The men love me,
And will show me the perfect path.

TITLE OF THE PART.—小雅二. 'Part II. Minor Odes of the Kingdom.' 'Odes of the Kingdom' is not, indeed, a translation of 雅; but the phrase approximates nearer to a description of what the pieces in this and the next part are than any other I can think of. 雅 is explained by 正, 'correct.' Lacharme translates the title by 'Parvum Rectum,' adding—quod is hoc parva mores describuntur recti illi quidem, qui tamen nonnulli a recto deflectunt. But the pieces in this Part, as descriptive of manners, are not less correct, or less incorrect, as the case may be, than those in the next. The difference between them is that these were appropriate to lesser occasions, and those to greater. The former, as Choo He says, were sung at festal entertainments in the court; the latter at gatherings of the feudal princes, and their appearances at the ment, the host signifying by his gifts his appreciation of his guests. The 之 in l. 7 is merely expletive. 周行—大道, or 至道, 'the great,' or 'the perfect way,' the path of right and wisdom.

St. 3, ll. 3-8. 德音—as in I. xv. V. 1, at of. 視—示 in last stanza. 桃—偷薄, 'to be mean.' 君子, —'officers,' in opposition to 民 of the line before. Both 則 and 傲 are verbs, of kindred meaning. 旨—美, 'good,' 'admirable.' 式 is to be taken as an initial particle,—as in I. III. XI. 敖—游, here 'to enjoy themselves.' Compare the last two lines in I. III. I. 1.

St. 3, ll. 3-8. 湛—樂之久, 'long continuance of the joy.' 燕—安, 'to compose,' 'to soothe.'

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 鳴, 萃, 笙, cat. II; 黃, 將, 行, cat. 10; in 2, 蒿, 昭, 桃, 傲, cat. 2; in 3, 萃, 琴, 琴, 湛, 心, cat. 7, & 1.

Ode 2. Narrative and allusive. A FESTAL ODE COMPLIMENTARY TO AN OFFICER ON HIS RETURN FROM AN EXPEDITION, CELEBRATING THE UNION IN HIM OF LOYAL DUTY AND FILIAL FEELING. There is certainly nothing in the ode itself to suggest its being composed for a festal occasion, and to compliment the officer who narrates his story in it. Both Maou and Choo, however, agree in the above account of it. It was not written, they say, by the officer himself, but was put into his mouth, as it were, to express the sympathy of his royal entertainer with him, and appreciation of his devotion to duty. There appear strikingly in it the union of family affections and loyal duty, which we met with in several of the pieces in Part I.; and the merit of King Wán, to whose times it is assigned, shines out in the allowance which he makes for those affections.

St. 1, 2. 騑騑 is defined as 'the app. of advancing without ever stopping.' Choo takes 周道 as—大路, 'the great way.' Maou, as I have done in the translation. Acc. to this view, the ode must belong to the time when King Wán was still endeavouring to unite the States in allegiance to the last King of Shang, in whose service the expedition referred to must have been undertaken. Williams says that 倭遲 means 'returning from a distance;' but

- 2 My four steeds advanced without stopping;
They panted and snorted, the white steeds black-maned.
Did I not have the wish to return?
But the king's business was not to be slackly performed,
And I had not leisure to kneel or to sit.
- 3 The Filial doves keep flying about,
Now soaring aloft, and now descending,
Collecting on the bushy oaks;
But the king's business was not to be slackly performed,
And I had not leisure to nourish my father.
- 4 The Filial doves keep flying about,
Now flying, now stopping,
Collecting on the bushy medlars.
But the king's business was not to be slackly performed,
And I had not leisure to nourish my mother.

that is not the meaning. 倭 horo—'winding,' 'tortuous.' The dict., is ec., says that 倭遲, 逶迤, 逶迤, 委蛇, 威遲, and 委移 are all synonymous. I have followed Maou in the translation of tsu-tan. Choo takes the characters as meaning 'numerous.' 駘 is the name for a white horse with a black mane. The conflict of affection and duty appears in ll. 3, 4. L. 4.—see on I. x. VIII. 1. 駘—跪, 'to kneel,' 處—居 or 坐, 'to sit.' Anciently, there were no such things as chairs. People sat on mats—if before a superior, kneeling, on their knees, with the body straight; if at their ease, they sat on the ground, leaning on a bench or stool. The two characters in combination signify—'to rest.'

Set. 3, 4. Medhurst calls the dove, 'a turtle dove,' but it is a different bird from the 鴈鳩, and smaller. Yeu Ta'an enumerates 14 different names by which it is called; but by none of them can I exactly identify it. It is said to be remarkable for its filial affection; and I have called it therefore 'the Filial dove.' This idea seems to be the basis of the allusion from it to the speaker in these two stanzas. 飛 fei denote 'the app. of flying.' 飛 must—飛上, 'flying aloft.' 杞—as in I. x. VIII. 1, 杞 here is diff. from the willow tree of the same name in I. vii. 1. This is the 枸杞, probably a kind of medlar,—as both Medhurst and Williams say. The finest trees of the sort are said to be in Kan-ah, and Shen-se. Its young leaves, like those of a pomegranate tree, but softer and thinner, are edible. It grows in a bushy manner to the height of 3 and 5 cubits, puts forth purplish flowers in the 6th or 7th month, and produces a red fruit, loughish like a date. One of its names is 'goats' tests,' from the shape of the fruit. 將—養, 'to nourish.'

 This ode, with the 1st and 8d, are mentioned in

 APPROPRIATE TO THE DESPATCH OF AN ENVOY, COMPLIMENTARY TO HIM, AND SUGGESTING IN-STRUCTIONS AS TO THE DISCHARGE OF HIS DUTIES.
 This piece also is referred to the time of King

 suite. 每懷靡及—其所懷思 常若有所不及, 'always as if he could

St. 2. In this and the following stanzas the envoy is introduced as narrating, himself, the energy and carefulness of his progress,—thereby he is admonished with what energy and care he should proceed. 駢, —'colts';—see Li. IX. 3.
 The term indicates here that the horses were young and full of spirit. 如濡 denotes the fresh brightness of the reins. L. 3.—as in I. iv.

lation. Maou explains 周 by 忠信, 'with loyalty and sincerity,' and says that 'to make inquiries of the good is 咨, and to inquire about affairs is 詢, but the view of Choo is much to be preferred. The envoy would get all the information which he could,—to guide him in discharging his duty, and to report to the court on his return.

St. 3. 騏—as in Lai III. 1. 如絲 denotes the softness and pliancy of the reins. 謀—to plan. Choo observes that 咨謀 is equivalent to 咨詢, the character being varied for the sake of the rhyme, here and in the other stanzas. Maou says the phrase means 'to deliberate about the difficulty or ease of carrying things into execution.

St. 4. 駱—as in the previous ode. 沃若—as in Lv. IV. 3. 度,—to concert measures. Maou says that the term means 'to deliberate on how affairs stand in regard to propriety and righteousness.'

Ode 4. Allusive and narrative. SETTING FORTH THE CLOSE RELATION AND AFFECTION THAT OUGHT TO OBTAIN BETWEEN BROTHERS. The Preface assigns the composition of the piece to the duke of Chew, saddened by the justice which he had been obliged to execute on his brothers, the lords of Kwan and Traa. The ode thus came into use at entertainments given at the court to the princes of the same surname as the royal House. Some doubt is thrown on this account of the origin of the ode by a statement in the Tso-chum, under the 25th year of duke He (B. C. 645), which assigns it to duke Muh of Shao (召穆公), in the time of king Le (died B. C. 827); yet in the 'Narratives of the States' (國語周中, art. 1), the very same man, who assigns it this origin, quotes it as 'a poem of the time of duke Wan of Chew.' There is nothing in the ode itself to guide us in adjudicating between these different views.

St. 1 The 常棣 is by most scholars distinguished from the 唐棣 of I. H. XIII. This is the tree properly and simply so called. Its fruit is eatable, and not larger than a cherry. I suppose, indeed, it is a kind of cherry-tree. Both Maon and Choo take 鄂 as 外見貌 'outwardly displayed,' and the line as interrogative, 不 being—豈不. Ch'ing K'ang-shing, on the other hand, took 鄂 as 'the calyx of the flower,' and 不 (read foo) as 柎, 'the foot or stalk of the calyx,' saying that the calyx, glorified by the flowers, serves well to set forth the union of brothers, the younger serving the elder, the elder overshadowing and protecting the younger. Wey-way means 'bright-looking,' 'splendid.' 兄弟 is not to be confined to brothers of the same parents; it denotes all of the same surname, who traced their lineage to a common ancestor.

St. 2. Showing the union of brothers in times of greatest distress. 哀—聚. 'to be collected.' Choo understands it of 'the bodies of the dead,' but the 求 at the end suggests a less extreme case. The view I have adopted is put forth by Yen Tran, and K'ang Ping-chang.

St. 3. Showing the superiority of brothers to friends in emergencies not so extreme. The 脊令 (in the Urb-yü, with 鳥 on the right) is the wag-tail. 'Its head and tail,' say some, 'are continually moving in concert, just as brothers respond to one another.' 况 is taken by Choo as an initial particle. Others make it equivalent to 悅 'to be flattered.'—Friends are agitated, but they only sigh, and give no effectual help.

 Is like the music of lutes;
 But it is the accord of brothers
 Which makes the harmony and happiness lasting.

St. 4 鬩 is 'to wrangle,' 于牆, as opposed to 外 in L. 2, must—牆內, 'inside the walls.' 務 is explained by 侮, which is found in the passage of the Tao-chuen referred to above. 烝—an initial particle, as in L. xv. III. 1. The usage of 烝 here seems to establish Choo's construction of 況 in the preceding stanza. 戎—助, 'to help.'

St. 5. 友生—朋友, 'friends.' 生 here, as in other combinations, intensifies the substantive force of the preceding character. Some take the last line interrogatively:—不如友生乎. This brings out the same meaning as the construction of Choo, which I have followed.

St. 6. 邊豆, as in L. xv. V. 2. 儐—陳, 'to set forth.' 飫—饜, 'to eat or drink to repletion.' 之 is an expletive. 孺, 'a child,' 'a suckling,' is here used as an adjective, expressing such mutual confidence and complacency as exist between a child and its parents. The parties supposed to be feasted in the first two lines are friends.

St. 7. Brotherly love is necessary to the completion and permanence of domestic joy. A brother should be more than a wife? K'ang Ping-chang says, 'Brothers are from the same root, forming, indeed, one stem. 翁—台, "unum." Brothers, like the hands and feet, form one body, and should not be looked at as two individuals, like husband and wife, who are but the union of two individuals.'

裕—妻子 in prec. st. L. 3 refers to the truth, as the writer deemed it, set forth in the whole ode. 直—信, 'truly.' Ping-chang says here, 'If a man be generous and affectionate to his wife and children, while he is indifferent to his brothers, the generosity and affection are but the selfishness of human desire, but if he be generous and affectionate to his brothers, and carry on the same behaviour to his family, the generosity and affection are the justice of heavenly principle.'

Ode 5. Allusive. A FESTAL ODE, SUNG AT THE ENTERTAINMENT OF FRIENDS, INTENDED TO CELEBRATE THE DUTY AND VALUE OF FRIENDSHIP, EVEN TO THE HIGHEST. In Maou the piece is divided into six stanzas of six lines each; it is now arranged, more correctly, into three, each of twelve lines.

St. 1. 丁丁,—as in I. I. VII. K'ang Ping-chang and some others understand 伐木 not of felling the trees, but of fashioning the felled trees for use, finding the idea of friendship in the combination of skill and strength for that purpose. But line 1 in st. 3 is inconsistent with that idea. A company of woodmen, whose blows sound responsive to one another, serves well enough to introduce a company of festive friends. Ying-ying is intended to represent the voices of two birds calling to one another. Maou gives the characters, I hardly see why, the meaning of 'frightened,' as if the birds were disturbed by the sound of the blows. I find, rather, in

Not seek to have his friends?

- 2 Hoo-hoo they go, as they fell the trees,
I have strained off my spirits, till they are fine,
And the fatted lambs are provided,
To which to invite my paternal uncles,
It is better that something should keep them from coming,
Than that I should not have regarded them.
Oh! brightly I have sprinkled and swept my courtyard,
And arranged my viands, with eight dishes of grain, along with my fatted meat,
To which to invite my maternal uncles.
It is better that something should keep them from coming,
Than that there should be blame attaching to me.

the mention of the birds a continuance of the allusive, or perhaps a metaphorical, element. L. 3, 4:—See these lines quoted by Mencius, III. Pt. I. IV. 13, who moralizes on them in a manner not intended by the writer, though many of the critics here follow his example. I have followed Ying-tah in referring 聲 in ll. 5, 8, to the bird on the tree. He says, 作求其友之聲 相—視, 'to regard' 矧—況, 'how much more!' 友生,—as in the prec. ode. Ll. 11, 12 tell the value and power of friendship in affecting spiritual beings. 神—鬼神, such beings generally. The first 之 is the expletive. 終 followed by 且—既, as in I. III. V. et al.

St. 2. 許 (hoo) 許 is correctly defined by Choo as 'the sound emitted by a number of people in putting forth their strength together.' L. 2. 釃 is the word appropriate to the straining off spirits through a sieve or basket, to keep back all grains or other refuse. 有萸

denotes the appearance of the spirits so strained, 'clear and agreeable.' 矧 is a lamb, not fully grown, 'five months old.' 速—召, 'to invite.' The kings were wont to style all the nobles of the same surname as themselves 諸父, and those of a different surname 諸舅, as in l. 10. 適—'it should happen.' 微—無,—as in l. III. l. 1. 於 (hoo),—a note of exclamation. 酒埽—see on I. xv. III. 3. 簋—as in I. xi. X. 2. The 'eight dishes' is expressive of the abundance of the provisions. So says Choo; and Yen Ts'an observes that it is of no use trying to illustrate the phrase from the institutions of the Chow dyn., which were formed subsequently to the time of king Wán, when this ode was made. We are not to suppose that the viands (饋) were contained in these dishes. 牡 is simply 'mules.' Ying-tah would refer it to the lambs in l. 2.

king calls them all his brothers. Ll. 6, 8. Among the common people quarrels arose, because of their stinginess in the supply of the dry provisions of which their feasts were composed;— it was not for the king to be sparing in the supply of the richer food at his feast. There is a difficulty in believing that the king should speak ll. 7—10 of himself, yet they cannot be otherwise construed. It breaks the unity of the stanza entirely to suppose, with Ch'ing K'ang-shing, that they are the language of the guests, praising the king for his favours:—When he has [good] spirits, he strains them for us, when he has not, he gets others of an inferior order for us, &c. At the same time, we need not suppose that the king did any of the things mentioned himself; but he caused them to be done for the entertainment of his guests. See—as in L. 2. Koo

—買, 'to buy.' A comma must be understood after 酒 in ll. 7, 8. Medhurst strangely translates
l. 8.—'There is no wine for me to buy!' 坎
坎 represents the sound of the drum, and 蹲 蹲 denotes the app. of the dancing. In all the last half of the stanza, the king, by the expression of his sympathy, encourages his guests to make merry.

Ode 6. Narrative. AN ODE RESPONSE TO ANY OF THE FIVE PRECING. HIS OFFICERS AND GUARDS, FEASTED BY THE KING, CELEBRATE HIS FEASIES, AND DESIRE FOR HIM THE BLESS-ING OF HEAVEN AND HIS ANCESTORS.

St. 1. 爾, 'thee,' refers to the King. In t. 2, 亦 and 之 are both particles, which we cannot translate. It is difficult to determine whether to translate 保定 in the imperative or the indicative; but I conclude to adopt the latter mood. The ode is mainly one of praise;
 even st. 4 and 5 must be translated in the indicative; and it is not till the last line that the imperative is more natural. 單 = 盡, 'entirely.' Maou defines it by 信, 'sincerely.' 厚, 'generous,' 'faithful,' 'honest,' is here best given by 'virtuous.' 何福不除—

 'what happiness is not taken away?' taken away,
 that is, to be replaced by greater. 多益—
 'much increase;—of every good, we may suppose, in himself and his kingdom.'

St. 2. 戩—盡, 'entirely,' 穀—善, 'good,'
 'excellence.' 罄 also = 盡, 'entirely.' 宜
 refers to all the king's doings as right. 百 祿, 'the hundred emoluments'—all prosperities, all favours. 遐—遠, 'distant,' 'long-during.'

St. 3. 興, 'to rise,' 'to flourish.' I do not see why Chao should explain it here by 盛,
 'abundant.' Lt. 3 and 4 should be connected with 1 and 2. 山 and 岡 give us the idea of the height of the hills, 阜 and 陵 of their mass.
 It is said, 'Land high and great is called 阜.'

St. 4. 吉蠲(一潔) — 'lucky and purified.'
 The former term refers to the action of the king in choosing the day for the sacrifices, and the officers to assist in them; the latter to the bath-ings, fasting, and vigils, preparatory to them.
 饌 — 'the spirits, and other articles of oblation.'
 爲饌 — 'you make, get ready, the oblations.'
 享 — 獻 — 'to offer.' This is done 'filially,' because the service referred to was to the king's ancestors at the several seasons, in the ancestral temple. In the Chang yuag, ch. XVIII, we are told how the duke of Chow carried up the title of king to his grandfather and great grandfather, and appointed the sacrifices for all the earlier dukes of the House of Chow. These are the 公 and 先王 of l. 4. The same personages are the 君, or 'rulers,' in l. 4; and 卜爾.

 云云 give their answer expressed through their personator(尸), or, as we should say, the medium,
 in the service. With reference to this passage,
 the dict. defines 卜 by 予, and 賜, 'to give.'
 The promise in l. 6 is, of course, to the king's line, more that to himself.

St. 5. 之, in ll. 1 and 3, is the expletive. By 神 is meant the king's ancestors, now existing as 'spirits.' 弔 — 至 — 'to come,' i.e., they are present, though unseen, in the temple. 詒 — 遺 — 'to give.' 質 — 實 — 'sincere,' 'honest.'
 Maon explains it by 成, meaning that 'the affairs of the people are peacefully settled.'
 L. 5 is a demonstration of all the people. Choo explains the terms as in the translation; but the old interpreters take both 羣 and 黎 — 衆.

St. 6. 恆 (read héng, in the 3d tone) denotes the moon in her second quarter, going on to be full. 騫—虧, 'to fail,' 'to become defective.' The first half of L4 refers to the waning and decline of the sun and moon; the second to slips of the hill. 'The luxuriance of the pine and the cypress' is seen in the constant renewal of their leaves; and they are specified, rather than other trees, as being well known and evergreens. 承—繼, 'to continue,' 'to succeed to.' 或—'some,' '—' May there always be those who shall succeed to you!

Ode 7. Allusive and narrative. AN ODE ON THE DEPARTURE OF TROOPS TO GUARD THE FRONTIERS ON THE NORTH AGAINST THE WILD TRIBES OF THE Hsien-yun. This and the next two odes form a triad, having reference to the same expedition; this being appropriate to its commencement, those to its conclusion. The Preface says the expedition was undertaken in the time of king Wan, when he was only duke of Chow, and was discharging his duty, as chief of all the regions of the west, to the last king of Shang. Chao denies that the odes are of so early an origin, and says that the 'Son of Heaven' in the 6th ode, must be one of the kings of Chow; but he does not attempt to fix the date more particularly.

As to the form of the ode, it resembles that of the second in this book. Though intended to encourage the departing troops, it is written as if it were their own production, giving expression to their feelings on setting out, and in the progress of the expedition, down to its close. A translator's greatest difficulty is to determine the moods and tenses which he will introduce into his version. 'The Complete Digest' says, 'The piece was made with reference to the time when the expedition was despatched, and the language throughout must be taken as that of anticipation (詩作於方遣之時, 大

St. 1. 薇—as in I. II. III. 3. 亦 and 止, here and below, must be taken as expletives. 作 describes the ferns as just rising out of the ground (生出地), when it must have been early in the spring. This gives the date of the first despatch of the troops, which is thus allusively intimated. The two 日 in I. 3 are expletives. Wang Yin-chu says 日歸 is simply equivalent to 于歸. When the men were going away, they had naturally been anxious to have the date of their return fixed. We may translate 日歸 by 'as to our return,' or interrogatively, as I have done,—after Yen Ts'an, I. 4,—as in I. x. I. 1, where the expletives are different. I. 3. A wife gives the husband a 室; a husband gives the wife a 家. I. 5. Choo simply says that the Hsien-yun were 北狄 'wild tribes of the north.' The Shw'wan does not give the characters, and elsewhere the same words are differently represented. Ch'ing K'ang-shing says they were the same tribe that in his days went by the name of Heung-nuo (匈奴). I suppose the two names are imperfect phonetic expressions of the same sound, which we also have adopted in Hsua. Wang Tsau says that the Hsien-yun of Yin and Chow, the Heung-nuo of Te'in and Han, and the T'ai-lan (突厥) of Suy and T'ang, all refer to the same tribes. Sze-ma Ts'ien in his Record of the House of Chow, and of the Heung-nuo, says that in the time of king E (B. C. 933-909), those northern tribes became very troublesome, and refers to this ode as a composition of that time.—It is understood that this reference to the cause of the expedition is made by the troops in a public spirit, showing that they sympathized with the court in the necessity of undertaking it. I. 7,—as in II. 2.

St. 2. I must believe that in this st. we have the words of a second detachment of troops sent off somewhat later than the former, when the ferns which, in st. 1, were only showing themselves, were now somewhat grown (柔). 烈烈 is descriptive of the app., or manifestation, of their sorrow of heart. 戍—守, 'to guard.' The term denotes the service of troops stationed anywhere to defend territory from invasion. 定—止, 'to be at an end.' 聘—問, 'to ask,'—to inquire, that is, about the welfare of their families.

St. 3. We have here a third detachment sent off, when the ferns had attained their full growth. This view of three separate detachments is sanctioned by Ch'ing K'ang-shing and Ying-tai. The latter calls them the 一輩二輩三

The four steeds, eager and strong;—
The confidence of the general,

輩, sent off respectively in the 3d decade of the 2d month, the 1st decade of the 3d, and the 2d decade of it. 陽 is here the name of the 10th month:—the sun was drawing near to the extreme point of its southern course, and the Yi principle ruled predominant in the year:—only, however, to give place to the Yang. On the eve of its extinction, apparently, the principle of light and heat, was 'like an embryo' in the womb, about to make its appearance; and hence the month was named after it. So say all the critics. From the 10th to the 12th month, inclusive, was the conclusion of the year of 41. 疾—病, 'sick,' 'distressed.' 來—復來, 'to come back.'

St. 4. The three detachments would seem here to be united, and marching with their general at their head, confident of great success. The Shwuh-wên quotes 1.1, with 爾

instead of 爾, defining the term by 'the app. of abundant flowering.' 常 is the 常棣 of III. 1. 路—車, 'a carriage,' here 戎車, 'a war carriage,' as in 1.3. 君子 must here be 將帥, 'the general.' Choo explains 業業 by 壯, 'strong.' We shall meet with the phrase again. 定居—安居, —as in the translation.

St. 5. Mou defines 強-wei here by 強, 'strong,' and in III. iii. iii. by '不息,' 'unresting.' I have united the explanations. Choo says 依 is here equivalent to 乘, 'to ride in.' We may admit this, but need not, in translating, depart from the ordinary meaning of the term. There is more difficulty with 朋, which properly means 'the calf of the leg.' Choo follows Ch'ing K'ang-shing, who says the character should be 芘 'to shelter.' By 小人, 'the small men,' the speakers denote themselves. 翼翼 describes the regular, orderly, progress of the horses. 弭—'the ends of a bow.' 魚 is here explained as 'the name of an animal, like a pig, found in the eastern sea, spotted on the back and green underneath.' Mathurst calls it a seal. Perhaps a porpoise may be meant. He explains 魚服 as meaning 'fish skins, or clothes made of seal skins,' but 服 is here used in the sense of 'a quiver.'

In l. 7 it is doubtful whether we should read 日 or 曰. 棘—'urgent.'

St. 6. Here the soldiers project their thoughts forward to the end of their expedition, or at least to the arrival of their relief. The 楊柳 called also simply 楊, is akin to the 蒲柳:—see l. vi. IV. 3. 依依—'the app. of being weak and tender,' so, Yen Ts'an. 來—as in

Ode 8. Narrative. AS ONE OF CONGRATULATION ON THE RETURN OF THE TROOPS FROM THE EXPEDITION AGAINST THE HEE-TUN. While the old interpreters and Choo differ, as in the case of the prec. ode, as to the time to which they refer this, they agree in regarding it as specially designed to felicitate the leader of the expedition,—the awe-inspiring Nan Chung. And so far they are correct. When the former go on, however, to make the general the principal speaker throughout the piece, hearing his words, e.g., in the whole of the first two stanzas, the difficulties of such a view are very great. Kung Ping-chang has pointed this out; but when he refers the first personal pronoun mainly to 'the poet (詩人)' who wrote the piece, I cannot accept his construction. The soldiers of the expedition are the speakers throughout. They speak freely of their own toils and anxieties, while they glorify their general. At the same time they introduce his words, and the words of their own wives, in a manner which is perplexing and unartistic.

St. 1. Ll. 1, 2. The 'carriages' here are those composing the force of the expedition, or of the 1st detachment of it. They proceeded to 'the pasture grounds,' a considerable distance from the capital, and there waited till the other detachment should arrive, and the whole should be put in order for the march. To the distance of 50 li from the capital was called 'the near suburbs (近郊);' for other 50 li, the country was called 'the distant suburbs (遠郊);' and beyond that were the pasture grounds, where herds of horses and cattle were kept. Ll. 8, 4 abruptly introduce the words of the general, in which he informed the troops of the commission which he had received. We must identify the 天子 here with the 王 of l. 7, and other places. To make the 王 king Wán, as Yen Te'an and others do, is quite inadmissible. Ll. 5—8 give another abrupt turn, or rather two abrupt turns, in the composition of the stanza;—6 and 7 are narrative of the next proceedings of the general. 僕夫 is here defined as 御夫, 'the drivers,'—not of the general's war chariot, but of the baggage carriages. 載 is explained by 載其車以行, 'load their carriages for the march.' 謂 is active, 'ordering,' or 'and ordered,' whereas in l. 4 it was passive, 謂我 being—'it was said to me,' or 'I received orders.' The last two lines give what the general said to the drivers. 棘—as in st. 3 of prec. ode. 其 gives to the sentence a hortatory force.

St. 2. Ll. 1, 3 relate to a second detachment of the force, which arrived at the suburbs, probably 'the distant suburbs,' while the other was in the pasture grounds. Ll. 2—6 describe various arrangements for the march to the enemy, and should be extended to both the detachments. The chaos was a banner with tortoises and snakes coiled round them emblemized on it, the top of the staff being surmounted by a man, which has been described, as well as the gu, under I. v. IX. 斯 is the final particle. 旆旆 is descriptive of the flags waving in the wind. L. 7 is taken of the general. 悄悄—憂貌 'the app. of being sorrowful.' 況—see on IV. 8.

St. 3. Here appears by name, the general,—a cadet of the Nan family; but we know nothing of him from any other source but this ode. The 方 of l. 2 must be the 朔 or 北 (northern) 方 of l. 6. It is interesting to see at how early a period the idea of building a wall against the barbarians on the north originated, and began to be acted upon. 彭彭 is descriptive of the number of the chariots. 旂 was the name of a flag on which dragons were emblazoned, one over the other, heading now to the staff, now to the outer edge of the flag (交龍). 央央

 —鮮明, 'fresh and bright.' 赫赫—'the terrible.' 襄 is defined by 除, 'to take away,'
 and many critics suppose the last line to be in the past tense, and the whole stanza to intimate that the name of the general and the array of the expedition were sufficient to awe the Hsienyun to submission without any fighting. L. 5 of the last stanza is sufficient to refute this notion. Wang Yin-che says that, here and in st. 6, 于 is to be taken as—是, 'to be.'

St. 4 brings us to the close of the expedition,
 and the progress of the returning march (comp.
 the last st. of the prec. ode); but as the critic Len says, the notes of time here make us refer the descriptions not to the commencement of the march northwards, and the conclusion of the march home, but to the course of both routes. 思 and 載 are the particles. 塗—坭塗, 'mire.' Ll. 5, 6 must be construed in the past tense. 簡書 refers, no doubt, to the orders from the court about the expedition, written, of course, in those days on tablets of wood.

St. 5. Ll. 1—6,—see on LiliIII, the 1st stanza of which is all but exactly reproduced here. Instead of referring it, as all critics do, to the wife of the general, it seems to me much more natural to refer it to the wives of the soldiers, who then return in the last two lines to their great theme,—the general. 薄,—the particle, as in LiliI. 3. The 'western Jung' would be another barbarous tribe, lying more west than the Hsien-yun.

Ode 9. Narrative. AN ODE OF CONGRATULATION, SPECIALLY INTENDED FOR THE TROOPS ON THEIR RETURN FROM THE EXPEDITION AGAINST THE Hsien-yun. The congratulation is given in a description of the anxiety and longing of the soldiers' wives for their return. I have supposed that one lady speaks throughout, which imparts to the piece more vividness and interest. Choo takes all the stanzas as narrative; but the old interpreters make the first two allusive. It is not worth while discussing the point.

St. 1. L. 1,—see I. x. VI. L. 2. Choo, after Maon, defines 院 by 實貌 'the app. of the fruit,' without saying what that appearance is. The term has the meanings of 'bright,' 'beautiful.' Both in L. 1, 2, 有 must be taken with the characters that follow it in its descriptive use. The pears would be ripe towards the end of the year,—in the 10th month of L. 5. It was not then time for the troops to return, but their wives fancy they might have leisure to do so, as the season would suspend their operations. 嗣—續, 'to continue,' syn. with 繼 陽.

—as in VII. 8. I translate 女心 'my woman's heart,' because 我 takes the place of 女 in the next stanza. 征夫 must here be restricted to the soldiers, or rather to the husband of the speaker, her 'conquering hero,'—diff. from the phrase in III. 1. The last line must be taken as a wish (望之之辭; Yen Ts'ao). The 止 are all the final particle.

St. 2. L. 1, 2. The winter has gone. It is spring again; but the troops still do not return,

 To gather the medlars.
 The king's business must not be slackly performed,
 And our parents are made sorrowful.
 His chariot of sandal wood must be damaged;
 His four horses must be worn out;
 My soldier cannot be far off.
- 4 They have not packed up, they do not come;
 My sorrowing heart is greatly distressed.
 The time is past, and he is not here,
 To the multiplication of my sorrows.
 Both by the tortoise shell and the reeds have I divined,
 And they unite in saying he is near.

though the time for their doing so was come.

St. 4. 匪—不, 'not,' 戰, —as in st. 1 of last ode. Ying-tah takes this line interrogatively. The meaning is the same. 逝—往, 'is gone by.'

卜, —to divine by burning the tortoise shell; 筮, by manipulating the reeds. 偕 has a verbal force, unless we carry it on to the next line;—'both together agree in saying.'

cat. 12, t. 3; 偕, 近, (prop. cat. 13; but Koo-sho contends it has here its original pronunciation) 邇, cat. 15, t. 2.

Ode 10. This is one of the six odes, which are commonly spoken of as having been lost. Choo, however, contends that they were only the names of tunes, played on the organ, and never were pieces to be sung. Before this time, moreover, the 3d ode of the next Book was the 10th of this Book. For the grounds on which he changed the order of the pieces, and maintained that 'the lost pieces' were only names of tunes, see on the 1st and 2d odes of next Book. According to 'the Little Preface,' the subject of the Nan-kas was—'Filial sons admonishing one another on the duty of supporting their parents.'

TITLE OF THE BOOK.—白華之什二

之二. 'Decade of Pih-hwa; Book II. of Part II.' The Pih-hwa is one of the six odes of which we have only the titles, and of which, as I have just stated, Choo contends there never was anything more; whereas, until his time, it was supposed that the odes themselves had been lost during the troubles of the Tsin dynasty, having previously existed like the other 305. Choo derived the reason for his opinion from the E Le (儀禮), Pt. IV., Bk. I, which contains an account of the entertainments in the Districts (鄉飲酒禮). It is there stated that, at a certain point in those entertainments, the musicians took their place on the elevated fang (堂), and 'sang' to their lutes the Luh-ming, the Sze-mou and the Huang-huang choy kua (the first three pieces of the last Book), and that, subsequently, the organ players took their place in the court beneath, and 'played' the Nan-kao, the Pih-kao, and the Hwa-shoo. The former three pieces were sung; these three were only played.—from this Choo contends that Nan-kao, &c., were only the names of tunes. But this conclusion is greater than the premises warrant. Where did the Preface get the account which it gives of the subjects of the missing pieces? They must have existed when the Preface was made, or there must have been then a tradition about these of which the author of it made use. Nan-kao, Pih-kao, &c., are not the names of tunes, but titles evidently, like the other 305, taken from the body of the pieces to which they belonged. Moreover, in the last

par. but one of the Book referred to, we are told that at the close of the music at those entertainments, all the instruments united, while the first three pieces of the Chow Nan and the Shao Nan were sung;—it is not necessary, therefore, to conclude that the organ was played only with tunes to which there were no words.

The Imperial editors of the E Le give their opinion in favour of Choo's view, supporting it mainly by a statement of Sze-ma Te'fen, in his Life of Confucius, that the Sage sang and played over on his lute the 305 pieces: but all which we can thence infer, is that the words of the six pieces were lost in Confucius' time. With regard now to the order in which the pieces are arranged, I have observed on the Nan-kao, that Maou places the third of this Book in the Decade of Luh-ming, before the Nan-kao, the Pih-kao, and the Hwa-shoo. Therein he is wrong. He has 13 odes in his first decade, 13 in his second, and only 4 in his tenth;—taking no count of the six of which we have only the titles. K'ang Ping-chang, agreeing with Maou in reckoning the 3d ode of this Book as the last of the first, transfers the Nan-kao to the beginning of this, and call his second Book the 'Decade of Nan-kao.' I cannot believe that the arrangement of the odes in decades was, as Soo Chieh argues, as old as Confucius.

Ode 1. The Preface says that the subject was—'The unswerving purity of filial sons.'

Ode 2. The Preface says that the subject was—'The harmony of the seasons, and the abundance of the harvests, leading to a large produce of the millet crop.'

Ode 4. This was the 4th of the missing odes, whose subject, acc. to the Preface was—'All things produced according to their nature.' Choo places it here.

Ode 5. Allusive. A FESAL ODE, APPROPRIATE TO THE ENTERTAINMENT OF WOMEN GUESTS, CELEBRATING THE GENEROUS SYMPATHY OF THE ENTERTAINER. The old interpreters referred it to the time of King Ching, and said that he was the 君子, 'princely man,' or host mentioned in it. There is no evidence of this.

Li. 1, 2, in stt. 1, 2. Ch'ing and Ying-tah take 嘉魚 as 'fine fish,' and not any particular kind of fish. That was a mistake. The kèa-yu is the barbel, 'with the body of a carp, and the scales of the rudd.' By 'the south' is intended the country about the Kiang and the Han, where the barbel abounds. Choo construes 烝然 together as a compound initial particle. I have followed him in the construction of 烝 standing alone (II. i. IV, 4; et al.); but here it seems better to allow to it the meaning of 衆, 'all,' 'multitudes,' and then 烝然, 'in multitudes.' Choo is a basket, used to catch fish by placing it over them, after which they are taken out with the hand through a hole in the inverted bottom. This method of fishing was appropriate in the case of the barbel, which bore into the bed and banks of streams in search of its food. The reduplication of the character, which is used verbally, denotes the frequent repetition of the process intimated by it. 汕 is a wicker net, or basket of some peculiar construction, in which the fish were taken and lifted out of the water. These two lines would seem to suggest the idea of the ruler's seeking out extensively men of worth and ability, and raising them from obscurity.

Ll. 1, 2 in st. 3, 4. In st. 3,—see on Ll. IV. In st. 4,—see on I. VII. 5. 思,—the particle.

Ll. 3, 4, in all the st. 君子 is here as in ode 3,—主人 'the entertainer.' 式—as in I. 1. I call it an initial particle, because there is a pause at 賓 衍 is a syn. of 樂 The 以

Ode 7. Allusive. A FESTAL ONE, WHEN THE HOST, THE RULER, CELEBRATES THE VIRTUES OF HIS MINISTERS, THE GUESTS, PROCLAIMS HIS COMPLACENCY IN THEM, AND SUPPLICATES BLESSINGS ON THEM. The old school find in this piece likewise an ode of King Ching; but there is nothing in it to give any hint of its origin, nothing to prevent a wide application of it.

St. 1. The t'ae is the name of a plant called also 沙草 and 夫須, the stalk and leaves of which are three-cornered, with hairy roots. The leaves, when dried, can be made into rain-coats and hats. The name 夫須 is said to mean 'Poor man's need (賤夫所須)'. Medhurst says the lar is 'the coach,' and Williams calls it 'a sow-thistle.' All I can find about it is, that 'its leaves are fragrant, and may be cooked and eaten.' The specification of the hills of the north and the south, embracing between them all the territory of Chow, is understood to be suggestive of the number of the guests,—the many men of worth in the service of the State. L. 3. See on L. I. IV; but 君子 has here a diff. application, and is descriptive of the guests. K'ang Ping-chang says—樂是人君樂之, '樂 refers to the joy of the ruler in his guests.' 邦家—邦 is the State or kingdom; 家, the great families or clans. In all the stanzas the last line must be taken as the language of supplication.—I have translated in the 3d person, because of the 爾 in the 4th stanza.

St. 3. The apposition of 杞 and 李 makes us take 杞 as in I. II. 4, et al.

St. 4. On k'au and nēu, see I. x. II. 2. 遐—何, 'how.' 眉壽, 'longevity of eyebrows,'—as in I. xv. I. 6. Choo gives for the phrase here 秀眉, 'elegant eyebrows,' and Choo Kung-ta'wen remarks that 'long eyebrows are a token of longevity.'

St. 5. The kow and yu have not yet been identified. The former is a high and large tree, resembling a white willow. The fruit hangs down from the extremity of the branches, some inches long, and is of a sweet taste. Wealthy men are fond of planting it in their gardens, and call it the 'tree honey' (木蜜). In the Japanese plates, it would seem to be the Amorpha delcis. The yu is called in the Urh-ya the 'rat tree' (鼠梓). Its wood is said to be 'brittle in wet weather, and strong in dry,' 'like that of the mountain ts'au (山楸), but black.' 黃, 'yellow,' is understood of the white hair of age, and 耇 of the wrinkled, wrinkled face. 艾—養, 'to nourish,' 'to maintain.'

Ode 8. The last of the missing odes. Its subject was—How all things were produced and flourished as was natural and appropriate to them.

Ode 9. Allusive. A FESTAL ODE, ON OCCASION OF THE KING'S ENTERTAINING THE FEUDAL PRINCES WHO HAVE COME TO HIS COURT. Both schools of critics agree in taking this as an ode sung, when the king was entertaining the feudal princes; but with the followers of Maou the subject of it is the praise of the king, the princes being the speakers, while with Choo the subject of it is the praise of the princes, the king being the speaker. The view of Choo seems to me much the more likely.

LL 1, 2, in all the att. 蓼 is descriptive of the southernwood as growing 'long and large.' 蕭—as in I. vi. VIII 2. 斯 is the final particle. 零露—as in I. vii. XX. 漙—'the appearance of the dew on the plant.' 瀼瀼—as in I. vii. xx. 泥泥—'the app. of the dew moistening the plant.' 濃濃—'the app. of the dew lying thickly.' These lines seem to suggest the idea of the happy relations between the king and the princes.

With the dew lying on it so richly!
I have seen my noble men,

May all happiness gather upon them;

LI 3-6, in st. 1. On Choo's view, 君子 must here be the feudal princes, the guests of the king. 寫 is in the sense of 'to disburthen.' Every thing antagonistic to the enjoyment of the feast was cast out of the king's mind.

We may suppose a 且, 'and,' between 燕 and 笑. The last line is perplexing. 是以 gives it the appearance of narrative, which it cannot be. I take those terms as 一宜, as in the translation, or making the whole line the expression of a wish. 譽 and 處 are to be construed as nouns. Choo defines the former by 善聲, 'fame,' and the latter by 安樂, 'tranquillity and joy.' 'Prosperity' gives the idea of the permanence implied in 處 better.

LI 3-6, in st. 2. Maou explains 龍 by 寵, 'favour.' From a passage in the Tso-chuen, under the 12th year of duke Ch'ou, where there is a reference to all the stanzas in this ode, we may conclude that 寵 is the proper reading. 爽, 一差, 'to be in error.' L. 6, -- as in Lxi V. 2.

LI 3-6, in st. 3. Maou makes 燕-安, 'composed,' but in this ode that meaning is out of place. 豈弟, in later times 愷悌, has the meaning in the translation. 豈 is defined by 樂, 'joyful,' and 弟 by 易, 'easy,' 'unconstrained.' L. 5 suggests a warning to the princes to avoid the jealousies which so readily sprang up between them and their brothers.

LI 3-6, in st. 4. 轡 is another name for 轡, 'reins,' indicating that they were made of leather. 革 is explained as the ends of the reins, beyond the place where they were held in the hand of the driver; and 沖沖 is descriptive of these as 'hanging down.' 和 were bells attached to the cross-bar (軾) in the front of a carriage, and 鸞 bells attached to the bits of the horses. Yang-yung, -- as in Lili. IX. 2. Choo says these were ornaments of the carriages of the princes; Maou, that they belonged to the royal carriages. Each writes according to his general interpretation of the ode. 攸一, 'that which,' or 'the place where.'

Ode 10. Allusive. A FESTAL ODE, PROPER TO THE CONVIVIAL ENTERTAINMENT OF THE PRINCE OF THE PRINCES AT THE ROYAL COURT. Both schools agree in this view of the ode.

Ll. 1, 2, in st. 1—3. 湛湛 is descriptive of the abundance of the dew. 陽—日, 'the sun.' 晞—乾, 'dry.' The abundant descent of the dew suggests the idea of the royal favour, seen in feasting the princes. Ch'ing, enlarging on this general idea, finds in the first two st. a further intimation that the favour was so excessive, that the princes could hardly sustain it, but must become drunk and disordered; while in the 3d there is an intimation that, as the trees could sustain the dew without bending, so the princes could drink to the full, without being disordered. But the allusive portions of the ode will not bear such minute handling.

Ll. 3, 4. 厭厭 conveys the ideas of the happiness of the feast, its length, and its fulness (安也, 亦久也, 足也). L. 4 in st. 1 strongly expresses the wish of the king that the fullest justice should be done by the guests to his spirits. 歸 is here equivalent to 'to retire.' From the E. Lo, VI.ii., it appears that at these convivial entertainments, it was a regular formula for the ruler—the host—to say, 'Let all get drunk,' to which the guests responded, 'Yes. We dare not but get drunk.' 在宗 —在宗室, 'in the honourable apartment,' meaning probably the apartment of the emperor, appropriate to such occasions. 載 is the particle, 考—成, 'to complete;' here — to finish the feast. 顯—明, 'intelligent.' 允—信, 'true,' i. e., sincere and loyal. L. 4, in the 3d and 4th stt., is taken of the guests, drinking to the full, and yet not drunk, dis-ordered neither in their minds nor their deportment.

St. 4. 桐椅.—see on Liv. VI. The picture of the fung, in the Japanese plates to the Shō, is that of the gymnasia. 離離 is descriptive of the fruit hanging down elegantly. There was no disorder in its appearance, nor was there any in the deportment of the guests.

TITLE OF THE BOOK.—彤弓之什二 之三. 'Decade of Tung-kung; Book III. of Part II.'

Ode 1. Narrative. A FESTAL ODE, ON OCCASION OF A FEAST GIVEN BY THE KING TO SOME PRINCE FOR THE MERIT HE HAD ACHIEVED, AND THE CONFERRING ON HIM OF A RED BOW. In the Shoo, V. xxviii. 4, we have an instance of the conferring by king Ping on a marquis of Tsin of a red bow, and other gifts, which generally accompanied such a token of merit and of the royal favour. Red was the colour of honour with the dynasty of Chow; a red bow was its highest testimonial of merit, and gave to the prince who received it great prerogatives within the sphere of his jurisdiction.

Ll. 1, 2, in all the ed. 彤弓.—Ying-tah says, 'The bows were lacerated as a protection against frost and wet' In l. 2, we must construe 言 as a mere particle. The explanation of the term throughout the odes by 我, 'I,' adopted by Maou and Ch'ing, is here palpably absurd. They refer l. 2 to the prince recipient of the bow, and make him say, 'I receive and deposit it, as a precious relic for my posterity.' Thus the first two lines in each stanza are the words of the recipient prince; and the last four are the words of the donor-king! We must take the whole stanza as if from the king. The bows had been presented by the proper officer, who prepared them. They had then been received and deposited in the royal treasury or arsenal. 載之 refers to the attaching of the bow to a bamboo frame, to keep it from warping;—see on Ixi. III. 8, where the frame is called 竹閉. 鑾—

LI. 5, 6. 饗 'to feast,' is the name for the highest style of entertainment, where there was the greatest profusion of viands. At the 'entertainments (燕),' drinking was the principal thing; at the 饗 or banquet, the table, or, to speak more correctly, the ground, was loaded with provisions. The 'entertainments' were given later in the day, and might be continued on into the night (see the last ode of last Book); the banquet took place early, and did not admit of easy familiarity. The bells and drums in LI. 5 are the musical instruments employed on the occasion. I can make nothing out of 一朝 here but 'the whole morning.'

Ch'ing takes the phrase 早朝, 'early in the morning;' Lacharme translates it by adieu-temperis; Liu Tsao-k'hen, whose remarks on this piece are considered a master piece of criticism, finds in it the idea of 速, 'quickly,' as if it intimated that the king allowed no interval of time to elapse between his knowledge of merit and his rewarding it. 右 is most simply taken as—尊 'to honour,' the right having been anciently the place of honour.

The rhymes are at 1, 藏 耽 饗 cat. 10; in 2, 載 喜 右 cat. 1, 1, 2; in 3, 昭 莪 好 醕 cat. 3, 1, 2.

Ode 2. Allusive and metaphorical. AN ODE CELEBRATING THE ATTENTION PAID BY THE EARLY KINGS OF CHOW TO THE EDUCATION OF TALENT. This is the account of the ode given in the Preface, and by all the school of Maon. Choo at one time adopted it, but he afterwards changed his mind, and in his work on the Shu he says that it is a festal ode about the royal entertainment of guests. The K'ang-he editors express themselves rather in favour of the old view.—It must be confessed there is almost nothing in the piece to help us to determine the subject of it. The absence of any mention of guests and their entertainment may be accepted against Choo's interpretation.

- 3 Luxuriantly grows the aster-southernwood,
In the midst of that great height.

And he gives us a hundred sets of cowries.
- 4 It floats about,—the willow boat,
Now sinking, now rising again.
Since we see our noble lord,
Our hearts are at rest.

II. 1, 2, in stt. 1—3. 菁菁—nearly as in I. x. VI. 2. The 莪 is a kind of southernwood, called 莪蒿, 羅蒿, and by other names. Luh Kc says that it grows in damp and marshy grounds, tall and bushy, and that in the 3d month, its stalks may be eaten, either raw or cooked. Sen observes that this ode affords sufficient evidence that the plant grows in dry as well as moist situations. The Japanese plates to the She say that the ego is now commonly called 'the aster of Corea (朝鮮菊)'. The white flower with which it is there depicted is very like that of a chrysanthemum.—The growth of the plant, so abundant in different places, is supposed to suggest the idea of the abundance of men of talent, only needing cultivation.

II. 3, 4. 君子, on the view which I have followed, is to be referred to the king,—referred to him visiting or inspecting the schools of the State. That there were such, even in the early days of the Chow dynasty, will hereafter clearly appear. There is a difficulty with 且有儀, as we naturally understand that 樂 and 有 must have the same subject. The difficulty is the same, whether we adopt the old interpretation of the ode, or that of Choo. I. 4, st. 3, on the old view, indicates that the king, having provided for the training of the talents, saw also to their being thereafter furnished with offices and salary. Up to the time of the Tsin dynasty, cowries were current as money in China, nor did such a currency even then immediately cease. According to Choo and many others, 5 shells constituted a p'ang (朋) or set; but Ying-tah gives a diff. account. The shells, he says, were of five classes, according to their size, the largest measuring 4.8 in., and those of the 4th class 1.2 in. Two shells of each of these 4 classes constituted a set, the very smallest not being reckoned.

St. 4. 汎汎—as in I. iii. XIX. The first two lines are metaphorical of the talented youth of the kingdom, without aim or means of culture, until they were cured for by the king.

The rhymes are—in st. 1. 莪 阿 儀, cat. 17; in 2. 沚 喜, cat. 1, 1, 2; in 3. 陵 朋, cat. 6; in 4. 舟 浮 休, cat. 3, 1, 1.

- 1 In the sixth month all was bustle and excitement.
The war carriages had been made ready,
With the four steeds [of each], strong and eager;
And the regular accoutrements had been placed in the carriages.
The Hsien-yun were in blazing force,
And thence was the urgency.
The king had ordered the expedition,
To deliver the royal kingdom.

Ode 3. Narrative. CELEBRATING A SUCCESSFUL EXPEDITION AGAINST THE Hsien-yun, AND ESPECIALLY THE CHARACTER AND CONDUCT OF K'UEI-FOO COMMANDING IT. With this ode commence what are called 'the Ya odes of a changed character' (變小雅). The twenty-two pieces which precede are all, as we saw, referred to the earlier and more prosperous times of the Chow dynasty. This and the thirteen which follow are all referred, by the critics of the old school, to the time of king Suen (宣王), a monarch of great merit, B. C. 826-781, in whose first year the expedition here commemorated took place. Choo says, 'After kings Ching and K'ang, the House of Chow fell into decay. Lo, the eighth king from K'ang, was so oppressive, that the people drove him from the capital, when he took up his residence in Cho (in Hoh Chow, dep. Ping-yang, Shan-se). The Hsien-yun took advantage of this internal disorder, and invaded and ravaged the country, till, on the king's death, his son Tsing (靖), known as king Suen, succeeded to the throne, and despatched against them Yin K'eh-foo, whose successful operations were sung by the writer of this piece.'

We saw on the 7th ode of Bk. I, how troublesome the Hsien-yun were at the commencement of the dyn. of Chow. The ode now before us being narrative, and ending with the return of K'eh-foo from the expedition, all the stanzas but the last must, evidently, be translated in the past tense. The writer had been in the expedition himself, or at least he identifies himself with it.

St. 1. 'The sixth month' is taken by most commentators as the 6th month of the Hsien year, which would be the last month of summer. Whether the month was that of Hsien or Chow, the mention of it was intended to show the urgency of the occasion, it being contrary to rule and custom to undertake any military expedition till the labours of the husbandman were all over. 樓樓 is descriptive of the inquietude of the people (不安之貌);

Mao says, 'of selecting and examining carriages and horses.' That, however, was only one form which the inquietude took. 戎車—'warchariots.' Of these there were five kinds. See the Chow Lo, Pt. III. Bk. XI, on the duties of the 車僕 旂—'to put into good condition.'

K'uei-k'uei—see in I. VII. 5. 常服 denotes the various articles in which the soldiers accoutred themselves for battle. On the march they did not wear them. Whether we are told here that they were conveyed in the war-chariots or in the baggage waggons, I cannot say. 是用—是

以, 'on this account.' 出征—出 is to be taken as an active verb, and we are not to suppose,

as some do, that the king himself took the field.

The 于 is the particle. Ching makes a great blunder with it. Having said that it = 曰, which is allowable, 曰 itself being often used expletively, he proceeds to take that term as the verb 'to say,' and finds in 出征 and the next

line the king's charge to the general. 匡—救

正, 'to save and rectify.' I suppose that by

王國 we are to understand the whole kingdom, and not the royal State merely.

 We completed our accoutrements.
 Our accoutrements were completed,

St. 2. L. 1. 物 is a designation of the horses with reference to their essential quality of strength. In the Chow Le, IV. v., on the duties of the 校人, we are told that on great civil occasions of the State, the horses were given out, all for the same carriage of the same colour (毛馬而頒之), but on occasion of war, 物馬而頒之, 'they thinged the horses, and gave them out, i.e., they gave them out, all for the same carriage of equal strength (齊其力). L. 2. 閑—閑習, 'to train,' 'to exercise.' The 'Complete Digest' expands this line, 閑習之而皆中法則, 'exercised them, and they all did everything according to the proper rule.' L. 5. Thirty le was the regular stage for an army on march. The translation must be supplemented. We can make nothing of 于 more than to treat it as an explosive, but the whole line—日行三十里, as in the translation. L. 8. 天子—王國 in last stanza.

St. 3. 修—長, 'long.' The first two lines are descriptive of the horses. As Ts'ao Soy-chung (曹粹中) says, '修 describes the length of their bodies; 廣, their fulness in the belly and back; and 顙, the largeness of their heads.' 'Large-headed' is the definition of the last character in the Shwuh-wan, though Maou and Choo explain it here simply by 'large-looking.' 薄—as in I. VIII. 5, et al. 膚公—大功, 'great merit,' so, both Choo and Maou. L. 5 and the lines that follow are interpreted of the commander of the expedition, or of him and the leaders under him, as uniting the qualities of strict command (嚴—威), and of cautious prudence (翼—敬) 共—供 'to provide,' 'to discharge.'

St. 4. 茹—度, 'to measure,' 'to calculate';—see on I. III. I. 2. 整—整齊, 'to put in order.' The word intimates the boldness and confidence of the operations of the Hsien-yun. Ll. 2—4 describe further to what extent they had entered the royal territory; but there is a difficulty in identifying Tsaoou, Hwuh, and Fang. Haou is probably the name of the capital. 涇—see on I. III. X. 4. 織 is used for 幟, 'a flag.' 文 and 章 are synonyms; here—'ornaments,' 'blazonry.' The 'birds' are the falcons on the 8;—see I. VIII. 2; but we must not suppose that only that one flag was displayed in this expedition. L. 6,—see on I. VIII. 2, 3. 元—六, 'great.'

St. 5. I believe I have given the meaning of the first two lines correctly, 安 being descriptive of the firm and secure manner in which the carriages were made; but I can hardly tell the force of 如輕如軒. The Shwob-wan defines 輕 by 低, 'low,' and the Ching-yun (正韻) dict. says, that it means, 'a carriage heavily laden in front'; on the other hand, 'a carriage high in front' is called 軒. These war carriages looked neither high nor low, but kept as it were, level, and were well adapted for fighting from. 佶—壯健貌, 'strong-looking.' T'ae-yuen was in the dep. still so named in Shan-se, in the dia. of Yang-k'eh (陽曲). 文武—'civil and military,' tom Marie guen Mercier. 憲—法, 'pattern.'

2 They were gathering the white millet,
 In those new fields,

St. 1. 薄言.—as in I. VIII. 6, et al. 芑 is, by Maou and Choo, taken here for a kind of scurvygrass (苦菜), the leaves of which are edible, both raw and cooked, and which might serve as food both for the men and horses of the expedition. I agree, however, with Yen Ts'an and K'ang Ping-chang, in understanding it of the 芑 in III. II. 1. 3, which is there defined as 白粱粟. Williams calls it—'a sort of white millet.' Why should scurvygrass be gathered in the fields of II. 2. 3, that had been brought under cultivation? The first three lines seem to give us a note of time for the commencement of the expedition, and to indicate the prosperity of King Souen's government, under which the people were bringing the land into cultivation. By 'new fields' are intended fields in the 2d year of their cultivation, and by 菑畝 fields reclaimed that same year. 蒞—臨 'to come and assume one's official duty.' 止, here and elsewhere in the ode, excepting at 3. 1. 3, is the final particle. In I. 3 we have a poetical exaggeration of the force of the expedition, for 3,000 chariots would give a host of 300,000 men. Each war chariot carried 3 mailed warriors, and had attached to it 72 footmen, with 25 men to look after the baggage wagons, cooking, etc.—altogether 100 men. But the whole force of the kings of Chow only amounted to six armies (六軍), of 12,500 men each. To make out the 300,000, some critics suppose that the forces of the feudal States had also been called out for this service; but Choo, Yen Ts'an, and others say that the language is only intended to give us an idea that the force was very large. In I. 3, 師—衆, 'all'; 干—杆, 'to guard,' 'defenders'; 試—肄習, 'trained,' 'practised'; 之 is the expletive. The 'Complete Digest' explains the line by 杆禦之衆有練習之精, 'the multitude of the defenders had been admirably trained.' It is hardly worth while to discuss other interpretations of it. 翼翼—as in I. VII. 3. By 路車 is intended the grand chariot conferred by the king on Fang Shuh, on his designation to the command, probably a 金路;—see the Chow Le, III. xi, on the duties of the 巾車. Various parts of this carriage were painted or lacquered red (爽—赤貌). 簞第—簞第, in I. viii. 1. 魚服—as in I. VII. 5. Both Maou and Choo describe 鈎 as certain metal hooks suspended from the under part of the horses' muzzles by way of ornament, and 膺 as certain trappings belonging to the breast-bands. I agree with K'ang-Ping-chang however, in taking the former term of hooks by which the trappings were attached to the bands (鈎膺—字連言, 則是在胸之鈎以繫樊纓, 不必言繫領之鈎也). 條革.—as in II. IX. 4.

St. 2 I. 3. 中鄉—鄉中, meaning the fields about the villages where the people lived, and which would be fully under cultivation.

Fang Shuh led them on,
The naves of his wheels bound with leather, and his yoke ornamented.
Tinkle-tinkle went the eight bells at the horses' bits.
He wore the robes conferred [by the king];
His red knee-covers were resplendent,
And the gems of his girdle-pendant sounding.

L. 5. see I. VIII. 3. L. 8. 軹—轂, 'the naves leather, which was then lacquered red. 衡 is the yoke at the end of the pole. Both Maou and Choo explain 錯 by 文, 'ornamented';— Ying-tah says 'various things (雜物: 錯—雜) set in it.' 瑋瑋 and 有瑋 are descriptive of the sounds given out by the bells, and by the gems of the girdle. On his appointment to the command of this expedition, we must suppose, Fang Shuh had had one degree added to his rank, and in consequence he now wore knee-covers of a light vermillion colour. The king's were of a deep vermillion tinge; in those worn by princes of States there was a dash of yellow (黃朱). The triangular gem at the top of the girdle-pendant was called 珩, and was green, of the colour of an onion (蔥).

The 瑋 is put here for the gems of the pen-dant generally.

St. 3. 猷 is descriptive of the rapid flight of the bird. The 隼 is now commonly called 鵟, which, acc. to Williams, is 'a kind of kite or gield.' 戾—至, 'to,' 'reaching to.' 爰

嗶 expresses the multitude of the chariots, and 隆隆 the completeness of their array. 霆

威而服). Both the 3d and 4th stanzas are, to my mind irreconcilable with such a view. Probably the campaign was soon over, as the Ma found they were no match for the force that was brought against them; but there was fighting in the first place.

