are likely to be repeated in future lives also, unless expiated in this.5 The graver the offence the harder the self-chosen penalty.6 A great public service like defending the life or property of another and dying in defence of it then frees a murderer of even a Brahmana from the guilt of brahmahatya7. A Brahmana thief, who steals a Brahmana's

See Manusmṛti, XI. 60—71. Yājñavalkya III, 234—242 enumerates 56 upa-pūtakas, several of which are outside Manu's list.

<sup>1.</sup> तेथां वेदविदो मृतुः ववोऽप्येनःस निष्कृतिम् ॥ (११,८६)

राजिमिर्श्वतदण्डास्तु कृत्वा पापानि मानवाः । निर्मेखाः स्वर्गमायान्ति सन्तरसुकृतिनो वथा ॥ (८,३१८)

इह दुव्यस्तिः केचित् केचित्पृतंकृतैस्तथा ।
 प्राप्तुवन्ति दुरात्मानो नरा रूपविषयंपम् ॥ (११,१४८)

<sup>4.</sup> मन, ११,४९-५३

<sup>5.</sup> मत, ११,५४

<sup>6.</sup> मन्न, ११,८३-८९

बाह्यणार्थे गवार्थे वा सद्यः प्राणान् परिलानेत् । सुक्यते ब्रह्महत्वायाः गीमा गीमाद्याणस्य च ॥ (११,८०)

gold, is freed of guilt, when he goes to the king with a club, asks to be struck down with it and is killed.1

Excommunication (Patana).

Crime leads to a fall from caste status, and in grave cases it puts a person outside the four varnas as an outcaste (patita). Association with an outcaste renders a person liable to the same expiation for rehabilitation as the outcaste himself.2 Expulsion from caste is done by a ceremony, more fully described in Dharma satras. An outcaste is treated as civilly dead (Ibid., 183).3 His share of inheritance passes to the next heir (Ibid., 186). Re-admission is possible through undergoing prescribed penances. A person convicted to branding for crimes is treated as an outcaste. He is completely cut away from all social intercourse, religious communion, matrimonial alliances, family ties, declares Manu<sup>4</sup> (IX,239). Expiation requires the co-operation of one's castemen. In driving one out of society after branding him, he is deprived of both the chance of rehabilitation into society, and of recovery in the next. The effect of the punishment stretches beyond this life; it is more terrible than capital punishment which, when undergone, cancels post-mortuary consequences of the sin. Dishonor in this world, where he has been treated with almost, divine honors, and degradation in future births, are the effects of denial or the withholding of the death penalty for grave crime committed by the first varya. In estimating the incidence of the penal code the effects of the combined penitential and punitive sentence must be borne in mind. Failure to do so has led to charges of unfair discrimination in favour of high born criminals. Culpability increases with status. If a commoner is fined one pana. for the same offence the king should pay a thousand panas (VIII, 336). In their, the culpability of a Brahmana is eightfold that of the Sudra, or even fifteen times the Sudra's, four times that of the Vaisva and twice that of a Ksatriya (VIII, 338),

सुवंगस्तेयक्वित्री राजानसभिगम्य च ।
स्वक्रम स्थापयम्बान्मा भवाननुद्यास्त्वित ॥
गृहीत्वा सुसर्क राजा सक्रकस्यापु तं स्वयम् ।
वधेन शुक्यति स्तेनो बाग्राणस्तपसेय वा ॥ (११,९९-१००) cf. ८,३१४-३१६

बो बेन पतिवेनैषां संसर्ग याति मानवः । स तस्येव वर्त कुर्यात् तरसंसर्गविद्युक्ये ॥ (११,१८१)

<sup>3.</sup> पतितस्योदकं कार्यं समिण्यैवांन्यवैः सह ॥ (११,१८२)

श्राविसंबन्धिनिस्तेवेते त्यक्तव्याः इतव्यव्याः । निदंगा निनेमस्कारास्तव्यनमेरनुशासनम् ॥ (५,२३५)

Some Missing Ideas in Hindu Social Theory.

In attempting to visualize the background of Hindu social thought we must grasp certain facunae in ideas or slogans which are prominent in modern thought. First among them is the idea of 'rights,' Dharma means inherent disposition or property or trend, and in the science of conduct, it stands for duty that is enjoined. It is more than a moral and sub-conscious urge; it is an imperative from the highest source. One may discover it by reference to his own educated conscience, or trained intuition, or the mental satisfaction (diamanastustih), or by its meeting the urge of the self (svasya priyam or atmanah priyam)1. A natural impulse or mere animal instinct is no criterion of Dharma. Impulses and instincts have to be trained, controlled and canalized before they can be trusted to be safe guides for action. This is why Indian thought leans on authority and finds it in the highest and the most unimpeachable, viz., fruti (the Veda) and tradition (smrti). In moral referees, both rectitude in conduct and learning (as represented by mastery of the scriptures, the Vedas, and the sciences or sastras) are required. The Sista, whose decision is to be followed in doubtful points of conduct or Dharma, is (as the etymology of the word denotes) a trained thinker. Manu (XII, 109) defines the Sista as one who has "acquired" (adhigata) the Vedas and their appanages (angāni) in the traditional manner i.e., (through proper teachers and in the proper asramas), and who is a śrutipratyaksahetu-a compound expression, which is interpreted by commentators in different ways.2 Medhātithi, for example, gives two alternative renderings of this important expression: (1) he who regards the Veda as equal to proof by perception or (2) he who relies upon Vedic texts that are visible (easily found). The expression may also mean that both Veda and perception are relied on by such men as proof. Reliance is on the Veda and cognition by perception alone (to the exclusion of mere inferential proof). He includes among the angas, the Mahabharata. Practice of the elite (ācāra) is a more trustworthy guide than precept (II, 6). Rights are by-products or result from the enforcement of duties. Protection (raksana) is the duty (Dharma) of the king. When it is efficiently done, every one receives protection. The emphasis is shifted from the beneficiary to the one who has to confer the benefit. The assertion of rights or claims betrays ahamkara, egoism, which is looked down upon in Indian thought. Dharma is moral and spiritual responsibility.

<sup>1.</sup> बाह्यसम्बद्ध, १,७

<sup>2.</sup> धर्मेणाधिनतो वैश्तु वदः स परिवृद्दणः । ते शिक्षा माग्राणाः देयाः श्रुतिप्रत्यश्चेदतवः ॥ (१२,१०९)

The second missing idea is that of equality as a political and social ideal. In a universe in which uniformity and law dominate, there can be no assertion of natural equality. The concept of equality is a deduction not from facts but from aspiration or supposed needs. Enforcement of equality will be putting every one in a Procrustean bed. Inequality, not equality, is what is found in nature. No two persons are exactly equal to each other, physically, mentally and spiritually. The sexes have different functions, often different psychological traits, and differences of physical strength and constitution. Even in the field of politics, the application of the principle of counting heads, or votes, has been condemned by political thinkers, like Burke and J. S. Mill. Men and women do not start with the same initial equipment in strength or intelligence. Men are not placed, all in the same conditions, to make a universal rule applicable to them all. Conditions change, and require re-adjustments to suit them. The doctrine of apad-dharma, (duties in exceptional circumstances) which is enforced by Dharmasastra, enforces this principle. No two persons are constituted in exactly the same way. Their requirements are not always identical. Their psychological make-up is often different : their physiological needs vary. We have to allow for inequalities springing from age, education, health, and disease. Glib references to 'equality before the law' fail to take note of inequalities for which the judge, who enforces the law, has to allow. A minor, an idiot, and a person sunk in senility are not to be treated as equal to healthy persons in maturity. In administering penal law, note has to be taken of varying degrees of consciousness. In spite of the slogan of equality of every one before the law, differentiation has to be made on one ground or another. Even as an ideal in the administration of justice, equality can work wrong. Human attitudes to crimes change with circumstances and changed social ideas. The sanctity of property will disappear in a communist regime, Punishment cannot in equity be enforced in a penal code absolutely on the principle. The Hindu penal law is not the only one, which has made differentiation; but, where it has done it, it has been done openly and on a principle of recognizing the needs of social peace, discipline (as we may call it) in a "planned" society, social equipoise, and ultimate values. The classification into varnas is explained on the basis, not only of functions to be discharged but of initial psychic differentiation. It is founded on the differences of temperament of psychic drift, known as guna. The scale of gunas may be likened to that of scales of personal development. The fourth varna is placed as in the scale, as it represents the karmic consequences of tāmasaguna in previous births. Such a statement as that a person is born as a Sūdra, and is raised by karma to the rank of a dvija, refer to this belief, and not to the promotion of the virtuous Sūdra. Every dvija child is a Sūdra, in effect, till he is initiated. Some of the disabilities of women, and the treatment of even dvija women as on a par with Sūdras, is due to the omission of the rite in their case. In the scheme of society envisaged in Manusmṛti, equality, in a civil sense, is treated as a myth. There is no equality in status and emoluments.
Human needs, no less than human powers, emphasize inequality.
The recognition of the fact is essential to advancement of the individual (self) and the group.

Equality exists only in one sense: cosmic equality. The self is basically the same in all; its ultimate need of liberation is the same for all. The route it has to follow, through endless time, is the same, and the basic features of Dharma enjoined for every one are the same. To the Highest Reality and His inexorable law all selfs are equal. Redemption is the ultimate destiny of every one, and it springs in every case from the same instrument, the discharge of duty (sva-dharma). It is only before the Infinite that the fundamental equality of every self emerges. There is no exception, and there will be no omission. If even one soul is unredeemed eventually, there will be a failure of cosmic justice. In the long march to self-realization, the marks of inequality drop off, one by one, till the released atman attains the perfection which is the mark of the Divine.

<sup>1.</sup> ब्रोडण वि समस्तावत् बाबद्रेदे न जायते (२, १८२)

OUR SOCIAL HERITAGE

PERSONAL PROPERTY AND LAND

The feature of Indian society that strikes a foreign observer as distinctive of it is what is termed taste, and what Hindus call varnāšrama-dharma. It is undoubtedly a cardinal item in our social heritage. Those who speak of caste as unique overlook the natural tendency for the formation of social groups on the basis of such things as belief in a common origin, common avocations and community of interests, and for their stabilisation for common defence. Hegel long ago pointed out that superficially the system of classes in mediaeval Europe resembled caste. The clergy, the nobility, the burghers and the serfs and proletariat formed groups not unlike the four Hindu varnas, Class cleavage created class pride, which was signified by confining marriages to those within a group. Even now there is a royal caste in Europe, and the marriage of royalty to a commoner is resented by the class. In countries in which there is supposed to be no privilege, pride of belonging to a few families descended from original immigrants makes a close endogamous group in the United States of America. We have in the half-bloods of Spanish America groups that correspond to the mixed castes of Hindu smrtis. Connubium and commensality are not criteria exclusively found in Indian caste. It has been so in other countries and also in ancient times.1 In ancient Iran the fourfold grouping into atharva (priest), rathestha (warrior). vāstrya-fsuyant ("head of the family") and huiti (manual worker) corresponds to the fourfold grouping of the Indian people into Brahmana, Ksatriya, Vaisya and Śūdra.2 The resemblance goes further. As in India, the first three groups of old Iran constituted a higher division, marked from the the lower (comprising the body of manual workers) by a ceremony of initiation and investiture with the sacred Connubium was the right of contracting a valid Roman marriage with all its consequences (matrimonium justim) in law. As such a marriage could take place only between persons of equal status, the Patricians and Plebeians had for a long time separate combium, until 445 B.C. when the two orders were equalised in this respect by lex Canulcia (para 121, W.E. Heitland, Roman Republic, vol. I., 1909).

Max Duncker, History o Antiquity, Trn. E Abbot, vol. V., pp. 184-200.

thread. If the correspondence between the two systems of ancient India and Iran be considered to be defective on the ground that the last group in Iran, when admitted to Zoroastrianism, was held to be entitled to the rite of initiation (a point that has been questioned by some savants), one might point to the rule of Manu1 (X, 127) giving the Sudra the right to perform Vedic rites without however using mantras. We may also refer to the inclusion of Sudras in the varna grouping, and their being held to have "Arya-prana" (Aryan life)2 which made them immune from slavery (na tu Āryasya dāsabhāvah)3 according to Kautilya. The colour strife of modern times has undoubtedly strengthened the case of those who see in the Indian varna divisions of the original cleavage between the fair-skinned Aryans and the dark-skinned Dasyu (hrsna-tvaca). But the Veda shows that the antagonism between Arya and Dasyu (or Dasa) was as much on grounds of difference of cults, speech and bodily appearance. The contrast is between Arya and Dasa, and there is no reference to the Brahmana and Ksatriya (Rajanya) by varna, though they were already castes in the Rg-Veda period. It is probable that the conquered Dasa or Dasyu become a Súdra, though all Súdras cannot be traced back to a servile origin. The transformation would bring an enemy, who stood outside the community, within its pale. The exclusion of the Sudra from religious rites of a Vedic type might be due to the original antipathy of the Dasyu (on cultural and cult grounds) to Vedic rites. Original disinclination is translated into involuntary exclusion. The old difference is perhaps implied in the identification of Sudra and Anarya by Gautama.4 The old resentment and contempt persist in the descriptions of a Sudra (originally a Dasyu) as a walking cemetery because of his love of meat, and his comparison with a beast of burden. A tradition also persists that the Supreme Being created the the upper varnas

भनेष्यवस्तु भनेष्ठाः सतां वृत्तिमनुष्ठिताः । मन्त्रवर्णं न दुश्यन्ति प्रशंसां प्राप्तुवन्ति च ॥ (१०,११८)

आर्थप्राणी ध्वनाइतः कर्मकालानुरूपेण मृत्याधेन वा विमुख्येत ॥
 (कीटिस्टीय अ. भ्रा., p. 183)

<sup>3.</sup> अञ्चलानामदेशिः प्रजा विकेतुमाधातुं ना । न स्वेनार्थस्य दासमावः (Ibid. p. 181)

शहो दिनातीनतिसंघायाऽभिदृत्य च वान्दण्डपारुष्यान्यामई मोच्यो येनोपदृत्यात् । आर्थिक्षयमभिगमने किहोदारः स्वदरणं च ॥ (गौतम. घ. स, १२,२-२)

एके वा पतच्छमधाने थे श्रदाः ।
 श्रमशानमेतत्मलशं ये श्रदाः पाण्यारिणः ।
 तरमाच्छ्रसमीपे तु नाज्येतत्ये कदाचन ॥ (वितिष्ठः, १८,११,१३) alone from Vedic metres (gāyatrī,triṣṭubh and jagatī,) which is found in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa² (V. 12). The system of four varnas was already settled in the Vedic period. The ascription of the famous Puruṣasūkta³ to a later period than the other parts of the Rg-Veda, does not alter the fact that the institution was already a settled fact by that time.

It is difficult for outsiders to perceive the spirit behind an institution, and often to understand even its superficial features. The errors in the description of the seven castes of India by Megasthenes are classical. What is peculiar to the Indian system is the meaning and purpose ascribed traditionally to it. Megasthenes saw the endogamous nature of the varna and the occupations that alone could be followed by a varna. His missing the inner purpose and meaning of the system is not surprising, as outsiders cannot visualize the philosophy of life to which they are related.

The origin of the varnas has been stated in many legends, and of the cause of differentiation in philosophical literature. The most famous of the legends is that of the Purusasukta-Purusa, who is identified with the universe ("whatever has been and shall be") and the source of the Sun, the Moon, Indra, Agni and Vayu as well as the quarters, the heavens, the sky, the earth, etc., is said to have produced the Brahmana from his mouth, the Kşatriya from his arms, the Vaisya from his thighs and the Sudra from his feet. This tradition is repeated by Manua (I. 31). The purpose of the creation is stated by Manu as the progress of the world' (lokanam ca vivrddhyartham). expression has elicited a great deal of commentary,5 The lokah is inclusive of all worlds: and the creation of the four varnas in this world of ours is said to be for the good of both our world as well as of other worlds than ours. This carries the implication, to which reference has been made in the previous lecture, of the interdependence of worlds and their denizens, and of the way in which the universe is balanced by their harmonious reciprocity in service. Vrddhi means

शावत्या नाहाणमस्वतं, विष्डमा राजन्यं, नगला वैद्यं, न केनिविद् सन्दर्शा सूर्य-सिल्संस्कामो विज्ञायते ॥ (विश्वष्टः, ४,३)

<sup>2.</sup> विशेषणाया, भ,१२ Trn. (A. B. Keith, Rg Veda Brahmanas, pr. 128-129.

<sup>3.</sup> Ry Veda, X, 90, 12.

होकानां त विकृष्यमं मुख्याहरपादतः ।
 बाह्यणं खात्रवं वैद्रवं शहं च निरवतंत्रदः ॥ (१,३१)

<sup>5.</sup> J. Jolly's Manufika Samgraha, p. 24.

both "prosperity" and "progress," The allusion is not so much to the inhabitants of the worlds collectively, as to each being individually. The individual being is only a soul encased in a body. Progress is that of the self, not of the body. Varna or caste relates to the body, not to the self. As described in the Chandogya Upanişad (V, 10, 7) a person's birth in a particular form, as Brāhmana, or Sūdra depends on his karma in a past birth.1 His varna is thus the consequence of his own past actions. Actions in this birth will similarly determine the varna in which the self will incarnate in the next birth. A man's varua is part of the retributive justice that pursues the self from birth to birth. The varna differentiation itself is said to have sprung from harma; this world is Brahma (creation of Brahma), and it has evolved varnas by action (sarvam brahmam idam jagat, karmabhir varnatām gatah? Sāntiparva, 186, 10). Man attains a superior varna by righteous acts.3 (Ibid., 297, 5). One cannot change his heritage by his volition; he must work it out by his karma in this life. It is by fulfilling faithfully the duties of his varna and status that one may ascend in the social scale. The arrangement of the varnas in an order of superiority is not merely a recognition of an accomplished fact; it is a device for the future ascent of those who are now low in the scale. In the work of reclamation of the submerged, the close association with the spiritually highest, the varna whose members must have some vasana, (inherited trend, from their past birth) is most indicated. This is the reason why the last varna is conscripted for personal service to the twice-born in general and to the Brahmanas in particular. The intimacy born of daily association and the example of the spiritual elite are means of salvaging the lowest varna. Society, made up of different cultural or spiritual levels, cannot be transformed in a day. The process of assimilation must necessarily be slow. The idea that every child is a sudrena samas tavad yavat vede na jayatet is that the child and the Sudra are on a level. Both have to be raised by education ; the dvija's

तथ इह रमणीयचरणा अन्याक्षी ह यांत रमणीयां योनिमायंधरन् बाद्यायोनि वा श्रावियं वीनि वा वैद्ययोनि वाथ व इह कपूबचरणा अन्याश्ची इ यो कपूर्या वोनिमायंधरन् इवयोनि वा सकरवोनि चण्डालयोनि वा। (छान्दोन्योपनिषद ,५,१०,८)

न विशेषोऽस्ति वर्णानां सर्वे नाकामिदं नगतः।
 नाकाणाः पूर्वसका हि कमेमियेणेतां गताः ॥ (क्षान्तिपर्वे १८६,१०-१४)

वर्णोस्कर्यमवाप्रीति नटः पुण्येन कर्मणा ।
 कुकंस तमल्याना हि बन्यात्पायेन कर्मणा ॥ (शान्तिपर्व २९७,५)

<sup>4.</sup> He, 2, tox.

child is raised by his upanayana (initiation), his rebirth, while the "spiritual" child, of the Südra will learn by service to the elect the means of redeeming himself in the next birth.

The same lesson is contained in some of the legends of the origin of varies. They describe how originally there was only one varia in the beginning and Brahman alone existed, and He created other gods who partook the features of valour, (kṣatra), vaiśya-hood and service for progress through variation. These divisions which existed in the divine regions were reproduced in this world.1 (Brhadaranyaka Upanisad, I, 4, 11-15). Mahabharata alludes to a tradition that in the beginning in the Golden Age (Krtayuga) the only varna was that of the Brahmanas, who became differentiated by their karma,2 Their assignments to other varnas were according to the dispositions they manifested. The deterioration of some sections of mankind, as compared with others is crudely explained as due to the parts of the body of the Supreme Being from which they sprang. This idea is implied in Manusmyti (1, 93)3 where it is stated that the Brahmana is by right the lord of creation, as he sprang from the mouth of the Creator, as he was the first born and possesses the Veda.

The birth in the four varnas in the process of transmigration is elaborately explained by Manu, in the eleventh. The Supreme Being pervades all beings with three qualities (guna): sattva, rajas and tamas (XII, 24).4 These manifest themselves in disposition, temperament and knowledge in various forms and degrees. Each of these again may be graded as the best, the middling and the lowest. The nine classes

<sup>1.</sup> बहदारण्यकोपनिषद, (१.४,११-१५)

<sup>2.</sup> नाक्षणाः पूर्वस्था वि कमेमिवेणेतां गताः ।

काममोगित्रमार्ताक्षणाः कोभनाः विवसादसाः ॥

सक्तस्यभां रक्ताहास्ते दिनाः क्षत्रतां गताः ।

गोषु वृत्ति समाधाव योताः क्षश्रुपनीविनः ।

स्वभावानुतिव्रन्ति ते दिना वैद्यतां गताः ॥

दिसानुतित्रमा हुन्थाः सर्वकमोपनीविनः ।

कृष्णाः श्रीवपरिश्रशः ते दिनादद्यतां गताः ॥

देखेतैः कमेमिथ्यंस्ता दिना वर्णान्तरं गताः ॥ (शान्तिपवं १८६,१००१४)

क्लमाङ्गाद्भवाः अवैष्ठवाद्भाषामधीव भारणातः । सर्वस्विवास्य सर्वस्य धर्मतो माग्रामः प्रमुः ॥ (१. ५१)

<sup>4.</sup> सस्व रजलमधेन वान् विचादात्मनो ग्रणान्। (मनु. १२,१४,)

of innate dispositions or heritage (gunāh), determine the bent of the self that is animated by it. The gunas are primordial. Manu states that in creation itself the selves were affected by gunas. Classification by guna may be described roughly as differentiation by psychic differences in initial equipment. The Gitā puts into the mouth of the Lord the statement that the system of four varnas (cātur-varnyam) was created by Him (mayā sīstam) according to differences of guna and karma. The allotment of specific duties to each of the varnas follows this principle of making functions tally with the inherited trend of the varna.

Thus in the system there are two features: firstly, birth in a varna is the result of the combined effect of the innate guna of the self and its action (karma) as moulded by the guna in the past births; secondly, duties are assigned to each varna in such a way that by sedulous discharge of them, the self may be raised to a higher plane in the next birth, and ultimately attain liberation.

It will be noticed that the gunas correspond to the triple division of primary appetites or ends of existence, purusarthas; sattva-guna corresponds to Dharma, rajo-guna to Artha, and tamo-guna to Kāma (mere desire). Translated into the varnas, the first varna is the consequence of past sattva-guna and its members start with an initial vāsanā of sattva, the second and the third are the embodiments of the drive of rajo-guna from the past birth, and the last of tamo-guna. Translated into terms of purusārthas, the first varna stands for Dharma, the second and the third for Artha and Kāma, and the last for only animal desires (Kāma).

We may now turn to the functions of each varna, as laid down in all fastras, and as repeated by Manu, on the authority of the Creator (I, 87-91): steaching and study of the Veda, sacrificing for his own benefit and for others, giving and accepting gifts for the Brahmanas;

<sup>1.</sup> महान्तेमव बात्मानं सर्वाणि त्रियुणानि च । (मनु १. १५)

<sup>2.</sup> चातुंबर्ण्य मना सुष्ट गुणकमंतिमागद्य: । (मगवद्रीता ४,१३)

<sup>3.</sup> सध्यापनमध्यमनं यजनं माजनं तथा ।
दानं प्रतिप्रदं नैव जाम्मणानामकेल्पयत् ॥
प्रजानां रक्षणं दानमिक्याध्ययनेमव च ।
विषयेष्वप्रसक्तिस्र स्वविश्वस्य समासतः ॥
पश्चनां रक्षणं दानमिक्याध्ययनमेव च ।
विणवपथं जुसीदं च वैद्यस्य कृषिमेष च ॥
एकमेव तु शृद्दस्य प्रनुः कमं समादिशतः ।
ऐत्यामव वर्णानां शुश्रुषामनस्यया ॥ (१,८८-९१)

protecting the people, bestowing gifts, offering sacrifices, studying the Veda and abstaining from attaching himself to the gratification of the senses (vişayeşu anāsaktiḥ), for the Kṣatriya; tending cattle, bestowing gifts, offering sacrifices, studying the Veda, trading, lending money and cultivation of land for the Vaiśya; and serving without ill-feeling the other varnas for the Sūdra, Looked at as duties as well as means of subsistence, Manu declares that the three means of subsistence, for the Brāhmaņa are teaching, sacrificing for others and receiving gifts; for the Kṣatriya the bearing of arms, and trade, agriculture, and cattle-rearing for the Vaiśya. Among the occupations the most commendable are teaching the Veda for the Brāhmaṇa, protecting the people for the Kṣatriya, and trade for the Vaiśya.

A feature to note in the prescription of duties and professions is that in every case the aim is to benefit not so much the doer as others. By the study of the Vedas, the world flows with milk and honey? (II, 107), sins are dissolved (XI, 263)<sup>3</sup> and taints arising from them are removed (XI, 245-246)<sup>4</sup>. The householder performs the five daily sacrifices to remove the guilt of taking life in the "five slaughter houses" of the house (III, 68-69)<sup>5</sup>. Specific sacrifices are described as having specific effects of a transcendental nature. In his public capacity a king is bound to perform them<sup>6</sup> (VII, 78-80). Their potency is so great that it should not be done for unworthy men<sup>7</sup> (III, 65). In the desire to do a sacrifice, a Brāhmaṇa

<sup>1.</sup> मन, (१०,७४-८०)

वः स्वाध्यायमधीतेऽस्यं विधिना नियतः शुन्तिः ।
 तस्य निस्तं अरलेष प्रयो दिष गृतं मधु ॥ (२, १०७.)

बधा महाहदं मान्य क्षितं लोधं विनदयति ।
 तथा दुश्वरितं सर्वं वेदे विकृति मध्वति ॥ (११,२६३)

वेदास्यासीऽत्यदं शक्ता मद्यायवाहिया समा ।
 नाश्यक्ताशु पापानि मद्यापातकजान्यपि ॥
 यैथस्तेजसा बाँद्वः प्राप्तं निदंबति कृणात् ।
 तथा बानाग्रिना पापं सर्वं दहति वेदवित् ॥ (११,२४५-२४६)

पश्चस्ता गृहस्पस्य जुली पेपण्युपरकरः ।
 कण्डनी चीरकुम्मश्च मध्यते यास्तु वाहयन् ॥
 वासां क्रमेण सर्वासां निष्कृत्वर्थं महाविभिः ।
 पश्च कत्सा महायशः प्रत्यहं गृहमेथिनाम् ॥ (३,६८-६९)

पुरोहित च कुवात ब्णुयादेव चार्विजः ।
 तेऽस्य गृक्षाणि कमोणि कुर्युवितानिकानि च ॥ (११. ७८) may not impoverish by it his family and dependants1 (XI, 40). Teaching the Veda is economically unremunerative, as it has to be done free; he who receives money for teaching the Veda incurs a great sin. The Indian teacher exacts no fees from his pupils nor does he expect them, while he treats them as members of his own family. Teacher and pupil share the alms. Liberality is one of the means of expiation and of acquiring merit. He who has must give freely. But he who receives gifts (pratigraha) lowers himself,2 Charity blesseth him who gives, not him who takes it. Wealth is regarded as a social trust, It has to be put to proper and unselfish use. The prohibition of the Ksatriya and the Vaisya to teach the Veda, to do sacrifices for others and to accept gifts is based on reason. The Vaisya was the affluent person in society, whose protected condition enabled him to accumulate wealth and enjoy it. Persons engaged in vital economic occupations should not be diverted from them in order to attend to their supposed spiritual welfare. An agriculturist and a trader serve the community best by the zealous pursuit of their own occupations. If a Ksatriya, who represents the armed might of the community, takes to accepting gifts, the gifts may often be exactions instead of being free offerings. Instead of protecting society, he will prey upon it. The conduct of a sacrifice requires expert knowledge, which it will take years of patient study to acquire. Men steeped in the avocations of the world cannot be expected to master the technique. Society will be sterilized economically if every one claimed the right to become a cleric or a conductor in a yaga. Lastly, society is held to be founded upon the willing service of the proletariat class which has to do the menial services that require neither training nor superior knowledge. As the Sudra was not the slave that he might have been, under other organizations, it was not possible to erect an edifice of culture, as in ancient Athens, on the foundation of slavery. Kautilya rules that no Arva can be made a slave. He recognizes both free and servile elements in the Sudra varna, and permits the pledge of even an Arya in a time of distress. In Manusmyti the word dasya as applied to Sudra denotes only service and the words krita and a-krita used to तस्मान्नास्पथनी गणेत (११.४०)

प्रतिग्रहसमधोऽपि प्रसन्नं तत्र वर्णवेद ।
 प्रतिग्रहेण श्रास्थान्त नास्यं तेत्रः प्रशास्यति ॥
 अतपास्यनधायानः प्रतिग्रहर्शविद्यतः ।
 अस्मस्यहमञ्जवेनेय सह तेनेय सज्जति ॥ (४,१८६;१९०)

describe two types of Sūdra (VIII, 413),1 though usually translated as "bought" and "unbought," are rightly interpreted by the commentators as "hired" or maintained in consideration of service" (bhaṭādi bhrtām vā dāsyam kārayet). It was servitude, not slavery of the recognized pattern. This is why slavery (daryam) is brought under contract. The deprival of full freedom to act was treated, on analogy, as servile. This is why an apprentice (antevāsin) who works for his master without a wage and is merely given food and board, is considered by Yājñavalkya (II, 184) under the head of dāsya,3 The statement of Manu (VIII, 414) that Sudra has dasya (liability to service) innate in him, and cannot be freed from the liability, even if released by his master, is properly treated by Medhatithi as glorified. exaggeration (arthovada).3 For according to Manu (IX, 334-335) the Highest duty of the Sudra (dharmah parah) which will lead him to beatitudes or a higher varya in the next birth, is serving learned and virtuous Brahmana householders. The attainment of mukti or making an advance towards its attainment is possible for every one by doing his appointed duty (dharma), and it makes it easier when the duty is one that does not directly contribute to one's own immediate advantage.

In normal circumstances, there should be no encroachment by any varga on the functions, duties and means of livelihood of the others. The Kṣatriya alone has the duty to be a soldier, for, to him is entrusted the duty of protection. Like the teaching duty of the Brāhmaṇa, it apparently carried with it no worldly remuneration, though there is no prohibition to a Kṣatriya being a paid soldier. Kauṭilya (p. 345) contemplates an army recruited from all the varṇas, but he does not favour Brāhmaṇas being recruited to it and regards the Kṣatriya as a better soldier, owing to his familiarity in using weapons. He sees an advantage in an army of Vaiśyas and Sūdras, owing to the possibility of getting a larger force from the two sections of the population that formed its great bulk. Recourse to recruiting others than the Kṣatriya would have been deemed an emergency measure.

मृद्धं तु कारवेदास्यं क्रीतमक्रीतमेव च । (४,१८६.,१९०)
 'क्रीतमक्रीत' सक्तायपनतमिति मेथातिथिः ।

<sup>2</sup> बाह्यक्लप, २,१८२,१८३ deal with दारण; the rule about अस्तेवासी is 2, 184

<sup>3.</sup> दास्यायेव हि सम्रोडसी बावाणस्य स्वयंभुवा । (८, ४१३); 'दास्वायेव' शति अर्थवादः सेवातिथिः । Kullüka misses this.

<sup>4.</sup> शुक्षेत त शहस धर्मो नैः क्षेत्रसः परः । बाक्षणायासयो नित्यमुक्तका जातिमस्तुते ॥ (४,३३४-३३५)

Indian literature has a genius for suggestion by simile. The interdependence of the divinely created varnas is signified by their origin from the same divine body. As health in the body postulates the co-ordination of functions by all the organs, so the health of humanity required that all the four varnas should work in harmony. The face or mouth (mukha), from which the first varna sprang, is the most important part of the body (uttamanga). Feeding the Brahmana in sacrifices and śrāddhas is transmitting the offerings of food to the gods and the manes through his mouth. The usual method of making offerings to the gods and manes is by throwing oblations into the fire. The Brahmana is the fire, and food given to him on such occasions is brahmahutam. A fire oblation should not be thrown on a fire which has burnt itself out, i.e. on ashes. A learned and virtuous Brahmana is like well-tended sacrificial fire; it is only to him and those like him that offerings to the manes and gods must be given. The long list of persons who are excluded from sraddhas (III, 150-168) includes Brāhmanas, who are physically defective, moral derelicts, followers of unworthy occupations, and violators of Dharma (e.g., he who instructs a Sudra in the Veda or teaches for a stipulated fee).1 The head and the mouth are the organs of direction and control, and he who sprang from the mouth of Brahman is indicated for the spiritual guidance and education of mankind. The arms stand for grasp and strength, and the duty of protection of society devolves on the Ksatriya, who appropriately sprang from the Deity's arms. In the human frame the parts below the navel are held to be inferior to those above it. The Vaisya and the Sudra, who were both of the thighs and feet, the limbs which bear the weight of the entire frame, stand for the economic props of society. For social stability are required the mind that directs, the trained forces that maintain order and protect against external foes, and economic bases of wealth and welfare.

The number of varnas is limited by Manu to those primarily created. They are four; there is no fifth<sup>2</sup> (X, 4). While the restriction applies to the varnas, it does not apply to groups united by consanguinity, birth and heredity, or jati. It stands for the physical type. A low-caste woman is referred to in the Nirukta (XII, 13)<sup>3</sup>

मृतकाश्यापको यश्च चृतकाश्यापितस्त्रथा । श्रुद्धाक्षिण्यो गुरुश्चेत बान्द्रही कुण्डगोलको ॥ (१.१५१)

चतुर्थ यक्तनातिस्तु श्रूहो नास्ति तु पश्रमः (१०४)

<sup>3. &#</sup>x27;अग्नि चित्वा न रामामुवेयाव'; रामा रमणायोपेयते न धर्माम 'कृष्णजातीया' धतलात्सा-मान्याद (निरुक्त-१२-१३)। 'रामा' शति शद्भा उच्यते । सा हि रमणाय एव उपेयते न धर्माय । रमणावसिय सा। 'कृष्णजातीया' दलेकायौ अच्दी। (दुर्गाचार्यमाष्य, ६. ११९४, ed. Bhadamkar)

as krsna-jūtīyā, of a dark group, and it is repeated as krsnavarnā i.e. of dark complexion in Vasistha1 (XVIII, 17-18). The word jati-hina in Manu, (IV, 141)2 means one wanting in good birth. In Manu, (X, 97),3 jati may be held to refer to varna, from the context in which it occurs. This is not wrong as every varna is also a jati, though a jati may be part of a regular varna or be sprung from a mixture of varnas. To such mongrel groups, the word jati is applied in Manu, (X, 11, 18, and 40).4 The obligatory duties are specified for only those of the primary varnas. The occupations mentioned as of some "mixed castes" (sainkara-jātayah) by Manu (X, 33-39, 47-49) appear to specify what was actually practised and not what is enjoined as dharma for groups, which have sprung from a violation of dharma. Nevertheless, as such pursuits also tend to become by custom the duties of such groups, they might seem to resemble the dharma of the regular vornas. As the distinction between obligatory duty and duty that becomes so by custom in a mongrel group fade, the lines of demarcation between varna and jati tend to become obscured, and the former be toosely applied in place of the latter (e.g. Manu, X, 27, 31) 5 There would be no objection to describing a varna as a jati (e.g., Manu, III, 15, VIII, 177, X, 86, 335 and X, 41).6 The term uthrstajāti (the best caste) and hina-jāti (low caste) are used by Manu in referring to the Brahmana and Sudra, but, if used of candala or similar groups it will be nikṛṣta-jāti (despised caste).

नामि चित्वा रामामुपेयातः । कृष्णवर्णां या रामा रमणायैव न भूमां य (यासिष्ठ घ. १८,१७-१८)

 &#x27;जातिहीनांश नाश्चिपेद' (४,१४१) इति सातकथमें; 'जाला हीनाः' निकृत्यातय इति मेथातिथिः।

परधमेंण जीवन् हि सय: पति जातित: (१०९७)
 Loss of Caste can only refer to the main Varnas.

<sup>4. &#</sup>x27;सुतो भनति जातितः' (१०,११) जाल्या मनति पुक्सः (१०,१८) संकरे जातस्यस्वेताः' (१०,४०)

पते वट् सहधान् वर्णाणनयन्ति स्वयोनिषु ।
 भावनात्वां प्रस्यन्ते प्रवरासु च योनिषु ॥ (१०,२७)
 'डीना बीनान् प्रस्यन्ते वर्णान् पश्चदयैव तु' (१०,३७)

शानवातिस्वियं मोद्यदुद्धदन्तो दिजातयः । (१,९५)
 जबकुष्टजातिस्तु (८,१७७) महिंदसरीरशुक्षणं भर्मकार्वं च नैत्वकम् ।
 स्वा चैव कुबाँद् संवेषां नास्वजातिः सर्वचन ॥ (१,८६)
 "सजातिजानन्तरजाः षट् स्ता दिजधामणः ।
 शहाणां च सवमोणः सर्वे" (१०,४७)

A distinction must be made, however, between duties arising from original varna and those arising from analogy, or imposed by inference A person rightfully belongs to a varna only when he is born of a proper union between parents of the same varna. The union, outside lawful wedlock, of a man and a woman of the same varna, as for example the kunda and golaka (III, 174), 1 born in adultery of the wives of men who are alive or dead, is regarded as (sterile) i.e. in producing for their begetter the spiritual advantages of a legitimate son (III, 175).2 The son of an unmarried girl (kānīna) and a son received with the bride i.e. already born to her (sahodha) are also the children of passion, not of wedlock. The prime difficulty in these cases is that the real paternity will not be known. In the case of intercaste unions, those which are hypergamous, i.e. the union of a man of a higher varna with a woman of a lower varna, is termed anuloma. Thus, for every woman there is a husband of her own varna, and possible husbands in higher varnas. But, the discharge of the natal debt to ancestors, the saving of the ancestors from dwelling in the hell (put), can be effected only by the son born of an equal (savarna) marriage. A savarna can alone take part with her husband in religious rites (III, 12 and 18). The rule of hypergamy requires that the brides from the lower varna shall be taken in the order of the castes; that is there should be no skipping of an intermediate caste. Manu (III, 14-19) expresses strong disapproval of a Brāhmaṇa utilizing this permission and taking a Sudra bride.3 He holds that the husband will sink to the level of his wife. Hypergamous marriages, though permitted, were thus not encouraged, particularly where the gap between husband's varna and that of the wife was wide.4 The reason is obvious. By close association with one who is unconversant with Brahmanical rites and ācāra, the Brāhmaņa will begin to neglect his appointed duties. It will not have the effect that is behind the rule associating in daily personal service the Sudra male with the Brahmana. Such association will make the Sudra familiar with the ideals of his master; he will try to live up to practice the

परदारेषु जायेते बी सुती कुण्डगोलकी।
 पत्नी जीयति कुण्डा स्वान्मते मतीर गोलकः॥ (३,१७४)

ती तु नाती परक्षेत्र प्राणिनी प्रेल चंद च।
 दत्तानि इञ्चलक्ष्मानि नाश्येते प्रदायिनाम् ॥ (३,१७५)

श्रूर्त श्रयनमारोप्य जाझणो यास्त्रथोगतिस्।
 जनयित्वा सूतं तस्यां जाझण्यदिव दीयते ॥ (३,१८)

<sup>4.</sup> They have been common in Kerala.

prescribed rites (without Vedic mantras), "keep himself free from envy, imitate the behaviour of the virtuous (master), and gain exaltation in this world and the next"1 (X, 127-128). By serving the virtuous among the Brahmana varna, the" Sudra becomes gentle in speech, and free from pride, and attains a higher varua in the next birth (IX; 335).2 The union with a Sudra female is based on mere sensual inclination, and in the intimacy of sex relationship, it will pull down the man without lifting up the woman. The attitude of the parties in entering on a union is important. An anuloma union, outside wedlock, because it defies moral convention, cannot be expected to produce the same psychological reaction on the minds of the parties, and results on the lives of the pair entering into it and of their offspring, as one in which the parties enter upon their lifelong companionship with a full conviction of moral and ritual responsibility. In concubinage, as in an unequal union, the impulse is infatuation (moha).8 Sudra concubinage is regarded as morally more deleterious for a Brahmana than even marriage with a Sūdra woman.4

The union of a woman of a higher varna with a man of a lower varna is opposed to rules of decency, and is regarded as unnatural (pratiloma). All pratiloma unions are outside wedlock. The offspring of such unions are persons who have sprung from parents who, in their passion, have defied dharma. The greater the disparity in varna between the partners to so unsanctified a union, the greater the defiance of convention. But the flesh is more powerful than inhibitions laid down by law or custom. To those whose sensual impulses get the upper hand, the post-mortuary risks of the step will hold little appeal. That such unions took place in sufficiently large numbers is seen from literature older than Manusmṛti. Otherwise, there will be no reason for Manu's dealing with them systematically and defining the position of the parties and their offspring. Manu allows the six possible anuloma offspring the rights of the twice born, i.e. samskāras like upanayana (X, 41) but the offspring of pratiloma unions (which

धर्मेप्सवस्तु धर्मणः सर्वा क्तमनुष्टिताः ।
 सन्तवतं न दुष्पन्ति प्रश्नेसां प्राप्तुवन्ति च ॥
 यथा वया हि सद्कृतमातिष्ठलनस्यकः ।
 तथा तथेमं चानुं च लोकं प्राप्तीलनिन्दितः ॥ (१०,१२७-१२८)

शुनिक्त्हृष्टशुअपुर्वृद्वायनहंकृतः । भाषाणाचालवा निलमुत्कृष्टा नातिमञ्जूते ॥ (९,३३५)

<sup>3. &#</sup>x27;मोबादुब्रहस्ती' (१,१५)

<sup>4.</sup> See Kriyakalpataru, Grhasthakanda, p. 43.

have the double stigma of violating convention as well as morality) are to be treated only as equals of Sudras even when both parents are dvijas. The candāla, born to a Brāhmana woman by a Sūdra, is stigmatized by Manu (X, 12) as "the lowest of men" (adhamo ngṇām). He is beyond the scope of every enjoined duty (Sarvadharmabahiskrtah) according to Yājñavalkya (I, 93).1 animus against him is ancient. It is due to the feeling of horror generated by the union, which outraged convention and defied the established social order, under the urge of an irresistible and ignoble sex impulse. The candala is classed with the despised aboriginal dog-eater (śwapāc) and both are compelled to dwell outside the Aryan village, as even their touch is held to carry pollution with it. Usually, the candala is said to constitute a "fifth" caste, but it is noteworthy that Pāṇini and Patañjali (as pointed out by MM.P.V. Kane) class them with Sudras. Their further fall must be deemed cumulative, and is the beginning of the idea of carrying pollution by touch springing solely from origin. By analogy, the worst offenders are put under the category of candala, and a late smrti puts in this division the offspring of a sagotra union.3 It marks the limit of social reprobation of the defiance of the time-honored rule that those who wed each other should not be of the same gotra. The Andhra and Meda4 are also to dwell outside the village. The term antyaja is used by Mann in the sense of candala (IV, 61) and also in the sense of the last caste (i.e. Sudra) (VIII, 279), 5

These are the castes of miscegenation. There are also castes which spring from the mixture of anuloma and pratiloma unions, among themselves and with one another. Manu (X, 6-56) gives a long catalogue of them. The list is obviously illustrative and not meant to be exhaustive. It shows the degree to which, in spite of the religious appeal to maintain the dharma of the varnas, they were

<sup>1.</sup> जादाण्यां, श्रूराज्ञातस्तु चण्डालः सर्वधर्मबद्धिण्कृतः ॥ (१,९३)

<sup>2.</sup> History of Dharmasastra II., p. 168.

समानगीत्रप्रवरकम्यामृद्वीपगम्य च ।
 तस्यामृत्याच चण्डालं माझाण्यादेव शीयते ॥
 (Sloka-Apastamba cited in Samskara Prakāša, p. 680).

<sup>4.</sup> बेदेहिकादनअमेदी बहिआंमप्रतिलयी 41 (१०,३६)

नीपस्टेडन्स्वजैन्तिः (४,६७) 'बाण्डालादिमिश्वान्सवैः' इति कुल्युकेन व्याख्यातः।
 'वेन केनचिदक्षेन हिस्याचेच्छ्रेप्रमन्सवः' (८,३७९) अन्स्यवः; श्रुद्ध इति कुल्युकः।

See M.C. Pandey's Intelligent Man's Guide to Indian Philosophy (1935), pp. 421—426, violated. A society in which sanctions to be applied against its convictions rest only on other-wordly reasons that are not demonstrable in this life, and on public opinion, cannot liquidate large numbers of the social heretics, or outcastes. Manu lays (X. 58) great stress on the psychological effects of the outrage of dharma involved in the origin of these mixed castes. He holds that the offspring of such unions may be detected by their un-Aryan conduct, their habitual neglect of duties enjoined on every one, and by their harshness and cruelty. The last qualities are likely to develop in persons, who feel that every one is against them. They develop the fear and animosity of the hunted animal.

The purpose of the Supreme Being will be ill-served if no attempt is made by society to redeem even the worst of those who defy its rules. Accordingly, we find in Dharmasastra devices for the moral reclamation of the ethically submerged elements. In the case of most, the purpose is served by indicating the rules of conduct that these have to follow, and the discipline to which they must submit, if they are to be rehabilitated eventually. Segregation, in extreme cases, acts as both a deterrent and a discipline. For the ordinary run of mixed castes an indication of the particular varna, whose duties they should follow, is enough. In the majority of instances they are lumped for duties with Sudras. It implies that rehabilitation is possible for them (as for the natural born Sudra) by pursuing the ideals of uncomplaining, unenvious service and close association with the elite in society. For every one the fundamental ethical code is the same : ahinisa, satyam, astheyam, saucam, indriya-nigrahah (X, 63). They constitute the five commandments of Hindu ethics. Thou shalt not kill nor cause pain to any living being. Thou shalt not utter a lie by word or in effect. Thou shalt not steal, nor covet another's goods. Thou shalt keep thy body and mind clean. Thou shalt keep under control bodily impulses and inclinations.

The varna system is associated with two correlated ideas. Firstly, persons born in good varnas can maintain their position in them only by faithfully performing the duties enjoined on its members, in normal or abnormal times. The penalty for failure to do so is loss of the status. The second is that failure to perform the samskara of investiture and initiation, in the case of dvija varnas, within the time-limits enjoined for the performance, become vrātyas.<sup>1</sup> The latter can be rehabilitated by the performance of a ceremony of expiation<sup>2</sup> (vrātya-stoma), while there are ways of the former recovering their lost status.

अनार्वता निष्दुरता ब्र्ता निष्कियात्मता ।
 पुरुषं न्यकयन्तीद क्रीके क्रव्यपोनिनम् ॥ (१०,५८)

Manusmṛti (XI, 192) lays down that he who had omitted to get initiated into Sāvitrī within the proper time may have his upanayana done after he has performed the penance of three hṛcchras.<sup>5</sup> This is a mild expiation. Vasiṣṭha (XI, 76—79) prescribes three alternative methods of the rehabilitation of the vrātya. He may do the vrātyastoma, or have a lustral bath alone with one who has performed an horse sacrifice (Aśvamedha) or go through the Uddālaka-vrata—a penance of graduated starvation lasting a little over four months. The classical historical instance of the performance of the purification is that of Sivāji in 1674.<sup>5</sup> Viśvarūpa (Yājñavalkya, III, 262) reconciles the contradictions by pointing out that for short intermissions of upanayana the penance prescribed by Manu was adequate, but for one extending to forty-eight years, the Vrātyastama is the only method of rehabilitation.

Vrātyas may spring among all dvija-varņas. Manu (II, 39) describes the Vrātyas as "despised by the Aryans," and marriage intercourse with Vrātyas "who have not been purified according to rule" is prohibited (II, 40). Living as a Vrātya is an upapātaka. (XI, 63). Sacrificing for a Vrātya is atoned by the performance of three krechras (XI, 198). One who misbehaves with a female of the house of a vrātya or a candālī has to pay twice the normal fine for adultery (VIII, 372).

The entire family and the descendants of a vratya, who has not been reclaimed, are under his ban. Manu accounts for the origin of eighteen groups of people by tracing them to vratya ancestors, springing from the first three varnas. (X, 21-23). Thus, the अत कर्व वयोष्येते यवाकालमसंस्कृताः । सावित्रीयतिता त्रात्मा नवन्त्यायैविगाईताः ॥ (२,३६)

<sup>2.</sup> सावित्रीयतिता जाला जालस्तीमाइते कतीः । (बाह, १,३८)

वेशं द्विज्ञानां साविजी नानुच्येत स्थाविथि ।
 तांसारियत्वा जीन् कृष्णान् यथाविष्युपनाययेत् ॥ (११,१९२)

वित्तत्ताविश्रीक उदालकार्त चरेत् । ही मासी वावकेन वर्तवेद् , मासं पमसा वर्षमा-समामिश्वया, अटरात्रं प्रतेन, पदात्रमयाचितेन प्रतेन, विरात्रमण्यश्चः अद्दोरात्रमुप्रसेत् । अश्वमेयावपूर्यं राच्छेद् । बालस्तोमेन वा बेनेद् । (वा-प-११ ७६-७९)

<sup>5.</sup> Kane, H.D.S. II, pp. 379-380.

Jhallas, Mallas, Licehavis, the Naţas, the Karaņas, the Khāsas and the Dravidas are held to be degraded Kṣatriyas by ancestry.\(^1\) A more important statement is that by failing to consult Brāhmaņas, by omitting to perform enjoined Vedic rites and samskāras certain Kṣatriya tribes have gradually sunk to the position of Sūdras. Among these are the Paundrakas, the Ghodas, the Dravidas, the Kāmbhojas, the Yavanas, the Sākas, the Pahlavas, the Cīnas, the Kirātas and the Daradas\(^2\). (X, 43-44). These being supposed to have been originally of Kṣatriya varna are within the cāturvarnya scheme and are not to be deemed Dasyus. They are only Sūdras.\(^3\) (X, 43). This is an extension of the field of Dharma to cover peoples, who are obviously foreigners, and is an indication first of the universality claimed for the Varnāšrama organization, and secondly for the application of the rules of Dharma to them.

Manu's attitude of disapproval of inter-varna anuloma unions is emphatic. It may be traced to an unwillingness to allow of indiscriminate minglings of persons brought up in different ways of life and different family traditions, and of different psychical types. The Brahmana, as described by Manu, is an intellectual and spiritual person, the Kşatriya an active man of the world, and the Vaisya one who feels the urge to acquire wealth and the means of pleasure. In such types, marriages of an endogamous kind are those likely to be most satisfactory both for their continuance and for the type of children that they will produce. Where both parents are alike in upbringing, ideals and temperament, the children will be like the parents. In inter-varya marriages the impelling motive is sex-attraction, and the union is not motivated spiritually. Psychological types cannot be changed suddenly. They are, under the postulates of Hinduism, the consequences of past karma. Close association in daily work and sharing of ideals might work a better change in the

इस्तो मलक्ष राजन्यात् जालगाद्विक्तिविरेव च ।
 सटक्ष करणकेव ससी द्रविद पत्र च ॥ (१०-२२)

शनकैस्त कियालेगादिमाः खवियजातयः ।
 व्यव्यत्वे नता लोके आध्यादश्रीनेन च ॥
 योण्ड्काश्रीड्द्रिवाः काम्बोनाः वननाः शकाः ।
 पारदा पहनाश्रीनाः किराता दरदाः खद्याः ॥ (१,०४३-४४)

<sup>3.</sup> ब्राव्डत्वं (श्रद्धतं) गता लोके (१०,४३); मुखबाह्रपावनां मा लोके जातयो बहिः। म्लेच्छवाच्छादंबाचः सुर्वे ते दस्तवः स्मृताः॥ (७०,४५) lower type that would approximate it to the higher, than a mixture of blood. It is this which is sought to be brought about by describing personal service to the elite as the occupation of the lowest stratum culturally. The inclusion of backward people or foreign tribes within the Sūdra group has a two-fold-significance: (1) it gives them the same opportunity of assimilation with the higher type as a real Sūdra, by the imposition of the same occupations and discipline; (2) by hypothesizing a higher original varna (Kṣatriya) for influential foreign tribes or people, it holds out to them both the lesson of the degradation that follows the neglect of enjoined moral and spiritual duties and the possibility of regaining lost ground by their own efforts to discharge such duties.

Varnasamkara,

Sambara, mixture in sex union, reconciles the doctrine of the existence of only four varnas (and not even of fifth) with the presence of innumerable smaller groups, whose number showed a constant tendency to increase. Such blood fusion may take place in hypergamous or the inverse relations, anuloma and pratiloma. The effect of the birth of a mongrel group is that it tends to produce more mongrels by its own sex affiliations. The endless number of such permutations and combinations generates the feeling of confusion, which is associated in the Indian mind with the concept of samkara. In off-spring resulting from such haphazard unions, it is futile to look for clear-cut psychic types. Both types are held as undesirable, the pratiloma the more so, because of the element of the revolt against custom and morality instinct in it. Parents, who have themselves defied convention and morality by a pratiloma concubinage, are not likely to act as a break on further laxity in selection by their own offspring. In anuloma unions alone as many as eight variations are possible. In pratiloma the number is infinite. Chaos is the result. Manu adds to the mixed castes that spring from sanikara those that arise from union that are prohibited (sagotra, samanapravara and sapinda), and long continued desuetude of svadharma by the members of a varna (X,24).1 Social discipline is difficult enough to maintain with the definition of the duties and occupations of four clear-cut castes, each with its distinctive duties and ways of finding a livelihood. It will be impossible if samkara proceeds unchecked. This will account for the horror of sainkara, which leads to its condemnation in works like

व्यक्तित्य वर्णानामनेपनिदनेन च ।
 स्वकर्मणां च लागेन नायन्ते वर्णसंकराः ॥ (१०,२४)

Bhagavadgītā (I, 41-43), and its being described as the road to Hell (sankaro narakāyaiva). The danger to society from unrestricted sex unions accounts for its being made a high regal duty to restrain people from succumbing to the urge to practise sankara. This is why, Vāsisthīputra Śrī Pulumāyi, the first century Āndhra king, takes pride in describing himself as one who prevented the indiscriminate intermingling of the four varnas (vinivartita-caturvarna-sankarasya.)2

The application of logic to samkara (anuloma) results in certain conclusions about the status of offspring. In a hypergamous marriage the child stands midway in status between the parents. If the child is a girl and she marries only in the same caste as her mother did, and her daughter does so, and so on from generation to generation, the amount of higher blood in the veins of the sixth generation will almost be equal to that of the pure blooded higher caste ancestor. Thus, according to Manu (X, 64) the offspring in the seventh generation is of the same varna as the original male ancestor. If the process is reversed systematically, the sixth generation will result in an offspring as completely equal to the lower varna of the original ancestress as possible. With trifling changes in the length of the period in which this caste promotion and demotion take place the principle is accepted by all smrtis. The technical terms for the rise and fall in caste status are jdtyutkarşa and jātyapakarşa.

Occupation can also exercise an influence on the nature of a person that is comparable to that of blood. If one of a higher varya (e.g. a Brāhmaņa) gives up his traditional occupation and takes to that of a lower varya (e.g. a Kṣatriya), a fall in his nature may be postulated. As a Brāhmaṇa is forbidden to bear arms<sup>5</sup> and to become

अवमां मिमवाकृष्ण प्रदुष्यन्ति कुलस्थियः ।
 स्थीतु दृष्टामु वाण्येय नायते वर्णसंकरः ॥
 संकरी नरकायैव कुलझानां कुलस्य च ।
 पतन्ति पितरो केषां लुसपिण्बोदककियाः ॥ (गीता, १,४१-४२)

<sup>2.</sup> Epigraphia Indica, VIII, pp. 60-61.

सूद्रामां माक्षणान्वातः स्थासा चेल्पनायते । अस्यानभवती जाति गच्छतासप्तमाष्ट्रगाद ॥ १०-६४

<sup>4.</sup> बीधायनधर्मस्य, १,१६,११-२४ निषादेन निषायां आपवामात्रातो अपदन्ति शूद्रताम् । तमुपनयेत् पत्रं याजयेत्ससमोऽविकृतो सर्वति । 'आविकृतः' नैजमेव वर्णं प्रतिपयत इत्यर्थः---गोविन्दस्थामी ।

<sup>5.</sup> पराक्षावेमपि त्राक्षण आञ्चर्य नाददीत । जापसान्य प-व् १,१०,१९७

a king, 1 one who does so, need not await the slow process of occupational influence, but may immediately accept a lower status suited to his altered function and outlook. The transformation of the Kadamba dynasty, which started with a Brähmana, to a Kşatriya is a classical instance of the operation of the principle in demotion.<sup>2</sup> The claim of foreign dynasties to Kṣatriya rank, that was conceded after some time, was obviously based on the working of an analogous principle applied not to profession but to varna-dharma. The assimilation of a foreign dynasty, which might be supposed to have lost its Kṣatriya rank by lapse of time, by resuming Kṣatriya duties and living up to its ideals of Dharma, to the body of Hindus becomes possible under this principle.

Occupation open to Brahmanas : Normal Times.

One's Dharma determines the occupations, or means of living. (jivanopāya) that are open to him; for, in the scheme of planned life it is not open to any one to take up any occupation or profession of his own will. Competition in any occupation or walk of life is limited to those to whom it is open, not to others. There is thus both competition and restriction of it in the Indian scheme of life. A person's varna entails certain duties; his occupations must harmonize with them. Of the six ways of life open to a Brahmana, three only are, in any sense, ways of making a living: these are officiating in sacrifices performed by others (yājanam), teaching (adhyāpanam) and acceptance of gifts (pratigraham) (Manu, X,75-76). The last source of living is qualifed by Manu by the adjective "pure" (visuddha), and it is interpreted as that which entails the performance of no expiatory rite3. Of this more later on. To the three sources or means of life for the Brahmana, Apastamaba (II, 10, 4) adds four; receipts from one's children (dāyādyam), i.e. a share of what the sons (who are also Brāhmaṇas) have earned; gleaning of ears of corn that have fallen on the threshing floor (śilońcha) and what is "free wealth" (like wild paddy, nīvāra, in the forest) in the sense of being the property of no one. It is not the same as res nullius, which is only unclaimed property. It will be noticed that these are not means of securing a comfortable life. A teacher cannot accept fees or stipulate for them. The teaching of the Veda must be absolutely free. A free will gift from a pupil, whose education has been completed, and which will depend on the pupil's own very limited means is what is indicated. The priest who officiates at a sacrifice is not permitted to stipulate for fees. Specific fees are ordained for each person who officiates in a sacrifice, according to his duties in it, and they will be given collectively to all the priests. The ways in which they should share them are indicated under the head of corporate activity (VIII, 206-210). No sacrificer should offer less than the prescribed fee or dakṣiṇā, whether it be in money or in kind, nor less than what he can afford to give, judged by his own wealth. (XI, 39-40). Even a gift (dāna) must be accompanied by a daksiṇā. Normally therefore these windfalls must be deemed a precarious and undependable source of income for the Brāhmaṇa householder (grhastha) for he alone can discharge these duties, the other three stages of life (āśrama) being in effect mendicant stages.

Bāṇa stigmatizes Puṣyamitra, the Brāhmaṇa founder of the Sunga dynasty as अलाई (Cowell and Thomas, Eng. Trn. of Harşacarita, p. 194.

<sup>2.</sup> Epigraphia Garnatica, VII, Int., p. 9.

<sup>3.</sup> विशुक्षोऽपापकर्मा (मेशातिथिः १०,७६)

It is popularly supposed that Brahmanas made fortunes by exacting fees from sacrificers and gifts from the pious.2 It is not a true view of the actual conditions. Sacrifices were costly, often required the co-operation of many priests and involved for their performance and preparations considerable time. They were of corresponding rarity. Those who speak or write glibly of the "thousands of bloody sacrifices" that Buddhism abolished, know not what they speak of. In animal sacrifices the victim was usually a single animal and in many sacrifices no victim was needed. There are twenty-one periodical sacrifices (yajñas), divided into three sets of seven. One set, the havir-yajflas, have no animal victims. Another seven, known as the minor (pakayajñas) also do not need an animal victim. The remaining seven are Somo sacrifices (somasamsthah). They are relatively more expensive to perform, and involve also more time and trouble. Unless one does a sacrifice with devotion (śraddhā) it is best not to be attempted at all. The sacrifices are intended to obtain heaven. But, the end does not justify dubious means. This is why Manu (XI, 10) is emphatic in denying any good either in this world or in a higher world to the man who expends on the performance of a some sacrifice the means needed for the maintenance and support of those dependent on him.3 Sufficient resources to

स स्वत्यदक्षिणेयंत्रेयंत्रेयंत्रेयं क्यंचन । (११,३९)
 See my Rāiadharma (1941) pp. 144, 198.

The belief is strengthened by exaggerated stories of royal gifts to Brähmanas in works of poetry and story books.

भृत्यानामुपरोधेन मस्करोत्योध्वेदेशिकम् । तम्मनलसुखोदकं जामतस्य मृतस्य च ॥ ११,१०.

ensure a life free from anxiety on the score of means for a minimum period of three years must be kept in reserve, before a householder is allowed to undertake a soma sacrifice (Yājñavalkya, I, 124, Manu, XI, 7-8.).1 Not only does a sacrificer lose the benefits of a sacrifice which he undertakes, with resources so inadequate that he is compelled to give lower daksings than those prescribed, but they "destroy his acquired spiritual merit (punyāni), his fame, his hope of attaining heaven, his longevity, his progeny, his cattle and his reputation" (XI, 40). It is not even every king who is opulent enough to attempt some of the sacrifices. If the yaga has to be abandoned in the middle by the king for want of means to finish it, grave calamities befall both the king and kingdom2 (Sankha-Likhita, in Grhasthakanda, p. 135). The practical difficulties of performing the twenty-one sacrifices are clearly visualized by smrtis, and would have been apparent to those who believed in their efficacy. Even the simplest vajña needs two (ghryāgni upāsanam) persons to do it, and various articles like milk, clarified butter, grain and fuel. Common vajnas need four priests, and in some as many as sixteen are required. The sacrificer and his wife have to provide themselves with new clothes, sometimes of silk, besides other things. The fees must be kept ready, for "a lost daksina means a lost sacrifice".3 The officiating priests must be not only learned and expert in their work but of the highest character. Such men cannot be had for the seeking. If the sacrificer hopes to obtain the needed financial help for the sacrifice from others, he has to reject wealth of a rajasic or tamasic complexion. He cannot accept help from a non-dvija.4 Even a king's help is to be rejected unless he is a righteous ruler dharmike sati rajani, (Manu, XI, 15). As duty is limited by capacity, in Dharmasastra, the inclusion of the yajñas under saniskāras by Gautama does not make them obligatory for all

यस्य त्रिवार्षिकं भक्तं पर्यागं मृत्यकृतये ।
 आंधकं वापि विषेत्र स सोमं यातुमदिति ॥
 कत्तस्यव्यायसि हृत्यं यः सोमं पिवति दिनः ।
 सपातसोमपूर्योऽपि न तस्यामोति तत्फलम् ॥ मनु (११,७-८)
 वैवार्षिकाधिकान्रो यः स हि सोमं पिवेत् दिनः ।
 प्रावसीमिकीः कियाः कुर्याद्यस्यान्तं वार्षिकं भवेत् ॥ (याच १,१२४)

नाएपसंमारो यजेत नास्तोति संवत्सरहात्तरिनष्टं हि राष्ट्रे निपतस्वनिष्टं यश्वसवनं यजमानं छादयति (राजधर्मेषु शङ्काकिसितौ इति कृत्यकस्पतरौ गृहस्थकाण्डे प्. १३५)

<sup>3.</sup> दक्षिणावत पन एत: (वारात: ) (Cited in Grhasthakanda, p. 152.)

<sup>4.</sup> मतु ११,२४-न यशार्थं धनं सूद्रादियो मिछेत धर्मवित ।

Brāhmaņas. They are compulsory only for those of affluence, 1 Collections from others should not diminish their resources for pious acts (XI, 12-14). In some cases what is needed for a sacrifice may be taken unasked from its owner. The implication is that property confers on its owner no exclusive right, which will bar its being made to contribute to the social obligations and religious duties of others. This is justified on the ground that the yajñas benefit not only their doers but the whole society. 2 (Bhagavadgītā, 3, 14).

So much for the supposed Brahmana gold-mine of wealth from sacrifices! If we turn to the other source, whose value to the Brahmana has also been exaggerated, vis. gifts (dana), it will be found that it is not less illusory as a staple source of income. Every gift is held, in Indian belief, to convey with itself some a-punya (demerit). He who takes a gift must be able by his own accumulated merit or spiritual potentiality to overcome the demerit. It is dangerous to accept gifts, even if one is dying of starvation, without realizing this, and the rules that regulate acceptance of gifts. (IV, 187).3 A man of little learning or austerity who accepts a gift is a fool for his pains; for he sinks to Hell (IV, 191). He who makes gifts to the undeserving also is led to perdition by his negligence4 (Yājñavalkya, I, 202). The acceptance of gifts is apt to create a taste for them. It will produce the social parasite, who likes to live upon the pious liberality of others. The smrtis condemn this acquired low taste, which they describe as prati-graha-ruci, which is like the taste for forbidden fare. The love of wealth is not by itself ignoble, if it is to be put to pious uses (dharmartham vitteha), but the conquest of a desire for it is better (gariyasi). It is better not to soil oneself with mud than to do so and then wash it, says the Mahābhārata,5

Thus, normally, the position of the typical Brāhmaṇa householder, who is a man of virtue and learning, is that of a comparatively poor

See my Introduction to Grhasthakānda, p. 61. वजनार्थ दि भिक्तित्वा बाण्डाळ: जेल जायते। (cited in supra) p. 160 of Grhasthakānda.

अन्नाझनन्ति भूतानि पर्वन्यादससंभवः । पशाझनति पर्वन्यो सवः कर्मसमुद्भवः । (गीता ३,१४)

<sup>3.</sup> See footnote 2 of p. 101 supra,

विधावपीम्यां होनेन न तु ब्रांबाः प्रतिग्रहः ।
 गृष्टन् हि दावारमधी नवलात्मानमेव न ॥ (बाह, १,२०२)

भगांध वस्य मिलेहा तस्यानीश गरीयसी । प्रकालनादि पह्नस्य दूरादस्यश्चेनं वस्य ॥ (cited in शृहस्यकाण्ड, p. २५०)

man. The Brahmana who leads a family life is one of two classes : salina and vavavara (Baudhayana D.S., III, 1, 1), and between the two the second is held to be morally superior to the first. The salina is one who enjoyed moderate comfort, though not opulence. He owns a house, has a servant, and resides permanently in a village. The vāyāvara lives as best as he can, picking grains of rice from the threshing floor, has neither house nor fixed place of abode, does not reside in the same village for more than ten days, and rejects gifts, fees from teaching and daksings in sacrifice. He is almost an ascetic but for his married state, and his greatness consists in his abstemiousness and independence of others. Manu has a different classification.1 A strict grhastha of the first varna may, from the amount of the provision he makes in food grain for maintaining himself and his family (including his pupils and servants), be one with a brickbuilt grain-store that can hold enough grain for three years' consumption, (kusūla-dhānyaka) by a large family with servants and retainers, or one who has an earthen grain-store capable of holding enough grain for one year's consumption, or has enough for three days only, or one who makes no provision at all for the morrow, The last two will be equal to the yayavara. Though there is no prohibiton of accumulating more than a sufficiency for three years' needs, the implication is clear that excessive wealth is undesirable for the Brahmana who values his spirituality. In the case of Brahmanas whose reputation gets them large endowments or gift of lands, it is expected that they should give away almost all that they get, not accumulating much wealth. Opulence is deprecated in the first and last varnas,2 In the first place it will generate pride and unspirituality and in the last a spirit of defiance of social rules. In both contentment points the road to salvation.

Occupation of the Kşatriya and Vaisya.

Both the second and third varnas are warned off three functions of the first; adhyapanam, yājanam and pratigraha. Their members are meant for civil and economic occupation. The Kṣatriya's duties are to bear arms, using them to protect others, and he is a king to rule the country righteously. The settlement of disputes between man and man (vyavahāra) and maintaining every one within his Dharma (anuśāsanam) are duties of the crowned Kṣatriya, and they pass on to a ruler, independently of his varna. The general rule of ahimsā is suspended in his case, for the righteous use of force in protection and punishment, according to law. One who is not a king, should follow the profession of arms. A Kşatriya is prohibited to beg. (Devala, în Grhasthakanda, p. 255), 1 His main duties are military and administrative. If a crowned Ksatriya abdicates, he still has his varna-dharma. The functions of the Vaisya are to breed cattle (yoni-pasanam) or tend them for wages (vetanena pasuraksanam). Parasara (1, 70) adds to them dealing in precious stones and work in metals (lauha-karma).2 Money-lending is another avocation of the Vaisya. The rates of interest he can charge are stated as 12 per cent. and 15 per cent, and he is allowed to charge compound interest. He incurs the sin of usury (vārdhuṣikatva) if he exceeds these limits, Baudhayana specifies only the lower rate. The difference is explained as the maximum that a Brahmana can levy, if he takes to money lending as an emergency occupation (apad-vrtti). The Brahmana is not permitted to levy compound interest. Even in trade the Vaisya is not to sell certain articles, but this is on the analogy of the prohibition to the Brahmana who takes to a Vaisya pursuit, Several of the inhibited articles are needed for general consumption. They must have been dealt in by the Sudra or by special castes outside the four varnas. This has been so with salt, leather and some other articles upto recent times:

क्स्ड्रवान्यको वा स्थाद कुंमीधान्यक एव वा ।
 अवैदिको वापि मनेदशस्तानक एव वा ॥ (४,०)

<sup>2.</sup> अनगों बाह्मणस्येष यदिक्तनिचयो महान्। (अनुशासनपर्व ६१,३९)

Duties of the Sudra.