Ode 5. Narrative. CELEBRATING A GREAT HUNTING, PURSUED OVER BY KING SHU ON OCCASION OF HIS GIVING AUDIENCE TO THE

FEUDAL PRINCES AT THE EASTERN CAPITAL OF LOH. One of the great undertakings of the famous duke of Chow was the building of Loh, a few miles from the pres. city of Loh-yang. King Woo had intended to fix there the capital of his kingdom, but his immediate successors did not carry out his idea. So long as the dyn. was vigorous, however, the kings made progresses to Loh, and there gave audience to the lords of the States. This practice, which was fallen into disuse, was revived by Seuen, the more emboldened to do so by the renown and strength acquired by the two victories commemorated in odes 3 and 4. He met the lords at Loh, and took the opportunity to have a great hunting in that part of the country, in which they shared.—The transitions of time are not indicated in the stanzas, but I have translated them in the past tense. The author writes as if he had been an officer in the retinue of the king.

St. 1. 攻—堅, 'strong.' It is the verb, 'to put in order,' in the passive voice. 同—齊 'matched,' i.e., in their swiftness, which was the point attended to in preparing for hunting expeditions. Lang-kung is descriptive of the appearance of the horses being in good condition (充實). 言 is the particle, and not, as Kuang argues, the verb, expressing the order of the king. So, in next stanza. By 'the east' is intended Loh, 'the eastern capital.'

St. 2. Maou takes 甫 in the sense of 大, 'great,' so that 甫草—'large, grassy plains.' Choo, however, follows Ch'ing, who takes the characters as—圃田之草 'the grassy country about Poo-t'uan,' which was one of the eleven mares of the kingdom,—in the pres. dis.

of Chung-mow (中牟). It was afterwards included in the State of Ch'ing, which was not yet constituted. 田 is read tien, 'to hunt.' 狩 is properly the name of the winter hunt, as 苗 (next st.) is of the summer. Interchanged as the characters are here, we must take them in the general sense of 'to hunt.'

St. 2. 之子, 'these gentlemen,' meaning the officers (有司), who had charge of the arrangements for the hunt. They had to select or tell off (選一數) the carriages, and their attendants that were to take part in it, and shou-shan gives the sound of their voices in doing so. The specification of this is understood as intimating that no other sounds were heard, such was the order with which the proceedings were conducted. In 于苗, 于 is the particle; but we must give it the force of 'for.' L. 3. See I. VIII. 2. 搏獸, 'to seize the animals.' 敖 was properly the name of a hill, but is here used for the country about it. It was in the prev. dia. of Yung-yang (榮陽).

St. 4 relates the arrival of the princes of the States to do homage to the king, which preceded the actual hunting, the preparations for which are described in the previous stanza. 奕奕 describes the app. of their arrival, from diff. quarters, one after another. Yen Ts'an makes it — 大, 'large,' descriptive only of the horses. Han Ying explained it by 盛貌, 'numerous.' L. 3 mentions two of the articles of dress worn by the princes. The 'red' of the knee-covers and slippers was the light vermillion, mentioned in st. 2 of last ode. How the gold was placed on the slippers I cannot tell. Lacharme wrongly says the slippers were woven with thread of gold. 會 was the name appropriate to a meeting of princes, called by the king, on any exigency arising. 同 was the name for a general meeting of them, which ought to have taken place every 12 years. This meeting was neither of them, but the attendance at it made the writer think of them. 有繹 — in trains long drawn out, as if a cocoon were being unwound.

St. 5. We come now to the actual hunting. The 決 was a sort of thimble fitted on the right thumb, to assist in drawing the bow-string;

 And the arrows went forth like downright blows.
- 7 As if at their ease, the horses neighed,

 The footmen and charioteers created no alarms;

 Truly a princely man is [the king];
 Great indeed are his achievements!

the 拾 was an armlet of leather, fitted on the left arm, as a protection and help in discharging the arrow. 飲 is defined here by 利比 and 便利, 'to be made convenient.' L. 2 means that the size of the arrow was adapted to the strength of the bow. 'The archers' are here especially the princes. 柴 appears in the Shwob-wên with 手 instead of 木, meaning 'a pile.' The game was all piled up, prior to its distribution for various objects, and among different parties.

St. 6. 猗—偏猗不正, 'inclining to one side, and not straight.' The art of driving consisted principally in keeping the outside horses right. The nominative to 失 is 兩驂—'They were not allowed to deviate from the rules for their galloping.' 如破—like splitting. The arrows went forth, as sure of their mark as if they had been axes or hammers directed against something immediately beneath the hand.

St. 7. The hunting is over, and this st. describes what followed. In the first three lines we have the return from it without clamour or confusion. 蕭蕭 represents the neighing of the horses;—this was heard, but nothing else. 悠悠—the long and slow procession of the flags. 驚—驚擾, 'to terrify and disturb.' The last line shows how the king had contented himself with a small portion of the game.

St. 8. L. 2. 有聞 refers to the sound of the horses neighing, the officers telling off the men, &c.; but all without clamour (無聲). Lines 3 and 4 ascribe all the order and success to the king. 允 and 展 are synonyms, signifying 'truly.'

1 A lucky day was mow,
And we sacrificed on it to the Ruler [of horses], and prayed.
Our hunting carriages were good;
The team for each was in fine condition.
We would ascend the greatest heights,
And pursue the herds [of the game].

2 A lucky day was käng-woo.
We had selected our horses;
The haunts of the animals,
Where the does and stags lay numerous,
The grounds by the Ts'eih and the Ts'eu,—
That was the place for the son of Heaven [to hunt].

Ode. 6. NARRATIVE. CELEBRATING A HUNTING EXPEDITION BY KING SEUEN ON A SMALLER SCALE, ATTENDED BY HIS OWN OFFICERS, AND WITHIN THE ROYAL DOMAIN.

St. 1. Mow, it is said, was 'a hard day.' The cycle days were distinguished into 'hard (剛)' and 'soft (柔).' The 'hard' were the odd days 1, 3, 5, etc., and the 'soft' were the even. The former were deemed lucky for all business abroad; the latter for all home business. A hunting expedition of course must be begun on a hard day. Reasoning from käng-woo in next stanza, we must conclude that the full name of the day here was mow-shih (戊辰). It is interesting to observe that the expedition was commenced with a religious service. In the Chow Le, IV. v., on the duties of the officer who had the care of the royal studs (校人), we are told that in spring, he sacrificed to the 'Father of horses,' the Spirit presiding in the four stars, 房, 心, 尾, 箕, of Scorpio, 'the dragon horse of the sky,' in summer, to the first breeder of horses; in autumn, to him who first subjected horses to the chariot; and in winter, to the Spirit ill-affected to horses. By 伯, 'the chief,' in the text is understood the first of these ob-

sacrificed to—the Father of horses.' Then 既禱—因祭而所禱之,—as in the translation. Yen Te'an says the four lines that follow are the words of the prayer, but that does not appear from anything in them; and Ying-tah thinks that they are the result of the prayer, and would translate them in the past tense indicative. They seem to me to supply the considerations which led to the prayer. 羣醜,—'herds multitudinous.'

St. 2. 差,—'to choose;—as once already. The difficulty with lines 3—6 is to find an active verb, which may indicate the action of the hunters. Choo and others take 之從 in l. 3 as—從之, 'we pursued them.' This leaves 漆沮 standing quite unconnectedly. Maou takes 從 as the preposition—'from,' and explains ll. 5, 6. 'From the Ts'eih and the Ts'eu we pursued the game, and forced it to the place of the Son of Heaven.' The construction which I have adopted has not occurred to any of the critics. 11

- 4 We have bent our bows;
We have our arrows on the string;

[There were] those officers engaged on the commission.
Pained were we and toiled in the open fields;

2, 4, 5 are in apposition, and together form the subject of 1, 6. L. 5 = 'the hunting grounds of the Ts'ieh and the Ts'ien.' 同—聚, 'to be collected together' 鹿 is the female deer; 鹿 must be translated as well;—see Ying-tah is 鹿. Yu-yu = 衆多, 'to be numerous.' 榛 沮.—see on the Shoo, III. I. P. I. 74. The specification of those streams shows that the hunting was conducted within the domain of the western capital.

St. 3. 中原—原中, 'the middle of the plains.' L. 3 must be understood of the animals of the chase. The meaning which I have adopted for 1, 3 is given by Yen Ts'ien from Ts'ien Wan-tan (錢文子). Three animals together were called 羣; two, 友. L. 5 is evidently to be understood of the officers engaged in the hunt, and their attendants. Maou erroneously takes 率 as 驅, 'we drove,' and refers 左右 to the animals on the right and left. 燕 = 樂, 'to pleasure.'

St. 4. 挾, 'to hold in the armpit,' is here used of the holding the arrow on the string between the thumb and the first finger. L. 5.—see on L. XIV. 1. 殪, 'to die,' 'to do to death.' The dict., probably after Maou, says, 'to die from a single arrow.' The text does not compel us to such an exaggeration. 御—as in III. 6. 醴—'sweet or newly distilled spirits.'

 And melancholy is their cry of gaou-gaou.
 There were they, wise men,
 Who recognized our pain and toil;
 If they had been stupid men,
 They would have said we were proclaiming our insolence.

This was used at entertainments given by the king. The last two lines express the generosity of the king, who would share the spoils of the chase with his guests, when there was poured out (酌) for them the cup of spirits.

Ode 7. Allusive. THE PEOPLE, BREATHING INTO COMMUNITIES UNDER KING SEUEN, PRAISE THE OFFICERS BY WHOM THIS WORK HAD BEEN ACCOMPLISHED. Such is the account of this ode given in the Preface, and by the school of Maou. Choo takes a diff. view of it, interpreting 之子 of the people as addressing one another;—on which see below. He also doubts whether this and the three odes that follow should be referred to the time of king Seuen. With this ode, as with many other odes, the translator has only a choice of difficulties, and must adopt the view which seems to him the least unlikely.

Lt. 1, 2 in all the stanzas. 鴻—see on I. iii, XVIII; 鴈—see on I. iii, IX. 2. It does not seem worth while to introduce into the translation the distinction of these birds as large and small. The 于 is the particle. 肅肅其羽—as in I. x. VIII. Gau-gau represents the melancholy notes of geese, seeking rest and finding none. The geese, in the various conditions in which they appear, are introduced as illustrative of the condition in which the people found themselves, or, in st. 2, had been.

Lt. 3—6, st. 1. It has been mentioned above that Choo understands by 之子 'the dispersed people thus addressing one another; but in the last st. of ode 8 we have the same words—之子于征;—and the meaning of them there seems to be decisive against his view. The people appear, scattered about, with no houses to live in, and we are to suppose that the king had commissioned certain officers to go through the country, to collect them again into communities, and direct them in building houses for themselves. L. 4 describes the misery of the scattered people. If we interpret it of the officers, as Ying-tai, Yen Ta'an, and others do, we lose the analogy between the corresponding lines of st. 2. We must suppose that 劬勞 is the subject of 爰及矜一憐, 'to pity,' 矜人, 'men in a pitiable condition.'

St. 1. A low wall is called 垣. K'ang Ping-chang observes that 于垣 indicates the work of the officers in deliberating, determining the ground, and leading on the people to build. The walls were built of earth and lime, beaten together in a frame, layer after layer. The frame was ten cubits in length, and 5 frames together formed a 堵, so that walls to the extent of 100 堵 were 5,000 cubits in length. 究終, 'at length,' 'in the end.'

Ll. 2-5 in st. 3 are taken as in praise of the officers, who had manifested a sympathy with the people, and an appreciation of their sufferings, which, if they had not been wise men, they would not have done. The whole piece is perplexing and obscure.

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 羽野, 寡, cat. 5, 1. 2; in 2, 澤, 作, 宅, cat. 5, 1. 3; in 3, 噦, 勞, 驕, cat. 2.

Ode 8. Narrative. DESCRIBING THE ANXIETY OF SOME KING—SUPPOSED TO BE KING SEUEN—NOT TO BE LATE AT HIS MORNING LEVEE. The Preface says that while this ode is in praise of king Seuen, it was also intended to admonish him; and, as there is nothing of admonition in the language, the critics of the old school have various ingenious methods of explaining why that character should be attributed to the piece;—with which we need not trouble ourselves. Each stanza is to be taken as a colloquy of the king, waking now and again, in his anxiety not to be late.

All the stanzas 其 (read 其, 1st tone) is the particle at the end of interrogative lines, as in Lix. III. L. 2 央—中, 'the middle;' 艾—盡, 'to be completed;' 鄉—向, 'verging toward.' L. 3. The 庭燎 was a large torch kept burning all night (inside the entrance gate, leading to the hall), of links or fagots bound together,—100 in the court-yard of the king's palace, 50 in that of a duke's, &c. The prince and nobles repaired to the king's hall of audience at early dawn, when the king would be ready to receive them. The royal personage in this piece awakes again and again, and judges of the time from what was, or what he fancied must be, the state of the great torch. 晰晰 describes its appearance when well spent, and 有燁, its app. as shining dimly through its smoke;—this meaning of 燁 does Ode 9. Allusive. BEWAILING THE DISORDER OF THE TIMES, AND THE GENERAL INDIFFERENCE TO IT, AND TRACING IT TO THE SLANDERS ENCOURAGED BY THE CONDUCT OF MEN IN AUTHORITY. The Preface says the piece was intended to admonish and correct King Seuen. The critics of the old school differ so much among themselves in assigning the historical ground for such a view (see, e. g., Yen Ts'an and K'ang Ping-chang, in loc.), that I shall not enter on any discussion of it.

LL3,4, in st. 1,2, and 1,3 in st. 3. Choo supposes, with great probability, that two lines are lost at the commencement of st. 3, corresponding to the two with which st. 1,2 begin. L. 3,—as in IV. 3. 揚—揚起, 'springs its wings and rises.' 率—循, 'to follow,' 'to keep along.' The first 4 lines in st. 1 and 2 seem to allude to the troubled and uncertain state of the kingdom, while the first 3 in st. 3

Ode 10. Metaphorical. CERTAIN MORAL LESsons. The Preface says this piece was intended to instruct King Seuen, but it does not say in what. Nor is there any agreement among the critics about the lessons hid in its aphorisms.
In the first two lines of each stanza, Chao finds the lesson that sincerity cannot be hid (see the Doctrine of the Mean, XVI. 5); in II. 3, 4, that right reason and goodness are not restricted to any one place; in II. 5—7, that where we love, there may also be something to be hated; and in II. 8, 9, that where we dislike, there may yet be something good.

鶴 is the crane,—proverbial, in all its varieties, for its loud and sonorous voice. 臯 is explained by Maou as—'a marsh.' Ch'ing, better, calls it 'a pool in a marsh.' The '9th pool' is equivalent to the centre of the marsh. 樹檀,

TITLE OF THE BOOK.—祈父之什二
之四. Decade of K'e-foo, Book IV, of Part II.

Ode 1. Narrative. THE SOLDIERS OF THE ROYAL GUARD COMPLAIN OF THE SERVICE IMPOSED ON THEM BY THE MINISTER OF WAR. This place is to be referred to the concluding years of Seum's reign, when both his character and his administration had deteriorated. In his 30th year, B. C. 788, his army had sustained a great defeat from some of the northern tribes, which he made preparations to avenge in the following year. The regular levies for such a service being insufficient, he ordered his own guards, it is supposed, to join the force for the north; and we have in the ode their complaint as being called to a duty which did not belong to them,—directed nominally against the minister of War, but really against the king. Choo, indeed, makes the ode to be the complaint of the army generally (予六軍之士); but the soldiers of the guard (司右虎賁之屬) are more likely to be described as 'the talons and teeth of the king.' So, K'ang-shing, the critics of the old school, and the K'ang-ho editors.

St. 1. 祈父 is the same as 圻父, in the Shoo, V. x. 13, q. v. Ying-tah observes that anciently 畿圻 and 祈 were used interchangeably. In the Chow Le, IV. ii. it appears as the duty of the minister of war (大司馬) to define the boundaries of the royal domain and of the various States (制畿封國); hence the name given to him in the text. 恤,—'circumstances of sorrow,'—as in I. IX. 4. Those circumstances were the going on a distant expedition with all its toils.

St. 2. 底至, 'to come to'; and 底止—'to come to a stop.'

St. 5. 尸主, 'to preside over,' 'to manage'; 饗, 'dressed food'; so that 尸饗—to manage the cooking, i.e., to do all the work of that, procuring firewood, carrying water, &c., which it was the business of the son to do for his mother. Underneath the complaint here, there is, perhaps, a reference to an ancient rule, inferred by the critics from various examples in the Awak and Tao-chien, that an only son, whose parents were old, was not required to serve in the army. This, however, could not be the case with all the soldiers of the guard, though the existence of it with some of them served to aggravate the hardship of the service now required from them.

Ode 2. Narrative. THE WRITER EXPRESSED HIS GRIEVANCE AT THE ABANDONMENT OF PUBLIC LIFE BY AN OFFICER WHOM HE ADMIRER. This ode also is referred to the concluding years of Senan's reign, when men of worth, disgusted by his neglect, were leaving him. The writer is supposed to describe his own feelings by way of contrast to the king's indifference, condemning and admonishing him.

St. 1. 皎皎 is descriptive of the white colt, as pure and entirely white (潔白). Such a colt was the one which the officer who was in the writer's eye was accustomed to ride on. 場, see on I. xv. 1. 7. It means properly the stack-ground, where in the autumn the produce of the fields was stored, used in the spring and summer as a vegetable garden; so that here 場—圃 苗 is used not only of grain in the first stages of its growth, but of the young growth of grass and vegetables. 繫 is to tether by the foot (絆其足); 維, to fasten by a string attached to the neck or breast (繫其鞵). L. 4. The detaining the colt for a morning was but a small matter, but it shows how the writer longed to have his master always with him. 伊人, 'this man,'—the officer who was bent on retiring from public life. The piece was made after he had consummated his purpose; but every stanza is complete in itself, and must be translated in the present tense. 於焉—於此, 'here,' or 於是, 'hereon.' Wang Yin-che gives to 焉 alone this meaning in many passages. 逍遙—as in I. vii. V. 2, though the idea of sauntering about is not so prominent as that of being at one's ease.

- 3 If [you with] the brilliant white colt
 Would brightly come to me,
 You should be a duke, you should be a marquis,
 Enjoying yourself without end.
 Be on your guard against idly wandering;
 Deal vigorously with your thoughts of retirement.
- 4 The brilliant white colt
 Is there in that empty valley,
 With a bundle of fresh grass.
 Its owner is like a gem.
 Do not make the news of you rare as gold and gems,— Indulging your purpose to abandon me.

St. 2. 藿, 'the leaves of pulses, or beans' is synonymous with 苗 in the last stanza.

St. 3. L. 3 requires that we understand 11.1, 2, not of the colt, but of its master. 賁 (se) 然, 'brightly,'—as if, where such a man came, he brightened every thing. 思 is here the particle; but not in L. 6. L. 3 expresses the value which the writer set upon his friend, and what honours he would confer upon him, if he had only the power, as the reward of his merit. 逸 (一佚) 豫, 'idle ease,' but not in a bad sense. 慎—勿過, 'do not go to excess,'

'guard against,' and this meaning goes on to 勉 in the next line, — 'strive against.'

St. 4. The officer here appears with his purpose carried into effect,—living in retirement; but the writer still hopes that he will retain some connection with himself. 金玉 are used as verbs. 音, — 'news (相聞).'

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 苗, 朝, 遙, cat. 2; in 2, 藿, 夕, 客, cat. 5, 1. 6; in 3, 來, 期, 思, cat. 3, 1. 1; in 4, 谷, 束, 玉, cat. 3, 1. 3; 音, 心, cat. 7, 1. 1.

ODE 3. Metaphorical. SOME OFFICER, WHO HAD WITHDRAWN TO ANOTHER STATE, FINDS HIS EXPECTATIONS OF THE PEOPLE THERE DISAPPOINTED, AND PROPOSES TO RETURN TO THE ROYAL DOMAIN. This piece is said in the Preface to have been in condemnation of King Seuen, but there is nothing in it which should make us connect it in any way with his reign. The view of Maou and Ching, who find in it the case of a wife put away by her husband, and proposing in consequence to return to her own family, is too

absurd to be dwelt on. Neither Yen Ts'an nor the K'ang-ho editors have a word to say in its favour. And Choo is not quite correct in referring the piece to some one among the people. The speaker in it has 'a clan (族)' and must have been some high officer.

Ll. 1, 3, in all the stt. These lines are metaphorical,—say some, of the people who would not treat the speaker well; but Yen Ts'an has observed that the yellow bird, the object of men's or the royal domain. 蔽芾, —as in I. ii. V. 蓂, —as in I. xv. I. 6. 蓬 is perhaps the dock. The common name for it is that which I have given (羊蹄菜). Its leaves may be eaten in times of great scarcity. The Japanese figure of the 蓄 is that of the pokeweed, —the physalis peruviana, the leaves of which are said to be eaten, when very young, even in the United States.

II. 3—6, in st. 1, 2. The party on whom the refugee threw himself had married some member of his family, perhaps a sister, thus forming the affinity by marriage (昏姻). With him he thought at first he would find a permanent home (居) and then he would have been content with a temporary refuge (宿). 音, —as in I. iii. IV. 4. The 思 in 思復, is no more than the 言, —an expletive particle.

In II. 3—6, of st. 3 it would appear that the refugee's friend had contracted a new marriage, displacing his relative from her proper place. The 爾 in I. 4 seems to imply that the new connection had been formed, and therefore I translate 求 by 'you seek to please.' 特—匹, 'a mate.' The last two lines are quoted in the Ana. XII. 2, but not so as to give any clear indication of their meaning. Choo thus expands them:— 'Although it is not on account of her riches that you despise my poverty, it is yet because of her newness that you are different from what you were (雖實不以彼之富而厭我之貧, 亦祇以其新而異於故耳) 成—誠, which is given in the Analects, 'though indeed' 祇 (or 祇)—適, 'is just is.'

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 霽故, 居家, est. 5, t. 1; in 2, 蓬, 宿, 音, 復, est. 5, t. 3; in 3, 蓄, 特, 富, 異, est. 1, t. 2.

Ode 5. Narrative. ON THE COMPLETION OF A PALACE; DESCRIPTION OF IT, AND GOOD WISHES FOR THE BUILDER AND HIS POSTERITY. The old interpreters all say that the builder was King Senen; and accepting their view, which is in itself not unlikely, though there is no evidence for it in the language of the piece, we must refer the time of the composition to the early period of his reign. This and the next ode, it is said, follow several others condemnatory of Senen, the compiler being unwilling to displease him from the Sha under a cloud, for the services which he had rendered to the House of Chow were very great. The piece was probably made for a festival on the completion and dedication of the palace;—as Choo says, 築室既成 而燕飲以樂之因歌其事

St. 1. The first four lines are descriptive of the situation and appearance of the palace as a whole. Even the critics of his school have abandoned the view of Maou who makes 1, 2, 3
 descriptive of the character of king Seuen.
 秩秩有序, 'orderly,' 'graceful' 干,
 —as in I. ix. VI. 1. 'The southern hill' is the Chung-nan of I. xi. X., which rose right to the south of the western capital of Chow. Maou defines 幽幽 by 深遠, 'deep and distant.'
 L. 3 is taken of the foundations of the palace,
 like the roots of a clump of bamboos, not spreading about, but going deep into the earth; and L. 4, of the upper portion of it. The last three lines are a prayer that it might be the abode of concord and harmony. 式 is the particle; 猶
 —謀, 'to plan,' 'to scheme.' As Yen Ts'un has it, 願其入居此室之後, 兄弟 各相和好, 無有相圖者矣

St. 2 and 3 describe mainly the process of the building, and more particularly of what we may call the chambers or private portions of it,
 which formed the residence of the king. 似
 嗣, 'to inherit,' 'to continue in succession.'
 Neither Medhurst nor Williams gives this meaning of the character; but it is found elsewhere in the Sha. 妣, 'a deceased mother,' is here used of female ancestors generally, and we need not refer it, as K'ang-shing does, to K'ang Yuen, the ancestress of the House of Chow. 祖妣 would be the proper order of the words, but the feminine term is put first because of the requirements of the rhyme. 百 堵, —see on III. VII. 2. 爰, like 於 in II. 1.
 2, —'here.' Either 居 or 處 will admit the meaning of 'to sit,' which I have given to the latter. In st. 3, 約一束, 'to bind,' with reference to the boards forming the frames into which the earth and lime, which were to be beaten together so as to form the walls, were poured. 閣閣, is descriptive of the frames

raised exactly one over another: 橐橐 of the noise of the pounding. 攸 in ll. 3, 4, 5 has the sense of 所除去 'to be kept away'. 芊—尊大, 'honourable and great.'—By which wind and rain will be kept away, and bird and rat, the place which our noble lord magnifies. By 君子 we are to understand the king.

St. 4 is understood of the hall, or state public room, from which the private apartments of the palace led off; but I cannot undertake to point out the different parts or appearances of it which are intimated by the separate lines. 斯

may be taken as 則:—If you liken it to a man on tip-toe, then his reverence (翼—敬) appeared in it; and so in the other lines. Compare the account of Confucius in Ann. X. iii. 3. The man is not standing on tiptoe, but moving forwards, rising on his toes, in the height of his reverence. 棘—急, the arrow in rapid flight, and so going straight. 革—as in the Shoo, I.

3. 翬—雉, a pheasant, with reference to its variegated plumage.

St. 5 庭 is here the open court, in front of the sleeping apartments, described as 殖殖—平正, 'level and smooth. 有覺 describes the pillars round it as 'high, large, and straight.' Ll. 3, 4 describe the chambers, where they looked out on the light (其正), and where they were dark on each side of the door in them (其冥). 噲噲—快快, 'pleasant, 'lightsome.' 噦噦—深廣之貌 'deep and wide-like.'

In st. 6 we have the king sleeping and dreaming. 莞 is a mat woven of rushes, over which is laid one of fine bamboo work (簟). 乃—and so (將然之詞); but from this point the author expresses his wishes—the critics say, his prayers. The first 寢 is a noun, 'bed-chamber'; the second a verb, 'to sleep.' The critics say that 占 must here be understood of the king's divining his dreams for himself; but the 我 stands in the way of such a view. 羆 is said to be like a bear, but with longer head, and higher, of immense strength. I take 虺 with Yen Ts'an to be 虺, which Williams says is 'an adder, cobra, or venomous serpent.' Chao says it is 'a serpent with a small neck, and large head, the body like a variegated ribbon, sometimes 7 or 8 cubits long.'

St. 7. 大人 is an officer of the department of the grand diviner (大卜之屬); perhaps that officer himself.

Sts. 8, 9 are translated by Morrison in his dictionary, under the character 女, but not quite correctly. They show very clearly the different estimation in which boys and girls were held in ancient China, even as they are held at the present day. 載 is the initial particle. 寢衣

and 弄 have all a passive, or hoped sense.

The boy is placed on a couch,—to do him honour; the daughter on the ground, to show her meanness. 裳, 'the lower garment,' must be taken for robes generally. The boy is to be arrayed in full dress, while a swaddling cloth

(楊一襟) will be sufficient for the girl. 璋 is a piece of jade fashioned into the shape of a half-mace (半圭), used in worshipping spirits, and as a symbol of dignity. The boy gets out of these to play with, while the girl gets only a tile, the emblem of her future employment, when, on a tile upon her knee, she will have to twist the threads of hemp. The cry of the boy is loud (喤—大).

Li. 6, 7 of st. 8 are descriptive of the sons

whom they shall be grown up, and brilliant

(皇—煌煌) in the red apron of the king, or of the princes of a State. 室家 is here a designation for a State or the kingdom (國與天下之通稱). One of the sons would be 王, king; the others could be 君, lords of States;—in either case they could call all the 'houses and clans' in their dominions their own. Very different is the future of the daughters, as sketched out in st. 9. 儀—善, 'good,' in contrast with 非. Morrison, however, greatly errs and exaggerates, when he translates l. 5 by 'She is incapable either of evil or good.' To be obedient comprises the whole duty of woman. She ought not in the family to take the initiative. As Choo says, 'If a daughter do nothing wrong (無非), that is enough. That she should be distinguished for what is good, (有善) is not an auspicious thing to be desired for her.' She has her duties of housewifery, which are expressed in l. 6, and she must not in the language to make us refer the piece to king Seun; but it suits the early period of his reign well enough, and shows how under him prosperity was again revisiting all the departments of the kingdom's wealth.

St. 1. It might have been said in some previous reigns that the king had no flocks and herds;—it could not be said now. There were 300 sheep in a flock, and we are left to suppose there were many such flocks. There were 30 black-tipped (黃牛黑脊曰犛) cattle, and we are left to suppose there were many more that could be otherwise described. Li describes the sheep as not butting one another with their horns. The Shyoh-wan defines teih-ssai by 和, 'harmonious.' Shih-shih is explained as in the translation, the motion of the ears being indicative of health.

St. 2. 訛—動, 'to move.' The first three lines show us the flocks left to follow their own pleasure, moving about as their inclination prompted them, not driven about or thwarted by their keepers; and herein was the secret of their good condition. The next three introduce the herdsmen, at their ease as much as their charges. The rain cloak (蓑), made of bamboo or palm leaves, and the hat made of split bamboo (笠), still meet us everywhere in China. 何—揭 'to carry in the hand.' 物—see on iii. 111. 2. We must suppose that here is a case of 毛物, the arrangement of the animals according to their colour. 牲 is a victim for sacrifice. This use of the sheep and cattle is specified merely as one of the various uses for which they served.

St. 3. Here the herdsmen are mentioned first. They had leisure, through their wise management of their charge, to collect firewood for themselves, and to snare or shoot birds and ani-

- 1 Lofty is that southern hill,
With its masses of rocks!
Awe-inspiring are you, O [Grand-] master Yin,
And the people all look to you!

薪 and 蒸 are distinguished, as in the translation. Yen Ts'an interprets L3 of the work of the shepherds in dividing the males and females of their charge, and numbering them, but it stands in too close a connection with L2 to admit of such a view. 以—取, 'to take,' 'to bring.' 雌雄—'females and males;'
 often used for 禽獸, 'birds, and beasts of chase.' L. 6. 騫 is defined by 虧, 'failure,' 'deficiency,' 'injury;' and 崩 by 羣疾,
 'sickness of the herd.' This meaning is not given in the dictionary. The word properly means 'a mountain falling or slipping,' and is here applied to 'a flock going to ruin.' 肱
 here denotes the whole arm. 旣—synonymous with 畢, 'all. 升—入牢,—as in the translation.

St. 4. Chao says he does not understand the interpretation of the dreams here given, but gives on other authority than his own that which I have followed. 乃—as in the prece-

eds. 衆 is taken of 'multitudes' of men, which gradually give way (維) to swarms of fishes.
 The chao (see I. VIII. 2, 3) was used, it is said, to collect the people in the suburbs and the country; the ya (see I. IV. IX. 2), those in the more thickly inhabited parts; so that the former dissolving into the latter gave the idea of increasing numbers. 室家,—as in st. 8 of last
 ode. 溱溱—the app. of multitudes.

A fire burns in their grieving hearts;
They do not dare to speak of you even in jest.
The kingdom is verging to extinction;—
How is it that you do not consider the state of things?

- 2 Lofty is that southern hill,
And vigorously grows the vegetation on it!
Awe-inspiring are you, O [Grand-] master Yin,
But how is it that you are so unjust?
Heaven is continually redoubling its afflictions;
Deaths and disorder increase and multiply;

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 羣 尊, cat. 13;

Ode 7. Allusive and narrative. A LAMENTATION OVER THE MISERABLE STATE OF THE KINGDOM, DEROGATING THE INJUSTICE AND CARELESSNESS OF THE GRAND-MASTER YIN AS THE CAUSE OF IT, AND BLAMING ALSO THE CONDUCT OF THE KING. This piece, and all that follow to the end of the Part, are assigned, by the old interpreters, to the reign of king Yew (幽王, B. C. 780–770), though the evidence for such a fixing of their date is far from sufficient, excepting in regard to four or five of them. Yew was son to king Seven, but was worse than his father in the days of his decline, and resembled him in none of the higher qualities which ennobled the earlier period of his reign. His comparatively short reign ended in his violent death, and immediately after there took place the removal of the royal residence to the eastern capital,—the great event in the history of the Chow dynasty.

St. 1. The southern hill is the same as that in V. 1. 節 describes its appearance as 'lofty,' and 巖巖 the app. of the masses of rocks on it. What that mountain, with its frowning rocks, was among other hills, that the grand-master Yin was among other men, in the estimation of the writer. 尹 was the clan name of a great family in the royal domain, members of which, through successive reigns, were charged with the highest functions of the state. Keih-foo of III. III., was a Yin, and the minister, against whom this ode is directed, was probably his son or grandson. In st. 3 he is called 太師, grand-master, and was thus one of 'the three kung,' the highest ministers at the court of Chow—see the Shoo, V. xi. 3. We must believe, indeed, that he was the chief of the three, the chief administrator of the govt. at this time. 具—俱—as in I. vi. IV, et al.

悵, 'the mind distressed, as if scorched by fire.' The people dared not speak even in jest of the minister's doings, but the writer does not hesitate freely to expose them, and even gives his name in st. 10. 卒—終, 'in the end.' 斬, 'to be cut down,'—絕, 'to be extinguished.' We must take 1.7 as speaking of what would be the issue of the state of things, and 既—'since.' 監—視, 'to see,' 'to observe.' 1. 8 is addressed to the minister, and to the king, as Yen T'uan interprets it.

St. 2. Choo acknowledges that he does not understand 1.3. Acc. to the view which I have followed, by 有實 is intended the vegetation on the hill,—its 'fruit' (草木, 山之實也) and 其猗—猗猗, in I. v. 1.1. The energy of nature appeared everywhere on the hill; there was no partiality in it, as in the administration of the minister. 謂何—如何, '—see Wang Yin-che on 謂, 方—'now,' as in I. III. XIII. 1; but not for the first time, so that it—'still,' 'ever,' as in I. VI. 3. 薦—荐, 'to continue,' 'to redouble.' 瘥—病

No words of satisfaction come from the people;
And yet you do not correct nor bemoan yourself!

- 3 The Grand-master Yin
Is the foundation of our Chow,
And the balance of the State is in his hands.
He should be keeping together the four quarters [of the kingdom];
He should be aiding the Son of Heaven,
So as to preserve the people from going astray.
O unpitying great Heaven,
It is not right he should reduce us all to such misery!
- 4 Doing nothing himself personally,
The people have no confidence in him.
By making no inquiry, and no trial of their services,
He should not deal deceitfully with superior men.

' sickness.' The term is used of epidemics. 嘉言—善言, 'good words,' words expressive of pleasure and satisfaction. L. 8 is addressed reproachfully to the minister, unmoved by the prevailing troubles. 憯 is 憯—會, 'have.' It also means 痛, 'to be painful,' but that meaning, though adopted by Yen T'san, is not so suitable in this place. K'ang-shing construes 憯—會, but he makes the concluding 嗟 an exclamation of the writer, 'Alas!'

St. 8. 尹氏—like 季氏, in Ana. III. 1. 氏—本, 'the root,' or 'the foundation,' meaning that the fortunes of the House of Chow depended or rested on the minister Yin. 均—平, 'even,' or 'that which makes even.' It has also the signification of 'a potter's wheel;' but 'balance' suits the connection better. 維—持, 'to grasp,' 'to hold together.' 毗—輔, 'to assist.' 弔—恤, 'to pity.' I have followed Yen T'san in taking L. 7 as an appeal to Heaven. Choo makes it—'unpityed by Heaven.' Yen, however, seems to be wrong in his construction of the last line. He understands 我師 of the minister, 'our Grand-master,' who, filling his office as he did, filled it to worse than no purpose (空). I cannot follow him here. 空—窮, 'to exhaust,' 'to reduce to extremity.' 師—衆, 'all.'

St. 4. The interpretation of this st. mainly depends on the meaning we attach to L. 4. Choo takes 君子 there of the king (指王); Yen

君子。式夷式已。無

By dismissing them on the requirement of justice,
Mean men would not be endangering [the common weal];
And his mean relatives
Would not be in offices of importance.

- 5 Great Heaven, unjust,
Is sending down these exhausting disorders.
Great Heaven, unkind,
Is sending down these great miseries.
Let superior men come [into office],
And that would bring rest to the people's hearts.
Let superior men do justly,
And the animosities and angers would disappear.
- 6 O unpitying, great Heaven,
There is no end to the disorder!

Ts'an of superior men, officers who really deserved the name. Maou agrees with Chou as to the particular phrase; but his construction of the whole is hopelessly involved and obscure.

Yen Ts'an appears to be right. 君子 stands in opposition to 小人 in l. 6. The whole is condemnatory of the minister for his own idle occupation of his office, and delegating his duties to his relatives, mean creatures, unworthy of trust. L. 1 describes the minister's personal inattention to business (躬 and 親 are synonymous), and l. 2 its natural consequence. L. 3, 4 describe his neglect of good officers. 問 and 仕 must be closely allied in meaning; and 仕—'to employ in office,'—as in l. 8.

L. 5, 6 tell how he should dismiss his mean employees. 式 is the initial particle. 夷—平, 'to be just,' and 已—止, 'to stop,' 'to have done with' (廢退). 殆—危, 'to endanger.'

L. 7, 8 tell us who his employees were, and what would be the consequence of decisive dealing with them. 瑣瑣—'fragmentary,' 'small-looking.' 'The father of a son-in-law is called

姻; two sons-in-law call each other 亞; 姻亞—'relatives by affinity.' 臚—厚, 'thick,' 'substantial.' 臚仕—'to be employed in a substantial—remunerative—office.'

L. 5 first attributes the misfortunes of the kingdom to Heaven, and then shows how the employment of proper men would remedy them. 傭—均, 'fair,' 'just.' 鞠—亂, 'disorders.' The dictionary explains it by 'litigations,' 'wranglings,' but its meaning must be more general; corresponding to 戾 in l. 4. 屆—至, 'to come to.' 闕—息, 'to rest.' 違—遠, 'to be far away.'

L. 6. L. 2. 定—止, 'to stop,' 'to end.' L. 3—月月益甚, —as in the translation.

With every month it continues to grow,
 So that the people have no repose.
 I am as if intoxicated with the grief of my heart.
 Who holds the ordering of the kingdom?
 Not attending himself to the government,
 The issue is toil and pain to the people.

- 7 I yoke my four steeds,
 My four steeds, long-necked.
 I look to the four quarters [of the kingdom];
 Distress is everywhere; there is nowhere I can drive to.
 8 Now your evil is rampant,
 And I see your spears.
 Again you are pacified and friendly,
 As if you were pledging one another.
 9 From great Heaven is the injustice,
 And our king has no repose.
 [Yet] he will not correct his heart,
 And goes on to resent endeavours to rectify him.

式 and 斯 are the particles. L. 5. 醒—酒 病 'disease induced by spirits,'—'to be intoxicated, stupefied, by drinking.' The answer to L. 6 would be, 'The Grand-master Yin.' 成 is best translated by a general term. Some make it here—平, 'the pacification.'

St. 7 is intended graphically to set forth the disorder prevailing all through the States of the kingdom. The writer would fain go to some place of quiet, but no such place was to be found. 蹙蹙,—'the app. of being drawn back,

 and small,'—'to be in distress.' 騁,—'to drive swiftly,' here—'to go.'

St. 8 sets forth the uncertain humour of the 'creatures,' to whose misconduct the troubles of the time were owing. 夷 and 憚 are synonymous, or nearly so,—'to be pacified,' 'to be pleased.'

 The false calumnies of the people
 Also wax greater and greater.
 I think how I stand alone,
 And the sorrow of my heart grows intense.
 Alas! through my anxious cares,
 My hidden sorrow goes on to make me ill.

St. 9. Chao gives an active meaning both to 平 and 正.—'Yin is unjust, as if Heaven made him so, and therefore we read 昊天不平...; and still he does not correct his heart, but resents the efforts of the men who would rectify him.' I agree with him in taking 1.8 of the minister, and not, as Yen T'ien, of the king.

St. 10. Here at last the king is openly addressed. The writer, in the conclusion, fearlessly discloses his name, and intimates that there was one more guilty even than the guilty minister. A K'ea-foo from the royal court is twice mentioned in the Ch'in T'iao, in the time of duke Hwan, as coming on messages to Loo. He would be a son or grandson of the writer of this ode. 誦—歌 'to sing,' 'a song.' 究—'to examine to the utmost,' 'to lay bare.' 訛—化 'to transform,' 'to change.'

Ode 8. Narrative, allusive and metaphorical. A LAMENTATION OVER THE MISERIES OF THE KINGDOM AND THE RUIN COMING ON IT, ALL THROUGH THE KING'S EMPLOYMENT OF WORTHLESS CREATURES, AND HIS INDULGENCE OF HIS FAVOURITE, PAOU SAE. The mention of Paou Sae in st. 8 determines the date of this composition as belonging to the reign of king Yew, unless, indeed, we ought to translate there in the past tense, which is not likely. The piece is long, and, I confess, wearisome, not being sufficiently specific. There is a good deal of difficulty, and consequently of difference among the critics, in the interpretation of many passages in it.

3 My sorrowing heart is very sad;
I think of my unfortunate position.
The innocent people
Will all be reduced to servitude with me.
Alas for us!
From whom shall I henceforth get support?

St. 1. By 正月 all the critics understand the 5th month of Chow, or the 4th month of the Hsia dyn.—the 1st month, i.e., of summer, when the yang or masculine energy of nature was supposed to have the field to itself. Hsueh-frost would only have been natural in the first month of the year, either of Chow or Hsia. Ying-tah quotes a passage from Tso K'uei-ming, under the 17th year of duke Ch'au, where 正月 is used as hope. 訛言—謠言, 'calumnious speeches.' 將—大, 'great.' 之 is simply an expletive. 京京—大, 'great.' Maou makes the characters—'chronic.' 小心—'carefulness,' 'anxiety.' Maou defines both 癩 and 痒 by 病, 'to be sick.' Chou explains the former by 幽, 'hidden,' 'secret,'—like a rat in his hole, unknown by men.

St. 2. Maou absurdly makes the kings Wen and Woo to be the 'parents' appealed to here, and 我 to mean 'us,' all the people of the kingdom. The writer, in his sickness, appeals to his parents, and complains of his birth in such a time of misery and wickedness. Ll. 3, 4 are expanded in the 'Complete Digest,'—乃不自我之先不自我之後而適當此時: 'so that I was not born earlier or later, but just at this time.' 自 is explained by 從, 'from,' but we must take it as if it were 在, 'in.' 莠言, 'weedy words,'—evil words, words of slander. Ll. 5, 6 describe the character of the time, as devoid of all sincerity. Men's words of praise or blame, were from the mouth only, not from the heart. 愈愈, 'waxes more and more.'

St. 3. 惛惛 expresses the intensity of the grief. 祿—福, 'happiness,' so that 無祿—不幸, 'not to be fortunate.' In l. 6 we must take the term differently 并—俱, 'all together,'—himself and the innocent people. 臣僕, 'servants and slaves.' Criminals and captives were anciently made such. 斯

 the uncertainty of the writer's condition in the future. 爰—a pregnant 於, 'here':—'I see a crow; here it rests.'

St. 4. 侯—as in III. III. 6. 薪 and 蒸—as in VI. 2. The meaning of ll. 1, 2 is variously determined. Acc. to the view of the old interpreters, which I have followed, the forest, with only some faggots and twigs left in it, is emblematic of the ravages of oppressive govt. in the court and kingdom. Choo gives quite a diff. view:—'In a forest you can easily distinguish the large faggots from the small branches, while Heaven appears unable to discriminate between the good and the bad.' 夢夢—不明, without intelligence. 克—及
 'to come to.' Ll. 5, 6 are expanded—及其
 有定 則 未 有 不 爲 天 所 勝

者. It is only for a time that Heaven is indifferent to the affairs of men. In l. 7, instead of Heaven, we have the personal God, 上帝.
 'the Supreme Ruler.' The account of these two names, 天 and 上帝, given by Ching K., and accepted by Choo and all subsequent writers, is absurd:—'With reference to its form, we speak of heaven; with reference to its lordship and rule, we speak of God (以其形體謂 之天 以其主宰謂之帝)'.
 We are as good judges of what is meant by Heaven, as a name for the Supreme Power, as Ching was; and however the use of it may be explained, it certainly carries our thoughts
 above and beyond the visible sky. In l. 8 伊
 —維, the particle. Wang Yin-che explains
 云 here by 是:—'who is hated by Him?'

St. 5. Id. l. 2 contains an instance of an assertion the evidence of the absurdity of which is before everybody's eyes. 蓋 is to be construed, or rather not construed, as a particle.
 Of the three names assigned to it by Wang
 Yin-che, this is one (蓋 語助也). 寧

How is it that you do not repress them?
 You call those experienced ancients;
 You consult the diviner of dreams:
 They all say, 'We are wise;
 But who can distinguish the male and female crow?'

 But I dare not but stoop under them.
 We say of the earth that it is thick,

 I have reason, I have good ground.

—何—as often. The calumnies which were thrust were as absurd as the assertion in l. 1;
 and yet the king had not repressed them. We must suppose the question addressed to him.
 But he was blind, and led by the blind. 故 老—舊臣, 'old ministers.' 占夢 is the name of the office. 具—俱, 'all.' They all make it out to be impossible to answer the questions put to them by the king. 'In other birds,' says Ouy-yang Sew, 'you can generally distinguish the male and female by some difference in their colour, but you cannot do this with a pair of crows.'

St. 6. 局—曲身, 'to bend the body.'
 躡—小步, 'to walk with short, careful steps.'
 It might seem strange that the writer should say this of himself (號—號呼, 'to call out,'
 'speak loudly,') but he had ground for doing so in the conduct of the royal favourites. 倫 and 脊 are explained by 道 and 理, 'right' and 'reason.' 虺—as in V. 5. Williams says of 蜴—a kind of spotted lizard or eft.

St. 7. 阪田, 'hillside fields,' i.e., rugged and stony. 苑—luxuriant, 特—特生

For her sake he degraded his proper queen; and his admitted attachment to her was the cause of his own death, and the greatest misfortune to the kingdom. Her history is graphically related in the 列國志 威—滅.

St. 9. In this stanza and the next, the king is introduced under the figure of a wagoner, and warning is addressed to him,—as if with a feeling of despair. I translate Lt. 1 after Yü Ts'ao, who gives for it,—我永思其終 窘—of 11, it is 'the load.' I have translated 輔 simply by 'wheel-aids.' They appear to have been poles that could be used, on occasion, to prevent the wheels from sliding, or applied to the spokes to heave the wheel out of a rut. Both Williams and Mathurst describe them erroneously, the former calling them 'the rack or cheeks of a cart,' and the latter, 'the poles of a cart, attached to it on each side, and which may be taken off occasionally.' 輻 has here the meaning of 'to overthrow.' 將-請, 'to request.' 伯 is equivalent to 'Sir.' In his distress the waggoner would thus address any one who, he thought, would help him.

St. 10. 無 may be taken as in the translation, or as 毋, 'don't.' 員 (yue) = 益, 'to be of use to.' 輻, as in I. ix. XI. 2. 踰-過, 'to get through, or over.' 絕-極, 'very,' 'exceedingly.'

St. 11. The proper place for the fish is in the river or lake. In the clear pond it cannot escape being taken. This is supposed to illustrate the position of men of worth in the existing state of things. 炤-易見, 'usually seen.' The two 亦 are mere particles.

St. 12. The first four lines describe the wealth and jollity of the unworthy favourites of

Yen Ts'an quotes Wang Gan-shih's account of the term, '—to proclaim another's praises.' 慙慙, '—to be pained.'

St. 13. 僦僦—小貌, 'small-like,' 穀穀—隳陋貌, 'mean-like.' Both epithets belong to the 'favourites,' who are the objects of the writer's detestation throughout. 方—將, 'will,' i.e., will always. 穀—祿, 'emolument,' 'support.' L.S.—'Ominous calamities are pounding them.' 嗒—可, 'may.' 憚, with reference to this passage, is explained in the dictionary by 獨; but we must make a distinction between the two terms. See Monism, I. Pt. II. V. 2.

ODE 9. NARRATIVE. LAMENTATION OF AN OFFICE OVER THE PROMISES, CELESTIAL AND TERRESTRIAL, RESPECTING THE RUMOR OF CHOW. HE EXHIBITS THE TRUE CAUSES OF THESE AND THE ANNOYING MISERY; NAMES THE CHIEF CULPRITS; AND DECLARES HIS OWN DETERMINATION TO REMAIN AT HIS POST OF DUTY.

St. 1. Ll. 1-8 give us a certain date for the composition of this ode, and determine it as belonging to the reign of king Yaw, and not, as Ch'ing Hsuan maintained, to that of his grandfather Le. The eclipse is verified, by calculation, as having occurred, on Aug. 29, B. C. 775, the very day and month assigned to it in the text. This was the 6th year of Yaw's reign. The 10th month is that of the Chow calendar; and not the Hsü, as Ch'ao says; and this fact may lead us to question the common view of the critics that the months mentioned in the Shu are all those of the Hsü year.

日有食之—日有所食之者. 'the sun was eaten by something.' All the eclipses mentioned in the 'Spring and Autumn' are reported in this way, with the addition of 食, when the eclipse was total. —We have here the earliest date in Chinese history about which there can be no dispute.

L. 4. 醜—惡. 'bad,' 'evil.' The 亦 and the 之 must both be disregarded as mere expletives. Ll. 5, 6. The critics all interpret these lines, as if they compressed in brief space what is said in ll. 5-8 of the next stanza; but I cannot find all that meaning in them. Rather, the writer is referring in l. 5 to eclipses of the moon which had occurred, so that 彼此, 'that and this,' are equivalent to 'then' and 'now.' In ll. 7, 8 we have the inference of his superstition, confirmed, no doubt, by the state of things existing around him.

St. 2. Ll. 1, 2 are the judgment of superstition. Eclipses happen because the sun and moon keep their proper paths; and they do not portend evil. Ll. 3, 4. 四國 may refer to all the feudal States as well as to the 'middle State' itself, or the characters may, as is more likely, indicate the royal State only. In the Tao-chuen, under the 7th year of duke Ch'ao, we read, 'By the disregard of government in the State, and not employing the good, you bring on yourself reproof from the irregularities of the sun and moon.' 維, in l. 6, = 'only.' L. 8. 'In what not good?—i.e., it is bad in every way.'

 There is a want of rest, a want of good.
 The streams all bubble up and overflow.
 The crags on the hill-tops fall down.
 High banks become valleys;
 Deep valleys become hills.
 Alas for the men of this time!
 How does [the king] not stop these things?
- 4 Hwang-foo is the president;
 Fan is the minister of instruction;
 K'ea-pih is the [chief] administrator;
 Chung-yun is the chief cook;
 Tsow is the recorder of the interior;
 K'wei is master of the horse;
 Yu is captain of the guards;
 And the beautiful wife blazes, now in possession of her place.

St. 3. Not only were there eclipses portending evil; earth, as well as heaven, had its voices of admonition. The disastrous occurrences related here, however, need not all be referred to the year of the eclipse. As a matter of history, the streams of the King, the Wei, and the Loh, are reported to have become dry in the 3d year of Yü, when sundry landslips also took place. Yeh-p'oh—'the app. of fire'; here, of lightning flashing. 震—雷, 'thunder.' 沸—to bubble up, as boiling water, or a spring. 騰—to leap up, as a horse; here—乘, 'to mount.' 山冢—山頂, 'a hill-top.' 峯—崔嵬, 'lusty, rocky peaks.' We must suppose that the subject of the 3th line is the king, and to him also, or to him and his ministers (在位之人), many refer the 人 in l. 7; but I prefer taking 人 generally. 憚—as in st. 1 of the last ode.

St. 4. The writer here names the principal ministers and favourites of the king, to whom he attributed the misgovernment and miseries of the kingdom, referring also to Paon Shu. The critics all say that 皇父, 冢伯, and 仲允 are the designations of the parties intended, and the 番, 聚蹶, and 楸 are clan names. The 子 in 聚子 is simply—our 'Mr.' There is nothing in the characters 卿士, 'high noble and officer,' to determine the nature of the office held by Hwang-foo. But he was evidently the leading minister in the govt., and was probably one of the 公, of equal rank with the Grand-master Yin of c. VII., sharing with him the general administra-

Will not acknowledge that he is acting out of season.
But why does he call us to action,
Without coming and consulting with us?
He has removed our walls and roofs,
And our fields are all either a marsh or a moor.
He says, 'I am not injuring you;
The laws require that thus it should be?'

6 Hwang-foo is very wise;

He has built a great city for himself in Hëang.
He chose three men as his ministers,
All of them indeed of great wealth.
He could not bring himself to leave a single minister,
Who might guard our king.

See, and somehow, at the time when this ode was written, the more prominent in the conduct of affairs. 宰 is taken as 冢宰. On this and 司徒, see the Shoo, V. 7. 膳, a provision dressed for the table; 膳夫 = 'chief cook'; 內史, see on the Shoo, V. a. 13. 趣馬, see on the Shoo V. xix. 8, though the office would seem here to be more important than in that passage. 師氏, see on the Shoo, V. a. 1. L. 8 speaks of Paou Sze, who was raised to the dignity of queen in Yew's 5th year. She was now secure in her place (方處 = 方居其所), and supreme influence.

St. 6. In this st. the writer identifies himself with the people, for we cannot suppose that he was himself one of those whose houses were thrown down, and who were obliged to follow Hwang-foo to Hëang. 抑, as in L. vii. IV. 2. L. 1. 2. How does he say that it is not the fault of the king, he will not acknowledge that he is acting out of season in calling us to remove ourselves, when we have not been consulted, and when we should be attending to our husbandry;—as Choo has it, 皇父不自以爲不時. 作 = 動, 'to move,' 'to call to move.' 卽 = 就, 'to come to.' To illustrate II. 3—6, Kuang Ping-chang refers to the addresses of Pwan-kang to the people when he wished to remove his capital to another site;—see the Shoo, IV. vii. 屋 must here be used for 'roofs.' 卒 = 盡, 'all.' The fields would be either laid under water (汙), or covered with useless vegetation (萊), according to their situation. 戕 = 害, 'to injure.' L. 8 means that the rules of propriety and govt. required that the masses of the people should do whatever might thus be required of them by their superiors.

St. 6. 聖, as in VIII. 5. There is irony in the term. Hëang was a district of the royal domain,—in the present dis. of Mang (孟), dep. Hwae-k'ing, Ho-nan. This had been assigned to Hwang-foo, and here he was establish-

 xx. 21. As a noble within the royal domain, he was only entitled to have two such ministers, but he had appointed three as in one of the feudal States. And his ministers were all wealthy men, 'of many accumulations' (多藏) 直

 riages and horses were also wealthy people,
 like the three ministers. Hwang-foo was evidently providing for himself, against the troubles which were coming on, without any loyal regard for the king.

In att. 7, 8, the writer returns to his own particular case, and affirms his purpose to abide at his post. 黽勉—as in Lii. X. 1. 從事 is to be understood of the writer's service to the king, and not, as Choo takes it, to Hwang-foo. To make a report of his toils would seem to be claiming merit for himself. 囂囂—as in III. V. 2. II. 7, 8 are very troublesome. 背 憎, 'behind the back, hatred,' gives us an idea of what 噂沓 must mean, but it is difficult to get it out of the characters. 噂 is defined as 聚語, 'collected speeches,' i. e., conversation; 沓 is 'a babble of words like a flowing stream.' The two together express the idea of much talk with one, and the other two characters in the line show that the talk meant is more flattery. Both Morrison and Medhurst, upon ima, give the meaning of the whole line to the first two characters. Equally difficult are 戰 競 職 means 'to make anything one's first business,' as in ix. i, and 競, 'to be strong,' 'to contend.' The critics all connect them with the preceding line, as if they resumed the statement there, and affirmed it strongly. Choo gives for them 專 力 爲 此, 'doing this with all the strength.'

The substance of st. 8 is that the writer will not leave his post of duty. Choo takes ii. 1, 2 as meaning, 'All the kingdom is in trouble and distress, but I am specially sorry for the extreme distress of my dwelling-place.' The meaning I have given seems much preferable. 瘼 一 病, 'to be ill and distressed;' here—'to be dissatisfied. 有 美 一 有 餘, 'to have enough and to spare.' Choo explains 徹 by 均, 'fair,' 'just.' A more applicable meaning of the term is 通, 'pervious.' 不 徹 = 'impervious,' 'inexplicable.' The critics unite in praising the generosity of the term 友, 'friends,' in 1. 8.

Ode 10. Narrative. A GROOM OF THE CHAMBERS MOURNS OVER THE MISERABLE STATE OF THE KINGDOM, THE INCORRIGIBLE COURSE OF THE KING, AND THE RETIREMENT FROM OFFICE AND RESPONSIBILITY OF HSI, WHILE HE ALONE HOLDS TO HIS POST. There is evidently some mistake in the title and summary of this piece as given in the Little Preface, of which I have seen no satisfactory explanation. It is no use discussing a matter in itself unimportant, and on which no satisfactory conclusion can be arrived at. Nor is it clear that the ode belongs to the time of king Yaw. Loh Kin and many others assign it to the period after his death, when the capital was transferred to Loh. On the whole, however, I prefer to adhere to the more common view.

St. 1. The writer, in the trouble of his mind, appeals to Heaven, as if he would charge on it the misery of the kingdom, thereby expressing more strongly the extent of that misery. 浩 浩 and 昊 昊 are synonyms, meaning 'vast,' 'great and wide.' 駿 一 大, 'great.' Some define it by 長, or 恆, 'to prolong,' 'to be constant.' 德 一 惠, 'kindness.' 饑 饑 together—'famine.' The former character denotes a failure of the crop of grain; the latter, of vegetables. 昊天 is the name appropriate to the heavens in autumn, as if they then looked down with compassion on the decay of vegetable life. 疾 威, 'in angry terrors.' St 2. In VIII. 8 we have 宗周 for 'the honoured capital of Chow,' and 周宗 here may have the same meaning, which, indeed, is the view of Ch'ing. The view adopted by Choo, that the phrase means 'all the States having the surnames of the Choo family' cannot be admitted, for they were numerous and strong. Evidently, the writer is contemplating the possibility and probability of a change in the dynasty. 既滅—has been extinguished' but this is, probably, a vivid expression for what the writer saw to be in progress. 旻—定, 'to settle.' 正—長, 'chief,' 'head,' and 正大夫 are 'the heads of the different official departments (六官之長)' 離居—'they had left the capital, and resided elsewhere.' 勳—勞, 'toil.' 三事,—see on IX. 6. designation of them, or may indicate the chiefs of the six great departments of the govt. Ll. 7, 8 are illustrated by the fact that the loss of the capital and the death of Yaw were at least owing to the refusal of the princes to come to his aid.

They had once been deceived by the cry of 'wolf,' and when the wolf really came, they remained in their own States, thinking the alarm was false. Ll. 9, 10 express the folly and madness of the king's conduct. Choo expands l. 9
—庶幾王改而行善, 'If indeed—
would that it could be said,—the king has changed, and is behaving well.'

St. 3, 辟—法, 'a law'; 辟言—法度

ing being as in the translation.