The Sūdra's enjoined occupation and duty is serving the higher varnas (I, 91 VIII, 410) and particularly the Brāhmaṇas.<sup>3</sup> "The highest duty of a Sūdra, which leads to beatitude," declares Manu,<sup>4</sup> (IX, 334) "is to serve Brāhmaṇas who are learned, virtuous and householders." The Sūdra attains a higher caste in his next birth by serving a Brāhmaṇa, and by purity of conduct, gentleness of speech

<sup>1. &#</sup>x27;अयाचनमिति' (क्षवधमों) Devala cited in गृहस्थकाण्ड, p. 255.

लीहकमें तथा रखं गयां च परिपालनम् । कृषिकमें च वाणिक्यं वैदयवृत्तिकदाहता ॥ (पराद्यरस्यू., १,७०)

यद्भेन त श्रूदस्य प्रमु: कर्म समाविष्ठत् ।
 यतेषामेन वर्णानां श्रूष्पामनस्थया ॥ (१,९१)
 'दास्यं श्रुद्रं क्रिजन्मनाम्' (८,४१०)

विप्राणां नेदविदुषां गृहस्थानां वद्यस्थिनाम् ।
 द्वाल्पेव तु द्वाहस्य भर्मो नैदलेयसः परः ॥ (०,३३४) and freedom from pride. (IX, 335).1 He is not required for the Brāhmana of any other asramas as they do not stand in need of service. The Brahmana Grhastha is so fully occupied with his teaching, sacrificing and social duties that he needs must look to others to care for him in daily life. This is why the Sudra is conscripted for personal service. The cultural assimilation of the Sudra can best be effected by bringing him, as already pointed out, into intimate, daily relationship with the highest varna. His place as a menial attached to the Brāhmaṇa family is shown by the injunction to the former to maintain him when he is past work through old age, (Gautama, X, 60)2, by his being given the cast off clothing, umbrellas, shoes etc. of his master, (X, 125-4) and of being fed from the remnants of the former's food,3 The Sudra is enjoined to serve the Brahmana both for worldly and other-worldly advantages (X, 122)4. The Brahmana master is enjoined, by Manu, to allot the Sudra, out of his own property, a suitable maintenance after considering his ability, industry and the number to be supported by him (Ibid., 124)5. If he was unable to obtain service under dvijas, he could support himself by following arts and crafts. He is held as fitted for trade in those articles in which trade is prohibited for dvijas. Contrary to the principle that in emergency (apad), one can follow only the avocations of varnas lower than his own, the Sudra is allowed to follow those of the Vaisya (Yājñavalkya, I, 120)6 and even the Ksatriya (Narada).7 The last means only that he can enter the army. The Vaisya occupations generally taken over by a distressed Sudra are cattle-rearing and petty trade. The more he imitates the behaviour of the virtuous, the more does the Sudra exalt himself in this world and the next, (X, 128)*. He is exhorted not to

<sup>1.</sup> See footnote 4 of p. 102 supra.

<sup>2.</sup> यं चार्यमालयीत मर्तव्यस्तेन क्षीणोऽपि (गी. थ. स. १०,६०)

बिल्डिटमणे दातव्यं बॉणॉनि वसनानि च ।
 पुरुकाबैव प्रान्यानां जीगोबिव परिच्छदाः ॥ (१०,१२२)

<sup>4.</sup> स्वर्गार्थमुनयार्थं वा वित्रानाराध्यस्त सः । (१०,१२२)

प्रकल्पा सस्य तैवृत्तिः स्वकृदुन्वायपार्वतः ।
 श्राक्ति जावेद्य दाहवं च भृत्यानां च परिग्रहम् ॥ (१०,१२४)

श्रूस्य द्वितशुक्षा तया जीवन् विगमवेत् ॥ (बाधमल्ब्य १,१२०)

उत्कृष्ट चापकृष्ट च तयोः कर्म न विचते ।
 मध्यमे कर्मणी दित्वा सर्वेसाबारणी दि ते ॥ (नारदस्यृति ४,५८)
 मध्यमे दे कर्मणी क्षत्रवृत्तिर्वेदयवृत्तिश्च (असदायः)

१, बना वथा हि सद्गुचमातिष्ठलंगसकः । तथा तथेमं चामुं च ठोकं प्राप्नोत्मनिन्दतः ॥ (१०,३२८) accumulate wealth as it may cause ill-feeling between him and the Brahmanas, by breeding arrogance in him (X, 129). The Vaisya and the Sudra form the economic props of society, and their diversion from the occupations will ruin society. Together they also formed the bulk of the population.

Distress Occupations (Apad-vrttayah).

It may happen that a Brahmana may not find it possible to meet the expenses of maintaining himself and of those dependent upon him, by following the occupations open to him. So with other varnas. In such cases, it is open to the members of the caste to take on the duties of another. The assumption of such pursuits is subject to certain principles. Occupations taken up in distress must be given up as soon as the distress or emergency ceases. Otherwise, expiation will be necessary to overcome the resulting sin (XI, 193).2 The emergency should be strictly construed. What is barely sufficient, in a life of restraint and contentment, will be taken as the standard below which alone a fall will justify the construction of distress. The occupations indicated for a varna must be exhausted and completely utilized before the assumption of those of the next varna or any other parma is permissible. Thus, pratigraha may be extended to receipts of gifts even from Sudras, and from those who are not 'pure' donors. Even teaching a Sudra may be tried before undertaking the duty or occupation of another varna. One should proceed to the gainful means of lower varnas, step by step, without skipping those of an intervening varna. In one case, however, the dharma of the next varna cannot be undertaken by the next higher vis. that of bearing arms by the Brahmana. An ancient rule forbids a Brahmana to draw a sword even in fun. A Brahmana is allowed to take up arms in self-defence, or in defence of women, Dharma or the social order. But, as he is under the strict rule of ahimsa, which will be violated by his undertaking a soldier's duty, the above permission is to be read only as an emphatic way of asserting the social obligation to stand up in defence of Dharma, the weak, women and children. The question is an intricate one, and I have dealt with it recently in a long paper.3

शक्तेनापि वि श्रुद्रेण न कार्यो धनसंचयः ।
 श्रद्धो वि धनमादाय आक्राणानेय वार्थते ॥ (३० १२६)

बद्धारितेनार्नेयन्ति कर्मणा आक्षणा धनम् । तस्योत्सरीण द्याध्यन्ति जायेन तपसैव च ॥ (३३-३९३)

See Atatilyioadha, or the Right of private Defence in Dharmasastra, Dr. Kunhan Raja Presentation Volume. (1946), pp. 197—232.

Even if the professions open to lower varias are followed, they must be practised only under the ethical standards appropriate to one's own varia. The principle that strict adherence to one's own Dharma is the way to salvation, and that taking up that of another varia is risky, lays stress on the appropriateness of certain hereditary occupations for those who have inherited aptitudes and the psychological bent for them. Freedom to roam from occupation to occupation leads to baneful and ruinous competition, and the substitution of self interest to the common good, and of transient and immediate benefits to ultimate and permanent advantages. Laisses Fairs will be substituting "No plan" for "Plan," and Varia Organization is social planning on a worldwide scale and for all time.

These principles for distress occupations may be illustrated. Even if obliged to follow the professions of a Vaisya, a Brahmana must avoid some of them. First, he must not himself cultivate land, i.e undertake to plough it. The plough, which turns the sod, destroys animal life in the soil. This is why Harita (Grhasthakanda, p. 191) calls the plough a slaughter house (sahasūnam hi lāngalam), Baudhāyana declares that agriculture destroys the Veda, i.e destroys the merit of Vedic study, or the aptitude for or the opportunity for Vedic study (krsir vedavināšāya, I, 10. 31). Cultivation is an absorbing occupation, which demands all the time and attention of the cultivator, and he who undertakes it cannot have the leisure for the pursuit of the many religious rites, which are lifelong obligations of the Brahmana e.g the tending of the fire (Agnihotra), Manu interdicts agricultural operations, even for the Ksatriya, even though the rule of ahimsa is not so absolute in his case as in that of the Brahmana1 (X, 83). Brhaspati, who softens the asperity of Manu's inhibitions, by rational amendments, holds that the agriculturist (if a Ksatriya) by giving to the gods a twentieth of the harvest, a thirtieth in gifts to Brahmanas, and a sixth to the king, is freed from censure (na doşabhāk).2 Cruelty to draught cattle and their castration are prohibited for all agriculturists and particularly for those who are driven to agricultural pursuits by necessity. If driven to trade a Brahmana is prohibited to hold up stock for getting an

वैश्यवृत्यापि जीवंस्तु माझणः स्विभोऽपि वा । हिसामायां पराधानां कृषि यक्तेन विधेत् ॥ (१०-८३)

राहे दस्ता च षड्मागं देवतानां च विश्वकम् ।
 त्रिश्चद्वागं तु विप्राणां कृषि कृत्वा न दोषनाक् ॥ (बृहस्यति १ व्यव. ११३,१०) cited in गृहस्यकाण्य, p. 195 of the कृत्यकल्पतस्.

enhanced profit. (See Medhātithi on Manu, X, 90).1 Neither of the two first varnas is permitted, even when driven to trade by distress, to undertake the sale of cooked food (X, 86).2 Neither may sell weapons, poison, horses, asses or mules, cloth, cattle generally, milk, spirits, silk, indigo, flesh and human beings. (X, 86-91). The penalty for doing so is loss of caste (sadyah patati). A man of a higher varna sinks to the level of a lower by continuous pursuit of the avocations allowed only to the latter. Instead of selling for a price, when driven to trade by hard necessity, the Brahmana is advised to resort to barter in preference to sales for money. Money lending, which Brhaspati<sup>3</sup> half-sarcastically commends as superior to all other means of making a living, as it is not exposed to the risks of loss by failure of the seasons, and by the cupidity of the tax collecting king, of the ravages of rats and vermin, and of stoppage of growth by change of season or weather-is a forbidden occupation in normal times to the first two varnas (X, 117),4 In ancient India lending money was not viewed with the prejudice with which it was in Mediaeval Europe (in which Dante placed the usurer in the same Hell with the Sodomist), but was regarded as a useful act. The smrtis only suggested the control of loans for interest by fixing legal maximum rates, prohibiting the accumulation of interest beyond the value of the capital, and discouraging compound interest and penal interest. But, there was a feeling that the occupation, if followed by persons for whom it was not normally indicated, might lead to deterioration of character of the capitalist, and make him avaricious and hardhearted. Even distress should not drive a

<sup>2.</sup> धर्नाम् रसामगोदेवे छतात्र च विलेस्सह ॥ (१०,८६)

<sup>3.</sup> बहुबो वर्षनीपायाः ऋषिनिः परिकीतिताः । सर्वेषामपि चैतेषां कुसीदमधिकं विद्वः ॥ अनापृष्टवा गणमयानम्भिकाषेश्यद्रवैः । बृष्ट्यादिके भवेद्यानिः सा कुसीदं न पात्रवैद् ॥ देशं गतानां या कृतियों च पुण्योपनीविनाम् । कुसीदं कुवेतः सम्बक् सापि तस्यैव जावते ॥ शुक्रपक्षे तथा कृत्ये रजस्यां दिवसेऽपि वा । कृत्ये वृषेऽतिशाते वा वर्षनेन निवतते ॥

(बहस्पतिस्मृतिः, ed. Rangaswami, 1941, pp. 366-367.) 4. माग्राणः समियो नापि कृदि नैव प्रयोजेयत्। (१०,११७)

Brāhmana to certain professions from which a Brāhmana cannot return unsmirched to his pious pursuits, when pressure of necessity is relieved. Among them are those of the astrologer, the physician, the carrier, the oilmonger and the toddy vendor-the collocation of a semi-learned profession with a despicable one being only to emphasize the reprehensibility of both. Crime and immorality will not be justified under any rule of necessity, for any varna and so one cannot plead that he had been driven by hard necessity to crime or vice. Even necessity must bow to the moral law (Dharma). Hunger itself will not justify promiscuous solicitation of alms. The accomplished student (snātaka) is allowed to ask for help only of a king (because he has a social duty to prevent all deaths from starvation in his dominions,) from his pupils (because a pupil is like a son with the filial duties of a son), of one for whom he has sacrificed, as he would be a man of means, "and of no other" (Manu IV. 33),2 The profession of mendicancy is held in loathing by smrtis. As a spiritual discipline, to enforce the hard rule of the save ing grace of poverty and the social equality it creates, it is enjoined for the student (brahmacarin), and the ascetic, but under rigorous safeguards that would prevent them from becoming parasites and social pests. While the claims of humanity and of life generally are pressed on the affluent, and attempts made to soften their hearts. and make them ready to give, it is made hard for a person to ask for alms, except as an obligation of religious necessity. The evils that follow misplaced and indiscriminate charity have been realized nowhere so vividly as in Dharmasastra. Beggary, like crime, grows like weeds in a neglected field, and only when Dharma is relaxed. Solicitation of food for a parent, a teacher or a sick person stands by its vicariousness on a higher level, and is commended (XI, 1-2),3 Manu connects income from begging with the taint of death by naming it mrtam and by placing it only one degree above agriculture. which he stigmatizes (for the Brahmana) as 'slaughter' (pramriam) 4

<sup>1.</sup> See Kane, H.D.S., IL, pp. 133-134 for references.

राजतो धनमन्त्रिष्ठासंसीवन्त्नातकः छुषा । बाज्यान्त्रेवासिनोवीपि नत्वन्यत इति स्थितिः । (४,३३)

सान्तानिकं यद्यमाणमध्वनं सर्ववेदसम्।
गुर्वेकं पितृमानकं स्वाध्यायाम्युपतापिनः ॥
नवतान्दनातकान्विचा द्वाद्याणान्वमीमञ्जूकान्।
निःस्वेन्यो देवमेतेन्यो दाने विचाविशेषतः ॥ (११,१-२)
कतमुण्छश्चिलं वेयममृतं स्यादयाज्ञितम् ।
गृतन्तु वाजितं मेश्चे प्रमृतं कर्षणं स्युतम् ॥ (४,५)

Dharma has no toleration for the social parasite, whom Elizabethan laws described as "the sturdy mendicant." It is considered a defect in the government of a state if beggary and death by starvation of Brahmanas increases. The present method of preventing them by total employment is just what was expected of the effective implementing of the dharms of varnas and asramas. The growth of vagrant mendicancy under the cloak of religion in later times is the consequence of relaxation of this dharma, wasteful competition to occupations, resulting in overcrowding of some and inadequacy of the labour supply in others, and the assumption of mendicant ascetic life by the economic classes to which it had been denied by Manu and Dharmasastra generally. In ancient Indian criminal law, it was a crime to persuade a woman or a Sudra to become an ascetic. Europe shows the bad effects on the economy of nations in which the number of celibate monks and nuns increased out of all proportion to the population and the resources of the country. It is this wasteful diversion that is sought to be prevented by the asrama rules in smrtis limiting entry to the life of the ascetic and holding up the ideal of family life as the best for normal persons, of all ranks in society.

Theory of Privileges and Disabilities.

Doing a duty for its own sake, without any expectation of reward is enjoined by Indian religion. It does not mean that unselfish effort is sterile either in this life or in the next. The implication is only that to do one's duty in the hope of a benefit, or expressly to secure an advantage in this life or in the next, though permissible, is of a lower order in a gradation of spiritual values than desireless effort (niskāmakarma). To deny results to action will be to deny a paramount and universal moral law,-that of Karma. Self-regarding action, even if its effects are beneficial to others, is of a lower type than un-egoistic activity. But such a view will not find acceptance among common minds. To them there must be a material and tangible benefit for service, or there must be an attractive equivalent for it. Economists are familiar with the notion that the love of excellence, or the love of distinction appeals to finer natures more than mere love of comfort or well-being. In the accumulation of material goods a point is reached at which satiety begins. In the acquisition of distinction or the aesthetic satisfaction that springs of the consciousness of excellence or perfection, there is no such satiety. Post-mortuary benefits, like post-mortuary punishments, do not appeal to all minds. Distinction in life has attraction to most persons. It is this that lies at the root of conceptions of worldly honour, position and privilege, even if these are not translatable into tangible economic advantages. A prince enjoys a greater prestige than a commoner, and a prince of the Church a greater position in the common estimation than an ordinary lay prince.

We see the working of these ideas in the duties and inhibitions of the varna scheme. The Brahmana is relegated, not by his own choice but by birth, to a hard and comfortless life of poverty and constant occupation. His is a lifelong and almost tragic dedication to the cause of spiritual uplift and education of society. When barely out of childhood, he is taken out of the family and subjected to the rigors of an educational discipline which will last twelve years or more. He is enjoined to marry and start family life, when his education is over. But the life that he then enters upon is not less hard, and its ideal is even more unselfish. The life of the householder is social dedication. What pleasure or happiness he may derive from marriage is a mere by-product of the institution. He cannot refuse his spiritual or educational services to any one who demands them of him, and who is qualified to be served. He is not expected to hoard wealth, and is encouraged to lead an abstemious, if not an ascetic, life, Manu condemns the erudition from which income or fame are expected. A Brahmana sophist will not command in India the honor that a sophist enjoyed in ancient Athens; on the other hand he is deemed a lost soul. Poverty is in his case no excuse for failing to discharge his lifelong religious obligations like the Agnihotra,1 Even distress cannot free him from the need to watch his steps, when he takes up the avocations of lower varnas. The hand that is, metaphorically speaking, held out to pull him from economic difficulties cannot be grasped if it is that of one whose spirituality and morals are questionable. The gifts or donations of the wicked carry an indelible taint, which pollute receivers and infect the purposes for which they are given. The recipient is to look (as against the worldly adage) not into the mouth of the gift-horse, but into the antecedents of the donor ! The idea is that on the Brahmana depends not only the educational but the spiritual uplift of the entire society. A king gives visible protection; a Brahmana invisible protection. Both are described as dhrta-vratu i.e. vowed for social service. Accordingly, both are praised, but the Brahmana more than even the king, because the latter has compensations in comfort and an easier life that the other has not. Manu clearly believed that spirituality, when properly sustained, made the Brahmana wield a power greater than that of a mere ruler. The eulogies of the Brahmana mount to a paean of praise in Manusmyti. (See I, 93-101, IX, 245, 313-322 and XI, 31-35). The creation of the Brahmana is a blessing to the world. He is a living incarnation of Dharma and is born to fulfil it (1, 98).1 He is the guardian of the "treasure house of Dharma" (dharmakośa, I, 99). The entire universe is the property of the Brahmana, who has no worldly possessions (I, 100-101). The god Varuna is king of mortal kings, because he wields the rod of punishment; the Brahmana is lord of the whole universe, because he has mastered the Vedas (IX, 245). His anger spells destruction (IX, 314-315). With the exaggeration which is a literary device for emphasis, he is declared a divinity (IX, 317, brahmano daivatam mahat). It may (for example) be noticed that the king (who is not a Brahmana) is described by almost the same expression Mahati devatā hyasā nararupena țiștati-Manu, VII, 8). The Brahmanas are always entitled to veneration because each of them is a great divinity are (paramanidaivatain hi tat, IX, 319). The good of the world requires that the Brahmana and the Ksatriya should work in union (Samprklam) for there will be no Brahmana without a Ksatriya and no Ksatriya without a Brahmana (IX, 322). A Brahmana need not seek the help of the king to redress his wrongs for by his own spiritual power he can do it (XI, 31-32). Let no word of inauspiciousness (i.e. curse) be uttered against the Brahmana, and no hot word be spoken to him (na Suskām giram trayet, X, 35) because he it is who declares (vaktā) Dharma, who enforces (sasita) it, and befriends (mitra) all. Let not the king provoke the Brahmanas to anger, "for they, when angered could instantly destroy him together with his vehicles and goods" (IX, 398). The king should cherish them for the sake of sacrifices (XI, 4). The sacrificer is to be suitably maintained by the king, for the possessions of those who offer sacrifices are verily the possessions of the gods (XI, 20-22). A king should honor and cherish a learned and virtuous Brahmana (Srotriya); it brings luck to him if he worships them daily (VII, 37-38.). The gift made by a king to a learned Brahmana is an imperishable treasure (VII, 82). The snataka (accomplished student) should be supported by the king. The kingdom where learned Brahmanas die of hunger will itself be devastated by famine. (VII, 133-134).

वर्तसंख शिलोच्छान्यामधिद्दोवपरायणः ।
 इष्टी पार्वायनान्तीयाः केवला निवेपेत्सदा ॥ (४,१०)

The magnification of the Brahmana should be read with the privileges claimed for them. A śrotriya should not be taxed

क्यचिरेव विप्रस्य मृतिर्थमंस्य शासता ।
 स वि भगार्थमुख्यको जन्ममृत्याव करवते ॥ (१,१८)

(VII, 133). Even the Arthasastra upholds the exemption, and calls on the state to grant tax-free lands to learned Brahmanas, riviks, purohitas, and teachers, and confer on them freedom from fines (II, 1).1 The idea is that they pay in kind i.e. by the religious merit accruing from their acts of piety and devotion, a part of it accrues to the king. A modern sceptic may deride the value of such services, but belief in their efficacy was then widespread, and was shared by kings as well as the people. The exemption from taxation was ancient and is seen in Satapatha Brahmana (XIII, 6, 2,18),2 Kalidasa refers to the contribution of a sixth part of the indestructible punya accruing from their austerities made by hermits (aranya-varinah) to the king for his protection. (Sākuntaļa, II, I3).3 A belief shared by scholars and great poets cannot be described as the credulity generated in ignorant minds by a priest-craft. Another privilege was that a Brahmana need not give back to the king one-half of any buried treasure that he might discover, as others had to (VIII, 37)4 and the king was even advised to give one half of any treasure-trove found by himself to Brahmanas (VIII, 38),5 Heirless Brahmanas' property did not escheat to the state but was to be distributed (like the property of a teacher to his pupils) to other Brahmanas "and thereby Dharma will not be violated" (tathā dharmo na hīyate),6 There are two restrictions implied in the rule. Firstly, the failure of all heirs means not only absence of any relations, male or female, who are entitled in law to inherit to the deceased in the prescribed order but even fellow students (sarvēsāni abhāve yaduktani tat sa-

कतिक्याचार्यपुरीवितओत्रियेच्यो मधादेयानि सदण्यकराणि आमस्त्रदायकानि प्रयच्छेद ।
 (की. स. शा, ए. ४६)

अवातो दक्षिणनाम् । मध्ये प्रति राष्ट्रस्य यदन्यद्भूमेश आक्षणस्य वितात् ।
 (शतप्रध्याक्षणः, १३,६,२,१८)

राजा—बदुक्तिवर्णभ्यो नृपाणां श्रवि सत्फलम् । तपण्यस्मागमञ्चयं ददलारण्यका वि नः ॥ (भिम. शाकु., २,२३)

विद्रांस्तु जामणी इण्ट्वा पूर्वोपनिदितं निधिन् । अद्येवतोऽप्याददीत सर्वस्याधिपतिर्धि सः ॥ (८,२७)

से तु पश्चेतिकि राजा पुराण निर्दित किती।
 तरमाद्किनेन्दी दस्तार्थनर्थ कोशे प्रवेशवेद ॥ (८,३८)

सर्वेशामध्यभावे तु जाग्राणा रिक्यमानिनः ।
 त्रैविधाः शुच्यो दान्तास्त्रथा थर्मो न श्रायते ॥
 नशायं जाग्राणद्रभ्यं राष्ट्रा निल्मिति स्थितिः ।
 श्तरेयां तु वर्णानां सर्वामावे श्ररेन्त्रपः ॥ (९,१८८-१८९)

brahmacaryaderapi dhanaharitvartham). Secondly, the allusion to prevention of dharmahani is that the Brahmanas to whom the property is distributed will have to offer the funeral sacrifices to the deceased. The provision that a widow might raise a son to the deceased by niyaga, and in that contingency the entire property will pass on to the son (IX, 190)<sup>1</sup> is not in discord with the provision of escheat, as absence of all possible heirs means also absence of a surviving wife.

The right to take precedence of even a king on the road is a mere distinction, which was doubtless appreciated as a mark of deference and honor. There is an historical anecdote that it was deftly used to save a difficult situation that might have become serious otherwise.<sup>2</sup> Exemption from being summoned as a witness in a law suit is also granted to the student of the Veda, the sanyāsin and the king. The motive is not to interfere needlessly with persons who have absorbing duties to perform. (VIII, 65).<sup>3</sup> One engaged in doing a yāga (dīkṣita) is also exempted.

There are, however, certain rights which involve discrimination. They have come for much criticism in modern times. A Brāhmaṇa is immune from capital punishment, for crimes for which it is prescribed. Instead of the death penalty, he is to have his head shaved and banished, without deprivation of his property. (VIII, 378-379.) Manu holds that there can be no greater adharma (wrongly translated by Buehler as "crime") than killing a Brāhmaṇa and that a king should not even think of it. Kauṭilya (IV, 10) was less considerate, though even he admits Brāhmaṇa immunities. Manu,

- छस्मितस्यानपत्यस्य समोत्रात्पुत्रमाहरेत् ।
   तत्र यद्विषयातं स्याचनस्मिन् प्रतिपादयेत् ॥ (५,१६०)
- When the Peshwa Bāji Row I invaded Udaipur, the question of the seat he was to have before the Mahārāṇa was settled by Bāji Row's appearing as the Brāhmaṇa Pandit Pradhān, and being given a seat in front of the throne. (Tod, Annals of Rajasthan Vol. I,ed. 1914, p. 337).
- न साक्षी नृपतिः कार्यो न कारकङ्ग्रीलवी ।
   न ओवियो न जिल्लो न सक्षेत्र्यो विनिर्गतः ॥ (८,६५)
- 4. राज्यकासुकं, ...पातयेव । जावाणं वमपः प्रवेशयेव ।

(की. अ. शा. ४,१०, p. 227).

 सर्वापराभेषु अपीवनीयो माद्याणः । तस्यामिश्वस्ताङ्को कलाठे स्याद्व्यवद्दारपतनाय स्तेषे सा । मनुष्यवेषे कवन्यः । गुरुतस्ये नगन् । सुरापाने मणस्वतः । माद्याणं पापकर्माणसुद्धस्याङ्कतनगर् । कुवांश्रिविषयं राजा वासयेदाकरेषु वा ॥ ्की, ज.धा, ४,८; p. 220).

like Kautilya, rules that the criminal Brahmana be branded with various indelible emblems, reflecting his guilt, and be turned out of society. He was to be excluded from commensality, from sacrifices, from instruction, from matrimonial alliances, from all religious duties, be cast off by all his relations and receive neither compassion nor salutation (IX. 238-239).1 Kautilya provided banishment and labour at the mines for the Brahmana criminal. He was subjected to other indignities like being paraded on the back of a donkey. A Brahmana was not above being fined, and in some offences his fines were made heavier than those imposed for the same offence on lower varnas (VIII, 337-338).2 The immunity appears to have been due to the persistence of the old feeling that killing a Brahmana carried with it a heavy load of sin, and to growing doubts of the value of capital punisment, of which we have a fine illustration in the discussion on its value in the Mahabharata (XII, 267, 10-16).3 Further, the supposed leniency to the Brahmana was really greater severity. He was made not only an outlaw, socially and legally, but was practically starved to death thereby. Banishment did not mean that he would be received in other countries with more tolerance, when he carried indelible marks of his infamy on his body. But the greatest penalty was that he was made incapable of performing any expiatory rites that would atone, even partially, for his moral lapse, and thereby condemned him to endless punishment in reincarnations. As already pointed out, the purpose of the Hindu criminal law was to adjust the penalty to the mood and mentality of the offender and the opinion of the times. Judged thus, the discrimination is not in favour of the Brahmana, and may be even construed as against him. Unlike the clergy in Mediaeval Europe and officials in many modern states, the Brahmana was tried only in the ordinary courts, by ordinary rules of procedure and by ordinary methods of evidence, and when adjudged guilty was sentenced in the ways that appear to but do not

असंभोज्या श्रमंयाज्या असंपाद्धपद्भविवादिनः ।
 चरेतुः श्रमेवा दौनाः सर्वभर्मबद्धिकृताः ॥
 शातिसम्बन्धिमस्वेते त्यक्तव्याः कृतस्थाणाः ।
 निर्देश निर्नमस्वारास्तरमनोरनुशासनम् ॥ (१,२३८--२३१)

अष्टापार्थं तु श्रूदस्य स्तेषे मनति किन्तिपम् ।
 बोद्दशैव तु वैश्वस्य द्वाविश्वस्थितस्य च ॥
 बाद्यगस्य नतुःषष्टिः पूर्णं वापि शतं मनेद ।
 हिग्रुणा वा नतःषष्टिस्तद्वोषगुणविद्धि सः ॥ (८,३३७-३३८)

<sup>3.</sup> वान्तिपर्व, २८३,१०-१६ (ed. Kumbakonam)

really discriminate in his favour. Unlike the British peer, a Brahmana could not claim to be judged by his peers. Ancient Indian law did not accept the principle of the equality of all persons, because it will really result in inequitable punishments.

The Sadra's Position.

The position of the last varna, as indicated by its duties and inhibitions, has been regarded as unduly harsh. Sudra disabilities have been greatly exaggerated and misunderstood. Some of the disabilties are really advantages over the other varnas. They have been based on the principle that strength, (physical, cultural and spiritual) determines the duty and the penalty for violating duty. In the attainment of the common Indian aim viz, moksa, the Sudra syllabus of activity towards this end is lighter, and easier. He need not go through the laborious course of Vedic education with its discipline. From merely hearing the epics and the Puranas (whose author Vyasa, Indian tradition identifies with the editor of the Vedas and the author of the Brahmasūtras), he can obtain the same guidance and salvation. He is redeemed not by austerity, or learning or vows but by dana, i.e. by making use of his wealth in mere charity. He is free to dwell anywhere. He is not tainted, and does not lose his varna status by what he eats and drinks. His rites are simple. If he is so disposed he can perform, without mantras, the five daily vajñas. He is not denied the sacrament of marriage. There is no lower moral code for him; the ideals he is asked to cherish and the ethical qualities that he is advised to foster are identical with those for the other varnas. He was even allowed to become a king. He could enter the army, in emergencies. Wealth was deprecated in his case only as possibly generating arrogance, and making him restive of the position to which he had been brought by his own past Karma. He was asked to be treated as a member of the family. His women were under the same protection against insult or assault as dviia women. He was given the hope of a higher varna in the next birth, by good actions in this life (IX, 335).1 The arts and crafts were open to him. The prohibition to him to carry the corpse of a Brahmana prevents his relegation to the position of a common undertaker (V, 104).2 He is not shut out from spiritual advice and guidance from the Brahmana (X, 2). He can commute for his tax by personal service (VII, 138). His exclusion from judicial office and assessor's work in trials is obviously consequent on his defective knowledge of the bases of Dharma in Vedic literature.

श्वाचिकरकुटशुभूषु हेड्बागनहंकृतः ।
 शाक्षणाचामयो मिलमुरकुटा जातिमदमुते ॥ (९,३३५)

<sup>2.</sup> न निर्म स्त्रेषु तिष्ठत्सु सूते सूद्रेण नामवेत् ॥ (५,१०४६)

Brahmana and Sudra in Criminal Law.

It is in the imposition of different standards, on a varya basis, for punishments and for estimating the gravity of offences that modern criticism sees the hand of the sacerdotalist. Ancient Indian authorities on Dharma are quite familiar with the fundamental rules of criminal jurisprudence. It is difference of fundamental outlook, and failure to allow for differences of circumstances or context, that lead to the modern failure to see the reason behind discrimination in punishment. Modern criminal law is not innocent of discrimination. In weighing punishment, judges to-day have to weigh the effect of the penalties in relation to their effects on society, the political order, and the offender and his class. Punishments have to be deterrent, where social security requires it. The Brāhmana was the unsalaried spiritual guide, teacher, judge, assessor and sacrificer of ancient Indian society.

The need to protect-by making punishments more stringent than they need be-was not a feature of ancient Indian jurisprudence or Dharma. Modern judges, for example, are sensitive of criticism of their judicial actions from lay quarters. We have in modern laws an elaborate device for punishing contempt of court, in which the courts themselves are final adjudicators. An independent judiciary often tends to become an irresponsible one. In ancient India any one was at liberty to go and criticize a judge in open court or the king himself. The comparative severity against those who threatened a Brahmana with assault or actually attacked him and drew blood is based the principles we still follow : viz, enforcement of deterrent penalties in the interest of social discipline. The lighter punishment for akrosa (reviling), when the offender is of a higher caste than the person who is reviled, is based on the same principle, and it constitutes something like "privilege". (VIII, 268). In theft, where no question of discipline is apparently involved, but social discipline is, the heavier penalty for the Brahmana (VIII, 337-338) is on the score of a social upset if those who are better educated and esteemed as spiritually and socially higher set a bad example. The horror of mongrelism and desire to maintain a high standard of sex purity and to prevent the sex urge creating samkara are behind the stern attempts to repress sex offences by men of lower against women of the higher varios. As it was a matter of administrative concern and political expediency as well, the Arthasastra was hardly less severe than Manu in such cases, and it also proceeded on the same principles. The bitter animus to (and savage penalty of) the Sūdra who lectures on Dharma to the Brāhmaņa (i.e. to the whole community) (VIII, 272) can be paralleled by modern laws against social or political revolutionaries, who openly flout the established order. So are the rules condemning Sūdra asceticism<sup>1</sup> (Yājñavalkya, II, 254) and Sūdras in the garb of the twice-born (IX, 224). How in spite of such rules society became chaotic, varņasankara spread, and the purpose of the varņa scheme was defeated day by day will be seen from the lurid pictures in the Purānas of Kaliyuga effects, which probably only reflect actual happenings.

काश्कान् शिल्पनशैव श्रद्धांश्वारमोपजीविनः ।
 क्कैकं कारपेरकमं मासि मासि महापतिः (७,१३८)

Conclusion.