St. 4. 戎—兵, 'weapons,' i. e., war. The meaning of 不退, 不遂 is illustrated by a passage in the Yih, under the diagram 大壯,
where it is said, 'a rain pushes against a fence,
and can neither go backwards nor forwards.' 讐

- 5 Alas that [right words] cannot be spoken,

The speakers of them are sure to suffer.
Well is it for the words that can be spoken!

- 6 It may be said about taking office,
That it is full of hazard and peril.
By [advice] that he says cannot be followed,
You offend against the Son of Heaven.
By advice that he says will be followed,
You excite the resentment of your friends.
- 7 I say to you, 'Remove to the royal capital,'
And ye say that you have not got houses there.
Painful are my inmost thoughts, and I weep blood;—
Every word I speak makes me hated;
But when you formerly left to reside elsewhere,
Who was it that made houses for you?

84.5. The lamentation in l. 1, and the felicitation in l. 4, are not in the first place for the respective speakers, but for the state of the times, which would only listen to speech of a certain kind. I take l. 2, with Kiang, as descriptive of the words which the king would not hear, as from the heart and not from the mouth only (是從心上嘔出, 不徒著之舌也).

84.6 further shows the difficulty of being in office at such a time. It is all to be taken as from the writer, and I must reject the construction of So, Choo and others, who expand it, l. 2 thus,—People all say, "Go and take office," but they do not know how perilous such a thing is. We saw reason, on Book I. of Part I, to reject the explanation of 于 by 往. 于 cannot be translated here. 轉 must be nearly synonymous with 殆. 云 is to be referred to the king. l. 6 — 見怨于友 — as in the translation.

St. 7. The writer here appeals to all officers of worth who had withdrawn from the capital, urges them to resume their duties, and shows the inconsistency of the reason they alleged for not doing so. Ll. 3, 4 express the writer's struggles and determination at all risks to speak out his mind. 鼠—獮, in VIII. 1. 無言不疾—無一言而不見疾憎於人, —as in the translation. In l. 6, 誰從 is not, 'who followed you?' but 'by the aid of whom?'

- 1 The angry terrors of Compassionate Heaven
Extend through this lower world;
[The king's] counsels and plans are crooked and bad;—
When will he stop [in his course]?
Counsels which are good he will not follow,
And those which are not good he employs.
When I look at his counsels and plans,
I am greatly pained.

TITLE OF THE BOOK.—小旻之什二 之五. 'The Decade of SIAOU MIN; Book V.
of Part II.'

TITLE OF ODE I.—小旻. 'The Little Min.'

The question arises why this, with the two pieces that follow, and the third piece in the next Book, should all have the epithet 'Little' entering into their titles. Ying-tai says correctly that 'Little' indicates a comparison with what is 'Great' and Ching Hsueh maintained that this ode is so denominated because the evils dwelt on in it were small, in comparison with those enlarged on in the two odes that precede. Much more likely is the explanation of Soo Ch'eh that the 'little' was adopted to distinguish these pieces from others in the next

Part. We have there the 召旻, and the 大明. If we had also in it two other pieces, into the titles of which there also entered 宛 and 弁, we could have no hesitation in adopting this explanation. Soo supposes that there may originally have been two such pieces, which Confucius did not admit into his collection.

Here his explanation halts; but we may accept it nevertheless, and 'The Little or Minor Min'
is equivalent to 'The Min of the Minor Ya.'

Ode I. Narrative. A LAMENTATION OVER THE RECKLESSNESS AND INCAPACITY OF THE KING'S PLANS, AND OF HIS COUNSELLORS. The Preface refers the piece to the time of king T'ou;
—there is nothing in it to make us either adopt or reject this view.

St. 1. L. 1.—as in st. 1 of prec. ode. Choo gives to 旻 here the meaning of 'deep and distant,' such being the app. of the autumn sky.
I prefer, however, to retain the meaning of 'compassionate.' 敷—布, 'to diffuse.' The meaning is, that the calamities consequent on the anger of Heaven were everywhere experienced. L. 3 is to be understood of the king. 謀 is the 'counsel'; 猶, 'the counsel developed in a plan.' 回遹—邪僻, 'perverse and bad.'
斯 cannot be translated, but we may say it—則, or 其 沮—止, 'to stop.' 邛—病,
'to be pained,' 'in distress.'

- 2 Now they agree, and now they defame one another;—
The case is greatly to be deplored.

If a counsel be good,
 They all are found opposing it.
 If a counsel be bad,
 They all are found according with it.
 When I look at such counsels and plans,
 What will they come to?

- 3 Our tortoises are wearied out,
And will not tell us anything about the plans.
The counsellors are very many,
But on that account nothing is accomplished.

The speakers fill the court,
But who dares to take any responsibility on himself?

We are as if we consulted [about a journey] without taking a step in advance,
 And therefore did not get on on the road.

St. 2 is interpreted of 'the mean men,'—the worthless counsellors of the king. Maou makes 滄滄 to mean 'to harass one's superiors,' and 訛訛, 'to have no thought of one's superiors.'
 Hsu Ying took both expressions together as—不善之貌, 'the app. of not being good.'
 I have followed the meanings assigned to them
 by Choo, who was preceded in them by Lew Hsing and Traou Suy-chung (曹粹中).
 具—俱, 'all.' For the last line, the 'Complete Digest' gives—伊于何至而能 有所定也乎

St. 3. The tortoise-shell was consulted so irreverently, that no response could any longer be got from it. 告猶—告所圖之 吉凶, 'tell whether a plan were lucky or unlucky.' In ll. 4, 8. 是用—是以, 'therefore.' 集成, 'to be accomplished,' 'to succeed;—no plan could be agreed on. The meaning of ll. 2 and 3 is the same. 發言—發言之人, 'the speakers.' 庭 is the open court below the hall of consultation. 咎,
 'blame; here = responsibility of failure.'—No one dared to say, 'I will be responsible for this

- 4 Alas! our formers of plans
Do not take the ancients for their pattern,
And do not regulate them by great principles.
They only hearken to shallow words,
And quarrel about shallow words.
They are like one taking counsel with wayfarers about building a house,
Which will consequently never come to completion.
- 5 Although the kingdom be unsettled,
There are some who are wise, and others who are not.
Although the people may not be numerous,
Some have perspicacity, some have counsel,
Some have gravity, and some have orderliness.
But we are going on like the stream flowing from a spring,
And will sink together in a common ruin.

measure.' I have translated ll. 7, 8 after Choo (猶不行不邁而坐謀所適 謀之雖審而亦何得於道 路哉). This is preferable to the construction proposed by Yen Yuan:—If a man wishes to travel, he must ask those who have travelled the road. If he consult with men who have not travelled it, it is reasonable he should learn nothing about it. This he illustrates by a saying, 'About ploughing ask the labourer, about weaving ask the maid (耕當問奴織 當問婢).

St. 4. 爲猶—like 發言, in last, st.—
'plan-makers.' 先民 'former people,'—ancient worthies. 程—法, 'a law,' 'a pattern; here, 'to take for a pattern.' In l. 3, 猶 is explained by 道, 'reason,'—plans that are based on deep principles. 經—常, 'that which is regular,'—what does not admit of deviation. 邇言, 'near words,'—shallow speeches. 于道謀, 'to take counsel at the way-side,' i.e., with way-farers. 潰—遂,

'to succeed,' or to 'go forward,' as in st. 4 of last ode.

St. 5. Bad as things were, they might be remedied, if the king would only take the advice of those who were competent. 止—定, 'to be settled.' 靡 is here explained by 多,
'many.' The people are spoken of as few, because they had been much dispersed by the prevailing troubles. Ll. 4, 5, —see the Shao, V. iv. 6, where we have 又 for 艾. Ll. 6, 7 must be taken interrogatively, or we may drop the 無 in translating.

St. 6. Ll. 1—4 are descriptive of the king's counsellors who had sense enough for some things, but could not, or would not, apprehend others of more importance. 暴徒搏, 'to attack empty-handed,'—without weapons; 馮一徒涉, 'to cross empty-handed,'—without a boat. 其他, 'the other,'—any other. Ll. 5—7 are advice tendered by the writer to the king. 戰戰一恐, 'to be afraid'; 兢兢一戒, 'to be cautious'; 臨, 'to approach to.'

Ode 2. Allusive and narrative. SOME OFFICERS, IN A TIME OF DISORDER AND MISGOVERNMENT, URGES ON HIS BROTHERS THE DUTY OF MAINTAINING THEIR OWN VIRTUE, AND OF OBSERVING THE GREATEST CAUTION. The Preface says the piece was directed against king Yew; and Maou and his school, in their endeavours to carry out this view, are obliged to resort to 'chiselling' in explaining the diff. stanzas. It may have been composed in Yew's reign; but there is no indication of any political object in it.

St. 1. 宛—小貌, 'small-looking.' Choo says the 宛 here is the pun 宛 (斑鳩), or pigeon; but the opinion of Maou, who makes it the same as the dove in I. v. 1, 3, is preferable. Maou also is the more correct in his definition

And they will become good as you are.

4 Look at the wagtail,
Flying, and at the same time twittering.
My days are advancing;

of 翰, by 高, 'high.' It is descriptive of the flight of the dove. That such a lofty flight should be accomplished by so small a creature seems to be the consideration which led to the mention of it;—as an instance of what may be attained by effort. 昔先人 is to be understood of the speaker's ancestors, who had been,
we may suppose, worthy officers of their kings.
明發, 'when the light is issuing.' 二 人, 'the two individuals,' must mean the speaker's parents.

St. 2 is simply narrative. Drunkenness must have been a vice of the time. 齊—肅
'grave.' 克—自克, 'overcome themselves.' Such men could use moderation in their drinking. 壹—專一, 'devoted to.'
富—甚 or 益, 'increasingly,' 'more and more.' 又—復, 'to be repeated.' 天命
—'the decree of Heaven,' 'what Heaven gives or appoints.' What the writer had in his mind is by no means clear. Possibly, it may have been the good human nature, which by vice,

and drunkenness especially, may be irretrievably ruined.

St. 3. I do not see how II.1.2 bear on the subject of the stanza, which is that of insuring
the virtue of the young by good training. 菽

is here taken to be 大豆, 'large beans.' II.
3, 4 bear on the general idea, but by a strange popular error. The wing-ling is a small green insect, generally found on the mulberry tree, but also elsewhere. The to-do is the sphex or solitary wasp, which carries away the young of the wing-ling into its hole, where, it is supposed,
they are changed into young wasps! Both Choo and Yen Ts'an take 式 as 一用, after Ch'ing, and I.6—'And by means of what is good make them like yourselves.' But we must take 式 here as elsewhere, 'merely an initial particle. 穀—善, 'good.' 似—'to become as.'

St. 4. 題—視 'to see.' 脊令—
in I.IV.3. The energy and activity of the bird are what procure it a place in this stanza.

而一汝, 'you.' 斯一其, it combines with the words following it to heighten

St. 5 交交, —as in I. xi. VI. Acc. to Choo, the vulgar name of the song-hoo is 青黃, which I have adopted in the translation. Another name for it, which all the critics allow, is 鷄脂, or 'grease-thief,' from its fondness for all fatty matters. The bill is slightly hooked.
It is evidently one of the scavengers. Flesh is said to be its natural food, and not grain, but it is here represented as pecking up grain,—with reference to the struggle for life in consequence of the prevailing misgovernment. 率一循,
'all about' 場, —as in I. x. I. 7. 填一填

病 'to be in distress,'—Han Ying read 疹. 寡 is nearly all 'solitary, friendless people.' 岸
and 獄 are synonymous, signifying 'a prison,'
the former term being appropriate to places of confinement in the country; the latter, to those about the court. Han Ying read 犴, which does not help us in determining the meaning.
The classes mentioned should have been objects of kindly care to the government, whereas it deemed them (宜) fit for its prisons. L. 5 refers to a custom on which we have not much information,—that of spending some finely ground rice on the ground, in connection with divination, as an offering to the spirits. The use of plain grain here may be an indication of the writer's poverty. 自何 or 何自, —
'from what' 'how.'

St. 6. The three couplets here must all be translated in the same way,—imperatively.

The 'Complete Digest' and Yen Te'an are wrong in taking the first as indicative. 'Mild and humble men are,' &c. 恭人—'be humble to others.' The disorder of the times required that they should be very careful of their conduct, as the only way in which they could escape danger.

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 天人, cat. 12, 1.1; in 2, 克富, 又, cat. 1, 1.2; in 3, 采子, 負, 似, 3; in 4, 令 (prop. cat. 15), 鳴征, 生, cat. 11, 邁寐, cat. 15, 1.3; in 5, 扈寡, cat. 5, 1.2; 栗, 蕞, 卜, 穀, cat. 5, 1.3; in 6, 木, 谷, 蕞, 冰, cat. 5.

Ode 3. Allusive and narrative. THE ELDEST SON AND HEIR-APPARENT OF KING SEUEN BETRAYS HIS DEGRADATION, AND THE RAGE WITH WHICH THE KING WAS LED AWAY BY SLANDERS. The queen of king Yēu was a princess of the State of Shin (申), and their eldest son, E-k'w (宜白) had been declared heir to the throne. When Yēu became enamoured of

Paou Sze, the queen was degraded and E-k'w banished to Shin, while it was announced that a child by the favourite should be the king's successor; and in reference to these events it is supposed that E-k'w made this piece. Choo says that it is clearly the composition of a banished son, but that it does not follow that that son was E-k'w, or any son of king Yēu. The Preface assigns it not to E-k'w himself, but to his tutor;—which is altogether gratuitous.—See the remarks of Mencius on its character, in his Works, VI, Pt. II, III.

St. 1. 弁 is defined by Maou by 樂, 'to be pleased.' Choo treats it as if it had 手 at the side, and makes it—'the app. of flapping wings.' Yu or yu-ss (some maintain that the two characters together are the name of the bird;—comp. 翁斯 in I. i. V.) is a species of crow, smaller than the common, and white in the belly. 提提 is descriptive of the birds 'flying in a flock.' The sight of the crows, all together, suggests to the prince his own condition, solitary and driven from court. The old school of critics find a disgusting allusion in what they allege to be a fact, that the yu-ss cannot disgorge its food to feed its young;—so the prince was cut off from

8. 2. 踽踽—平易, 'level and easy.'

周道—as in I. xii. IV. 鞠—窮, 'altogether.' In the disorder of the times the road to the capital was now little frequented. On this view of II. 1, 2, st. 1 is narrative. 怒—to think sorrowfully. 擣—春, 'no beat, —as in a mortar.' To sleep without undressing is called 假寐, —such a sleep is but 'borrowed.' 用—以, 'thereby.' 疢—疾, 'to be ill.' L. 8 does not end the stanza happily,—in our view.

St. 3. 梓—see on I. iv. VI. The mulberry tree and this were both planted about the farmsteadings, and therefore they are introduced here. They carried the thoughts back to the father or grandfather, or the more remote ancestor who first planted them, and so a feeling of reverence attached to themselves. L. 3.—'There is no one to be looked up to if it be not a father.' 屬—連, 'to be connected with; 離—麗, 'to pass into,' 'to be in.' Maou refers L. 5 to the father, and 6 to the mother; and Ch'ing expanded the two:—'Did I alone not get the life resident in my father's skin? Did I alone not dwell in my mother's womb?' 辰 is said, both by Maou and Choo, to be equivalent to 時, 'time.' But it means 'lucky time,' 'a star,' and the 安在 indicates that it had been an unlucky star. K'ang observes that this 8th line shows they had in those times the science of astrology.

St. 4. 薏—茂, 'luxuriant.' 斯 is merely the final particle, as also, probably, in st. 1. 鷓— as in I. xv. l. 4. Hung-hung gives the sound made by the insects. 灌—深視, 'deep-looking.' 有灌者淵— of all things that are deep, the abyss; but I suspect the genuineness of the 者, which interferes with the caesural pause in the line. 萑葦, — as in I. xv. l. 3. 薏— to be abundant, 'numerous.' 遑—暇, 'leisure.'

St. 5. 斯 is the expletive, as in st. 1, 4. 伎 is descriptive of the deer, 'moving slowly.' l. 2, — see the Shoo, IV. ix. l. I take 尙 as here—曾, not seeing the applicability of its more frequent meaning of 'still.' These creatures do not like to be alone, whereas the prince was a solitary fugitive. I do not understand why Yen Te'an should think that the king is spoken of in this st. l. 8, — How is it that no one knows it? i.e., all the circumstances of my case.

St. 6. Here the king is spoken of, and he is called 君子. Neither the name nor the application of it is strange in general usage; but it seems to us strange here, — to have a son speaking thus of his father. 投兔—投人之兔, 'a hare throwing itself on men for protection,' — that is, when pursued and exhausted. 先之, — will be beforehand with it, i.e., save it, or

St. 7. Choo explains 釀 by 報, 'to return.'
 When a guest is pledged by the host in a cup, he must pledge him in return. 如或釀 之一, 'as if some one were pledging him.' 舒
 —緩, 'slowly,'—when the slanders came to his ears, if he would only deliberately examine them, he would be sure to find out their falsehood. L. 5, 6. The meaning of 樵 is acknowledged, 'to split wood in the direction of the grain,' which can be done with comparative ease. On the analogy of this, I explain 椅, which the critics say means 'to support at the top,' so that, when the tree is cut through at the bottom, it may not fall upon the fellers.

 This definition is made, however, to suit the supposed exigency of the passage. The first meaning of the term in the dict. is 'to draw sidewise.' 佗 in L. 8 is explained by 加, 'to add to,' 'to impute.'

St. 8. The first four lines seem to be in allusion to the exalted and unapproachable dignity of the sovereign, who yet might be wrought upon by designing men, and if he were not careful of his words, would fall a prey to evil-minded slanderous people. Ch'ing explains 由 by 用, 'to use,' but he understands 言 of the words of slanderers, whereas I must take it of the king's own words. Li. 5—8 occur in I. iii. X. 3. The writer here must have been familiar with that ode, and these lines suited both his circumstances and purpose.

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 斯 提., cat. 16, t. 1: 罹., 何 何., cat. 17: in 2, 道., 草., 擣., 老., 首., cat. 3, t. 2: in 3, 梓 止., 母., 裏 在., cat. 1, t. 2: in 4, 蟬 澤 屈., cat. 13, t. 3: in 5, 伎 雌., (prop. cat. 15), 枝 知., cat. 16, t. 1: in 6, 先., 墜., 忍., 隕., cat. 10: in 7, 醜 究., cat. 3, t. 2: 倚., 地 伐., cat. 17: in 8, 泉 言 垣., cat. 14: 筍 後., cat. 4, t. 2.

Ode 4. Narrative and allusive, with perhaps a metaphorical element here and there. SOME ONE, SUFFERING FROM THE KING THROUGH SLANDER, APPEALS TO HEAVEN, DWELLS ON THE NATURE AND EVIL OF SLANDER, AND EXPRESSES HIS DETESTATION OF AND CONTEMPT FOR THE SLANDERERS. The subject of this suits the reign of king Le well enough; but there is nothing in it to enable us positively to refer it, as the Preface does, to that time.

St. 1 悠悠 conveys here the ideas of 'distant and vast.' 且 is the particle, as in I. vii. X. 1, and often; 曰 might also be left untranslated 憮—大, 'great.' So, both Choo and Maou; who also explain both 已 and 泰 by 甚, 'excessive.' 已威—疾威 in I. 1. 慎—實, 'really.' 威 must be understood in I. 7.

2 Disorder then comes to the birth,
 When the first untruth is received.
 Its further increase
 Is from our sovereign's believing the slanderers.
 If he were to be angry [with them],
 The disorder would probably quickly be abated;
 If he were to show his joy [in the good],
 The disorder would probably quickly cease.

3 Our sovereign makes frequent covenants,
 And the disorders are thereby increased.
 He believes the scoundrels,
 And the disorders thereby grow into oppression.
 Their words are very sweet,
 And the disorders thereby advance.
 They do not discharge their duties,
 But only create distress to the king.

4 Very grand is the ancestral temple;—
 A true sovereign made it.

St. 2. 僭—'what is erroneous,' 'what over-steps right.' 僭始 is the first insinuation
 of slander. 涵—容受, 'to admit,' 'to receive.' 君子 is to be understood of the king.
 怒 and 祉 (= 喜) are antithetical;—the one being directed against the slanderers, the other towards the good assailed by them. 遄—疾,
 'with rapidity.'

St. 3. L. 1 shows the weakness of the king.
 As suspicions arose between him and princes of States, he would make a covenant with them as if they were his equals. By 盜, 'thieves,'

 'robbers,' we are to understand the slanderers;
 as the king gave credit to them, he was led on to acts of violent oppression. 餒—to send in food; here—進, 'keep entering,' 'advance.'
 In l. 7, 共—供, 'to discharge one's service.' 止共—共止, the terms being inverted for the sake of the rhymes. 止 is the final particle. 邛—as in l. 1.

St. 4. 奕奕—大貌 'great-looking.'
 'The front part of an ancestral temple is called

廟; the back part, the apartments behind,
leading off from the large one in front, 寢.
Ting-tah observes that we are to understand
by the two terms here the temple as a whole (廟寢一物) 君子 and 聖人 are correlative expressions, and hence 君子 must be understood otherwise than in the two preceding stanzas. 秩秩—有序, 'orderly,'—well conducted and arranged. The 'great plans' here are the great principles on which and by which the govt. should be conducted. 莫—定, 'to determine.' The writer seems to adduce these two things as implying wisdom beyond his reach; but it was not so with the schemes of other men. By 他人
he intends the slanderers. On II.5.8, see Men.
I. P. L. VII. 9. 龜—狡, 'crafty.' The crafty hare is a metaphor for the objects of the writer's indignation.

St. 5. 荏染—柔貌 'soft-looking.'

The trees intended are supposed to be useful,
—those which supply good timber and are easily wrought. 君子 still does not refer to the king; but it has a lighter meaning than in the last stanza. 行言—行道之言, 'the words of people walking on the road.' 數—辨, 'to distinguish.' These two things seem to be adduced by the writer by way of appeal to the king.—He could understand them; how then did he allow himself to be led away by the slanderers? II. 5—8 speak of two classes of their speeches, whose true character it would not be difficult to determine. 蛇蛇—安 舒, 'easy,' 'natural-like.' II. 8.—'thickness of the face,'—shamelessness, incapability of blushing.

1 What man was that?

His mind is full of dangerous devices.
 Why did he approach my dam,
 Without entering my gate?

In st. 6 the writer speaks out his mind roundly about the enemies of himself and the common weal, expressing his contempt for them. Choo observes that in L. 1, he must have some particular persons in view, whom he does not deign to mention by name. 斯 is the final particle.

麋 is used for 涸, 'the margin or brink of a stream.' 拳—力, 'strength.' 職—主—as in L. 1, 2. People, living in damp, low, marshy places are generally mallow and feeble; and are moreover liable to the unsightly disease in L. 5. 微—許瘍, 'the leg-bone ulcered; 腫—腫足, 'swollen legs and feet.' 將—大, 'great.' 居徒—爾所與居之徒, 'the adherents with whom you associate and dwell.' 幾何, 'few and what,'—a contemptuous expression.

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 且, 辜, 憐, 憐, 辜, cat. 5, t. 1; 威, 罪, cat. 15, t. 1; in 2, 憐, 憐, cat. 5, t. 1; 怒, 沮, cat. 5, t. 2; 社, 已, cat. 1, t. 2; in 3, 盟, 長, cat. 10; 盜, 暴, Ode 5. Narrative. SOME NOBLE SUFFERING FROM SLANDER, AND SUSPECTING THAT THE SLANDERER WAS AN OLD FRIEND, INTIMATES THE GROUNDS OF HIS SUSPICION, AND LAKESTES HIS CASE, WHILE HE WOULD WELCOME THE RESTORATION OF THEIR FORMER RELATIONS. The Preface assigns this piece to a duke of Paou, who had been slandered by a duke of Soo, who can be no doubt there was a State of Soo within the royal domain, corresponding to the present of Wan (溫), dep. Hwas-k'ing, Ho-nan, the lords of which, viscounts, were often in the highest positions at court, with the title of King; and there was probably a state of Paou. We have no records, however, of any kind to illustrate or confirm the statement of the Preface.

St. 1. L. 1 is hardly a question, but = 'That man, so and so.' The writer does not care to Which of them wrought me this calamity?

 Why came he to my dam,
 Without entering to condole with me?
 Our former relations were different from the present,
 When he will have nothing to do with me.

 But did not see his person.

 He does not stand in awe of Heaven.

show that he knew his surname and name.

斯 is the final particle. 艱—險, 'dangerous.' LI 3, 4 give the reason for suspecting the man, who had occasion to come near the writer, but shunned his immediate presence. 云, in I. 5,—是, as in IV. VIII. 4. There is more difficulty with the 之云 in I. 6. Wang Yin-che approves the view of Maou, who says that 云

言 are to me as perplexing as 之云. I must take 之云 as equivalent to 云爾, an acknowledged ending of a sentence, which we can hardly translate, but which takes something from the positive character of what is said.

St. 2 The 'two men' are the above follower of Paou, and Paou himself. The latter was the real offender, but the writer shrinks from directly saying so. 云 in I. 6 is best taken as the initial particle, and left untranslated.

不我可—不以我爲可, 'does not consider me tolerable,'—a person to have anything to do with.

St. 3. 陳 was the name of the path leading from the gate to the foot of the hall or reception-room. The person here comes nearer to the writer than in st. 1, and yet still avoids him, awakening a correspondingly greater indignation.

He is like a violent wind.
Why came he not from the north?
Or why not from the south?
Why did he approach my dam,
Doing nothing but perturb my mind?

My heart would be relieved.
When on your return you do not enter it,
It is hard to understand your denial.

It would set me at rest.

St. 4. 飄風,—as in I. xii. IV. 2. II. 3, 4 express the uncertainty of the person's movements, characteristic of a slanderer. 祇 (che)
—但, 'only.'

St. 5. The writer here exposes the falsehood of the excuses made by his slanderer for not coming to see him. 盱 means 'to stare';—

used here to denote the fixed look of longing expectation.

St. 6. His enemy had alleged in the former
st. that he was unable to call on the writer,
being despatched on some public business;—
might he not call on him when he returned?
易—to be easy; it is explained by 說 'to be glad.' 祇 (ch'g)—安, 'to be at rest.' 否
'not,' i. e., if you say you did not do it.

St. 7. 伯氏 and 仲氏—the elder and the younger. The writer intends by them the person who was now his enemy and himself; and the two lines show how close was their former friendship. See Morrison's dict. on the character 壻, where he gives a description of the instrument, and three figures of it. 及爾—我及爾, 'I and you.' 如貫—'as if strung together,' 'as if a string went through us both.' 諒—'if indeed.' 詛—to curse,—to ratify by an oath. This enables us to determine the meaning of 三物 as 'a dog, a pig, and a fowl,' whose blood was used sometimes in making covenants. See the Tso-chuen, under the eleventh year of duke Yin.

St. 8. The yü is a creature altogether fabulous, or of which fabulous stories are told. It is said to lie concealed in the sand at the bottom of a stream, and when the shadow of any one on the bank appears in the water, to spurt sand at it, after which the person is sure to die. It has many names,—'the short fox,' 'the shadow-shooter,' 'the water-bow' (水弩). Williams translates l. 1 by 'plotting,' 'traitorous,' but that is not the meaning of it, though the terms are contemptuous. 有覩 is explained as 面見人之貌 'the app. of seeing a person face to face.' In the meaning which I have given to 罔極 'without limit,' I am borne out by Kéang Ping-chang. In 1.6, 極—究極 'to investigate thoroughly.' 反側—反覆不正直 'upsetting and deflected.'

Ode 6. Metaphorical, narrative, and allusive. A EUNUCH, SUFFERING FROM SLANDER, COMPLAINS OF HIS FATE, AND WARNS AND DEMOURNS HIS ENEMIES. The title of this ode, —Héung-pü,—is not taken from any of the stanzas, but is nearly equivalent to the 寺人, or eunuch, of st. 7. 巷 was the name of a passage in the interior of the palace, of which the writer had the superintendence,—as is denoted by the 伯. He was perhaps the chief of the eunuchs. It is assumed, and we may admit it, though it is nowhere stated in the piece, that his own mutilation was in consequence of the slanders from which he had suffered.

St. 1. Maou defines 斐斐 by 文章相錯, 'elegant figures crossing one another,' and Choo, by 小文之貌 'the app. of small strokes or elegant lines.' 貝錦—shell embroidery, i. e., a piece of silk embroidered till it looks like a beautiful shell;—comp. 織貝 in the Shoo, III. 1. Pt 1. 44. By the combination of a few lines a striking effect may be produced, and so had it been when some trivial faults of the writer had been magnified and woven, as it were, by his slanderers, into great crimes. 人 in 1.3 is in the objective, governed by 謫—大—秦, 'too.'

St. 2. 哆 is explained in the Shwob-wán by 張口, 'to open wide the mouth,' 侈—大, 'great.' Choo explains the two characters together by 微張之貌 'the app. of what is small and widely extended.' 箕, 'the sieve,' is the name of one of the 28 constellations of the zodiac, part of the sign sagittarius. It is assigned properly to the eastern region of the heavens, but is here spoken of, perhaps from the writer's observation at the time, as in the north. It consists of four stars, two which are called 'the Heels,' close together, and two, more widely apart, which are called 'the Mouth.' The illustration appears to have a similar meaning to that used in the previous stanza. 適—主, 'who presided over the scheming with them?'

St. 3. Various definitions have been proposed of 緝緝, but we may accept that of Maou and Choo, —口舌聲 'the noise of the tongue going,' 翻翻—the app. of coming and going.' Ll. 3, 4 contain words of warning to the slanderers; which are continued in st. 4. 捷捷 describes them as 'as clever (便利

St. 5. 好好 is explained by 樂, 'to be joyful' and 草草 by 憂, 'to be sorrowful'. The writer here appeals to Heaven.

St. 6. Ll. 1, 2 are repeated from st. 2. Some would elide them from this stanza. Ll. 3—5 contain the strongest expressions of the writer's indignation. 有北—北方, 'the region of the north,' where there are the rigors of winter and the barrenness of the desert. 有 occurs here, according to a usage, which I do not know how to explain. Wang Yin-chu says that 有 is often used as a helping word. 'When one character is wanting to complete the rhythm of a sentence, 有 is employed for that purpose.' This use of 有 is pointed out in the index of characters and phrases to the Shoo. 有昊—昊天, 'Great Heaven,' but the phrase shows that the writer did not rest in the thought of the material heavens. See the article in the index to the Shoo, just alluded to.

St. 7. It is difficult to tell what the writer intends in ll. 1, 2, and various views are taken of his meaning. The willow garden lies low (下地), and the cultivated acres lie above it (高地); yet they adjoin one another. 猗 is explained by 加, 'to add to,' here—'to adjoin.' It may be that the writer alludes in l. 1 to himself, and in l. 2 to other officers of higher rank than he had been in. As calamity from the slanderers had befallen him, so might it go on to overtake them;—and therefore, for their warning had he made this ode. 孟子, was his designation—the elder one—among the eunuchs.

St. 1. Ll. 1, 2,—see on l. iii. X. 1. There is certainly a difficulty in ascertaining the relation of these lines to those that follow, and more especially in stanzas 2, 3. On the ode referred to, I have adduced Yen Ta'an's explanation of 習, and he rejoices in the confirmation of it, which st. 2 and 3 here supply him with. I still adhere, however, to the more common view. Here ll. 1, 2 are supposed to set forth how friends depend on each other. In ll. 3, 5, 將,—as in l. vii. IX. 1, 2. It is explained by 且; and in l. x. II. 3, we had an instance of the repetition of 且, at the commencement of two lines. We can hardly translate 將 here. L. 4. It was 'I and you' i.e., we were all to each other.

It is not the ngo but the haou.
Alas! alas! my parents,
With what toil ye gave me birth!

St. 2. 頽 is defined in the Urb-ya as 'a scorching whirlwind.' The bland east wind, succeeded by this, may allude to the consequences of the ruptured friendship. Neither Maou nor Choo sanction this view; but it seems to me the most natural in the case. 遺—忘去之物 'a forgotten or abandoned thing.'

St. 3. 崔嵬—as in Li III. 2. We must suppose that the effects of the tornado following the east wind are described. 萎—衰落 'to decay and fall,' = to wither. 怨, as opposed to 德, must be translated by 'faults.'

The rhymes are—in st. 1. 雨, 女子, cat. 5, t. 2; in 2. 頽, 懷, 遺, cat. 15, t. 1; in 3. 嵬, 萎, 怨 (prop. cat. 14), 6.

Ode 8. Metaphorical, narrative, and allusive. A SON EXPLORES HIS HARD FATE IN BEING PERVERTED FROM RENDERING THE LAST SERVICES TO HIS PARENTS, AND EXLARGES ON THE PARENTAL CLAIM. It is a pretty clear conclusion from the piece that the parents of the writer were dead; that he had been kept away from them by the exigencies of the public service is assumed by most of the critics, and the thing is in itself probable enough, but it is now here distinctly intimated. It is by the supposition, how-

over, that a political character is attributed to the ode, as having been directed against the govt. of king Yaw.

St. 1, 2. 莪—as in III. 蒿—as in I. 2. We have not met with 蒿 before, but it also is the name of a species of southernwood. I have kept the Chinese names, because the meaning turns on the difference between the plants, and a translator would therefore have to give the exact name of each, which I am unable to do. The ngo, it is said, is much superior to the other two plants; and Choo on this founds his interpretation of the stanzas as metaphorical. The writer, according to him, feels that by the discharge of his duty to his parents to the last, he should have proved himself like a ngo, whereas, having failed in that duty, he was only like a hao or a wei. Many critics, however, find the allusive element in the stanzas, and not the metaphorical. The ngo, they say, looks quite different from the hao and wei; but the writer was unable to distinguish them. His blindness was the effect of his grief; and he states the fact to introduce the sorrow which had caused it. I do not attempt to hold the balance between the two views.

劬勞—as in I. III. VII. 1. 瘁—as in I. VIII. 2.

St. 3. 餅 is 'a pitcher,' and 罍 'a vase or jar' from which the pitcher is supplied. The two are dependent on each other, and so are used as metaphorical of the relation between a son and his parents. Opposite sides are taken in interpreting the diff. parts of the comparison. Some will have the son to be intended by the pitcher, others the parents; and so, with the jar. 鮮—寡, 'solitary.' The connection determines the meaning of 鮮民 to be 'an orphan.' In the dictionary 怙 is defined by 恃. We cannot make a distinction between the terms. 出入—as in Ana. I. vi. 憂—憂 'sorrow.' L. 8 certainly implies that the parents were dead.

St. 4. The last line of this st. is in the mouth of every Chinese, when speaking of what is due to parents. In 1.5, 復 is explained by 反覆 and by 不能曹舍, which latter I have adopted. 腹—懷抱, 'to hold in the embrace.' 之, in 1.7,—其, 'their.' L. 4 in prec. st., is one of the examples, adduced by Wang Yin-che to illustrate the expletive use of 之.

St. 5, 6. 南山,—as in iv. V 1, et al. 烈烈 (= 'high and large') and 律律 are taken by Choo as synonymous; and also 發發 and 弗弗. Yen Tsao explains 烈烈

as—栗烈 in Lrv. I. 1, —'cold is the southern hill.' This suits the passage better. The bleak and rugged prospect suggests to the writer the misery of his own condition. 害 is passive—遭此害, 'suffer this misery.' 卒, 'to finish,' meaning to discharge his duty to his parents to the last.

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 蒿, 勞, cat. 2; in 2, 蔚, 瘁, cat. 15, t. 3; in 3, 恥, 久, 恃, cat. 1, t. 2; 恤, 至, cat. 12, t. 3; in 4, 鞠, 畜, 育, 復, 腹, cat. 3, t. 3; 德, 極, cat. 1, t. 3; in 5, 烈, 發, 害, cat. 15, t. 3; in 6, 律, 弗, 卒, 5.

Ode 9. Allusive and narrative. AN OFFICER, OF ONE OF THE STATES OF THE EAST, DEPLORES THE EXACTIONS MADE FROM THEM BY THE GOVERNMENT, COMPLAINS OF THE FAVOUR SHOWN TO THE WEST, CONTRASTS THE MISERY OF THE PRESENT WITH THE HAPPINESS OF THE PAST, AND APPEALS TO THE STARS OF HEAVEN IDLY REMOINDING THEIR CONDITION. According to the Preface, the writer was 'a great officer of Tan,' one of the smaller States of the east. We know from the Chün T'wé that Tan was extinguished by T'wé in the time of duke Chwang of Loo, so that an officer of it might have written this piece in the reign of king Yéw, 'to show the disorder of the times.' This is all that can be said on the statement in the Preface.

St. 1. 簋—see on L. xi. X. 2. As the boei were used to contain the boiled millet, at feasts and sacrifices, 殽, generally used for 'an evening meal,' is taken to signify that article. 有饌 describes the appearance of the dishes and their contents. The 七 or 'spoons' were used to take the meat from the tripods in which it had been boiled, and 有棣 describes their appearance as 'long,' acc. to Maou, or 'crooked,'

according to Choo. It seems to me that this st. should be taken as narrative; but the critics all make it allusive, the abundance and happiness of the past rising up in contrast to the penury and misery of the present. 周道—'the way to Chow,' not, as Yen T'wé and others, 'the way of Chow' in its govt. In l. 6, 小人 must mean 'the common people,' in opp. to 君子 of l. 5. We must understand 視 of their looking at the road with satisfaction. 瞻—'to look back or round.' 言 is here diff. from the initial particle, which we cannot translate, and—焉 in the next line. Both of them have the force of 然, making adverbs of the verbs that precede them. Seun-tze, indeed, quotes the line with 焉, and we find it, in one of the books of the after Han, with 然. 潛 is 'the app. of tears falling.'

St. 2. 'The little east and the great east,'—as in the translation. 杼 is the shuttle containing the thread of the woof; 柚, the cylinder with the threads of the warp. 其空 is a good instance of the descriptive use of 其.

- 4 The sons of the east
Are only summoned [to service], without encouragement;
While the sons of the west

LL 2, 3.—see L ix. L 1. 公子 would be the sons of the chiefs of the States, employed on missions to the capital. T'oum-faou is descriptive of them, as 'slight-looking,' and unaccustomed to toil; and yet in L 6 they are represented as making the journey on foot. L 7. 'They have gone, they have come,' but we can hardly translate 既 here. Ch'ing defines it by 盡, and then gives it the meaning of 空, 'empty.'—'empty they go and empty they come.' This does not seem admissible.

St. 2. 洿.—as in L xiv. IV. 1. 洿泉 is a spring whose waters come out at the side, in various narrow channels. 穫薪—已穫 之薪, 'firewood that has been reaped,' i. e., cut down and bundled together. Such firewood soaked would be rendered useless; but the people of the east were suffering from one exaction after another. 契契—憂苦, 'in sorrow and bitterness.' 憚 (read 勞) 人—勞人.—as in the transl. 尚—庶幾, expressing a wish. After the toil of preparing the firewood, it would be a relief to have it conveyed home for them; so the people would be glad to have some rest from their toils.

St. 4. The sons of the men of the east are the officers of the States of the east; and 'the sons of the men of the west' are the officers about the capital. 職—as in IV. IX. 7, 來 (now read in 3d tone)—慰撫, 'to soothe and encourage,' taken, here, passively. 私人—

'private men,' people in menial employments.
試=用, 'to be employed.'

St. 5. LL. 1-4 present unusual difficulties.
Maou took them as illustrating the want of principle in the king's government, and would understand 或 at the commencement of each line. 1-8 of st. 4 has spoken of the officers of the capital, and Maou supposes it is said here
they were employed, 'some on the ground of their being drunkards, and some not because they were drunkards; some for the splendid gems of their girdle-pendants, and some not because of their abilities.' This is plainly inadmissible. Choo, and even Yen Te-an, consider the lines as illustrating the perverseness of the king's officers, whom those of the east could in no way conciliate. We must understand 饋 之 after 或 in L. 1, and 與之以 at the beginning of L. 3. Then 以 in L. 2, 4,—以爲.
I have followed this view in the translation,
though we have, after all, to leave the 其 unexplained. 鞞鞞—長貌, 'long-looking.'

璲=瑞玉, nearly as in the Shoo, II. 1. 7.
From L. 5 to the end of the piece we have an interesting instance of Sabian views. The writ-ter, despairing of help from men, appeals to Heaven; but the Power to help him there he distributes among many heavenly bodies, supposing there must be spiritual Beings in them, taking account of human affairs. And even this appeal proves in vain. 漢 is 'the milky way,' called also 天河;—see on Pt. III. III. IV.
織女, 'weaving ladies,' is the name of three stars in Lyra, in the form of a triangle. 跂 denotes that triangular shape.—隅貌. We cannot get this meaning from 跂, as it is defined in the dict.; but the Shwch-wan quotes
the line with 支 and 七 by the side, which is thus defined in the Yuh-p'ien (玉篇). Choo says he does not understand 七襄, but he quotes the view of Ch'ing, which I have given.
The stars seem to go round the circumference
of the heavens, divided into 12 spaces, in a day and night. They would accomplish 6 of those in a day, but as their motion is rather in advance of that of the sun, they have entered into the 7th space by the time he is up with them again.

- 6 Although they go through their seven stages,
 They complete no bright work for us.
 Brilliant shine the Draught Oxen,
 But they do not serve to draw our carts.
 In the east there is Lucifer;
 In the west there is Hesperus;
 Long and curved is the Rabbit Net of the sky;—
 But they only occupy their places.

- 7 In the south is the Sieve,
 But it is of no use to sift.
 In the north is the Ladle,
 But it lades out no liquor.
 In the south is the Sieve
 Idly showing its mouth.
 In the north is the Ladle,
 Raising its handle in the west.

襄 is thus taken—駕—更其肆, as in I.
 iv. 11. 2.

St. 6. 報章—'bright place of recompense.'
 The sisters, with all their weaving, working on the wool, with no warp, made nothing out for the good of the afflicted east. The 'Draught-oxen' is the name of some stars in the neck of Aquila. 睨 describes their bright appearance.

箱—車箱; 'the box or body of a carriage';
 —used for the carriage itself. 服箱—'to draw the carriage.' 劉勰 (劉勰) says,

 'The Metal star (Venus) is in the east in the morning, thus opening the brightness of the day (啟明); and it is in the west in the evening, thus prolonging (庚—續) the length of the day (長庚).' This writer, of the ode, however, evidently took Lucifer and Hesperus to be two stars. 畢 is the Hyades, supposed to resemble a rabbit net. L. 8 belongs to the three stars last mentioned, 'placed in their positions (行 —行列),' but exercising no beneficent influence on mundane affairs.

St. 7. 箕—see VI. 2. But the Sieve did nothing to vindicate its name. 斗 here is a constellation in Sagittarius, supposed to resemble a Ladle for taking spirits from a jar; it was as ineffectual for any purpose, as the Sieve. The Sieve's two diverging stars, turned to the east, looked as if it would devour it, and the handle of the Ladle in the west looked as if it would take up the contents of the east.

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 七, 祗, 矢, 履, 視, 涕, cat. 15, 1. 2; in 2, 東, 空, cat.

allusive element in various ways. In 11.3 & the writer appeals to his forefathers, as if they could help him in his extremity. He was their descendant; they might still be able to sympathize with him. I agree with Wang Yin-che in taking 寧 in 1.4 as 乃. Some make it 曾.

St. 2. 淒淒—as in I. vii. XVI. 1. 具—俱 as often. 腓—病, 'to be sick,' 'to decay.' There is reason to believe that Maou's text originally had 靡 which is evidently to be preferred. 離, both by Maou and Choo, is defined by 憂, 'sorrow,' but there is no necessity for giving that new meaning to the term,
as the common one of 散, 'separation,' 'dispersion,' suits the passage at least equally well;
—so, Yen Ta'an. 莫—病, 'to be distressed.' 爰 must here—於何, 'where.' The 'Family Sayings' quote the line with 奚適—至, 'to go to.'

St. 3. See VIII, 5.

Ode 10. Allusive and narrative. An OFFI-CER BITTERLY DEPLORES THE OPPRESSION AND MISERY OF THE TIMES. Kéang Ping-chang thinks the piece was made in the last year of king Yew, such is the hopelessness which it expresses; but there is nothing in the language to enable us to say anything with certainty as to its date.

St. 1. The months here are evidently those of the Hsü calendar. 徂暑—暑徂, 'the heat goes,' i. e., begins to go. 11.1 and 2 thus seem to say that, in the sphere of nature, suffering did not always continue, whereas, in the writer's experience, there was no end to his suffering. The critics, however, bring out the

- 7 I am not an eagle nor a hawk,
Which flies aloft to heaven.
I am not a sturgeon, large or small,
Which can dive and hide in the deep.

St. 4. 卉 is here evidently used for 'trees.' 侯 is the particle, 一維. Ll. 3, 4, speak of the ministers of the king's government. Very different were their high places, with them occupying them, from the hills with their fine trees.
廢 = 變, 'to be changed,' 'to be degenerated.'
尤 = 過, 'fault.'

St. 5. The only difficulty here is with 構.
Maou defines it by 成, 'to complete,' 'to work out,' and Ch'ing by 合集, 'to collect' 'to bring together,' but then they expand 我 into 我諸侯, 'our princes of States.' Choo accepts the explanation of the term by 合, but

by and by for 構禍 he gives 遭害, 'to meet with injury.' It would be well to say here, simply, that 構 = 遭, 'to meet with,' 云 is here a particle (語中助詞).

St. 6 滔滔—as in I. viii. X. 4. 紀—to sort silk threads, and hence, 'to regulate.' The Kēang and Han defined the boundaries of the States, drained their territories, served as lines of defence, and were otherwise of service to them, which they all acknowledged. The writer's services to the kingdom, however, were taken
no notice of. 有一識有, 'to remember that such a person was in existence.' We must understand that in the 4th l. the writer has the king in view. 寧—as in st. 1.

St. 7 is narrative, and sets forth very strikingly the hardship of the writer's lot, unable in any way to escape from his own and the general misery. 鵲 is read ma, and explained by 鵬 'an eagle.' The character is ordinarily read seu, meaning a quail, which, evidently, cannot be intended here. The reading 鶻 is found, which, we may presume, is more correct. 鶻 is some kind of hawk. A paper kite is called in Chinese 風鳶 L. 2,—as in II. 1: L. 3,—see I. v. III. 4.

St. 8 蕨 and 薇,—see I. III. II. 2, 3. The 楸 is described as 'the red 楸, a tree with small leaves, bird, and sharp, the bark coarse and irregularly broken, furnishing a hard wood, used by wheel-wrights.' The author of the Japanese plates says he does not know the tree. Yen Ts'an would read 黃, probably the arum aquaticum. The kuoh and wei were eatable, he says, and so must the ke and the re be, the writer meaning to say that he would retire to the hills and marshes, and support his life by whatever eatable he could find. The two lines however, seem rather to refer to the writer's condition,—out of place and out of heart.

TITLE OF THE BOOK.—北山之什二之六, 'The Decade of Pih-shan; Book VI. of Part. II.'

Ode 1. Narrative. AN OFFICER COMPLAINS OF THE ARDUOUS AND CONTINUAL DUTIES UNEQUALLY IMPOSED UPON HIM, AND KEEPING HIM AWAY FROM HIS DUTY TO HIS PARENTS, WHILE OTHERS WERE LEFT TO ENJOY THEIR EASE. See the remarks of Mencius on this ode, V. Pt. 1. IV. 2.

St. 1. 言 is the initial particle. It is impossible to say whether 杞 is here the willow, or the medlar tree. The analogy of many other odes, where ascending a hill is spoken of, make us suppose that the object of the writer was to look mournfully in the direction of his home.

The writer refers to himself in 士子, 'an officer and a gentleman.' Both Maon and Choo define 偕偕 by 強壯貌—as in the translation. 從事—as with us, 'to pursue business.' L. 5.—as in I. x. VIII, et al. 憂 is here used actively.

St. 2. 溥—大, 'great,' 'wide,' 率—循, 'along.' L. 5.—四海之內, 'all within the four seas.' There underlies the language the idea that China was the whole of the earth, surrounded by four seas, of the islands in which it was not worth while to take account. The sentiment in the stanza, spoken of China, is proper enough; but the magnificence of the language has become a snare to the people. By

- 3 My four horses never halt;
 The king's business allows no rest.
 They praise me as not yet old;
 They think few like me in vigour.
 While the backbone retains its strength,
 I must plan and labour in all parts of the kingdom.
- 4 Some enjoy their ease and rest,
 And some are worn out in the service of the State;
 Some rest and loll upon their couches,
 And some never cease marching about.
- 5 Some never hear a sound,
 And some are cruelly toiled;
 Some lazily roost, on their backs looking up,
 And some are all-bustled in the service of the king.

大夫 are intended the ministers at the court, with whom was the direction of the govt., the writer shrinking from charging the hardships of his lot on the king himself. The 'Complete Digest' expands the last line—乃使我朝夕從事而獨以賢推我也。

St. 3. 彭彭 has occurred twice before, but with a diff. meaning. Here it—不得息, 'cannot rest.' The meaning of 傍傍 is nearly the same. The subject of 嘉 and 鮮 is the 大夫 of last stanza. Both characters are to be taken as verbs, —as in the transl. 將—壯, 'strong.' 旅—脊, 'the backbone.' 經營—經—經畫, 'to describe, or map out.' 營—造, 'to make.' When a person builds a house, he is said—經之, 營之.

St. 4. This and the following stanzas set forth the unfairness, with which the ministers of the govt. dealt with the various officers. 燕燕—安息貌, 'the app. of resting at ease.' 盡瘁—as in st. 6 of last ode. 偃—'to lie down';—here used contemptuously.

Do not think of all your anxieties;—
You will only make yourself ill.

St. 5. 叫號.—'any crying out, or noise,'
outside. 桀.—'to roost,'—contemptuous.
Both Miao and Choo define 鞅掌 by 失容
'disordered,' 'without any manners,' all in a bustle and fume. Ch'ing gives to 鞅 the meaning of 'to carry on the head,' and 掌—
'to carry in the palms,' so that the combination represents the app. of a man overburdened.
This is the meaning, however we make it out from the characters.

St. 6. 湛.—as in I. I. 3. 咎.—as in v. I. 2.
出入.—'going out and coming in;—everywhere, continually. 風 (in 3d tone, 颶).—

Ode 2. Allusive. SOME OFFICER, OVERLOAD-
ED IN THE KING'S SERVICE, THINKS IT BETTER TO TRY AND DISMISS HIS TROUBLES FROM HIS

side. Such is the view taken of this short piece by Choo. The Preface says that the officer expresses his regret for having recommended unworthy persons—'little men'—to public employments;—regret which is in vain. This view is found in Seun K'ing (大略篇), and it was that also of Han Ying. Still, there is nothing in the language to suggest to us the idea of 'little men.'

St. 1. Maou gives no explanation of 將.
Choo, after Ch'ing, defines it by 扶進 'to support and push forward.' 'A large carriage,'
i. e., a waggon, is one that requires the strength of oxen. Pushing forward a waggon certainly suggests the idea of being subjected to heavy labours, rather than the having recommended unworthy creatures to employment. 祇—適,
'just,' 'only.' 瘵 is defined by 病, 'to be ill.'
There is evidently some error of the text in the character; for the line will not rhyme as it stands. Lw E proposes to read 瘵, and has an ingenious argument to show how the 民
or 昏 of that character was changed into 氏
when the stone tablets of the text of the classic were prepared under the T'ang dynasty. Twanshe does not admit its validity; but I feel sure the character in the text is an error. There is some evidence for 瘵, both the meaning and tone of which are suitable.

Who enlightenest and rulest this lower world!
I marched on this expedition to the west,
As far as this wilderness of K'ew.
From the first day of the second month,

St. 2. 冥冥—昏晦, 'dark,' 'obscure.'
The last character in the stanza is interchangeable with 耿. Choo explains it by 小明—
as in the translation; Maou, by 光, 'light';
and then Ch'ing takes 出于 as—'come forth
into,'—which is not admissible.

St. 3. 離—蔽, 'so cover,' 'to becloud.'
重 is said to be equivalent to 累, 'to involve,'
but its proper meaning answers sufficiently well.

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 塵, 瘥 (see above on st. 1), cat. 12, 1: in 2, 冥, 頰 cat. 11: in 3, 離, 重, cat. 2.

Ode 3. Narrative. AN OFFICER, KEPT LONG ABROAD ON DISTANT SERVICE, DEPLORES THE HARDSHIPS OF HIS LOT, AND TENDERS GOOD AD-VICE TO HIS MORE FORTUNATE FRIENDS AT COURT. See what has been said on the title of this piece in the remarks on the title of the 1st

ode of last Book. The Preface says that in this a great officer expresses his regret at taking service in an age of disorder; but while the writer
deplores his lot, he expresses neither repentance
nor regret. However hard it is, he braces himself to it, and tenders loyal advice to his friends.
We must suppose, with Ying-tah, that he was an officer of high rank, in charge of some great expedition.

St. 1. 照臨—'enlightenest and comest
to.' The idea of 臨 here is nearly equivalent to 'to rule.' Choo defines 征 by 行, 'to march'; but it is well to bring out the idea of 'an expedition,' which is in it. Where the wild country of K'ew was we do not know. 初吉,
—'in the beginning, which was lucky.' This is taken by all the critics to mean 朔日, 'the first day of the moon.' 吉 is elsewhere used for the first day of the moon, the despatch used to enter then on the work to be done being considered auspicious. 二月,—this is taken to mean

初吉。載離寒暑。心之

懷歸。畏此罪罟。 昔我往矣。日月方除。

I have passed through the cold and the heat.
My heart is sad;
The poison [of my lot] is too bitter.
I think of those [at court] in their offices,
And my tears flow down like rain.
Do I not wish to return?
But I fear the net for crime.

- 2 Formerly, when I set out,
The sun and moon had renewed the year.
When shall I return?
The year is now late.
I think how I am alone,
While the affairs devolving on me are very many.
My heart is sad,
And I am toiled without any leisure.
I think of those [at court] in their offices,
Looking back to them with fond regard.

the second month of spring,—the second month of the Hsü year; and I do not see anything irreconcilable between this 5th line, and L.2 of st. 2 and 3. There is no necessity therefore for the construction of K'ang Ping-chang, who connects this line and the 4th, saying the troops had left at the beginning of the 1st month, and arrived in the wilderness of K'ü a month after. This is very forced. L.6 Maou defines 離 by 歷, 'to pass through.' We may infer from this line that the piece was written towards the end of the second year, when the relieving troops ought to have arrived. A winter had passed, and a second summer.

L.8. I can only understand 共人, as in the translation, after Choo. L.3 in st. 4,5 seems decisive on this point. Yen Tsun adopts the meaning of 溫恭之人, 'mild and discreet men,' who were living in retirement, having refused office. He was misled by the Preface. K'ang's view is very remarkable,—that the writer intends himself! 零,—as in Liv. VI.8. Stress must not be laid on 此 in the last line.

St.2. L.2. 除 is used here as in LVII. Both Maou and Choo explain it by 除陳 (—舊)生新, 'the taking away of the old,

嗟爾君子。無恆安。

- 3 Formerly, when I set out,
The sun and moon were giving a mild warmth.
When shall I return?
The affairs of government are become more urgent.
It is late in the year,
And we are gathering the southernwood, and reaping the beans.
My heart is sad;
I give myself nothing but distress.
When I think of those [at court] in their offices,
I rise and pass the night outside.
Do I not wish to return?
But I am afraid of the vicissitudes of things.

- 4 Ah! ye gentlemen!
Do not reckon on your rest being permanent.

and the birth of the new.' Certainly, the first month of the year may thus be described better than the second; but we need not suppose that the writer carefully weighed all his expressions.

云 is the particle. L. 4.—as in L. x. l. 1. 憚—
as in v. IX. 3. L. 10. 瞻瞻—瞻言, in
a. IX. 1. 譴 = 責, 'to reprove.'

St. 3. L. 2 奧 = 煖 'to be warm.' This suits the 2d month of spring well enough. L. 4.
蹙 = 急, 'urgent.' L. 6 points to the end of the autumn or the beginning of winter. 蕭,
—as in L. vi. VIII. 2. Yeu Te'an expands L. 3 by 我仕非其時 自遺此憂蹙,
'By taking service at an improper time, I have given myself this sorrow and distress,' again

misled by the Preface. 伊 can hardly be translated. L. 2. 言—然 joined to 興, and vividly describing the writer's getting up. 反 覆, 'the turning and turning,' referring to the uncertainty and changeableness of the times, or of the king's moods and ways.

St. 4. K'ang Ping-chang is the only scholar, so far as I know, who argues that in this stanza
and the next, the writer is addressing himself;
and his proof for his strange opinion is altogether defective. The writer addresses his friends, to whom he has made reference in all the previous stanzas. Choo expands the 2d line by 無以安處為常, 言當

 if we take the line in the indicative mood;— ‘there is no such thing as permanent abiding in repose.’ Choo explains 與 in l. 4 by 助, ‘to assist;’ but there is no necessity for any other than its more common meaning—‘to be with,’
 ‘to associate with.’ In l. 5, the first 之—其 as often;—‘The Spirits, they will hear.’ The second loses its force in the preceding verb. In
 l. 6, 以—與 ‘to give to.’ K’ang-shing takes heretofore, as a particle. Choo explains 穀 by 祿, ‘annointment;’ but I prefer a more general meaning.

TO THE COUNTRY OF THE HWAE, WHERE HE ABANDONED HIMSELF TO THE DELIGHTS OF MUSIC. Choo says that he does not understand this piece, and can give no account therefore of the object of its composition; and the Preface says nothing more than that it was directed against king Yew. Allowing that king Yew was contemplated in it, its argument must be given much as I have done. The difficulty with Choo and others is that there is no account anywhere of Yew's having undertaken an expedition to the country about the Hwae. I agree with Yen T'wan that if anything be related in one of the King, that is a sufficient historical voucher for it (經即史也); but the remark is not applicable here, for in the ode there is no mention of king Yew. A sentence is adduced in evidence of Yew's having had to do with the tribes of this part of the kingdom, by K'ang, out of a narrative by T'ao-shu, under the 4th year of duke Ch'ou, par. 2; but it is not to the point. It is quite conceivable, however, that a sovereign of Yew's character should have marched to the Hwae to punish the wild tribes of the region, and have amused himself

as it is supposed this ode describes him to have done. Such an expedition would be a historical parallel to Caligula's against Britain.

Ll. 1, 2 in all the st. 鼓 is the verb, 'to strike':—'They strike the bells.' 將將 噲 噲, and 欽欽 are all intended to give the sound of the bells. Kuo in st. 3 is described as 'a large drum, carried in a carriage, in warlike expeditions, and long.' 湯湯—as in l. v.

IV. 4: 潛潛 is said to have a similar meaning.
What the 'three islands' of the Hwae were, or where, we do not know. On the 淮, see the Shoo, III. l. Pt. I. 28, 29.

L. 3 in st. 3. 蚰 is defined in the Urh-ya by 動, 'to be agitated.' The Shwoh-wan gives the character as 由 with 心 at the side.

Ll. 4, 5, in st. 1, 2, 3. By 'the good men, the kun-tsz,' are understood the good sovereigns of an earlier date. 允一信, 'truly.'—The writer cherished them in his heart, and indeed could not forget them. 罔=邪, 'crooked,' 'perverse'; 不同, 'without a crook,' i.e.,—
'without a flaw.' 不猶, 'was not as,' i.e., as or like the conduct of Yew.

Ll. 3—6 in st. 4. Maou and many others take 笙磬 as the name of a certain kind of king or sounding stone; but there is no necessity for doing so, and the 同音 certainly agrees better with the natural construction of them as two different instruments. Maou and Ch'ing again take Ye and Naa as the names of certain dances or certain pieces of music; but even the critics who generally defer to their authority do not agree with them here. The Naa are the odes of the Chow-nan and the Shao-nan. We need have no difficulty in admitting that they existed as a collection in the time of Yew. Nor need we hesitate in admitting that a portion of the Ye also existed as a collection,—those, perhaps attributed to the duke of Chow. 簫 is equivalent to 'to dance,'—as in I. III. XIII. 3. The 以 are all = 用, 'to use.' 不僭, 'without transgressing,' i.e., violating the rules of the music or the dance.

The rhymes are—in st. 1. 將, 湯, 傷, 忘, cat. 10; in 2. 喈, 潛, 悲, 回, cat. 13, t. 1; in 3. 擊, 洲, 蚰, 猶, cat. 3, t. 2; in 4. 鈇, 琴, 音, 南, 僭, cat. 7, t. 1.

Ode 5. NARRATIVE. SACRIFICIAL AND FESTAL SERVICES IN THE ANCESTRAL TEMPLE; AND THEIR CONNECTION WITH ATTENTION TO NUSHAHNT. This piece and the nine others which follow are all said, in the Preface, to have been directed against king Yew; but there is nothing in them to lead our thoughts to him, nothing to indicate dissatisfaction in the mind of the writer or writers with any one. The device by which the critics explain the statement of the Preface can hardly be called ingenious:—'The sad experience of the writers,' it is said, 'leads them to describe the scenes of a happier time in the past (傷今思古).' On this view these odes tell us not what the writers saw passing beneath their own eyes, but of what they might have seen if they had lived two or three hundred years earlier,—and this without the slightest indication that they are doing so! I confess that this decade of odes shakes any confidence which I have been disposed to put in the Preface very much.

In fact, these odes are out of place among the mass of others belonging to a degenerate time (變雅), and fully deserved to be ranked with the first eighteen pieces of this Part, which are ascribed to the duke of Chow.

Choo thinks the piece celebrates the services in the temple of some noble landed proprietor, and he says that the 我 in L. 4 of st. 1 is that individual's designation of himself. I incline rather to the view of others, put in a strong light by Kiang, that the services spoken of are those of the king's ancestral temple. The 我 is simply the poet's identification of himself with the Parties of whom he sings.

St. 1. 茨—see on Liv. II. 棘 is another name for it as a thorny bush. 楚楚 expresses the luxuriance and denseness of the growth. 言 is the initial particle; and 抽—除, 'to take away.' L. 3—古人何乃爲此事

And our stacks can be counted by tens of myriads,
We proceed to make spirits and prepare viands,
For offerings and sacrifice;

Thus seeking to increase our bright happiness.

- 2 With correct and reverent deportment,
The oxen and sheep all pure,

Some flay [the victims]; some boil [their flesh];
Some arrange [the meat]; some adjust [the pieces of it].
The priest sacrifices inside the temple gate,

乎, 'Why was it that the ancients did this?'
The writer ascends, in the line, in thought, to the first founders of the Chow dynasty, who laid its foundations in the attention which they paid to agriculture. The answer to the question is given in II.4-8. 與與 and 翼翼 are synonymous expressions, denoting the plentiful
app. of the crops. 我 in I.7 is incompatible with the view of the old interpreters, that the piece is descriptive of the practices of an ancient time. 庾—the stacks in which the sheaves of grain were built up in the fields.
I.10—以獻祀, 'wherewith to offer sacrifices.' Ying-tah observes that we are not to distinguish between 饗 and 祀, and that the line stands as it does from the necessity of the poet. 妥—安, 'to make comfortable.' The object of this character is the 尸, mentioned in st. 8, a representative or personator of the worthy who was sacrificed to. The dead, existing now in their 神 or spirit-state, of course
were not visible, and one of the sacrificer's relatives was selected to represent him in the ceremony. The representative was supposed to be taken possession of for the time by the represented, so that we read in the Le Ke, 尸神 象. 'The She was the visible image of the spirit.' The person selected for this part, according to certain rules found, up and down, in the Le Ke, was necessarily inferior in rank to the principal sacrificer, yet for the time he was superior to him, occupying the place of his departed ancestor. This circumstance, it was supposed, would make him feel uncomfortable;

and therefore as soon as he appeared in the temple, the sacrificer was instructed, by the director of the ceremonies, to ask him to be seated, and to place him at ease; after which he was urged to eat, and to take some refreshment, which is here expressed by 侑 (—勸). [The practice of using these representatives of the dead was disused after the Chow dynasty.]

St. 2 describes the progress of the sacrifice, but still only a preparatory stage of it. I.1 is explained by 有容, 'were of correct deportment,' and is to be understood of the various officers whose functions are described in II.4, 5.
In I.2, 爾 must be construed with 絮, so that the two characters,—'pure-like are.' If we take 爾 as the pronoun, the line is to me altogether out of connection. I.3,—see I.VI.4. The names of the sacrifices are used for the offering them;
and while only two of the seasonal sacrifices are mentioned, we must extend them so as to include the other two. 亨,—as in I.IV.1.6.

Choo interprets 肆 of putting the prepared meat on the trays or stands for it, and 將 of then carrying the trays into the temple. This is the view of the characters given by Ch'ing;
but these operations are appropriate more to

And all the service is complete and brilliant.
Grandly come our progenitors;
Their Spirits happily enjoy the offerings;
Their filial descendant receives blessing:—
They will reward him with great happiness,
With myriads of years, life without end.

- 3 They attend to the furnaces with reverence;
They prepare the trays, which are very large;—
Some for the roast meat; some for the broiled.
Wives presiding are still and reverent,
Preparing the numerous [smaller] dishes.
The guests and visitors

the service described in the next st. I have therefore followed Maou, who defines 肆 by 陳于牙, and 將 by 齊其肉, 'arrange the meat on stands,' and 'adjust the pieces of it.' Keag supports this view. L. 3. 祝, 'to pray,' 'one who makes or recites prayers.' It is evident that the word is here the designation of an officer, and not a verb,—as Lacharme makes it, 'Ritus precationum peraguntur.' I translate it by priest, for want of a better term; see Ana, VI. xiv. 祔 is 'the space inside the gate of the temple;—as if to give the Spirits of the dead a welcome on their entrance into the edifice. L. 8. By 先祖 we are to understand all the ancestors to whom the sacrifices were presented. 皇 is defined by 大, 'great,' and 君, 'ruler.' The 'Complete Digest' gives the meaning as I have done,—先祖儼君臨之尊. L. 9. Choo takes 神保 as an honourable designation of the 尸, which we might translate 'surety of the Spirits.' The structure of the line, corresponding to the one before, so that 保神 seems to answer to 先祖, serves to recommend this view; but 神保 in st. 5 is evidently different from the 尸.

I must therefore take 保 with Maou, as 安, 'quietly,' 'happily,' and construe as in the translation. L. 9. 孝孫, 'filial grandson,'—filial descendant, is the name given to the sacrificer.

St. 8 goes on to the setting forth and further business of the sacrifice. 爨, 'a furnace.' 執, 'to hold,'—to attend to. 踏踏 expresses 'reverence of manner.' L. 2. The 俎 were stands, of no great height, on which the meat and its accompaniments were placed. L. 3. Choo takes 燔 of the roasted flesh generally; 炙 of the broiled liver. Ying-tah says that meat on which the operation of 燔 passed was more difficult to cook, and required to be kept nearer the fire than that which was subjected to 炙. L. 4. 君婦—主婦, 'the presiding wives;—the queen and other ladies of the harem;—see the note on the Interpretation of I. 1. 莫莫 denotes 'a still and reverent manner.' 豆,—as in I. xv. V. 2; dishes containing sauces, cakes, condiments, &c. L. 6—9. The guests and visitors were nobles and officers of different surnames from the sacrificer, chosen by divination to take part in the sacrificial service. L. 7 describes the ceremonies of

Present the cup, and drink all round.
Every form is according to rule;
Every smile and word are as they should be.
The Spirits quietly come,
And respond with great blessings:—
Myriads of years as the [fitting] reward.

- 4 We are very much exhausted,
And have performed every ceremony without error.
The able priest announces [the will of the Spirits],
And goes to the filial descendant to convey it.
'Fragrant has been your filial sacrifice,
And the Spirits have enjoyed your spirits and viands.
They confer upon you a hundred blessings;
Each as it is desired, each as sure as law.
You have been exact and expeditious;

drinking which took place between them, the representative of the dead, and the sacrificer; which it would be tedious to attempt to describe in detail. 交錯—'crosswise and diagonally,' about equal to our 'all round' 卒—'altogether.' 度—合於法度, 'according to rule.' It seems to me, however, that these four lines are out of place at this part of the service, and that they would come in better in a description of the feast, which followed the sacrifice. L. 9 神保—as in last stanza. 格—來 'to come.' I suppose the spirits would come in the persons of their representatives. L. 12 酢—報 'to recompense.' This would be the reward of the sacrificer for his filial dutifulness.

St. 4. In this stanza and the next we have the conclusion of the sacrifice. 煥—竭 'to be exhausted,' and the critics expand it by 筋力

竭 'the strength of our sinews is exhausted.' 式 is explained by 用; but we need hardly seek to translate it. 善其事曰工, 'To be skilful at one's business is called 工.' 致告—致神意以告主人, 'conveys the mind of the Spirits, and announces it to the sacrificer,' having learned their mind from their representatives. 賚—予, 'to give,' but we must understand the term here of the conveying the message he was charged with. 苾芬—香 'fragrant.' 嗜—'to delight in,' 'to relish.' 卜—as in L. VI. 4. L. 8 幾 is explained by 期 'to expect,' 'to prognosticate.' 式—法, 'what is law or rule.' The meaning must be, I think, as I have expressed it. I cannot understand Chao, when he says that 如式 intimates 'the number of the blessings.'

 In myriads and tens of myriads.'

- 5 The ceremonies having thus been completed,
 And the bells and drums having given their warning,
 The filial descendant goes to his place,
 And the able priest makes his announcement,
 'The Spirits have drunk to the full.'
 The great representative of the dead then rises,
 And the bells and drums escort his withdrawal,
 [On which] the Spirits tranquilly return [to their place].
 All the servants, and the presiding wives,
 Remove [the trays and dishes] without delay.
 The [descendant's] uncles and cousins
 All repair to the private feast.

Ll. 9, 10 are complimentary to the master of the sacrifice on the manner in which all the ceremonies of the service had been attended to. 齊—整, 'to arrange,' 'exact,' 稷—疾, 'to be expeditious,' 匡—正, 'correct,' 敕, 'to charge,' 'careful,' 極—至, 'to the utmost,' 時—是, which we may consider as meaning 'to be,' or—於是, 'hereupon,' but we can hardly translate it.

St. 5 brings us to the conclusion of the sacrifice. 戒 in l. 2 is defined by 告, 'to announce,' the meaning being that the music now announced the end of the service (告終). L. 3. The sacrificer now left the place which he had occupied during the service, descended from the hall of ceremony, and took his place at the foot of the stair on the east,—the place appropriate to him, I suppose, in dismissing his guests. L. 4,—as in the last st. The priest took the message contained in l. 5 to the sacrificer from the representative of the Spirits. Ying-tah is quite incorrect in supposing that the message was taken from the master to the representative. 具—俱, 'all.' We cannot suppose 醉 to mean anything more than the translation expresses. L. 5. This line was referred to in connection with the 8th of st. 2, as proving that 神保 could not be another name for the 尸. Even Choo seems not to identify them here, for he says,—送尸而神歸, 'when the She are escorted away, the Spirits return.' Where do they return to? The answer to this given by Ching K'ang-shing is,—'to heaven.' 宰—家宰, 'a steward.' 諸宰 applies to all the servants about the household, or the royal establishment. 君婦—as in st. 3. 廢—去, 'to remove,' kindred in meaning with 徹. The removal of the dishes terminated the sacrificial service, but the sacrificer proceeded to entertain his relatives at a private feast. 諸父兄弟,—all, old and young, who were of the same surname as the sacrificer. 備—具, 'all.'

St. 6. The feast was given in the apartment of the temple behind the hall where the sacrifice had been performed, so that the musicians are represented as entering—going in—to continue at the feast the music which they had discoursed at the sacrifice. In L2 the feast is called 後祿, 'an after happiness,' i.e., a blessing and privilege following on the sacrifice. They had drunk then; now they were both to eat and drink. The 爾 in L3 cannot be got rid of, as in st. 2. We must, I think, come to the conclusion that the ode was written in compliment to the sacrificer—the king, probably—by one of the relatives who shared in the feast; and so here he addresses him directly. 將—進, 'to send forward,' or 行, 'to go round.' 慶, 'to rejoice,' 'be happy.' Ll. 9, 10 are descriptive of the sacrifice that had been offered, and of all others of the same kind in the same temple, so that the Head of the family discharged them (盡之—盡其禮), in great accordance with the statutes (惠—順), and with the seasons for them. 替—廢, 'to discontinue,' 引, 'to lead out,'—to prolong. 之 refers to the sacrifices.

Ode 6. Narrative. HUSBANDRY TRACKED TO ITS FIRST AUTHOR; DETAILS ABOUT IT, GOING ON TO THE SUBJECT OF SACRIFICES TO ANCESTORS.
 There is a close connection between this ode and the last, and the critics suppose that they proceeded from the same writer; this one being fuller on the subject of husbandry and more concise on that of sacrifice. The Preface refers it to the time of king Ching, under whom the political and land systems of the Chow dynasty were first fully organized. But there is nothing in the ode to suggest to us the idea either of Yew or of Ching.

St. 1. In ll. 1, 2, there is a recognition of the work of the great Yu, as the real founder of the kingdom of China, extending the territory of former elective chiefs, and opening up the country. This merit was universally attributed to him, and the writer acknowledges it. 信—

信乎, 'True it is!' 南山,—as in iv. V. 1, et al. This hill bounded the prospect to the south from the capital of Chow, and hence the writer makes mention of it. As Yen Te'an says, he does not mean to confine the work of Yu to that part of the country; but on the other hand there is nothing in the language to afford a confirmation of the statements of the Shoo about that hero's achievements, 甸—

治, 'to regulate,' 'to reduce to order.' Ll. 3, 4.

的的—聖辟貌, 'the app. of being opened up for cultivation.' Ying-tah says that 聖 denotes the use of the plough, and 辟 the clearing away of the wild natural growth of the ground. Whom are we to understand by 曾

孫? The old interpreters all say—king Ching.

Choo says,—the principal in the sacrifice; who is with him, as in the last piece, some great landed proprietor. Technically, the terms denote—the great-grandson; but they are used,

more generally, for any remote descendant. I agree with Choo in referring them to the principal in the sacrifices, which the poet had in his mind; but those royal, I think; and some one of the kings of Chow is intended. 田之—

'fielded them.'

Ll. 5, 6 我 is used as in the last piece. The writer would be a cadet of the royal House, and identifies himself with its services. 疆 denotes

the larger divisions of the country into fields;

理, the divisions of the fields into smaller portions by paths and ditches. The last line simply expresses the direction of the fields according to the course of the channels and the nature of the ground. See Medhurst's dictionary on the character 畝.

St. 2 describes the influences that operate in winter and spring to prepare the ground for the labours of the husbandman. 同雲 is under-

- 3 The boundaries and smaller divisions are nicely adjusted,
 And the millets yield abundant crops,
 The harvest of the distant descendant.
 We proceed to make therewith spirits and food,
 To supply our representatives of the dead, and our guests;—
 To obtain long life, extending over myriads of years.
- 4 In the midst of the fields are the huts,
 And along the bounding divisions are gourds.
 The fruit is sliced and pickled,
 To be presented to our great ancestors,
 That their distant descendant may have long life,
 And receive the blessing of Heaven.

stood by Choo of the clouds all one colour (—色). 雨 is the verb. Fu-fu denotes 'the app. of the falling snow;' mit-muk, that of 'drizzling rains of spring.' Ll. 4, 5 describe the ground after receiving plenty (優) of the rain, moistening it (渥), soaking into it (cha), all in sufficient measure (足).

St. 3 describes the abundant harvest in consequence, and the devoting of a portion of it to sacrificial purposes. L. 1. Ho K'iao (何楷; Ming dyn.) says, 'K'iao and yu are both the names of the boundaries of the fields; the former of those marking off the space of a tsing (井) cultivated by 8 families, and the latter the subdivisions of this assigned to each family.' 翼 denotes 'the well defined adjustment of the 8 divisions.' L. 2. Yu-gu denotes 'the abundant app. of the grain' L. 3 ascribes the rich harvest all to the virtue of the king. Ll. 4—6,—as in the last ode. L. 6 specially applies to the king.

St. 4. The hundred mo in the centre of a tsing were devoted to the govt., and in the middle of them again were 20 mo, assigned to the eight families cultivating the space; and on them were erected the huts in which they lived, while they were actively engaged in their agricultural labours. 菹—'pickled vegetables.' The term here denotes both the process of pickling and the result. 剝 is not only to peel the skin off, but also to slice the fruit. 祜—'blessing.'

St. 5. 清酒—'clear spirits.' The critics have much to say on the preparation of these, on which we need not enter, excepting that they were flavoured and made fragrant by various admixtures. The pouring out of them com-

All round the fragrance is diffused.
Complete and brilliant is the sacrificial service;
Grandly come our ancestors.
They will reward [their descendant] with great blessing,—

- 1 Bright are those extensive fields,
A tenth of whose produce is annually levied.
I take the old stores,
And with them feed the husbandmen.
From of old we have had good years,

menced the services, being intended to bring the Spirits down (降神). The libations were followed by the sacrifice of a red bull (騂—赤), red being the colour in the victims slain under the Chow dynasty, 祖考—先祖 in st. 2 of last ode. Choo says that ll. 4—6 describe the action of the principal in the sacrifice himself (執者主人親執也); Yen Te'an, that such action was delegated to a high official. The text does not enable us to come to a decision in the matter. 鬻刀, —small bells were somehow attached to the handle of the knife so as to give a tinkling sound during the operations. The first operation was to lay open the hair, and declare that it was of the proper colour, that the victim was 'without spot' 膋—脂膏, 'the fat.' The burning of the fat was the second step in inviting the descent of the Spirits.

St. 6. 烝 is taken by some as the name of the winter sacrifice; but it is evidently synonymous here with 享, and is to be taken as —進, 'to bring or send forward.' The 'Complete Digest' gives 由是, 'from this,' 'then,' for the simple 是. Ll. 2—6, —as in the last ode.

Ode 7. NARRATIVE. PICTURES OF HUSBANDRY AND SACRIFICES CONNECTED WITH IT. HAPPY UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN THE PEOPLE AND THEIR SUPERIORS. Here, again, we must reject any reference to kings Yew and Ching. Who the 'I' in the piece is, it is difficult to say, but evidently he and the 'distant descendant' are different persons; and not one, as Choo makes them out to be. I suppose he may have been an officer of the king, who had the charge of the farm, as we may call them, in the royal domain.
That the piece describes what was taking place under his observation, and not the state of things in any former reign, is plain from the
'now (今)' in st. 1, l. 6.

St. 1. Ll. 1, 2 倬—'bright-looking.' 甫
—大, 'large,' 'extensive.' Maou says that 甫田 means 'all the fields under heaven,' i.e., all the fields of the kingdom; but evidently the poet is speaking of what came under his eye.
Ll. 2 tells the revenue from the produce which was paid to the crown, a tenth (什一); the 10th of every hundred, and the 1000th part of every ten thousand. Maou seems to have attached no definite idea to the 十 and 千, and says that they designate the largeness (多) of the revenue;—in which he is quite in error. Choo, after Ching, takes the two characters as—10,000, and makes the revenue to have been a ninth;—see Yen Ts'an on the passage. I have followed Yen's view;—had come to it, indeed,
before I examined his Work.

Ll. 3, 4. 陳—舊粟, 'the old grain,'
arising from the abundance of former harvests,
mentioned in l. 5 (有年—'years of plenty').

By 我 we can only understand the writer or speaker in the piece. When Yen Ts'an takes it of the husbandmen, as if they were speaking in their own persons, he overturns all rules of exegesis. 食, 'to feed,' may be extended so as to embrace all the duty which was anciently held to devolve on a ruler;—see Men. II. Pt. II. IV. 5.
In l. 7, 耘—除草, 'to take away the grass,'

'to weed;' 耔—離本, 'to cover up the roots.' How this last operation was done is a disputed point, on which we need not enter.
Ll. 8. 藹藹 describes the 'luxuriant appearance' of the springing millets. Ll. 9, 10. Ching takes 介 as—舍 and 廬舍, 'the huts,'—those mentioned in st. 4 of last ode; but why introduce here a new meaning of the term? Choo gives for l. 9—於其所美大止息之
處, which is better; but the meaning of 美
is not in 介. 攸—所, 'the place which.'
烝—進, 'to advance,' but the meaning is here more 'to encourage.' 鬣—俊, 'of superior character.'

The general rule was that the sons of hus-bandmen should continue husbandmen; but their superior might select those among them in whom he saw promising abilities, and facilitate their advancement to the higher grade of officers. We are not to suppose that he did so in the case mentioned in the text, but his easy condescension and familiar intercourse with them would keep ambition alive in the aspiring youth among them.

He takes [of the food] on the left and the right,

St. 2. We are to understand that the sacrifices mentioned in I.3 had been sacrifices of thanksgiving offered at the end of the harvest of the preceding year, and that that in II.7,8 either had been or was about to be offered in the spring, to which the piece has reference. Ll. 1,2. 以, 用, and may be translated 'with.' 齊 is here the same as 粢; and 明粢 was an established name for the sacrificial millet. The order of the terms is here inverted from the necessities of the rhyme. 犧 is the name for 'a pure, unblemished victim.' Ll. Both Maou and Choo say that by 社 is meant 'the sacrifice to 后土,' or 'to sovereign Earth,' meaning the earth as the supreme Power in correlation with Heaven; but I agree rather with Ch'ing, who understands it as the sacrifice to the Spirits presiding over the productive energies of the land (五土之神能生萬物者). 方 is the Spirits presiding over the 'four quarters of the sky,' and ending all atmospherical influences. Choo understands II. 4,5 as an acknowledgment by the proprietor that the condition of his fields was a blessing he was indebted for to his husbandmen (我田之所以善者非我之所能致也. 乃賴農夫之福而致之耳). I prefer taking them as in the translation, 慶 having the sense of 'felicitation.' So, Yen Ts'an (我田盡善, 農夫喜慶之). Ll. 7. 御 = 迎, 'to meet'; here = 'to invoke.' By 'the Father of fields' is intended the mythical emperor Shün-yung (神農), who first taught men the art of husbandry. Acc. to the Choo Le, the 1st of the odes of Pin was sung at the sacrifice for rain. 穀, 'to render happy,' = to bless with abundance.

St. 3. Here the King appears on the scene in the 'distant descendant.' Ll. 2-4. see on I.xv. Ll. 1. 以 here is equivalent, I suppose, to 同 there. The old men, who were unequal to field

- 1 Large are the fields, and various is the work to be done.
Having selected the seed, and looked after the implements,
So that all preparations have been made for our labour,
We take our sharp plough-shares,
And commence on the south-lying acres.
We sow all the kinds of grain,
Which grow up straight and large,
So that the wish of the distant descendant is satisfied.
- 2 It ears, and the fruit lies soft in its sheath;
It hardens and is of good quality;
There is no wolf's-tail grass, nor darnel.
We remove the insects that eat the heart and the leaf,
And those that eat the roots and the joints.
So that they shall not hurt the young plants of our fields.

HUSBANDRY AND SACRIFICES CONNECTED WITH IT.

St. 1 describes the labours of the spring. 大

田—甫田 in the last ode. 稼 may have here its proper meaning of 'sowing the seed,'
including, however, all the other labour in connection with that. L. 2 refers to the preparatory work done in the winter. 種—擇其種
'to select the seed; 戒—飭其具' 'to put the implements in good order.' L. 3. 乃—則.

things mentioned in L. 2) 既已周備, 乃

俶—始, 'first,' 'to begin.' 載—事, 'hus-

ness.'—Our first business is with, we first go to work on, the south-lying acres.' L. 7 describes the growth of the grain. 庭—直,

'straight.' In L. 8, 若—順, 'to accord with.'

曾孫 is under the government of this 若—
The labours of the husbandmen and their success were all in accordance with the wishes of the distant descendant (民能順曾孫 之意).

St. 2 describes the growth of the grain and the labours of summer. It is tried to explain 方 by 房, 'a house,' referring to the grain
when it bursts from the ear, and the husk is all but empty. As the husk fills, but the grain is still soft, it is called 阜. 稂—as in I. xiv.

May the Spirit, the Father of husbandry,
Lay hold of them, and put them in the blazing fire!

- 3 The clouds form in dense masses,
And the rain comes down slowly.
May it rain first on our public fields,
And then come to our private!
There shall be young grain unreaped,
And here some sheaves ungathered;
There shall be handfuls left on the ground,
And here ears untouched:—
For the benefit of the widow.
- 4 The distant descendant will come,
When their wives and children
Are bringing food to those [at work] on the south-lying acres.

Shoo, IV. II. 4. The insects in II. 4, 5 are described as 'caterpillars which injure the growing grain,' and are said to attack, severally, the different parts of the plant mentioned in the translation. We cannot, with our present knowledge, give to each its proper name. 穧 is applied to the young of plants, animals, and men; specially and properly, it denotes, as here, 'young grain.' Ll. 7, 8 are to be taken with Choo, as a prayer, though a good enough meaning is drawn from them by Yen Ts'an and others, who read them as indicative. 田祖—as in the last ode. 田祖有神—田祖之神, 'the Spirit of the Father of husbandry.' The 有 must be considered here to have the expletive usage which often belongs to it.

St. 3 describes the loyal feeling of the husbandmen, and some ways in which kindness to the poor was manifested. Ll. 1—4 are best taken, like 7, 8 of last stanza, as expressing the wish or prayer of the husbandmen. 有滄 is descriptive of 'the clouds gathering,' and 萋

萋 of their being collected in dense masses. 祁祁—徐, 'gently.' 'The rain comes,' says Yen Ts'an, 'so to as to soak the ground, but yet not breaking the clods.' Ll. 5, 6—see on Mon-cius, III. Pt. I. III. 9, 10. L. 5, probably refers to patches where the grain had not ripened as in the field generally, and which were left for the poor and the widow. L. 6. 穧—束, 'bundles,' or 'sheaves.' Some bundles would purposely be left, not gathered in; and so with some handfuls in l. 7, and ears in l. 8. 滯—遺棄, 'left behind.' Only the 'widow' is specified in l. 8, but the benefit, no doubt, extended to the poor generally. 伊—維, nearly—'to be.'—Compare the legislation of Moses, in connection with the harvest, for the poor, in Deuteronomy xxiii. 19—22, et al.

St. 4. Ll. 1—3,—as in st. 3 of last ode. 'There, however,' says Choo Kung-tsen, but I am not sure that he is correct, 'the great personages appear in the spring, to stimulate the husbandmen to diligence, but here in the harvest, to rejoice with them in the success of their labours.' The words here are those of the hushandmen, stimulating one another, to rejoice the heart of their superior.' However this be, we must understand the sacrifices immediately spoken of as sacrifices of thanksgiving for the bountiful harvest. 禋 is the name for a sacrifice offered with a pure mind;—as in the Shoo, III. 6. 方禋祀—禋祀四方之神, 'purely sacrifice to the spirits of the four quarters.' They would not do so, however, all at once, or all in one place, but in the several quarters, as they went along on their survey of the royal domain. For each quarter the colour of the victim was different, and hence we have the specification in I. 6 of a red victim which was offered to the Spirit of the south, and of a black victim, which was offered to the Spirit of the north. Choo says that I. 9 expresses the wish of the people for the happiness of the distant descendant. It seems more natural to take it as I have done.

Ode 8. Narrative. THE FEUDAL PRINCES, MET AT SOME GATHERING IN THE EASTERN CAPITAL, PRAISE THE KING AS HE APPEARS AMONG THEM. To what time we should assign the piece, or who the king referred to was, we cannot tell. It seems quite absurd to assign the piece, with the Preface, to the reign of king Yew, and say that it celebrates the ways of the ancient kings, to brand him for his neglect of them. Of the gatherings of the feudal nobles at the eastern capital, in the neighbourhood of the Loh, I have written on III. IV.

St. 1. 洛—see the Shoo, III. 1. Pt. 1. 53, 55, et al. As the 'eastern capital' was built near it, 洛 is often used for that in the Shoo. L. 2 here shows that the writer has the river in his view, though perhaps the occasion makes him speak of its waters in larger style than they deserved. 泱

泱 = 深廣貌 'the app. of being deep and wide.' 君子 is here, evidently, — 天子, 'the son of Heaven,' the king. L. 4 is descriptive of him as concentrating in his own person all the happiness, riches, and dignity of the kingdom. 如茨, — as in VII. 4. Choo well explains the phrase here by 積, 'to be accumulated.' L. 5. 鞞 = 'sadder-dyed.' I cannot accept the statement in the Shwch-wu that the term is a name of the sadder plant; — see I. vii. XV. 1. 鞞 = 鞞, 'the knee covers.' 有爽, — as in III. VI. 1.

L. 6. 作一起, 'to raise.' The whole line must be taken as I have translated it. We are not to suppose that the object of the meeting celebrated was to raise the king's armies for some martial expedition; but the nobles thus express their joy in him as a sovereign equal to his position. 'Six armies' was the force of 75,000 men, which the king could raise in the royal domain.

St. 2. L. 4. 瑤 (Maou has 畢 on the right) = 'a scabbard'; 琫 was the name of the gems with which the king's scabbard was adorned about the top or mouth of it; and all the critics agree in taking 琫 of the gems at the end or bottom of it. But according to the analogy of the corresponding line in st. 1, and a hundred other lines in the Shw, 琫-琫 can only be descriptive of the 琫, and I have translated accordingly. L. 5, 6 contain a wish or prayer for the king or for his dynasty. 室家 = 'the fortunes of his family or dynasty.' 'The son of Heaven,' says Choo Tsoo-hing (朱道行; Ming dyn.) 'has all under heaven for his family (天子以天下爲家).'

St. 2. L. 4. 同 is equivalent to 聚, 'to be collected'; — as in III. VI. 2, et al. 家邦 = 家室 in last stanza. All the great families and all the States or regions in the kingdom are considered as belonging to the sovereign.

The rhymes are: — in st. 1, 茨, 師, cat. 15, 1; in 2, 瑤, 室, cat. 12, 1, 3; in 3, 同, 邦, cat. 9; and perhaps, 矣, 止, cat. 1, 1, 2, in all the stanzas.

Ode X. Allusive and narrative. RESPONSE TO THE FORMER:—THE KING CELEBRATES THE PRAISES OF THE PRINCES. Nothing could be more natural than this view of the piece, which is given by Choo,—leaving the time and the king undetermined as in the preceding ode. The Preface says the piece was directed against king Yew, who neglected the sons of ministers of worth, and gave the places which they should have occupied to mean creatures of his own. But there is nothing in the whole piece to lead our thought, away from the princes commended in it, to their fathers and ancestors.

St. 1. Choo, after Maou, defines 裳裳 by 堂堂, which Ying-tah again explains by 光明 'brilliant,' 'splendid.' Comp. 皇皇 者華 in I. IV. 1. Some adopt the reading of 常, and think that 常常—the 常棣 of

I. IV. 1. for which there seems no reason. 清 —盛貌 'luxuriant-looking.' The beauty of the flowers and the luxuriance of the leaves are in allusion to the elegance and accomplishments of the feudal princes;—it seems absurd, in K'ang-shing and others, to find the king in the flowers, standing high, and the princes in the leaves, growing below. 之子—these gentlemen;—the princes whom the ode celebrates. Ll. 3—6.—see on II. IX. 1.

St. 2. L. 2 芸—the dict. says that this term is to be read here as 運, but does not define its meaning. Maou and Choo understand it as indicating 'the abundance or depth of the yellow (黃盛)'. L. 4 章—文章, 'elegance,' referring, I suppose, to their dress, equipments, and accomplishments. L. 6 慶 —福慶, 'happiness and prosperity.'

And they execute the movement properly.
They are possessed of the ability,
And right is it their movements should indicate it.

St. 3. Ll. 4-6,—see on I. II. 2, III. 4.

St. 4. This stanza is all narrative. By the 君子 we are to understand the princes,—the 之子 of the other stanzas; and by II. 1, 3 are intended their movements and deportment on all sides, in all circumstances. 宜之 and 有之 have a similar meaning. Choo Kung-tse'én says that 有之 in I. 4 is to be referred to the external demonstrations of the princes; and in I. 5, to their internal possession of what these were the outcome of. Then the last line says that it was only natural the external demonstration should be in harmony with the internal reality.—Yen Ts'au, who adopts the view of the Preface, refers 君子 to the fathers or ancestors of the 之子, the princes or nobles spoken of; and holds that I. 6 means—'It is right they should be like their fathers.' One can only smile at such exegesis.

TITLE OF THE BOOK.—桑扈之什二
之七 'The Decade of Sang-hoo; Book
VII. of Part II.'

Ode 1. Allusive and narrative. THE KING, ENTERTAINING THE CHIEF AMONG THE FEUDAL PRINCES, EXPRESSES HIS ADMIRATION OF THEM,
AND GOOD WISHES FOR THEM. As usual, king Yü is found here by the old interpreters, who think that the piece was designed to reprove somehow the want of propriety in the festal intercourse between him and the princes. Kiang Ping-chang adduces various passages from Tso-she,
in which II. 3, 4 of st. 3, 4 are quoted, in support of this view; but the lines might serve the purpose for which the speakers in Tso-she employ them, on the interpretation of the ode adopted
by Choo, and which I am obliged to follow.

St. 1. 交交, —as in I. xi. VI. Sang-hoo, —as in v. II. 5. The bird is said to be called 'the mulberry hoo, because it appears when the mulberry tree is coming into leaf. 鶯 is applied to the feathers of birds which are 'striped and varie-gated,' —有文章 as Maou expresses it.
II. 1, 2, here and in the next stanza, are intended to compliment the princes on the elegance of their manners.

L. 3. Choo takes 胥 as a final particle, like 只, which we have often met with, and often occurring after 樂; and 君子 refers to the princes whom the king was feasting. Maou gives 胥 as 皆, 'all,' and 君子 as embracing both the king and his princes, —which is very unnatural, and difficult of construction.
Still more unlikely is Ch'ing's view of 胥 as
'the designation of men of talents and wisdom.'
The dict. gives both Maou and Choo's account of 胥, with reference to this line, without any further remark. L. 6 may be explained indicatively, or, with Choo, as a prayer of the king for the princes. 祐 = 福, 'happiness,' 'blessing.'

St. 2. 領 = 頸, 'the neck.' The last line leads us to think of the tsen-tze as the chief of the princes, rulers of the larger States, and having authority over the smaller ones, so that all the regions of the entire kingdom were sheltered behind them as so many 'screens.'

萬 彼 旨 兕<sup>四</sup> 受 不 百 之<sup>三</sup>
 福 交 酒 觥 福 戢 辟 屏
 來 匪 思 其 不 爲 之 求 敖 柔 觥 那 憲 翰。

- 3 These screens, these buttresses,—
 All the chiefs will take them as a pattern.
 Are they not self-restrained? Are they not careful?
 Will they not receive much happiness?

- 4 How long is that cup of rhinoceros' horn!
 Good are the spirits in it and soft.
 While it passes round, they show no pride;
 All blessing must come to seek them.

II. Yuen yang.

宜 福 萬 君 羅 畢 于 鴛<sup>一</sup> 鴛

- 1 The Yellow ducks fly about,
 And are taken with hand-nets and spread-nets.
 May our sovereign live for ten thousand years,
 Enjoying the happiness and wealth which are his due!

St. 3. L. 1. 之—是, 'this,' 'these.' 翰 is used in the sense of 幹, the frame-planks used in building, and here equivalent to 'supports,' 'buttresses.' L. 2. 辟—君, 'ruler,' 'chief.' The 'hundred peck' are all the smaller princes, who looked up to the 君子 in the ode, and took them for a pattern (憲—法: 爲憲—以之爲法). L. 3, 4 are taken by Choo interrogatively, according to a usage, which we shall find common in Parts III and IV. Mao also adopts substantially the same construction. 戢—斂, 'to gather,' here—'self-collected.' 難—慎, 'to be careful.' Wang Gan-shih brings out the meaning of the term thus, — 難則不易, 易則傲慢. 'Feeling the difficulty of their position, they did not have a sense of ease; that sense would have been seen in arrogance.' 那—多, 'much,' 'great.' Choo's expansion of the lines is 豈

不斂乎, 豈不慎乎, 其受福豈不多乎

St. 4. 兕角—as in L. III. 3. 其觥—有椽 in v. IX. 1. Yen Ts'an and others say that the rhinoceros' cup here was inflicted on guests guilty of any impropriety. It may have been employed, sometimes, for that purpose; but there is no reference to such a use of it here, nor in L. III. L. 2. The 思 is taken here as a medial particle. So, Wang Yin-che contends, it should be taken in L. I. 1. 2, where, however, it may have its usual meaning. There are other instances of its occurring in the middle of lines, as here. L. 2. 彼交—'in their intercourse,' or 'they in their conviviality.' 敖—傲, 'to be proud,' 'arrogant.' On this and L. 4. Choo says, 無所傲慢, 則我無事於求福而福反來求我也. Wang Yin-che construes L. 3 differently. He gives to 彼 the meaning of 匪, and

福祿艾之。君子萬年。摧之秣之。乘馬在廐。宜其遐福。君子萬年。戢其左翼。鴛鴦在梁。

- 2 The Yellow ducks are on the dam,
With their left wings gathered up.
May our sovereign live for ten thousand years,
Enjoying the lasting happiness which is his due!
- 3 The teams of steeds are in the stable,
Fed with forage and grain.
May our sovereign live for ten thousand years,
Sustained in his happiness and wealth!

tries to show that the two characters are sometimes interchanged. His proof is not very extensive; but we might accept it, if he did not also have to go on to insist on 交 being read as, and equivalent to, 姣.

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 屬, 羽, 胥, 祐.
cat. 5, t. 2; in 2, 屬, 胥, 領 (prop. cat. 12), 屏, cat. 11; in 3, 翰, 憲, 難, 那 (prop. 17),
cat. 14; in 4, 隸, 柔, 教 (prop. cat. 3), 求.
cat. 5, t. 1.

Ode 2. Allusive. RESPONSIVE TO THE LAST ODE:—THE PRINCESS EXPRESSES THEIR PRAYERS AND WISHES FOR THE KING. The writer, it is supposed in the Preface, speaks here of the ancient wise kings, who dealt with all creatures as they ought to do, and exacted moderate revenues for their own support. It would be amusing, but a waste of time, to exhibit how the allusive lines are tortured to harmonize with this view. Even Kiang Ping-chang rejects it; but he adopts a view from Ho Kase, which is about as absurd, contending that the parts of the ode suit admirably the history of king Yew, and of his relations to his wife and his concubine Pao Sze. Adopting, as I have done, the interpretation given by Choo, which suits admirably the last two lines of the stanzas, we can make nothing out of the first two which will indicate the nature of the allusive element in them, and can only say that the ode is a remarkable instance of the allusive element in which there is no admixture of the metaphorical. So Yen Ts'an characterizes it, (與之不兼比者); and yet he proceeds to serve up afresh the inanities of Maon.

St. 1. The yuen is the male, and the yung the female of what is called the 'Mandarin duck,'—anus gularis. I adopt for it the name of 'the Yellow Duck (黃鴨),' by which it is designated in the Pan-t's'ao, with reference to the prevailing colour of its plumage, though that is variegated, and the creature is, perhaps, the most beautiful of all the duck tribe. Another name for it is 匹鳥, which may be translated 'the Faithful bird,' as it is supposed to be a monogamist, and if either of a pair die, the other is said to pine away, and follow its mate to the grave from sorrow. The male and female do show an extraordinary attachment to each other, which is, with the Chinese, an emblem of conjugal fidelity. 畢 is the name for a hand-net, with a long handle, with which creatures may be surprised and taken; 羅, in distinction from the other, is a spread-net, into which they go or fall themselves. 君子 is here—天子, 'the king.' 宜之 conveys the idea that all blessings are the king's 'due.'

St. 2. L. 2 has wonderfully vexed the critics. The translation may be regarded as literal. One of the commentators Ch'ang (長子), who preceded Choo, says, 'When birds sit or roost together, their heads are turned in opposite directions, bringing their left wings folded up, so as to lean on each other, while their right wings are left at liberty to guard against any danger that may approach.' This may be doubted as a general fact, but the writer of the ode had probably seen a pair of the Yellow ducks seated on a dam in the position which Ch'ang describes. It would be an instance of their mutual attachment, which I believe to be a fact. L. 4. 遐—遠或久, 'long-continued.'

St. 3. 4. 乘馬—'teams of horses.' These are supposed to be the teams of the royal carriages; but I do not see that this is necessary, any more than that we should find out some connection between the king and the ducks. L. 1. The dict. reads 摧 here as tr'o, and

乘馬在廄。君摧秣之。萬年。福祿綏之。

- 4 The teams of steeds are in the stable,
Fed with grain and forage.
May our sovereign live for ten thousand years,

How can they be strangers?
They are your brethren, and no others.
[They are like] the mistletoe and the dodder, makes it = 莖 'to cut forage.' The meaning is correct, but the rhyme in st. 4 will not admit of the pronunciation ts'w. The meaning of the line appears in the translation, but we need not insist on what most of the critics enlarge on,—that the horses were fed with forage when they were not employed, and with grain, when they were called forth to service. 艾—養 'to nourish.' One of the Soos takes it here in the sense of 老, 'to become old,' which also gives a suitable sense (福祿終其身) 綏—安, 'to give rest,' or 'solace.'

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 羅宜, cat. 17; in 2, 異福, cat. 1, 1.3; in 3, 秣艾, cat. 14, 1.5; in 4, 摧綏, 4, 1.

Ode 3. Narrative, with allusive and metaphorical portions, in all the stanzas. CELEBRATING THE KING FRASING WITH HIS RELATIVES BY COMRADESHIP AND AFFINITY. The concluding five lines of st. 3 give some countenance to the view of the ode insisted on by the interpreters of the old school,—that the piece was intended by way of warning, to admonish King Yew, who was abandoning himself to feasting and mirth when ruin was imminent. Still the spirit of the whole ode is so joyous, that we need not find in those lines any reference to special dangers which the writer had in mind, but only the general uncertainty of life, which made him think that the best plan was to enjoy the pleasures of the present time.

With regard to the different elements in the composition of the stanzas, Foo Kwang says, 'L. 1 in itself only says that those present at the feast were in their leather caps, and is simply narrative, but the second line is suddenly interjected, and serves to introduce ll. 4, 5 below, so that ll. 1, 2 become allusive. Then we have the metaphorical element in ll. 6, 7.'

St. 1. L. 1. Ying-tah observes that 弁 is the general name for a cap. There are many varieties of it:—the 爵弁 used by an officer at sacrifices; the 章弁, used in war; the 冠弁, used in hunting. The 皮弁 was used both by high and low, and therefore we know it must be it which is intended here. Ts'ou Soy-chung says that the 皮弁 was the ordinary cap worn at court, and at entertainments. As distinguished from the 章, it was made of deer skin, while the other was made from the skin of the ox. 有頍 describes 'the app. of the cap,' but in what way we cannot tell. L. 2 —是(實—寔—是)何人乎,—as in the translation. It is better to take the line thus, than as if, with Yen Te'an and K'ang, it—'what for is this?' 維 and 伊 have both to be disregarded;—simply expletives. Ll. 3, 4 are addressed to the king as the entertainer or host Ll. 5, 6. The 蔦 is a parasitical plant, no doubt of the genus cuscuta. It may not be the mistletoe grown on the oak, but it is a plant of the same kind. Acc. to Maon and Choo, the 女蘿 is the same as the 兔絲 'rabbit-silk,' which is another name for the 唐, or dodder, of I. iv. IV. 1. This identification has been impugned, and the author of the Japanese plates says both the critics were in error. According to the picture given there, some kind of moss is intended. 地—as in I. I. II. 1. Ll. 8—12. I have been puzzled to know whether we should take these lines as in the 1st person, the writer expressing his own sentiments, and 君子 belonging to the guests; or as I have done in the translation. What mainly determined me was the 奕奕 which would seem to put 心 in the plural. See the phrase in II. V. 4, where it denotes 'in many trains.' Here it is applied to the thoughts of the princes, 'loose and unconnected,' 'unsettled.' 庶幾—to approximate to.

St. 2. Ll. 2. 期 is a final particle, interrogative, interchangeable with the 其 used in the same way, as in I. ix. III. 1, 2, et al. After Maon, Choo explains 時 by 善, but that is quite unnecessary. The character is here—

St. 3. L. 2. 阜 = 多, 'many,' 'abundant.'
L. 6. 甥舅 denotes the princes who were connected with the king by marriage, and had not the Ke surnames. The Urb-ya says, 'A mother's brothers are called 內舅; a wife's father is called 外舅; an aunt's son, 甥; so are a wife's brothers, and a sister's sons. To all who once falls, we may presume that snow will soon

follow it. L. 10 = 相見之日未知

Ke Pan (季本; Ming dyn.) supposes that this and the other lines were the language passing from mouth to mouth at the feast. Rather they express the sentiment which the writer thinks should animate the company.

Ode 4. Narrative and allusive. THE REJOICING OF A BRIDEGROOM OVER HIS YOUNG, BEAUTIFUL, AND VIRTUOUS BRIDE. If we are to believe the 'little Preface,' and the critics who follow it, whether in whole like Yen Ts'an, or in part like K'ang Ping-chang, we have in these verses an officer, not rejoicing over the bride whom he had got for himself, but drawing the picture of a lady whom he would rejoice to see as the bride of King Yew, instead of the hated and odious P'ang Sze. With reason does Choo discard the authority of the Preface. Accepting the interpretation of the ode which lies upon its surface, we can sympathize with the writer in his joy, though some of his expressions are sufficiently strange and grotesque.

St. 1. 鑿—as in LIII. XIV. 3. Choo says here that when the carriage was not in use, the leash were taken out, and were put in when it was about to be used. This I can hardly understand, unless we are to take the term for the bolt or pin of the axle ends, and not those ends themselves. K'een-keen give the noise made by the iron ends of the axle, as the carriage moved on. 鑿=美貌, 'beautiful-looking.' 逝=往, 'to go,' meaning that he went in his carriage, and met his bride at her parents' house, according to the proper rule on such occasions (逝—往迎之). LI. 3, 4. The writer hungered and thirsted, but it was not for food and drink, but for his bride. 德音—as in LIII. X. 1, et al. 括=會, 'to meet with,' 'to be associated with.'—These four lines should be translated, I think, in the past tense, but in 5, 6 the lady is at home with him in his house. The presence of friends is generally necessary to constitute a feast, but he and she would suffice alone for their mutual happiness.

St. 2. 依 is defined by 茂木貌, 'the app. of luxuriant trees.' 平林=平地之木成林, 'trees in a plain forming a forest.' The Acron is a pheasant, with a long tail, rather less, Choo says, than the 翟, whose flesh is very delicate. The pheasants were in their proper place in the forest, and so, the writer felt, was his bride in his house. 辰 and Choo define 辰 simply by 時, 'time,' but responding, as the term does, to 依 in L. 1, it is, as the 'Complete Digest' has it, 嫁之及時, 'married at the proper time,' 'in season.' The 德音 in the last st. gives place to 令德 here. The writer knows the lady now,—no longer by report. L. 5 is thus expanded in the 'Essence and Flower of the She.' 我用燕飲以樂之, 且稱譽其德, 'I feast her to make her glad, and praise her virtue.' In L. 6 the husband speaks directly to his bride.

 The great road is easy to be travelled on.
 My four steeds advanced without stopping;
 The six reins [made music] in my hands like lute-[strings].
 I see you my bride,
 To the comfort of my heart.

St. 3. In st. 1 the bridegroom had said that without the aid of friends, they would feast and be happy together. Here he says that they would be so, without the appliances of an ordinary feast in good wine and viands. The 'Complete Digest,' explains 庶幾 by 冀望, 'hoping,' but it does not rid of what the hope was. The old interpreters make the hope to be that the king would change his ways, and so that the king would change the help she was able to give him! I believe I have caught the meaning of the writer.

St. 4. Ll. 1, 2 describe a labour on the part of the writer for which we are not prepared. It is not to be supposed that he actually did what these lines say, and I cannot regard ll. 1-4 as allusive, but as metaphorical. It was no easy thing to ascend the high ridge, and split the branches of the oaks; but when accomplished, such luxuriant trees repaid the labour (其葉湑兮). So it had not been an easy thing to get the bride he had done (comp. L.I.I.), but now that she was got, he forgot all the anxieties of his quest. In l. 5, 鮮一罕, 'seldom.' Koo K'e-yuen (顧起元; Ming dyn.) gives the meaning of the line well: 鮮我覯爾, 猶言難得見爾也. 蓋惟其令德, 世不恆有, 故云然. 'Her admirable virtue was such as the world does not always have, and therefore he thus expresses himself.

St. 3 gives, as it were, a summary of the whole ode. We can understand the lady's being compared to a 'high hill.' The appropriateness of 'a great road' is not so obvious (景行大道).

止 is the final particle. 駢駢—as in I. II. 1, 2. The most natural interpretation of I. 4 is that which I have given; Choo seems to make the meaning to be that the reins were handled as skillfully as the strings of a lute are arranged. In the Lo Ke, XXIX. 10, ll. 1, 2, are quoted, and a remark from Confucius is added, bringing out a lesson from the whole ode on the earnest pursuit of virtue! What he says is not to be taken as giving his view of the meaning of the ode; but he could hardly have said what he did, if he had interpreted it as the Preface does.

Ode 5. Metaphorical and allusive. AGAINST LISTENING TO SLANDERERS. The Preface says the piece was directed against king Yew, who lent a ready ear to slander, and Choo so far agrees with it, taking it as a warning to some king, without mentioning Yew. Some make it directed against king Le; but that is altogether an immaterial point. To me the piece looks suspiciously like one of the Fung, and there have been critics who on some little show of evidence have claimed a place for it in Part I, Bk. IX.; but there is no answering the question put by K'ang Ping-chang, 'If it belong to the Fung, how did it come to be placed here in the Yao?' With regard to the dist. character of the first stanza and of the two others, Law Kin says, 'In the 1st stanza the flies and the slanderers appear as if in correlation, from which we know that the flies are here spoken of metaphorically. In the other two stanzas, the flies and the slanderers are in correlation and hence we know that their structure is allusive. The metaphor and the allusion are here very like each other, but they are really distinct,—as in the K'ue fung.'

St. 1. 營營 give 'the buzzing noise' made by the flies, as they come and go. I do not know that there is any difference between the 青蠅 here, and the 蒼蠅 of I. viii. I. 1. The Japanese plates do not give the tsing ying at all, and Hsing Ping says that the ts'ang is a variety of it. Ch'ing says that the fly in the text dirties what is white, and makes it black, which makes it the fit emblem of a slanderer. 樊—藩, 'a fence, or hedge.' L. 3,—as in II. IX. 3, et al.; only by 君子 here the king is intended. It is difficult to believe that either Yew or Le, or any sovereign of similar character, could be spoken of as in this line.—Both Yen Ts'ao and K'ang adduce here a passage from the books of Han, (武五子傳, 'History of the Five Sons of Wu') to the effect that the king of Ch'ang-yü dreamt one night of the emperor Hsiao-woo, that he saw a great accumulation of filth left by these blue flies on the stairs of the palace, and consulted one of his officers on the subject, who quoted this ode, and told him that the dream indicated that there were many calumniators about him.

St. 2. Choo defines 極 in l. 3 by 已, so that 罔極 would—無已, 'without stop-

St. 3. It is easy to see that 構 in l. 4 must be equivalent to 交亂 in the prec. stanza;
but it is a question how the term comes to have this significance. Both Ch'ing and Choo give the meaning of it as 合, 'to bring together,'
the connection showing that the issue is variance. From 我二人, we must infer that the speaker had fallen under the king's suspicions in consequence of being slandered; but it is strange any one should thus speak of the king on a level with himself. We might understand, indeed, the duke of Chow's thus addressing King Ching, and some have therefore assigned the ode to him, and explained the whole of the circumstances which brought the duke under suspicion for a time; but the language of the 4th lines in st. 2, 3 is not sufficient to justify such a view.

Ode 6. Narrative. AGAINST DRUNKENNESS.
DRINKING ACCORDING TO RULE, AND DRINKING TO EXCESS. A LIVELY PICTURE OF THE LICENSE OF THE TIMES. The old interpreters and Choo agree in thinking that the author of this was duke Woo of Wei;—whose praises are sung in
l. v. l. There is not only the authority of the Preface for this, but that also of Han Ying, who adds, moreover, that Woo made it, when repenting that he himself had fallen into the vice which he so graphically describes and strongly condemns. To him also is ascribed the second ode in Pt. III. iii. He played an important part in the affairs of the kingdom, which terminated

in the death of King Yew, and the removal of the capital from Hsiao to Loh. The piece before us is descriptive, we may presume, of things as they were at court in the time of Yew.
The general plan of it is plain enough. In st.
1, and 2 we have two instances of the temperate use of spirits, and in 3—5 we have the abuse of them on festive occasions. St. 1 is occupied with the moderate use of them at trials of archery before the king, when no license was indulged in. St. 2 is said to show the same moderation on occasions of sacrifice; but there is much in it that is perplexing and difficult to understand. The riotous feast described in st.
3—5 was, probably, the entertainment given by the king to the princes of the same surname with himself, at the conclusion of the seasonal sacrifices;—the 'second benefit,' mentioned in the 5th ode of last Book. Sts. 3, 4 are sufficiently easy;
but we are tasked to the utmost to explain
satisfactorily all the lines of st. 5.

St. 1. There were various trials of skill in archery, of which the greatest was that here referred to,—before the king, and called 'the great archery (大射)' The competition, it appears, was preceded, not by a heavy feast,
but by a slight entertainment. L. 1. The guests need not be confined to those who were to take part in the shooting, though the 'Complete Digest' says so, 賓行射之人. There

以發獻射弓大舉鐘飲酒

The spirits are mild and good,
 And they drink, all equally reverent.
 The bells and drums are properly arranged;
 And they raise their pledge-cups with order and ease.
 [Then] the great target is set up;
 The bows and arrows are made ready for the shooting;
 The archers are matched in classes.
 'Show your skill in shooting,' [it is said].
 'I shall hit that mark,' [it is responded].
 'And pray you to drink the cup.'

would be many others present,—princes, nobles, and officers. 筵—席, 'a mat,'—one made of bamboo. As in those early times they did not use tables, but entertainments were set out upon mats laid on the floor instead, 'to come to the mat (初筵—初卽席)' was equivalent to 'to come to the feast.' L. 2. 左右 are referred to the mats. 秩秩—as in L. xi. III. 3, et al. The order would appear in the salutations exchanged by the guests with their host and with one another, and in all their demeanour. L. 3.—as in I. V. 3. 楚 here being equal to 踐 there. L. 4. 饔 here is the name of the contents of the p<sup>an</sup>, not flesh, but pickles, sauces, &c. Perhaps preserved fruits may be included;—whatever of the kind was suitable for a slight entertainment. Ying-tah observes that 饔 is a general name, and may comprehend every thing brought upon the table (or mat), the fish or kernels of the so included; but its meaning must be here restricted. 旅—陳, 'to set in order,' 'to set forth.' L. 5. 和旨 is explained by 調美, 'tempered and fine,' so that I suppose that anciently the Chinese drank their spirits diluted, as they do now. L. 6. 偕—齊一, 'in the same spirit and manner.' L. 7 refers to a necessary change which was made in the arrangement of these instruments. The archery took place in the open court, beneath the hall or raised apartment where the entertainment was given. Near the steps leading up to the hall was the regular place of the bells and drums, but it was necessary now to remove them more on one side, to leave the ground clear for the archers. L. 8. 醕 here—醕爵, 'the pledge-cup.' The host first presented a cup to the guest, which the latter drank; and then he returned a cup to the host. After this preliminary ceremony, the company all drank to one another, 'took up their cups,' as it is here expressed. 逸逸 is descriptive of the order and decency with which the cup went round. After this cup, the business of the meeting was proceeded to. L. 9. The 'great target' was that used by the king, and in trials under his eye;—we need not go into a description of it. Choo defines 抗 (read kang) by 張, 'to spread,' 'to set out,' but that meaning of the character is not given in the dictionary, which quotes the passage under the definition of 舉, 'to lift or raise up.' K'ang shing refers the term to the centre part, a board's head, painted on a piece of wood or cloth, which was now taken and affixed to the target frame in its place. L. 10. 斯 is here — 乃, used as the substantive verb. 張 can hardly mean that the bows were bent and the arrows upon them, but that both bows and arrows were held ready for shooting. L. 11. 同一比, 'to be matched.' Three pairs were chosen by the officers who had the direction of the trial. The others matched themselves. L. 12. 爾 requires that we take this line as the utterance of some one, probably of the opponent of the archer who was going to shoot; and then in ll. 13, 14 we have the archer's reply. L. 13.—'I will make a bull's eye.' The defeated member of a pair had to drink a cup of spirits as a punishment; and to this L. 14 refers.

And each of them exerts his ability.
A guest draws the spirits,
An attendant enters again, with a cup,
And fills it,—the cup of rest.
Thus are performed your seasonal ceremonies.

St. 2, acc. to the view of Maou and most of the critics, illustrates the temperate use of spirits at sacrifices,—one of the seasonal sacrifices to ancestors being in the writer's eye, as is indicated in the last line. What is here described took place, I suppose, as the proper business of the sacrifice was being concluded.

L. 1. 簫舞.—comp. L. 1. in I. III. XVII. 3. Maou says on the whole line, 秉簫而舞與笙鼓相應.—as in the translation. L. 2.—comp. L. 1. in vi. V. 6. 和—'in concert.' L. 3.