Varna-dharma is the keystone of the arch of the Indian social scheme. It has been the foundation of Hindu society through the ages. Its roots are lost in remote antiquity. Its influence is still unextinguished. It has concerned itself with men in large aggregates. not with individuals. Its scope has been universal. Its purposes have been both wordly and unwordly, concerned with this life and with after-life. It has proceeded on the hypothesis that life in the universe is an endless chain, revolving round the wheel of action (Karma). It has stressed individual responsibility as well as collective. While recognizing the force of heredity, it has envisaged its limitations and the risks of mere racial fusion, looked at simply as fusion of blood. It aimed at a permanent solution of every side of the social problem; genetic, psychological, spiritual, and economic. Society was to be so planned as to meet every need that change brought up. It was to be organized for all time. Its outlines were broad, simple and general, and afforded scope within its ample limits for every possible adjustment that time or circumstance might demand. It aimed at gradual changes, brought about by the educated efforts of its own members, instead of revolutionary changes, induced by external influences. In its designation as the Caste System it has won the appreciation of discerning sociologists and students of history. Their admiration has been for the elements in it which made for social balance and stability, the elasticity, which made it respond to changing needs and which kept it from disintegration in the numberless vicissitudes of foreign invasion, conflict with alien cultures and religions, and dissent within its own fold. It humanized society, and spiritualized it. It made for harmonious development through cooperation of its elements. Its recognition of fundamental instincts to which man responds by his activity, and its scheme for canalizing and transforming them to common purposes through the system of asramas so as to raise both the individual and the mass, made for its success. It has probed deep into the human motives for economic and political action and by taking due notice of their strength and need for training provided a stable political machine, which ensured good government, full employment, and harmonious cooperation. Its main negative contribution is that it prevented society slipping into barbarism, by its constant emphasis on achievement and character, even more than birth, as the real credentials of personal worth of permanent value, and it made it look up instead of look down, look forward instead of backward.

श्रुप्रजानतानां च देने पित्र्ये च मोजकः ।
 श्रितरण्डमान् (याधनस्त्य, २,२३५)

<sup>2.</sup> बहांब दिनांडिंबन: (९,२२४)

The praise of the system should be considered side by side with the criticism levelled against it. To many, whose vision has been blurred by inadequate knowledge of the system and of the philosophy behind it, as well as of its aims, or who have been animated by lovalty to other faiths and cultures and have imbibed the belief that perfection is found in them alone, Indian Caste has seemed a hard, cruel, and discriminatory system, which was devised to create and maintain the selfish domination of a body of priests over the masses. In such criticisms, it has been usual to describe the varna system and the rules of varna-dharma, as the fabrications of Brahmanas to gain overlordship, and to ascribe the origin of the system to writers like Manu. The criticism loses sight of certain facts. The roots of the varna classification go back to hoary antiquity. The tendency for the formation of classes is natural, and almost universal. Ascription of the system to Brahmana ambition and selfishness loses sight of fundamental features of the system, and consequent weakness in its own hypothesis. The effect of the system was to keep a small and highly intellectual body in a permanent condition of austere poverty and hard work, sterilized of all ambition for political domination and position or for riches and splendid living. By the theory of influence of occupation in demoting or promoting a varna position in any individual born in it, not only in future births but in this life itself, it prevented the most intellectual section of the community, from seizing political power. In the long history of India, the number of dynasties founded by Brähmanas can be counted on the fingers. In every such case the act was stigmatized as an usurpation and a violation of Dharma, and reprobated by the very community from which the usurpers came. To Bana, Pusyamitra was not even an Arya, because of his seizing a throne. In the case of the Kadamba and Vākātaka dynasties, which claimed a Brahmana origin, the seizure of thrones reduced their caste rank, led to intermarriage with even non-Kzatriya princes like the Guptas, and showed the limits of their social demotion for violating their varna-dharma. The Peshwas never claimed to be kings, but kept, like the de facto rulers of modern Nepal only the rank of ministers, whose appointments still needed the approval of titular Kşatriya kings. The Brahmanas were not an organized body, with a hierarchy of offices, like the Christian Church or even the Buddhist Saingha, They had no wealth, and no territorial power to back any claims they might put forward for lordship. The language of hyperbole in which the Brahmana was likened to a god, is also applied to a king. It is parallelled by the retort to the statement there is no king without divinity in him that there is no subject (prajā) without divinity in him' too. It is forgotten by the critics, who often challenge, on what are now regarded as weak grounds, the claim of Brahmanas to have been the sponsors of adhyatmavidya in the past as against the Ksatriyas to whom the critics assign the credit, that the very same Ksatriyas conceded the Brahmana claims. That education was widespread and that there was great critical acumen even in the masses in ancient India will be admitted. If it was so, how could any small body keep up the fiction of its natural superiority, by mere repetition of its claims, in a literature springing from it? While the line of criticism can be used as a missile in modern conflicts between class and class, its large draught on powers of belief must rule out its historical validity.

Rather must the success of the scheme be sought in its own inherent qualities. Unless it satisfied all its component elements it could not have survived. If those at the head of the scheme had freed themselves from its rules, they could not have continued to wield any influence. Impartial students will admit that the praise of the Brahmana was generally deserved, and the unworthy member of the varna was sure of denunciation from his own group as well as from others. To this day, lives worthy of comparison with the highest in tradition continue to be led by members of the varna in the obscurity of their homes on the country side, though to sustain them in the conditions of modern town life is almost impossible. The scheme of varnas lived, served and survived because it was based on a reasoned philosophy of existence, of rational perception of the strength of instincts, and of the possibility of conserving them by heredity.

Emphasis on duty instead of privilege, on the interdependence of individuals despite divisions, on the fundamental equality of all selves engaged on a common pilgrimage to the distant spiritual goal, and on common ethical duties against a background which coincided with Time and Space in their infinity, tended to results on human nature, which produced in every one both contentment and self-respect and the desire to strive for his own salvation and that of every one else. There is both experience and philosophy behind the proverbial patience of India's millions, which have enabled them to survive vicissitudes in the face of which other cultures and peoples have crumbled up. These are crystallized in the system which has been expounded, to those who understand their implications and basic assumptions, by writers like Manu. A study of their sociological ideas might still have value in the disillusioned modern world, whose faith in old dispensations has been shattered in the impact of two world wars, and which hankers for some guidance towards re-constructing society on a plan that would save it for ever.

LECTURE V

THE ASRAMA SCHEME

Varna Scheme Comprehends Asrama.

The system of varnas is the pivot on which all duties of human beings revolve. This is the reason why the sages are represented as approaching Manu and praying him to "declare to them in due order (anubarvasah) the duties (dharman) of all the varnas, including those of the mixed castes (antaraprabhavanam) (1), (Manusmrti, I, 2),1 and the recital includes not only those of varna-dharma, pure and simple, but of asramas, etc. The sage Yājūavalka is similarly besought (1, 1) to expound to the assembled sages the duties of varnas, asramas and other (varnasrmētarānām ca dharmān brūhi), and he gives a comprehensive account of all duties. A person must belong to a varna, according to the cosmic scheme expounded by Manu. The varnas are only four, and there is no fifth (nasti tu pancamah, X, 4). The place of the mixed castes is in the varna, so far as their duties are concerned, if they are of pratitiona birth, and between the castes of their respective parents, if through-out of anuloma descent. Before a person can enter an aśromo, therefore, he must have a vorno.

Classes of Dharma based on them.

In classifications of duties, Dharma is taken as of five or six kinds: the five on which there is general agreement are varnadharma, asrama-dharma, varnasrama-dharma, gunadharma and naimittika-dharma. The sixth is nitya-dharma or sādhārana-dharma or duties common to all men, i.e common ethical precepts, of which Manusmṛti is full, but the systematic treatment of them is not attempted by the great smṛtis, with the result that superficial observers, who have looked for the Indian moral code only in the smṛtis and in the literature of Indian darsanas, have made absurd statements denying the existence of moral rules in Hindu literature! Guṇa-dharma springs from office or position. In the classifications no separate place is found for the duties peculiar to women, and a code for them should be regarded as coming under both guṇa-dharma and naimittika (specific or occasional, like expiatory duties) dharma as well as under āśrama and varņa dharma, in regard to marriage, etc. In effect the comprehensive consideration of varņa and āśrama will exhaust the entire field of human duty, which Dharmaśāstra regards as eternal (sanātana).

सगनन् सर्ववर्णामां यवावरसुपूर्वश्वः ।
 जनतरप्रमयाणां च धर्माक्षे वन्द्रमदेखि ॥ (१,२)

Four Asramas.

Aśrama means literally a stopping or halting place. It is appropriate to describe the stages in the passage through life as those which one is asked to remain at for a considerable time. The stages are invariably described as four, and the order of their enumeration generally is that given by Manu (VI, 87); those of the student (brahmacarin), the householder (grhastha), the hermit or forest-dweller (vānaprastha) and the ascetic (yati). A synonym for the hermit's name is vaikhanasa, and the ascetic is described also as sannyāsin, bhiksu, muni, and parivrājaka, terms derived from some of the features of the ascetic's enjoined life, Manu adds to his enumeration the significant declaration that all the four spring from the householder (grahastha-prabhavāh). Without family life there will be no people for any assama, and as all the other three are dependent for their support on alms given by the grhastha they are economically dependent upon him. Even the gods look to him; for it is only the householder who is authorized to perform sacrifices on which the gods depend. This is probably the basis of the ancient legend retailed by Baudhayana that originally there was only the grhasthāśrama, and the Asura Kapila. the son of Prahlada, and a foe of the gods,

Legend of creation of asramas.

Legend of creation instituted the other three asramas in order that the gods may lose some of their offerings.

The story may mean nothing more than the rational suggestion that the only natural organization of society is the family, centering round its head (the householder), and that later on, for enabling the disciplined life, which is necessary for the fulfilment of the spiritual pilgrimage of man, the other three were added. Manu's position is that like the varnas they represent the primordial regulation springing from the Supreme Being, and that they rest also on divine sanction. One may find the tendency to form social groups, on a hereditary or occupational basis, more natural, as stratification in classes is pretty universal, whereas the division of life into definite periods and the imposition of special duties and discipline to each varna within the new grouping suggests artificial creation. If it was so, it was in very remote times, as the Vedic literature knows the stages, though the name dsrama does not occur in the Samhitas and Brāhmaṇas. The term Vaikhānasa (Tāṇḍya Mahābrāhmaṇa, 14, 4, 17) appears, as pointed out by MM. P.V. Kane <sup>3</sup>, to refer to vānaprastha. The yati (the name given to the member of the fourth āṣrama in Manusmṛti, XII, 48), who is declared to have incarnated from the lowest type of Sāitvika quality, appears in Vedic literature as an enemy whom Indra delighted to "throw to the wolves" (ṣalāvṛkāḥ). Can there be any connection between the Vedic yati being one who did not honour Indra by sacrifices, and the freedom from the karma-mārga claimed for sannyāsīns?

In Manusmrti the asramas are made sequential in the order of their enumeration by it. It indicates for each Asramas sequential one-quarter of the span of human life; the first is and obligatory. to be devoted to brahmacarya (IV, 1) * dwelling with the teacher (usitvadyam gurau), the second to garhasthya (family life), the third (which is to be accepted only when the hair begins to turn grey, wrinkles appear on the skin and sons have been born to sons, VI, 2) to forest-life (aranyam samāśrayet) 3, and the last to cutting away from society altogether by becoming a mendicant ascetic.4 Manu is definitely of the view that one should progress to sannyāsa stage by stage (sarvepi kramašastvete yathāšāstram) and in accordance to the rules of each stage.5 There was an ancient view, to which reference is made in the Jābālopanisad6 (which is also upheld by Samkara)7 that one can proceed to the last stage straight from the first, after that stage is covered. No one can become an ascetic without undergoing the full period of studentship, even in this view. The interpretation is criticised on the ground that the

<sup>1.</sup> History of Dharmasastra, II, p. 418.

अनुवंशायुवे। भागमुवित्वाधं गुरी द्वितः । द्वितीयमायुवे। भागं कृतदारी गृथे वसेद ॥ (४,१)

गृहस्थरत् बदा पश्येदलीपलितमात्मनः । अपल्यस्यैव चापले तदारण्यं समाश्रयेत् ॥ (६,२)

बनेषु च विद्यत्वेवं तृतीयं मानमायुपः ।
 बनुष्मासुषो मानं त्यक्त्वा सङ्गान् परित्येवत् ॥ (६,३३)

सर्वेडपि कमश्चरत्वेते बनाशास्त्रं निपेतिताः ।
 बनोत्तकारिणं विषं नवन्ति परमा गतिम् ॥ (६,८८)

<sup>6.</sup> अधानर्ग परिसमाध्य गृथी अनेत् , गृथी भूत्वा वनी अवेदनी भूत्वा प्रजनेत् । यदि वितरवा अधानस्थित प्रजनेद्गृहादा वनादा । यदद्देव विराजेचद्ददेव प्रजनेत् ॥ (जावालोबानियद् , ४)

<sup>7.</sup> अधाराज्ञाच, १,४,२०. See the discussion in my Introduction to the Moksakanda of the Krtyakalpataru (1945), pp. 29-30.

Vedic injunctions to perform all one's life the Agnihotra, and to repay the triple natal debt (rnatraya) can be discharged only in family life, which cannot therefore be skipped. It may be noted that the apologists for the short-cut to sannyāsa support their plea on the ground that some are constitutionally desireless and ascetic in temperament, and to such persons entry into the last āśrama after finishing the first is permissible. The verse of Manu (VI, 38), which appears to give an option is really a description of the ritual for abandoning the house-holder's life.

Premature entry into ascetic life of one whose passions have not been conquered, and who is physically still subject to rājasa or tāmasa impulses, can only spell disaster. From a social standpoint the moral is that one should not fly away from his responsibilities to society (and to the gods, manes and seers) and seek refuge in asceticism. The two last āšramas are parasitical

Reasons for imposing sequence.

in the sense that their sustenance, even under the safeguards limiting it to irreducible minimum, is an obligation cast on the earning members of society. From an economic and materialistic standpoint a monk is a mere drone in the hive and the limitless multiplication of monks can spell ruin to the community. It is for this reason that asceticism is not commended to the economic members of society. In a famous

Why sannyasa is not made obligatory. A spologue in the Mahābhārata his queen chides King Janaka, who had become a sannyāsin, for desertion of his duties. It was prohibited to women (Yama, in Smṛticandrikā, Vyavahāra, p. 596). Kauṭilya makes it an offence to persuade a woman to embrace the ascetic mode of life. Manu holds out the assurance of the attainment of supreme bliss only to the person who becomes a sannyāsin after going through the earlier stages. From the standpoint of the interests of the community, the first āśrama is vital, as no one should remain uneducated, and the second

प्राज्ञापलां निरूप्येष्टि सर्ववेदसदाश्चिणाम् । आसम्बद्धीन् समारोध्य नाद्याणः प्रवजेद्द्यसद् ॥ (६,१८)

Sāntiparva, 18, 1—26 The queen's speech is a reasoned criticism of escape into asceticism.

यम:—स्थिया हुती वा शासे वा प्रजन्मा न विधीयते ।
 प्रजा हि तस्याः स्वे। धर्मो सवर्णादिति धारणा ॥
 (स्मृतिचन्द्रिका, व्यवदारकाण्ड, ed. Myore, p. 596)

<sup>4.</sup> वृतः साहसदण्यः खिमं प्रमानवतः (p. 48.)

(grhasthāirama) is equally vital to society. While studentship is lauded, a prejudice grew against prolonging it to Lifelong celibacy 36 and 48 years, on the plea of fully studying Veda after Veda. It is the reason for the condemnation of prolonged celibacy (dīrghakāla-brahmacarya) as unsuitable for Kaliyuga. The institution of lifelong Brahmacarya of the Naisthika, who is to spend his life in the family of the teacher (ācārya) and which is commended by Manu (II, 243, 249) as ensuring the student-celibate the highest spiritual destiny, is thus held to be barred. As a celibate student cannot be a teacher, his services are lost to the community by his vow (vrata). A similar social purpose may be seen in the discontinuance of upanayana for girls and the consequential life in the teacher's house. A woman has a higher use for society than to become a blue-stocking.

While it is the aim of every one to strive for final liberation and to do all in his power to ensure his progress to the goal, the discipline of two last āŝramas obviously provides a better approach to it than the second, which can be regarded as a suitable preparation for the two last. In the scale of values, artha and kāma are suitable to the grhastha, while that of mokṣa is the one and only aim for the hermit and ascetic. It is on this ground that sannyāsa is termed mokṣāŝrama.

The Life of the Sannyasin.

Baudhāyana indicates seventy years as the proper time for one to enter the last āśrama. It roughly corresponds to the prescription of the stage in the fourth quarter of a man's life. Entry into the āśrama is by formal rites, which are detailed by Baudhāyana and other rātrakāras. An important and symbolic act in the ceremony is the grant of ahkaya (assurance of freedom from fear) to all created beings (abhayam sarvabhātebhyo datīvā, VI, 39). After his formal entry, the ascetic is to provide himself with a drinking vessel, a staff made up of three bamboos tied together (tridaṇḍa), a water jar and tattered othre colored garments. He is debarred from using metal vessels, owning money, having any contact with the world or worldly affairs, recalling his old name or associations, speaking to women, and from remaining in the same place for over

L. B. Bhattacharya, Kalivariyas, 1943, pp. 46-48.

बाँद त्यास्यन्तिकं गासं रोचयेत गुरोः कुले ।
 बुक्तः परिचरेदेनमाशरीरिवमीश्वणात ॥
 वर्षे वर्रात यो विभी जग्राच्यमविष्यतः ।
 स मण्डस्युक्तमस्थानं न चेश्वाचायते पुनः ॥ (१,२४१,२४६)

three days except during the rainy season. He must pursue the steps in meditation, which are indicated in outline in the twelfth book of Manu, so as first to withdraw his mind from the world and then concentrate it on the Self. He should live abstemiously on cooked food collected after the householder's hearth has been extinguished, i.e., in the afternoon. He should wander alone, remain celibate and spend his time in reciting or calling to his recollection Vedic texts.

Manusmṛti speaks of a type of renunciation, which allows the informal sannyasta to remain in his own house under the protection of his son (IV, 257-258, VI, 94-96). He gives up the performance of enjoined rites, assumes the ascetic role but remains in the house, without becoming a wanderer. 1

The Hermit.

Manu allows entry into the order of hermit only after one has fulfilled his duties in domestic life and is satiated with it. He must no longer be needed for his family or for his community. His renunciation is only of his associates and his dwelling, and the choice of an aranya (forest) for dwelling is to enable him to practise undisturbed different forms of austerities. (VI, 20-28). He takes his household fires with him, and, in at least the earlier stages of his hermit life, he maintains the five fires. He must bathe thrice a day (VI, 22, 24), and his inhibitions include the eating of flesh, grain grown on cultivated land, honey, and maintaining domestic utensils, and some of the periodical sacrifices also. He may end his life by starvation or by walking on till he drops dead. (VI, 31), He may go alone to the forest, leaving his wife under the care of his sons, or she may follow and serve him in the hermitage. He is allowed to beg his food in the adjoining village (VI, 27-28). He must accept no gifts (VI, 8). He is exhorted to be compassionate to all creatures, to cultivate a mood of serenity, to study the Vedanta (i.e. the Upanisads) and recite the Veda. Unlike the two types

महाविधित्देवानां यत्वाऽऽनुष्यं ववाविधि ।
 पुत्रे समें समासक्य वसेन्माध्यस्थ्यमानितः ॥
 प्रकाको चिन्तयेक्तियं विविक्ते वितमातमनः ।
 प्रकाको चिन्तयोक्तियं विविक्ते वितमातमनः ।
 प्रकाको चिन्तयानो वि परं अयोऽधिगच्छति ॥ (४,२५७,२५८)
 दशक्ष्मणकं चर्ममनुतिष्ठन् समादितः ।
 वेदान्तं विधिवच्छत्वा संन्यसेदन्त्यो दिवः ॥
 सन्वस्य सर्वकर्माणि कर्मदोवानयानुदन् ।
 नियती वेदमभ्यस्य सन्यसेदन्त्यो दिवः ॥ (६,९४-९५)

<sup>2.</sup> दाता निल्ममादाता (६,८)

of ascetics, described already, he does not altogether renounce the world; he onle retires from it. He does not lead a wandering life. He keeps up the lifelong obligation to perform enjoined Vedic rites. The dedication for social service that some modern students have seen in his life is not inferable from the description in the smrtis.

The two last asramas have more value to their own members than to society, except in removing from active life men who had grown too old for efficient conduct of affairs, and thereby provided a natural mode of superannuation. The third asrama was not only open to Kṣatriyas but was perhaps open to Vaiśyas also, as Manu uses the word dvija as regards entrants to the asrama. According to the Vaikhānasa Dharmasūtra (XIV, 117-118), however, all four āśramas are open to the Brāhmaņa, all except Sannyāsa to the Kṣatriya, all but the last two to the Vaiśya and only Gārhasthya to the Śūdra.

The selection coincides with the lay interests of society, which can ill afford to lose the services of its economic classes.

Unlike the sannyāsin, the vānaprastha is not inducted into his asrama by any special ceremonial. The option to leave his wife behindwhen he retires to the forest, or take her with him, is interpreted by Medhātithi as implying that she is to be left behind if still a matron (taruni) and taken to the forest if she is also aged (VI, 3),1 Both have to observe the yow of continence.2 The time for departure to the forest is Uttarayana. The appearance of grey hair and the birth of a grandson are to be taken as alternative indications of the approach of the time for departure from household life, according to Vijfiāneśvara, but Mitramiśra dissents from this view. He should observe a vow of silence as far as possible (Apastamba, XXII, 18.21). He may build a hut for his fire, but should himself live in the open and sleep on the bare ground (Ib, XXII, 24). He can eat only the salt he himself prepares (VI, 12). He should not, according to a dictum ascribed by Mitramiśra to Vasistha but not found in the printed text of the smrti, re-enter his village. But he is not cut off from his old family and friends. Gautama prohibits his stepping on land that has been ploughed (III, 32-33). He may hoard his food but not for more than a year (VI, 15; Gautama, III, 35). He must become impervious (by his training) to sensation, pleasant or unpleasant; be the same whether his body is shampooed with sandal paste or torn by thorns (Yājñavalkya, III, 53). The hard life that he leads will take him to the realm of Brahman (Brahmaloke mahiyate, VI, 32) "free from sorrow and fear". (vitafokabhayah). The general view is that the hermit has the same access to mokşa as the yati, through his mode of life, but Medhātithi holds (after a long discussion) that he attains only the inferior end of Brahmaloka. In two respects the ascetic and the hermit differ. The latter is allowed to commit suicide by starvation or by mahāprasthāna (the great journey), while the ascetic must await his natural end; and the hermit apparently has no penance to do or punishment to undergo if he reverts to his house, while the ascetic who gives up sannyāsa becomes for life the slave of the king.2

यदि भाषाया १०छा तदा सद्दागमनं, अन्यवा एकाकिनः ।
 अन्ये त तक्यों निक्षित्य इक्या सदेति वर्णयन्ति ॥ (मेपातिबिः, ६,३)

<sup>2.</sup> निवसेश्रियतेन्द्रियः (६,४)

Mere entry into the two aśramas will not assure one mukti. The steps to mukli are usually stated as five: loss of illusions; extinction of all desire; overcoming the feeling of personality; complete disappearance of any tinge of attachment to the world; and absolute isolation. All these may be obtained even when one is in the second aframa, but the isolation in the forest or the life of the ascetic offer greater facilities for obtaining them. While the two first stages of life were compulsory for all dvijas, being samskaras, and the second obligatory for all but the very few who elect to remain celibatestudents for life (naisthika), the last two asramas are only commendatory and optional. The third asrama (from the instances in the epics) seems to have been more for Kşatriyas than for Brāhmaṇas, and its gradual disappearance, after inclusion among the inhibitions of Kaliyuga, is intelligible. It is noteworthy that it continued to be described in mediaval digests as available. It was harder than the last, because of the obligation to continue the prescribed sacrifices. If life is viewed as a sequence of symbolic sacrifices (yajña), the life of the first asrama provides for brahma-yajña, of the second for karma-yajña and the last two for jñana-yajña,

If the dśramas are viewed from the standpoint of the relation of the individual and the community, in the first dśrama the group looks after the individual Brahmacārin and his teacher, the maintenance of both becoming a social obligation: in the second, the individual, as pater familias has to look after groups, family, society, etc; in the third the individual becomes independent of the group.

थ: कण्टकंबितुवति चन्दनैयंश्च लिम्पति ।
 कक्को परितृष्ट्य समस्तस्य च तस्य च ॥ (बाह्र०,१,५१)

<sup>2.</sup> धनस्यावसितो राष्ट्रो दास आमरणान्तिकम् । (याञ्च० २,१८३)

and becomes absorbed in himself; and in the fourth, though slightly dependent still on the support of society, the individual is only concerned with the ultimate end and not the immediate present, being virtually not only out of society but of this life. From the first to the last, all effort and training for it are to gain the supreme end, and in the progress to it individual and society co-operate. The abhayadāna, with which the entry into sannyāsa is symbolized, is, like the vaiśvadēva offering, a reminder of the one-ness of life and the kinship of self.

The First Asrama.

Entry into the initial stage of life was to be after one has undervone the samskara of upanayana. Upanayana means literally "leading to a person or object." In the case of the initiation of a dviia, for which it stands as a denomination, it means both; leading the student to Savitri-mantra, and to the acarya, who will initiate him into Savitri and be his teacher throughout the period of studentship (brahmacarya). The upanayana marks not the beginning of education, but of Vedic instruction. After the samskara of caula (tonsure) comes a ceremony named vidyārambha, initiation into learning, i.e. literacy. The caula or caddkarman was obligatory for dvijas, and it was to be done for the sake of spiritual merit (dharmatah) between the first and third years of the child. Vidyarambha is not a samskara as it is teaching a child only his letters. According to Apararka, 1 it was to be done in the fifth year of the child, and in any case before the upanayana. The performance of the ceremony, in spite of its not being a samskara, indicates the desire for universal literacy in ancient India. For, according to the smrtis (e.g., Manu, II, 66) every samskara was to be done for a girl as for a boy, but (with the exception of marriage,) it was to be done without mantra. Similarly, Súdras, though pronounced as not needing sacraments for which they lacked the worth, are allowed by Manu (X, 126-127) to go through the ritual of the dvijas, 'without incurring sin but winning praise,' without repeating the presribed mantras. There is a statement of Kantilya that a prince (i.e., Kṣatriya) was to be taught reading. writing and arithmetic before his upanayana and after his caula (I. 5: vrttacaulakarmā lipim samkhyānam ca upayunjīta), but as the upanayana of the Kşatriya is three years later than that of a Brahmana boy, the duration of lay-schooling must be longer in the case of the former. Manu makes no reference to lay learning, and it must not be presumed from it that in the case of the first varna especially, the initiation into the three "R's" was omitted. It was probably done in the case of girls and Sudras also, without a formal ceremony, as it is still done.

<sup>4.</sup> pp. 20-21.

Universal literacy was the ideal. Just as we find that a king (in the Mahābhārata) boasts that there are no beggars in his kingdom, so king Aśvapati boasts (Chāndogya Upaniṣad, V, 115) that there was no illiterate person in his kingdom. In the case of the three first varṇas atleast some advance in literacy must be postulated before upanayana, which every boy in these varṇas must undergo, unless physically defective. The edicts of Aśoka are incised on rocks or pillars, which were placed on frequented highways and places. They are in the vernacular. It is open to presume that in his far-flung dominions there must have been widespread literacy, as without it they would be purposeless. We have in Vâtsyāyana references to the literacy of girls.

The purpose of upanayana, from a cosmic standpoint, is to enable a dvija to discharge the first of the three natal debts. The institution is ancient and goes back to the Veda. The time for it is the eighth year from conception in the case of the Brahmana, the eleventh in the case of the Kşatriya and the twelfth in the case of the Vaisya. These ages may be advanced, according to Manu (II, 37), to the fifth, sixth and eighth years in the three varnas respectively, if the father desires that the son should be proficient in the chief activity of the varna, viz. Vedic learning, power, or success in business.3 It does not mean that the education of the children in the caste-pursuits will begin earlier, but it is expected that the spiritual merit will give the advantage specified in each case. Initiation must be completed before a certain age, if the boy is not to become a vratya: the limit is the 16th year for the Brahmana, the 22nd for the Ksatriya and the twenty fourth for the Vaisya. The later start and longer interval for upanayana withour loss of caste, in the case of the second and third varnas, may reflect a view of their spiritual immaturity, at the same age as a Brahmana child, or the absence of any necessity for such children to be proficient in the same Vedic learning as the latter. The curriculum for a prince was probably also that for a Ksatriya

न में स्तीनो जनपदे, न कदवाँ, न मखपो, नानादिताविनांविद्रान्।
 (क्षान्दो = उप = ५,११,५)

See Kāmasātra, p. 229; and H. C. Chakladar—" Social Life in Ancient India—Studies Vātsyāyana's Kāmasūtra," p. 175 and pp. 180-181.

नदावर्णसकामस्य कार्य विशस्य पश्चमे ।
 राधो वक्गार्थेन: वह वैदयस्येदाविनोऽद्यमे ॥ (२,३७)

generally; and it included subjects like philosophy, economics, and politics in addition to the Veda, and had to be completed before the age of majority or soon after. In the case of a prince it would be unreasonable to expect the continuance of education beyond the period absolutely necessary for his future responsibilities.

It would be interesting to note the importance assigned to education in ancient Indian social thought. Education came first. It was every one's birthright. If vidyārambha was the beginning of literacy. upanayana marks the induction into sacred and redeeming lore. The training for other varna functions like direction and teaching (siksa) for the Brahmana, protection (raksa) for the Kşatriya, and productive activity (jīvikā) for the Vaišya are involved as corollaries to the education that starts with both the ceremonies. Receptiveness to the urge of social duty is what Hindu educational discipline aimed at. The boy was made from the beginning to realize his dependence on others for both material sustenance and for moral and spiritual food. The rule that marriage should come after the completion of education, in the case of dvijas, carried the implication that those on whom the main duties of bearing the burden of the community fell, viz. the householders, should not remain an uneducated or untrained section. An educated parent implies an educated child. A father, who had undergone the discipline in gurukula, will appreciate the value of the training for his own children. In Manu's system, no citizen, atleast no dvija, can remain uneducated, undisciplined and impervious to his social and spiritual duties. In both a narrower and a broader sense, education, according to the smrtis, implied a complete training. In the larger sense, it was held to comprehend all the preparatory processes for making the body, the mind and the spirit respond to the call for the task of moulding activity to the ultimate end of existence. The body must be sanctified for the residence of the purified self. The samskaras, which punctuate life, are designed to this end. Manu is clear on the point. If this human frame is to be made a suitable mansion for the Soul (Brahmiyam kriyate tanuh, II, 28), the preparation must be made with the holy rites laid down by the Veda, in the due performance of the rites of sacrament (saniskāras) like garbhādhāna, the homas during pregnancy, the jātakarma, caula and mauñjibandhana (initiatory ceremony). They remove the taint received from both the parents at birth; and the self must be made fit by the study of the Veda, by the practice of vows, by komas, by the acquisition of Vedic learning, by offerings to the gods, sages and the manes, by begetting sons, by performing the great sacrifices and by Srauta rites. The body and the mind, "the physique and the psyche," are to be freed from the contamination to which the human birth is subject. The transfiguration of man is to be accomplished by a process, spread throughout life, in which the culture of the mind and the spirit are not more essential than the training of the body. The ascetic habits of studentship, which anticipate the greater rigors of the last two diramas, and the discipline of vows (vrata) spread throughout family life, mark the beginning of the process of the sublimation of body and spirit, which is the purpose of lifelong education of both (Mann, II, 26-28).

What the body is to the spirit that secular studies are to spiritual. When a boy, after initiation, takes his place along with boys of his age, in the house of the teacher (ācārya), he becomes a member of a brotherhood in which social inequality is obliterated. In submission to a common code of conduct (which begins with the collection of fire sticks, samidh, for his daily offering to the fire, and is continued in his collection of alms both for himself and fellow pupils and members of the family of the acarya) and to an abstemious mode of life, from which every trace of luxury and comfort has been removed, the Brahmacarin learns many lessons: the higher value of the spirit over the body, the pettiness of the grosser appetites, the subordination of self to the call for work for others, the interdependence of all members of society, the transitory nature of family bonds as compared with spiritual bonds, the duty owing to the teacher and guide, who, without remuneration, teaches and cherishes him, the power of continence, and the cultivation of good manners as well of good morals, and vision of ultimate and real values. It begins with the gift of the Savitri, to every foot of which mystic virtue is attached (II, 76-79).2 The mother is the author of mere physical birth; the teacher and Savitri

वैदिकैः कर्मिः पुर्विनिषेकादिद्विन्मनाम् ।
कार्यः धरीरसंस्कारः पावनः प्रेल नेइ च ॥
गामेंद्वीमेजांतकमेनोदमीकार्यन्यनीः ।
देशिक गामिकं नेति दिजानामपम्पन्यते ॥
स्वाध्यायेन वर्तदीमेलेक्सिनेज्यया श्रुतः ।
महायदेश्य पदीश्य माक्षायं क्रियते ततुः ॥ (२,२६-२८)

अकारं नाष्पुकारं न मकारं न प्रजापतिः ।
वेदनयानिरदृहद् भूनुंनःस्वरितीति न ॥
विश्व पत त वेदेश्यः पादं पादमदृदृहत् ।
तादित्वृचीऽस्याः साविष्याः परमेष्ठी प्रजापतिः ॥
यतदश्चरमती च जपन् न्यादतिपूर्वकत् ।
संख्योवेदविद्वित्रो वेदपुण्येन युज्यते ॥
सहस्रकृतवस्त्वस्यस्य नदिरेतत् जिकं दिनः ।
महतोऽप्येनसी मासास्वचेवादिविद्युख्यते ॥ (२,७६-७९)

are the the authors of spiritual birth (II, 170).1 The teacher who initiates the student is as much a father as his parent (II, 171),2 But for the initiation he would have remained a Sudra-for all are born as Sūdras-till reborn through initiation into Sāvitrī (II, 172).3 A third birth for the twice-born comes when a dvija is initiated as a sacrificer. It is not mere memorizing of the Veda that be must learn; he must master the secret behind the Veda (rahasya), i.e. the philosophy of existence that one finds in the Upanisads. That is Vedafastra, Mere power in the hands of persons who are ignorant of Reality will only be put to improper and ruinous use. Not so when it is vested in men who have mastered the hidden truth of the Veda. A general or a king may conquer this world, and lose it and his soul; but he who has mastered the truth behind existence and has a sense of true values has secured union with Brahman, even though he still seems to be in our midst. It is be, declares Manu proudly, who merits the command of armies and the kingship of the world, not the men who get it, without the knowledge, balance and penetration (XII, 100).4 The magnification of the first varna which we find in Manusurti and in smrtis generally is not the laudation of a caste as of those in whom this redeeming knowledge, that is used from generation to generation for the education and spiritual uplift of all, is found, It is the teacher of adhyatmavidya, actual or potential, not the class to which one belongs, that secures veneration. The śrotriya (learned Brahmana householder) is the only person competent to give this teaching. If the class is starved out, society perishes. The śrotriya is not an ordinary Brahmana. In a familiar definition, he is one who has many devoted disciples (śrotarah), who follow him, and who unites learning to a blameless life. It is he who cannot be drawn away from his higher duty by being summoned as a witness in court (VIII. 65). It is he who is free from taxes (VII, 133), for he pays society by his unremunerated educational and spiritual services. It is his property that cannot be lost by adverse possession (VIII, 149),5 It is he whom the king must delight to honour and support (VII.