丞—進, 'to bring forward,' 'to advance,'
衍—樂, 'to give pleasure to,' 烈—業, meaning 'meritorious.' This line refers, probably, to the dancing and music, as intended to please the ancestors who were the objects of the sacrifice, and is said, in l. 4, to be a sequel of, or in harmony with, all the other ceremonies which had been observed. 洽—合.—'in accord with.' L. 6 intimates that the great (壬—大) observances, in the minutest portions (林—盛) of them, had been attended to. Ll. 7, 8 contain the communication from the spirits of the ancestors to the king or principal in the sacrifice. 其 has the optative force. 湛—樂, 'to be happy.' Ll. 8-14 are understood to refer to the ceremony of drinking with the representative of the spirit on the part of the guests, and to which all the previous part of the stanza is introductory. In ll. 9, 10, we can only take 曰 as a particle, and lay little stress on the 爾, but render it in the 3d person. But what is meant by their 'displaying their ability,' I cannot tell, unless it be that they somehow showed their interest in the ceremony that was going on. The 'guest' in l. 11 is said to be the eldest of all the scions of the royal House present on the occasion. At this point, he presented a cup to the representative of the ancestor, and received one from him. He then proceeded to take some more spirits from one of the vases of supply (仇—挹於壺), and

- 3 When the guests first approach the mats,
All harmonious are they and reverent.
Before they have drunk too much,
Their deportment is carefully observant of propriety;
But when they have drunk too much,
Their deportment becomes light and frivolous:—
They leave their seats, and go elsewhere,
They keep dancing and capering.
Before they have drunk too much,
Their deportment is cautious and grave;
But when they have drunk too much,
Their deportment becomes indecent and rude:—
Thus when they have too much,
They lose all sense of orderliness.
- 4 When the guests have drunk too much,
They shout out and brawl.
They disorder the dishes;

the attendant (室人, 'a man of the chambers,' who he was is much disputed.) in l. 11 came in, and filled another cup (又—復), which was also presented to the representative of the dead. This was called the 'cup of repose or comfort,' as in l. 13 (康—安; 酒所以安體); —and the sacrifice was thus concluded, in all sobriety and decency.

St. 3. Very different were the scenes at the feast which followed. The 止 throughout the st. is the final particle. 威儀, —as in l. iii. l. 3, et al. in l. 4, 反反—'decorous,' 'observant of propriety,' as if the guests were conducting an introspective process with themselves. In l. 6, 幡幡 is the reverse of this, —輕數

as in the translation. L. 7. 遷—徙, 'to remove to another place.' L. 8. 屢—數, 'frequently.' 僊僊 is defined 軒舉之狀 'their manner in lifting themselves up.' L. 10. 抑抑—愼密, as in the translation. L. 12. 忸忸—嫫嫫, 'indecent and rude.' In l. 13, 是曰 may be translated 'That is to say,' but it is better to take 曰 all through the piece as a particle, 是曰—'thus.'

St. 4. In l. 2, 號 and 呶 have nearly the same meaning; perhaps 呶 approximates to 'brawling.' In l. 4, 飲飲—傾側之狀

They keep dancing in a fantastic manner.
 Thus when they have drunk too much,
 They become insensible of their errors.
 With their caps on one side, and like to fall off,
 They keep dancing and will not stop.
 If, when they have drunk too much, they went out,
 Both they [and their host] would be happy;
 But remaining after they are drunk,
 Is what is called doing injury to virtue.
 Drinking is a good institution,
 Only when there is good deportment in it.

- 5 On every occasion of drinking,
 Some get drunk, and some do not.
 An inspector is appointed,
 With a recorder to assist him.
 But those drunkards, in their vileness,
 Are ashamed of those who do not get drunk.
 These have no opportunity to speak,

'all to one side.' L. 6. 郵, i. g. 尤一過, 'that which is wrong.' L. 7. The 弁, as in ode 3, shows the nature of the feast. In their riot,
 the guests wore their caps on one side (側), so that they were like to fall off (俄—傾貌).
 L. 8. 僇僇—不止, as in the translation.
 What is said in ll. 9, 10 may be doubted. The meaning of l. 10 is not clear. Choo says it is that both their host and they would be praised
 as having well discharged their several parts.
 In l. 12, 伐德—害其德, 'injure their virtue.' Choo expands ll. 13, 14—飲酒之 所以甚美者, 以其有令儀, as in the translation; adding 今若此則 無復有儀矣

St. 5. The two prec. stanzas are easily understood and explained, but it is not so with this;
 and from l. 3 to the end every critic of note has his own method. The 'inspector' and 'recorder' are generally supposed to have been officers regularly appointed for the conservation of good order on such occasions but Uh'ing thinks that they were specially appointed by the drunken majority, to see that every one got drunk like themselves, allowing no 'bustaps' or other evasion of the cup. Some take ll. 8—15 as the words of the drunkards; others as words of warning spoken to them by the sober. I have done the best I could with them,—mainly after Yen Ts'ea. 式 is simply the initial character,

And prevent the others from proceeding to such great abandonment.

[They might say], 'Do not speak what you ought not to speak;
Do not say what you have no occasion to say.

If you speak, drunk as you are,

We will make you produce a ram without horns.

With three cups you lose your memories;—

How dare you go on to more?

Ode 7. Allusive. PRAISE OF THE KING BY

Ode 8. Allusive and narrative. RESTORATIVE TO THE FORMER;—CELEBRATING THE APPEARANCE OF THE FEUDAL PRINCES AT THE COURT, THE

SPLENDOR OF THEIR ARRIVAL, THE PROPRIETY OF THEIR EXHIBITION, AND THE FAVOURS CONFERRED ON THEM BY THE KING. It is not worth while saying anything on the old view of this piece, as intended to censure king Yaw for the carelessness and arrogance which characterized his treatment of the princes of the States.

St. 1. LI. 1, 2. 菽—as in vi. III. 3, et al. 筥之筥之—see on LI. IV. 2. The 之 make the characters preceding them into verbs; but we can only translate them as I have done. What is the nature of the allusion in these lines, or what is the transition from them to the lines that follow, is not clear. Nor is the allusive element evident in stt. 3, 4, and 5, so that I shall not attempt to exhibit it. L. 3. By 君

子 we are to understand the feudal princes. This stanza is anticipatory of their arrival at court. In LI. 4—8 the king appears to be soliloquizing about the tokens of favour which he will confer upon them, and saying first that he had none to give,—to magnify the more their deserts. 路車, 'state chariots,' must have been understood of two classes:—those adorned with metal (金車), which were conferred on princes of the same surname as the royal House; and those adorned with ivory (象車), conferred on princes of other surnames. L. 8 refers to the emblazoned robes which constituted the full dress of the princes, and the figures on which are all mentioned in the Shuo, II. iv. 4. The robes of a 'high duke' have been described on I. xv. VI. 1;—which see. Ordinary dukes had 5 of the symbols, beginning with the dragon, on the upper robe, and 5 on the lower, beginning with the pondweed; marquises and earls had 7 in all, from the 'flowery fowl' downwards; viscounts and barons had 9, beginning with the 'temple-cup' above and the hatchet below. The 玄衮, therefore, of the text would seem to point to the robes of a duke, and the 黼 to those of a baron; but the line embraces all of all ranks on whom such distinctions of royal favour were bestowed.

St. 2. Ll. 1, 2. Pei-fu describes 'the app. of the water issuing from the spring' and san-tseu is 'a bubbling spring.' The nao (seen with 木 at the side, instead of 水) is explained in the Urh-ya by 正出, which again—

漏出 芹 is figured in the Japanese plates as cress, and such, I believe, is the meaning of it here. The term is now applied to cress, parsley, and celery. Ll. 4—5 shows us the arrival of the princes at the court,—as if the king had been looking out for them. 旗—as in I. VIII. 3,

et al. 淠淠 denote the 'app. of the flags moving in the wind.' 嘒嘒—see v. III. 4, where the combination is used of the noise made by insects. It indicates the low sound naturally made by the bells, as the horses were driven gently along. In l. 7 we hardly expect to find 駟 after 駟, but rather look for 服, 'the two inside horses' of a carriage. I can conceive no reason for the use of 駟 but its usefulness as a rhyme. 所以 in l. 8 seems to approach the meaning of 所以, 'therefore.' It sums up ll. 4—6 as evidences that the princes were indeed arrived.

St. 3. The whole of this stanza is narrative. Ll. 1, 2 describe two parts of the dress of the princes,—merely as specimens of the whole. 赤芾—as in II. IV. 3, et al. 股 'the whole thigh," is used for 膝, 'the knee,' unless, indeed, we suppose that the covers extended all up the thigh. 邪幅 for which 偏 alone is used, was a buskin bound round the leg, below the knee. 邪 must have reference to the 'indirect' manner in which the article was fastened round the leg. In 1.3, 交 refers to all the 'interchange' of courtesies on the part of the princes with the king and with one another. 紆—'to be slow,' 'remiss';—comp. in 1.4. The 'Complete Digest' observes that the 子 of 1.4 is not the 錫子 of st. 1, 'the giving of gifts,' but 許子, 'the giving of approval.' 樂只君子 is equivalent to the 君子樂胥 of ode I. 命之 in 1.6 is better taken as in the translation, I think, than as meaning 'delivers charges to them,' though those charges would also be accompanied with tokens of favour. The subject of 申之 in 1.8 is the king 'renewing and extending' to the princes their privileges and dignities. As the characters stand, they are best taken as the verb in the passive.

St. 4. LL 1, 2. 柞—as in IV. 4. Yen Ts'an observes here that it is the same tree as the 棚 in I. x. VIII. et al. 蓬蓬=盛貌 'abundant or luxuriant-looking.' L. 4. 殿—'to protect.' Hwang Tso says, 'To be in the rear of an army is called 殿. The place is one of importance and protection to the whole host; and hence the term has the signification of "to protect." It is impossible to say whether we are to take 邦 in the singular, denoting the royal domain, or in the plural, denoting the States of the kingdom generally. L. 6. 彼—所, 'the place where,' or 'those on whom.'

兄), the princes, older and younger than himself, of his surname. It may have been so; but there is nothing in the piece to tie us down to that conclusion.

St. 1. 角弓 is a bow, in which pieces of horn were employed for ornament, as Choo says (以角飾弓), and also, we may suppose, for strength. 駢駢 is explained by 調和貌 'the app. of being tempered and harmonised';

i. e., the bow is in all respects well made. 翻其反—'swiftly flies its return.' When the bow is drawn, all its parts are brought near to the archer; when he lets the arrow go, it returns to its former state, and is far off from him. So it is between the Head of a House, and his relatives. He should draw them to himself. If he relax the hold of his kindness upon them, they recoil from him. 昏姻—as in iv. VIII. 12. The phrase has the same meaning as 甥舅 in vii. III. 8.

胥=相. 'mutually,' the members of the mutually being those relatives and the Head of the House, who in this case is the king. We can hardly render the term in a translation.

St. 2. The 爾, 'you,' is the Head of the House,—the king. By 民 we may understand, here and below, as I prefer to do, all the people generally, acted on by the king's example; and then 胥=皆, 'all' (So, K'ang-shing). The interpreters of the old school, however, generally take 民 as referring to the king's relatives, and 胥 will have the same force, as in st. 1, where K'ang Ping-chung says, 民指王族不指庶民下同.

St. 3. The 'good brothers' are relatives naturally so good that bad example is repelled by them. 綽—nearly as in I. v. I. 8. The repetition intensifies its force. 裕—饒 'abundant,' 'an overplus.' 瘡—病, 'trouble,' 'distress.'

St. 4. 無良—無良心, 'without the good heart,' without conscience. 一方—一隅, 'one corner.' Each one holds to his own particular idea, and will see things only from one point of view. 爵—爵位, 'position,' 'office.' One member of a circle gets honour and wealth, and is only puffed up, and separated the more from the other members. L. 4, 'They come to the end, and then there, is ruin.' The author of the 'Essence and Flower of the She' says that the line—至於亡斯已矣.

St. 5 and those that follow are all metaphorical. People without conscience, ever seeking place, are like an old horse, fancying himself still young, and not considering that he cannot do what he will be called on to do. They must have everything in larger measure than they require. On the last two lines, Choo says, 又如食之已多, 而宜飽矣, 酌之所取亦已甚矣. 餽—飽, 'to eat to the full.' This way of taking the lines is much more natural than K'ang-shing's:—If the king wishes to feed the old, he should see that they are satisfied;—they are not able to eat much. If he wishes to give them spirits, it should be according to their capacity.

St. 6. A monkey does not need to be taught to climb trees; a man in the mire needs no mire put upon him. But the king, encouraging and honouring base calumniators, made them worse than they would otherwise be. 君子, like 爾 in st. 2, is referred to the king. 徽—美, 'good,' 'excellent.' 猷—道, 'ways,' 'methods.' 屬—附, 'to be joined to.'

St. 7. Piao-piao expresses the abundance of the snow (盛貌). 覲—日氣, 'the beams of the sun.' 日 is the particle. The idea of the king's encouraging calumniators comes out more clearly in this stanza and the next. 下—貶下, 'to discourage and put down.' 遺—棄, 'to reject.' 式 is the particle. 婁—in the sense of 屢, 'annoying and troublesome.' Chung Tsao gives the meaning of the stanza fully and yet succinctly:—讒言遇明者當自止, 而王甘信之, 不肯貶下, 而遺棄之, 更益以長慢也.

St. 8. 浮浮—as phoo-phoo in the last stanza. 蠻—as MLIV, 4, 'the wild tribes of the south'; 髦 is the name of other similar tribes in the west,—the 髦 of the Shoo, VII. 3. These tribes were supposed to be without 'propriety or righteousness,' and such did the calumniators become through the king's encouragement of them.

Ode 10. Metaphorical and allusive. SOME POETRY TELLS HOW IMPOSSIBLE IT WAS TO APPROACH OR DO ANYTHING FOR THE KING, AND WARNS THE OTHERS AGAINST DOING SO. The king intimated here may have been Yew as the Preface says, but we have nothing in the piece to necessitate that conclusion.

St. 1. 苑 is explained by 茂木, 'a luxuriant tree.' 1. 2 is to be taken interrogatively:

and 尙—庶幾, expressive of a wish. What such a willow tree was, an object inviting the traveller to rest under its shadow, such should the king have been, affording shelter to all the people. But it was not so. I. 3 has wonderfully vexed the critics. Both Maou and Choo say that by 上帝 the king is intended. There is no other feasible interpretation; and adopting it, I have translated the name with a small g. The 彼人 in st. 3 does seem to tie us down to this view of 上帝; but the predicate in 甚蹈 is very perplexing. 蹈, 'to tread the ground,' 'to walk,' is defined in Maou by 動, 'to move,' which is immediately manipulated by Ying-tah into 變動, 'to be changeable,' and I do not see that anything better can be done with it. Choo, however, would read 神, on the authority of a passage in the 'Plans of the Warring States' (戰國策), where he says that 上天甚神 occurs. The passage is in the 楚國策; but Han Ying had a diff. reading still, 一蹈 for 蹈. Accepting the reading 神, Choo proceeds to give a meaning to the term, which I believe to be incorrect,—威靈可畏, 'terrible and awful.' 神 does not have that meaning. If we are to read 神 in the text, its meaning will be 'mysterious,'—akin to Maou's explanation of 蹈.—K'ang-shing endeavours to keep the proper meaning of 上帝, and takes 蹈 as equal to 悼, so that the line — 'O God, we are very much distressed.' It is impossible, however, to accept his view. In 1.4, 暱—近, 'to be near to,' 'to approach.' In the corresponding line in st. 2 there is no difficulty with the 自, and here 自暱 — 'to bring one's-self near.' The 無—毋, imperative. Ll. 5, 6. 俾—使, nearly — 'if.' 靖—安, 'to tranquillize,' or 治, 'to reduce to order.' 子極—極子, 'he would drive me to extremity,' i.e., make extreme demands on me.

St. 2. L. 2 惕—息, 'to rest.' It is found also in Pt. III, with the same meaning. L. 4 療—病, 'to make ill,' 'to distress.' Choo defines 邁 by 過, 'to go beyond,' or 'to excess.' The king would do so in his exactions from any one who tried to serve him (求之過其分).

St. 3. L. 2. 傳—至, 'to come or reach to.' 臻 in 1.4 has the same meaning. Choo says that 居 in 1.5 is equivalent to 徒然, 'to no purpose,' 'only.' 凶矜—遭凶禍而可憐也, 'to meet with misery, and be an object of pity.' K'ang-shing, taking substantially the same view, brings out the meaning of 居 differently.—'The king would find fault with me, and place me in a position of misery (罪我而居我以凶惡之地).'

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 息, 暱, 極 cat. 1. 1.3; in 2, 惕, 療, 邁, cat. 15, 1.3; in 3, 天, 臻, 矜, cat. 12, 1.1.

TITLE OF THE BOOK.—都人士之什 二之八 'The Decade of Too Jin Sze;
Part VIII. of Book II.'

Ode 1. NARRATIVE. PRAISE OF THE LADIES AND GENTLEMEN OF A FORMER TIME FOR THE SIMPLICITY OF THEIR DRESS, THE CORRECTNESS OF THEIR DEPORTMENT, AND THE ELEGANCE OF THEIR SPEECH. To this extent the critics may be said to be agreed in the interpretation of the
ode. The Preface does not assign any time to it; but Choo says it was made 'after the confusion and dispersion (亂離之後)'.
I think it should be referred to the period soon after the removal of the capital to Lo, when things were all in disorder at the new seat of govt. It may be said that the officers and ladies of Haou, in king Yew's time, did not deserve to be spoken of as the writer does; but we need not suppose that they are before his eye in anything deeper than their outward seeming. If this be not thought to satisfy the demands of the piece, we need only assume that the author

goes back to an earlier time than that of Yew.

St. 1. 都—王都 'the king's capital.' 都人士—都人之爲士者
'the men of the capital who were officers.' In this stanza only the gentlemen appear. L. 2 presents them to us in their winter dress of fox furs. L. 3—其動作容貌既有

usual.'

- 3 Those officers of the [old] capital,
With their ear-plugs of séu-stones!—
Those ladies of noble Houses,
Each fit to be called a Yin or a Keih!—
I do not see them [now],
And my heart grieves with indissoluble sorrow.
- 4 Those officers of the [old] capital,
With their girdles hanging elegantly down!—
Those ladies of great Houses,
With their [side] hair curving up like a scorpion's tail!—

uniform, i. e. unvaryingly correct. L. 4. 有章—有文章, 'elegant.' In L. 5, Choo takes 周, as the capital of Chow,—Hao; and I cannot give it any other meaning. Maou, however, defines it by 忠信, 'loyalty and faith,' so that the line is still descriptive of the officers, and in a higher sense than II. 2–4. 周 does sometimes have this meaning, and Keang Ping-chang alludes from the Tso-chuen (under the 15th year of duke Sôang) a passage where II. 5, 6 are quoted, and 周 is, apparently, thus taken. Still I must adhere to the view of Choo. These concluding lines are then akin to those in the other stanzas.

St. 2. 臺—as in II. VII. 1. Maou seems to take it here as the name of a cloak made of the plant, but K'ang-shing joins it, better, as an obj. to 笠. Both Maou and Choo simply say of 緇撮 that it was 'a cap of the blackest cloth.' The latter term means 'to take up with the fingers,' and applied to the cap, seems to give us the idea that it was small. The whole line tells of the strict economy of the old officers. We are hardly prepared to read of their wearing fox hats. L. 3. 君子女—貴家之女, 'ladies of noble families.' Choo says he does not understand L. 4. but that the analogy of st. 4, 5 shows that it is descriptive somehow of the beauty of the ladies' hair. This seems plain enough, and should dispose of the exegesis of Maou and others, who take 綢直 of the ladies,—'compact and straight as hair.' I join the 如 with the two terms preceding it,—comp. the account of Seuen Keang in Liv. III. 2, as not using any false hair. 說 in L. 6—悅塞

St. 3. L. 2. Comp. in L. 1. 2. 實—塞 'to fill up.' L. 4. 尹 and 吉 are the clan-names of great families, with which, perhaps, the kings had intermarried. The ladies of them would be the leaders of fashion in the capital. Choo says that the line shows how observant of propriety the ladies of the capital were; but the reference is rather to their elegant appearance. L. 6. The dist. explains 苑 with reference to this passage, as meaning 'bent,' or 'accumulated,' and reads the character 苑. 苑結 means a knot tied and tied again, so as to resist attempts to unloose it.

St. 4. L. 2. 厲 is defined as 垂帶之貌, 'the app. of the girdle hanging down,' and 而—如; but what that appearance was, I cannot tell. L. 4. 卷髮 refers to the short hair at the sides of the head, brushed back and curling upwards. 蠆 is used for 'the sting of a bee; but here it denotes a scorpion with its long tail. In 1.6, 邁一行, 'to go,' or 'to walk.' On II. 5, 6, Choo says, 是不可得見也, 得見則我從之邁矣. 思之甚也.

St. 5. 匪伊—匪是, it is not that'..... The 'Complete Digest' says that 伊 here means 'purposely,'—伊者有心之謂也. But that meaning arises out of the connection. It is better to define 伊 by 是—as is often done. L. 4. 旃, with reference to this passage, is defined by 楊, which I hardly know how to translate. I do not know that the character occurs elsewhere in the application which it has here. I have no doubt the translation gives the meaning. L. 6. See on the last line of L.L.III.4.

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 黃, 章, 望, cat. 10; in 2, 撮, 髮, 說, cat. 15, 1.3; in 3, 實, 吉, 結, cat. 12, 1.3; in 4, 屬, 臺, 邁, cat. 15, 1.3; in 5, 餘, 旃, 盱, cat. 5, 1.1.

Ode 2. Narrative. A WIFE TELLS HER SORROW, AND INCAPABILITY OF ATTENDING TO ANY

THING, IN THE PROLONGED ABSENCE OF HER HUSBAND, TO WHOM SHE WAS FORMIDLY ATTACHED. The Preface says that this piece condemns the repining of widowhood, and adds that in the time of king Yew there was much of such repining. Its meaning must be that the ode condemns Yew who conducted his government so that there were many, temporarily or for ever, deprived of the society of their partners. There is nothing in the ode to make us refer it to the time of Yew. We should not have been surprised to find it in one of the Books of Part 1.

St. 1. Here and in st. 2, in ll. 1, 2, the speaker tells how her mind was so set upon her absent husband that she could not accomplish the easiest tasks. 終—as in v. IV. 5, et al.—'the whole.' From dawn to meal-time was called 'the morning.' On L. v. 1, it was mentioned that some take 綠 there, not as the adj. 'green,' but as the name of a plant called 王芻 'king-fodder,' or 'king-grass.' Evidently it is so used here, and there ought to be a 艹 at the top of the character. The plant is described as like a bamboo in its leaves and stem, of a plant-green colour, growing to the height of several feet, the leaves rough, and sharp-pointed. I suspect it is a bamboo,—the acculasacra, or the quana. For what purpose the lady would be gathering it, I do not know; but such was the preoccupation of her mind, that she had no success. 一菊—the two hands full (兩手曰

知。In 1.3. 局一卷, 'curling.' The whole line—首如飛蓬, of 1. v. VIII. 2. Comp. also II. 3, 4. with the lines 3, 4. of that passage. 薄言 is the compound particle which we have often met with. It occurs to the lady that she was in no condition to meet her husband, if he should suddenly make his appearance.

St. 2. The 藍 is the indigo-plant. Williams seems to be wrong, in calling it the Janis;—see the Penny Cyclopaedia, art. Indigo. 襜—'an apron.' Choo says, 衣蔽前謂之襜. 即蔽膝. Ll. 3, 4 are easily enough translated, 詹 being taken as—瞻, 'to see,' acc. to Choo, or—至 to arrive, acc. to the Urh-ya; but we have some difficulty in understanding how an absence of five days should have produced such an excitement and longing in the wife. The filthy and absurd view of Maou, on which Ying-tah and Wang Taou dilate at length, can only be referred to. Ch'ing understands—'the days of the 5th, of the 6th month.' Yen Ts'an says, 'Anciently a gentleman, for three months after his marriage, did not engage in the duties of his office; and here we have the repin-

ing of a newly married wife.' But this view is not applicable to the case before us. We must suppose that from some point in his journey homewards the husband had sent word to his wife that he would be with her in five days.

St. 3, 4 may be taken with Choo as referring to the future,—what the wife would do when her husband returned, or, which I rather prefer, with K'ang, as referring to the past, what she had done when he was with her. 之子, of course, is the husband; but it seems better not to translate the terms, but simply to say 'he.' In 1.2, 言 is the particle. 韋其弓—納弓於韋中, 'put his bow into its case.' She might do this either on his going away to hunt, or on his return from hunting. 綸—to arrange in order; 綸之繩—爲之綸繩. In st. 4, 魴—as in Li. X. 3, et al.; 鱖—as in Li. VIII. 2. The only difficulty is with the last line. Yen Ts'an has, I think, surmounted it best. He says, 旁有觀看者 (as in the translation), 以人見其夫善釣爲樂也. 今久不歸, 故思而述之.

Ode 3. Allusive and narrative. CELEBRATING THE SERVICE OF THE EARL OF SHAOU IN BUILDING THE CITY OF SEAY, AND THE CHEERFUL ALACRITY OF HIS SOLDIERS UNDER HIS MANAGEMENT. This ode and the 5th of Pl. III. Bk. III. should be studied together. King Seuen (B.C. 826–781) established the marquisate of Shin, as a bulwark against the encroachments of the tribes on the south and west, appointing its capital in Seay. This ode celebrates the expedition to which was entrusted the building of the city, and the inauguration of the State. There seems no reason, therefore why we should attribute this ode to any reign but that of King Seuen. The Preface, however, and all the critics of Maou's school, drag in King Yew, their bête noire, and say it was directed against him, who was divorcing his queen, and making her father, the marquis of Shin, his enemy.

St. 1. 芄芄.—as in I. iv. X. 4; et al. 黍苗.—'the millet in the blade,' rising up above the ground. 陰雨.—as in iv. VIII. 9, et al. 膏, 'to anoint,' here—to water and nourish. L. 1 and 2 are allusive of the kindly, invigorating manner in which the earl of Shaou conducted the expedition. 悠悠 conveys the idea of the length and distance of the march. 遠行

St. 2. The writer, whoever he was, identifies himself with the soldiers of the expedition generally, and we must translate 我 in the plural. 任輦. 車牛 are all to be taken as in the translation. As Ch'ing gives it, 有負任者. 有挽輦者. 有將車者. 有牽傍牛者. All this refers to the conveyance of the baggage, the oxen who are specified being an extra supply of cattle, to take their turn in the labour, and as a provision against contingencies. L. 3, 4 express a thought which cheered the minds of the men. 集—成 'to be accomplished.' 蓋 is explained here as 未定之辭, 'peradventure,' Kéou says that 云 has here its force of 'to say,' but I regard it as the participle.

St. 3. This st. speaks of the men-at-arms, the chariot-men, and the foot-men attached to them; the whole host, and its different divisions (五百人爲旅五旅爲師)

St. 4. 功—工役之事, all the labour which had to be put forth in building Sēay, which was in the pre. T'ing Chow (鄧州), dep. Nan-yang, Ho-nan. 肅肅—嚴正之貌 expressing the determination with which the work was gone about. 營—治

St. 5. Work done upon the land is called 平; on the waters, 清. Evidently from this stanza, we must think of the state of Shin as now for the first time colonized, and the country brought under some order and regulation.

Ode 4. Allusive and narrative. THE WRITER SPEAKS OF HIS ADMIRATION AND LOVE FOR SOME MAN OR MEN OF NOBLE CHARACTER. There would seem to be little, if anything, in this ode, to justify our regarding it as a satirical piece; but the Preface and its supporters manage to find in it Yeh's forcing good men into obscurity, and the desire of the writer to see them in office. Choo is of opinion that both this piece and the pre. are out of their proper place, through some mistake, in an early time, in the arrangement of the pieces in this Part.

LII. 1.2; in st. 1.2.3. The mulberry tree flourishes best in a damp situation. 阿 is explained by 美貌 'beautiful-looking'; 難 by 盛貌 'luxuriant'; 幽 by 黑色 'of a black colour,' =dark. What the sight of such mulberry trees was in nature, that would the sight of the men he has in view be to the speaker.

LI. 3.4, in the same st. Who is intended by 君子, and whether we should take it in the singular or plural, we cannot tell. In st. 2, 1.4, 云 is the initial particle. In st. 3, 1.4, 其 is 'Their virtuous fame is very glowing.' As Wang Gan-shih expands it, 其德音所及附麗之甚膠固也, 'wherever their virtuous fame reaches, men cleave to them with firm adhesion.'

St. 4. 心乎 = 中心 in 1.3. The 乎 is used as in I.vii.V.1.3; and implies some excitement in the statement. 遐一何, as in II.VII.4.5. The P'ien K' (表記) in the 1c, quotes the passage with 遐, which we saw, on LIII.XIV.3, must be taken as meaning —'how.' Ch'ing takes 遐 here, as he always does, as meaning 遠, 'far off,' so that the line says, 'But they are far off, and I cannot speak to them.' This is all that can be forced from the ode, to give any plausibility to the view of it presented in the Preface.

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 阿, 難 (prop. cat. 14), 何, cat. 17; in 2, 沃, 樂, cat. 2; in 3, 幽, 膠, cat. 3, 1.1; in 4, 愛, 謂, cat. 15, 1.3; 藏, 忘, cat. 10.

Ode 5. Metaphorical. THE QUEEN OF KING YEW COMPLAINS OF BEING DEGRADED AND FORSAKEN. The Preface says that in this piece the people of Chow censure the queen of Yew (周人刺幽后) where there is evidently a mistake,—probably of 后 for 王. It is quoted in a note in one of the Books of Han (外戚傳. LXVII. ch. II. 孝成班婕妤傳) as 周人刺幽王黜申后. 'The people of Chow censure king Yew for degrading his queen of Shin.' There is nothing special in the piece to suggest to us this account of it, and the above reference to it in the Books of Han seems to me but slender authority. Choo, however, accepts it. The Preface is evidently wrong in attributing the composition to the people of Chow. The writer in the ode speaks of her own experience. If the queen did not write it herself, the author intended it to be taken as from her.

St. 1. In this and in all the att., the first two lines are metaphorical; but the critics differ in their explanation of their bearing on the case of the queen and her husband, and it is hardly worth while going minutely into the discussion of the point. 菅 is the 茶 of I. vii. XIX. 2,—a rush with a white flower, namely allied to the 茅. Both Maou and Choo say that it is only after it has been steeped that it is called hwa (已漚爲菅); either it was tied with the weeds in bundles to be steeped, or the stalks were so tied after they had undergone that operation. The two lines suggest the idea of the close connection between the two plants, and the nearness of the one to the other,—as it should be between husband and wife. By 之子, of course, king Yew is intended. 遠, acc. to the pres. system of distinguishing between the diff. tones of a character, should be in the third tone, = 遠棄. 俾 is stronger than 'to give'; = 使, 'to cause.'

St. 2. 英英 denotes 'the app. of the white clouds'; Choo says, 'as light and bright.' The idea in ll. 1, 2 seems to be that the clouds bestowed their dewy influence on the smallest plants, while her husband neglected the speaker. 步, 'steps' = 行, 'going.' 天步 = 'the goings of Heaven.' Choo says that the phrase = 時運, 'the revolution of the time,' = our 'course of Providence.' 不猶 = as in vi. IV. 2. Choo, inappropriately, would explain it by 圖, 'to plan.'

St. 3. 滂, both by Maou and Choo, is defined by 流貌, 'the app. of flowing.' Ch'ing says that, between Fung and Haou, the streams all flowed in a northern direction. The flooding the rice fields was the greatest benefit to them; not so did Yew deal with his queen. 碩—大, 'great,' as we have often found it, though generally descriptive of the largeness of the person. We must take it here of Yew in his position as king.

St. 4. 樵—采, 'to gather.' 烘 is defined by 燧, 'to blaze,' 'to enlighten'; 燧 is a small portable furnace. 印—as in I. III. IX. 4. The idea which it is tried to bring out of II. 1, 2 is this:—Firewood from the mulberry tree is sufficient for all kinds of cooking, but in this case the speaker had but a small furnace, in which she could only use the firewood to give heat and light, thus not employing it as she ought to have done. So was she degraded from her place as queen.

St. 5. I cannot myself see the metaphorical element in this stanza at all, nor does Choo try to point it out. Maou's idea seems to be that as the sound of music in the palace could not but be heard without, so would the king's virtue, if he had any, find its manifestation; but none found none. 懔懔—憂貌, 'the app. of sorrow'; 邁邁—不顧, 'regardlessly.'

St. 6. 鶴—as in III. X. 1, 2. The u-ue is also a crane, said to be 禿, or 'bald';—a kind of adjutant or marabou, 8 or 9 feet high, the eyes red, the neck long, fond of eating snakes, and able to maintain a fight with a man. 'Both the birds,' says Choo, 'live on fish; but the An is a clean bird, and the u-ue an unclean one. Here,

St. 7. Li. 1, 2, — see vii. II. 1, 2. 二三 — as in Lv. IV. 4. The Yellow ducks were faithful; — how diff. from the king!

St. 8. 扁 = 卑貌, 'the app. of being low.' By the thin slab of stone, it is supposed, Pau See is intended. The king is meant by the person standing on the thin stone, — favouring the concubine, and yet only made to appear mean and low by his connection with her! 瘵

Ode 6. Allusive. SOME INFERIOR COMPLAINS OF HIS TOIL IN AN EXPEDITION, AND THE NEGLECT WITH WHICH HE WAS TREATED BY HIS SUPERIORS. Such is, substantially, the account of this piece, given both by Maou and Choo. The former regards it as allusive; the latter, as metaphorical; and in this case, I think, the critical faculty of Choo is at fault. The 'Complete Digest,' expanding his view, says, 'The first line is from the writer, stating the circumstances; all the other lines are the language of the bird. For in this piece the whole case is put into the mouth of an oriole, and the lines flow naturally and easily; — metaphorically, without the appearance of metaphor, expressing the object of the writer. We must not think that in the last four lines we have a man longing for some one in whom he could trust for help; — they are the thoughts of the bird to that effect (首句是詩人敘事之言, 下皆是爲鳥言, 蓋此詩是托黃鳥以爲言, 順文說去, 而比意在云云).' But if the writer chose

to put the expression of his sentiments into the mouth of a bird, surely he would have made it talk like a bird. In I. xv. II. we have a metaphorical piece where a bird is the speaker, and a reference to it will show at once how different it is from the ode before us. I must conclude that Choo's better judgment here deserted him.

All the stanzas. With his view of this piece, Choo defines 繇<sup>三</sup>蠻 as 'the sound of the bird,' some representation of its notes into which we need not further inquire. Maou says the terms express 'the app. of a little bird (小鳥貌)'. In the 'Great Learning,' comm. III. 2, they appear as 繇蠻, and I have there translated them by 'twittering,' having then only had the view of Choo before me. 黃鳥, — as in I. I. II. 1, et al. 丘阿 is defined by 曲阿, 'a curved mound,' and Ying-tah gives for it 丘之曲中, — as in the translation. The analogy of I. 2 in att. 2, 3, shows that this is correct. The bird has its proper place in which to rest; but not so was it with the speaker, who was left neglected, though exhausted with toil. See the use which Confucius makes of the 止 in the passage of the 'Great Learning' referred to. He is not explaining the ode, however, as Maou and others seem to think, but only drawing a moral from it. In I. 3, et. 1, both 之 and 云 are particles. In the other att. 憚—畏—'to fear,' 'to shrink from.' 我勞如何, — 'What can I do under such toil?' or 'How great has been my toil!' 趨—疾行, 'to go rapidly,' but here the meaning is not more than 'to go on.' 極—至, 'to arrive at.' The 'Flower and Essence of the Shu' quotes a sentence from the 'Narratives of the States,' which admirably illustrates this use of the term; — 齊

朝駕則夕極于魯國。In 11.5-8, all the 之, excepting the first in 1.4, must be translated by 'me.' The character loses its meaning in the verb preceding, intensifying its verbal force. 教 is the general term for 'to teach,' 誨—'to inform,' 'to enlighten.' By 後車 we are to understand 副車, 'an attending carriage,' one of the carriages conveying the baggage of the expedition. 謂之, 'tell them,'—the people in charge of the carriage.

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 阿, 何, cat. 17;

Ode 7. Narrative. WHERE THE PROVISIONS ARE MOST FRUGAL, ALL THE RULES OF POLITE INTERCOURSE MAY YET BE PRESERVED. It seems altogether gratuitous to bring in King Yaw here, and to say that the piece was intended to brand the gluttony and irregularities of him and his courtiers by describing the simple manners and decency of an earlier time.

11.1, 2, in all the stanzas. Both Maou and Choo say that 幡幡 is descriptive of 'the app. of the gourd leaves.' The 'Complete Digest' adds that the appearance is that of 'their waving about (搖動貌)'. 亨—for 烹, as in vi.V.2, et al. No supply of vegetables at a meal could be more frugal than boiled, or pickled, gourd leaves; and no supply of viands more frugal than a single rabbit. The 斯 is taken as joined to 兔, with no meaning of its own;—so we found it joined to 豕 in 1.1.V., and to 鹿 in v.VII.1. 首 is equivalent to 'one,'—a classifier used in giving the number of rabbits and some other animals, just as 尾, 'tail,' is employed in speaking of pigs or fishes. 1.2 in st. 2, 3, 4 gives the different ways in which the rabbit might be cooked:—'in the fire (i.e., the ashes), or baked; near the fire, or roasted; over the fire, or broiled.'

Ll. 3, 4. Over such a frugal meal, the parties in the writer's eye would be as oceromous as at a grand feast. First, the host pours out a cup of his spirits, and tastes them, to be assured they are good. Then he fills a cup, and presents it to his guests. The guests drink, and have a cup filled, which the host drinks (酌—報). Lastly the host has the cups of the guests filled, and they cause him to be filled, and they all drink to one another (釀). Ode 8. Narrative. COMMEMORATING THE HARDSHIPS OF A LONG AND DIFFICULT EXPEDITION TO THE EAST, AGGRAVATED BY GREAT RAINS. We may readily conclude that the expedition was against the wild tribes of the east, but when it was undertaken cannot be ascertained. The Preface, as we might expect, refers it to king Yao, but we have no record of his having dispatched an army to the east. Ho K'uei would assign it to the reign of king Lo, going on a statement in the Bamboo Books, that, in Lo's 3d year, the hordes of the Hsue invaded Lo, and were ineffectually opposed by Ch'ang-foo, duke of Kwoh.

Stt. 1, 2. L1. 漸漸 is defined as 高峻之貌 'the appearance of being high and precipitous. The 1st appendix to the Yih-king quotes the line with 漸 and 石 under it, which we may presume is the true reading. L. 2. 卒 is defined by 崔嵬;—see L. III. 2. L. 3 悠 遠—with the same meaning which we have often found 悠悠 to have,—indicating both length of time and length of space. L. 4 in st. 1 tells of the fatigue of the marching; in 4, asks when it will have an end. 曷—何時, 'when';

沒—盡, 'to be done.' As Choo expands it,
言所登歷何時而盡 In L. 5, 武人, 'the warrior,' or 'the warriors,' is understood of the commander of the expedition (武 人將帥也) I 6 in st. 1 indicates the continuous progress of the march without ever halting; in st. 2, the determination with which it was prosecuted. The leader thought only of getting to the enemy, without considering how he was to make good his return (但知深入, 不暇謀出)

St. 2. I have followed Yen Ts'an's exegesis of II. 1, 2. 'It is the nature of swine,' he says,
'to wallow in the mire, and even those of them
who may have white feet become so dirty, that it cannot be seen that they have white feet; but now

the soldiers saw the white feet of the swine, and that they were in crowds wading in the water;—
much rain had fallen, and the pools lay deep all over the country.' Acc. to Maou, swine, when rain is about to fall, are fond of wading in the water; so the rain had not yet fallen:—the action of the swine was an evidence that it would come soon. 蹄—蹄, 'hoof.' 烝—衆, 'all.' 波,
'waves,' 'water rushing along,' can here only mean, 'pools,' or 'swollen streams.'

Ll. 3, 4. Williams says, '畢 is the 19th zodiacal constellation, comprising the Hyades';
see v. IX. The moon's rising in Hyades is supposed to be an indication that there will soon be great rain; 離—as in vl. III. 1. 滂沱—大 雨貌, 'the app. of great rain,' diff. from the meaning of the phrase in I. xii. X. 1. L. 6 tells us that the general's thoughts were all occupied with the calamity of the rain, which had fallen, and was likely to fall still more largely, so that he had not time to think of anything else.

Ode 9. Metaphorical. THE WRITER LAMENTS HIS MISERY AND IN CONSEQUENCE OF THE GENERAL DECAY OF THE KINGDOM. So much we can, perhaps, gather from the language of the piece. The Preface refers it, as usual, to the time of king Yaw.

St. 1. In the Japanese plates, the 荇 is, evidently, the bignonia grandiflora. When its flowers are about to fall, they turn to a deep yellow; and in this the writer sees an emblem of the decaying condition of the House of Chow. 芸—as in vi. X. 2. Perhaps we may give to 維 in l. 4, the force of 'only.' The writer could do nothing but grieve over the state of things.

St. 2. Ying-tah says, 'In the previous stanza the flowers were about to fall; here they have fallen; and when l. 2 speaks of the leaves, it is plain that only the leaves were left.' On li. 3, 4, Ke Pan (季本) says: 我本不意所遇之世如此 若知我如此

則不如無生 謂生不忍見 taking 生 in the sense of 'to live,' and not 'to be born.'

St. 3. Choo takes this stanza as narrative. The writer simply describes tokens of poverty and misery which he saw. 群羊—化羊, 'a female sheep,'—a ewe. The creature is so emaciated that its head appears extraordinarily large. l. 2. 罾—as in li. iii. 三星—see on li. X. Perhaps we should here understand the three stars in the belt of Orion; but that is unimportant. The idea is—that there were no fish in the trap, so that the stars appeared clearly reflected in it. The waters did not yield the usual supplies of food to men. To me it seems that both lines 1 and 2 should be taken metaphorically. li. 3, 4 refer to the general scarcity of food.

The rhymes are—in st. 1. 黃, 傷, cat. 10; in 2. 青, 生, cat. 11; in 3. 首, 罾, 飽, cat. 8, l. 2.

Ode 10. Allusive and narrative. THE MERRY AND MURDERING OF THE SOLDIERS CONSTANTLY EMPLOYED ON EXPEDITIONARY SERVICES, AND THREATENED WITHOUT ANY CONSIDERATION. The Preface says that we have in the piece the complaint of the inferior States, constantly called out by Yew to do military service. We have nothing in the language, however, to necessitate such a view; and some critics have assigned the ode to the reign of King Hwan.

Sts. 1, 2. The first lines are allusive of the condition of the kingdom, which was like the vegetable world seared and scorched,—burned yellow, and then nearly black. Choo takes 將 in 1.3 of st. 1 as—the 行 of 1.2. In 1.4, 經營, 'planting and building,'—painfully engaged. In st. 2, 1.2, 矜, 'to be an object of pity,' is here explained, by Ch'ing and Choo, by 無妻, 'wifeless,' the meaning being that the soldiers, constantly kept in employment, were thereby separated from all the enjoyments of their domestic life. Han Ying read 錄, which would still more evidently have that signification. The last line is taken interrogatively (豈獨爲非民哉).

- 1 King Wán is on high;
Oh! bright is he in heaven.
Although Chow was an old country,
The [favouring] appointment lighted on it recently.
Illustrious was the House of Chow,
And the appointment of God came at the proper season.

TITLE OF THE PART.—大雅三, 'PART III. Greater Odes of the Kingdom.' Little can be added here to what I have said on the title of Part II. The rendering of 大雅 is not according to the literal meaning of 雅; but it is more descriptive of the odes, and more intelligible, than a literal translation would be. The term 'greater' is given to the pieces because of their comparatively greater length, and the themes of several of them, which are of a more exalted kind than those of Part II., being occupied with the history and the virtues of the ancestors of the House of Chow, and founders of the dynasty. The first eighteen pieces are 'the Correct Ya (正雅)', and are attributed to the duke of Chow.

TITLE OF THE BOOK.—文王之什三之一, 'The Decade of king Wan; Book I. of Part III.' As in the last Part, the odes should be arranged in tens; and each Decade takes its name from that of the first ode in it. Lub Ting-ming observes that in this Book king Wan is the subject of the first eight odes, and king Woo, of the last two.

Ode I. NARRATIVE. CELEBRATING KING WAN, LEAD AND ALIVE, AS THE FOUNDER OF THE DYNASTY OF CHOW, SHOWING HOW HIS VIRTUES DREW TO HIM THE FAVOURING REGARD OF HEAVEN, AND MADE HIM A BRIGHT PATTERN TO HIS DESCENDANTS AND THEIR MINISTERS;—ATTRIBUTED TO THE DUKE OF CHOW, FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE YOUNG KING CHING.

- 2 Full of earnest activity was king Wān,
 And his fame is without end.
 The gifts [of God] to Chow
 Extend to the descendants of king Wān;—
 To the descendants of king Wān,

St. 1. Acc. to Choo, the first two and the last two lines are to be taken of the soul or spirit of king Wān in heaven; and to explain them otherwise is, simply, to explain them away. Maou makes 在上 in 1.1—在民

上, 'was over the people,' and 1.2—'Oh! his virtue was displayed to Heaven.' Then in 1.7 陟降—'he ascended and descended,' i. e., he did what was right in the sight of Heaven above, and what was good in the sight of men below. On 1.8 Maou says nothing; but Ch'ing took 在 in the sense of 察, 'to examine,' and interprets all the line—'King Wān was able to see and know the mind of Heaven, obeyed it, and acted according to it.' Yen Ts'an, dissatisfied with these explanations, says, 'King Wān's virtue was in accordance with Heaven. He ascended and descended, advanced and retired, as if he were always on the left and right of God, so that not a single movement of his was other than the action of Heaven.' The inadequacy of all these explanations of the text is sufficiently evident. K'ang Ping-chang admits it in reference to ll. 7, 8, and adopts Choo's view, that the language can only be taken of Wān's spirit

But we must adopt it also in ll. 1, 2. 在上 is simply—'is on high.' The writer is not thinking of Wān as 'over the people,' but in reference to the wonderful attributes of character which made him the object of the divine favour. He is called 'king Wān,' as having been king of the duke of Chow, after the subjugation of the Shang dynasty, when Woo in his old age received the appointment to the throne (Doctrine of the Mean, XVIII. 8);—not that he ever assumed the title of king himself. It was an error in the scholars of the Han dynasty to suppose that he did so, originating with Sse-ma Ts'ien. The appointment of Heaven lighted on Wān, but it took effect only when his son Fah became the sovereign of China as king.

ll. 3—6. Ch'ing is literally correct in saying that the history of Chow dates from the removal of Wān's grandfather, king T'ao, to the territory so called, as I have related on the title of I.11; but Yen Ts'an is correct, as regards the spirit of the ode, in saying that it is the House of Chow (周家), after and before its settlement in Chow, that the poet has in view. 其

命 in 1.4 is the 'appointment of Heaven' that the sovereignty of the kingdom should be in the Chow family. The statement that the appointment was 'new,' or 'recent,' shows that we should not translate 命 by decree. On the use of 有 in 1.5, see on II. v. VI. 6. Maou observes that 不顯 and 不時 are to be taken as affirmative of 顯 and 時. We may do this, or take the lines interrogatively. The 時—'當其時,' at the proper time. I translate both 帝 and 上帝 by 'God.' The single term has that meaning, and the 上, 'High,' is equivalent to the definite article. The one is the Elohim in Hebrew; the other is the Ha-ślohim.

St. 2 tells us how the blessing of Heaven rested not only on the person of Wān, but extended also to his descendants and his ministers. In 1.1, 疊疊—'strong exertion,' 'the app. of strong exertion.' In 2, 令聞—'善譽,' 'good praise,'—fame. In 3, 陳 is explained by 敷, 'to diffuse,' 'to give.' The line is quoted, once and again, in the Tso-chuen and the Kwoh-yu, and always with 載 instead of 哉. Maou explains 哉 by 載, which it is much better to take in its frequent usage as an expletive particle, than to attempt, with K'ang-shing to give it the meaning of 始, 'to begin,' which it also has. It appears also more in harmony with the ode to understand God as the subject of 陳錫 than king Wān, as Ying-tah does;—so that the

The usual order of the terms is changed here for

O ye loyal ministers of the king,
Ever think of your ancestor!

through which it was that the dominion of the kingdom passed to this House from that of Shang. Ll. 1, 2 are quoted in 'The Great Learning,' Comm. III. 3, and then expounded. See the remarks on them there. L. 3. 假=大, 'great.' Choo makes the line= 'The great appointment of Heaven rested on him;' but that term seems rather to be descriptive of the appointment of Heaven, and 哉 to have its usual force of admiration. L. 7. 麗=數, 'numbers.' In ll. 7, 8, the meaning seems to be more vivid if we take 命 as I have done. 侯=維, as in st. 2. Wang Taon says that both here and there it=乃, a force which 維 sometimes has. 于周服=服于周

St. 5, carries on the subject of the descendants of Shang, and concludes with an admonition, drawn from their case, to the officers of Chow. There is in the st. an element of proud feeling in the triumph of the author's dynasty. Ll. 8, 4. By 殷 (the previous dynasty was called indifferently that of Shang or Yin) 士, I think we must understand both the descendants of Shang and their ministers. They are described as 膚 (=美) and 敏 (=疾), 'admirable and active.' When they appeared at the court of Chow, they assisted at the sacrifices of the king in his ancestral temple, which began with a libation of fragrant spirits to bring down the Spirits of the departed. The libation was poured out by the representative of the dead, and the cup with the spirits for that purpose was handed to him by some of those who assisted at the service;—here it is represented as done by the officers of Yin. 裸=灌, 'to pour out as a libation.' Choo defines 將 by 行, and Ying-tah, by 送,—we must take the two characters together, with the meaning which I have given them. L. 6. 黼 is the lower garment with the hatchets embroidered on it, though, as Ying-tah says, we are not to suppose that the biancory was confined to that one figure. 冪 was the name of the cap, as worn, during the Yin dynasty, at sacrifices. The Hsia had used the 收, and the Chow used the 弁. The officers of Yin used their peculiar cap,—by way of honour, and also by way of warning. In ll. 7, 8, the writer turns to the officers of king Ching, and admonishes and stimulates them. 靈—進, 'to advance,' i.e., never to cease in the maintenance of their loyalty. Their 'ancestor,' of course is king Wān.

84.6. ll. 2-4. 聿 is merely the initial particle. 厥德 is not to be understood of the virtue of king Wān, but of that of the officers who are addressed; and 厥—'your.' 言 is the particle; 配—合, 'to match,' 'to accord with,' 命—'the will of Heaven,'—Choo says, 天理, 'heavenly principle.' 自—'as a matter of course,' 'this is the natural way.' As Choo expands ll. 3, 4:—而又常自

省察, 使其所行, 無不合於天理, 則盛大之福, 自我致之, 有不外求而得矣. In ll. 5-8 we have the case of Yin again produced. See the 'Great Learning,' Comm. X. 5. See also the Shoo, V. xvi, 5, on the phrase 配天 equivalent to l. 6 here.

St. 7 continues the admonition in st. 6, converging, in the conclusion, from the officers of Chow to the person of king Ching himself. In l. 2, 邊—絕, 'to extinguish,' = to ruin. In l. 3, 宣—布, 'to spread abroad,' 昭—明, 'to make bright,' 問—聞, in st. 2. In l. 4, 有—又, 'moreover,' 虞—度, 'to calculate,' 'to estimate.' 自天, —'from Heav-

Heaven is not readily to be relied on;
It is not easy to be king.

Was not permitted to possess the kingdom.

en, i, e, from the point of view of Heaven;—seeing how Yin's fall was brought about by Heaven, in consequence of the disobedience of its kings, and their neglect of their duties. See II.5.6, in the 'Doctrine of the Mean,' XXIII.6. If the doings of Heaven be thus, how can they be studied and known? The answer is in II.7.8. King Wan might be considered as an embodiment of the virtue of Heaven, and he could be studied and imitated. 儀—象, to resemble;

刑—法, 'a pattern.' 儀刑文王—取法於文王—as in the translation. 孚—信, 'to believe.' 作孚—will arise and repose confidence in you.

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 天新, cat. 12, t. 1; 時右, cat. 1, t. 2; in 2, 已子, ib., 世世, cat. 15, t. 3; in 3, 翼國, cat. 3, t. 3; 生棖, cat. 11; in 4, 止子, cat. 1, t. 2; 億服, ib., t. 3; in 5, 常京, cat. 10; 得祖, cat. 5, t. 2; in 6, 德福, cat. 1, t. 3; 帝易, cat. 18, t. 3; in 7, 躬 (prop. cat. 9), 天, cat. 12, t. 1; 臭孚, cat. 8, t. 1.

Ode 2. Narrative. HOW THE APPOINTMENT OF HEAVEN RESTED ON KING WAN, AND DESCENDED TO HIS SON, KING WOO, WHO OVERTHREW THE DYNASTY OF SHANG;—CELEBRATING ALSO THE MOTHER AND THE WIFE OF KING WAN. See on the title of II.7.1.

St. 1. I.1.1,2 are certainly enigmatical. Choo says that 明明 is 德之明, 'the brilliance of virtue,' and 赫赫 is 命之顯, 'the manifestation of the will of Heaven.' To the same effect in a measure is the view of Yen Ts'an. He says, 'The first two lines contain a general sentiment (泛言), expressing the principle that governs the relation between Heaven and men. Acc. to I.1, the good or evil of a ruler cannot be concealed; acc. to I.2, Heaven, in giving its favour or taking it away, acts with strict decision. When below there is the illusory illustration of virtue, that reaches up on high. When above there is the awful majesty, that exercises a survey below. The relation between Heaven and men ought to excite our awe.' I believe that Yen-shu has appreciated the sentiment of the lines; but it is difficult to bring it out in the brevity of a translation. Maou refers the lines, erroneously, to the virtue of king Wan, which was displayed among men below, and gloriously seen by Heaven. In II.3—6 we have the same sentiment of the changing of Heaven's favour, and the same illustration of it, that run through the Part.

Ode 1. 忱—信, 'to be trusted.' 斯 is the final particle. I.4—'He who has not an easy position is the king.' The idea is not that of gaining the throne, but of retaining it. 'The heavenly seat' is the throne, the seat given by Heaven to him who is called 'its son.' 殷適—殷之適嗣, 'the legitimate heir of Yin;—referring to Shou, the last sovereign of that dynasty. 挾—有, 'to possess.' 四方,—the middle State and all the feudal States of the four quarters,—the kingdom. We must bring down 天 from I.2 as the subject of 使

- 2 Jin, the second of the princesses of Che,
From [the domain of] Yin-shang,
Came to be married to the prince of Chow,
And became his wife in his capital.
Both she and king Ke
Were entirely virtuous.
[Then] T'ae-jin became pregnant,
And gave birth to our king Wán.

- 3 This king Wán,
Watchfully and reverently,
With entire intelligence served God,
And so secured the great blessing.
His virtue was without deflection;
And in consequence he received [the allegiance of] the States
from all quarters.

St. 2 refers to the father, and especially the mother of king Wán. She was a Jin, the second daughter of the prince of Che. As Maou gives the first line, — 摯國任姓之中女. The 氏 belongs to 任, and precedes it by the inexorable law of the rhyme. Where Che was has not been ascertained; but we may presume from 1.2 that it was within the royal domain of Yin. The critics, at least, say that this is intended by the combination of Yin-shang, the two names of the Yin or Shang dynasty (摯商畿內國也). 周 is best taken as in the translation. 曰 is the particle. 嬪—婦, 'to become wife to';—as in the Shoo, I. 12. 京 is the 'capital' of Chow; so denominated from the fortunes of the family when the ode was written. The 乃及 in 1.3 shows that the mother of king Wán is still the main subject of the stanza. 王季 is the title conferred by the duke of Chow on his great-grandfather;—see the 'Doctrine of the Mean,' XVIII. 3. The best way of dealing with the 之 in 1.4 is to take it as—其, 'only virtuous was their conduct.' It makes the 行 descriptive of the 德. T'ae-jin is the honorary name of the lady. 身—懷孕, 'pregnancy.' Chinese writers celebrate T'ae-jin in the highest terms. 'When she was pregnant with king Wán,' says Liew Hsiang, 'her eyes looked on no improper sight, her ears listened to no licentious sound, and her lips uttered no word of pride. When the king was born, he was intelligent and sage, so that when his mother taught him one thing, he learned a hundred things; and in the end he became the founder of the Chow dynasty. The superior man will say that T'ae-jin could commence the instruction of her child while he was yet in the womb.'

St. 3 is all occupied with the virtue of king Wán, which made him the object of God's favour. Choo explains 1.2 as 恭慎之貌, 'the app. of reverence and carefulness,'—the same as the 敬 in ode I. 4. 昭 is defined by 明, 'brightly';—the meaning appears to be what I have given. 聿 is the particle. 懷 is defined by 來, 'to make to come.' 同—邪, 'crooked,' 'perverse.' 受方國—受四方侯國之歸, as in the translation.

St. 4 introduces the queen of king Wān, as specially provided for him by Heaven. Ll. 1, 2 refer to Wān, as singled out by Heaven to occupy the throne. It was hardly necessary to put 'on king Wān,' in brackets, as they are merely brought up from L. 5. 集—就, 'to come to,' 'to settle or light on.' 載—年;

初載—'in his early years.' Thus his bride would be about the same age as himself. 合—配, 'a mate.' Hēah is the name of a river, on the north of which lay the capital of the State held by the father of T'ao-ssu. The Shwōh-wān quotes the line with 郃; and Maou originally had 合 alone. The 水 was added in the Han dynasty. The river is supposed to have been in the pres. dis. of Hoh yang (郃陽), in Tung Chow (同州) Shen-se.

涘—as in I. vi. VII 2, et al. In L. 7, Choo defines 嘉 by 婚禮, 'the marriage ceremony';—certainly marriage is one of what are denominated the 嘉 or 吉 ceremonies; and we may adopt Choo's view, so that the meaning of the line is as I have given it. Even Yen Ts'au here follows Choo in preference to the old explanation of the term as meaning 'admired.' The great State is Sin (莘), to which the young lady belonged.

In st. 5 we have the marriage of Wān and this lady. It would be hard to say what specific idea the writer had in his mind in the 3d line, descriptive of the grace and other attributes of the lady. 俛—譬, 'to be compared to.' Han Ying read 譬, which has the same meaning.

妹—'a younger sister,' but here simply—少女, 'a young lady.' L. 3 is descriptive of the preliminary formalities; 文 is defined by 禮, 'ceremonies,' and 祥 by 吉,

'lucky,' 'fortunate.' Yen Ts'au says, 'The tortoise-shell was consulted, and gave a favourable response. Then they determined by the ceremonial observances that the thing was fortunate, and presented the bridal gifts (卜而得吉, 則以禮文定其吉祥而納幣焉). All things being ready, the young prince went in person to meet the bride, and made a bridge of boats for her to cross the Wei by. The boats were moored across the stream, and then planks were laid upon them, so that the lady might walk over. Moerison, under the char. 俛, gives the stanza thus:—

渭。造舟爲梁。不

Over it he made a bridge of boats;—
The glory [of the occasion] was illustrious.

- 6 The favouring appointment was from Heaven,
Giving the throne to our king Wán,
In the capital of Chow.
The lady-successor was from Sin,
Its eldest daughter, who came to marry him.
She was blessed to give birth to king Woo,
Who was preserved, and helped, and received also the appointment,
And in accordance with it smote the great Shang.
- 7 The troops of Yin-shang
Were collected like a forest,
And marshalled in the wilderness of Muh.