तत्र यद्वसानन्मास्य मीक्रीयन्थनाविद्वितम् ।
 तत्रास्य माता साविक्षा पिता श्वाचार्य उच्यते ॥ (६,१७०)

<sup>2.</sup> बेदमदानादाचार्यं पितरं परिचलते ॥ (२,१७१)

<sup>3</sup> श्रूदेण हि समस्तावधानहेरे न जायत । (२,१७२)

सेनापलं च राज्यं च दण्यनेतृत्वमेव च।
 सर्वकोकाभिपल्यं च वेदशास्त्रभिदर्शति ॥ (१२,१००)

Dr. K. P. Jayaswal construes this as a justification of Pusyamitra's usurpation, राजस्व सोवियस्व च न मोगेन प्रणस्थति । (८,१४९)

134-136), for he is the spiritual stay of the community. Honour and veneration are his due, and are shown vicariously even to those of his blood (III, 184), who carry his tradition of Vedic learning. It is the apotheosis of the teacher. Manu is not unaware of Brāhmaņas, who neglect learning and sink to the Śūdra level (II, 168).

The significant change in the position of the Brahmacarin that upanayana brings about may be seen from a few results. During studentship, the student is cut off from his family. His is a life of dedication for study and service to the teacher. Birth and death impurities in his family do not touch him, for he is one under a vow (pratin).4 Though he may be of opulent parentage, his first act, after his initiation, is to ask for alms, and it significantly begins with his mother, and nearest female relations, who are addressed as Bhavati (Lady), as if they were strangers. But afterwards he should collect alms only from strangers, and never exclusively for himself, His membership in society however asserts itself, as his Vedic studies are interrupted by the death of the king or during an interregnum.<sup>5</sup> Though moderation in food is advised for the student, the amount that he may consume is not restricted (amitam brahmacarinah, Vasistha, 6, 20). The intimate relationship established between the teacher and pupil is indicated by both being regarded in fact as members of the same family. Misconduct with a teacher's wife (qurutalpaga) is an inexpiable sin, equal to the worst form of incest. The teacher and pupil observe death pollution if one of them dies. They can inherit to one another. Speaking ill of a teacher is like doing so of one's parents. The terms of affection established between them is indicated by the teacher repeating towards the pupil, during upanayana virtually the same formula of address, as the bridegroom uses towards the bride: "I place thy heart unto duty to me; may thy mind follow my mind; may you attend on my words single-mindedly; may Brhaspati appoint thee unto me," (In the formula used by the husband Prajapati is substituted for Brhaspati),6 The relationship is permanent. Casting off one's teacher is not merely संस्य राहत्तु विषये श्रोतियः सीदति श्रुवा । तस्यापि तत्श्रुवा राष्ट्रमचिरेणैव सीदति ॥ संस्कृत्यमाणी राशा यं कुरुते धर्ममन्यदम् । तेनासुर्वधंते राष्ट्रो द्रविणं राष्ट्रमेव च ॥ (७,१३४,१३६.)

<sup>2.</sup> आजियान्वयजाक्षेत्र विशेषाः पर्शक्तिषावनाः । (३,१८x)

बोडनबील दिनो बेटमन्यव कुस्ते असम् । स जीवलेव श्द्रत्वमाञ्च गच्छति साल्वयः ॥(२,१६८)

<sup>4.</sup> न राश्वामघदोषोऽस्ति वार्तनां न च सविणान् । (५,९३)

<sup>5.</sup> विषयस्थे च राजि प्रेते (गीतम, १६,३२)

<sup>6.</sup> अधारय दक्षिणां समिषहृदयमाणमते—"सम वते ते हृदयं दशामि मम भित्तमनुचित्तं तेऽस्तु । सम बाजमेकमना जुवस्य बृहस्पतिष्ट्वा नियुनवतु मक्कम्" इति ॥ (पारस्कर, गृ. सू., २,१८)

indecorous and ungrateful; it is an offence. Each lesson begins with a benediction and prayer which both recite, and which symbolizes their union.1

The solemnity of the ceremonial and the way of life in the teacher's house are such as must model the plastic mind of the boy and attune it to the high purposes of life. By making gurukulavāsa obligatory, the distractions of the boy's family life are avoided. To lead the pupil from darkness to light was the function of the teacher, for which both prayed, A pupil could never forget that the obligation was all on one side, in the relations between him and his ācārya, and like the duty to parents it could never be forgotten. Among students, merit alone counted. In learning, its own weight alone counted; neither age nor position. Manu illustrates it by the apologue of young Kavi, who was so learned that he used to address his older relations as 'children' and was upheld by the gods on appeal on the score of his superior erudition (II, 151-153).

The salient feature of brahmacarya was its combining spiritual and moral training with intellectual. Deportment and behaviour received great attention, and the rules of salutation were scrupulously taught and enforced. The strict regimen, combined with constant employment in spiritual and mental activity, tended to keep the adolescent student from succumbing to the urge of the senses. Virginity in the student was not less prized than in the girl, and naming celibacy brahmacarya indicates the high honour in which personal purity was held as equal to 'living in Brahma', (II, 180, 175). Purity in thought and action must accompany mere bodily purity. Rectitude, abstemiousness, cleanliness and modesty were the virtues that the student imbibed under the teacher's roof. He went out of it, master of not only learning but of his self.

It has been stated that the principle of equality is not held up as a source of natural rights in India. It is recognized, however, in the treatment accorded in the family group, and in the gurukula, where no difference is made between brahmacārin and brahmacārin on the score of their family and economic position. To share in poverty is to learn to feel for those who suffer from it. That riches and poverty are accidental, that in long range vision they have no value, apart from their repercussion on character, are the lessons driven by the first aśrama into the receptive minds of the young pupils in their most plastic age. One's duty to one's fellow beings, and to one's own self (ātman), were the things that were taught him. Our advance in educational psychology and the psychology of adolescence has not carried us farther than the rules of the first asrama, which sought to create the foundation for the life that was to make a man ultimately realize his self.

<sup>1.</sup> Tait. Upanisad, II,

को सह नाववतु । सह नी मुनवतु । सह बार्य करवायहै । तेजस्विनावधातमस्तु मा विद्ववावहै ॥

The life of the brahmacarin had two sides of activity: that devoted to the acquisition of knowledge in the highest sense (vidyd). and that in which the mind, soul and body were disciplined by a course of rigorous adherence to vows (vrata) of continence, truthfulness and poverty. The termination of a sacrifice (yāga) is signified formally by a ritual bath (snana). The end of studentship was similarly marked. If the student had satisfied himself that he had acquired both vidyā and the fruit of the fulfilment of his vows (vrata), he was a vidyā-vrata-snātaka. He was qualified to enter upon the next stage of life. He had come back to the bosom of his family and the community from which he had been separated as a boy. A new set of vows and discipline awaited him, as one who had shown his capacity and learning. The duties of a snataka are the duties of the citizen. He who had accomplished the aims of his studentship was a valuable potential member of the community. He was welcome as a guest (atithi) everywhere and was received with the rare honour of the madhuparka (honey - mixture).1 He could take precedence even over the king in a road block, when way was to be made for both (II, 139).2

He is no more under tutelage. His life of disciplined asceticism is over, and he is free to use flowers and unguents. His ethical, civic and social duties descend on him the moment he marks the termination of brahmacarya. Even before he marries, he becomes liable to these duties. The Hindu ethical code is summed up in the duties of the snātaka. Much space is given by Manu and the snītras and smṛtis to their detailed enumeration. The most important of them from a public standpoint, as noted by Manusmṛti are these. He should not beg for his livelihood of any one but his pupils and the king—a suggestion of their obligation to maintain him.<sup>3</sup> He cannot accept help from a non-Kṣatriya king or a ruler who sets at naught the injunctions of the sāstras (IV, 84, 87), nor remain in the territory of राजीवनसातकगुरून् भिवसञ्चरमातुलान् । अहंपेन्मपुपकेण परिसंकत्सरात्पुनः ॥(३,११९)

<sup>2.</sup> तेवां तु समवेतानां मान्यी खातकपायिवी । राजसातकपी क्षेत्र कातको नृपमानमाक्॥ (२,१३९)

राजतो धनमन्त्रिक्छसंसीदन् खातकः क्ष्या ।
 राजान्तेवासिमोवापि न त्यन्यतः इति त्यितिः ॥ (४,१३)

त राषः प्रतिगृक्षियादराजन्यप्रस्तितः । सुनाचकष्वजनता वेशेनैव व जीवताम् ॥
 वो राषः प्रतिगृक्षाति जुन्यस्वोच्छाक्षवर्तिनः । स वर्षोयेण वार्तामाक्षरकानेकविद्यतिम् ॥

a Sūdra king (IV, 61). He should avoid contact with sinners, mlecchas, and purse-proud people. (IV, 79). He should control the organs of sense gratification (IV, 177). Many of the rules imply the married state of the snātaka. The Grhastha is a snātaka, in the sense of having successfully graduated in the first āśrama.

Education does not require upanayana. Women and Sudras obtain it without undergoing the rite, for which they are denied the competence. Both are asked to have the samskaras done for them without the recitation of Vedic mantras. (II, 66).4 Just as a child, though born of dvija parents, is treated as a Sudra till he undergoes initiation, a woman is also treated as regards her adhikara (religious competence) to perform Vedic rites like a Sudra (stri Sudravat). There is, however, a great difference in the position of dvija women and Sudras. In all his Vedic rites and vows the dvija householder is associated in their performance with his wife. When a dvija loses his wife, he loses his Agni (Fire) and cannot do the fire-rites unless he marries again. No gift is valid unless the wife pours water over the hu-band's out-stretched palm. By necessity, therefore a Brāhmana wife must be conversant with Vedic ritual and the meaning of many mantras, though she may not be authorized to repeat them. She was expected to learn their meaning from her husband or her father. Manu, consistently with his rule against women's samskaras being done with Vedic mantras (with the exception of the samskara of marriage or vivaha) considers that she can be purified by one acamana, even if she is a Brahmani, like any Sudra, instead of having to make three acamanas like a Brahmana (V, 139).5 He considers that marriage is the rite of initiation (upanayana) for women, and the contingent duties of living with the teacher and of tending the household Fire. which a Brahmacarin has to do, may be done by her by serving her

न शुद्रराज्ये निनसेकाषार्मिकननाकृते । न पापण्डिननाकान्ते नोपस्टेडन्सजैनृभिः ॥ (४,६१)

न संबतेश यतितेने नाग्यकेने पुन्कसैः । न मूखेनांबलियेश नान्त्येनांन्त्रावसायिभिः ॥ (४,७९)

न पाणियारचपको न नेजचपकोऽनुनुः । न स्यादाक्चपळ्यैन न परहोबकमेपीः ॥ (४,१७७)

अमित्रका तु कावेन कीणामावृद्देश्यतः । संस्काराचे धरीरस्य यथा कालं वयाक्रमम् ॥ (२,६६)

विराचामेदपः पूर्व द्विः प्रमुख्यासती सुखन्।
 See also
 शारीरं शीचामेन्छन् वि कांग्रद्भतु सक्तसकृत् ॥ (५,१३५) सक्तदाचामेद त्रिवेति स्मृतिकीमुखान्। (ग्रदक्मकाकर, ed. Nirnayasagar Press, p. 131) husband and attending to her domestic duties (11, 67),1 The anupanita (uninitiated) boy of dvija parentage is treated as a Súdra.2 Accordingly, as an un-married girl is treated by Manu as an anupantia, she must be treated also as a Sudra for ritual purposes. In older literature we read of women who did Vedic rites. Verses, ascribed to Harita and Yama, are cited in some digests3 to show that once upon a time, the rite of upanayana was prescribed for girls also, but that such girls did the alms collection (bhiksa) within their own homes and had their Vedic instruction from the male elders of the family. The division of women into brahmavadini and sadyovadha, both of whom underwent upanayana, on the ground that if no such initiation ceremony took place for women they will remain Sudrass and dvijas could not be born of Sudra wombs, is not endorsed by Manu. Manu definitely rejects the competence of a woman to perform a sacrifice (IV, 205).5 In the case of men, upanayana precedes, as an essential qualification for the marriage of dvijas; in the case of women, according to the rule of Manu cited above, it will coincide with marriage, and obviate the objection that the offspring of such unions will be born in Sudra wombs. In Manu's scheme women have varna, not āśrama. They were shut out, in Hinduism, from sannyāsa. The pravrajită (female ascetic) with whom intercourse is punishable (VIII, 363) is obviously one belonging to a heretical sect.6

- वैवादिको निभिः काणां संस्कारो वैदिकः स्मृतः । पतिसेवा गुरी वासो मृदार्थोऽभिवरिकिया ॥ (२,६७)
- 2. समुख्यंसारे—अनुपनीताः स्वीशुद्राश्च आद्यमृत्विणा कारयेयुः स्वयं वाडमन्त्रसं क्रमुः। (शृहकमलाकर, p. 54)
- 3, बमोऽपि—पुरा कले कुगारीणां मीआंदन्बनमिध्यते । अध्यापनं च वेदानां साविजीवाचनं तथा ॥ स्वगृष्टे चैय कन्यायाः नेखचयां विधायते ॥ (संस्कारप्रकाश, pp. 402—403). प्राप्तवसः [खीणां] समायतेनम् । (संस्कारप्रकाश, p. 404)
- विविधाः शियः, नवावादिन्यः सयोवध्वश्च । तत्र नवावादिनीनामुपनयनमञ्जान्यनं वेदाध्ययनं स्वगृदे च निशावयेति । सथोवधुनां तु त्रत्थिते विवाहे कर्षचिद्रपनयनमात्रं कृत्वा विवाहः कार्यः ॥

Cited from Harita in desitsans, p. 402

- नाओवियतते यथे मामपानिकृते तथा।
   स्थिया क्षीनेन च हुते मुखीत माग्राणः कचित्॥ (४,२०५)
- किचिदेव तु दाप्यः स्थासंमाणं तामिराणस्त् । प्रैथ्यातु चैकमकात् रहः प्रवन्तितातु च ॥ (८,३६३)

Govindarāja cites a statement of Baudhāyana, not found in the printed text, that 'some authorities permitted even orthodox women to become assetics.' Govindarāja and Kullūka take pravrajitā to refer to Buddhist nuns.

The Householder.

Society is rooted in the family, which is formed of the union of the sexes. Marriage is the foundation of social existence. A celibate is anti-social. If celibacy became universal mankind will cease to exist. This is the reason for the Hindu disapproval of an unmarried state for women, and for the cold attitude even to lifelong celibacy of men. We are familiar, especially after the enormous wastage of man-power in the War, of the dread that creeps on nations in which the birth-rate shows a downward trend, and the encouragement that statesmen offer to motherhood. The attitude of Arthasastra and Dharmasastra was the same. They hold up the married state as an ideal, and extol the state of the householder (grhastha). The first and last asramas are not authorized to cook their own food and have to subsist on alms provided by the householder. Manu permits the hermit also to live on alms that householders provide (VI, 27-28).1 Garhasthya is the source of support for the other three asramas. According to the doctrine of sequence of asramas, and the option to become an ascetic either after the life as a hermit or after that of the grhastha, the second asrama is the stepping stone to the fourth Manu places the life of the householder above those of the others, because he bears the burden of supporting them (bibharti), and states that as all rivers find their rest in the ocean, so all asramas find their abode in that of the householder (VI, 89-90).2 This laudation of family life is ancient. Gautama extols it as the source of the others, and as superior to them, as they are by themselves sterile and unable to perpetuate themselves. (III, 35).3 He asserts that it is the only asrama (III, 36).4 The redemption of the ancestors from detention in

तापसेन्येव विशेषु यात्रिकं मैसमा नेरत्।

गृहमेथिषु नान्येषु दिनेषु ननवासिषु ॥

धामादानीय नाशीयादशी प्रासान् वने नसन्।

प्रासिगृद्ध पुटेनैव पाणिना शक्लेन ना ॥ (६,२७-२८)

सबेंबामांवे चैतेवां नेदरमृतिविधानतः।
 गृहस्य उच्यतं वेष्ठः स बोनेतान् निर्माते हि ॥
 बबा नदीनदाः सर्वे सागरे बान्ति संस्थितिस्।
 तमेवाआनिणः सर्वे गृहस्य बान्ति संस्थितिस्। (६,८९-९०)

<sup>3.</sup> तेषां गृहस्था बोनिस्प्रजनत्वादिवरेषाम् । (गीतम, १,१५)

<sup>4.</sup> वेकाश्रम्यं लानायाः प्रत्यश्चिवानाष्ट्राहंस्थ्यस्य (गीतम, १,१६)

put, and the three natal debts are possible only to those of this asrama. The magnification of the life in the family represents a reaction to an ancient tendency to set up asceticism as the only form of spiritual life. Dharmaśāstra saw in grhasthāśrama a support of the ordained system of the universe as well as of human society. Arthaśāstra saw in it the foundation of social and economic life. Religious and political considerations converged in appreciation of it.

In a popular view, one becomes a grhastha only in order to marry. This is an inversion of the truth. He marries to become a grhastha, as competence for many religious acts springs only from the association of husband and wife. The birth of the child completes marriage, by fulfilling its primary object. The Hindu unit of society is a triad. consisting of father, mother and son. On the completion of brakmacarya and the lustral bath, one is qualified to become a householder, and it is only by taking a wife of his own varna, in accordance with Dharma, that he can set up as a householder. In the pilgrimage through life (lokayātrā), i.e. of worldly activity, the companionship of the wife is necessary not only for happiness and the satisfaction of desire, but for the performance of enjoined rites and for the full discharge of the duties of the new airama. For religious duties marriage is necessary, and a single marriage, resulting in the birth of a son, is sufficient to meet the requirements. This is why smrtis view with disfavour the taking of more than one wife. Apastamba prohibits the taking of a second wife by a Grhastha, who has already a wife who has borne him a son (11, 11, 12-13). From the standpoint of religious obligation, a second marriage is pointless and unnecessary. satisfaction of the sex-urge in a lawful way is but one of the many gains of marriage, as pointed out by Manu (IX, 28): progeny, lifelong service, the highest pleasure, and heaven for himself and his ancestors are the gains2. Both service and sex-pleasure can be obtained by unions outside wedlock, but not the ritual and spiritual gains, to which the trained mind will attach more value. suataka is virtually a householder, and is treated as one in the smrtis in the specification of the duties laid on him, which makes no distinction between the two. For example, Manu prohibits a snātaka from looking at a nude woman, except during sex-intercourse3 and eating

भर्मप्रजासंपन्न दोर नाउन्या कुनात । अन्यतरामाने काया प्रागम्न्याचेयात । (जाप. घ. स., २,११,१२-१३)

अपलं धर्मकायाणि झुझ्या रातिकसमा । दाराधीनस्त्रया स्वगै: पितृणामासमञ्ज ह ॥ (९,२८)

सम्रा निश्चत च कियम् । (४,५३)
 न नम्रा कियमीक्षत मेश्वनादन्यत । (सांक्यायनगृक्षस्त्र, ४,११,१)

in company with his wife (IV, 43).2 The chapter on the religious duties of the householder is headed, for instance, in Laksmidhara's great digest, snātakavratāni, There was usually so little interval between the completion of studentship, the bath (snāna) and marriage that it was difficult to distinguish between snataka and grahastha. There must have been an interval between the return of the student home (samāvartana), after he became a snataka, and his marriage; for time must have been needed for the enquiries that must be made into the fitness of various possible brides, before the wedding can be settled. Nowadays, as brahmacarya, in the sense of living for many years with the teacher, has disappeared as a practice, there is an ample interval between upanayana and marriage, and the performance of the rites of samavartana, godána and snana are done as a matter of routine, without any understanding of their meaning and purpose. The termination of one stage of life and the entry into another were solemn matters, which had to be marked by ceremonies that would impress the entrant with the gravity of his new responsibilities. This was the purpose of the institution of the three ceremonies, and of the ranking of marriage as a samskara-a perfecting and purifying rite. Life is incomplete without matrimony. Marriage is the way to heaven (darah spargasya samkramah), because a wife has to be associated in the libations to ancestors and the sacrifices to the gods. Even in the married state, if the wife is temporarily incapacitated by ceremonial impurity, the rites have to be stopped till she is again pure.

Marriage is theoretically optional for the man, but in practice it was probably not; for women it was obligatory. The insistence of the marriage of girls before they attain puberty was not only to ensure marriage at a time when sex purity can be absolutely assured in a girl, but was due to the pressure of competition among eligible brides. This is the reason for the permission to a girl to choose a partner for herself and marry him, if she is kept unmarried for three years after she becomes nubible.<sup>2</sup> The woman who remains a spinster incurs both sin and loss of caste, according to the legend of Dirghatamas in the Mahābhārata (I, 113, 36-37).<sup>3</sup> To be mothers

नाश्रीयाद्वार्ववा सार्च नैनामीक्षेत चाअतीम् । (४,४३)

वीणि वर्षान्युदाक्षेत कुमायृंत्यस्ती सर्ता ।
 कर्ष तु कालादेतरमाहिन्देत सहश्चं पार्तम् ॥ (९,९०)

अपतीनां तु नारीणामध्यममृति यातकन् ।
 वसरित चेद्रनं सर्व वृथामोगा सवन्तु ताः ॥
 अभीतिः वरिवादाश्य नित्यं तासां सवन्तु वै ॥ (कार्यपर्व, ११३, ३६-३७) were women created, and to be fathers men. Husband and wife should do Vedic rites together (IX, 96)1; and the unmarried have no spiritual capacity (adhikāra) to do them, nor wife or husband apart from each other. The religious obligation to marry lies on both sexes. The strict rules restricting begging to stated occasions and purposes are relaxed in favour of a Brahmana soliciting help for his marriage expenses (XI, I), but it must be only for his first marriage.2 If he has a wife already, and gets help for marrying a second wife, it will be only help given to procure him sensual gratification, and donor and donee lose the merit of the gift (XI, 5),3 This is a discouragement of polygamy, which Manu, like other smrti writers, views with disapproval, though he could not prohibit it altogether, as it was an old but disappearing custom. Its survival is shown by the rules regarding seniority among wives of equal caste, and of the rule that all the wives are mothers if one of them begets a son (IX. 183).4 Marriage is eternal, and neither by sale nor by repudiation can a wife be released from the marriage tie (IX, 46),8 and he who takes such a woman cannot become her husband. The sale of a wife is sinful (XI, 62).6 If a wife bears no son, the marriage is, from the religious standpoint, a failure, and a husband will be at liberty to take another wife, but the first wife cannot be put away, after the second marriage, or lose the right to act in all sacramental functions with her husband. A barren wife can be superseded only after seven years, she whose children have all died in the tenth, and she who bears only daughters in the eleventh year. A wife of character, who is an invalid, cannot be superseded or disgraced without her own consent (IX, 81-82).7 Wives of lower castes are

 प्रजनार्थं सियः स्टाः संतानार्थं च मानवाः । तस्माससायारणा धर्मः क्षती पत्या शहोदितः ॥ (९,९६)

 सांतानिकं यध्यमाणमध्यमं सर्ववेदसम् । सुवंधं पितृमात्रकं स्वाच्यायाध्युपतापिनः ॥ नवेतान् स्वातकान् विषाद्राद्याणान् धर्मामञ्जलन् । (११,१-२)

इतदारोऽपरान् दारान् निश्चित्वा बोऽधिगञ्छति ।
 रतिमात्रं फळं तस्य इञ्यदातुस्तु संततिः ॥ (११,५)

 सर्वांसामेकपत्नीनामेक। चेरपुतिणी मदेख् । सर्वास्तास्तेन पुत्रेण प्राष्ट प्रवत्तीर्मनुः ॥ (९,१८३)

न निष्क्रविसर्गाच्या मतुभावा विमुख्यते ॥ (९,४६)

(इदानीसुपपातकानि) तबागारामदाराणामपत्रस्य च विक्रवः ॥ (११,६९)

वन्ध्याष्टमेऽविवेषान्द्रे दशमे तु मृतप्रजा ।
 एकादशे क्षीजननी समस्त्विपियादिनी ॥
 या रोगिणी स्थाण दिता संपन्ना जैव शीकतः ।
 सानुद्याणाधिवेशन्या नावमान्या च कर्षिचित् ॥ (१,८१-८२)

sacramentally unnecessary, and taking such wives is discouraged by Manu. The custom could not be condemned outright, but disapproval of it is evident in the rules laid down by Manu. Among wives of different castes, the wife of the same caste as the husband is alone competent to officiate in religious rites (IX, 86). If a man gets that wife's duty done by a wife of a lower varna, he is to be despised as a candala (IX, 87).1 Custom apparently allowed a man to marry wives of lower varias, but he could do so only in the order of the varnas and only after he had taken a savarna wife (III, 12-13).3 Manu disapproves of such unions, and cites rules to show that the husband sinks to the level of his lower caste wife by cohabiting with her and having sons by her. He denounces taking a Sudra wife by a dvija (III, 12-17),3 Notwithstanding the condemnation, the practice persists in Kerala, and we have a historic record of the Brāhmana poet Bāṇa's having a brother by a Śūdra wife of his father, who is still described as a frotriya,

Marriage.

So important a step as marriage must be taken only after vigilant scrutiny of the fitness of the parties. They must be of equal lineage (kula), conduct and qualities, and the wife must be younger than the husband. The ancestry, health, and family history must be thoroughly examined. The rules detailed by Manu provide for the mating of only parties who have no physical defects, no trace of heritable disease, and are healthy. Manu recommends the rejection of a bride, even if her family be wealthy, if it is one in which religious rites have been neglected and the Veda is not studied, or in which male children are not born, or in which heritable diseases appear (III, 7).4 As the object of the union is to carry on the line, Manu recommends the rejection of girl who has no brother (as there is a risk of her being made a putrikā or her son being taken

मर्तुः शरीरश्चश्यां धर्मकार्यं च नैत्यकम् । स्वा चव कुर्यारसवेषां नास्वजातिः कर्यचन ॥ यस्तु तस्कारवेन्मीशासकात्यां स्थितयान्वया ।
 यथा माद्याणचाण्डालः प्वृदृष्टस्तयेव सः ॥ (९,८६-८७)

सवर्णां देवातीनां प्रशस्ता दारकमीण । कामतस्तु प्रकृतानामिमाः स्युः कमश्रोऽवराः ॥ (३,१२)

श्रद्धां श्रवनमारोज्य माधाणां वात्यभोगातिम् । जनविरवा सतं तस्यां माधाण्यादेव दायते ॥ (१,१७)

होनाकियं निष्पुरुषं निश्छन्दो रोमशार्शसम् ।
 सन्यामवान्यपरमारिश्चितिकुष्ठिकुलानि च ॥ परिवर्तेयेदित्सनुवक्तः (३,७)

by her father as son), or whose father is not known. The parties must not be sapindas of the mothers and of the same gotra as the fathers (III, 5). The rule of gotra and sapindya is laid down by Manu only for dvijas but Sudras observe the prohibited degree of relationship, according to tribal or family custom.2 The bride must be a virgin, and ordinarily one who had not attained puberty. Insistence on marriage within the varna for religious purposes is endogamous; exogamy comes in the sapinda and sagotra prohibition. Hypergamy is discouraged, and pratiloma relations do not of course constitute marriage. Exclusion by gotra (assumed relationship) applies to dvijas and is absolute; that by relationship applies to all varnas. Manu rules out cross-cousin marriages, (XI, 171-172) and considers them as likely to lead to loss of caste, but they are allowed as a local custom for the people of the South by Baudhayana,8 Under the maxim that an express rule of Manu supersedes those of any other smrti, the prohibition has been upheld by digests like the Kalpataru.4 The bridegroom should also be free from defects, and caution in marrying a girl to one devoid of character is enjoined by Manu (IX, 89).5 He must be of attractive appearance, of good character and of good disposition. Manu does not refer to the question of his not being impotent, though the purpose of marriage will be defeated by allowing such a person to marry a girl, but writers like Nārada insist on tests of potency.6 The rule that a dvija should marry only after his studentship is over, makes a boy-bridegroom impossible. The rule that a dvija bride should not have attained puberty before marriage rules out girls of over twelve years of age. The ideal ages of bridegroom and bride are stated illustratively by Manu (IX, 94); a man of thirty may marry a girl of twelve, or one of twenty-four a girl of eight. The existence of such disparity in age, at the outset, has been defended on the ground that a woman

असपिण्डा च वा मातुरसगोत्रा च वा पितुः ।
 सा प्रशस्ता दिनातीनां दारकर्मणि मैश्वेन ॥ (३,५)

Kamalākara (項其明明明末, p. 109) holds the sapindya prohibition as applicable to Sūdras; but it is ignored in many areas, e.g. the Andhra country.

मैत्वसंबं भगिनी रवसीयां मातुरेव च ।
 मातुश्च आतुस्तनयां गत्वा चान्द्रायणं चरेत् ॥
 पतास्तिसस्त भायांचे नेायबच्छेत्त बुद्धमान् । (११,१७१-१७२)

<sup>4.</sup> Grhasthakanda, 9-22.

न चैवेनां प्रयच्छेत ग्रणशीनाय कविषित्। (१,८६)

<sup>6.</sup> Nāradasmṛti, XII, 8-18.

is at her best when she is about eighteen and a man when he is about thirty, and that a union at those ages is best eugenically. Misfits in marriage arise when wives have already built up ideals of what their future husbands are to be like and find themselves disappointed. In Indian marriages romance comes after marriage and does not precede it. A girl whose affections are mentally pledged (manodattā) is regarded as equal to a married girl, and is recommended for rejection by some smrtis, like any punarbhā. A girl of very tender age can qualify for wifehood for religious purposes, says Lakṣmidhara¹, though not for progeny, and that is sufficient, as a bridegroom younger than twenty-four is permitted (IX, 94).² All that is required is that the wife should be younger.

Some aspects of marriage should be noted. Its primary aims are unworldly and uncarnal. As a bride is required by an accomplished student (smātaka) to enable him to set up as a householder and establish the fires, the gift of a bride is the greatest of all gifts. It must be made without expectation of any return. If conditions are imposed, they must be only for the fulfilment of the sacramental purposes of the union. They are stated in kanyadana. The sale of a bride, i.e. accepting a bride-price is asura, not dharmika. The ceremony of marriage involves two main steps: the gift of the bride and the subsequent ceremony of udvāha. To both are ascribed "unseen fruitsh (adrsta-phala). There is no contract between bride and bridegroom in a marriage. This is why it cannot be annulled by any human power. Manu does not recognize divorce. The bond is not snapped that ties the wife and husband, even if he sells or abandons her (IX, 46). It is open to a wife to show aversion to a demented. impotent, or leprous or outcaste husband (IX, 79),3 Manu, who disallows the remarriage of a widow (V, 162; IX, 65)4 appears to allow the remarriage in proper form of a virgin widow (IX, 176) but she will still be held to be a punarbha.5 Kautilya, who allows divorce, will not permit it after the first four forms of marriage (the

<sup>1.</sup> Grhasthakanda, p. 46.

<sup>2.</sup> व्यष्टवधीऽष्टवर्षां वा (१,९४)

वन्मचं पतितं क्षीनमनीनं पापरीगिणम्।
 न लागोऽस्ति हिष्म्यास । (९,७९)
 न दित्तीयस साध्यानां कविक्रतीपदिश्यते । (५,१६२)

<sup>4.</sup> न निवाद्यविधामुक्तं विधवविदनं पुनः ॥ (४,६५)

सा चंदसत्योतिः स्याहतप्रस्थागतापि ना ।
 यौनभेवेन मधां सा पुनः संस्थारमदृति ॥ (९,१७६)

reputable forms). As these are the common forms, it is tantamount to a rejection. That marriage is a contract between the parties will presuppose capacity to enter into a contract in both parties, which cannot be upheld at the age of the average ancient Indian bride. What a wife is entitled to springs from Dharma, not from stipulation at the time of marriage. The so-called conditions imposed on the bridegroom in the Prājāpatya form of marriage are promises and are not contractual.

Eight forms of marriage are named by Manu (III, 21). He rejects the Rākṣasa and Paiśāca forms for all (III, 25). The quality of the form must be suited to the guna of the suitor, as indicated by his varna. The restriction of the first two to the Brāhmana is due to their involving kanyādāna, for only a Brāhmana may accept a dāna. The belief is that only marriages suitable to a caste result in unseen benefits (III, 36-39). As marriage is a duty, anything that might diminish the chances of a man or a girl discharging it must be discountenanced by Dharma. This is seen in the rules of parivedana, i.e., a younger man or girl marrying before the elder brother or sister is married. (III,171-172). All parties, in such an alliance, including the officiating priest are condemned as liable to fall into hell. But the forbidden act is allowed in the case of a

(की. अ. शा., p. 155)

युक्तं तु पाणिघडणं सर्ववर्णेषु सर्वश्चः । जलपूर्वं तु विश्वाणामन्येषामपि काम्यवा ॥ मनुरपि अद्भिरेव दिनाध्याणां कन्यादानं विश्विष्यते । इतरेषां तु वर्णानामितरेतरकाम्यवा ॥ (३,३५)

- दश पूर्वान् परान् बंदवानात्मानं चैकांविशकम् ।
   आक्षीपुत्रः ग्रक्तकृत्मो चेवेदेनसः पितृन् ॥
   दैवोदात्रः ग्रक्किंव सप्त सप्त परावरान् ।
   आवादात्रः ग्रक्किंकिंत् पट् पट् कावोद्यतः ग्रतः ॥ (३,३७-३८)
- दाराधिद्योत्रसंयोगं कुवते योऽमने स्थिते ।
   परिवेत्ता स विदेयः परिवित्तिस्तु पूर्वनः ॥
   परिवित्तिः परिवेत्ता न यया च परिविषते ।
   सर्वे ते नरवं बान्ति दात्यानकपञ्चमाः ॥ (३,१७१-१७२)

परस्परं देवान्मोक्षः । स्वाविष्ठकारादा पुरुषक्षेत्नोक्षामिच्छेवबागृद्दीतमस्यै दचाद् । पुरुष-विकारादा स्वी वेन्नोक्षमिच्छेकास्यै यथागृद्दीतं दचात् । अमीक्षो धर्मविवादानाम् ॥

<sup>2.</sup> A real dana has unseen benefits. The gift of a bride to non-Brähmanas will not amount to a real dana even though the transfer of the bride takes the form of a kanyadana. Kamalakara (op. cit. p. 109) writes—जदस्य कम्यादानस्य श्रृह विकले: । उद्दर्भ माधे— man, if his elder brother definitely refuses to marry, or has disappeared from view for many years; it will also be allowed if the brother is an eunuch, or has become an ascetic.

Grhastha's Rules of Conduct and Life.

Rules of Dharma are classified as yama, what is forbidden, and niyama, what is imposed or enjoined. Both must be observed by every one, according to his asrama and varna, and their detailed enumeration in smrtis makes an ethical code. Manu makes the paradoxical statement that even in distress one should follow the yamas, though he need not observe the niyamas1 (IV, 204). Rules may be stated in the imperative, or (as in the Christian decalogue) negatively, as prohibition. Buehler has rendered the two as 'paramount' and 'minor' duties. Manu's famous rule (which has often been misunderstood) that one must speak the truth and speak agreeably, must not speak what is true and unpleasant, and in any case never speak what is not true, is an instance of a yama2 (IV, 138). Invasion of the right of property by theft (steya) is an offence against a yama. As only a householder can hold property, the grhastha, who violates the rule, acts suicidally. Niyama is enjoined conduct. To resist natural but wrong or unsocial impulses brings action under niyama. The duties of the householder are not exhausted by the two. The Indian systems of philosophy have dissected the psychological bases of action, traced the filiation of motives and evolved a moral code on psychological bases, which digests and late smrtis reproduce.3 A wise grhastha will by study, meditation and association with the virtuous learn them. It is when he gets the feeling that he has lived a good life, in accordance with Dharma, and is no more needed for the family or society that he can proceed to the next

The Position of Women,

We may close the consideration of the position of the asramas with a review of the position of women in Dharmasastra. A society is rightly judged by the place it gives to women.

Manu notes that the two sexes are unequal in strength, stamina and psychology. Each complements the other. The attraction of the sexes to each other is deep-rooted in nature. Suppression or repression

वमान् सेवेत सततं न नित्यं नियमान् ब्रथः ।
 यमान् पतत्वक्रवाणो नियमान् केवळान् भवान्॥ (४,१३८)

सलं स्वाद भिष न्यात्र स्वास्त्यनप्रियम् ।
 प्रियं च नामृतं न्यादेग धर्मः सनासनः ॥ (४,१३८)

<sup>3.</sup> See e.g. Laksmidhara's Gghasthakanda.

of natural instincts is not; so, canalizing and sublimating them is the better way. Manu does not look down on Kama, and only provides safeguards against improperly yielding to its urge. Unrestrained sex union might lead to a lowering of the human being; untrained, it may make him its slave. It is on this ground that celibacy is prescribed for the male, during studentship, and both the bride and bridegroom are expected to come together in wedlock without ante-marital sex experience. The passages in Manusmyli which seem to condemn the nature of women (II, 213-215 and IX, 17-20) are in reality warnings against the strength of the sex urge,1 and the tendency of both men and women to succumb to it, unless taught restraint. In the family, in treatment as children, a girl and her brothers are equal. In the family, husband and wife are equal partners, and are unable to function independently of each other. The famous discussions on soil and seed are intended to enforce the importance of both man and woman. The husband is reborn in the wife as a son, and hence she is called jaya. Fidelity in marriage is mutual (IX, 101).4 The wife is the goddess of the home. Husband and wife are not two persons but one. If a woman falls it is due to her husband's lack of care and to want.3 Woman is a social trust. If a girl has no guardian, the king becomes her guardian. A defenceless, or destitute woman becomes the king's charge. Woman's not being permitted to study the Vedas is a concession to her different nature. The high standard of conduct expected of a woman is a compliment, as she is made the custodian of social morality. The home is her field. The path to emancipation is made easier and shorter for her. The prohibition for her to do sacrifices or observe vows, independently of the husband, or without his approval, is to prevent her more important duties to her children, husband and home suffering by an unbalanced desire to duplicate the work of her husband. Manu enjoins the entire relegation of the management of the house to the wife. Vatsyayana elaborates the idea and makes it the duty of the wife to maintain domestic accounts and frame the family budget. Woman is not to be kept ignorant or uneducated. Only her education is to be on lines different from those of man. Her school must be the home, her teachers her male relations, and her best teacher her husband. The birth of a son is necessary for the

मात्रा स्वला दृष्टिया वा न विविक्तासनी अवेद ।
 बळवानिन्दियदामी विद्रांसमपि कपंति ॥ (२,२१५)

<sup>2.</sup> अन्योग्यस्थाव्यामेनारो भवेदामरणान्तिकः । (९,१०१)

अवृत्तिकश्चिता हि सी प्रदुष्पेतिस्वतिमावि ॥ (९,७४)

the salvation of the ancestors of a man, but a woman's liberation (mukti) does not depend on the birth of a son.1 Hence a superseded wife need not re-marry. Even in submitting to niyoga a widow's purpose is not to raise a child for herself but to her dead husband, whose salvation is contingent on the birth. The ascetic life of the Hindu widow parallels that of the vanaprastha. The more emotional nature of woman necessitates the prohibition of asceticism to her, as she may lose herself in it. She needs to be shielded from its roughness. In the narrow limits of the family, a woman may find ample scope for her vogue for sacrifice as daughter, sister, wife, mother and widow. The home is her school of service and suffering. A wife must bear with even an unworthy spouse, and try to wean him from his evil courses by her meekness and virtue. Remarriage is not a haven for a wife deserted for eight years; the injunction of Manu to her to wait so long for a husband that may return, is not to be taken as a permission for her to remarry at the end of the period; its purpose is to make her enter then on the ascetic life of the faithful widow, as pointed out by Medhatithi (IX, 76). There is more virtue in resisting the sex-urge than in yielding to it. The lower rank of a Gandharva marriage, and of penalizing a girl for giving herself away to a suitor of her own choice, by denying her jewellery, (IX, 92) are due to this truth.2 The idea of the perpetual tutelage of the Indian woman is a myth. It is contradicted by the large freedom enjoyed by the wife in the management of the household,3 (IX, 11), in the wife's concurrence being necessary for all gifts by the husband, including the giving away of a daughter in marriage (kanyādānam), by their enjoying rights of separate property. and of disposal of it, by the rule that the family estate should not be partitioned between the sons during the life-time of the widowed mother4 (IX, 104, and Kautilya, III, 5), by the recognition of a widowed mother as the natural guardian of her minor children

See the elaborate discussion in Medhātithi's Manubhāsya, ed. Jha, II, pp. 263—265.

अलङ्कारं नाददीत पित्र्यं क्षम्या स्वयंवसः ।
 मातृकं आतृदत्तं वा स्तेना स्याधित तं हरेत् ॥ (९,९२)

अर्थस्य संप्रदे चैनां स्वयं चैन नियोजयेता।
 श्रीचे वर्मेऽअपन्त्यां च पारिणाग्रस्य नेक्षणे॥ (५,११)

कर्ज विद्वास मातुक समेल झातरः समम्।
 मजेरन् वैतृक रिक्ममनीशास्ते हि जीवतोः ॥ (१,१०४)

<sup>5.</sup> जनीयराः पितृमनास्थितमातृकाः पुत्राः। (की. अ. शाः p. 160.)

(Nārada, I, 37)<sup>1</sup> and by historical instances of women who have inherited kingdoms and governed them as queens. The famous declaration of Manu that the wife, the son and the slave (dāṣa) are adhanāḥ (wealth-less, VIII, 416),<sup>2</sup> and his statement that a woman should not be left to herself (na strī svātantaryam arhati, IX, 3)<sup>3</sup> because she has the protection of the father as a girl, of her husband as a wife and of her son as a mother, have been relied upon to support the doctrine. Correctly interpreted neither supports the view. The first is merely a limitation of a woman's freedom to dispose of family property, without the sanction of her husband. The second is only an enunciation of the duty cast on the father, the husband and the son to protect (and maintain) her. A woman never loses her lien on some male for support—and in the last resort on the State.

Dharmasastra raised a chaste wife to the rank of a goddess; it has raised the mother to the rank of divinity (mātṛ-deva), along with the teacher and the father, and placed them immeasurably below her in the right to love and veneration (II, 145).4 She is the best of teachers, and a super-teacher (ati-guru) according to Viṣṇusmṛti (XXXI, 1-2).5 So long as one has a mother he never feels old (Mahābhārata XIII, 268, 30).6 Indian history knows of some royal parricides but of no matricide. Abandoning a mother, even if she be an outcaste, is both a sin (III, 157, XI, 60) and a crime (VIII, 389).7 The first earnings of the student must be tendered to his mother (Apastamba, I, 7, 15).8

- बीवतोरस्वतन्त्रः स्याज्यस्थापि समन्तितः।
   तयोरिप पिता क्षेत्रान् बीजप्राधान्यदर्शनात्॥
   अमावे बीजिनो माता तदमावे तु प्वजः। (नारदरमृति, ed. Jolly, p. 58.)
- भाषां पुत्रश्च दासम त्रव प्याधनाः स्मृताः । (८,४१६)
- पिता रक्षति कीमारे मता रक्षति बीवने ।
   रक्षन्ति स्वविरे पुत्रा न स्वी स्वातन्त्र्यमाईति ॥ (९,३)
- ब्रपाध्यायान् दशानार्यं जानार्याणां श्रतं पिता । सङ्खं त पितृन् माता गौरनेणातिरिन्यते ॥ (२,१४५)
- 5. त्रयः पुरुषस्यातिगुरवो सवन्ति । पिता माता नाचार्यसः ॥ (विष्णुस्मृति, ३१,१-२)
- 6. अनुशासनपर्व, २६८,३०.
- न माता न पिता न की न पुत्रस्थागमहैति । लजन्नपतितानेतान् राज्ञा दण्ड्याः अतानि पट्॥ (८,३८९)

Kautilya forbids the abandonment of the mother even if she is an outcaste.

तस्यां शुक्रमा नित्या पतितायामपि । (भाष प. स., १,२८,९)

समावृत्ती मात्रे दवात्। (आप. प. च., १,७,१५)

In Manusmeti woman attains her apotheosis, as wife, mother and dependent relation, serving and radiating her love. The gods rejoice when women are honoured, and rites in their honour yield no rewards in homes in which women are not cherished and revered. The tears of dependent women blight a family; their grateful smiles make it blossom into fortune; their curse, when treated with contumely, wither the home. Honour and cherish your women, therefore, for your own good, on holidays and in festivals, with gifts of dainty fare, raiment and jewels! Joy dwells in the home in which there is conjugal love. Let a woman cherish her beauty that she may retain her husband's love and become fruitful. With her radiance the house will be alit, and without it, be dark and dismal. It is in such terms that Manu, supposed to be the derider of woman, makes almost a religion of her adoration. (III, 56-62).

Indian society was kept from disintegration by the sublime conception of the scheme of varna and āśrama, which gave its women and men a clear vision of the spiritual winning post, and showed them how to order their lives and mould their actions in order that they may, in the fulness of time, or even in this life itself, triumphantly reach it.

वज नार्वस्यु प्रवन्ते रमन्ते तत्र देवताः ।
 वजितास्यु न प्रवन्ते सर्वास्तवाफलाः कियाः ॥
 शोवन्ति वामयो यत्र विनदयसाद्यु तरकृत्यम् ।
 न स्रोवन्ति तु यत्रिता वर्षते तास्र सर्वदा ॥
 नामयो यानि नेदानि शपन्त्वप्रतिप्रविताः ।
 तानि कृत्याद्यानीव विनदयन्ति समन्तवः ॥
 तस्मादेताः सदा पृथ्या मृष्याण्डादनास्तनैः ।
 मृतिकामैनरैनित्यं संस्कारपृत्तवेषु च ॥
 सपुद्रो मार्यया मता अत्रो मार्या तवेव च ।
 विस्मन्नेव कुळे नित्यं कत्याणं तत्र वे भूवम् ।
 वदि वि स्त्री न रोचेत पुमासं न प्रमोदवेद ।
 वन्नमोदास्तुनः पुसः प्रवनं न प्रवतेते ॥
 स्या त्रारोवमानायां सर्वमिव न रोचेते ॥ (३,५६-६२)

LECTURE VI

THE POLITICAL SYSTEM

We are today under the obsession of politics. The study of the political institutions of the past still attracts the care and attention of modern students that their socio-religious background fails to receive. This attitude is due, as much to the pre-occupations of the modern world with political controversies, as to an imperfect perception of the inter-connection between the two. When the aims of the catastrophic war into which the world was flung and from which we have yet hardly emerged had to be defined it was said to be fought to make the world safe for democracy. The signification of a somewhat vague political ideal as that for which the nations were dragged into a seething cauldron of destruction was received with unction. Had it been said that the war was being fought for the higher purposes of humanity, for the vindication of mere morality or spirituality inherent in man, the declaration would not have commanded a fraction of the appreciation that the signification of a "democratic" purpose behind it evoked. illusion of idola fori is difficult to overcome. A century of adoration at the shrine of what passed as democracy, still draws worshippers to where it is held to dwell. Like orthodoxy, democracy is what appeals to each man in the form of government that seems best to suit his needs and interests. Habit makes one impervious to facts. Nations which seek to perpetuate their domination over other nations, and which are governed by compact sections, still claim to be democratic. One is reminded of Sir Lancelot's conflicting ideals and practice, 1

Ancient India had no use for political labels. It is curious that in a land in which the tendency for classification and systematization seems inborn, political ideals and institutions remained unclassified. It looked to results, not to forms. It would matter little if the government was carried on by one, a few or the many, if the results were happy. That which is best administered is best. The test was Dharma applied to means, ends and results. The range of applicability was universal. It is the demonstration of the domination of a moral principle in the universe that vindicates the position of the Supreme. He merges in Dharma, Judged by ultimate values that alone can be expedient which is just. Dharmasastra takes a cosmic view of existence and of every branch of activity, and judges them by this standard.

His honour rooted and dishonour stood, And faith unfaithful kept him falsely true.

Rajadharma is commonly equated with Political Science, Its content is assumed to be the art of government. It is forgotten that, literally and historically it means not the art of government, but the indications of the duties of a particular functionary, viz, the crowned king. Vijnanesvara makes this clear in introducing the brief section on rajadharma in Vajnavalkyasmrti (pp. 309-368). He explains that Yajñayalkya proceeds to indicate the special duties of a householder, who had acquired a special gung by being crowned as a king, after the specification of the duties of householders of all varnas generally.1 The duties of administration devolve on one who is put at the head of a state. In Indian conception, he who has to discharge the duties must obviously belong to the second aśrama, as the other three are outside worldly life. While the ideal is that the head of the state should be a Ksatriya, the position might go to men of other varnas; but even so the duties of the office (quna-dharma) will still devolve on him, That there may be no misunderstanding, Yājñavalkya (I, 311) uses the neutral designation narādhipa (king) instead of raja, which, like ksatriya, is frequently used in smrtis in the sense of 'king',2

A code of instruction for a ruler on his duties may be of both a narrow and a comprehensive character. The specific duties, as an administrator when enumerated and explained, constitute the smaller code. One of the king's duties, and the most important, is to see that every one does his or her duty, whatever it might be. Protection is complete only when every one is made to keep within his limits, and perform his duties. Whoever neglects a duty or does what he is enjoined not to do has to be pulled up by the king, both in the interests of the community, whose placid life has been disturbed by his guilty action, and in the lasting interests of the offender himself. A knowledge of what every one is expected to do, in whatever position he or she may find himself or herself, is an antecedent condition of correct regulation of every one's conduct. The king has a personal responsibility for the dharma and the a-dharma of every subject, and it is signified by the statement that he obtains a sixth. part of the spiritual merit of his good subjects, and a sixth part of the demerit (apunya) of unpunished delinquent subjects.1 It is not to be taken as a picturesque statement but was meant and taken literally in the ages in which an unseen result was held to attach itself to every action, good or bad. It is his duty to determine what is enjoined and what is not, and to enforce compliance to the rules of Dharma.2 The regulative and punitive duties of the king include not only civil penalties but appropriate penances and modes of purification from the taint of the offence. In short, the range of his responsibilities imposes on a ruler a liability to a sort of omniscience This extends not only to the whole field of enjoined duties (Dharma) but also to the psychological and philosophic background of the mind of the subjects. This is why among the subjects that are indicated for study by princes, who will later in life be called on to rule, Kautilya includes philosophy (anviksiki) in the prince's curriculum of studies, and further explaining the content of the philosophical course brings under it Lokayata, school of Materialism3, whose followers the king is enjoined by Manu to keep under check or banish (IX, 225).4 The comprehensive character of Manusmrti, which goes into every one's duties, makes it a work of rajadharma in the wider sense of the term. But, as a king may not be in a position to understand every provision of the comprehensive code of conduct, he is required to get expert advice,-from his ministers in matters of administration, from judges in matters of adjudication, and from the purchita in matters relating to penances and vows. This is the reason why the study of Manusmyti is prescribed for the Brahmanas particularly, and to all twice-born persons generally (XII, 126). On questions of interpretation of doubtful points, he is to be guided by the opinion of a parisad of learned men, whose constitution is detailed in XII, 108-115.

साधारणान् गृहस्थनमानुक्लेदानी राज्यानिवेकादिगुणयुक्तस्य गृहस्थस्य विशेषधर्ममाह
 भहोत्सादः स्मृद्धलक्षं दलादिना । (मिताक्षरा, १,३०५)

<sup>2.</sup> Mitakpara equates (I, 308) नरनेंद्र with 'crowned Ksatriya (अनिषिकाश्राप्ति), and 'नराषियो' (I, 511) with राज्यामिषिक:

Bases of Manu's Polity.

The scheme of polity that Manusmrti outlines is accordingly rooted in the general scheme of Hindu life, and in the postulates of Hindu social and economic organization. The former is com-

<sup>1.</sup> सर्वतो धर्मषद्भागो राखे भवति रक्षतः । अधर्मादापि षद्भागो मनव्यस्य धरक्षतः ॥(८,३०४)

तस्माद्धमं यामहेषु संव्यवस्थासराधिप: । अतिहं चाप्यतिहेषु तं धर्म न विचालयेत् ॥ (७,१३)

सांख्यं योगो लेकायतं चेलान्यीक्षिको । (р. 6.)
 क्वोपनयनकार्यामान्योक्षिको च क्रिकेन्यः । (р. 10.)

<sup>4.</sup> पाषण्डस्थांक मानवान्।....क्षिम निर्वासपेत्पुरात्। (५,२२५)

prehended under varnāśrama-dharma in the wider sense of including the dharma of varna and asrama, of both in their inter-relations, of the dharma of 'position' or guna, of the dharma of 'special occasion' (naimittika) and of the dharma 'common to all' (sadharana or nitya). The last presupposes the universal acceptance of certain institutions. These are property, the idea of contract and obligation, the existence of the capitalistic system in a planned society and of personal freedom generally. While these ideas may be regarded as springing from the established political order, -which is signified by the legend of no such regulations being needed in the Golden Age of the dim past,-they are pre-supposed by the system of government indicated and described by Manu. As the assumption of the smrti is that all that is contained in it was revealed, like Koranic laws, it has a background of divine sanction for the institutions. He who advocates anarchy, as well as he who urges the abolition of private property, capital and the repudiation of contracts, will be acting not only in defiance of state laws, but of divine injunctions behind these institutions. In the face of these hypotheses, political and economic progress can be visualized only so far as they are possible within the limits of these institutions. A way-out is suggested, however, by certain commentators. The indication of a visible purpose or benefit is contrary to the nature of a Vedic vidhi. The rules regarding economic and political organization and institutions in Manusmrti and works like it are rules of Artha, not Dharma. The sections on these topics are to be treated as Arthasastra sections. which can be modulated by rational action. It is true Arthasastra itself is within the canon, though by an explicit rule its rules must give way if they conflict with those of Dharmaśāśtra.1 Absolute validity attaches only to those cases in which there is the sanction of both reason and injunction behind them.

Different Scales of Values.

The adjustment of dharms to changing needs was to be brought about only by research and interpretation. Rules traced back to divine omniscience cannot be supposed to be defective or self-contradictory. If any defects or contradictions are found, they must be deemed superficial and capable of resolution and valid explanation-

अर्थशासायु वटवब्रमंशास्त्रमिति स्थितिः॥ (बाह्यव्यम्, २,२१)
 संस्थया प्रमेशासिण शास्त्रं वा व्यावदारिकम्।
 परिमक्षये विरुपेत प्रमेणार्थं विनिव्ययेत्॥ (अर्थशास्त्र, p. 150.)

The parisad, custom (caritra), the practice of the elect (Sistacara, ācāraśca sādhānām) can be called in for the determination of the problem of reconciliation, internal and external, of consistency and of suitability to all times and needs. From our outlook today the parts of Dharmasastra of most interest are those devoted to polity. law and administration. To an ancient Hindu king the sections that would most appeal would be those dealing with acara and prayaścitta, which the king had also to administer. We cannot attribute to him our mood, but must look at it from his standpoint. In the atmosphere of the palace and the court a knowledge of rajaniti will be gained by him automatically. It need not be specially taught or learned. It will be in the atmosphere. Nor will he require instruction on court etiquette. It is in regard to civil law and penance laws that he will feel the need for learning, training and guidance. This attitude will explain the character of the works on Dharma that princes might study. They are relatively full on forensic law, on penance, on acara of varna and asrama, and even on transcendental matters, while their treatment of polity proper is scrappy and superficial. The difference will be clearly noticed if the Kautiliya and Manusmyti are compared, or better still if the Nitisara of Kāmandaka is compared with Manu's work, because Kāmandaka deliberately adopts the smrti form and mode of exposition. On polity, administration and law proper Kautilya is very full; Kamandaka omits not only all penance and acara law, but even vyavahāra. Manu stands midway, stressing all, and dealing with them pretty fully, but with a little less fulness polity proper.1 The feature is reflected in later smrtis and in nibandhas composed to order like Hemādri's great digest. Laksmīdhara follows Manu's proportions, and even in his nibandha the Rajadharma section is less full than some of the other sections while Vyavahārakānda is the fullest.

Theories of the Origin of the State.

Among legends of the origin of the State or Government, given in the great Epic are two, which ascribe a divine origin to the State, and base it on an original contract. Both legends are implicit in Manusmyti, which however does not describe them. The Supreme Being (Prabhu), finding that for want of a government (arājākā) every one in the world was disturbed by fear, created the King for the protection of all in the world. (VII, 3).1 The legend is given by Kautilya (p. 22).2 The people finding that for want of a common ruler they were being ruined by mutual quarrels (in which they devoured one another as fish devour fish) made Manu Vaivasvata their king, and agreed to render to him (and his successors in the office) a sixth of their harvested grain, a tenth of their trade gains, etc. It is in accordance with this arrangement that kings have become responsible for the welfare of their subjects. In both legends a pre-political stage is envisaged, which is one of anarchy in which every one devours every other. The idea implies the existence of rights' which were invaded, and of freedom to make a contract. The installation of Manu Vaivasvata was a secular arrangement. The legend in Manusmrti relates to the creation of political organization, i.e. kingship. The legend in Kautiliya refers to the installation of the first king, by common agreement, later rulers apparently accepting the arrangement from veneration for precedent, or because Manu is the progenitor of the human race. Sukra has a third theory, which fits in with the general Hindu belief in karma. The king becomes master over movable and immovable chattels, becomes capable of giving protection and receiving his sixth (daksah sadbhāgagrahane, I, 72), by virtue of the austerities performed by him in a previous birth even as Indra became king of the gods by austerities.3 This is mere explanation of worldly position by past karma, as one's caste in this life is similarly explained. Manu follows up his account of the creation of the king, by stating that he was created from eternal particles of the eight lokapalas (VII, 4).4 The divinity inherent in a king springs from this synthesis. The king is not an incarnation of God, but of elements of the chief gods. They

In Yājāavalkya-smrti only 60 slokas are devoted to polity proper, while dcdra, vyavahāra and prāyaścitta have 308, 307 and 334 ślokas respectively.

अराजके वि लोकेऽरिमन् सर्वतो विद्रते भयादः ।
रक्षावेमस्य सर्वस्य राजानसस्यक्षत्रः ॥ (७,३)

मास्यन्यावामिम्ताः प्रजा मन् वैवस्वतं राजानं चिक्तरे । पान्यपङ्मागं, पृण्यदश्यागं, दिएवं चास्य माग्येयं कल्यवामासः । तेन मृता राजानः प्रजानां योगक्षेमवद्यः तेथां किल्विय-माण्यकता दरन्ति । वो(रालवे)?)गक्षेमवदाश्य प्रजानाम् । तस्मादुन्श्चयङ्मागमार्ण्यका अपि निदयन्ति ॥ (कर्षश्राक्त, pp. 22-23)

तपसा चेव नाइचे शास्ता पाता च रअकः ।
नृपः स्वप्राक्तनाइचे तपसा च महीसिमाम् ॥
नहमस्वावराणां च हीशः स्वतपसा मनेद् ॥
दक्षः षड्मानप्रहणे यथेन्द्रो नृपतिस्तया (शुक्रनाति, १,२०,७१)

इन्द्रानिङ्यमाकांणामप्रेक बरुपस्य च ।
 चन्द्रविद्यश्रवीक्षेत्र माना निद्यं शासताः ॥ (७,४)

account for his power and splendour and for his surpassing all beings in lustre. "Even an infant king should not be treated with slight, from the idea that he is only a mortal being; he is really a great divinity in human form." (VII, 8). This is glorification not of a king but of kingship. For, through lack of virtues many kings like Vena perished (VII, 41). The rule of this Vena was evil. It resulted in varnasamkara. It was in his reign that the practice of myoga, which Manu condemns as an animal practice, was much in wogue (IX, 66-67)3, as the intellect of the king itself was destroyed by lust. Manu does not follow up the legend of destruction of Vena for his oppression, and the creation and installation of his son Pṛthu, after whom the earth is named Pṛthui, as 'king of men'. Pṛthu took an oath (pratifūā) to subordinate his inclinations to morality, and to observe the eternal Dharma. The action of Pṛthu forms a second Social Contract.

Implications of the Theories.

The underlying implication of the different legends is that political union, under a common ruler is natural and necessary, and may be considered as having divine sanction behind it. It is the only answer to human depravity, which leads man to eat man, unless restrained by a common master. While the divinity in the ruler so created makes for his lustre and power, he is bound to respect the original convention of righteous rule. Manu gives only the divine creation legend. The extremes of irresponsibility to which it may

बालोऽपि नावमन्तन्थो मनुष्य इति सूमिपः ।
 महती देवता क्षेत्रा नररूपेण विष्ठति ॥ (७,८)

बेनो विनहोऽविनयाण्यदुर्यक्षेत्र पार्थिवः । सुदाः पैजवनश्रेव सुमुखो निर्मिरेव च ॥ (७,४१)

अयं दिवेदि विदाद्वः पशुपमो विगर्दितः ।

मनुष्याणामपि प्रेष्को वेने राज्यं प्रशासति ॥

स महौमाखिलां मुक्तन् राजपिप्रवरः पुरा ।

वर्णानां संकरं अते कामोपदतचेतनः ॥ (९,६६-६७)

<sup>4.</sup> शान्तिपर्व, ५८,१०२-१२२- for the legend.

<sup>5.</sup> प्रतिश्रां चाधिरोहस्य मनसा कर्मणा गिरा । याक्रविध्यान्यहं मीमं ब्रह्म इत्वेद चासकृद् ॥ यश्चात्र धर्म इत्युक्ती दण्डनीतिस्थपात्रयः । तमश्चद्वः करिष्यामि स्ववद्यो न कदान्यन ॥ अदण्डामा मे दिवाशिति प्रतिवानीष्य चापि मो । लोकं च संकरात्कृत्तमं श्रातास्मीति परंतप ॥ प्रवमस्तिवति बैत्यस्तु तैसको ब्रह्मवादिमिः । (शान्तिपर्व ५८,११५-११९)

lead an infatuated monarch is countered by allusion to the evil king Vena, whose story must have been familiar to all. But over and above it, another legend that Manu gives makes the king himself subordinate to a higher power, viz. Danda or the incarnation of the Spirit of Punishment. It is Danda who is king; he is the regulator of the entire universe,1 (VII, 17-1 ). A guiltless man is hard to find in the world; through fear of Danda the world observes Dharma.2 The elaboration of this legend or theory of the penal nower behind the State (or king) is of constitutional interest. It provides not only the Austinian sanction behind law, but also a restriction on the unlimited exercise of the prerogative powers of the king! Punishment is said to strike down the king who swerves from Dharma,3 (VII,28) for Danda is Dharma,4 The meaning of the identification is that the king is under the law, not above it. Dharma alone rules. The power to make new laws or to alter old ones is not vested in the king or any human power. A king, like a judge, merely declares Dharma; he does not make it. A strong executive is needed for social order; an irresponsible executive is a danger. The support of the one and the condemnation of the other are in Indian theory made to rest on Divine sanction.

It is noteworthy that Manusmiti makes no mention of alternative theories of the origin of monarchy; from the pressure of war, as stated by the Aitareya Brāhmaņa,5 or from an election sanctified by divine blessing as implied by the Satapatha Brāhmaṇa, or from deification of a priest during a sacrifice and its perpetuation, as in the case of the rex sacrorum in ancient Rome.6 As a practical-minded thinker Manu is satisfied with supporting the necessity for a common executive authority and with basing it on morality and the common good.

- स राना पुरुषो दण्डः स नेता शासिता च सः । चतुर्णामाश्रमाणां च घमेरव प्रविनुः स्पृतः ॥ दण्डः शास्ति प्रवाः सबी दण्ड यथामिरक्षति । दण्डः स्रोप्त नागति ॥ (७,१७-१८)
- समों दण्यांजता डोको दुरुमें। हि द्युचिनेरः । दण्डस्य हि जनासम्बं जनजोगाय कल्पते ॥ (७,२२)
- 3. अमोदिसक्षितं हन्ति सुप्रेषेव सवास्थवम् ॥ (७,२८)
- 4. वण्डे धर्म विद्वेषाः (७,१८)
- यत्तरेयमा,११,४—देवासुरा वा कांकेषु समयतन्त ... ,..तांस्तकोऽसुरा अवयम् . . . ...
   देवा अमृदश्चराजतया वै नो जवान्त, राजान करयामदा वित तथिति ॥

<sup>6.</sup> K. P. Jayaswal-Hindu Polity (1924). Ch. 23 and 24.

Glorification of the King.

The value of unitary control is the obvious reason for the laudation of the person and position of the king. It was clearly not meant to be taken literally by king or subject. The king is Visnu1 (Candesvara quotes a retort, almost in Gandhian language, the "subject is Visnu too").2 He is made up of the essences of the divine guardians of the universe (lokapālas).3 Assaulting a king, reviling him or treason against him are capital crimes. Banishment follows the betrayal of state secrets. To seduce the queen is treason.4 The protection given to the ministers and others are the natural needs to protect high functionaries. The property of a king is proof against adverse possession, however long it may be (VIII, 149). (It means state property cannot be taken over and held against the State on the plea of prescription). Ownerless things go to him. Every one, every article, is pledged to support him by definite contributions. His jurisdiction is unrestricted. Brāhmana immunities do not mean that they cannot be tried in the king's courts. The Vedic statements " Soma is the king of the Brahmanas"5 and that the king is lord of all except the Brahmana6, are merely glorificatory statements; for, the Brahmana's offences and offences against him have to be adjudicated by the king or by his judges.7 The privileged position of the chief executive is seen in the rule that a king does not contract pollution by birth or death8 (V, 63); he is like the brahmacarin and the sacrificer (diksita). The king's impurity is extended to all, and Vedic study is interrupted so long as it lasts

<sup>1.</sup> नाडबिश्युः पृथिवीपतिः

 &#x27;अबारन्य न मे राज्यं राजानं रहातु प्रजा: ।'
 वित सर्व प्रजा विष्णुं साक्षिणं आवयेन्सदुः ॥ (राजनीतिरताबार, 1936, p. 74).

<sup>3.</sup> मनु, ७,४-७

<sup>4.</sup> कौटिकीय, p. 234—सर्वत्र राजमार्यांगमने कृम्मीपातः । Ibid., p. 227. जन्तः पुरत्रवर्षकं . . . मातवेद । Vipnusmrti construes the seduction of the queen as incest: XXXVI, 4.

सोमोरमार्क माझणानां राजा (शतपवनाग्राण, ५,४,२,३)
 सस्माद् नाझणोऽनावः सोमराजा हि मवति । (Ibid., ९,४,३,१६)

राजा सर्वस्थेडे बाताणवर्णम् । (गीतमधर्मे, १२,१.)

<sup>7.</sup> न च 'राजा सर्वस्येष्टे माद्यानवर्जम्' इति गीतमवचनात्र माद्याणी दण्यस इति मन्तस्यम्। तस्य प्रशंसार्थस्यात्॥ (मिताहरा, २,४)

न राशामवदोबोऽस्ति अतिनां न च सविणाम् ॥ (५,९३)

(IV, 10)1 and his death interrupts Vedic study.2 A moratorium follows automatically on the occurrence of a vacancy to the throne (Vasistha). Rights cannot be acquired by possession during an interregnum, according to Kautilya (III, 16),3 Sukra puts picturesquely the idea that a throne can never be vacant; as Indrani is never a widow, so a kingdom can never be without a ruler.4 When a country is conquered, and its king is slain, the conqueror is enjoined to instal at once a member of the late reigning family as king (VII-202) so that there may be no vacancy to the throne (II, 49).5 A king is even more necessary in the demoralized conditions of defeat than in normal conditions. The advice to appoint a yuvarāja, which is acted upon in the Ramayana and the Mahabharata, is not dealt with by Manu, nor is there anything in his work about the rule of succession. Obviously a kingdom cannot be divided like personal property; but Manu would allow the eldest son to take the entire inheritance, (IX, 105) and such a son would a fortiori be the heir-apparent in a kingdom. Manu regards the eldest son alone as the son who frees the ancestors from hell, and the other sons as only sons of lust (kāmajāh).7 The statement has been interpreted as indicating a desire for family limitation, but this is doubtful, as the trend of smrti thought is to welcome additions to a family. Manu's rule that in private property there should be no discrimination between son and son cannot furnish an indication,8 Bringing under indivisible

- चार्ट न कीर्तवेद्रवा राशो राहोश्च सतके॥ (४,११०)
- विषयस्थे च राशि प्रेते (गीतमधर्म, १६,३२)
   आचार्वपत्रीप्रवोषाच्यायमातुल्यसुर्यस्युर्वसहाच्यायिशिषेष्वतीतेष्वेकरावेण ।
   स्वदेशराजनि च ॥ (विष्णुरमृति, २२,४४-४५)
- 3. ज्ञातमः जीवियाः पाषण्या या राज्ञामसक्तिषी परवास्तुपु विवसन्तः न मीनेन हरेतुः ॥ (कीटिकायः p. 191)
- 4. न त्वेब नृपश्चीनाः स्युः दुर्गुणा शापि तु प्रजाः । यथा न विथवेन्द्राणी सर्वेदा तु तथा प्रजाः ॥ (शुक्रनीति, १,१५)
- 5. स्थापयेत्तल सर्देश्यं कुवांच समयक्रियाम् । (७,२०२)
- क्वेष्ठ एव तु गृह्माचापिक्यं धनमशेषतः ।
   श्रेवास्तमुवनोवेश्वयंधेव पितरं तथा ॥ (९,१०५)
- व्येष्ठेम जातमात्रेण पुत्री भवति मानवः । पितृणामनृणश्चैन स तरमात्सनंत्रदंति ॥ वस्मिन्नणं संनयति वेन जानन्त्यमञ्जेते । स पत्र वर्मजः पुत्रः कामजानितरात् विद्रः ॥ (९,१०६-१०७)
- 8, न पुत्रमागं विषमे पिता दयात्कर्यचन । (९,२१६) effects things that would lose value by division (IX, 219) might be applied by analogy to the indivisibility of a royal inheritance,

Personal Responsibility of the King,

Responsibility goes with power. The language of hyperbole, which is used for exalting the office and person of the king, must not be construed literally. Even in such descriptions as Manu's the repetition of vrata (self-imposed vow) in regard to the functions in the discharge of which the king is likened to god after god (Manu IX, 303-311), emphasizes his dedication for his duties. He should shower benefits on the kingdom. He should draw his taxes from his subjects slowly as the sun draws water by evaporation; there should be no abrupt collections, like the modern 'capital levy.' He should be kept fully abreast of all that happens, through his secret service. He must be stern and impartial in his judgments. He should punish only the wicked. He must cultivate popularity. Like Mother Earth he must bear the weight of the support of the entire people. Nārada's glorification of the king is still more exaggerated.1 But, they are construed in their proper spirit as only indicating the finality of judicial pronouncements made by the king or in his name by a judge, and of arrangements, such as division of property, that he decrees. The injunction that a king, even if devoid of good qualities, should be honoured even as a bad husband has to be dutifully obeyed by a wife, is only a call for respect to the office of head of the State, and not a counsel of abject submission to the personal whims of a ruler. Literal versions of the praise have led to the impression that Narada is the advocate of royal absolutism. The context in which these statements occur is restricted to litigation. Similarly, it is not a royal power of making laws that Narada proclaims but the embodying of recognized customary usages in royal proclamations, so that they may obtain due publicity and there may be fixity in affairs (sthithyartham). Every act of an executive authority, if challenged, can only lead to confusion. There should be some finality in disposals. This is all that is meant in this misconstrued passage. In the milieu in which an ancient Indian king functioned, his real powers can be deduced only from a review of the entire set-up of the kingdom.