'Of a great nation there is a daughter,
Comparable to the angelic sisters of heaven.
The elegant presents have determined his bliss;
In person he meets her, on the banks of the Wei.
Build the boats; make a bridge;
Spare naught to illustrate his glory.'

Translating at random as Morrison did, for the purposes of his dictionary, it was not to be expected that he would give the verses correctly, according to the senses they must have in their connection with others. It became a statute of Chow that a royal bride should be brought across a stream on a bridge of boats, king Wán having thus set the example. 不顯—as in I. 1.

St. 6 carries on the narrative to the birth of king Woo, Wán's son, who was to wrest the sovereignty from Yin. I. 3. 子周于京.
'in Chow, in the capital,'—in his Chow capital (于周之京). I. 4, 5 must be taken closely together, in order to make any construction of them. 續—繼 'to continue.'

Tao-ssu is called 'the continuing lady,' as the successor to Tao-jin, whose praises were declared in st. 2. 維莘 plainly means—'was from Sin.' Choo takes 行—嫁, as in the translation. Mao would connect it with the 行, in st. 2. Yen Ts'an agrees with Choo, referring to the use of the term, in I. iii. XIV. 2. It is difficult to give or to understand the force of 篤, 'real,' 'sincere,' 'to give importance to,' in
I. 3. Choo takes it as I have done, 天又篤 厚之. The 天 thus understood, must be brought on as the subject of the verbs in I. 7.
右—助, 'to assist.' The 爾 cannot be taken as the pronoun of the 2d person;—we must regard it as a final particle, or as 之. 變—和, 'harmoniously,'—we must suppose here
'in harmony with the will of Heaven.' Choo says, 順天命.

Stt. 7, 8 are occupied with the decisive battle, which issued in the overthrow of the dyn. of Shang, and gave the throne to king Woo. In st. 7, l. 1, 殷商—as in st. 2; 旅—師, 'multitudes.' L. 2. Comp. the Shoo, V. li. 9. L. 3. 矢—陳, 'to be displayed' 'to be marshalled.' 牧野—see on the Shoo, V. ii. 1. In l. 3, Choo takes 侯 as the particle 維, so that the meaning is, as I have given it (我之師爲有典起之勢). Ch'ing refers the 侯 to Woo, here called marquis from Shang's point of view;—which is very unlikely. K'ang Ping-chang and many others take the line as saying, 'We of Chow and the princes on our side arose (予周以諸侯典起而陳於牧野之地). L. 5, 6 are well taken by K'ang as spoken to king Woo by Shang-foo, who commanded on the side of Chow. 臨女,— 'has come to you;—is with you. 貳—疑 'to doubt.'

From the country about the Ts'eu and the Ts'eh,
The ancient duke T'an-foo,
Made for them kiln-like huts and caves,
Ere they had yet any houses.

Ode 3. Metaphorical and narrative. THE SMALL BEGINNING AND SUBSEQUENT GROWTH OF THE HOUSE OF CHOW. ITS REMOVAL FROM PIN UNDER T'AN-FOO, AND SETTLEMENT IN CHOW, DOWN TO THE TIME OF KING WAN. The gradual rise of the House of Chow has been adverted to in the notes on the title of Part I. T'an-foo, it is there stated, removed with his tribe from Pin to the plain of Chow, in B.C. 1,835; and we have here an eloquent account of his labours in founding the new settlement. Duke Lēu, to whom is ascribed the previous settlement of the tribe in Pin, in B.C. 1,796, is celebrated in the second Book of this Part; but what we read of T'an-foo, in the 1st stanza of the ode before us, is hardly reconcilable with the accounts of his distant predecessor, nor with the sketch of life in Pin, which forms the theme of I.xv.1. It is not history which we have of the early days of the tribe in Pin, but legends, and legends dressed up by the writer or the writers of the odes, carrying back into antiquity the state of things which was existing around them in their own day.

St. 1. L. 1 is metaphorical, designed, evidently, to give us the idea of the growth of Chow from a very small beginning. Choo says that large gourds are called kuo, and small ones ts'ao, from which Williams explains the two characters together as 'large and small melons, met. posterity.' But 甦 (瓜, with 勺 on the right) is the gourd near its root, where it begins, very small as compared with the 瓜, when it has grown and extended, with a vast development of its tendrils and leaves. So had the House of Chow grown and increased, small at first, and ever becoming larger. Kiang Ping-chang says, 縣縣之瓜, 本方初生之甦, making it clear that he did not understand kuo and ts'ao as two different plants, but as one, in the early and developed stage of its growth.

Ll. 2-6 certainly give us the idea of the tribe of Chow coming first into notice in the time of T'an-foo, in the country about the two rivers mentioned, and living there in habitations of the most primitive description. This is irreconcilable with the accounts which we have of it under duke Lēu nearly five centuries earlier; nor will the student think that the difficulty is lightened by Wang Gan-shih, who says, 'The State of Chow [this can only be understood of the tribe, which afterwards settled in Chow] had nearly become extinct. Subsequently it occupied the country about the Ts'eu and the Ts'eh, and began to revive, so that the people are here spoken of as first originating there.' The Ts'eu and the Ts'eh were two rivers in the territory of Pin, and are not to be confounded with those of the same name in the Shoo, III. 1. Pl. 1. 75. We need not enter into the various discussions about them.

自居於沮漆之旁, 'from the time of their dwelling on the banks of the Ts'eu and Ts'eh' 古公—先公, 'the ancient duke';

亶父 is to be taken as the name. The personage was the grandfather of king Wan, and appears as 'king T'ao' in the list of the kings of the Chow family. He is here called 'duke,' as the ordinary designation of the prince of a State after his death. 陶 is 'a kiln for making pottery,' used here for 'to make in the shape of a kiln.' 復 is explained in the dia.

累土於地上, 'raising up earth above the surface of the ground,' and is said to be, in this sense, interchangeable with 覆, 'that which covers or overshadows.' These kiln-like huts and caves were the dwellings in which the tribe of Chow lived in the 18th century before our era. They were left open, it is said, at the top, for the purpose of light. 家室 together = regularly constructed houses.

- 2 The ancient duke T'an-foo
Came in the morning, galloping his horses,
Along the banks of the western rivers,
To the foot of [mount] K'e;
And there, he and the lady K'ang
Came, and together looked out for a site on which to settle.
- 3 The plain of Chow looked beautiful and rich,
With its violets and sowthistles [sweet] as dumplings.
There he began with consulting [his followers];
There he singed the tortoise-shell, [and divined].
The responses were—there to stay, and then;
And they proceeded there to build their houses.
- 4 He encouraged the people and settled them;
Here on the left, there on the right.

St. 2 commemorates the removal of T'an-foo from Pin to the plain of Chow. Of the circumstances in which the removal took place Mencius has given us a graphic account, very much to the honour of the ancient duke;—see Men. I. Pt. II. XV. 1. 來—'came'; i. e., came from Pin. 率—循, 'along,' 'following the course of.' 滸—水厓, 'banks.' The 'western waters' are probably the T'eu and T'uili. Mount K'e, called also 'Pillar of the sky,' is 10 li north-east from K'e-shun dia. city, dep. Fung-t'ang. The prince's wife was a K'ang; she is commonly spoken of as T'ao-k'ang (大姜). 爰—as commonly, —'there.' 聿 is merely the particle. 胥—相, 'together.' The term indicates that T'ao-k'ang was capable of advising her husband,—a worthy predecessor of T'ao-jin and T'ao-ssu. 宇—宅, 'the site for a settlement'; the term has a pregnant meaning here,—'to look out for such a site.'

St. 3. The plain of Chow lay south from mount K'e. 膴膴—肥美貌 'the app.

of being rich and beautiful.' 飴 denotes sweet cakes made of rice. The soil in the plain of Chow was so rich, that vegetables, elsewhere very inferior, grew in it so as to be like those cakes. The 茶 we have met with repeatedly as the sowthistle. About the 萁 I am not sure. Choo calls it the 烏頭, or 'crow's-head,' but more modern critics all will have it to be the violet; and as such it is figured in the Japanese plates. The roots of this yield an emetical substance; but I have never read of their being eaten. Attracted by the appearance of the plain, T'an-foo proceeded to consult and divine about making his settlement here. According to Mencius, his people had followed him in crowds from Pin. 契 is used here for an instrument which was employed in scorching or firing the tortoise shell;—'to scorch.' I cannot tell why 我 is used before 龜; but it is better to neglect it in translating. The 曰 in 1.3 is understood by Choo of T'an-foo thus reporting the result of his consultations and divinations. I have taken it rather differently.

They bound the frame-boards tight, so that they should rise

Uprose the ancestral temple in its solemn grandeur.

St. 4 speaks of the general arrangements made by T'an-foo for the occupancy of the plain of Chow. We cannot translate the 乃 which occurs so frequently. 'Accordingly' would convey its force more nearly than any other term I can think of. Choo defines 止 by 居, 'to assign the place or quarter of residence.' The left and the right, i.e., the east and the west, would be determined with reference to the site which had been fixed on for the town, that was to be the capital or residence of the chief himself. L. 2.—see on II. vi. VI. 宣 has been taken variously. K'ung Ying-tah adopted Ch'ing's view, that the word = 時耕, 'to assign the times of ploughing and other agricultural operations;' Choo takes it as = 布散而居, 'dispersed the people all over the country.' Neither of these interpretations commends itself. Much better is another which Choo mentions, and which I have followed;—宣導其溝洫, 'dug the ditches, large and small,' i.e., made all the arrangements for the irrigation of the fields, which the peculiar system of husbandry and the division of the land required. 畝 is to be taken verbally, as I have done. L. 5 seems to come in awkwardly, but we must take it as an account of the whole of the newly occupied territory, from the west, where it was nearest to the old site of the tribe in Pin, on to the furthest point towards the east to which it extended. Then

L. 6 has still T'an-foo for its subject. 周—偏, 'universally,' 'all round.' 爰 cannot be translated. Choo expresses the whole line very well as—靡事不爲

Sts. 5, 6, and 7 all describe the processes and progress in erecting the buildings of the new settlement, and especially with reference to the residence or palace of T'an-foo himself. These processes took place under the direction of a superintendent of works and a minister of instruction; but I do not believe that T'an-foo had at this time two officers at all corresponding to those who bore these names subsequently, when the Chow dynasty was consolidated, and whose functions are described in the Shoo and the Chow Le. The string or plummet was used so that the walls were made perpendicular and square. The building frames were firmly bound together (縮—束), and raised as the space enclosed by them was completed, the lower board in the frame being removed and placed above. The same process was continued, tier exactly above tier, till the walls were carried to the required elevation. This is the meaning assigned to 以載 (上下相承也, 言以索束板投土築訖, 則升下而上以相承載), though it is getting more out of the 載, which simply signifies 'to contain' the earth, than the term can well convey. The intimation in the 4th line is interesting. The first building taken

- 6 Crowds brought the earth in baskets;
 They threw it with shouts into the frames;
 They beat it with responsive blows;
 They pated the walls repeatedly, and they sounded strong.
 Five thousand cubits of them arose together,
 So that the roll of the great drum did not overpower [the noise of the builders].
- 7 They set up the gate of the enceinte;
 And the gate of the enceinte stood high.
 They set up the court gate;
 And the court gate stood grand.

in hand and completed was the ancestral temple. The chief would make a home for the Spirits of his fathers before he made one for himself. However imperfectly directed it was, religious feeling asserted the supremacy which it ought to possess. In st. 6 we have the bustle and noise of the building graphically set forth.

揀 denotes the constant 'carrying of earth to the frames in baskets' (盛土於器). 陬陬 — 衆, 'all', 'multitudes'; 度 is 'the throwing the earth into the frames' (投土於板). 薨薨 'the noise of the people' (衆聲), 'their chattering and shouting'; 築 is 'the pounding of the earth' and 登登, the blows of one long pestle answering to another. When the wall was thus reared, they pated or scraped it, till it was clear of all protuberances and made smooth (削屢), and then it gave a sound, when tapped, represented by 馮馮. L. 3. See

II. iii. VII. 3 皆 should, probably, be 借一俱, 'all together'. L. 3. see on II. vi. IV. 3. The drum was beaten to stimulate the workers; but so many were they, and so cheerful and active, that the sound of it was almost drowned in the noise which they themselves made. St. 7 relates to the building of the palace and grand altar; but they are described, unfortunately, with reference to the palaces of T'an-foo's descendants when they had become sovereigns of the kingdom. The residence now reared was but a small structure apparently, consisting only of two buildings, an outer and an inner, leading to which were two gates. Subsequently the royal palace consisted of seven buildings, two more than those which constituted the palaces of the princes of the States. Belonging to it were two gates called the 皇門 and the 應門, which the princes could not boast of; and these names are here given to the gates of T'an-foo's residence. 皇門—王之郭門, and 應門—王之正門 or 朝門, as in the translation. 有伉—高貌, 'high-looking'; 將將—嚴正, 'severe and exact'.

冢土—大社, 'the grand altar to the Spirits of the land'. See the note on the Shoo, III. i. Pt. 1. 35. 戎醜—大衆, 'great and universal', meaning all great undertakings, and such as required the cooperation of all the people. These were preceded by a solemn sacrifice at the grand altar. As Chao says, 起大事, 動大衆, 必有事乎社, 而後出謂之宜. T'an-foo would raise an altar, appropriate to his own circumstances; but it is here thus grandly described with reference to the royal position of his descendants.

- 8 Thus though he could not prevent the rage [of his foes],
He did not let fall his own fame.
The oaks and the yii were [gradually] thinned,
And roads for travelling were opened.
The hordes of the Keun disappeared,
Startled and panting.
- 9 [The chiefs of] Joo and Juy were brought to an agreement,
By king Wán's stimulating their natural virtue.
Then, I may say, some came to him, previously not knowing him;
And some, drawn the last by the first;
And some, drawn by his rapid successes;
And some, by his defence [of the weak] from insult.

St. 8. Ll. 1, 2 are taken of T'an-foo in his relations to the wild hordes, which, as described by Mencius, obliged him to withdraw with his tribe, from Pin. He could not prevent them from showing their barbarous dispositions, but amid all his trouble from them, and subsequently, he showed his own great qualities. 肆 is defined in the Urh-ya by 故, 'therefore,' and by 故今, which I do not know what to make of.

Choo explains it by 遂, adding that 'it carries on the discourse from what precedes.' Here it—'thus although.' 殄—絕—'to disarm.' 慍—怒, 'anger.' 問 we have met with before, —in the sense of 聞, 'fame.'

Ll. 3—6 describe the gradual clearing of the country, and bring us down to the times of T'an-foo's son and grandson, —the kings Xa and Wán. 柞 has occurred already, —an oak and thorny. The yii is by some said to be the same tree; but it appears to be different, and is called, in the Urh-ya, the white yii (白桤), 'a thorny, shrubby tree, growing to the height of 5 or 6 feet, and bearing a red fruit, like an ear-pendant, and eatable.' The country had been all overgrown with these, affording shelter to the wild tribes; but gradually the trees were 'thinned'—

so we must take 拔—and roads were 'opened' (兌—通, 'to be made passable'). On this the barbarians, here called 'the Keun hordes,' could no longer keep their ground. 駢 is defined in the Shwch-wán as 'the app. of a horse hurrying on rapidly,' and here—'fled away rapidly.' Ll. 6 represents the barbarians flying with open mouth (喙—口). Choo defines the term by 息, 'to pant.'

St. 9 brings us to king Wán, and the States, one after another, coming to him to hail him as their leader. Joo and Juy were two States on the east of the Ho; but their positions cannot be sufficiently defined. 質 is explained by 成, and 成 by 平; 質厥成—'decided their strife and made peace.' The story of their case, as related by Sze-ma Ts'ên, Lîu Hsáng, and others, is this:—Their chiefs had a quarrel about certain fields, or a strip of territory, to which each of them laid claim. Unable to come to an agreement, they went to lay the matter before the lord of Chow; and as soon as they entered his territory, they saw the ploughers readily yielding the furrow, and travellers yielding the path to one another, while men and women avoided one another on the road, and none of the old people had burdens to carry. When they got to the court, they beheld the officers of each inferior grade readily giving place to those above them. All this made them ashamed of their own quarrel. They acknowledged the error and folly of it, agreed to let the disputed ground be an open territory, and withdrew, without presuming to appear before the prince of Chow. When this affair was noised abroad, it is said that more than forty States tendered their submission to Chow. Choo says that he does not understand 1. 2. I have followed Yen T'uan's view of it. He takes 生 as meaning 'the natural conscience (本然之良心)' as inseparable from man as his 'life,' and 蹶一動, 'to move,' thus connecting the line closely with the preceding. By the 子曰 in ll. 1-6, we are probably to understand the writer of the ode, delivering his own opinion as to the expanse which gave king Wan his great and ever increasing influence. The last three characters in every line are applicable to himself,—his attributes or the effects of his attributes. This is not the view of Maou or Choo; but K'ang Ping-chang gives it, and I can see no other reasonable mode of construction. K'ang's words are, 文

Ode 4. Allusive and narrative. IN PRAISE OF KING WAN, CELEBRATING HIS ACTIVITY, INFLUENCE, AND CAPACITY TO RULE. Such is the account, substantially, given of this piece in the Preface, and accepted by Choo. I do not wish to call it in question, but we have not the same amount of internal evidence as to its subject, as in the three preceding odes; nor is it without its difficulties,—as will appear in the notes.

St. 1. The yih,—see on last ode. The p'oh has not been determined. The Japanese plates do not give a figure of it. It is described as a dense and shrubby tree. 芼芼 has been met with several times. The meaning which I have given of 標 (Choo says, = 積) is determined by the previous 薪. K'ang says, 'L. 2 is introductory to all the rest of the piece. 薪之 indicates the gathering of the wood for to-day's use, and serves, allusively, to introduce ll. 3, 4 and st. 2. 標之 indicates the storing up of the wood for future use, and serves to introduce st. 3-5.' 濟濟 is here defined by 容貌之美—as in the translation. 辟 = 君, 'ruler,' 辟王 is understood to be king Wan. 趣 is defined in the dict. by 疾 and 遽, expressive of 'rapid movement.' L. 4 indicates the States everywhere—on the right and on the left—hurrying to acknowledge the claims of the lord of Chow.

- 2 Elegant and dignified was our prince and king;
On his left and his right they bore their half-mace [libation-cups];—
They bore their instruments with solemn gravity,
As be seemed such eminent officers.
- 3 They rush along,—those boats on the King,
All the rowers labouring at their oars.
The king of Chow marched on,
Followed by his six hosts.
- 4 Vast is that Milky Way,
Making a brilliant figure in the sky.
Long years did the king of Chow enjoy;—
Did he not exert an influence upon men?

In st. 2. we have the lord of Chow,—again called 'prince and king,'—in his ancestral temple, assisted by his ministers or great officers in pouring out the libations to the Spirits of the departed. The chang was a semi-mace (半圭曰璋); i.e., the obelisk-like symbol of jade, called a kwei, was cut into two parts, each one forming a chang; but we are not to understand here the chang simply, but a libation-cup, of which it formed the handle, and called 璋瓚.

The handle of the king's cup was formed by a complete kwei; of a minister's, by a chang. Choo says, that as his officers stood on the chief's left and right, the chang would always be turned towards him, as they performed the libation, so that 1.2 has the same significance as 1.4 in last st.;—I do not see the value or point of the remark. 峨峨—盛壯, denoting the grave formality with which the officers went through their business. 髦—俊, 'eminent.' Kéang expands 1.4:—髦士奉璋, 威儀節度, 皆得其宜.

St. 3. 淠—舟行貌 'the app. of a boat in motion.' 烝—衆, 'all.' 楫, 'an oar' here.—櫓, 'to row,' 'to use the oars.' These rowers, all working willingly, are allusive of the alacrity with which the people followed the chief of Chow. Choo defines 于 by 往; but it is better to take it, as we have hitherto done in similar cases, as the particle. 六師—六軍, 'six armies.' But only the king led 'six armies' into the field; and hence 1.4 could not be appropriate to the Head of the house of Chow, till king Wan's son, Woo, actually acquired the sovereignty of the kingdom. Kéang here brings in the allusive force of the 標之 in st. 1, so that the six armies correspond to the stores of wood laid up for future use. They had been prepared by Wan, but were used only subsequently, by Woo.

St. 4. 雲漢 is another name for the 天漢 of II. v. IX. 5, the 'Han of the Clouds,' the Milky Way. 倬—大, 'great,' 'vast,' or 'brilliant.' 章—文章, 'elegant figures.' 'King

Wan, says Choo, 'died at the age of 97; hence the terms 壽考' 遐一何, as in II.ii.VII.4, 5, or 21. 作人一 'stimulate men'; as Choo says, 變化鼓舞之. The stanza, acc. to K'ang, found its fulfilment when king Woo arranged the orders of nobility, &c., as related in the Shoo, V.iii.10, making the earth glorious as the Milky Way does the sky; but he was only completing the work of his father.

St. 5. Ll. 1, 2 seem to be allusive of the state of the kingdom, made goodly and great by Wan and Woo, like the most precious substances, gold and jade, wrought on by skilful workmen. 追 (read tui) = 雕, 'to engrave,' 'to make figures on';—with reference to the 金 in 1.2. 相 is explained by 質, 'substance,' its opposition to 章, in 1.1, necessitating that meaning;—as Ying-tah points out. 勉 勉—'ever active,' Choo says the expression is equivalent to 不已, 'unceasing.' 綱 denotes 'great measures,' affecting on a large scale, like the great rope which commands the whole of a net; 紀, 'smaller regulations,' which are like the adjustment of threads of silk.

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 標, 趣 (prop. cat. 4), cat. 8, t. 2; in 2, 王, 璋, cat. 10; 峨, 宜, cat. 17; in 3, 楷, 及, cat. 7, t. 3; in 4, 天, 人, cat. 12, t. 1; in 5, 章, 相, 王, 方, cat. 10.

Ode 5. Allusive and narrative. IN PRAISE OF THE VIRTUE OF KING WAN BLESSED BY HIS ANCESTORS, AND RAISED TO THE HIGHEST DIGNITY WITHOUT SEEKING OF HIS OWN. The Preface makes the subject of this piece to be 'the blessing received from ancestors'; which is not very clear and precise. Nor does the ode itself say positively, who 'the princely man' in it was. Ch'ing thought that the phrase referred to king T'ao and king Ke, Wan's grandfather and father. Maou wisely says nothing on the point. Yen T'ao says that it is best here to agree with Choo, and refer the phrases to king Wan.

St. 1. 旱 is understood to be the name of a hill; but nothing further can be ascertained about it. 麓—as in the Shoo, II.1.1. The 楷 is described as 'like a thorn-tree, but red.' Its wood is good for making arrow-shafts. Here, as where the phrase has hitherto occurred, Choo, after Maou, defines 豈弟 by 樂易, 'happy and easy.' Acc. to Yen T'ao, the characters denote 'virtue complete and benevolence ripe, harmony and concord in full accumulation (德盛仁熟和順充積之謂)'. They seem to convey the idea of one who possesses a natural benevolence and satisfaction, and who is successful without ambition. 干 祿,—see Ana. II. xviii. 1. The connection between the first two lines and the last two seems to be this,—that as the foot of the hill was favourable to vegetable growth, so were king Wan's natural qualities to his distinction and advancement.

Ode 6. Narrative. THE VIRTUE OF KING
 WĀN AND HIS WONDERFUL EFFORTS; WITH THE EXCELLENT CHARACTER OF HIS MOTHER AND WIFE. From st. 1 we are led to expect that the subject of the piece will be the two ladies T'aejin and T'ae-sze; but there is barely a reference to the second in the other four stanzas. King Wān is no doubt the subject of them, though his name does not occur. The critics all resent the view that the virtue of Wān was derived from his mother and wife, though that is not an unnatural inference from the relation there would seem to be between st. 1 and those that follow.

 Ying-tah arranges the piece in 4 stanzas of 6 lines each, but he mentions that there was an old view, held by Maou, that it consisted of five,
 2 of 6 lines, and 3 of 4. This is now adopted, and, apparently, on good grounds;—see Foo Kwang, ib. loc.

St. 1. The 思, in I.I.3, is regarded by Choo
 as the initial particle; and this view has su-

His brightness and magnanimity were without stain.

周. Maou makes it 王, 'royal,' but the meaning comes to the same thing. The whole line belongs to T'ao-jin, and 稱其爲周室之婦—as in the translation. T'ao-ze was the wife of king Wan, so celebrated in the 1st Bk. of Pt. I. 徽—美 'admirable.' The 斯 in l. 6—the descriptive 其. We are not, of course, to suppose that T'ao-ze had 100 sons. She had ten, we are told; and her freedom from jealousy so encouraged the fruitfulness of the harem, that all the sons born in it are ascribed to her. See on l. i. V. In the Tao-chuen we have reference to at least eighteen sons of king Wan. St. 2. This and the stanzas that follow have king Wan for their subject. 惠—順, 'to accord with,'—a not uncommon meaning of the term. 宗公—宗廟先公, 'the former dukes of the ancestral temple,' i.e., his ancestors to whom Wan offered sacrifice. 時 in ll. 2, 3—是, the substantive verb. 恫—痛, 'to be pained by.' Ll. 4—6 are quoted by Mencius, l. Pt. I VII 12, where we have his view of the meaning. 刑—法; here, 'to give a pattern to.' T'ao-ze is called his 寡妻,—a designation of the wife of a State, akin to the 寡小君, mentioned by Confucius, Ana. XVI xiv. Choo, after Maou, takes 御—逐—迎. I prefer Ch'ing's view of it, as—治, 'to rule.'

St. 3. Yang-gung indicates the 'greatness of Wan's harmony (和之至)' and 敬之至, the 'greatness of his reverence (敬之至)'. 不顯—人不見之時, 'when he was unseen.' 亦臨—亦若有臨之者,—as in the translation. See the 'Doctrine of the Mean,' ch. XV, which many of the critics refer to here. L. 4. 射—i. q. 斃—厭, 'to weary.' The idea found in the line is that king Wan never relaxed in his maintenance of his virtue. It was not only when circumstances called for an effort that he sustained himself; but he did the same when no effort was necessary. As Yau Ts'an says, 無厭之時, 踐履已熟, 而亦自保守, 悠久無疆.

St. 4. L. 1,—comp. the 1st l. of III. 8. 我—大, 'great'; 疾—難, 'calamities.' There two words are understood by all of Wan's imprisonment at one time by the last Shang sovereign, and other troubles of his early life; and I take them as the subject of 殄—絕, 'to be prevented,' 烈—光, 'brightness,' 假—大; must be here a noun,—as in the translation. 式—法, 'what is according to law or right.'

Choo expands II. 3, 4:—雖事之無所前聞者而亦無不合於法度, 雖無諍諍之者而亦未嘗不入於善傳 (i.e., 毛傳) 所謂性與天合是也.

St 5. 成人, is a designation of men after they are 'capped,' and 小子 denotes those who are not old enough for that ceremony. 古之人 is taken of king Wan. Len Tsao-k'ien observes that it is not more strange to find him thus spoken of than that Yao and Shun should be similarly designated in the Books of Yu and Hsia. 譽 and 髦—'to make famous,' 'to make eminent.'

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 母, 婦, cat. 1, 1.2; 音, 男, cat. 7, 1.1; in 2, 公, 桐, 邦, cat. 9; ? 妻, 弟, in 3, 廟, 保 (prop. cat. 3), cat. 2; in 4, 瑕, 入 (prop. cat. 7), cat. 3. 1.2; in 5, 造 (prop. cat. 3), 士, cat. 1, 1.2. St. 1. LI. 1.2 are about equivalent to II. 4, 1.1, and other places, expressive of God's govt. of men's affairs. 皇—大, 'great' 臨—視, 'to see,'—with the idea of 'overseeing.' 下—下土, 'the lower world,'—as in II. v.

LI. 1, et al. 有赫 expresses the intelligence and strictness of the divine regard. LI. 4, 5 express the object of God in a special survey of of China, which the writer has in mind. He wished the happiness of the people, which is secured by the government of their rulers;—

維此二國。其政不獲。維彼四國。爰究爰度。上帝耆之。憎其式廓。乃眷西顧。此維與宅。作之屏之。其蓄其翳。

Those two [earlier] dynasties
Had failed to satisfy Him with their government;
So throughout the various States,
He sought and considered,
For one on which he might confer the rule.
Hating all the great [States],
He turned His kind regards on the west,
And there gave a settlement [to king T'ae].

2 [King T'ae] raised up and removed
The dead trunks, and the fallen trees.

and a governor was now wanted. 莫—as in

II. v. IV. 4, 一定 'to settle,' 'establishment';

here, 'one who should give settlement to.' 四

方 is the four quarters of the kingdom; i. e., all the States of it. LI. 5.6 show how the necessity for the appointment of a new ruler had arisen. Both Maou and Choo take 二國 of the two previous dynasties of Shang and Hsia;

—as in the Shoo, V. xii. 18. This view is much preferable to that of Ch'ing, that by the 'two

kamā' we are to understand the Shang sovereign of the kingdom and the marquis of the State of T'ang (殷紂崇侯). Perhaps, the best translation of 不獲 would be—'had proved failures.' Choo explains the phrase by 失其

道; Ch'ing, by 不得於天心; K'ang,

by 不得於天. LI. 7—12 tell us the result of the divine inspection of the rulers of the States. Only in the west was one found worthy to be the father of kings. 四國 in 1.7—

四方 in 1.8. It is not worth while to discuss the diff. view of Ch'ing. We need not translate 爰究爰度. Choo says: 'I have adopted, but I am unable to follow Choo in his dealing with 1.10. As it stands, he does not understand it; and therefore he changes 憎,

'to hate,' into 增, 'to increase,' and takes 式

廓 as = 規模 'plans,' 'measurements.'

Thus the line would mean that when God met with a ruler of whom He approved as fit to be king, he would, as preliminary to the ultimate exaltation of his House, in the first place enlarge his boundaries. Unfortunately, the ode does not stand as Choo proposes it should do.

Taking the line as it is, by discarding 式 as a mere particle, we get the meaning of it which I have given, and which is fully sanctioned by K'ang Ping-chang (天於四方之國, 爰究爰度 苟能安斯民者, 則以大命致之, 而憎惡此

強大之國, 不能安民, 且以殘民也. 乃云云). In 1.11, 眷—

眷然 'kindly.' Both this line and the next are to be referred to the time of king T'ao, instead of that of king Wan, as Ch'ing thought and Ying-tah makes Maou also to have thought.

The K'ang-he editors allow that the superior critical ability of Choo appears here. 此 in

1.12 refers to the territory of Ke-chow; and 與—'to give to.' As Choo expands the line,

以此岐周之地與太王爲居宅也.

St. 2 must all be interpreted of king T'ao; and

li. 1—3 are descriptive of the work he accomplished in bringing the territory of Ke-chow

under cultivation. Ll 1, 2. 作-拔起 'to raise up,' referring to the 'fallen trees' in 1, 2; 解-去, 'to remove,' referring to the 'dead trunks.' It is the necessity of the rhyme which makes the writer mention the 蓄 (一木立死者) before the 翳 (一木自斃者) 之, here and below, may be taken as—'them,'—in app. with the lines that follow. L. 3. 灌—as in L. i. II. 1. Maou understands 柵 of a particular tree,—a kind of chestnut; but Choo takes it as—行生者, 'trees growing in rows.' And he must be correct, as we cannot understand any particular tree by 灌. The dict. distinguishes between the two meanings of the term, giving Maou's account of it under the pronunciation shu, and Choo's under shu. Ll 5, 6. 啟 and 辟 both mean 'to open,' i.e., by clearing away and thinning (芟除). 櫪 is called in the Uih-ya the 河柳 or 'river willow,' but there is no doubt that the tree is the tamarix Saumia. I have translated 梲 from the principal use to which it is put. Williams calls it—'a tree found in Ho-nan, used for whip-handles and old men's walking staves.' Yen

See-koo describes it as 'like a bamboo, growing in joints 8 or 9 cubits long, and 3 or 4 inches in circumference, fit as it grows for walking sticks, without any cutting or forming.' It is called 靈壽木, 'the tree of longevity,'—from this use which it serves. The staves are common enough in the hands of old men, and in the market. I doubt Yen-sho's account of it as being like a bamboo. Ll 7, 8. 攘剔 'to bare and to scrape,' denote the process of thinning. 廩 and 柘 both denote varieties of the wild or mountain mulberry tree (山桑). L. 9. 明德 is explained as—明德之君,—as in the translation; and 遷 of the providence of God in removing king T'ao from Pin to Chow. Choo says that he does not understand L. 10; but he refers to Ch'ing's view of it, according to which 串夷 i.e. 混夷 in III. 8. Then 載路—滿路, 'all the way,' expressive of the completeness of the rout and flight of the barbarians,—coup. on III. 8, ll. 5, 6. L. 9. By 配 is intended T'ao K'ang, the wife of king T'ao.

St. 3 continues to trace the history of the house of Chow, from king T'ao, through king Ke, gradually converging to king Wan, who,

God, who had raised the State, raised up a proper ruler for it;—
From the time of T'ae-pih and king Ke [this was done].

Now this king Ke

In his heart was full of brotherly duty.

Full of duty to his elder brother,

He gave himself the more to promote the prosperity [of the country].

And secured to him the glory [of his act].

He accepted his dignity, and did not lose it,

And [ere long his family] possessed the whole kingdom.

4 This king Ke

Was gifted by God with the power of judgment,

So that the fame of his virtue silently grew.

His virtue was highly intelligent;—

Highly intelligent and of rare discrimination;

Indeed, is in the writer's mind all through it.

Ll. 1-3. Comp. III. 3, ll. 3, 4. 省—省視.

'to survey.' Ch'ing explains it by 善, 'to approve,' but that idea is not in the term itself.

Ll. 4, 5. 對—當, 'a match,' i.e., one equal to the ruler of the State. King Wan is intended by the term; and L. 5 intimates that this was determined before there was any likelihood of his becoming the ruler even of Chow. T'ae-pih was the eldest son of king T'ao, and king Ke was, perhaps, only the third (季). The succession ought to have devolved on the former; but seeing the sage virtues of Ke's son, Ch'ang (afterwards king Wan), and that T'ao wanted the succession to come to him, he withdrew from Chow altogether, and left the State to Ke;—see on Ana VIII. 1. Ll. 6-11 speak of king Ke in his relation to his elder brother. He accepted his act without any failure of his own duty to him, and by his own improvement of it, he made his brother more glorious through it.

因心 is explained as—非勉強, 'without effort.' His feeling of brotherly duty was simply the natural instinct of his heart. Having accepted the act, it only made him the more earnest to promote the good of the State (益 修其德以厚周家之慶), and thus he made his brother glorious by showing what advantages accrued from his resignation (與其兄以讓德之光猶曰彰其知人之明不為徒讓耳). We cannot translate the two 則 nor

載; but must take the three as expletive particles. 喪 in L. 11—失, 'to lose.' L. 12 was accomplished only in the time of Ke's grandson, king Woo. Choo observes that the meaning of 奄 is something between 忽 and 遂, 'suddenly' and 'accordingly.'

St. 4 goes on to describe the virtue of king Ke, down to l. 9, when king Wan is mentioned by name. All the rest of the piece is occupied with him and his achievements. L. 2. 度 is defined by 能度物制義, 'the ability to estimate things and determine what is right

Rendering a cordial submission, effecting a cordial union.
When [the sway] came to king Wān,
His virtue left nothing to be dissatisfied with.
He received the blessing of God,
And it was extended to his descendants.

- 5 God said to king Wān,
'Be not like those who reject this and cling to that;
Be not like those who are ruled by their likings and desires;
So he grandly ascended before others to the height [of virtue].
The people of Meih were disobedient,

in reference to them; but the term has here a literal force, and the meaning is what I have given. L. 3. 類—靜. 'still.' In the Tso-chuen and Lo Ke the character appears as 莫, which has that meaning. L. 4, 5. 明—察是非. 'to examine truth and error.' 類—分善惡. 'to distinguish between good and evil.' L. 6. 長 refers to Ke's ability to be a leader of men, and especially of the princes of the States over which he was a kind of president; 君, to his possession of the virtue of a ruler in his relation to the people. L. 7. 王, 'to be king over.' This is said from the point of view in the time of king Ching. L. 8 refers to Ke's maintenance of his own loyal duty to the dyn. of Shang, and his making all the States under his own presidency loyal also.—See a narrative of Tso-eh, under the 28th year of duke Ch'ao, in which the whole of this stanza is quoted, and explained. Some of the definitions of the terms are different from what I have given. Each critic assumes a liberty to himself in this respect. The stanza, moreover, is quoted by Tso-eh with 文 in the first line, instead of 季; but L. 12 seems to show that that must be a mistake.

L. 9—12. 比于—至于, coming to. 比 is found in this sense both in the Analects and in Mencius. 靡悔—'was without repentance; i. e., was complete, there was nothing wanting, nothing wrong about it, to occasion regret to himself or others. 施—as in L. 11. By 孫子, king Woo is, probably, specially intended.

SL 5 records the operations of Wān against a state called Meih, prefaced by some account of his character. The statement in L. 1, that 'God spoke to king Wān,' vexes the critics, and they find in the language simply an intimation that Wān's conduct was 'in accordance with the will of Heaven.' I am not prepared to object to that view of the meaning; but it is plain that the writer, in giving such a form to his meaning, must have conceived of God as a personal Being, knowing men's hearts and able to influence them. The critics impose on themselves by the manner in which they interchange and play with the terms—帝 and 天. 無然—不可如此, 'don't be thus.' 畔—離畔, 'to separate from; 援—'to hold with the hand; 'to cling to; 歆 denotes 'desire,' proceeding from within; 羨, 'desire,' directed to what is without. Choo Shun ingeniously defines the four characters thus:—畔者疎而離之; 援者親而附之也; 歆者欲之動乎中; 羨者心

之慕乎外也。誕 is an initial particle. 岸 is taken by Choo as — 'the highest point of virtue.' Maou simply defines it by 高位, 'a high position.'

Ll. 5-12. Meih or Meih-seu (密須) was a State, ruled by K'ih (姑),—in the pres. Tsing-ning Chow (靜寧州), dep. of Ping-lung (平涼), Kan-suh. L. 7. We must take 密人 as the subject of 侵, 'to make an incursion into,' 'to invade.' Yuen was a State adjacent to Meih,—in the pres. King Chow (涇州), dep. Ping-lung; and Kung must have been a place or district in it. Ch'ing strangely took Yuen, Tsao, and Kung as all the names of States,—an error which has crept into many accounts that we meet with of Wan's achievements. 斯—其, intensifying the descriptive force of 怒. 爰 is the particle. 按 = 遏, 'to stop.' 徂旅 is the forces of Meih, marching on Kung. 篤—厚. The best word I can think of for it is—'to consolidate.' 對—答, 'to respond to.'

St. 6. It is hardly possible to determine the meaning of L. 1. Choo takes 依 as — 安貌 'tranquil-like,' and 京 as the capital of Chow, explaining the whole line as in the translation. K'ang prefers to take it of the people of Yuen, now delivered from their enemies, and giving their adherence to King Wan, 'as if they had been in the capital of Chow.' A couple of pages would not suffice to state and discuss the different views on a point which is in itself unimportant. L. 2 is descriptive of the movements of God said to king Wán,

Along with your brethren,
Get ready your scaling ladders,

Wán's forces;—whether he was with them or not. They invaded Mei. Li 3—7 intimate their complete success. They met with no opposition. The hills and springs which they passed became, as it were, theirs. 矢—陳, 'to marshal troops.' 陵 and 阿, in contrast as here, denote smaller hills and larger. Li 8 9 are generally understood of a temporary change which Wán made of his capital. Choo takes 鮮, after Ch'ing, in the sense of 善, 'good.' Maou takes it differently,—as a designation of small hills lying between large ones; others will have it that 鮮原 was simply the name of a place. The name of the city where Wán is said to have established himself for a time was Ch'ing (程邑). Ying-tai says it was not far from the capital of king T'ao; and as it here appears on the south of mount K'o, we are not to think of Fung, which was 300 li to the south-east of that hill. Li 10—12 將—側, 'the side.' 方—鄉, 'the point to which all the States turned.' 王 is here 2 q. 往, 'to go to.'—萬邦皆向慕之下民皆歸往之。

Stt. 7, 8 describe Wán's subjugation of Ts'ung as 3, 6 did that of Moih; and we have, as there, the achievement prefaced by an account of his great qualities. In st. 7, Li 1, 懷—眷念, 'to think kindly of.' In Li 2, 3, 以 must be taken as—與, 'and,' 'or.' Wán's virtue had no great voice or colour; i.e., it was unassuming. Choo allows that he does not understand 夏革. There seems no difficulty with 革—變, 'to change,' 'changing;' and as 夏 often means 'great,' Liu Tsoo-k'uen proposes to take it here in the sense of 侈大, 'extravagant.' 不長—'without prolongation of,' 'without nourishing, or encouraging.' K'ang brings out, substantially, the same meaning, by taking 夏 as—'fervour of spirit,' from the use of the term for 'summer.' In li. 7—12 we have a commission from God to Wán to attack the State of Ts'ung,—in the pres. dia. of Hoo (鄒). dep. Se-gau. Acc. to Sao-ma Ts'ien, Hoo the marquis of Ts'ung, slandered the lord of Chow, who was president of the States in the west, to show,

And your engines of onfall and assault,
To attack the walls of Ts'ung.'

- 8 The engines of onfall and assault were gently plied,
Against the walls of Ts'ung high and great;
Captives for the question were brought in one after another;
The left ears [of the slain] were taken leisurely.
He sacrificed to God, and to the Father of war,
Thus seeking to induce submission;
And throughout the kingdom none dared to insult him.
The engines of onfall and assault were vigorously plied,
Against the walls of Ts'ung very strong;
He attacked it, and let loose all his forces;
He extinguished [its sacrifices], and made an end of its existence;
And throughout the kingdom none dared to oppose him.

and our hero was put in prison. His friends effected his deliverance by presenting to the tyrant beautiful women, fine horses, and other remarkable and valuable things, and he was reinstated in the West with more than his former powers. Three years afterwards, he attacked the marquis of Ts'ung. 詢 = 謀 'to consult about,' 'take measures against.' 仇方 = 讐國, 'hostile States.' 兄弟, 'brethren,' must denote here the chiefs of the States with which Wan was in alliance, or of which he had the presidency. That they should be thus denominated is insisted on as one proof that Wan never had in his life-time the title of king. 鉤援 = 'hooked grapplers.' These may be called scaling ladders. 臨 and 衝 were engines employed in sieges. They are elsewhere spoken of as 'carriages,' which may only mean that they were moved about on wheels. The 是 was raised, I apprehend, to an equal height with the walls, or perhaps, a greater height (在上臨下者), while the 車 was employed in assaults upon the walls, affording protection to those who attempted to mine them or break through them. 墉 = 城, 'the wall.'

St. 8 describes the siege of the capital of Ts'ung, at first prosecuted without much vigour, the chief of Chow wishing to win it to submission; but finally ending with its utter overthrow. LL. 1-7. 閑閑 = 徐緩, expressing the slowness and want of vigour characterizing the first employment of the engines. 言言 = 高大, 'high and great.' 執訊 = see II. i. VIII. 6, et al. 連連 = 'come, one after another.' 攸馘 = 'those whose left ears were cut off,' or 'the cutting off of left ears.' When prisoners refused to submit, they were put to death, and their left ears cut off. 安

安—'went on leisurely.' 類 is descriptive of a sacrifice to God, at the commencement of the expedition; 禱, of a sacrifice offered, on their arrival at the scene of warfare, to the Father of war. Choo says that this last sacrifice was offered to Hwang-to and Ch'e-yew (黃帝及蚩尤), whom we find engaged in hostilities far back in the mythical era of Chinese history. L. 6 expresses the object of Wan in these religious services, and in his reluctant prosecution of the war. 致—致其至, 'to induce them to come to him,' 附—使之來附, 'to make them come and submit.' L. 7 tells the effect on the States generally; but T'ung itself still held out.

Ode 8. Narrative. THE JOY OF THE PEOPLE IN THE GROWING OPULENCE AND DIGNITY OF KING WAN. This ode must be referred to the time, when the chief of Chow moved his capital to Fung, after the overthrow of the State of Ta'ung, i.e., to B. C. 1195, according to the standard Chronology, and only one year before his death. The tower, the park, the pond, and the hall of music were all in connection with Fung,—in the pres. district of Hoo, dep. So-gan, Shun-se. See ode X. 2.

St. 1. 經 is here defined by 度, 'to measure out'; 營, in l. 2, by 表, 'to mark out.' But in II. vi. l. 3, viii. X. 1, we have 經營 together, as here, meaning 'to plan and build.' 始 in ll. 1, 4, must be taken as a verb, 'to begin,' 'to make a commencement with.' It is difficult to determine the exact meaning of 靈, as applied to the tower, park, and pond. Some take it in the sense of 'royal,' as Fuh K'ien and Pan Koo; and, no doubt, the towers of the kings of Chow, supposed to be built for astronomical and meteorological purposes, as well as for pleasure, were subsequently called 靈, while the similar structures of the feudal princes were simply called 臺 (觀臺), or 'towers of observation.' But Wan was only a feudal prince when the tower in the text was made; and we may conclude that its name was subsequently extended to the towers of his descendants. Ch'ing thought the name had a reference to the transforming influence that went forth from Wan, as with a spiritual effluence (文王化行, 似神之精明, 故以名). Choo finds in it an allusion to the rapidity with which the tower rose, as if it had been the work of Spirits (言其倏然而成如神靈之所爲 See Mencius' account of it in I. Pt. i. II. 3. I am inclined to agree with Kiang, who takes it simply as—異, 'marvellous,' a name of admiration, the exact force of which we cannot determine. 攻一作, 'to make,' 'to address one's-self to.' 不日—不多日, 'in a few days,' 'very soon.' Before 勿亟 we must understand 'the king said,' or something to that effect (文王心恐煩民戒令勿亟). 子來—'came as soon,' i. e., as soon hastening without being called, to labour for their father.

St. 2. 'The park,' says Choo, 'was at the foot of the tower,'—the tower would be in the park; and also the pond in l. 6. 麀 was the name for the female of the deer; the male was called 麂. 麀鹿 together, here—'does,' not—'does and stags.' Their lying down is mention-

Sts. 3, 4 tell how the chief of Chow surrounded himself in Fung with the appliances of music and other festal celebrations, in addition to his tower and park. L. 1, st. 3, is descriptive of the frames on which were suspended various drums and bells. The upright posts were named 虞. That character denotes a fabulous animal, with a deer's head and a serpent's body, and I suppose the feet of the posts were carved to resemble it. The posts were connected by a cross beam (called 栒), from which the instruments were hung, and over this was a face-board, gaily painted, and with its edges cut like the teeth of a saw. This was called 葉栒上大版; 刻之捷業如鋸齒者也; and the teeth rose straight and strong, like so many ts'ing trees standing in a row. The 維 in l. 1 may be considered — 是, the substantive verb, but that in l. 2 — 與, 'and'; — see Wang Yin-che is see. 賁 — 大, 'great.' Choo says, 'The great drum was 8 cubits long; 4 cubits in diameter at the ends, a third more at the middle.' 鑼 — 大鐘, 'a great bell.' 於 — as in last st. 論 — 倫, 'attuned,' 'sounding in unison (言得其倫理)' 辟 — 璧, the round jade-symbol of rank, with a square hole in the centre. 廡 was the name of a building attached to the royal court, called a school or gymnasium (天子之學), where archery and other arts were taught to the cadets of the royal House. Around it was a circular pool; and the whole thing resembled a park, with a pavilion rising in the centre of it. Attached to the courts of the States was a similar building, but the water formed only a semicircle in front of it (泮宮). Such a building the chief of Chow had erected in his park. Here he enjoyed his music; and the form of it served as a pattern to his royal descendants. In st. 4, l. 3, 瞽 — see the 'Doctrine of the Mean,' XXVI. 9. The skin of this iguana was used in making drums. 逢逢 is defined by 和 'to be harmonious.' The music masters and musicians during the Chow dynasty are always spoken of as blind. The loss of the sense of seeing makes the blind more acute of ear; and hence blind persons were chosen for those positions. 'Persons having the pupil, and yet not seeing, were called many; when they had not the pupil, they were called see.' 公 — 事, 'business,' 'part.'

The rhymes are — in st. 1, 營, 成, cat. 11; 亟, 來, cat. 1, l. 5; in 2, 固, 伏, 3; 麗, 霽, 沼, 躍, cat. 2; in 3, 縱, 鑄, 鐘, 廡, cat. 9; in 4, 鐘, 廡, 逢, 公, 3.

Ode 9. Narrative. IN PRAISE OF KING WOO, WALKING IN THE WAYS OF HIS FOREFATHERS, AND BY HIS FILIAL PIETY SECURING THE THRONE TO HIMSELF AND HIS POSTERITY. Nowhere in

the ode is Woo expressly mentioned as the subject of it; but the common consent of the critics in referring it to him is not to be questioned. The 'king' in st. 1, is evidently one standing in close proximity to the three sovereigns of Chow who were in heaven. This excludes the idea that it is king Wan who is spoken of; and to no sovereign subsequent to Woo can it be referred with any degree of probability.

St. 1. L. 1 has been a great stumbling-block to the critics. Choo says that he does not understand the 下, and goes on to accept the view of some other scholar, that the 下 is a mistake for 文. The meaning of the line will thus be, that Wan and Woo were the founders of Chow (文王武王實造周也). But Choo allows that Wan must be one of the 'three sovereigns' in l. 3, and the K'ang-he editors say that the mention of him also in l. 1 is a needless repetition. They might have said that the sentiment of the two lines is thus contradictory. We cannot admit the conjecture that 下 should be 文, nor that of Luh T'ih-ming, who would read 大, and must fall back on the 'chiesing' of the old school. Maou adopts from the Urh-ya a meaning of 武 as — 繼, 'to continue,' but he says nothing on 下. This is supplied by K'ang-shing, who makes 下 here equivalent to 後, 'subsequent,' 'future,' and we get the idea of the line which I have given in the translation (後人能繼先祖者, 維有周家最大). This view appears to be confirmed by the words of Confucius in the 'Doctrine of the Mean,' XVIII. 2, — 武王纘

犬王, 王季, 文王之緒. The 'wian kings' of l. 2 and the 'three sovereigns' of l. 3 are not to be taken of different individuals. Both expressions are to be understood of the kings T'ao, Ke, and Wan. All three of them are said to be in heaven, which is said only of king Wan in l. 1. The expression, simple enough to a Christian reader, is to the Chinese critics full of perplexity; and where their ideas are utterly confused, it is impossible they should express themselves clearly. 'This matter,' says Choo, 'is mysterious and difficult to speak about. When it is said that king Wan is ascending on the left and the right of God, if we insist that the language implies that king Wan is really on the left and the right of God, and that there really is God as He is fashioned in the idol so-called in the world, that certainly is an error; but as the Sages have thus expressed themselves, there is this principle. Of what he really means by—'there is this principle.' I have never been able to get a distinct hold. The 'king' in l. 4 must be understood of Woo; the 'capital' is Haou (鎬; see on the Shoo, V. III. 1), to which Woo is said to have moved in B. C. 1,130, the year after Wan's death. 配一對, 'to match.' The term must be understood of Woo in relation to his predecessors, as their worthy successor.

St. 2. L. 1, it will be seen, is a repetition of the last line of st. 1; and so, in most of the stanzas below. This is a peculiarity of style, which we have already met with in other odes of this Book. 世德 is the virtue exemplified by the 'three sovereigns' of st. 1, by one after another. 作一起, 'to rise,' 'to rouse one's self.' 求 has its usual meaning, 'to seek for.' I like this construction of l. 2 better than another advocated by Wang Tsen, who takes 作 as—the substantive verb, or 'to play the part of,' and 求一匹, as if were the 逮, of L. I. L. L. 3,—as l. 3 in l. 6. Here, and below, 言 is merely the particle. L. 4. 成王之孚—成王者之信於天下, 'produced—completed—in all under heaven the confidence to be reposed in a king.' The people had wished before that a chief of Chow might be the lord of them all; they now doubted no longer that Fah was the king they longed for; and so they carried him on to the throne.

St. 3. Both 式 and 則 have the meaning of 法, 'to be a law or pattern.' 下土,—as in II. v. l. 1, et al. Its use here enables us to determine definitely its signification as meaning 'the lower people,' or all subject to the royal sway, the multitudes, high and low, whose well-being God entrusts to the 'One man.' Woo's 'filial thoughts' were about how he could approve himself worthy of his forefathers. See Mencius' quotation of II. 3, 4, in V. Pt. IV. 3, and the turn he gives to them.

St. 4. L. 1 here does not repeat the concluding line of st. 3;—'because,' acc. to Foo Kwang, 'this line is the sequel of stt. 2, 3, and not of 3 only.' 媚—愛, 'to love,'—as in VI. 1. 茲

St. 5. L. 1 takes up the first half of l. 4 in st. 4; and the 茲 here = the 哉 there. 來—後世, 'coming, or after ages,' meaning Woo's posterity. Choo says that 許 = 所; but the common meaning of 所 will not suit the passage. Sometimes 所, however, is merely a particle, and 許 is here nothing more. So, Yen Tsun (許語助也). In l. 3, 繩—繼, 'to continue'; 武—迹, 'foot-prints.' In l. 3, and the corresponding line of st. 6, 斯 is a mere expletive.

81. 聲-名譽 'fame.' Choo says that he does not understand 通 but thinks it may be the same as 聿, an initial particle. Wang Yin-che has shown, with an abundance of evidence, that 聿, 通, and 曰, are all particles which are constantly interchanged. Yet they are not mere expletives, nor initial particles, acc. to him, but have a certain conjunctive force. Msou and Ch'ing explain 聿 and 通, now by 遂, now by 述, and now by 自. Wang condemns all this, and adheres to the account of 聿 in the Shwob-wân as 詮詞, meaning probably, 'an explanatory conjunction.' The translator, however, cannot always translate the terms; and when he does translate them, he is obliged to vary his renderings. 駁-

大, 'great.' Ll. 3, 4 give the ground of Wân's great fame. It arose from his 武功, or 'martial merit,' mentioned in st. 2;—he saw the entire success of his enterprises, and he undertook them, not from love of war, but to secure the repose of the people. We must either neglect the two 厥 altogether in translating, or supplement the lines as I have done. Ll. 5. Both Msou and Choo take 烝 in the sense of 君, a ruler, i.e., one who showed himself capable of ruling. 'It is a term,' says K'ang, 'of admiration and praise.'

St. 2. Ll. 1 may be taken generally, with reference to the divine favour and destination regarding Wân, or specifically, with reference to the orders he got to attack Ts'ung;—see VII. 7. I prefer the former view. Ll. 4. On VII. 6 it has been said that many of the critics think that Wân, after the overthrow of Yung, removed his father's capital to a place called Ch'ing; here we have him making another move, about a hundred miles further east from mount K'e.

作邑 is with Choo, and most other scholars. 一徙都, 'he removed his capital.' They believe that Fung, under a different name, had been the capital of Ts'ung, and that Wân now moved to it, simply making what repairs on it were necessary for his purpose. This view is, probably, correct; and it is strongly in confirmation of it that we find nothing about the divinations which should have preceded so important a step as the building of a new capital city. He only changed the name from Ts'ung to Fung, with reference to the Fung-water, which was not far off.

St. 8. The moving of his capital to Fung was a great step towards vindicating the sovereignty of the kingdom for the House of Chow; but this stanza is intended to show that Wân took the step without any such motive. Ll. 1. The Shwob-wân defines 滅 by 疾流, 'a rapid current,' but the critics are all agreed to take the character as 洫, which, indeed, was the reading of Hsu Ying. Now the account of 洫 in the Shwob-wân is, that it was the name of the ditch embracing a space of ten 畝 square, ten cubits deep, and as many wide. On this view of the term, Wân must have built a new city, with such a ditch for a moat, and the surrounding wall, ten 畝 long on every side. Much better is it to take 洫 as meaning 'a moat,' without reference to its depth and width. The dict. gives this as the 2d meaning of the term (城池). 築城 will then mean that he great. The royal possession of king Woo became still greater than that of Wan; and therefore he is styled "the great king." Choo says that 皇王 is the designation of him who possesses all under heaven. The Fung-water lay between Wan's capital of Fung and Woo's of Haou, having the former on the west and the latter on the east. It went on in a north-east direction to the Wei, merged in which it pursued its course to the Ho. L. 1 must evidently be referred to Haou; but the special significance of the term 東注 does not appear. 注 is appropriate to the course of a stream flowing towards a larger one, or to the sea. L. 2 is a reference to the labour of Yu on the waters, as described with much exaggeration in the Shoo. 辟 in L. 4—君, 'ruler.'

St. 6. In L. 1 there would still seem to be a reference to the character of Woo, as really peaceful, notwithstanding his taking up arms against the dyn. of Shang, and overthrowing it. His building the peih sung (see on VIII. 3) was an indication of it. L. 3—4 describe the sincerity with which the whole people accorded their homage to him.

St. 7. Haou was built by Woo, and hence we have the account of his divining about the site and the undertaking, while nothing of the sort is recorded of Wan in regard to Fung. 考—稽, 'to examine,' i. e., Woo cast the whole thing over in his own mind in the first place. 宅—居, 'to reside in,' 'to make his residence.' 正—決, 'to determine.' In L. 6 we have the title of Woo, or 'marital,' given to king Fah after his death, and showing that the composition of the piece cannot, at the earliest, be placed before the time of king Ching.

St. 8. Both Maon and Choo understand by 芭 a kind of succory; but it is better, to take it, with Yen Ts'an and K'ang, as the name of a valuable grain, 'a kind of white millet,' as Williams call it (白梁粟). We shall meet with it again, certainly in this sense. 仕 = 官, 'officers,' or 'to employ as officers.' About the Fung grew this grain, and it suggests to the writer the idea of all the men of ability whom Woo collected around him. 詒 = 傳, 'to hand down.' L. 4 = 燕安羽翼其子, 'to give soothing comfort and be as wings to his son.' His plan for his descendants would first take effect in the person of his son.

TITLE OF THE BOOK.—生民之什三 之二. 'The Decade of Shang-min; Book II.
 of Part III.'