Regal responsibility is enforced by every judicial decision that was pronounced being in the king's name and having to be implemented by his authority, while he had no power to set aside a decision by fiat. By good government, and by diligent upholding of Dharma, a king of the Kaliyuga may make it like the Golden Age. By unrighteous action he can lower the Golden Age to the level of the Age of Iron. A careless, idle or vicious ruler will not only incur popular odium but bring many misfortunes on himself and on his subjects. It is in this sense that he is called 'the maker of his age.1 It does not mean that he can alter the conditions of life or usage or Dharma. Manu hints it in alluding to the degradation of morals in the time of the unrighteous Vena. Unhappiness in a kingdom is traced to error in government, for which the king is responsible. For every mistake in the kingdom, it is the king who is threatened with penalties, 'seen' and 'unseen.' The advisory position of his ministers made the king the sole repository of responsibility. In Indian belief not only is it incorrect to say (as we do in modern states, in which the king is a mere figurehead,) that 'the king can do no wrong,' but, it is held that he can do great wrong, and be held responsible for all his acts of commission and omission.

<sup>1.</sup> See the whole of chapter XVIII.

The idea of regal responsibility is emphasized in different ways. He is asked to set an example, to his subjects. A ruler, who is constitutionally uncontrolled, can make his personal failings national calamities. This is the reason for the initial warning, in detailing the duties of the Kşatriya varna, that he should conquer his inclinations to yield to the urge of his senses. The personal failings of the ruler are appropriately described as the sorrows (vyasana) of his subjects. In a constitutional monarchy, where the king is a gilded non-entity, the weakness of a king does not matter to the kingdom. It is not so in personal rule. The elaboration by Manua of the ten royal vices that spring from pleasure (Kama) and the eight that spring from wrath (krodha) show the importance of keeping the king well out of mischief. Death is preferable to vice. This is the reason for the meticulous regulation of the king's time, so that he is hardly ever left to himself or left unoccupied, for the prescription of a fairly comprehensive and purposive curriculum of studies to the future king, and perhaps also for the omission to guarantee the succession to the eldest or any son. That kings were at liberty to select, on public grounds, the son who should succeed them, apart from mere seniority in birth, is evidenced in the dynastic history of India. The princes had to learn from 'experts' the Veda,3

<sup>1. &#</sup>x27;राजा काळस्य कारणम्'; 'बुगप्रवर्तको राजा'

<sup>2.</sup> VII. 45-53.

वैविधम्यसमी विश्वां दण्डनीति च शासतीम् ।
 आन्वीक्षिकी चारमविद्यां वार्तोरमांश्व कोकतः ॥ (७,४३)

the art of government, philosophy and the knowledge of the Supreme Soul (adhyātmavidyā), and from practical men the trades and professions: vārtārambhāmsca lokatāḥ (VII, 43). The prescribed curriculum is identical with that advised by Kautilya, and is therefore standardized, or atleast customary. More important than the subjects learned is the association as learner with teachers of proved spirituality and character. The future king should represent the flower of the training that could be given to one of his age.

How Royal Abolutism Was Checked.

The king was the repository of both responsibility and power. The former was more moral than constitutional; that is to say there was no power or body, which was empowered by law to control the action of the king. The fundamental law, i.e., Dharma, provided no rival to the king, no co-adjutor, no person or body of persons whom he must consult and obtain the co-operation of. Society was more a system of mutual checks and balances. The provision of enlightenment and a conscience to a king, who has no external constitutional check, is the obvious way of making him act properly. Telling him that he will incur sin, or will lose his chance of salvation will be effective only if by his training, temperament and environment a deep-rooted helief in them has been generated in him. The detailed recital of his duties-to himself and to others- is another step in the direction. He should be constantly reminded that his interests coincide with the good of the subjects, and that he will be judged by his posthumous reputation. He should be reminded of the manner in which good kings had won love and respect in this world, and earned heaven in the next. The character of Manusmrti, as a work springing from the mouth of the 'father of men,' and given out in the remote past, rules out historical illustrations, unless they refer, as in the instance of King Vena, to a remote age, or the two ladies, Aksamālā (Arundhatī) and Sarangi (who, in spite of the low origin became worthy of honour because they acquired the qualities of their virtuous husbands, as rivers by union with the ocean, IX, 22-23), married to sages who were among the immortals, like Vasistha. Kamandaka is freer, and cites a historical (or legendary) instance, to point to the result of every virtue or dereliction. Neither ruler nor subject could be oblivious of the implications of the legends of the origin of kingship and royal authority. If divinity was latent in the king, it would be reflected in his virtuous upholding of Dharma; not otherwise. He might wield the "rod of punishment" (Danda) against others, but the embodied Spirit of Punishment is still his Master, and is identical with Dharma, It will slay him if he transgresses Dharma. The "law" protects only when it is cherished (dharmo raksati raksitah). The social compact from which the king, or the State derives its title to govern, is two-edged: it can be used to support the king's claim as well as to refule it. A contract is bilateral. It is only when one party observes the terms of the agreement that an obligation springs in the other to do so also. The solemnities of the coronation, with their symbolic representation of the king's representative and elective origin, and of the coronation promise (which revives the pledge of Prthu, when he was installed as king on the assassination of Vena), will drive home the conviction that the king is only a public functionary. remunerated for his duties by the payment of taxes, and in effect only a public servant. That there may be no misunderstanding of his resemblance to a worker, who is worthy of his hire only when he accomplishes the work he has been hired to do, a tax is described as the king's 'wage' (vetanam).1 This doctrine is implicit in Manusmyti and throughout Indian literature, Hindu, Buddhist and Jain. Asoka frequently refers to his position, with such implications, and to the obligation resting on him to labour ceaselessly for the public welfare. Kālidāsa, whose fame made his utterances pass into popular currency as proverbial wisdom, and whose words are deliberately woven by great rulers in their inscriptions and declarations of aims, says of a great hero that he took bali (contributions as tax) from the subjects solely to be used for their benefit (prajānameva bhūtyartham sa tebhyo balim agrahīt) to be returned to them as a fertilizing shower of benefits.2 Failure of the duty to protect is involved in undetected theft, and unrecovered stolen properties. Accordingly, the king (i.e., the State) was, in ancient India, under the obligation to make good to a loser the full value of the property stolen.3 The king, who fails to protect person and property (araksitä) in spite of his collecting taxes (balim sadbhaqa hārina) is to be stigmatized as the gatherer of the sins of the whole kingdom (VIII, 308). The ruler who collects his dues but fails to afford protection sinks into hell.4 It is held a breach of

See my Rājadharma, p. 107, and my Ancient Indian Economic Thought, p. 114 and p. 189.

<sup>2.</sup> Raghuvanisa, I, 18

दातक्य सर्ववर्णेभ्यो राक्षा चौरैशंत धनम् । राजा तदुष्युकानक्योरस्यामोति किस्तिवम् ॥ ८,४०)
 देथं चौरद्यतं द्रव्यं राक्षा जनपदाय तु ।
 अददाद्ध समाम्रेशंत किस्तिवं यस्य तस्य तत् ॥ (यात्रव. २,३६)

<sup>4.</sup> वीडरक्षम् मितमादचे करं शुन्कं च पाथिवः । प्रातमोगं च दण्डं च स सवी नरकं कतेत्॥ (८,३०७)

the coronation pledge. The king who does not maintain the limits of every one's duties and rights (anaveksita-maryadam) is as bad as an atheist, and he falls into hell.1 Such appeals to the post-mortuary, effects of bad government can have effect only when the throne is occupied by a devout and conscientious ruler, or a weak and timid one. Unjust punishment recoils on the king's head, as well as omission to punish the guilty (VIII, 128),2 In every unjust decision by a court in his kingdom, a fourth of the sin goes to the king and only another fourth to the judges (VIII, 18).3 He should see that a law-suit is not hushed up, and that none are started in his own name.4 (VIII, 43). He must not appropriate the property of persons guilty of mortal sins (mahāpātaka, IX, 244),5 Fines unjustly collected by the king should be thrown into water for Varuna or given away to Brahmanas (Yajñavalkya, II, 307),6 As the commonest punishment is fining, the king is warned to resist the temptation to make it a source of income, and the fixing of the scale of fines is obviously intended to prevent an abuse of the power (VIII, 183),7 The king has no power to pardon or overlook an offence, as thereby the guilt is transferred to him.8 (VIII, 316). Perpetual vigilance is a duty of the king or the state, or of any one

- असमेश्रितमयोदं नास्तिकं विष्ठस्थकम् ।
   अरक्षितारमत्तारं नृषं विषादभौगतिम् ॥ (८,३०९)
- अवग्याम् दण्डमम् राजा दण्ड्यांश्वेताप्यदण्डमम् । अवशो महदामोति नरकं चैव गच्छति ॥ (८,१२८)
- पादोऽधर्मस्य कर्तारं पादः साक्षिणमुच्छति ।
   पादः समासदः सर्वान् पादो राजानमुच्छति ॥ (८,१८)
- नीत्पादवेत्स्वयं कार्यं राजा नाष्यस्य पूरुषः ।
   न च प्रापितमन्येन प्रसेतार्थं कथंचन ॥ (८,४३)
- उ. नाददीत नृषः साधुमेंद्रापाताकेनी धनम् । भाददानस्तु तलीमात्तन दोषेण लिप्यते । अन्तु प्रवेदय तं दण्डं वश्यायोषपादेवद् । (९,२४३-२४४) राषाऽन्यायेन यो दण्डा गृहीतो वश्याय तम् । निवेद द्यादिपेन्यः स्वयं विद्यद्गुणीकृतम् ॥ (२,३०७)
- पणानां दे क्षते साथे प्रथमः साइसः स्पृतः । मध्यमः पञ्च विश्वेयः सहस्रं त्वेत चौत्तमः ॥ (मनु, ७,११८)
- 7. साशितिषणसाहस्रो रण्ड उत्तमसाहसः । तदर्थं मध्यमः प्रोक्तस्तदर्थमथनः स्मृतः ॥ (यात्र, १,३६६) "मनुनोक्त तत्पञ्चान्तरमम्तिष्वीपराधीवषये द्रष्ट्यम्" (मिताक्षर) ॥ Kautilya's fines are far lower in amount.

<sup>8.</sup> अधासिता द्व सं राजा स्तेनस्यामेति किल्नियम् । (८,२१६) placed in guardianship over another; thus a husband who connives at the adultery of his wife, or a teacher at his pupil's neglect of sandhyā are as guilty as the parties themselves. Alanusmṛti denies a king the power to annul a sentence pronounced in court after a proper enquiry<sup>2</sup> (1X, 233). The king cannot withhold his sanction for a court decision, or fail to implement it. There is no royal pardon or reprieve in Dharmaśāstra.

On the positive side of duties to be discharged, Manu lays the following on the king, i.e., the State. The support of education and state religion is implied in his duty to honour, support and make gifts to śrotriyas (VII, 82-86, 88, 135; VIII, 395; IX, 323). He should perform the various sacrifices, both for his own good and for the good of the kingdom (VII, 79, 145). The discharge of these duties diminishes the king's resources, and throws on the State a steady and unavoidable expenditure that will reduce the reserves which can be used to buttress up the power of the king, by establishing, for example, a standing army. In the West the power of the purse in legislative bodies was the source of the attacks on the Prerogative, and of the reduction of an absolute ruler to the position of a constitutional monarch. The sources of revenue for an Indian king were fixed, and means of adding to them by illicit ways were forbidden by Dharmaśastra,3 The prohibitions can of course be set at nought, but only at the peril of overturning the throne. A popular tumult was always to be feared, and it might break out if anything was done to alarm the common people or fill them with fear of divine anger, and the occurrence of calamities. The effect of a protest launched by even a single person to-day, against an act of the State or of some public functionary by fasting to death, ostensibly to bring about 'a change of heart', is due to such a fear. In ages in which special virtue was attached to birth in the first varna and was believed, the fasting to death of a Brahmana, not through want of food, but as a protest must have had great potency in creating or fomenting trouble. It was styled prayopavesa, and though a form of suicide, which is

अन्नादे भृगदा माहि पत्नी मायापचारिणी ।
 गुरी शिष्यध याज्यक्ष स्तेनी राजान किल्वियम् ॥ (८,३१७)

तीरितं चानुशिष्टं च यत्र कचन यद्धनेत्।
 कृतं तद्धमंती विशास तद्भुयी निवर्तयेत् ॥ (९,२३३)

Arthasastra suggests dubious means of increasing the revenues by levying benevolences, special taxes and confiscation (Kaufillya, p. 246 and p. 249), but restricts them to collections from seditions or wicked persons.

condemned by Indian smrtis, it appealed to the people as a kind of brave and disinterested action, whose magnitude was measured by even the defiance of the rule against suicide. Kalhaṇa's Rājatarangini gives (VIII, 428, 658) descriptions of prāyopaveśa undertaken by Brāhmaṇas as a protest against misgovernment and of their great effect, so much so that a special officer was appointed to watch such public protests, and see if they were genuine. The declaration of Manusmṛti that the kingdom in which a śrotriya pines with hunger will be visited by a famine and that no śrotriya should be allowed to perish of starvation¹ (which is found also in Dharmasatras) is the basis of prāyopaveśa, though the context in which the declaration is made refers only to involuntary starvation and is aimed at getting the king to provide food and maintenance for such pious persons, and not to cases of voluntary starvation as a public protest.

If we look at the resources available to a king, other than mere laudation of his position and his revenue and accumulated wealth-to support autocratic rule, we may find little else. The ksatriyas, were like the Brahmanas, unorganized, had no esprit de corps, and, in any case, will not feel themselves called on to stand by an oppressive ruler. They could not also have been a numerous body. The composition of an army made up of recruits from kṣatriyas, as well as from other castes to whom the profession of arms was a 'distress occupation' could not have helped the king very much. The members of an army of 'nationals' will not be free from the beliefs which run counter to royal misrule, and regard it as certain of drawing divine wrath on the kingdom and people. In a country dependent on rains, the failure of a monsoon, following an obnoxions rule which defies the conventions of Dharma, can stir up a people's rising, which will be an instance of the conflict between the 'legal' and 'political' sovereigns, in modern terminology.

It may be asked—'Did not the king possess the power to override the law or change it?' We now regard the power of legislation as a mark of sovereignty. The sources of law or Dharma are alleged to include rājaśāsana, the commands of the king. Kauṭilya includes it along with custom (caritra), vyavahāra (rules of procedure) and Dharma, and makes each over-ride those that precede it in the enumeration.<sup>2</sup> Dr. Jayaswal takes vyavahāra as Arthaśāstra law, an assumption for which there is no warrant. It does not mean that Arthafastra rules are superior to those of Dharmafastra. It should be noted that Kautilya refers to the four-not as sources of law, as now wrongly construed, but as the "four feet of a judicial proceeding" (vivadārthas-caduspādah). Nārada makes the same enumeration and statement, in almost the same words, and his dicta have been loosely translated by J. Jolly thus: "Virtue (Dharma), a judicial proceeding (vyavahāra), documentary evidence (caritram) and an edict from the king (rajasasanam) are the four feet of a law suit (vivāda). There, virtue is based on truth; a judicial proceeding rests on the statements of witnesses; documentary evidence (rests) on declarations reduced to writing; an edict depends on the pleasure of the king." It should be noted that the dictum appears, not in the enumeration of sources of law proper, i.e., substantive law, but of rules of procedure. A court can and must make its own rules. Where a clear declaration from the State (i.e., king) as to what is or what is not the law is available in a public document (rājašāsanam), it will naturally gain first priority in procedure in the disposal of suits by judges. Documentary evidence is held as the best form of testimony, and Manu shows its importance, though he deals briefly with adjective law (vyavahāra-mātṛkā). That the statement declares the over-riding force of Arthasastra over Dharmasastra is explicitly contradicted by Kautilya (p. 150) and by Narada also, 1

न च खुवास्य संसीदेव्हीत्रियो विषये बसन्॥ यस्य राष्ट्रस्तु विषये लोतियः सीदाँत खुवा। तस्यापि तरक्ष्या राष्ट्रमचिरेणैव सीदति ॥ (७,१३३-१३४)

धर्मश्र व्यवहारश्र चरित्रं राजशासनन्।
 विवादार्थश्रद्धाः पश्चिमः पूर्ववाषकः (नारद, १,१०)

Rājašāsanam is not new law made by a king, over and above those given in Dharmašāstra. The king is not above the law but is under it, like any other person. Daṇḍa is king over kings (VII, 28). Kauṭilya, who represents the Artha view, holds that a court can punish a king, as it would any commoner (p. 226). Judgment could be given against him. The famous warning of Manusmṛti (VII, 13) that no one should defy the law (Dharma) which the king

संस्थवा धर्मशास्त्रण काल वा न्यावदारिकम् । यश्मित्रमे विकथित धर्मणार्थ विनिक्षमेत् ॥ (बौटि, अर्थ, शा., ३,९, ५. १५०) यत्र विप्रतिपात्तिः स्याद्धमंत्रास्त्राचेशास्त्रयोः । तत्रावेशास्त्रमुख्य धर्मशास्त्रोक्तमाचेरेत् ॥ (नारद, १,३९)

दण्डो हि समहत्त्वेता दुर्थरश्रकतात्मितः । धर्मोद्रिनाकृतं धनित नृपमन सनान्धनमः ॥ (७,९८)

पुरुषं चापराध च कारणं गुरुलाधनम् ।
 अमुनन्त्रं तदालं च देशकाली समीह्य च ॥
 उसमाधपराध्यस्त्रं प्रदेश दश्यकमीणि ।
 राष्ट्रस प्रकृतीनां च कल्पवेदन्तरान्तितः ॥ (कीटि, अ. शा., ४१०, पृ. २२६ । makes in favor of those he loves or against those he disapproves of (anistesu) and sentences, is not to be construed as entitling the king to make special laws, according to his personal whims,1 The commentators make this clear, as also the context, because the next verse refers to the punitive power and its creation, through which alone the king is able to maintain his authority, which is superior to kings, and will strike down kings who swerve from Dharma, and which is identical with Dharma. Two interpretations of dharmo rajaketa, or rajasasanam (king's edict) have been given, both of which are correct, according to their context. The king cannot transgress Dharma or issue an edict that does so. His commands must be obeyed, even if they are in favor of his favorites or against those he dislikes, provided they are in conformity with law (Dharma) or are not in conflict with it. This is Kullüka's interpretation which makes the verse refer to an occasional order of a king, which does not create a law. Medhātithi takes it to refer to orders that a king may issue, in the course of administration and in consonance with Dharma and custom, on minor matters, such as that the citizens should observe a holiday, that no animals should be slaughtered for soldiers on a particular day, that a close season should be established for snaring wild birds, that the king's slave girls may be entertained for certain days by wealthy men as dancers etc. "When such orders are issued by beat of drum, they should not be disobeyed. The king has no power to make ordinances relating to the Dharma relating to religious duties, nor rules of varna and dárama, because to do so will be contrary to to smrti dicta." (Medhātithi), The Rājasāsanas, referred to by Nārada, are isolated or consolidated rules of procedure made by the king as a judge, and published by beat of drum. The courts will be bound by them. Or they may contain authoritative interpretations of obscure points of Dharma (law) decided by parisads. The alleged 'royal edict' will thus correspond to the praetor's edict in ancient Rome, which declared but did not make new laws.

The idea that a Buddhist king was not bound by Hindu Dharma and would be free to change the latter by his edicts, is behind the belief that Aśoka exercised a prerogative of legislation, corresponding to the Tudor power of making laws by proclamation or possessed by modern Indian princes of co-ordinate legislation by proclamation. An analysis of Aśoka's famous inscriptions shows that the conclusion is baseless. Aśoka's Dharma is mainly the Hindu Dharma, sāmānya-dharma, common to all. His rule of ahimsā is the emphasis of one of the duties placed first in the enumeration of yamas by smrtis.1 (Manu, IV, 204 and XI, 222; Yājñavalkya, III, 312-313). His ethical code is identical with that of smrtis. He was not hostile but friendly to Brahmanas, to whom he asks (Edict VIII) honour and kindness to be shown, quite in the spirit of the smrtis, The belief that, like the Buddha, he forbade the holocaust of sacrificial victims is baseless: firstly, the idea of 'wholesale slaughter of animals' in Vedic sacrifices is incorrect, and sacrifices were themselves very occasional and few; and secondly because, he restricted the killing of animals, only within his palace, and enforced only the smrti rule against castration and caponing.2 He may have withdrawn his patronage from Brahmanical ydgas. The first and fourth Rock Edicts, and the second, fifth and seventh Pillar Edicts which contain the provisions, are not in any sense modifications of law or Dharma, but come within the categories named by Medhātithi. It is therefore wrong to assume, as is usually done, that either Buddhism or Asoka put a stop to the slaughter of animals, or meat eating. The belief that they did so persists, largely because it seems to be based on a dislike to Brahmanism.

<sup>1.</sup> अतिष्टं चाप्यानिद्देषु तं धर्मं न विचालवेद् ॥ (७,१३)

In the search for precedents for a supposed power of the king to make laws, two instances have been pressed into service to establish the proposition. The first is an allusion in the Daśakumāra-carita of Dandin (II, 44)3 to a regulation made by the Mauryas in favor of merchants. It was that a merchant found in possession of stolen property was not to be sentenced to death, like a thief. In Manusmṛti (IX, 270) a thief caught red-handed, with the stolen

```
    अहिसा सल्यमस्तेषं शीचिमित्रविनश्रवः ।

    पतं सामासिकं धर्मं चातुवंध्वेऽववाग्यतुः ॥ (१०,६३)

    अहिसा सल्यमकोषयाज्ञेषं च समाचरेत् । (११,२२३)

    महावर्षं दवा श्रान्तिदांनं सस्यमकत्वता ।

    अहिसाऽस्त्रवमाधुवं दमश्रेति वमाः स्यूताः ॥ (बाह्य, ३,३१२)

    सर्वेषां सल्यमकोषो दानमहिसा प्रजननं च । (बसिष्ठ, ४,४;)

    अहिसया च भृतानाममृतलाव करवेते । (मतु, ६,६०;)

    निल्यमहिलो मृदुदंडकारी दमदानशिलः । (गीतम, ६,७०;)

    समा सलं दमः शै।च दानमिन्द्रियानेश्रदः ।

    अहिसा ग्रस्तुश्र्वा तीर्थातुसरणं दवा ॥

    आनंत्रं कोमश्रस्यस्वं देववादाणपूजनम् ।

    जनन्यस्या च तथा धर्मः सामान्य उच्यते ॥ (विष्युरस्ति, १,१६-१७)
```

<sup>2.</sup> पद्मना पुरस्कोपपातकारी च । (विष्पुस्सृति, ५,११६)

<sup>3.</sup> मीर्थदच एवं वरी विभिन्नी, ईट्डमेंच्वपराधेषु नारत्वसमिरामियोगः ॥ cited by Jayaswal, Manu and Vajnavalkya, p. 73.

property in his possession, is subject to capital punishment. He who knowingly receives stolen property, or property of which the seller is not the real owner either incurs guilt or loses his purchase and is liable to punishment. (VIII, 197). But an open and bona fide purchase in the market clears the buyer from criminal liability, though the article must be restored to the original owner (VIII, 201). The Mauryan law is clearly only in the spirit of Manu, and upholds the nonculpability of a transaction made in good faith, and a judge who acted in the spirit of Manu to take all circumstances, place, time, etc., into consideration would have only acted as directed by the Mauryan edict. It did not change the smrti law, but only made it clearer. In an empire with expanding trade the trader had to be protected against mistakes made in good faith.

The second instance is held to be a three days' grace granted by Asoka to criminals sentenced to death between the date of the sentence and its execution, in order that the criminal might make his peace with the world and prepare himself for his departure. In smrtis there is no rule that a sentence pronounced by courts should be carried immediately into effect. But that was the practice. It was an executive matter entirely, and a king was free to act on his discretion, as Asoka did, in granting the short period of grace. The matter for surprise is that the period was not longer, in order that the king himself may review the case, in view of the impossibility of correcting a wrong capital sentence after it was carried out.

An influence that must have contributed, paradoxical as it may seem, to the zealous subordination to Dharma as laid down in works like Manusmṛti, is the presence, (constantly renewed) of large bodies of foreigners, who came as invaders, settled in the country, learned its language, were admitted to its tolerant religion and became enthusiastic advocates of its culture. Dynasties also, whose title to rule as kings, was weak under Dharmásstra, made up almost ostentatiously for their weak position by zealous adherence to the ancient Dharma. In Manusmṛti we have a clear enunciation of the principle that only a Kṣatriya should be a king. But, the work knows of the existence of Sūdra kings and kings of mixed castes. The rule that a Brāhmaṇa

न दोडेन विना चीर पात्रवेडामिके। नृपः ।
 सहोडे सीपकरण वात्रवेदावेचारवन् ॥ (१.२७०)

<sup>2.</sup> विक्रीणीते परस्य स्वं बोडस्वामी स्वान्यसँमतः । न तं नवेत साक्ष्यं तु स्तेनमस्तनमानिनम् ॥ (८,१९७)

<sup>3.</sup> विक्रयाचा धर्न किवित्रपृक्षायात्कुलसमित्री।
क्रमेण स विद्युद्ध हि स्यायती लमते धनम् ॥ (८,२०१)

should not dwell in the dominions of a Sudra ruler (na sudra-rajye nivaset, IV, 61) is coupled with the warning that one should not also live in lands over-run by a heretical population or by unrighteous persons. If it was meant to be acted upon, it was a counsel of perfection. The Puranas declare that the Nanda dynasty marks the end of the rule of Ksatriyas (Nandantam ksatriyakulam). Under the great Mauryas, the limits of the empire stretched from sea to sea, from the Hindu-Kush to the forests of Eastern India, and far into South India. Aśoka was a Śūdra king, and as a Buddhist he will be classed as a pasandin (heretic), though to term so highminded a ruler an adharmika would have been absurd, particularly when his dhamma is indistinguishable from the old Dharma. A Brahmana king would have been as obnoxious to orthodox sentiment as a Sûdra ruler or a Vaisya king. We have the Vakatakas, who claimed to be Brāhmanas, the Kadambas, whose first ruler, Mayūraśarman was a Brāhmana, who voluntarily suffered demotion in varna by becoming a king, the Imperial Gupta dynasty, which gloried in an alliance with the Licchavis (whom Manu traces to outcaste or vrātya Kṣatriyas, X, 22), the dynasty of Thanesar (Sthanesvara), of which Harsavardhana was the most famous ruler, which Yuwan Chwang describes as a Vaisya dynasty, besides the Satavahanas and the Pallavas, who were not of indigenous origin. Yet all these dynasties gloried in their support of Dharma, in performing, even in Kaliyuga,1 the Asvamedha sacrifice, and were enthusiastic worshippers of either Siva (e.g. the Bharasivas) or of Vișnu (e.g. the Guptas). They intermarried. The marriage of Harsavardhana's sister to the Maukhari Grahavarman (whose Kşatriya birth is extolled by Bana) may perhaps be explained away as hypergamous, but not the marriage of a Vakataka princess to a Gupta king, which may make it a pratitoma union. When Manu denounces myoga as a 'beastly custom' (pasudharma, IX 66), how would be have viewed the marriage of Candragupta II with the widow of his brother? The open door of tolerant Brahmanism might find a place in it for the Greek devotee of Visnu, Heliodorus, whose flagstaff and inscription still exist at Besnagar, And but for the theory of Manusmyti that many Ksatriyas fell from their varna by neglect of Dharma, the absorption into the varna scheme of powerful non-Indian peoples would not have been possible. The elastic limits of Aryavarta were gradually extended to all lands in which varnasrama-dharma prevailed. A similar extension appears to have brought within the scheme every tribe or people, which accepted it!

<sup>1</sup> Asvamedha and Vajapeya are Kulivarjya.

It is obvious that the new converts to the varnasrama ideal accepted the other ideas involved in it, such as the guna-dharma of kings as set out in smrtis. They must have accepted the principle that the king was under, not above Dharma. The ostentatious manner in which the kings of the Pallava, Kadamba and Ganga dynasties of South India, and even the rulers of Campa in the Far East, took the title of 'Dharma-Mahārāja' must carry the implication that they accepted the entire scheme of Dharma. It is possible that the immense popularity of the horse-sacrifice with rulers of the new dynasties of dubious varua may have been due to the belief that their vratya origin (assuming that they became vratyas, after having been Ksatrivas once upon a time) 1 would be corrected by the Asvamedha, which is prescribed for it. Thus the system of varnā$rama-dharma obtained a new and vigorous lease of life from the incorporation within it of alien tribes and peoples, and the old smrtis new and zealous upholders. There was statesmanship in the scheme of mixed castes and their official recognition in Manusmyti, as it extended the field for humanization, religious and cultural conquest and the acceptance of healthy political ideals, which did not translate power as absolutism and irresponsibility.

The Elements of the State.

We may now pass to the concept of the seven limbs' of the kingdom, or the elements of the stable State, as we may put it. The condition of political union, or the State, having been upheld as a natural and necessary institution, resting not merely in the instincts of mankind, but on the highest ultimate sanctions, it becomes necessary to analyse its component elements. The effort resulted in the doctrine that the State has 'seven limbs' (saptānga). The idea is a unique discovery of the Indian mind, and is common to both Dharmaśāstra and Arthaśāstra. The seven constituents are stated to be the king (svāmin), minister (amātya), capital (pura), country (rastra), treasury (kośa), armed forces (danda) and ally (suhrt), and each preceding one is held to be more important than those which follow it (IX, 294-295), and its destruction the greater calamity. As the three sticks composing the staff (tridanda) of the ascetic are all equally needed for its strength, so in the seven constituent elements of the kingdom there is, in normal conditions, none which is less important than another (IX, 295).* If it becomes a matter of desperate choice in an emergency, as when an amputation may be the only way of saving the man, so in a national calamity, such as a foreign invasion, one may give up an ally than sacrifice the army, even give up the army than the war-chest, from which new troops may be raised and new allies won, sacrifice even the treasury to save the country from ravage (as by buying off an invader), allow even the country to be over-run or denuded in a 'denial' policy to an invader, who might attempt to live off the land, and carry on the war, at the expense of the invaded land, and withdraw to the fortified capital (pura, or durga). If it becomes necessary, in the last desperate effort to save the State, to evacuate even the capital, it may be done if the men, who have stood behind the king, as his ministers and directed the defence, can be saved. When all seems lost, and even the members of the cabinet have been lost, the sole remaining hope of rallying the defenders, of making the ravished State rise again from the embers of its destruction, is the King, the living symbol of union. The wisdom of the principles has been demonstrated in every modern war in which a country has been attacked, over-run and almost destroyed as a nation and State by an irresistible invader. We have seen every one of the steps taken in precisely the same order in the Franco-German War, in the First World War of our time and the latest World War. The preservation of the Mikado today, without throwing him to the wolves, is an act of statesmanship, defensible on the ground that to remove him will be to destroy the only symbol of unity, the only authority through which order can again be restored and preserved in ravaged Japan.

<sup>1.</sup> Vasistha, XI 76-19.

<sup>2.</sup> सप्ताप्तस्य च राज्यस्य विष्टम्भस्य जित्रमण्यतः । अन्योग्नयुणवेशेभ्यात्र किनियतिरिज्यते ॥ (९,२९६)

The principles are to be applied not only in a war of defence but in an invasion. To attack the citadel of the enemy is more important than to capture his war chest, and to make his field forces surrender than to detach his allies. For finishing the war the capture of the king and his staff is the culminating event. In normal times, all the elements work in co-operation, recognizing their interdependence; but even then, the relative values will be the same for stable government-The advice of Manu to place a prince of a conquered dynasty and country on the throne, as soon as the enemy is killed or has fled, is a recognition of the need to set up an executive head of the conquered State, with whom peace can be concluded, instead of allowing the country to remain in a condition of chaos, with an indefinite prolongation of hostilities and the deterioration of the struggle into a guerilla war. The resort to war as the last expedient to solve an insoluble dispute between nations is justified only by limiting its duration to the minimum. It is not only the combatant powers but allies and neutrals that are unsettled by the prolongation of a war. The restraint to which under International Law neutrals willingly submit are due to their interest in making the struggle sharp, short and decisive. As in the case of a fire, the combatants should have a ring drawn round them, as a fire-fighting device, to prevent the extension of the area of strife. The rules of war, which are laid down elaborately by Manu (VII, 87-94, 164-167, 170-171, 181-199) are designed to this end, and to minimise the suffering caused by the war, and to prevent atrocities or horrors, whose memory will engender bitterness. the desire for revenge, and sow the seeds of another war. War crimes, like war revenge imposing impossible peace terms, are less likely to end a war than to provoke it again. Dynastic ambitions, the desire to annex the conquered territories, the exaction of war indemnities, the imposition of the power of State on State, and of one people on another, and, in the name of a superior culture, attempts to uproot the culture, laws and traditions of a conquered country and to impose on it those of the conqueror, are all evils in the view of Dharmaśāstra as well as Arthaśāstra. They condemn them not only as inexpedient and unwise, but as contrary to the higher instincts of man, and the lasting interests of all concerned.