Ode I. Narrative. THE LEGEND OF HOW-TSEIH:—HIS CONCEPTION; HIS BIRTH; THE PERILS OF HIS INFANCY; HIS MOVING HABITS OF AGRICULTURE; HIS SUBSEQUENT METHODS OF AGRICULTURE; AND HIS FOUNDED OF SACRIFICES: THE HONOURS OF SACRIFICE PAID TO HIM BY THE HOUSE OF CHOW. Chao says he does not know on what occasion this ode was intended to be sung, but thinks it may have been used after the great border sacrifice, when the flesh of the victims was distributed among the high officers who had taken part in it. Evidently, as the

Preface says, the piece was designed to do honour to How-tseih as the founder to whom the princes of the House of Chow traced their lineage. After they obtained the sovereignty of the kingdom, he was made 'the assessor of Heaven (配天)' at the border sacrifice;—the one man by whom the benevolent intention of the supreme Power for the nourishment of the people by means of the fruits of the earth had been realized. Kēang Ping-chang, trying to exhaust the idea of the author in the composition, makes out that his final aim was to impress on king Ching the truth that the prosperity of the dynasty was only to be secured by its promotion of husbandry.—As to the division of the stanzas, Maou made the 3d to consist of 8 lines, and the 4th of 10; Choo, on the contrary, made the 3d of 10 lines, and the 4th of 8. The rhyme is better made out by this arrangement. The 8 stanzas consist of 10 lines and 8 alternately; and all but the first and last commence with the character 誕.

St. 1. L. 1. 厥 is here simply — our definite article. 民 'people,' is not to be taken generally, but with reference to the people of Choo, — the members of the House or family, which came in process of time to the sovereignty of the kingdom. In L. 2, 時 (and in L. 10) — 是 'to be,' or the demonstrative pronoun. We can hardly be said to know anything more about K'ang Yuen, the mother of How-tsieh, than what we are told in the Shu. It is assumed that she was a daughter of the House of T'ao (有郇氏女), which traced its lineage up to Chin-nung in prehistoric times, and that her name was Yuen. That she was married, and had been so for some time without any child, we infer from L. 5; but who her husband was, it is impossible to say. As the Choo surname was Ke (姬), he must have been one of the descendants of Hwang-te. Indeed, Maou makes him to have been the emperor K'uh, the commencement of whose rule is placed in B.C. 2,431, so that Tsiieh or K'v (that was his name, and Tsiieh was only a title of office; see on L. 10) must have been a brother of Yaou. This view has the sanction of See-ma Ts'ien, L'w Hsin, Pan Koo, K'ia Kwei, Ma Yung, Fuh K'ien, Wang Suh, Hwang-foo Mei, and others. But on this view, it is strange that we should have nothing in the Shoo about the relation between Yaou and K'v; and more strange, that we should find K'v, after the death of Yaou, when he must have been considerably over 100 years old, still in active employment under Shun. Choo follows the view of Ch'ing K'ang-shing, that K'ang Yuen was not the wife of K'uh, but only of one of his descendants in the time of Yaou, between whom and K'uh Ch'ing believed there had been no fewer than nine reigns (爲高辛之世妃). The truth is that we must be content to be ignorant as to who the lady's husband was, and put the question on one side, according to the Chinese canon, as 'a doubtful matter (闕疑)' L. 4, — see II. vi. VIII. 4. We need not translate the 克, but had better take it as giving emphasis to the verba. To whom it was that K'ang offered sacrifice we are not told. Maou says it was a custom in ancient times, when the swallow made its appearance, to offer a great border sacrifice, with the first Match-maker as the assessor of Heaven in it, and that the son of Heaven went himself to it, attended by his wife, and all the ladies of the harem. At the altar honours were paid to those of the ladies who were in a state of pregnancy, and a bow and arrows were presented to them, — as a sort of auspice that they would give birth to sons. Choo accepts this account; but K'ang Ping-chang has shown that such a ceremony was never heard of till Liu Puh-wai (呂不韋; Ts'in dynasty) invented it; and it would not answer, moreover, the exigency of the stanza, for K'ang here sacrifices to have her childlessness taken away (弗去). The impression we receive from the text is that she offered — to God, we may presume — a sacrifice, all alone, by herself, for that object.

L. 5, 7 have occasioned, and still occasion, infinite perplexity to the Chinese critics. Fierce war is waged on the meaning of 帝, of 敏, and of 歆. 1st. Does 歆 belong to L. 5 or to L. 7? One of these lines must have 5 characters, whereas all the others in the stanza have only 4. 敏 rhyming with 祀子, and 止, we might conclude that it terminates L. 5; but we have often found the rhyme resting in these odes on the penultimate term. And the analogy of 攸介攸止, in II. vi. VII. 1, where those 4 characters form a line, is in favour of their doing the same here. I make L. 5 therefore, terminate with 歆. 2d. To whom is 帝 to be referred? The term, acc. to Choo, who follows Ch'ing, — 上帝, 'God.' Maou on the contrary held that 帝 here meant 'emperor,' and that K'ang's husband, the emperor K'uh, is intended by it. But there is not another instance in the classic of 帝 having this meaning, whereas its occurrence in the sense of 'God' is very frequent. 3d. How are we to understand 敏 and 歆? Maou takes the former term in the sense of 疾, 'to be rapid,' or 'active,' and understands it of K'ang Yuen, who followed the emperor to the altar, and was very alert in assisting him at the sacrifice. Then he defines 歆 by 饗 'to enjoy the offering,' so that the meaning is that God, or some other Spirit who was sacrificed to, accepted the lady's sacrifice, and blessed her. He goes on to say that 介 in L. 7 — 大, 'great,' or 'to make great,' and 止 — 福祿所止, 'the place (or the individual) on whom blessing and dignity rested.' As Ying-tah expands Maou's view — 禮祀郊禘之時, 其夫高辛氏帝率與俱行, 姜嫄隨帝之後, 踐履帝迹, 行事敬而敏疾, 故爲神歆饗, 神既饗其祭.

All this confusion and perplexity of exegesis I must reject. It has been mentioned above that L. 4 occurs previously in II. vi. VII. 1, and I do not see how any other meaning can be got out of the words than what I have given to them both there and here. Coming now to the interpretation adopted by K'ang-shing and Choo, it is certainly much simpler, and there is really nothing to say against it but the marvellousness of the circumstance. 敏 is taken in the sense of 拇, 'the great toe,' which rests on the authority of the Urh-ya. 歆 is in the sense of 動, 'to be moved.' K'ang-shing says the print of the foot was as large that K'ang Yuen merely trod upon the toe; but Yen Tsan, adopting his view of 帝, joins 敏 with 歆, bringing out the meaning, 'and was immediately moved.' Evidently, this statement is not history, but legend. The wrath of K'ang Ping-chang at it need only provoke a smile, nor need we have recourse to Yen Tsan's doctrine of anthropomorphism. 'When we read,' he says 'that Heaven sees, or that God hears, we are not to infer that Heaven has eyes, or that God has ears.' Still the instance in the text is different from such expressions. The writer would convey by it the idea that the conception of How-teeth was preternatural, and that it took place in the manner described. There is an analogous legend about the birth of the ancestor of the House of Shang, and Ssu-ma Ts'wen gives to a dragon the paternity of the first emperor of the Han dynasty.

LI. 8—10. 載 is the particle. 震—有身, 'to be pregnant.' The character occurs repeatedly in the Tao-chuen in this sense. I can make no meaning out of 夙, understood in its usual signification of 早, 'early in the morning,' 'early;' to which Maou here adheres. Choo, after Ch'ing, explains it here by 肅, the meaning of which must be what I have given in the translation. In L. 10, 后稷—see on the Shoo, II. 1. 18. The two characters are evidently used here as equivalent to a name. They did not belong to the child, until he had grown up, and was appointed minister of Agriculture, and lord of T'ae. His proper name, it has been mentioned, was K' (稷).

St. 2 is occupied with the birth of the preternaturally conceived child without any trouble or pain to the mother. 誕, here and in st. 3—7 below, is simply an initial particle. 彌—終, 'to finish,' or 'to be finished.' 先生—首生, 'first born.' 達 is the name for 'a lamb' (the Shwuh-wan calls it 小羊). LI. 3 and 4 make it plain that the point of the comparison in L. 2 is the ease of the birth. 坼 and 副 are synonyms, —裂, 'to tear,' 'to be torn.' 蓐 is pronounced like 災, and with the meaning of that term. 赫—顯, 'to manifest.' 厥靈 is to be referred to the child. LI. 6, 7 may be translated interrogatively, and are equivalent to strong affirmations. We must understand that K'ang Yuen is the object of 寧, 'to give repose, or comfort to.' 康—安享, 'to enjoy tranquilly,' 'to accept.' 居然—徒然, 'with ease;—compare the use of 居 in II. vii. X. 3.

St. 3.—the dangers of How-tseih's infancy. It does not appear from the ode who it was that exposed the child to the various perils here mentioned. Maou supposed that it was the father, the emperor K'uh. Ch'ing, on the contrary, not holding that K'ang Yuen was the wife of K'uh, makes her to have been the party, and assumes that her object was not to get rid of the child, but to show still more clearly what a marvellous gift from heaven he was. I have purposely translated 賓之 by 'he was placed,' so as to leave the matter in the uncertainty in which we find it. Choo takes 腓—苙 'to protect,'—as in II. I. VII. 3; and it is as well to follow here the analogy of that passage, though Maou's 腓—避 'to avoid,' would suit the line quite as well. 字—愛, 'to love,' 'to care for.' 平林—林之在平地者, 'a forest on level ground. 會—值, 'he met with,' or 'it happened that.' It is implied, though not expressed, that the wood-cutters took the child up, and preserved it. 鳥 may be either singular or plural; but the critics all say it was 'a large bird (大鳥)' who covered the child above with one wing, and supported it beneath with the other (翼—藉). 呱—啼聲, 'the sound of wailing.' 覃—長, 'long.' 訐—大, 'great.' 載路—滿路, as in the translation. Compare the same phrase in I. VII. 2.

St. 4.—the marvellous development of the agricultural faculty in him when he was a mere boy. 匍匐—as in I. III. X. 4. The 實—定—是, 'to be,' but we can hardly translate it. Choo makes 岐嶷—峻茂之狀, 'majestic-looking; Maou, —'intelligent.' 口食, both by Maou and Choo, is taken as—自

- 5 The husbandry of How-tseih
 Proceeded on the plan of helping [the growth].
 Having cleared away the thick grass,
 He sowed the ground with the yellow cereals.
 He managed the living grain, till it was ready to burst;
 Then he used it as seed, and it sprang up;
 It grew and came into ear;
 It became strong and good;
 It hung down, every grain complete;—
 And thus he was appointed lord of T'ao.

能食, 'was able to eat himself,' i.e., was 6 or 7 years old. Accepting this, 以就 must—及至, 'and when he came to.' 及 is one of the meanings of 以 given by Wang Yin-che.

L. 4. 藝—樹, 'to plant.' The 之 loses its meaning in the verb;—'he planted it,'—he planted. 荏菽—大豆, 'large beans.'

旆旆—see II.1.VIII.2. The boy's bean plants sprang up, and grew like flags waving in the wind. And he did not take beans only in hand. 役—行列, 'rows.' He introduced, it would appear, the practice of plowing paddy out in rows. 穰穰—苗美好之貌, 'the appearance of the growing plant looking beautiful.' 幪幪—'luxuriant and dense.'
 瓜瓞—as in I.III.1. 嗒嗒—多實, 'yielding much fruit.'

St. 5 introduces us to the young man, whose qualities had recommended him to the notice of Yao, as we may infer from the Shoo, so that he had been appointed minister of Agriculture. He was not yet lord of T'ao, and it is a question therefore whether the 后稷 should not go together, simply as the title of that office (后稷, 農官名: K'ang Ping-chang). LL 1, 2 tell us the general principle which distinguished his husbandry from that of others. 穡, 'to reap,' has here the general meaning of 'the art of husbandry.' 相—助, 'to assist.' 'The growth of the grain,' says K'ang, 'depends on the seasons given by heaven and the nourishment given by the earth; but How-tseih added to these the complete and wise application of human labour and skill.' L. 3 relates to his preparation of the ground for the seed. 弗—治, 'to regulate,' 'to manage,' meaning here, 'to clear away.' 黃茂, 'yellow luxuriance,' is a denomination of the cereals. The next 5 lines tell of his management of the seed, and the richness of his produce. The 種 in L. 6 seems to necessitate this view, for it is better to take 實種 as in the translation, than to say with Yen Ts'an, after Ch'ing, that 種 denotes the grow-

6. He gave his people the beautiful grains:—

 They planted extensively the black and the double-kernelled,
 Which were reaped and stacked on the ground.

ing up of each kind of plant, without any admixture of other sorts (生不雜). We must then understand L. 5 of K'e's management of the seed, fostering its germinating quality before he committed it to the soil; and we cannot take 方 as in II. vi. VIII. 2, where it denotes the grain in its sheath, about to show itself in the ear. Choo here explains it by 房, as in that other passage; but with the meaning of 'the living germ enclosed in the visible grain as its house.' Then 苞 is the grain with that germ in a state of development, ready to burst out. Choo says, 方房也, 苞甲而未拆也, on which Choo Kung-t'ien observes, 生也, 意藏於其中, 是爲房也, 生也, 意蓄而欲泄, 是爲甲, 甲者草木之仁也, 拆則破其種而出之矣. The other terms describe the gradual and successful growth of the plants. 類 is the heavy ear of the full grain hanging down with its own weight; and 栗, the fullness of each separate grain (栗不稅也). The several 實 can only be explained by 是 or 惟. K'ang says that they denote how K'e had the way of bringing about the results described in the terms that follow (數實字便有道在). L. 8. 'Then he had the House of T'ae.' This is understood as saying that because of his merits as minister of Agriculture, K'e was invested with the principality of T'ae,—in the present of Woo-kung (武功). K'ien Chow (乾州), Shen-se. His mother is said to have been a daughter of that State. Perhaps the ruling chief was displaced, or removed to some other principality. At any rate, somehow, K'e was made lord of T'ae.

St. 6 shows us K'e in his govt. of T'ae teaching his people the art of agriculture and methods of sacrifice. 降—'to send down,' 'to confer.' The expression is strong, and indicates that the people of T'ae had before K'e's time been unacquainted with agriculture, or acquainted with it only very imperfectly. 柜 is 'the black millet (黑黍),' and 秬 a variety of that, the husk of which is said to contain two grains (一稈二米者). 糜 and 芭 are also two large-grained millets, or varieties of Aster, the former red (赤粱粟), and the other white (白粱粟). It is most likely that these four plants are merely specified by way of illustration, and that the writer meant his readers to understand that it was K'e who first introduced the cultivation of the cereals. We can find a reason for the specification of them in the fact that the black millets were used in making the spirits which were employed in sacrifices, and the red and white for offerings. L. 4 恆 (k'ang)—'every where,' 'extensively,' meaning that these millets were planted extensively. L. 5. 是畝 'were sown,' 'were stacked on the ground.' L. 7. 任 is 'to carry on the shoulders,' 'on the back.' Choo observes that the processes in L. 5 are to be extended to the black millets, and those in L. 5 to the red and white. It is a case of what is called 互文. L. 8. 肇—'first.' The grain was carried home 以供始祭之事, 'to supply the sacrifices which How-tzai first instituted.' Maou thinks that Yaou had conferred on K'e the privilege of offering the great sacrifices to Heaven; but this is very unlikely, and it could not be said that K'e founded those sacrifices. The meaning must be that K'e instituted the sacrifices of the ancestral temple, or at least so developed them that he might be called the founder of them, just as he was the founder of husbandry, though we cannot suppose that before him men had not made imperfect attempts to draw their food from the earth.

- 7 And how as to our sacrifices [to him]?

Some sift it; some tread it.

It is distilled, and the steam floats about.

St. 7 must be referred to the ancestral sacrifices of the kings of Chow, when they did special honour to How-tsieh as the founder of their line; and it should be translated in the present tense. The 我, therefore, in L. 1, is specially applicable, as P'ing-chang says, to any monarch of the dyn. of Chow,—the king reigning, whenever the ode was sung. L. 2—5 describe the preparation of the grain for the offerings, and for distillation, with the process of distillation. But we must not suppose that these things were done at the time of the sacrifice;—they had been previously performed, and the 或 intimates that there were men appointed for each operation. 春 expresses the 'hulling' of the grain; 掄, 'the scooping of the grain, so hulled, out of the mortar (杼—臼);' 簸, 'the sifting of it.' 蹂 is the 'treading' of the grain out of the ears (蹂以脫其穗); but why this operation should be mentioned last, I cannot tell, unless it be to indicate, as Choo seems to say, that there was in this way kept up a constant supply for the buffers. 釋—浙, 'to wash the grain,' which had thus been cleaned; 叟叟 give the sound of the grains in the dish as they were washed. 蒸—'to distil'; 浮浮 show us the vapour floating about in the process of distillation.

L. 6 refers to the formal observances and solemn thoughtfulness preparatory to the sacrifices. 謀, 'to consult,' belongs to the divining for the day, and the selection of the officers to take part in the service (卜日擇士); 惟—思, 'to think' belongs to the fasting, vigils, &c. (齋戒具修). L. 7—蕭合祭牲之脂燕之, 'we take southernwood, and burn it along with the fat of the victims.' This filled the ancestral temple with fragrance. L. 8 粃—牡羊, 'a ram.' 載 was the name for a sacrifice offered to the Spirits of the road on setting out on a journey; but from the mention of it here, we must conclude that it was used also in connection with the services of the ancestral temple. In the Lo Ke it is spoken of as offered in the first month of winter (月令: 孟冬其祀行). In L. 9, 烈—炙, 'to broil,' which we have often met with in connection with 燔. The flesh, thus roasted or broiled, was offered to the personator of the dead. L. 10 shows that all the services of the ancestral temple, through the honour done to How-tsieh in them, were intended to remind the kings of Chow that on an attention to agriculture depended the permanence of their dynasty. 嗣歲—the inheriting year, i.e., the coming year, which it was hoped would inherit the fruitfulness of the past.

St. 8 is understood as relating, briefly, to the great border sacrifice to God, where How-tseih was introduced as His assessor. 印—我, as in I. iii. IX. 4. 盛—to fill in the appropriate offerings. The 登 was a vessel, shaped like the 豆, but made of earthenware, used to contain the soup, or water in which flesh had been boiled;—in those early days without any addition of vegetables or spices. L. 4. 居—安,

'tranquilly,' 'well pleased. 歆—食氣, 'to eat—i.e., to smell—the savour.' L. 5. 胡—何, 'how,' and 亶—誠 'truly.' We may take these two terms as imparting the force of admiration to the 臭 and 時. I prefer this to understanding a 但 'only,' after 胡—How is it fragrant only? It is also truly seasonable. LL. 7, 8 may be understood as saying that the lords of Chow, and especially the kings of the dynasty, had been most careful to observe the sacrifice to How-tseih in connection with their other grand sacrifices, thereby keeping up their recognition of the importance of agriculture, and furnishing an example to their successors in all the future.

Ode 2. Allusive and narrative. A FESTAL ODE, CELEBRATING SOME ENTERTAINMENT GIVEN BY THE KING TO HIS RELATIVES, WITH THE TRIAL OF ARCHERY AFTER THE FEAST; CELEBRATING ESPECIALLY THE HONOUR DONE ON SUCH OCCASIONS TO THE AGED. Choo inclines to the view that the feast here described was given at the conclusion of the sacrificial services in the ancestral temple. Before his time, the commentators considered that it had no connection with any sacrifices, but was designed simply to show how the good kings of Chow cultivated the friendly affection of the princes, their relatives, and behaved with courtesy especially to the old. The K'ang-ho editors remark that there is no evidence that the trial of archery formed part of the feasts which were given after sacrifices. It does not seem to be worth while to discuss this point at large.

St. 1. 葦—as in Lv. VII. 1, et al. They are called here 行葦, 'reeds by the way,' meaning, says K'ang, 'the paths along the ditches in the fields.' 敦 (name)—聚貌 'the app. of being collected together.' The line shows us the reeds just appearing, in a mass, above the ground. The 方 in l. 5—'now,' and redoubled, it has the significance given in the translation. 苞 in st. 5 of last ode, is used of the germ ready to burst from the seed; here of the young shoot going on to develop itself. 體—成 形 'to complete its form,' i.e., appear as the fully formed reed. 泥泥—柔澤貌 as in the translation. In the reeds growing up densely from a common root we have an emblem of brothers all sprung from the same ancestor; and in plants developing so finely, when preserved from injury, an emblem of the happy fellowships of consanguinity, when nothing is allowed to interfere with mutual confidence and good feeling. 戚戚—親 'near,' 'affectionate.' Maon defines the expression by 內相親, 'mutual internal affection.' 莫—勿 of l. 2. 具—俱 as often. 爾—迺, 'to be near.' In ll. 7, 8 the 'brothers' appear assembled at the king's feast, and while the young are only provided with mats to sit on, the old have stools (几) given them in addition, on which they can lean. 肆—陳, 'to spread,' 筵,—see on II. vii. VI. 1.

St. 2. 設席—重席 'the redoubling of the mat.' K'ung Ying-tai says, 'When, after it has been said that the mats are spread, it is added that a mat is placed (設席), we know that there were two mats, as in the line 下莞上簟 of II. iv. V. d.' 緝—續 'to continue.' 御—侍 'to wait on,' 'attendants.' 緝御 means that there were many attendants, one to succeed another in waiting. This attention was shown especially to the old. Li. 3, 4. The spirits were first presented to the guests, and each man drank his cup. This was called

獻. Then the representative of the guests presented a cup to the host, who drank it. This was called 酌. The host then rinsed his cup, and those of the guests were refilled; but instead of drinking them immediately, they put them down for the present (奠之不舉). In this way the feast was opened. There is no difference in meaning between 爵 and 壺. The former was the name for a cup under the Chow dynasty; the latter was the name used under the Yin. The 或...或 here, and in 1, 6,—our 'both...and.' L. 5. 醢醢—the brine of meat ruined small and pickled. There was this 'to present,' that it might be eaten with, and give a relish to, the viands. 脾 'the stomach;' here—tripe. 臄—口上肉, 'the flesh above the mouth,'—cheek. 歌 as has been already observed, is used of singing to the accompaniment of stringed instruments; 嘏 is the drum without singing.

St. 3. After feasting, the guests repair to the archery ground. 敦 here read 'shun,'—畫 'ornamented.' The bows, we saw on II. iii. 1 were lacquered, but it would appear that further ornament, in the way of painting, was added. Yen Ts'an says this was only the case with the royal bows, and that the term is used here as the trial described took place at court. The point is unimportant. L. 2. 鏃 is a name for the arrows with reference to their steel points. They are said to be 'balanced (鈞),' because a perfect arrow had its centre of gravity at one third of its whole length from the steel head. L. 4. Choo explains 均 by 皆中, 'all hit,' but that can only mean that all hit the target, not that all hit it in the centre, or equally near the centre, for 1, 6 shows that they were arranged according to the skill which they had shown. 均, 'to be level or equal,' would seem to imply that all were equally successful, which cannot be the case. 賢—'superiority.' This is a not infrequent use of the character. Choo says the meaning of it here is 射多中.

L. 5—8 tell how a further distinction was made among the successful competitors, according to the manner in which they conducted themselves towards those who were unsuccessful. 不侮 in 1, 8—'showing no insolence;—不以中病不中者. In this matter the adjudication must have been very difficult, and it would be very easy to put on an appearance of complaisance and humility. 句—發, 'to draw a bow to the full.' L. 6 does not imply that the four arrows were held in the hand at the same time. As Ying-tah says, from the E Le, the arrows were stuck in the girdle, and the archer took them out with his right hand, one after the other, fitted them to the string, drew the bow, and discharged them. 如樹 describes the arrows sticking in the mark, straight and firm, as if they had been carefully and leisurely planted in it (如手就樹之言貫革而堅正). The archers are all spoken of as 'guests,' as being at the time the king's guests; and in st. 4 he is mentioned as the 主 or 'host.'

St. 4. I suppose that, after the archery, they all returned again to the feast, which the king brought to a conclusion with the ceremony here described, doing special honour to the aged among the guests. 會孫—as in II. vi. VI. st. 4. 醕—as in II. iii. VI. 4; 酒醴 must here be taken together, = 'sweet spirits.' 醕—厚, 'strong.' L. 5 intimates the generosity of the king's treatment of his aged guests, filling their cups with no stinting hand. The shape of the 斗 I do not know;—the handle of it is said to have been 3 feet in length. With this the king drew the spirits from a large vase, and filled the cups,—perhaps more than once. The Preface and the old school make a pause at l. 4, understanding that the 祈 intimates that the king here begged the old guests to tell him the results of their experience. Then ll. 5—8 tell how those venerable men, having done so, 'to lead him on and support him in a virtuous course,' concluded by wishing for him old age and increasing happiness. Choo, on the other hand, takes the whole as in the translation. The K'ang-he editors say that both interpretations are allowable. Only one of them, however, can be the correct one; and I have no hesitation in preferring the view of Choo. 黃耇, 'yellow age,' means old age marked by hoar hair. 耇, —see on VI. ii. VII. 5. 台 is read for 鮐, the name of a fish, remarkable for the spots and wrinkles of its skin, to which it is supposed the skin of old people gets a resemblance. The different 以 seem to imply a reference in the speaker's mind to the spirits, which, by nourishing the old age of the guests, would help them to realise the things which the king desired for them. 祺—吉, 'auspicious,' 'happy.'

The four stanzas of the ode, as now edited, appear in Maou as seven—two of 6 lines each,

Ode 3. Narrative. RESPONSIVE TO THE LANT:—THE UNCLE AND BROTHERS OF THE KING EXPRESS THEIR SENSE OF HIS KINDNESS, AND THEIR WISHES FOR HIS HAPPINESS, MOSTLY IN THE WORDS IN WHICH THE PERSONATOR OF THE DEAD HAD CONVEYED THE SATISFACTION OF HIS ANCESTORS WITH THE SACRIFICE OFFERED TO THEM, AND PROMISED TO HIM THEIR BLESSING.
The position of this ode seems to confirm Choo's view of the preceding as descriptive of a feast
given by the king to his relatives at the conclusion of a sacrifice in the ancestral temple.
It is plain that such a feast must have preceded
the occasion to which this ode was appropriate.

St. 1. It seems best to take 醉 and 飽 as in the translation, understanding 爾 or 王 as the nominative to them. Yen Ts'an says:—王 既醉我以酒 既飽我以德
德 is taken in the sense of 恩惠, 'kindness,' referring especially to the abundance of the feast. In l. 8, 君子 refers to the king, as does the 爾 in l. 4. Those two lines are a prayer for the king, and we have to suppose 天, 'Heaven,' as the subject of 介, though we need not express it in the translation. To use again the words of Yen Ts'an, 我無以

報上, 願其享萬年之壽而
天助爾大福. On l. 3, —'May you, O king, live for ever!' Le Choo says, 'From antiquity it has been the custom of ministers, in responding to their rulers, to wish that they might receive abundance of happiness. The T'ien-pao (II. i. VI.) is an ode responsive to the sovereign, and the way in which his kindness is responded to in it is simply a wish for his long continued happiness; and so here, the ministers of king Ch'ing respond to him by wishing for him ten thousand years.'

St. 2. 將—as in II. vi. V. 6. Choo says that 昭明 is equivalent to 光大, 'bright and large.' But it is better to give to 明 the substantive force of 'intelligence.' Wang Gan-shih explains the two terms by 明德, 'intelligent virtue.'

St. 3. 融 is explained by 明之盛, 'the fullness of intelligence.' The term denotes 'steam or vapour issuing forth, and hence is used here
of intelligence, the manifestation of which cannot be repressed. 朗 (formed also with the same elements in the reverse order) denotes the brilliance of the intelligence. Choo defines it by 虛明, which we may call 'ethereal intelligence.' 令終—善終, 'a good end.'
Choo says the phrase is equivalent to the 考終命 in the Shoo, V. iv. 29. But it seems to be here more than we understand by a good end, and to characterize not the end of his life merely, but of all his undertakings, their issues being perpetuated in his posterity. L. 3 suggests a thought of caution to the king, that as the end flows from the beginning (傲—始)
he would best provide for the future by attending to the present. At this point the speaker or speakers seem to be unable to say anything more as from themselves, and go on to quote
the language in which the blessing of his ances-

4 What was his announcement?

'[The offerings in] your dishes of bamboo and wood are clean and fine.

Have done their part with reverent demeanour.

5 'Your reverent demeanour was altogether what the occasion required,

And not yours only, but that also of your filial son.

For such filial piety, without ceasing,
There will ever be conferred blessing on you.

tors had been conveyed in the temple. Of the 尸, or their representatives at the sacrifices, I have spoken on II.vi.V.5, et al. The expression 公尸, 'dual personators,' is somewhat difficult to account for. Choo says that it is an instance of old custom continuing to prevail, even after the prince of Chow had attained to the royal dignity; and nothing less unsatisfactory can be found on the point. 嘉告—以善言告之謂嘏辭也, 'announced in good words, meaning the blessing.' If there were more than one representative of the departed, as I have previously said that each of the ancestors had his personator, it would seem necessary to suppose that one of them, in pronouncing the blessing, spoke for himself and all the others.

St. 4. From l. 2 to the end of the ode we seem to have the words of blessing; and this st. gives some grounds of it. 簋豆—as in I.xv.V.2, et al. 靜嘉—清潔而美 'pure and admirable.' This predicate must be understood of the contents of the dishes. As Yen Te'zu says, 汝簋豆所盛之物潔靜而嘉美. By the 'friends' are intended the various officers who had taken part in the sacrificial services. 攝 has the meaning of 佐 'to assist,' and also of 檢 'to repress,' 'to exercise self-discipline,' and the critics combine them here, which does not seem to be necessary.

St. 5 The 威儀 here must be understood of the king himself, or it may belong to him and his son, carrying on l. 1 to 2. Maou, indeed, and Ch'ing continue to interpret the phrase of the assisting officers, of whom also they understand the 2d line, as saying that they were superior men, who possessed the virtues of 'filial sons.' But we may be sure that their interpretation is wrong. The Spirits of the dead had not sufficient interest in those officers that they should thus dwell upon them; and 君子 is here, as in att. 1, 2, appropriate to the king, while the 'filial son,' would be his eldest son, who, we know, took a certain part in the services in the ancestral temple. 時—in season, 'what the seasons required.' I take 有 as if it were 又—'and.' Leu T'ao-k'ien seems to me to have caught the meaning of l. 5 better than any of the other critics. He understands it of the king and his son, who had both shown themselves so filial (君子既孝而嗣子又孝其孝可謂源源不竭矣). Right was it that his ancestors should confer on the king all kinds of blessing (類—善).—I may mention another view of the stanza, given by a P'ang Chih-chang (彭執中; at the end of the Sung dyn.):—'From his reverent demeanour so entirely what the occasion required, it might be seen with what filial duty king Ching sacrificed to his ancestors. It was proper that he should have a filial son coming after him; yes, that filial sons should appear for ever in his line, generation after generation, for that Heaven should grant kings thus to follow one another of the same character was in the order of nature and reason.' See the 'Collected Comments,' in loc. A similar view did on my first study of the stanza occur to myself, but I concluded that the one given in the translation was preferable.

- 6 'What will the blessings be?
That along the passages of your palace
You shall move for ten thousand years;
And there will be granted to you for ever dignity and posterity.
- 7 'How as to your posterity?
Heaven invests you with your dignity,
Yea for ten thousand years,
The bright appointment is attached to your person.
- 8 'How will it be attached?
There is given you a heroic wife.
There is given you a heroic wife,
And from her shall come [the line of] descendants.'

St. 6. 壺 is explained as 宮中之巷
'the lanes or passages of the palace.' Then we must take ll. 2 and 3 together, and there comes out the meaning that the king should have a long and undisturbed life in the quiet of the apartments of his palace. As Foo Kwang expands the passage, —所謂善者如何 則云使爾居於深遠嚴密之 宮室, 無有外虞. This is, perhaps, the most likely of the various interpretations that have been proposed. I much prefer it to the view of Yen Ts'an, who says that as the passages of the palace were the means of egress,
l. 2 intimates that from king Ching in his palace
a transforming influence should go out over the whole kingdom, and, if it were so, he would deserve to live for ten thousand years. L. 4. 祚
—福祿 'happiness and dignities,' but it is difficult to see what more there is in this than is intimated in the two previous lines. 胤—子孫 'posterity,' 'descendants.'

St. 7. 被 (3d tone) —覆, 'to cover over.'
僕—附 or 屬, 'to be attached to,' 'to belong to.' The 1st line would seem to be here out of place, for the other lines seem to say nothing about the king's posterity, unless it be that the fact of the appointment of Heaven being attached to his person secured the same also for them.

St. 8. 釐—予, 'to give.' 女士—女 之有士行者, 'a lady [or ladies] having the conduct of an officer.' As it appears from st. 4, that the king had already a son, ll. 2, 3
must be translated in the present, or in the present-complete tense. 從—隨, 'and thereon.'

We must understand 錫 after it, and 以 is then —'with,' or, as Julien calls it, the sign of the accusative case.

[It must be confessed that the above communication from the Spiritual world is not a little difficult to construe. We are obliged to have recourse to 'chiseling,' to make out the sense
and sequence of the utterance.]

- 1 The wild-ducks and widgeons are on the King;
 The personators of your ancestors feast and are happy.
 Your spirits are clear,
 Your viands are fragrant;
 The personators of your ancestors feast and drink;—
 Their happiness and dignity are made complete.

 The personators of the dead enjoy the feast, their appropriate tribute.

Ode 4. ALLUSIVE. AN ODE, APPROPRIATE TO THE FEAST GIVEN TO THE PERSONATORS OF THE DEPARTED, ON THE DAY AFTER THE SACRIFICE IN THE ANCESTRAL TEMPLE. There was a supplementary repetition of the sacrifices on the day succeeding the more solemn service (See the note on the name of Book IX. in the Shoo, Pt. IV.), at the close of which all who had acted as the representatives or personators of the Spirits on the preceding day were feasted, as they had not been at the feast with which it had been wound up. Choo says that the materials of the feast were the remanues of the sacrifice of the day before, warmed up again. The 公尸, 'personators of the king's ancestors,' seem to make it plain enough that the previous sacrifice had been that in the ancestral temple, and so say both Maou and Choo. Ching K'ang-shing, however, led away by the language of what is regarded as the supplementary and unauthorized sentences in the Preface, would extend it to all other sacrifices as well; but the K'ang-he editors rightly condemn his view. Choo and the old interpreters agree generally in the interpretation of the stanzas, till they come to the last line, which Choo understands of the personators of the dead, and the others of the king who was feasting them, making it express the blessing which the Spirits would give him. Without saying that Choo's view is wrong, the imperial editors speak rather in favour of the other; but Choo's construction is the more natural, and I cannot see why it should be rejected.

Id. 1, 2, in all the stanzas. 鳧, 'the wild duck,'—as in I. vii. VIII. 1. The 鷺 cannot so readily be determined. Choo explains it by 鷺, 'gulls,' but the difficulty with me is the assigning the King, so far away from the sea, as if it were the proper habitat of such birds. Maou calls it 鳧, 'a kind of wild duck,' so also Luk T'ien, who adds that 'the 鳧 is fond of diving, while the 鷺 prefers to float in the water, and hence one name of it is the 鳧 (鴈)'. I am inclined to think therefore that the 鷺 may be the widgeon, of which it is an acknowledged peculiarity that it does not willingly dive. These birds are represented first as on the King,—upon which Yen Ts'an says, 'The Wei (渭), flowing eastward, first receives the Fung (鳳), and afterwards the King. The Fung enters the Wei from the south, and the King from the north-west. King Wan resided in Fung, on the west of the river so named, so that it was necessary to cross it before reaching the King. King Woo resided in Haou on the east of the Fung, and was therefore not far from the King.' In consequence of the nearness of the capital to the King, the allusion is made of the birds upon that stream. The 'sands' in st. 2, and the 'islets' in st. 3, would be on its banks and in its channel. 涇 in st. 4 would be where some smaller river flowed into it (小水入大水).

曰涇; and 壑 (read mau) is a gorge, where the stream flows between its banks rising high, and narrowing the channel. In all these places the birds felt at home, and enjoyed themselves; and so the reference to them serves to introduce the parties feasted,—in a situation where they might relax from the gravity of the preceding day, and be happy.

L. 2 寧 is understood of the quiet happiness of the mind (寧以心之安言); 宜 denotes long pieces of dried or preserved meat,

and why the writer should have described the viands as consisting of them, I can conceive no reason but that he wanted a rhyme. He goes on to speak, in st. 4, of the feast as given in the ancestral temple, the place of dignity and honour (攸—所), and in st. 5, returns to the spirits as 欣欣 or 'delicious.' 芬芬—

L1, 5, 6 belong to the guests, L6 telling, or being feasted by the king. 福祿, 'happiness honour so done to them. 成—成就 'to 完全無缺; 爲 is taken in the sense of 助, 'to aid (福祿不來助其身 乎)'; 崇—積而高大, 'accumulated

 so as to be high and large.'
 I have said in the introductory note that L6 is referred by the old school to the person of the king. Thus Yen T'w'an expands it in st. 1 to 神 以福祿來成汝. 'The Spirits will come and bestow in complete degree happiness and emolument on you,' meaning by the you king Ching. But L5 is in the 3d person, and there is no indication in the text that there is any change of person in L 6.

 TERITY. PROBABLY, THE RESPONSE OF THE PERSONATORS OF THE DEPARTED TO THE PRE-VIOUS ODE. The Preface and the old school say that the king here is king Ching; but of this there is no evidence.

St. 1 is quoted in the 'Doctrine of the Mean,' XVII 4, with 嘉 instead of 假, and so the passage appears twice in the Tso-chun. We may conclude therefore that 嘉 is the proper reading; and L. 1—我可嘉可樂之 君子,—as in the translation, the king under whom the piece was composed being intended by 君子. L. 2 is taken as the key-note of

- 2 [So] does he seek for the emoluments of dignity, [and obtain] all blessings,—

Thousands and hundreds of thousands of descendants,
Of reverent virtue and admirable character,
Fit to be rulers [of States], fit to be king,
Erring in nothing, forgetful of nothing,
Observing and following the old statutes.

- 3 [May they] manifest all self-restraint in deportment,
And their virtuous fame be without fail!
Without resentments, without dislikes,
[May they] give free course to [the good among] the officers,
Receiving blessing without limit,
And regulating all within the four quarters [of the kingdom]!

the ode, the excellent virtue, so illustrious, being what secured the favour of Heaven. The evidence of the virtue appears in l. 3; 宜 is an active verb, meaning 'to order aright,' 'to do what is besting in reference to';—as in l. i. VI, II. i. IV. 8, et al. When 民 and 人 are contrasted, as here, 人 denotes officers of the govt. (在位者). L. 4. 祿 is here the royal dignity, with all its emoluments. And this line is amplified in the two that succeed. Ch'ing, indeed, supposes that the king is the subject of these lines, and that they describe his dealing with his officers, —the 人 of l. 4, favouring them and giving them appointments; but his view has deservedly fallen into neglect. It is Heaven, no doubt, which is spoken of;—comp. at 6 in l. II. In the 'Doctrine of the Mean,' we have 佑 for 右, showing that the meaning of the term is 'to aid.' 命 must mean 'to confirm the appointment,' which the king already enjoyed. 申—重, 'to repeat,' i. e., to renew the appointment so that it should go down from the king to his descendants.

St. 2. Choo says that II. 1, 2 contain a wish that the king's descendants may be many, and II. 3—a wish that they may be worthy. L. 1, —comp. l. V. 1. The meaning is that the way in which the king sought for his dignity, by the display of illustrious virtue, was such as to bring with it all other blessings (王者干祿而得百福; 本上文令德受祿而言). I agree with Choo, after Ch'ing, in referring l. 3 and those that follow to the king's descendants, and not, with Yen Ts'an and others, to the king himself. 穆穆 is defined in the Urh-ya by 敬, 'to be reverent,' and 皇 by 美, 'to be admirable.' 宜 has a diff. meaning from that in st. 1, and here—'fit to be.' 君—諸侯 'princes of States.' The eldest son would always be king; the others would rule over States. 愆—過, 'to err.' 率由—循從, 'to observe and follow.' 'The old statutes' are the rules and laws of the ancient good kings.

St. 3 is also to be interpreted of the 子孫 or descendants of the king. L. 1. 抑抑—as in II. vii. VI. 3. L. 2. 德音 is taken by Choo as in the translation,—a meaning of the phrase which we have often met with. Others, as Yen Ts'an, give 音 here the sense of 言語, 'words.' 秩秩—as in l. i. III. 3, et al.—有

He stored up the produce in the fields and in barns;

序有常, 'orderly and permanent.' L. 3 may be taken actively, as in the translation. So, Choo; but he says also that some understand it passively, '—without giving occasion for resentment or dislike.' L. 4. 匹—類, 'the fellows,' or 'compeers,' meaning the various officers who might be regarded as equally deserving. The meaning of 率由 is not quite different from that of the same phrase in last st., but we cannot translate it in the same way. Ke Pun says, '率由舊章' means—to imitate his ancestors; 率由羣匹 means—to honour the worthy.' L. 6. 綱—as in L. IV. 5.

St. 4 continues the good wishes for the king's descendants, and, principally, for the king of the time being among his descendants. L. 1. On 綱紀 see L. IV. 5. I do not know well what account to give of the two 之. Possibly, the 之綱 at the end of st. 3 may have suggested this order of the terms; but the more likely solution of the difficulty is that the line reads as it stands, instead of 綱之紀之, the writer wishing to get 紀 as a rhyme with 友. 士, and 子, below, L. 2. 燕—安, 'to give repose to.' 朋友, 'friends,' is used for the ministers of the court, and members of the royal family. As Choo expands II. 1, 2, —君能綱紀四方而臣下賴之以安. L. 3, 4. By 百辟 are intended the feudal princes (諸侯), and by 卿士, the high ministers of the court (羣臣). 媚—to love; as in L. VI. 1, et al. L. 5, 8. 解—情, 'to be idle.' 塹—息, 'to rest,' which meaning, we saw, is given to the term by many in L. III. X. 6.

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 子, 德, cat. 1, t. 3; 人, 天, 命, 申, cat. 12, t. 1; in 2, 福, 億, cat. 1, t. 3; 皇, 王, 忘, 章, cat. 10; in 3, 抑, 秩, 匹, cat. 12, t. 3; 疆, 綱, cat. 10; in 4, 紀, 友, 士, 子, cat. 1, t. 2; 位, 塹, cat. 15, t. 3.

Ode 6. Narrative. THE STORY OF DUKE Lëw:—HOW HE MADE HIS FIRST SETTLEMENT IN P'IN, BUILDING THERE, LAYING OUT THE GROUND, FORMING ARMIES, ARRANGING FOR A REVENUE, TILL P'IN BECAME TOO SMALL FOR ALL HIS PEOPLE. I call this the story of duke Lëw, instead of legend, as in the case of How-tseih, because the events told in it are not of the same marvelous character. There probably is an element of history in those events; but, when we com-

para what is related here of his doings and of the growth of Pin with the intimations as to the condition of the settlement and the people in the time of Tan-foo, as we have them in ode III. of the first Book, it is evident that what we have here are mainly pictures of fancy, and not the relations of history. Who shall gather out the grains of ore from the rubbish in which they are imbedded? The composition of the ode is ascribed in the Preface to duke K'ang of Shou, —the famous Shih of the Shoo (see on V. xii. et al.). He made it, we are told, for king Ching, when he was about to undertake the duties of the govt., to admonish the young monarch, and remind him of the devotion to the people, and to the business of the people, which characterized his great ancestor.

St. 1. L. 1. 公—'duke,' 劉 is the name. I suppose that the title precedes the other term, because that is the name and not the honorary epithet. The case is analogous to that of 古公亶父, 'the ancient duke, Tan-foo.' L'w was not a duke, but his descendants honoured him as such, the title of king not being carried up by the duke of Chow beyond the grandfather of Wan. I have translated 篤 by 'of generous devotion to the people,' that being the meaning given to the term here by all the critics. In itself, it is 厚, 'generous,' 'magnanimous,' 'of large heart and mind.' Very early it was applied to L'w;—see the Shoo, V. iii. 8.

The whole stanza is descriptive of the commencement of L'w's migration into the territory of Pin. But where did he migrate from? According to Maou, he was living previously in T'ao, the principality with which How-tseih, as we saw on I. 5, was invested by Yaou; and was driven out of it in a time when the rule of Hsia was in great disorder. This is contrary, however, to the generally received view, which I have given on the title of Book I. Pt. I. According to that, Puh-chueh, the grandfather of L'w, was obliged to fly from the Hsia or Middle Kingdom of that time altogether, and take refuge among the wild tribes of the north and west. Puh-chueh again is said to have been the son of How-tseih, so that L'w was his great-grandson. This could not be, if the standard chronology is anything nearly correct in fixing the settlement of Pin in B.C. 1,796. It places K'e's investiture with T'ao in B.C. 2,276, so that from him to his great-grandson, a period of 480 years elapsed, during which there had been the reigns of Shun, and of Yu and 16 of his descendants, besides an interregnum of 40 years. I must believe—if belief at all can be spoken of in such a case—that one of K'e's descendants had taken refuge among the uncivilized people in the west, not far from Pin, and that L'w, one of his descendants again, came forth from among them, moving in the direction of the east, towards the end of the Hsia dynasty.

L. 2.—不敢寧居. 'He did not dare to dwell at ease.' It thus appears that L'w did not change his place in consequence of any pressure from without, as Tan-foo did subsequently. It appears further, that wherever he was provisionally, whether in T'ao, or among some tribe of the west, he was himself a considerable chief, who had advanced from the nomadic to the agricultural condition. His movement was the result, probably, of a restless and ambitious disposition, which required a larger sphere, and in which a principle of benevolence held sway.

L. 3. Here and below, 迺 (—乃) is used as in I. I. iii. 4. We can hardly translate it, but it is our 'and so.' 場 and 疆, —as in II. vi. VI. 3, 4; only the terms have here the force of verbs.

L. 4. 積 (read tsze) and 倉 are in the same way used as verbs, the former term denoting stacks in the open air. L. 5. 餼—'fresh dried,' and 糧—'grain prepared for use.' L. 6. The terms here are translated after the definitions of Choo. Maou makes the difference between the two articles to be simply that the tsai is 'small,' and the wang 'large.' Ho K'iao says the grain was carried in the wang, and the other provisions in the tsai fastened round the waist.

For L. 7, Choo gives 思以輯和其民人而顯光其國家, 'thinking hereby to keep together in harmony his people and officers, and to distinguish his State and its clans.' But such terms are too magnificent for L'w and his circumstances. Evidently, 思

- 2 Of generous devotion to the people was duke Lâw,
He had surveyed the plain [where he was settled];
[The people] were numerous and crowded;
In sympathy with them, he made proclamation [of his contemplated measure],
And there were no perpetual sighings about it.
He ascended to the hill-tops;
He descended again to the plains.

And his ornamented scabbard with its sword.

and 用 are no more than our 'to' of the infinitive mood. L. 8. See on II. vii. VI. 1. It is still more plain here that 張 has the sense of 'being prepared,' 'being made ready.' L. 9. 戚 = 斧, 'an axe,' i. e., in the connection, 'a battle axe'; 揚= 鉞, a weapon of the same description, but larger. L. 9. 爰= 於是, 'hereon.' 方= 始, 'to begin.' 啟行, 'to commence the march.'

St. 2 is generally taken as descriptive of the state of things on the arrival in Pin; but it has been felt that II. 3 and 4 were hardly predicable of the numbers and condition of the people at first, nor, indeed, consistent with the progress of the settlement as described in the stanzas
below. I agree therefore with K'ang Ping-chang in referring this stanza to the state of things in the earlier site, when Lâw had determined on the removal (上文言可以啟 行而所以必遷之故尚未說 出故此章補敘之).

L. 2 于 is the particle. 胥= 相, 'to look at,' 'to survey.' It is necessary to give 胥 this meaning here, though it is not found in the dictionary. 斯原, 'this plain,' as if the 斯 were used in opposition to the 彼 in the next st.—the old site which the writer has now immediately in view, in distinction from the new
one. L. 3. 庶 and 繁 are synonyms, signifying the number of the inhabitants. L. 4. The 乃 after 既 indicates that the action of the second verb was a consequence of what is stated

by the first. The meaning of 順 and 宣 given in the translation is adapted to the view of the whole stanza which I have adopted from K'ang Ping-chang. He expands the line:—於是順民之情宣布 遷國之令. L. 5. There was of course some dissatisfaction among the people, because of the trouble of removal; but it did not last long. Ll. 6—10 refer to the labours of Lâw in going over his old territory, before determining on the migration, to see if he could in any way escape the necessity of such a movement. Why he marched about in the style described, and why his doing so should be mentioned particularly, it is difficult to say. The critics imagine it was to show how he disliked the mean and rude dress of the wild people around them;—
we may rather suppose that it was to attract and please his people by the display. Ll. 6, 7. 'He ascended and was on the hill-tops; he descended and again was in the plains.' I cannot conceive where Lacharme found any authority for his version of these lines:—Montes ascendit, ac descent qui montem verticem incolens; in vallis descendit, ubi crux hinc. 哪= 山頂, 'hill-tops.' Luh Tih-ming says that some copies read 嶺, and the word is accordingly defined in the dict. as 'a hill like a boiler,' i. e., according to Ying-tah, 'large above and small below.' This I do not understand. L. 8. 舟 is used in the sense of 帶, 'to carry at the girdle.' L. 9. 瑤—as in L. v. X. 2. L. 10. 鞞—see on II. vi. IX. 2. I can only take 容刀 as 'containing the sword.' The more common view is that the characters—容飾之刀, 'the ornamented sword'; but Choo also gives the other construction (謂鞞之中容此刀耳).

St. 3 shows us duke Lēw now, certainly, in Pin, selecting the site, we can hardly say for his capital, but where he fixed his own headquarters as the chief of his tribe. L. 1, 2, 3. Where the 'hundred springs' were has not been determined. Some refer them, I think correctly, to the prez. dia. of San-shway (三水) in Pin Chow. Too Yē (杜佑; of the Tang dyn.) thought the name remained in the district of Pih-ts'uen of the Tang dyn.; but that would carry us away from Pin altogether to the dep. of Ping-liang (平涼) in Kan-suh. 溥—大, 'large.'—Here were two requisites for forming a settlement;—a large plain, and plenty of water. L. 4—6. 觀—見, 'to see.' 京 in L. 5 must evidently have the force of a substantive, and therefore Choo explains it by 高邱, 'a lofty height.' The first meaning of the term given in the dict. is 大, 'great,' the second is from the Urh-ya, 'the very highest mound or hill.' A hill would in those days be the most suitable place for a chief to take up his residence on. L. 6 is difficult. Choo says on 京師—高邱而衆居, 'a high hill, where all could dwell.' But what can we make of the 野 which gives us the idea of a tract of comparatively level and uncultivated country? 京師 came afterwards to have the significance of 'a capital city, the residence of the son of Heaven,' but that meaning of the terms was given to them from this line, and we cannot here translate—'the country about the capital.' I can only take the line as in apposition with 京 in L. 5, and suppose that it means—'a height which also afforded room for multitudes.'—The author of the 'Essence and Flower of the Shao' takes 京 as merely another name for the great plain of L. 3, and supports his view by the application to it of 野; but in this way there is no advance in the narrative. L. 7—10. 時—是; 于時—here. 處處—he built places to dwell in, i. e., for himself and his people; 廬旅—he made booths or huts for strangers, i. e., for people of other tribes who came to join them (旅—賓旅). In illustration of this, K'ang adduces a statement of Maou, that 'when Lēw removed to Pin, eighteen States followed him.' 言 and 語 are distinguished as in the translation (直言曰言, 論難曰語).

In st. 4 we have an account of the feast given by Lëw when he took possession of his quarters on the chosen site. L. 2 is to be taken of Lëw as now resting (依—安) on the height. The 斯 has the force of the descriptive 其. L. 2 is taken of his officers or principal men presenting themselves to him in formal and dignified manner (羣臣有威儀貌);—see II. i. V. 2. L. 4.—see on II. 1. L. 5. 登—登筵, 'to go up upon the mats'; 依—依几, 'to lean upon the stools.' In this line the force of 乃 after 既 is very clear. L. 6. 造—就, 'to go to.' This does not imply that Lëw had gone himself for the pig; any more than the 俾 in 4 implies that he himself had placed the mats and stools. We must translate 造 in the past complete tense. Maou defines 曹 by 羣 'herds'; Choo, better, by 羣牧之處, 'the place of the shepherds.' It is strange that Williams does not give this meaning of the term. L. 7. 牢, 'an enclosure for feeding cattle.' L. 8—用匏爲爵, 'they used calabashes for cups.' L. 10, upon the analogy of I. 9, would indicate something that Lëw did for his guests, as if he had assumed to them all the relation of ruler, and then divided them into clans, with individuals among them to be their Heads. But we cannot suppose him to have entered, at such a feast as is described, on such important matters; nor was the tribe in a sufficiently advanced state for them. I must suppose therefore that the guests are the subjects of 君 and 宗. So Ch'ing Hsuan (羣臣從而君之尊之).

St. 5 shows us the duke laying out his territory for permanent occupation and cultivation, making provision for a revenue, and some other arrangements. L. 2. 溥 indicates the extent from east to west; 長, the extent from north to south. L. 3. 景 (jing), 'a shadow'; here used as a verb, meaning 'to examine the shadows made by the sun.' The object of this operation was to determine exactly the four cardinal points (考日景以正四方). L. 4.

He measured also the fields west of the hills;
And the settlement of Pin became truly great.

- 6 Of generous devotion to the people was duke Lâw.
Having settled in temporary lodging houses in Pin,
He crossed the Wei by means of boats,
And gathered whetstones and iron.
When his settlement was fixed, and all boundaries defined,

陰陽.—'the dark and the bright;' meaning, probably, the lie of the country with reference to the hills. Ying-tai says, 'The country south of a hill is yang; that north of it is yin. But by broad valleys and large streams the climate differs as hot and cold, and the fields are adapted for the cultivation of different things; and therefore he made that survey.' Lacharme has endeavoured to put most of this into his translation:—'monticulus consuevit, unde in subjectis terras patebat aspectus, quas vidit alius calori solis apricus, alius calori solis minus percipiens.' L. 5. The object of this inspection was, it is supposed, to determine how the fields should be laid out,—in what direction they should be made to lie. Choo says that he does not understand l. 6, and makes no reference to any attempts of others to explain it, showing that he considered them all to be unsatisfactory. So, indeed, they are. Eminent absurd is Maon's view that the line is descriptive of the march to Pin in three bodies, the women and children inside, guarded by the armed men against any surprise or attack. This would belong to stanza 1. I cannot understand why any mention at all should be made of armies here. LL 7, 8 go together, the measuring of the wet grounds and the plains being preparatory to the laying out of the ground. 徹田.—see Mencius, III. Pt. 1. III. 6—13. The words mean to assign the fields on the principle of common (徹) labour. Choo says here, 'The fields forming a tsing (一井) amounted to 900 acres

(畝); and each of 8 families had 100 acres for itself, leaving 100 acres for the govt., which were cultivated by the 8 families in common.' The Chow system of cultivating the govt. fields by common labour took its rise from this, and the duke of Chow did no more than fully develop the system. 糧 is used in the sense of 'taxes paid in kind.' L. 9. All the critics explain 夕陽, after Maon, by 山西, 'the country lying west of a hill.' Of course this would receive the rays of the sun in the evening, while that on the east of the hill would be in the shade. Lâw, it is supposed, turned his attention to the land on the west of the hills of Pin: to find room for the increasing numbers of his people, L. 10. 允—信, 'truly'; —as often. 荒—大, 'great.'

St. 6 treats of the increase of the people and their territory. L. 2 seems to have reference to the first arrival in the district, when Lâw made temporary lodging houses for himself and his followers (始來未定居之時). Keang, however, will have it that the line has reference to the provision made for fresh arrivals. L. 3.—'He crossed the Wei, making a ferry.' 亂 is used in this sense in the Shoo, III. 1. Pt. 1. 70. L. 4 厲 (now written with 石 at the side)—砥, 'a whetstone'; 鍛—鐵.

expression the rain which has flowed into pools on the road (道上雨水流聚) 酌 and 挹 have here the same meaning—'to ladle out,' as the 'Amplification of the Meaning of the She' (詩經衍義) says, 酌與挹無二意蓋挹即酌也. (i.e., the ladling out (挹) and the pouring out (酌) indicate here the same thing. In this way 1. 2 is an amplification and explanation of 1. 1. 洞—遠, 'distant,' 'from a distance.' I do not see what this specification of the pools as at a distance adds to the meaning. By 彼 and 茲, 'that and this,' we are to understand two vessels, which perform the part of filters. I have seen such an arrangement often in Chinese houses. 注—'so as to flow into (=引)' Medhurst says, '挹注'—'to transfer liquids from one vessel to another.' 漑 is 'to steam rice,' specially indicating, acc. to the critics, one point in the operation,—the throwing in a fresh quantity of water, when the first has all been steamed off. 飭 is 'to steam millet.' This signification is given in the dictionary (炊黍稷曰飭); and it gives a much better and simpler meaning than that of 酒食, to which this passage is referred. 濯 漑—'to wash a jar,' see on 1.

1. III. 2, II. v. VIII. 9. 濯 漑—'to wash and cleanse.' I do not see that we are to find in 1. 3 any reference to sacrifices,—with many of the critics. The terms are quite general. Pool-water purified may be used in sacrifice as for other purposes. That is all we can say.

1. 4, 5. By 君子 is intended the 'sovereign' generally. There is a lesson in the ode for Ching, but he is not specially intended by the phrase. 豈弟—as in I. v., et al. The lines of st. 1 are quoted in the Le K'e, XXIX. 28, and enlarged on as if by Confucius, with rather a different meaning; but we there read 凱弟, and the former term indicates, it is said, the sovereign's efforts to teach the people, and the latter, the satisfaction and repose which he gives them (凱以強教之, 弟以說安之). I prefer to keep to the usual meaning of the terms in the She. 攸歸—'he to whom the people turn,' around whom they collect. 攸壑—he in whom the people rest; 壑—as in V. 4.

Ode 8. Narrative, with allusive portions. Addressed by the Duke of Shao to King Ching, desiring for him long prosperity, and congratulating him, in order to admonish him on the happiness of his people, and the number of his admirable officers. Choo agrees with Maou and his school in accepting the statement of the Preface, which assigns the ode, like the two that precede, to the Duke of Shao, for the admonition of King Ching; but there his agreement with them ends. To myself the admonitory element in the piece is very doubtful; and I see only the complacency of an old statesman in his young sovereign, his joy in his prosperity, and his surprise of, and wishes for, its continuance. The diff. views of the schools will appear in the notes.

St. 1. 阿—as in II. III. II. 1. 卷一曲. 'a bend,' or recess in the hill. 者—as in II.

v. VIII. 1, et al. 飄風 is here merely 'a whirling wind,' not 'a whirlwind.' Its coming from the south indicates its genial nature. I. 2,—as in the prec. ode; and 君子 referring to the king. 來—是,—as in Ode IV., et al. In I. 3, the writer, i. e., the Duke of Shao, speaks of himself. 矢—陳, 'to set forth.' The term, we have seen, is used of the marshalling of troops; here it is applied to the giving out or utterance of the notes of a song (陳出其聲音). The 以,—'and thereupon,'—'I take the opportunity.' The Duke, we are to suppose, was walking with the king on some breezy height, and entering into the spirit of the young monarch's delight, he responded to his song with one of his own. On this view the stanza is narrative. Maou took the first two lines as allusive, and I. 3, as referring not to the king, but to superior men, the 吉士 of st. 7. The indented mound, with its recesses penetrated by the south wind, appeared to him to introduce the king attended by his officers, communicating their lessons to him in songs. Ch'ing again took II. 1, 2, as metaphorical, intimating that as the indented mound welcomed the genial wind into its recesses, so should the king by humility and courtesy encourage the resort to himself of officers able to give him good counsel and effective assistance to his government. Leu Tsou-k'uen thinks we cannot get at the full meaning of the stanza, till we recognize in it all the three elements,—narrative, allusive, and metaphorical! There can be no doubt it is simply narrative. I cannot understand how K'ang Ping-chang, accepting Choo's view of it, as 'not to be changed,' should yet hesitate at his interpreting I. 3 of the king.