Manu's rules on these subjects are still worthy of study, and worthy also of imposition in our days, when primitive passions roused in the World War have uprooted humanity, in the sense also of deadening national conscience and humane feelings. Under the ancient Indian rules of war, many of the methods adopted in recent world-wars would be outlawed. Night attacks are forbidden except for creating a diversion or to create panic and confusion in an enemy's encampment (VII, 196).1 The slaughter of men asleep is forbidden (VII, 92). The use of kūṭa-yuddha (concealed methods of fighting), a term of wide extension, probably includes 'booby traps,' and such things as we now call land-mines. In the wider sense, it is war by secret and unregenerate methods. While Manu permits the laying waste of the enemy's country and destruction of his productive resources, he does not allow the molestation of non-combatants. The undisturbed condition of the peasant cultivator that Megasthenes noted with admiration, as a unique feature of India, must refer not to the conditions of actual warfare but of military marches and of army manoeuvres. The soldiers were not allowed to molest peaceful citizens or to destroy crops and standing trees during their marches. The tendency to take the law into their own hands, so common to those who have arms and entertain the belief of their belonging to a privileged class, was discouraged. Every fighter, whatever his varna, was governed in his action and conduct by the ideals of the Ksatriya, which include not only refusing to fly before an enemy and courting death in battle as the way to heaven, but protecting the civil population. We have a realistic picture by Bana of an army on the march, and one of its features was the pelting of the troops with stones and clods of earth by infuriated peasants, when their crops were trampled on, and the assaulted soldiery not retaliating, but calling on spectators to bear witness of the assault, in order that the peasants may be duly punished by the civil magistracy.1 Such discipline is possible only when the military power is ordinarily under civilian control in the last instance, and there is a strong Government to enforce discipline on its armed forces. A pampered soldiery is adharmic. While the king and the generals probably belonged to the martial caste, the minister in charge of war and peace, the Mahasandhivigrahika, was of the non-martial Brahmana varno. subordination of the army to civilian control, and of the military to civil law and usage, are not therefore the discoveries of modern times. The deterioration in standards, which we notice in mediaeval times, and the pursuit of war by methods that were condemned by Manusurti as unregenerate and unhallowed, are the consequences of the struggles against barbarous invaders, who fought without any scruples, and against whom the rules of chivalrous war were positively futile. Still, the higher ideals did not die out. A recent study of the Pathan conquest of India reckons the causes of the Hindu collapse before the invaders as two: inferior military equipment and inferior war technique. The latter refers to the conduct of war according to the smrti rules. There is a disadvantage in being chivalrous to an unchivalrous foe. It was seen in former invasions of India, like those of the Huns. But, in wars between Indians and Indians, both of whom followed the rules of the game, it had its advantages. It limited the area over which the struggle was spread, it reduced the evil results of defeat to the vanquished, and prevented the growth of rancour in the defeated party. The prizes that an Indian conqueror coveted were tribute and formal homage rather than additional territory. There was some degeneracy after the Gupta epoch, but it was not comparable to what followed foreign conquest by an enemy, alien in birth, tradition, culture and religion like the Arabs and Pathans. Constant war on a small scale was a feature of mediaeval India. It was due to the incitement contained in the smrti dictum that death in battle was the ideal for the king or Kşatriya

<sup>1.</sup> राश्री वित्रासवेत्तवा (९,१९६)

<sup>1.</sup> Harsacarita, Trn. Cowell and Thomas, p. 201.

(IX, 323) rather than death by old age or disease. War was compared to a sacrifice, and to a king it was equal to one. A war was regarded as between rulers or states and not as between peoples. It was a struggle for supremacy, not a conflict of peoples, in the search for markets, or fields for colonization or for raw materials, as today it is. There could be no implacable enmity between kingdoms. Such results of Dharma warfare flowed from the inspiration of smrtis like Manu's.

Elaboration of Policy (Upaya).

Manu utters a note of warning. The issue of a battle is always unpredictable. The victory may not be to the strong. To appeal to war for the settlement of a dispute must therefore be the last resort. Kings must study policy. It is fourfold: conciliation (sāma). concession or gifts (dana), sowing dissension (bheda) and war (danda). Each preceding among these is superior to those that follow. (VII, 159). Manu favors the first and the last above the others, as the intervening two are obviously not straightforward. (VII, 109). The expedients (sādgunya) are six: Sandhi (agreement for co-operation), vigraha (hostility), yana (marching or mobilization), asana (readiness to attack) dvaidhibhava (division of troops), and aśraya (subordinate alliance). The literal meaning of these terms does not convey that ascribed to them by commentators following the teachings of the Arthasastra, in which they are elaborated Thus dvaidhībhāva, which Manu interprets as dividing up one's army. is taken by Kamandaka as double-dealing, talking of peace when prepared to strike, as the Japanese did at Pearl Harbour. A third concept is that of the 'circles' or mandalas, in regard to which there seem to have been ancient cleavages of opinion-to judge from their discussion in Kamandaka.3 A king is looked at (in regard to foreign nolicy) as a vijigisu (aspirant for victory), just as every living being is a potential mumuksu (aspirant for ultimate freedom). Common frontiers are fertile sources of conflict. The neighbours on four sides of a kingdom are therefore its natural foes. Their neighbours. being potential enemies of theirs, may be regarded as united by common enmity to the same person or state by the first named kingdom. A kingdom whose boundaries march together with those of two others which are on terms of hostility, is forced into a position of इत्वा चन तु विग्रेन्यः सर्व दण्डसमुख्यितम् ।

पुत्रे राज्यं समासञ्च कुर्वति प्रावणं रणे॥ (९,३२३)

<sup>2</sup> सामदण्डी प्रशंसन्ति नित्यं राष्ट्राभिष्ठदेवे ॥ (७,१०९)

<sup>3.</sup> Nitisara, VIII, 16-51.

neutrality (madhyama). A neighbour in the rear (parsnipraha) is ever a danger, if one has to advance against a foe in the other direction; he must either be secured as an ally, or be embroiled with his neighbour (altranda). In this manner the total number of interests comes to twelve, which has to be multiplied by the six prakrtis or elements of the kingdom (i e, the saptānga), each of which might pull with or against each of the twelve. There are thus seventy-two factors in all. The subject is developed on the lines of works on polity, with the modification that Manu will not countenance in foreign relations immoral action. His diplomacy is to be straight, because he feels that duplicity can beget only duplicity. The predominant position given in the circle of ministers to the Purohita (the first Brahmana'), the successor of the Vedic Purodha, who like the Peshwa or Pandit Pradhan of the Maratha empire, was the king's alter ego or vicegerent-is to give a high ethical turn to all decisions taken in consultation with the ministers.

The Council of Ministers.

Indian thought does not see a conflict between reposing the responsibility for final direction or decision on one person, and the obligation to consult experts. In all State matters the king's decision is not only final, but it is he alone that must decide and take the responsibility. But he is to be daily advised by a body of carefully chosen ministers with whom all important matters must be considered. In judicial work, either the king, or a Brahmana acting for him (VIII, 9) is the judge, who has to pronounce the decision of the court, but he is to be a sisted by the sabhasadas, or sabhyas, who find a verdict on the evidence before the court (VIII, 10). In a sacrifice there is the sacrificer (hotr), who simply is guided and does not guide, and four priests, of whom one is the director (Brahman). 'A car cannot run on a single wheel' is the expressive metaphor to signify distrust of one-man rule.' Manu directs (VII, 54) the appointment of seven or eight chief ministers, who are natural-born subjects of the country (to secure their fidelity), have ancestors who have served the State faithfully, are of noble lineage (a warning against appointing favorites or upstarts, who will have no weight in the country), and skilled in counsel and arms. Even a small matter is difficult of accomplishment by the unaided afforts of a single man; how can a State be ruled properly by a sole monarch? The Graeco-Roman device of checks and balances, of co-adjutors in every office, armed with equal powers and duties, is not favored by Indian thought. This is the reason for some difference between the consultations, as envisaged by Manu and by Yājňavalkya, in regard to the manner of taking opinion: Manu will have it done in secret, minister by minister (VII, 57); Yājñavalkya makes it collective (taih sārdham I, 312). Though there is no collective responsibility (as in a modern cabinet) there must have grown among ancient Indian ministers a feeling of one-mindedness on important issues. A consultation is a duty, being imposed by Dharma-The frank advice of ministers must have been so weighty that a king, who went against it must have felt that he was doing so at his peril. This is a real check on absolute rule.

There is some haziness in Manusmṛṭi about the names and duties of the individual ministers. The question was one much canvassed in Arthaśāstra writings, and Manu has merely indicated his preferences. The number of ministers for daily and nightly consultation must not be too large; nor should the consultations be so held as to take away the ministers from their own administrative duties. The Commanding General, the Purohita, the Chamberlain, Dharmādhikāri and the Minister for War and Peace and the Dūta (envoy) emerge as common figures in the enumerations in books and inscriptions. As in modern times, new ministers may have to be created for new purposes or emergencies, and some ministers may become unnecessary. Much stress is laid on secrecy, and the divulging of counsel is a grave offence. An ambassador was expected to use his eyes and ears, and spy out the secrets of the kingdom he was deputed to: i.e. to do spying, a function, which is not absent from modern embassies.

Administration.

The king is asked to pay great attention to his finances, and make a daily audit of his position. This was needed in view of his fixed sources of revenue and elastic expenditure. The enumeration of authorities for local and district administration by Manu seems to indicate only a general principle, and is obviously not a reflection of actual conditions at all times and places. The unit is the family (kula), next the village (grāma), and next higher the group of grāmas, the bhukti, ascending groups of ten, twenty, hundred and thousand villages each under a collector. The heads have all police, judicial and revenue collecting duties. City administration is on different lines. Caste affairs and affairs of samphas or corporations are to be settled by their own officers, in accordance with their own constitutions. The residuary responsibility in all matters is on the lowest unit. It is a kind of federal arrangement, reducing centralization to a minimum. Except where the King or the State is compelled to intervene in the exercise of duties of regulation, standardization, policing, defence or maintenance of Dharma of varna and asrama, the local authorities were free from central interference or control. This again was a check on absolutism.

Law and Justice.

In the adjudication of law, a system of laws was developed which in its subtlety, refinement and standards of equity, is equal to, and, sometimes superior to the best modern systems. The admirable features of our developed civil law (in its traditional arrangement under eighteen titles) even in Manusmrti, which deals with it less fully than later smrtis-(for reasons already stated) are obvious even in a cursory examination. Comprehensive codes of civil and criminal laws are comparatively late in the history of Western jurisprudence. It still shows many anomalies and archaisms. Indian achievement in this respect is entitled to praise for its high excellence and for its being reached early. That judicial work, involving learning and subtlety, should have been so well done, and done without the courts having a body of trained lawyers to assist them, is proof of the wide-spread knowledge of legal principles and rules in ancient India, thanks to the obligation to study works like Manusmyti. It was the boast of Justinian that his Institutes would enable every one to render to every other his due by comprehending his rights as against those of others.1 The Indian code, on the other hand, aimed at making every person of education learn his duties to himself and to others, as well as the duties to the present, the past and to the future of himself and his genus. The skill of a judge in tracing truth was likened to that of the hunter in tracking game. Responsibility for justice in courts was personal to the king, in the sense that on it depended not only his position in this life but in the future lives also-Justice was open and free. Immunities were attached, as already explained, on various grounds to special classes, but they were only from the common penalties, and not from the liability of every one to be called to account in a public trial. A careless or corrupt or proud judge could be pulled up openly in his own court, during and after trial, if the critic was prepared to take it before the arena of public opinion or before the highest responsible functionary i.e., the king-There was no judicial privilege against merited criticisma.

In regard to criminal law, which is popularly supposed to be weak in ancient systems of jurisprudence, and which, as presented in works like Manusmṛti, has been hastily branded as barbarous, savage in its punishments and discriminatory, a detailed study will vindicate its claim to humanity, subtlety and fundamental impartiality. I have only alluded to it, in the course of the lectures. A detailed study now will take me far out of my way. Even as regards civil law and judicial procedure, I have felt myself at liberty to omit a systematic consideration of them in this course. They have been dealt with by one eminent as a jurist and judge who was the first lecturer under this Foundation. The social and political system of any people cannot be comprehended except on a background of its laws.

<sup>1, &#</sup>x27;Justice is the constant and perpetual wish to give every one his due'. (Institutes, I, i, 1) ed. Saunders.

<sup>2.</sup> This was a safeguard against the abuse of 'contempt of court'.

Conclusion.

The consideration of a number of preliminary issues regarding Manusmṛti in the earlier part of this course may give the impression that its aim has been merely to vindicate it. The study of an ancient society or its authoritative exposition in ancient literature has only a limited utility, if its purpose is only to clear misapprehensions and to correct errors of appreciation. Social palaeontology may hold an appeal only to academic minds. But the system that Manu outlines is not a thing of the past; it still survives. Its features have been obscured and its rules distorted, and much which claims his authority in modern life may be found to depend more on assertion than on proof. The one service that the terrible shake-up that the world has suffered within the lifetime of our generation, is to be less positive of the merits of modernity and of institutions that have been loudly advertized, but which have signally failed to save the world from appalling disaster, and to be more ready to look for guidance outside one's own circle. The first World War set many people asking whether the Christian civilization that was on its trial was not worth re-thinking out. We are now receptive to suggestions to think out the fundamental assumptions of modern life, and the basic principles of our social and political life, Old labels and old war-cries do not now satisfy us. We desire to look behind or below them for principles that they obscure or smother.

In this mood for studies in revaluation, ancient schemes of life, which have shown historic influence and a power of survival in the face of great vicissitudes, may seem worthy of study. The Hinds scheme of life, of which Manusmrti may be accepted, as it has been for centuries, as an authoritative exposition, is among such studies. If it has no other value except as exposing the unstable foundations of many modern social and political beliefs—such as the equality of the sexes, the equal rights of men, and of equal weight to every one in society; of the value of only a materialistic view of life and life's problems; of the superiority of environment to heredity; of the exclusively material basis of social betterment; of the belief that the proper standard for remuneration is material productive capacity etc.-it will have served a useful purpose. On the positive side, it may throw new light on old problems or suggest a readjustment of values or emphasis. The basic differences of outlook between the East and the West will emerge from such a study. India has a synoptic view of the economic, political, social and spiritual aims of life and of hedonistic, psychic and spiritual urges. Its views on the nature of sex and of sex-relalations as natural and capable of regulation and sublimation for ultimate ends of existence, make the approach to the problem of sex relations, in law and out of it, must help. Its approach to the problem of riches and poverty is different from ours. Its valuation of ascetic and non-ascetic activity are different. Its attitude of quietism is a myth. Its standards of conduct are less liable to change, owing to their bases being in instincts and ultimate ends. It visualizes social elevation by slow processes and by fundamental changes of spiritual outlook. It places the sublimation of human nature as the only way of raising man. It has shown salvation as not exclusive but universal. It has based social harmony upon a balance of duties, and not on a conflict of rights.

Sir S. Va chariar, Hindu Judicial System, 1946.

It has shown the limitations of individualism and of what we now eall socialism. It has made the State the means of the good life,' in more than the Aristotelian sense; for, it made not only every one function to the best of his powers and means, in this life, but prepared him for the ultimate goal of all activity. While it has not disdained economic motives and activity, it has placed them in due subordination to other and higher ends. It has had no such illusions as the modern world has of the saving virtues of mass production and machinery, of world marts and world controls. It has neither been andro-centric nor ego-centric. It has visualized the survival of man as dependent on the education of the best in him and in all other men upto the limits of capacity, and discipline and spirituality as the features of its educational machine. It has been wisely selective in regard to the persons to be educated, and the degree to which they may be educated, the special needs of special classes in education as well as the common needs of all, and of the communication of the knowledge, which means power, only to those who will use it not for selfish purposes but for the good of the world. The degradation of science by applying its results to the causing of harm or destruction on a colossal scale, is a voided in its scheme of training. It is only the asura (demoniac) mind that misuses the power, which mastery of the secrets of Nature confers. Communal life is conceived as one in which equality means equal opportunity for disinterested service to every one by every one, up to the limits of his or her capacity, the subordination of the individual to the common good, of the supersession of proximate by ultimate ends. Social service is not based under it on the vague claims of a shadowy humanity, but upon the needs of every one's self-expression, self-realization and propulsion to the final goal. It has put a background of divine purpose to all activity.

Disillusionment in the saving virtues of Western Civilization dawned on thoughtful minds long before some of them realized its decadence, and urged whole-sale reconstruction to bring into existence the old ideal of the City of God. In such a frame of mind, it is not surprising, that even in the obscurity of translation and misinterpretation, the merits of the Hindu organization and its exposition in Manusmrti evoked appreciation. "Such a law book" said Nietzsche "as that of Manu sums up the experience, sagacity, and experimental morals of long centuries before it comes to a final decision. . . . It does not devise expedients; it only reveals them. At a certain point in the development of a nation, the book with the most penetrating insight, pronounces that the experience according to which people are to livei.e., according to which they can live-has at last been decided upon. The aim is to garner the largest and richest harvest possible from the times of experiment and unfortunate experience. Consequently, that which has to be obviated is the further persistence in experimenting, the continuation of the fluid condition of values, of the testing, selecting and criticising of values ad infinitum. A double wall is put against this state of things-God gave it, ancestors obeyed it. The rationale of such a procedure is to oust consciousness step by step from the sphere of life recognized as correct (as proved by an immense and carefully sifted experience) so as to obtain complete automatism of instinct-the pre-requisite for every kind of superiority, for every kind of perfection in the art of living. To draw up a law book such as that of Manu means to permit a nation to get the upper hand, to become perfect, to be ambitious of the highest art of living." Universal experience has a common denominator. It is this which is expressed in a work like Manusmrti whose surprising modernity in many matters will cause astonishment in those, who had over-looked it.

In the histories of great nations or peoples a mood of introspection and historical revaluation comes upon the best minds, when they have witnessed appalling calamities ending in almost the collapse of society following internal decay or disintegration or external impact, springing from violent collisions with alien or barbarous peoples. India has had many such experiences. Some of them are reflected in the Purāṇas. After chronicling the collapse of successive dynasties, they come to the barbarian invasions and the disintegration of society in which they visualize the workings of Kaliyuga. Their wails have a common feature. They lament in painful detail the lengths to which society proceeded in directions contrary to those indicated by Dharma, in the good days in which it was the soldering agent of social solidarity. The vision of the distant Redeemer, who will again lift the submerged world above social and moral chaos and restore moral order and spirituality under Dharma, that the world had lost by straying from the path, and inaugurate the approach to the Golden Age, is held up to sustain the faltering faith of men, to whom such an epoch had been only of the remote past.

To-day in a mood of disappointment with existing institutions and ideals, we feel an urge to shed the prejudices of race and culture, and to look for light wherever it may be found, to illuminate the world's path again to safety and security. In this mood, among the studies which may attract, that of our Sanātana Dharma as expounded in Dharmaśāstra, may have a place. The hope that the study of its skilful adaptation of means to ends, its logical deduction of rules of conduct and of social planning from psychological and socio-religious hypotheses, and its successful attempt to weave in a common pattern the strands of ethical, economic, social and spiritual aims of man, so as to produce a web of co-ordinated effort in interdependence than in isolation or rivalry, and its success in building up a tradition that has saved Indian society for centuries from disintegration, may still have use is the hope that has inspired and sustained this study and interpretation of Manu.

INDEX

Abhidhammapitaka, 49, Acararatna, 38 Adityapardag, 62. Aitareya Brahmana, 96, 174. Altekar, A.S., 14. Ancient Indian Economic Thought. 180. Ancient Indian Polity, 1, 6, 8, 18. Ancient Law, 5, 25. Angiras, 35. Annals of Rajasthan, I, 128. Apararku, 28 Apastamba, 34, 61. Apartamba-dharma-ritra 34, Apastamba-grhya-sitra, 17. Apastamba (iloka) cited in Saniskāra prakūša, 107. Arthaiastra, 2; influence of the discovery of, on Sanskrit literature. 2; aspects ofpraised by modern writers, 3-4; criticism, 4; secular character of, 5-8; orthodoxy of, 8-11; and Dharmašžira. 11-15; an upaveda 11; 12, 13; as amptr. 15; 21, 77, 80, 95, 127, 128, 161, 164, 170, 172, 182, 184. Asahāya, 52, 119. Asramas, and varua scheme, 136; classes of Dharma based on, 136; Four asramas legend of the creation of, 137; sequential and obligatory, 138; reasons for, 139; samnyāsa not obligatory, 138-140; life of sannyāsins 140; Hermit, 141; vānaprastha, 142; Brahmacarya, 144-153; Grhastha, 154; rules of conduct of grhastha, 162; marriage, 158-162. Asvaghoja, 58. Atatāyivadha, 120. Atharvaveda, 6. Atri, 35, 49. Auttama, 35. Ayodhya, 32 Baji Row I, 128.

Baji Row I, 128.
Bana, on Kautiliya, 4; 113.
Baudhāyana, 34; asceticism for woman, 153.
Baudhāyana dharma-satra, 112.
Belvalkar, S. K., 20.
Bhadravarman Kaundinya, 25.
Bhagavadgita, 17; quoted as smrti by Rāmānaja and Sankara, 30; 33, 64, 70, 72, 75, 99, 112, 116.
Bhagavan Das, Dr., 81.
Bhagavan Das, Dr., 81.
Bhattacharya B., 140.
Bharityajiia, 47.
Bhattacharya B., 140.
Bharitya purdua, 51.
Bhoja, 28.
Bhrgu, 35, 47, 49.
Brahmacarya.—See Ašramas.

Brahmana, remission of taxes on land, 9; wine forbidden to 10; occupation in normal times, 113; in distress, 120; privileges and disabilities, 124; in criminal law, 131.
Brahmasatra, 30, 74,
Brhadarasyakopamizad, 64, 97.
Brhajidaba, 8.
Brhapadismrti, not based on Manu only,
22; 30, 40, 47, 52, 121, 122.
Bryce, J., 27.
Buehler, 6, 19, 22, 33; on interpolations in Manu, 54; excisions of, 36; criticism.
38.

Caksusa. 35.
Campa, Vol. 111, 25.
Campa, Vol. 111, 25.
Candragupta II. 15.
Caste.—See Asramas.
Chakladhar, H. C., 145.
Chakravarti, Dr. G.N., 1.
Chândagyopamişad, 33, 97, 145.
Code Napoleon, 26.
Colebrooke, T. E., 28.
Connubium, 94.
Cowell and Thomas, 113, 192.

D

Daiva, 6.
Danakhanda (Hemādri), 51.
Dandin, on Kautilya, 4.
Dašaratha, 30
Dhammathat, 2.
Dharmašāstra, 3; miatakes of modern students of, 43; and Daršana šāstra, 41.
Dicey, A. V., 25, 26.
Dilipa, 29.
Divorce, sllowed by Kautilya, 6; permitted only in lower types of unions, 7.

E

Education, 17.
Elphinstone, 2.
English Santkrit Dictorary (Mulgaokar), 16.
Epigraphia, Carnatica, 113.
Epigraphia Indica, 112.
Excommunication, 90.

Fatalism, condemned by Kautilya, 6. Forschammer, 2. Foundation, The, 1.

Gains, Institutes of, J. Ganapatipājā, a sign of late origin, 24, Gangas, 25. Gautama, son of Utathya, 49, Gautama, 85, 154. Gautama-dharma-saitra, 19, 34, 95, 119, 175, 176, 116; only four chapters deal with law, 24; Golden Age, 37. Govindaraja, on asceticism for women, 153, Govindasvāmi, 112. Guba, 30,

H

Hanuman, 31.
Härita, cited in Samskärap akäša, 153.
Harsacarita, 113. 192.
Heitland, W. 94.
Hemädri, 28, 51.
Hermit. See Aframas.
Hindu Judicial Systems, 197.
Hindu Polity, 174.
Hindu Polity, 174.
Hindu Pocial Theory, some missing ideas in, 91-3.
History of India (Jayaswal), 45.
History of India (Jayaswal), 45.
History of Materialism in Ancient India, 5.
History of Dharmaidstra, Vol. 1: 19, 13, 47, 53. Vol. 2: 62, 107, 109, 123, 138.
Vol. 3: 60.

г

Ida, 32. Iksvāku, 32. Indian Cameralism, 5. Inscriptionus Sanscrites de Campa et du Cambodge, 2. Intelligent Man's Guide to Indian Philo-20phy, 107. Iron Age, 37.

Į.

Jabalopanizad, 138. Janaka, 46. Jaiayu, 31. Jayaswal, K.P., 15, 31, 46, 50, 63, 148, 174, 186. Jagaunātha Tarkapāscānana, 28. Jolly, J., 52, 96. Jones, Sir William, 2. Jyotisa, belief in 6; knowledge of, essential to purchita, 12.

K

Kadamhas, 25.
Kālidāsa, 8, 29.
Kalivariya, 37, 38, 40, 140, 188.
Kamalākara, 159 161.
Kāmandaka, 1; prosperity of king depends on maintenance of Dharma, 10; identified with Srikarasvāmin, 15.
Kāmānātra, 13, 77, 80, 145.
Kane, P.V., 19, 52.
Karma, law of, 3, 68,
Kautilya, ridiculed by Bāṇa and Daṇdin, 4; 5, 6, 7, 9; upholds varnāšrama, 8; 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 47, 77, 80, 165, 181, 182.

Keith, A.B., 96. Kram, 35. Kriyakalpataru, 28, 52. Brahmacarikanda, 11. Gransthakanda, 160, 115, 116, 118, 120, 159, 160, 162. Moksakanda, 73, 81, 138. Ksatriya, occupation of, 117. Kuilaka, 102, 153. Kunhan Raja Presentation Volume, 37, 120.

L

Laksmidhara, Arthasästra one of the 18 vidyas, 11; does not quote Arthasästra works, 16.

Laws of Manu (Buehler), 6, 19, 22, 33.

Law, N. N., 1.

Lokäyata—study of, included in the curriculum for princes 5; 6.

MF

Machiavelli, 3.
Mādhavācārya, 28.
Mahābhārata, 30, 35, 37, 38, 39.
Adiparva, 70, 156.
Anušāsanaparva, 71, 117.
Sāntparva, 12, 28, 51, 97, 98, 129, 139, 173.
Majumdar, R. C., 25.
Maine, Sir Menry, 5; hasty generalisation of, 24, error of, 26.

Moitroyana Brahman panisad, 32. Manu, names of, 35. Manu and Tajinwalkya, 31, 46, 50, 51, 58, 63, 64, 180.

Manusperi 1, translation by Sir W. Jones 2; in Ball, 2; importance of, 1-2; denounced by Maine, 5; 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, Rājanīti in, 13; Dandanīti in, 13; 10, 17, 18; inutility of the study of Manu examined, 24; pre-eminence of 30; influence of, 31; traditional origin of, 46; in literature and tradition, 32; and Mahabhārata, 34—6; and idea of progress, 36—40; redactions of, 53; interpolations in, 54; and Buehler's excisions, 56; background of, 60; cosmology of, 63; date of, 58; bases of polity of, 169; original state according to, 171; criticism of, 173; king glorified, 175; personal responsibility of king, 177; checks to royal absolutism, 179; Elements of State, 189; policy or upaya, 193; council of ministers, 194; administration, 195; law and justice, 196.

Mahabhatya, 58.
Marriage, 158-102.
Manutikasamgraha, 96.
Marici, 35.
Matsyapurana, 36.
Max Duncker, 2, 94.
Manavadharmasastra, 4.
Manavadharmasastra, 19.
Manavagrhyasatra, 19.

Max Müller, on Kalpasütras, 19; theory discredited, 20. Medhatithi, on the practice of Atharva mantras by Brahmans, 8; Munu as an office, 30; 47, 50; on Pallavas, 58; 102, 104, 113, 122, 141. Megasthenes, consultation of learned srotriyas by king, 24. Menes, 31. Mill, James, 2. Millaksara, 13, 28, 168, 175, 181. Mookerji, Dr. R.K., 1. Mohenjodaro, 31. Moses, 31. Mudraraksasa, 4.

Naradasmeti, reductions of, 51; 52, 119, 159, 165, 183, 184. Naradiyamanusamhita, 52. Narayanoponisad. Notyganistra, on Pallavas. 58-Nibandha, scope of, 26. Niebuhr, 3. Nijakantha, 16. Nijuktu, 17, 33; bhāsya of Durgācārya, 103. Nitimayakha, 16 Ntrisara, 8, 10, 16, 193. Niyoga, condemned by Manu, 39.

Ordeal, overlooked by Kautilya, 5.

P

Pallavas, 25, 58, Pandey, M.C., 107. Paraiaramadhaviya, 17. Paraiarasmeti, 38, 39, 118. Pāraskaragrhyasiitra, 149. Pizragalli A.M., 5. Pollock, Sir F., 5. Position of Women In Hindu Civilization, Pracetas, 35. Prataparudradeva, 28. Pulastya, 35. Parohita, 5. 6; to be proficient in both Dharmasastra and Arthasastra, 11-2. Pururavas, 32. Purusakara, 6 Purusarthas, 76. Purusasahta, 35. Pusyamitra, 113, 148.

Radhakrishnan, S., 63, 79. Raghavamia, S, 29, 64, 180. Rajadharma 15, 25, 180. Raivata, 35. Rajunitiratnakara, 175. Romayana, Aranyakanda, 30. 31. Ayodhyäkända, 30. Balakanda, 21, 30. Kiskindhākānda, 31.

Roman Republic, Vol. 1, 94.

Sabara, 50. Sabari, 30. Sacraments, 84-6. Sages (ten) 35. Sankarabhasya, 73. Sakuntala, 127. Samakaratanamala, 153. Sankhayanagrhyasutra, 155. Sannyāsa. See under Asramas. Saryāta, 32. Satapatha Brahmann, 32, 62, 127, 175. Science of Social Organization, 81. Sen, A.K., 5. Sin and Atonement, 87-90. Sītā, 31. Skandapurana, 51. Slaughter-houses, 0, 7. Smrticandrika, 17 Vyavahārakānda, 139. Smrtyarthasara, cited in Sadrakamalakara, 153. Sources of the Development of Burmese Law, 2. Sraddhadeva, applied to Manu, 33. Sribhasya, 30. Sridhara, 37. Srisükta, 48. Studies in History and Jurisprudence, Vol. 1, 27, Studies in Hindu Political Thought, 5. Studies in Ancient Hindu Polity, 1. Subrahmanya Aiyar, Sir S., 1.
Subrahmanya Aiyar, Sir S., 1.
Subrahmanlahora, 152, 153, 159.
Südra, freedom to live anywhere, 38; duties of, 118; position of, 130; in criminal law, 131.
Suicide, ban on, by Kautilya, 9.
Subra 10. Sukra, 10. Suhrangistara, views on caste, 10; 39, 172 176. Sumantra, 30. Sütra, composition, of 19; their utility, 19-20; Max Muller on, 20; impor-tance of, 21; alternative form to, 21. Svarocisa, 35. Svetasvataropanizad, 70. Systems of Sanskrit Grammar, 20.

Taittirtyasamkita, 31, 33, 65, 150. Tamasa, 35. Tandya Brahmana, 33. Tataka, 30. Taxes, remission of, 9. Tennyson, 167. Tiruvalluvar, 28; date of, 58, Trivarga, 6, 7, 12, 19. Tod, 128. Todar Mal, 28. Transmigration, 73.

Upanāyana, 17. persons excluded, 17. ν

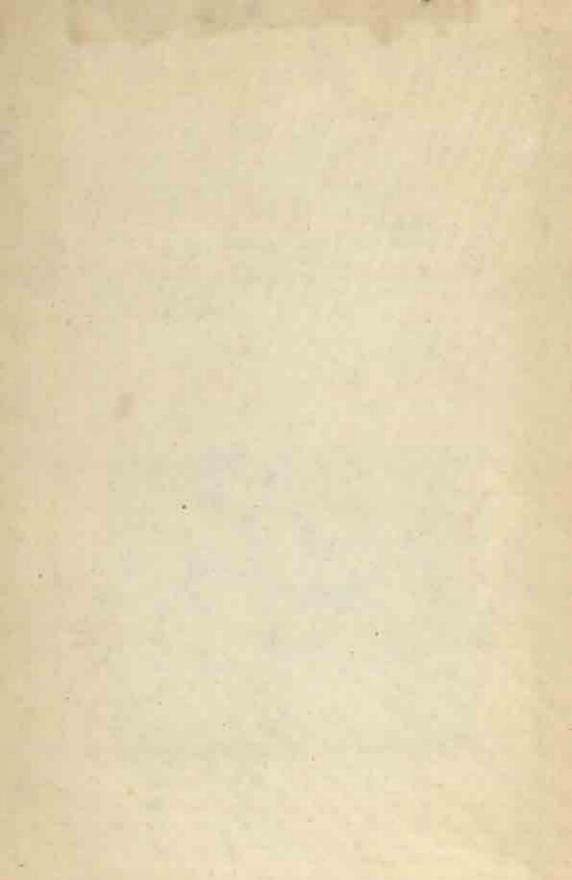

Vācaspati. 28.
Vaišya, occupation of, 117.
Vaivasvata Manu, hero of the deluge, 34-5.
Vāli, 31.
Varadacharya, Sir S., 1, 197.
Varadacharya, Sir S., 1, 197.
Varadacharya, 8.
Varņāiramadharma, praise of, 132-5.
Varņāiramadharma, praise of, 132-5.
Varņāiramadharmasātra, 111.
Vārtā, 5.
Vasistha, atharvanidhi, 8.
Vasistha atharvanidhi, 19, 20, 35, 49, 95, 96, 104, 180, 188, 189.
Vātsyāyana, 77.
Vijfiānešvara, superiority of Dharmasāstra to Arthasāstra, 13-14.
Vikhanas, 49.
Vikhanas, 49.

Vinayapijaka, 49. Vinogradoff, 25. Visnu, 20. Visnugupta, 8. Visnugupta, 45. Visnusmett, 62, 166, 175, 176, 186. Visvarūpa, 50. Vinekarūdāmani, 69. Vyanharanirnaya, 14.

W

Women, position of, 162; punishment for seduction of, 10;marriage obligatory for, 156.

Y
Tajñavalkyasmṛti, 13, 19, 32, 55, 71; on upapāraka, 88; 91, 102, 109, 115, 116, 119, 132, 143, 170, 171, 180, 181, 196.
Yama, 139, 153.
Yāska, 20.

D.G.A. 80. CENTRAL ARCHAEOLOGICAL LIBRARY NEW DELHI

Issue record.

Call No. - 294.6/Ady - 7676.

Author- Aiyangar, K.V.Rangaswami.

Title-Aspects of the social & political system of Manusmrti.

Barrows's Name | Date of Issue | Date of Return

"A book that is shut is but a block"

A book that is on.

RCHAEOLOGICAL

GOVT. OF INDIA

Department of Archaeology

DELHI.

Please help us to keep the book clean and moving.

S. B., TAR. N. DELHI.