St. 2. 件矣 and 優游 must be synonymous, or nearly so. Choo explains them together by 閑暇 'at ease and leisure.' Maou explains the first two terms by 廣大有文章, 'wide, large, and elegant.' I have followed the definitions of Tsou Ts'uen (鄒泉; Ming dyn.):—有精神舒展之意有敢居自適之意. Li 4.5. There is a difficulty, on Choo's view, to find a subject for 俾; but it is not, to my mind, nearly so great as that in referring 爾 to the king, and I. 3 away from him. The simplest way is to look on the term as expressive of a wish in the Duke's mind, without any very definite object:—'May it be given to you to'.....

May you fulfill your years,
 And end them like your ancestors!

 And perfectly secure.
 O happy and courteous sovereign,
 May you fulfill your years,
 As the host of all the Spirits!
- 4 'You have received the appointment long-acknowledged,
 With peace around your happiness and dignity.
 O happy and courteous sovereign,
 May you fulfill your years,
 With pure happiness your constant possession!

This is the view of Yao Shan-nuh (姚舜牧; Ming dyn.):—天保三俾爾是天賦界此三俾爾是人所注望皆忠臣望君之辭. 'In the T'ien-pao (III. VI.) 俾爾 occurs thrice, with reference to Heaven as the Giver; here we have the same characters also occurring thrice, as expressive of human expectation:—both the desire of a faithful minister for his sovereign. 彌終, 'to complete,' 'to fulfill.' Both Maou and Choo take 性 in the sense of 命, 'the appointed time,' or 'life.' Others will have it to mean the whole of the nature, as formed for virtue. 先公—'the former dukes,' but evidently all the king's ancestors, both the early dukes and the later kings, are intended. 曾—終, 'end.' They had a good and famous end. Such might the king have!

St. 3. 土宇—'the country and all in it,'—lit., the country with its roofs or shelter.

畝章—大明—as in the translation. Some would read 版 for 畝, and 版章 would mean 'population tablets, or lists,' but it was hardly worth Choo's while to mention this view. In 12. 亦 and 之 are both expletives. L. 4—百神以爾為主, 'all the Spirits regarding you as their host.' Ying-tah says, 'He who possesses all under the sky sacrifices to all the Spirits, and thus the son of Heaven is, indeed, the host of them all.'

St. 4. 長 in wt. 1 describes the appointment of Heaven to the sovereignty of the kingdom as long vested in the princes of Chow. 萬 and 嘏 in 1.5, both—福, 'happiness.' The throne had come to Ching with abounding tranquillity (康—大平無事); and the speaker wishes in 1.5 that he might always possess it in the same condition (常享此太平之萬祿).

- 5 'You have helpers and supporters,
Men of filial piety and of virtue,
To lead you on, and act as wings to you,
[So that], O happy and courteous sovereign,
You are a pattern to the four quarters [of the kingdom]
- 6 'Full of dignity and majesty [are they],
Like a jade-mace [in its purity],
The subject of praise, the contemplation of hope,
O happy and courteous sovereign,
[Through them] the four quarters [of the kingdom] are guided by you.
- 7 'The male and female phoenix fly about,
Their wings rustling,
While they settle in their proper resting place.
Many are your admirable officers, O king,
Ready to be employed by you,
Loving you, the son of Heaven.

St. 5. Choo says that from this stanza to the end, the piece sets forth how the happiness spoken of thus far was to be realized,—by means of wise and loyal counsellors. I do not see, however, so much of admonition as of congratulation in the verses. Ll. 1, 2 give the attributes of the king's 'admirable officers.' 馮—恃, or 依 'to rely' or 'lean upon'; 有馮—有可爲依者, 'there are those who may serve to you for reliance.' Similarly 有翼, 有德, 有孝 are to be construed. The 以 in l. 3—'fitted thereby to.'... L. 5—四方以爲綱, 'the four quarters take you as their pattern.'

St. 5. Choo and the critics of his school understand ll. 1—3 of the king,—what he was through the aid of the advisers referred to in the prec. stanza. It seems to me better to take them still of those advisers. Ll. 1 speaks of their majestic appearance (體貌尊嚴); l. 2, of the purity of their virtue (德性純潔); l. 3, of the general appreciation of them. L. 5—四方以爲綱, 'the four quarters take you as their stay and regulator.' 綱—see on l. IV. 5, et al.

St. 7, 8. 鳳凰,—as in the Shao, II. 19. 9. 翯翯 are intended to give the sound of their wings. 亦集爰止—集於其所

And loving the multitudes of the people.
- 9 'The male and female phoenix give out their notes,
On that lofty ridge.
The dryandras grow,
On those eastern slopes.
They grow luxuriantly;
And harmoniously the notes resound.

止.—as in the translation. 傳.—as in II. vii. X. 3. LI. 1-3 are supposed to be allusive, serving to introduce the officers spoken of in 4-6. Of course it was all imagination about such fabulous birds making their appearance. LI. 4-6. 謫謫 is explained by 衆多, 'many.' 君子, 王, 天子 all, evidently, refer to the king. I do not see how, with 君子 thus used here, it can be taken differently elsewhere in the piece. 吉人—吉士, 人 taking the place of 士 merely for the sake of the rhyme. Compare 吉士 in I. ii. XII. 1, though the phrase is used there with a very different application. 媚—愛, 'to love.' We have met with the character in this signification repeatedly. 維君子使 (or 命)—維君子之所使 (所命).

St. 9 is metaphorical of the prosperity of the kingdom, or allusive, if we take it in connection with the next st. Choo Shen (朱善) says that L. 1 is metaphorical of the abundance of men of virtue and talents; L. 2, of the court; L. 3, of the worthy sovereign; and L. 4, of the brilliant time. The woo-rung is the dryandra cordifolia, of which various wonders are related. See Medhurst's dictionary on 桐. The phoenix, it is said, will rest only on this tree. 朝陽 is the opposite of 夕陽 in VI. 5. The east catches the 'morning' beams and is then bright; the west is bright 'in the evening' with the light of the setting sun. L. 5 describes the luxuriant growth of the dryandras, and L. 6 the notes of the phoenixes.

St. 10. 閑—閑習, 'trained and exercised.' 馳 must have the significancy of 'fleet.' 矢

CALLS UPON HIS YELLOWS TO JOIN WITH HIM TO EFFECT A REFORMATION IN THE CAPITAL, AND PUT AWAY THE PARTIES, ESPECIALLY FLATTER-ING PARASITES, WHO WERE THE CAUSE OF THE PREVAILING MISERY. The Preface assigns the composition of the piece to duke Mu of Shao, (召穆公), a descendant of duke K'ang, to whom the three preceding odes are ascribed. It further says that he made it to reprehend king Le (刺厲王),—to whose time also are assigned the next ode and the first five of the 3d Book. This then is the first of the 'Major Odes of the Kingdom, Degenerate' (變大雅).
Choo agrees with the Preface as to the date of the piece; but he says that it cannot be said to have been addressed directly to the king. Evi-

 Let us give no indulgence to the wily and obsequious,
 In order to make the noisy braggarts careful,
 And to repress robbers and oppressors;—
 So the people shall not have such sorrow.
 Do not cast away your [former] service,
 But secure the quiet of the king.

 To make careful those who set no limit to themselves,
 And to repress robbers and oppressors,
 Not allowing them to act out their evil.

dently it was written by a minister for one or more of his associates; and the reproaching of the king is an idea needlessly tacked on to it.

Ll. 1, 2, in all the att. Perhaps 亦, as well as 止, should be treated as a mere expletive; I have ventured to translate 亦 by 'indeed,' on the authority of K'ang, who says that it is here 一甚勞勞弊 'wearied and worn out.' 汔 is defined by 幾危近, and 期 giving us the ideas of 'perhaps,' 'nearly' with the faint intimation of a wish or half-hope that the thing would be done. 康休憺息, and

安, are all closely allied in meaning,—as in the translation. The 'Complete Digest,' in the first stanza gives:—彼中外之民其勞甚矣。今雖未能遽躋于咸亨之域庶幾其可以小康矣。

Ll. 3, 4. 惠, 'to show kindness to.' By 中國 is not intended 'the middle State,' but 京師, 'the capital,' or centre of the kingdom, which, indeed, takes its place in st. 3. 四方 means all the States in the four quarters of the kingdom (諸夏), or the whole of the kingdom generally, not excluding the territory of the royal domain. So, 四國 in st. 3, and 國 alone in st. 5. In st. 2, 速—聚, 'to collect,' 'the place where they gather' (中國者, 民之所聚也). In st. 3, 泄—去 or 散, 'to be removed, or dispersed.' In st. 5, 國無有殘—'so that throughout the kingdom there may not be the suffering of injury.' As the 'Essence and Flower of the Shu' has it,— 惠中國, 則國人無復有被殘害者耳。

Ll. 5, 6. 無 is best taken as the imperative 毋. By 詭隨, 'deceitful following,' is intended wily men, obsequiously following those from whom, or through whom they expected to gain advantage. We must suppose that deceitful flatterers of the king were in the writer's view in the first instance, but the expression need not be confined to his parasites only.

大是玉王正無寇式 諫用女欲反俾虐遏

And to repress robbers and oppressors,
So that the right shall not be reversed.
The king wishes to hold you as [sceptres of] jade,
And therefore I thus strongly admonish you.

縱 — 'to connive at,' 'to give indulgence to.' 謹 means 'to be reverent or careful,' here used in a kipail sense, 'to make careful.' One definition of it in the dict. is 嚴禁, 'sternly to repress,' which would suit very well here. Choo explains it, much in the same way, by 斂束. 無良 — 無良心之人, 'men without conscience; — those parasites and others. They are described in st. 2 as 惛愒, which Maou explains by 大亂, 'men guilty of great disorders,' and Choo, after Ch'ing, by 謹譁, 'braggadocios.' In st. 3, they are 罔極, 'men who set no limits to their evil conduct.' In 4, the 醜厲, 'the crowd of the furiously wicked;' and in 5, the 繾綣. These last terms mean 'inseparably connected,' and are to be understood of men who attached themselves with parasitic clinging to their ruler (小人之固結其君者).

LL 7, 8, are a further effort to follow from the course recommended in 1, 5, and 式 may have its meaning of 用 — 以, 'to,' 'and thereby.' The same parties are here described as 'robbers and oppressors,' and they are exhibited, in 1, 5 of st. 1, as being without any awe of 'what is clear,' i. e., the will of Heaven as to human duty. 惛 — 曾, as in II. iv. VII. 1, IX. 3. Choo explains 明 by 天之明命. In st. 2, 3, 5, 1, 8, the 無 is not imperative, but, — 'so as not to,' 'so that not.' In st. 3, 惡 — 惡, 'wickedness,' 作惡, 'to act out their wickedness.' The 'Complete Digest' says: — 不使其播惡於衆. In st. 4, 5, 正敗 is 'the right injured (敗 — 壞);' and 正反, 'the right reversed or overturned,' — a more serious thing, good taken for evil, and evil for good.

LL 9, 10 are directly to the party or parties whom the writer had in view. 柔遠 is the rule for treating foreigners or people from a distance; — see Confucius' use of the phrase in the 'Doctrine of the Mean,' XX. 12. Yen Ts'an says that by 遠 here is intended the E and the Telu (夷狄), i. e., foreigners generally; and this meaning fits in very well with the relations subsisting at the time between China and the tribes about it. 邇, 'the near,' will then be the people of China itself. I venture to give to 能 here the meaning of 助, 'to help,' 'to give ability to.' Choo explains it by 順習, 'to deal with them according to sympathy.'

In st. 2, the 'service' would be that of the ministers addressed, and of their fathers and ancestors. Choo takes 休 in 1. 10 as — 美; but I do not see why we should depart from the meaning of the term in 1. 5. In st. 3, 以近有德 — 'to approach the virtuous,' i. e., to cultivate association with them. In st. 4, 戎 — 汝, 'you.' I cannot construe it, as Maou does, with the meaning of 大, 'great.' 小子, — 'a little child;' but the expression is common in the Shoo, used by the king of himself, and applied by him to ministers and princes whom he is addressing. It does not necessarily imply youth. Confucius used to address his disciples by it. 式 must here have the full meaning of 用, 'to use,' — the service you do. In st. 5, 玉 — 'to count precious,' 'to make much of.'

The rhymes are — in st. 1, 康, 方, 良, 明, 王, cat. 10; in 2, 休, 迷, 愒 (prop. cat. 5), 憂, 休, cat. 3, 1. 1; in 3, 息, 國, 極, 惡, 德, cat. 1, 1. 8; in 4, 惛, 泄, 厲, 敗, 大, cat. 15, 1. 3; in 5, 安, 殘, 繾, 反, 諫, cat. 14.

1. God has reversed [His usual course of procedure],
And the lower people are full of distress.
The words which you utter are not right;
The plans which you form are not far-reaching.
As there are not sages, you think you have no guidance;
You have no reality in your sincerity.
[Thus] your plans do not reach far,
And I therefore strongly admonish you.

Ode 10. Narrative. AN OFFICER OF EXPERIENCE MOURNS OVER THE PREVAILING MISERY; COMPLAINS OF THE WANT OF SYMPATHY WITH HIM SHOWN BY OTHER OFFICERS, ADMONISHES THEM, AND SETS FORTH THE DUTY REQUIRED OF THEM, ESPECIALLY IN THE ANGER MOOD IN WHICH IT MIGHT SEEM THAT HEAVEN WAS. The Preface makes this ode, like the last, one of censure addressed to king Le, but the internal evidence requires us here also to assign it to an officer addressing other officers on the disorder into which public affairs had fallen. The Preface also ascribes it to the 'earl of Fan,' on which we can only say that there was a State of that name in the royal domain, and that we find, in the Ch'un T's'u, long after king Le, an earl of it sent from the court on a mission to Lo.

St. 1. The Urh-ya defines 板板 by 僻 'to be depraved,' 'to be partial.' Maou and Choo, however, take the characters in the sense of 反 'to reverse,' 'to act contrary to,' with the meaning which I have given (反其常道). The consequence of this unusual course pursued by God is stated in l. 2. The lower people are His peculiar care, but it might be supposed, from the condition in which they then were, that they were the objects of His aversion. 卒—盡, 'entirely'; 瘵—病, 'to be in distress.' Nothing could be farther from the truth than this, and that the writer well knew; but by this way of presenting the disorder and misery that prevailed, he seeks to convey his strong impression of it. Maou says that God is here a designation of the king, which is entirely wrong; but his meaning, perhaps, was not more than that of Yen Ts'an, who says that the writer did not wish to blame the king directly, and therefore attributed the state of things to God. I believe that the correct explanation of the language is what I have given. It prepared the writer's way for all that he had to urge on his associates;—as both he and they believed that calamities from God were signs of His anger at the remissness of govt., and at crimes, especially of the king. L. 3. The subject of 出 is the comrades of the writer, who do not appear directly till st. 3; we must, however, express it now,—'you.' 然, a verb, '—to be right,' 'accordant with reason (合理)' L. 4.

猶—謀, 'counsels,' or 'plans';—as often.

L. 5. 靡聖—'there are not sages,' i. e. you think there are now no sages. Then 管

管 indicates the consequence of this thought as seen in the conduct of the officers, talking and advising as occurred to themselves. Choo, after Maou, explains this phrase by 無所依據, 'being without anything to rely on.' Ch'ing gives for it 以心自恣, 'you yield to the erring thoughts of your own minds.' How the characters come to have this meaning, I cannot tell. Wang Tsou would read 官 with 心 at the bottom, on the authority of the dictionary Kwang-yun (廣韻). L. 5. But not only did the officers think they were left to their own resources; they had no reality in their professions of sincerity. 實—誠, 'sincerity.' Yen

Ts'an expands the line—矯誣詐僞不實於爲誠信而僞爲誠信. L. 7, 8 give the reason of the writer's composing the ode. The affliction of the time might be ascribed to God; but the real cause of it was in the neglect of their duties by those who should have been the wise advisers of the king and directors of his govt. The 之 in l. 7 carries that line on to the next, intimating that the want of foresight in the plans was what moved the writer to give his admonition.

St. 2. L. 1. Here and below, 方—今, 'now.' 難—降難, 'to send down calamities.'
L. 2. 無然—as in I. VII. 5. 憲憲—欣欣, 'to be complacent; almost, 'to be joyful.'
L. 3. 蹶—動, 'to be moving,' with reference to the unrest and excitement which was everywhere abroad. L. 4. 泄泄 is said to be equivalent to 沓沓 in Men. IV. Pt. i. L. 11, 12. It has the meaning of being remiss and indifferent (弛緩之意). In ll. 3—5, 之 is simply an expletive. 辭 refers to the speeches—advice and plans—of the ministers. 輯—和 'to be harmonious,' meaning, I suppose, if the ministers were of one accord among themselves; 懌—悅 'to be of a pleasant character,' what the people would like. Some make the harmony to be accordance with reason. But the view which I have given is more natural. Yen Ts'an says:— 戒之以言論之間, 宜相和協。庶幾合謀并智, 可以措民於安耳。洽—合, 'to be united; 莫—定, 'to be settled.'

St. 3. The writer complains of the way in which he himself and his advice were treated by the other officers, and warns them against the course which they pursued. L. 1. 異事, 'have a diff. service,'—不同職. L. 2. 及爾—as in II. v. V. 7. 僚—官, 'an officer; 同寮—official comrades:—the writer and those whom he was addressing were all, in common, servants of the king. L. 3, 4. 即—就, 'to come or go to' 囂囂 expresses 'the app. of insolent self-sufficiency,' L. 5, 6. 服—事, meaning the urgent 'affairs' which demanded their immediate attention. Yen Ts'an prefers the meaning of 服—行, 'to do,' so

But you make a joke of what is sad.
But the troubles will multiply like flames,
Till they are beyond help or remedy.
- 5 Heaven is now displaying its anger;—
Do not be either boastful or flattering,
Utterly departing from all propriety of demeanour, that the line—'My words are practical,'—may be carried into effect. LI 7. 8. 先民—as in II. 7. 1. 4, meaning ancient men of worth and eminence. 芻蕘—as 芻蕘者, in Mencius, I. Pt. II. II. 2. If ancient worthies thought that persons in such mean employments were to be consulted, surely the advice of the writer deserved to be taken into account by his comrades.

St. 4. 1. 2 謔—'to make sport of in an insolent way'; and the repetition of the character expresses 'the app. of doing this,' or expresses the action of the verb emphatically. II. 3. 4. 老夫 is the writer's designation of himself as 'an old fellow,' in contrast with the other officers who were 小子, as in st. 4 of the prec. ode. They might not be what we call young, but they were his juniors. 灌灌 is explained by 欸欸 'the app. of being sincere.' That was probably the original text,—in the old form of the character. 蹻蹻 is defined by 驕貌 'the app. of being proud.' 蹻 means 'to raise the feet high in walking.'—to have a haughty gait. LI 3. 6. 匪—'It is not that'...

as often. 用—with 'to take to be.'—'You take what is said to be matter of insolent jest.' LI 7. 8. The subject of these lines is to be found in the 憂 of I. 6,—the troubles and sorrows which were so abounding. 熇熇—熇盛, 'to be blazing.' LI 8.—'Cannot be cured, are beyond the reach of medicine.'

St. 5. 1. 1. 情—怒, 'to be angry.' Meon explains 夸毗 together by 體柔人, meaning, apparently, 'to present a soft and obsequious appearance to others.' Such is the meaning of the characters given in the Urh-ya. But this does not suit the 夸, which means 大, 'great,' although the dict., after giving this definition, subjoins, in illustration, the phrase in the text with the above explanation of it. Choo therefore gave to each of the characters its own meaning,—as in the translation, and has been followed by Yen Tsun (小人) 之於人, 不以大言夸之, 則以諛言毗之. LI 3. It is difficult to say whose behaviour the writer meant to speak Till good men are reduced to personators of the dead.

The people now sigh and groan,
And we dare not examine [into the causes of their trouble].
The ruin and disorder are exhausting all their means of living,
And we show no kindness to our multitudes.

- 6 Heaven enlightens the people,
As the bamboo flute responds to the porcelain whistle;
As two half maces form a whole one;
As you take a thing, and bring it away in your hand,
Bringing it away without any more ado.
The enlightenment of the people is very easy.
They have [now] many perversities;—
Do not you set up your perversity [before them].

of here. Yen Ts'an refers it to the behaviour of all classes of the people (衆人之威儀). In L. 4, 載 is the particle, having, however, a faint meaning, as a sort of copula. Good men reduced to the semblance of personators of the dead were good for nothing, could only eat and drink. L. 5. All the critics follow the Urh-ya in explaining 隩-as by 呻吟, as in the translation. The Shwch-wu quotes the line as 念 and 尸, with 口 at the side. L. 6. The 我, which is the subject of 敢 (the adv. 莫 standing before it according to a common usage with negatives), must be taken of the writer and the officers he was admonishing,—of the ministers of the king generally. 葵 is used for 撲,—as in II.vii. VIII. 5. L. 7. Choo takes 資 as 哀, 'ah!' 'alas!'; but this seems to me a most unnatural construction; nor is there any necessity for it. 資 denotes 'necessaries,' the means of living; 蔑 (一無) 資, the want of, or the extinction of, the necessities of life. In L. 8, 師—衆, meaning the multitudes of the people. The writer calls them 'our multitudes,' to indicate the claim which they had on the superior classes.

St. 6 seems to say that Heaven had so attuned the mind to virtue, that if good example were set before the people, they would certainly and readily follow it. L. 1. 隩, 'a window,' or 'an opening in a wall,' is here used as a verb, —'to enlighten,'—to let light into the mind as surely as a window lets light into a house. L. 2. 燠 and 簾—see on II.v. V. 7. These two instruments were played together; and when the whistle gave the note, the flute immediately took it up. So would the people respond to the presentation to them of what was right. L. 3. The 摐, we have seen was a half mace. Two 摐, put together, would form a 鉦, or a whole mace. As surely might the people be brought into accord with what was right. L. 4. You take a thing, and bring it away in your hand;—there is no difficulty. As easily might the people be led. On the analogy of II.2.8 what is denoted by 攜 must be consequent on what is denoted by 取; hence those critics are wrong who find two illustrations in the line, like Yen Ts'an (如往取物之必得如手攜物之必從) L. 5. 如

- 7 Good men are a fence;
 The multitudes of the people are a wall;
 Great States are screens;
 Great Families are buttresses;
 The cherishing of virtue secures repose;
 The circle of [the king's] Relatives is a fortified wall.
 We must not let the fortified wall get destroyed;
 We must not let him solitary be consumed with terrors.
- 8 Revere the anger of Heaven,
 And presume not to make sport or be idle.
 Revere the changing moods of Heaven,
 And presume not to drive about [at your pleasure].
 Great Heaven is intelligent, forth the ease with which the action of L. 4 is accomplished. The 曰 is the particle 無益—without anything more; i.e., no additional effort is required (無所費). The enlightenment of the people being thus easy, they yielding so readily to the impression of their superiors, the lesson in II. 7.8 naturally follows. 辟—邪, 'perversity.' 無—毋, 'do not.'

St. 7. The statements here made would seem to be what the writer considered to be great truths, which should lie at the basis of 'far-reaching plans.' In harmony with our general view of the ode, 無俾 must be taken as in the translation—counsel given to all the king's ministers. L. 1. Maou explains 价 by 善, 'good'; Choo, by 大, 'great,' adding 大

德之人, 'men of great virtue,' which makes his account of the character the same as Maou's. 藩—籬, 'a fence.' L. 2. 大師, 'the great multitudes,'—百姓之衆, 'the multitude of the people.' 垣, 'a wall,' but not a fortified wall. L. 3. 大邦 are the great feudal States, which were supposed to serve as 'screens' to the royal domain. L. 4. 大宗—強族, 'the strong Clans (Choo),' or 巨室, 'the great Houses (Wang fan-shih).' The dict. explains the character with reference to this passage, by 同姓, 'all of the same surname.' 翰, —as in I. X. 4, et al. L. 5. 宗子 is explained by Choo as the dict. explains 宗 alone, —同宗; but the 宗 must here be taken of those of the same

surname as the king, and the phrase has the meaning in the translation. 城—the fortified wall surrounding a city. Those six lines are plainly coordinate; and I cannot conceive why many of the critics separate 5 and 6 from the others;—especially strange seems the view advocated by K'ang, that 宗子 denotes the king himself. The overthrow of the wall in 1.7 must be extended to the ruin of all the other bulwarks of the throne. If the king were so left alone, every calamity which he could fear would come upon him. This, I conceive, is the meaning of 1.8. 斯—the descriptive 其.

St. 8 sends home all that precedes by impressing it on the officers that they were always subject to the inspection of Heaven. 1.2 豫—逸豫 'to be idle.' 1.3 淪—變, 'changes.' 1.4 馳驅—'to drive furiously about.' Maou explains the phrase by 自恣, 'to follow one's own passions.' In 11.5 and 7, 日 has the force of the copula; 明 and 旦 both mean 'bright;'

—intelligent. In 11.6, 8, 及爾,—as in st. 3; here,—天及爾, 'Heaven and you.' 王—往; 出王—出入往來, 'goes out and in, goes and comes.' 衍—溢, 'to overflow; nearly—our 'to be dissipated.'

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 板, 瘳, 然, 遠, 管, 直, 遠, 諫, cat. 14; in 2, 難, 憲, 卮, 蹶, 泄, cat. 15, t. 3; 轉, 洽, cat. 7, t. 3; 燁, 莫, cat. 5, t. 3; in 3, 僚, 囂, 笑, 蕘, cat. 2; in 4, 虐, 謔, 躡, 老, 謔, 鳩, 藥, 卮; in 5, 情, 毗, 迷, 尸, 屎, 葵, 資, 師, cat. 15, t. 1; in 6, 簞, 圭, 櫛, cat. 16, t. 1; 益, 易, 辟, 辟, 卮, t. 3; in 7, 藩, 垣, 翰, cat. 14; 屏, 寧, 城, cat. 11; 壞, 畏, cat. 15, t. 1; in 8, 怒, 豫, cat. 5, t. 2; 淪, 聖, cat. 4, t. 1; 明, 王, cat. 10; 旦, 衍, cat. 14.

The ruler of men below!
How arrayed in terrors is God,
With many things irregular in His ordinations!
Heaven gave birth to the multitudes of the people,
But the nature it confers is not to be depended on.
All are [good] at first,
But few prove themselves to be so at the last.

TITLE OF THE BOOK. 蕩之什三之三

三. 'The Decade of Tang; Book III. of Part III.' But though this Book is called a decade like the others, it really contains eleven odes. The critics say nothing, as far as I know, on the anomaly. It only shows that the division of the last three Parts into Decades was a device later than the time of the compilation assigned to Confucius.

Ode 1. Narrative. WARNINGS ADDRESSED TO KING LE ON THE ISSUES OF THE COURSE WHICH HE WAS PURSUING, SHOWING THAT THE MISERIES OF THE TIME AND THE IMMINENT DANGER OF RUIN WERE TO BE ATTRIBUTED, NOT TO HEAVEN, BUT TO HIMSELF AND HIS MINISTERS. The Preface assigns this ode, like the 9th of last Book, to duke Muh of Shao. The structure of it is peculiar, for, after the first stanza, we have king Wan introduced, delivering his warnings to Shou, the last king of the Shang dynasty. They are put into Wan's mouth, in the hope that Le, if, indeed, he was the monarch whom the writer had in view, would transfer the figure of Shou to himself, and alter his course so as to avoid a similar ruin. The matter of the ode would suit only Le and Yaw of all the kings of Chow within the period embraced by the Shu. The following summary of the kings previous to Le, given by Keang Ping-chang, is sufficiently illustrative:—After Ching and K'ang came king Ch'au, who went on an expedition to the south from which he did not return; king Muh, who drove about in his chariot wishing to go over all under the sky; king Kung, who extinguished the State of Mei; king E, who smote the dog-Jung; and king E, who changed the forms of audience. These four kings were all chargeable with a loss of virtue, but the consequences of their conduct were not any great detriment to the royal House. When king Le, however, came to the throne, by his violent oppressions, his neglect of good men, his employment of mean creatures, his annulling the old statutes and laws, his drunkenness, and the fierceness of his will, the dynasty was brought into imminent peril; and this it was which so much grieved duke Muh.

ST. 1. The object of this stanza seems to be to show that whatever miseries might prevail, and be ignorantly ascribed to the Supreme Ruler, they were in reality owing to men's not fulfilling the law of Heaven inscribed on their hearts; and this general statement is preliminary to the particular case of king Le, as set forth in the other stanzas under the figure of Shou of Shang. Maou's view of the stanza was that by God king Le really was intended; and so the writer, while blaspheming God, was in reality only blaspheming the king. It is not necessary to take up his view of the lines and phrases in detail; for even the critics of his own school, such as Yen and K'ang, have abandoned it in whole or in part.

You ought to employ such as are good,
But [you employ instead] violent oppressors, who cause many dissatisfactions.

They respond to you with baseless stories,
And [thus] robbers and thieves are in your court.
Thence come oaths and curses,
Without limit, without end.

- 4 King Wān said, 'Alas!
Alas! you [sovereign of] Yin-shang,
You show a strong fierce will in the centre of the kingdom,
And consider the contracting of enmities a proof of virtue.
All unintelligent are you of your [proper] virtue,
And so you have no [good] men behind you, nor by your side.

'good'; 義類—'officers of the good class.'
A 當, 'ought,' is understood before 秉; and 乃用, 'but you use,' before 式. Only in this way can any satisfactory meaning be got out of the lines, unless we construe, with Kéang, 秉 in the past tense:—'You used good men, but these violent oppressors, with their great hatred, brought false stories to you about them,' &c. But such a sentiment is foreign to the character of the ode. 懟—怨, 'to murmur,' 'to resent.' The 多懟 indicates, in my view, the resentments which the king's officers awakened, rather than those which they indulged.
So, the expression is in better harmony with the whole stanza. L. 5 tells how the ministers imposed on the king, and in L. 6 we have the consequence. 寇 implies the employment of violence;—'robbers.' 式 is by some here explained by 用, 'to be employed.' It is little more than an expletive particle, with perhaps the force of the copula. 內—王朝 'the court.' Ll. 7, 8 tell us the consequence of such a state of things. 侯 is the particle. Choo says that 作 is read as 詛, and with the meaning of that character,—'to curse,' synonymous with 祝. But this does not seem necessary. The reduplication of the 侯 only serves to eke out the line, which—侯作祝詛, 'they go on cursing.' 屆—極 'limit' 究—窮 or 已, 'stopping,' 'coming to an end.'

St. 4 attributes the disorders to the king's own example. L. 3 焦然 (we find quotations of the line with 咆然, and 咆哮) are defined by 氣健貌 'the app. of a strong temper,' & a., of a violent and self-confident will. I take 中 國 as in II. IX. L. 4 is well expanded by Choo—多爲可怨之事, 而自以爲德, 'you do many things calculated to excite enmity,
and yet you yourself consider them to be vir-tuous.' Ll. 5, 7 have the same meaning, the order of the characters being varied for the sake of the rhyme. Ll. 6, 8. 時—是—於是,
'thus' 背 and 側 'behind and on your side.'

- 5 King Wān said, 'Alas!
Alas! you [sovereign of] Yin-shang,
It is not Heaven that flushes your face with spirits,
So that you follow what is evil and imitate it.
You go wrong in all your conduct;
You make no distinction between the light and the darkness;
But amid clamour and shouting,
You turn the day into night.'
- 6 King Wān said, 'Alas!
Alas! you [sovereign of] Yin-shang,
[All round you] is like the noise of cicadas,
Or like the bubbling of boiling soup.
Affairs, great and small, are approaching to ruin;

are understood to refer to smaller officers, such as might attend on the king's person; 陪 (=貳, 'associate') and 卿, to the great ministers of the govt.

St. 5 affirms more strongly that the root of all prevailing misery and disorder was in the king himself, and specifies his drunkenness.
Ll. 3, 4. Choo defines 湏 by 飲酒變 色, 'drinking till the colour is changed,' i. e., till the face is flushed. 不義從式 is a natural sequence of this drunkenness, — 惟 不義之事是從而法(或 用)之.

Ch'ing took L. 4 as—不宜從而法行 之, 'you ought not to follow and imitate them,'
—that is, men who drink to excess. It is strange that Wang Tao should prefer this exegesis.

L. 5. 止—容止, 'demeanour';—the whole of the conduct and bearing. L. 6. The redoubled 靡 like the redoubled 無, means 'without reference to,' 'without consideration of.' L. 7.
式,—redoubled, as often, and merely the particle. L. 8. we speak of 'turning night into day.' Here the day is turned into the night.
Excesses, only common in darkness, were committed openly.

St. 6. Ll. 3, 4 are taken by Choo as emblem-ing the confusion and disorder that everywhere prevailed. This is preferable to Yen Ts'uan's references of them to the drunken orgies of the prev. stanza. 蜩 we have met with already, as the cicada, or broad locust; 蟴 is an insect of the same kind. 如沸如羹, 'like bubbling,
like soup,' — 如羹之沸, as in the translation. The repetition of the 如, separating

Alas! you [sovereign of] Yin-shang,
People have a saying,

the diff. words of a line, which go together to constitute one idea, is a peculiarity of the ancient poetical style, common enough in the odes, and especially in this Book. L. 4. 人 is the designation of the king and his creatures (君臣; K'ang); 尚, 'still'; the 乎 is merely an expletive, or we may say that 尚乎 = 尚且, 'still'. 由行 = 由此而行, 'to pursue this course.' Mao's construction of 尚 as = 上, and 人尚 = 居人上, meaning the king as dwelling-placed-above the people is inadmissible. L. 7, 8. The opposition of 中國 and 鬼方 makes us take the former expression of the kingdom at large, — all the States. What region or regions the 'demon lands' were we cannot tell. Mao explains the phrase by 遠方, 'distant quarters.' In the Yi the same name occurs, and Kao-tung (in the 13th cent. B.C.) is said to have attacked the country. It could not be very distant from China, but still it was beyond it. It is strange that the custom of calling foreigners demons, still everywhere prevalent in China, should have the sanction of the Shu, and of this high antiquity.

昊—怒, 'to be the object of anger.' 覃—延, 'to extend to.'

St. 7. L. 3—非上帝爲此不善之時, —as in the translation. 不 may be taken as an adjective, qualifying the 時. L. 4. 殷—like 殷商, meaning the king of Yin. L. 6 典, 'canons,' the instructions and general lessons of former kings (先王之訓典); 刑—法, 'laws.' L. 8. 傾—傾覆, 'to be overturned.'

St. 8. L. 3. 顛沛, —see on Ana. IV. v. 2. 揭, 'to be raised,' L. 2, so that the roots are seen. Id. 4, 5 show that it is the fall of a tree which is spoken of;—<sup>撥</sup>—'to uproot.' I do not understand Choo, when he says that the character is equivalent to 絕. 殷鑒—what Yin has to look at;—the beacon of Yin. The last sovereign of Hsia was the tyrant Kieh. In these two concluding lines is the moral of the ode. King Le was to look to Shou as his beacon, as Shou had been warned to look to Kieh.

The rhymes are—in st. 1, 帝, 辟, 帝, 辟 cat. 16, t. 3; 諫 (prop. cat. 7), 終, cat. 9; in 2, 克服, 德力, cat. 1, t. 3; in 3, 頌慰, 對內, cat. 15, t. 3; 祝, 究, cat. 3, t. 2; in 4, 國德德側, cat. 1, t. 3; 明, 卿, cat. 10; in 5, 式止, 晦, cat. 1, t. 2; 呼, 夜, cat. 5, t. 1; in 6, 蟬, 葵, 喪行, 方, cat. 10; in 7, 時, 舊, cat. 1, t. 2; 刑, 聽, 傾, cat. 11; in 8, 揭, 害, 撥, 世, cat. 15, t. 3. Also 咨, cat. 16, t. 1; and 商, cat. 10, in st. 2—8, rhyme with themselves.

Ode 2. Narrative excepting st. 9, which is allusive. CONTAINING VARIOUS COUNSELS WHICH DUKE WOO OF WEI MADE TO ADMONISH HIMSELF, WHEN HE WAS OVER HIS NINETEEN YEARS;—ESPECIALLY ON THE DUTY OF A RULER TO BE CAREFUL OF HIS OUTWARD DEMEANOUR, AND TO RECEIVE WITH DIGNITY INSTRUCTIONS DELIVERED TO HIM. Ode VI. of the 7th Book of last Part is also attributed, we saw, to the same duke Woo, and there is a remarkable similarity in the structure and in many of the phrases of the two pieces. Especially do there appear in both the duty of attending to the outward deportment, and the way in which that is liable to be disordered by drunkenness. The authority for attributing this ode to duke Woo is the statement of the Preface, and an article in the 'Narratives of the States' (國語, 楚語, 上, art. 6). The article relates how Woo, at the age of 23, insisted on all his ministers and officers being instant, in season and out of season, to admonish him on his conduct, and concludes by saying that he made the 'warnings in the E to admonish himself' (作諷戒以自儆). The E is taken as only another name for YA. It is added that after his death he was styled 'the Intelligent and Sage duke Woo.' One would hope that the incident related of him on the 1st ode of Bk. IV., Pt. I. is not true.

But the Preface says that the ode was made by duke Woo, not only to admonish himself, but also to reprehend king Le. Now, Woo became marquis of Wei in B.C. 811, fully 16 years after the death of Le. His rule lasted for 55 years. This ode must have been made near the close of it;—the composition therefore must be dated considerably more than half a century from Le's reign. Unless there were in it very clear indications of its referring to Le and his times, we ought not to accept the statement of the Preface. But there are no such indications. The school of Maou, coming to the study of the piece with a foregone conclusion, try, indeed, to make them out; but the whole is much more naturally explained on the view that it was simply for Woo's own admonition. It is clear to my mind that king Le was dragged into the piece to account for its place in the Ya, supposed to contain only Odes of the Kingdom.

The stupidity of the wise man
Is from his doing violence [to his natural character].

- 2 What is most powerful is the being the man;—
In all quarters [of the State] men are influenced by it.
To an upright virtuous conduct,
All in the four quarters of the State render obedient homage.
With great counsels and determinate orders,
With far-reaching plans and timely announcements,
And with reverent care of his outward demeanour,
One will become the pattern of the people.

St. 1. The relation of the outward demeanour to inward virtue. The diff. stupidities of diff. people. L. 1.—as in II. vii. VI. 3. L. 2. 隅 is defined by 廉角, 'a corner or angle.' Evidently it is used here in the sense which I have given it. The demeanour is the outcome or indication of the inward character. L. 4. 哲—知, 'wise men. The line—無有哲而不愚者, 'no man who is not stupid.' The line is a sort of key-note to the piece. The writer will not acknowledge the sentiment. The wise man ought not to become the stupid. L. 8, 8. 疾 is used nearly as in Ana. XVII. xvi. of a natural failing or defect. 職—主, as in I. x. I. et al.; here, 'to be determined by.' 戾—反, 'to go contrary, do violence, to.' 斯戾—'the going contrary to.' 斯—'the descriptive.' Both 亦 and 維 have to be disregarded in making out the meaning.

St. 2. The power of a man, playing the man in a high position, to influence others. L. 1, 2. 競—強, 'to be strong.' The line—莫 強乎人, according to the analogy of the 'Doctrine of the Mean,' I. 3.—莫見乎隱, &c. Yen Te'an refers to 莫強, in Mencius, I. Pt. i. V. 1. Literally, we might render—'There is nothing strong, only man.' By 人 we are to understand 'being the man,' realizing all his ideal,—as Choo says, 能盡人道, 'being able to complete his humanity.' The old school, misled by their reference of the ode to king Le, take 得人, 'getting men,' as getting proper men to fill all the offices of govt. 訓之—以之爲訓, 'take such an one as instructor.' L. 8, 4. 直 defines 覺 by 直, straight-forward, 'upright,' Choo, by 直大, 'upright and great.' 四方 in I. 2 and 四國 in I. 4 must be taken as synonyms. L. 8—8. 訏—大, 'great'; 'great plans' are not concerned about one's own person or affairs. 定命, 'determined orders,' are orders based on principle, and not varying with circumstances. 辰告, 'timely announcements,' are those given out at the proper season, whenever they ought to be made public, or are required.

- 3 As for the circumstances of the present time,
You are bent on error and confusion in your government.
Your virtue is subverted;
You are besotted by drink.
Although you thus pursue nothing but pleasure,
How is it you do not think of your relation to the past,
And do not widely study the former kings,
That you might hold fast their wise laws?
- 4 Shall not those whom great Heaven does not approve of,
Surely as the waters flow from a spring,
Sink down together to ruin?
Rise early and go to bed late,
Sprinkle and sweep your court-yard;—

In st. 3 the admonitions become sharp, and personal. We need not suppose that duke Woo was really guilty of the things here charged upon him; but he chose to be addressed in this style, that he might be the more put upon his guard against them. Much of the piece must be taken in the same way. Ll. 1, 2 The 興 here occasions a good deal of difficulty, and we can hardly tell what to make of it. Yen Ts'an is the only critic, so far as I have observed, who makes the first line terminate with it, so that the meaning is—'As for the things under our present ruler, him who has now risen to the throne;—with reference to king Le. But how could a composition written more than 50 years after Le's death speak of him as the king now? Even those of Maou's school who end the line with 今 interpret it of Le, unconscious of the anachronism they fall into. It might seem that by pointing as Yen Ts'an does, we get 興 to rhyme with 政, but the characters belong to different categories. Choo follows Ch'ing in explaining 興 by 尙 or 尊尙, 'to give honour to'; but this seems to require the construction of the lines that follow, which Ch'ing adopts:—'You give honour—i.e., office—to those who introduce error into the govt.' &c. The translation shows the meaning I have ventured to give to the term. L. 4. 湛—read as, and = 耽, 'lustful pleasure,' and 'to be addicted to pleasure.' In construing L. 5, we have to understand a 是 before 從:—'although it is addition to pleasure which you follow.' Ll. 6–8 have their meaning brought out by means of an interrogation. 厥紹, 'your connection; i.e., your relation by your descent to your worthy ancestors (所承之緒). 共 (2d tone) is defined by 執, 'to hold fast.'

St. 4 Here again the meaning of ll. 1–3 has to be brought out interrogatively. 肆—as in I. III. 8, VI. 4, 8. It is defined by 故, 'therefore,' but we can hardly translate it. Choo explains 弗尙 by 厭棄之, 'dislikes and casts them away.' Literally the characters—'does not esteem or honour.' As surely as the water flows in a stream from the spring, so would such persons sink together, under the displeasure of Heaven, to ruin. 淪—陷, 'to St 5. L. 1. 質 is defined by 成 and 定.

成 probably being understood in the sense of 平, 'to pacify,' 'to reduce to a state of order.'
In the 'Flower and Essence of the Shu,' however, it is said that 質 has all the meaning which I have given it in the translation (質者平

St. 6. On the importance of being careful of one's words. L.L. We have the same characters in II.v.III. 8; but the force of 由言 is here more apparent; or, at least, they may have a meaning quite applicable here and justifiable, that does not present itself in the former passage. Yen Ts'an explains the phrase by 自由之言, 'words from one's self,'—which are one's own. L. 2 is to be taken with reference to the speech;—'Do not say that what you utter is of little importance.' Ll. 3, 4. 捫

—持, 'to hold.' 逝—去, 'to go.' Words once spoken go away from the utterer, and cannot be recalled. Ll. 5, 6. 讐—荅, 'to be responded to;'—synonymous with 報. Ll. 7—10 give an illustration of what is here said. 惠 will be kindness shown both in word and deed. The 'friends' are the ruler's ministers and great officers, with whom he was in the habit of associating. Yen Ts'an expands L. 8 into—下及庶民與其小子, but

I cannot suppose that the 小子 are the children of the people, or any class different from the 庶民. Twan Ch'ang-woo (段昌武; Sung dyn.) says, 此小子止謂庶民. 'The 小子 here means nothing more than the people.' The translation shows my view of the line. 繩繩—as in II.V. 2.

St. 7. Carefulness in speech enforced by spiritual considerations. Ll. 1—3. 友君子—友於君子, 'friendly with superior men.' 輯—和, 'to be harmonious,' 'to make harmonious;'—as often. L. 3 gives a thought as it passes through the mind of the individual spoken of:—'Am I not;—may I not be—doing what is wrong?' 遐—何, 'how,' 'why.' Ll. 4, 5. Being in the 室 or 'chamber' was a very different thing from being in the society of friends, and a man might think it was not necessary to keep himself under restraint there; but the monitor requires that he should do so. All this is indicated by the 尚. The open court

From the connection of the phrase here, however, with the chamber, I prefer to interpret it of the opening or window in the north-west wall, through which the light was admitted (日光所漏入). LI. 6-10. 無—毋, imperative; 莫 is indicative, = 'there is none'; 云 is expletive; 思 is the final particle; 度, 'to measure' or 'calculate'; 射—數—厭, 'to dislike,' 'to be tired of'; 矧—'how much more,' or 'how much less,' according to the connection. See II. 8, 10 quoted in the 'Doctrine of the Mean,' XVI. 4.

St. 8. The sure issue and influence of virtuous conduct is a ruler. LI. 2. 辟—君, 'a ruler,' and refers to duke Woo. The 'Complete Digest' remarks that after 爾 we must make a short pause or halt (辟爾略頓), and that the 俾 is emphatic (俾字着力). 辟 is directly addressed to Woo, and must be translated, 'O ruler.' It seems strange that the lines should ever have been construed differently; and yet the old school takes 辟 in the sense of 法, 'a law,' 'to take the law from.' You Ts'an says, 'All under the sky take the law from you (i.e., from King Lo, supposing the lesson is addressed to him), and your conduct is their pattern; you ought to make them good and admirable.' LI. 3-8. 淑—善, 'well.' 止—容止, 'the behaviour,' generally. 僭—差, 'to be in error.' 賊—害, 'to injure,' i.e., to be injurious to virtue. LI. 6—少不爲人所法則者. He says on the contrary that my words are not true:—

So different are people's minds.

- 10 Oh! my son,
When you did not know what was good, and what was not good,

hardly give it in a translation any other reference than to duke Woo. Ll. 7—10 are illustrations of the truth insisted on, and of the absurdity of expecting the same result in any other way. L. 9 will be understood by comparing it with L. 12 in the last stanza of II. vii. VI. duke Woo's ode against drunkenness. 虹—

証 'to scatter and confuse.' The 小子, 'little son,' addressed to a man of 85, is dwelt on as showing the earnestness of Woo, and his desire to be kept ever in mind of his duty.

St. 9. On docility in receiving good advice. Ll. 1—4. 荏染 is defined as 'soft-looking (柔貌)' and 柔, which means 'soft' has here the additional meaning of 'lasting (柔忍之木)' given to it. 緡—被, 'to cover; here — to fit with. Such wood, fitted with the string, becomes a bow,—an article of use and value; and serves with the poet to introduce the idea of the mild and humble man, who has in his qualities the capacity of becoming truly virtuous. st. 1 reappear. Both Maou and Choo understand the 話言 of the 'good words of antiquity'—which does not appear to be necessary. L. 7 is construed by the critics as—順其德

而行之, 'acts in accordance with the virtue [in the words], and practises it.' I prefer the meaning which I have given in the translation,—that the 順德 is the wise man's own docile virtue. L. 10 appears to be a reflection on the two cases which have just been stated. As Choo puts it, 一言人心不同, 愚智相越之遠也. This is much more natural and simple than to hear in it a remark of the stupid man:—'You think so, but other people may have a different opinion.' As Yen Te'an has it, 人各有意見, 何得以汝所見爲是.

Ll. 3—6 show us the parent teaching the child, — holding him up by the hand, giving him by facts illustrations of his lessons, telling him plainly, face to face, bending down to him, and holding him by the ear, that no instructions may be lost. 匪 — 'not only.' The two 言 are merely particles. Ll. 7, 8 leave the moral in them to be supplied: — 'Now that you are old, and have a son of your own, you ought to know.' Some read the lesson rather differently: — 'If still you do not know, you are old, and there is no time to be lost in learning it.' 借 — 假, 'suppose,' 'if; 借曰, — 'suppose you say,' or, which I prefer, 曰 may be disregarded, as merely expletive. Ll. 9, 10. 靡盈 — 不自盈滿, 'not to be full of one's self.' 夙 and 莫 (—暮), — 'early and late,' in the morning of life, and in its decline.

St. 11. The lamentation of a father over his son, old and yet stupid. Ll. 1—4. 昭 — 明, 'intelligent,' 'clear-seeing.' 夢夢 — 'all-dark, and unintelligent.' 慘慘 — 憂貌, 'sad-looking.' Ll. 5, 6. 諄諄 expresses the 'earnestness and frequency' with which the instructions were given; 藐藐, 'the indiffer-

Ll. 9, 10,—since as 9, 10 in last stanza, only 耄, 'an octogenarian,' or 'a nonagenarian' is a great advance from 已抱子. 亦聿 cannot be translated. They simply fill out the line.

St. 12. All the previous stanzas are here enforced by a consideration of the consequences of attending to, or neglecting, the lessons given in them. L. 2. 止 is the final particle. 舊—舊章, 'the old ways or maxims' L. 6. 曰 and 厥 can hardly be translated. The former has the force of our 'to-wit.' L. 7. The 'illustrations' are understood of the confirmation which might be adduced from instances in the past of the consequences of wrong-doing;—like the instance in the concluding lines of ode I. 貳—差, 'to fall into error.' 回適—邪僻, 'perverse and evil,' here used actively as a verb. 棘—急, 'urgent,' i. e., urgent distress. Ch'ing gives 大困急 for 大棘.

It will be seen that, in some of the stanzas, the versification is very irregular and defective;—more so, perhaps, than in any previous ode.

Ode 3. Metaphorical, narrative, and allusive. THE EARL OF JUY MOURNS OVER THE MISERY AND DISORDER OF THE TIMES, WITH A VIEW TO REPRISAL THE MISGOVERNMENT OF KING LE.—ESPECIALLY HIS OPPRESSIONS AND LISTENING TO BAD COUNSELLORS. The piece itself says nothing about the earl of Juy as its author; but the statement rests not only on the authority of the Preface, but also on the Tso-chuen. An earl of Juy is mentioned in the Shoo, V. xxii., and others subsequently occur in history. Tso-shu, under the 1st year of duke Wan, quotes the first line of st. 12, as from the ode of Lêng-foo of Juy (芮良夫之詩). The difficulty of a translator is to determine in what tenses he will render many of the verbs. In st. 7 we have a point of time indicated clearly enough in the statement that—'Heaven has extinguished or put an end to the king.' This is universally explained of the dethronement (in effect) of Le in B.C. 841. The people then rose in arms against him, irritated by his long-continued oppressions; and he only saved his life by flying to Cho (趙), in the pres. Heh-chow (霍州), dep. Ping-yang, Shan-se. There he remained till he died in 827. In the meantime the gov't. was carried on by the dukes of Shiao and Chow, the period of their administration being known as 共和, which may, perhaps, be translated 'Mutual Harmony,'—an important chronological era in Chinese history. The piece then would be composed sometime during that period; and much of it, after st. 7, is interpreted by K'ang with a special reference to the two loyal dukes, faithful at once to the House of Chow and to the people. I thought of translating st. 1—6 in the past tense, and from 8 to 16 in the present; but the whole is given as if it were equally passing immediately under the writer's eye, and if he had anywhere those dukes in view, his allusions to them are too indistinct to

justify a translator in giving them prominence. I have used, therefore, the present tense throughout. The ode was composed, I suppose, immediately after Le's dethronement, and he is before the writer throughout as the cause of the suffering which so greatly distressed and depressed him.

St. 1. Ll. 1—3, 苑—as in II. iv. VIII. 7, et al. 桑柔—桑柔, 'a soft, i. e., a young mulberry tree.' The characters are inverted for the sake of the rhyme. 其下, 'beneath it,'—the shade afforded by it. 侯 is the particle, —維 旬 is defined by 徧—'wide.' 將—as in I. xv. II. 8; comp. also I. i. VIII. 2. 劉—'to lacerate and destroy.' The 其 劉 places the stript tree before us as in a picture. These three lines are metaphorical of the flourishing kingdom which was now brought to the verge of ruin. Ll. 4—8, 瘼—as in II. v. X. 2. 殄—絕, 'to come to an end.' 倉兄 mean 'commiseration (悲閔之意)';—equivalent to the same characters with 心 at the side. Maou took them differently; but we need not take up his interpretation of them, nor that of 填, which he explained by 久, 'long-continued';—a meaning which it elsewhere has. Choo says that he does not himself know what to make of this last character; but the view given in the translation is sufficiently natural and simple. It is from Hoo Yih-kwei (胡一桂; Yuan dyn.) who says 填滿也, 積也, 倉兄填兮言悲閔積滿於中之意. In II. 7, 8, the writer appeals to Heaven. 倬—明貌 'bright-looking';—see in I. IV. 4. 寧—何, 'how,' 'why.'

St. 2. The consequences of the king's misgovernment in the wars and desolation everywhere prevailing. Ll. 1, 2 give us a picture of an army on its march. L. 1,—see II. III. III. 1. L. 2,—see II. I. VIII; 2. 有翮 give 'the app. of the banners flying in the wind.' L. 3 describes the effects of the constant strife. 夷—平, apparently used as a verb,—'to be pacified'; 泯—滅 'to be extinguished,' 'to be ruined.' 黎 is used in the sense of 'black-headed,' and l. 4 gives a very graphic picture of the times, when the young and able-bodied of the people were slain or absent on distant expeditions, so that only old and gray-headed people were to be seen (斯時丁壯盡行, 國中之民未有黎首). Maou tries to construe 黎 in the sense of 齊, so that the line—'The people are disordered.' Yen Ts'an takes it as = 衆—'The people are few.' Choo's interpretation seems to bring its own evidence with it. 具—俱 'all.' 禍 'calamity,' has here the force of a verb in the passive,—'to be calamitized,' if we could say so.

以燼—'so as to be reduced to ashes.' In II. 7, 8, the writer makes his moan, as if he felt that it was of no use again appealing to Heaven. 有哀—'alas!' 'it is deplorable.' 步 is used much as in II. VIII. V. 2. It is defined here, in the same way, by 運—'revolution,' 'doom,' 'fate.' 頻—急, 'urgent.' 斯—the graphic 其.

St. 3. The same subject, with an indication of the writer's view that the misery was all owing to the king's neglect of the men who would give him peaceful counsels. L. 1. 蔑資,—much as in II. XIII. X. 5. Choo here construes 資 as there, —'alas!'; but still more unnaturally. The writer says that 'the fate of the kingdom has nothing to rely on (國運困窮, 無所資賴). L. 2. 將—養, 'to nourish.' L. 3. Both Maou and Choo define 疑 here by 定, 'established,' 'sure' and it is found in the dictionary in that sense, with the pronunciation yíng; though here it is commonly read as yíh, which also is given in the dict. with a kindred signification. L. 4. 云 is the initial particle; though we might also construe it here as —'to say.' 徂 and 往 can hardly be distinguished in meaning—If we would go, where can we go to 5, 6 are hard to construe. Maou says nothing at all on L. 5. Ch'ing understood by 君子 the princes of the States. Yen Tsan refers it to king Lo (指厲王), and this seems also to have been the view of Choo, who says, 然非 君子之有爭心也, 誰實爲 此禍階使至今爲病乎. But they both refrain from giving any explanation of the 維; which, evidently, has here a distinct verbal force of its own. The key to the true meaning is found in II. iv. VII. 3, where 維—持 'to hold together.' Then 君子 will mean the good and able men in whose hands

 the govt. should have been (執政之君 子實宜維持國家); and L. 6 indicates the ruling principle of their character and course,—seeking peace and pursuing it, so as to maintain order. But such men were not in fa-

his neglect and discouragement of them. 梗

St. 4. The writer continues to dwell on the mi-defines 土 by 鄉, 'village,' and 宇 (after Maou) by 居, 'dwelling,' or 'residence,' but I prefer to take the terms as in the former passage,—more generally. Choo's view was the same,

probably, as that of Ying-tah, that the writer

was an officer engaged in the conduct of an expedition of the east, and that, in this L. 2, he is thinking of home; but I do not see that we are required by anything in the verses to take such a view. 不辰—不時, 'an unpropitious time.'

俾—厚, 'great.' Another reading is 賈.

L. 5 seems to me equivalent merely to 'from the west (where the capital was) to the east,'

i.e., all through the kingdom. 瘡—病, 'to be afflicted,' 'distress.' 圉 is defined by 邊 and 垂, 'borders.' The distress not only prevailed

in the kingdom, but beyond. The rude tribes

But the disorder grows and dismemberments ensue.
I tell you the subjects for anxiety;
I instruct you how to distinguish the orders of men.
Who can hold anything hot?
Must he not dip it [first] in water?
How can you [by your method] bring a good state of things

You [and your advisers] will sink together in ruin.

were pressing on the borders; but this does not necessarily imply that the writer was serving there.

In st. 5 the writer addresses himself directly to the king, who is intended by the 爾, 'you.' We have to understand an 爾, as the subject of the 爲 in l. 1. 愼—愼, 'to be careful,' 'caution.' Some take the 1st 爲 as—'to form,' 'to make,' and the 2d as—以爲, 'to take to be,' 'to think,' but they are evidently co-ordinate (王豈不謀且愼哉). The king's plans, however, were radically bad, and their consequences were evil. 況—滋, 'to increase,' 斯削—斯—則, or with little more force than 而, 'and (而國日削).'

In ll. 3, 4 the writer says he had told the king what matters should occasion him the most anxiety, and how he could remedy the disorder prevailing only by the use of the proper men. 序爵—次序賢能之爵, 'to arrange in an orderly way the rank of the worthy and able.' Ts'ao Suy-chung says, 'Outside the royal domain were the dukes, marquesses, earls, viscounts, and barons; about the court were the 500, the 1000, and all the various officers;—these had the rank. In arranging the individuals, those of ability and virtue should have been placed in high positions for the conduct of affairs, and those of a diff. style, in low positions, simply to receive orders; those who achieved merit should have been advanced, and those who did not so, should have been dismissed.' Ll. 3—4. A heated substance would only injure him who handled it incautiously; and the king's measures could only lead himself and others to ruin;—see ll. 3, 6 quoted by Mencius, IV. Pt. I. VII. 6, where the meaning is plain; but still I am puzzled with l. 6. 逝, indeed, is merely the initial particle, like 載 in l. 8; but I have ventured to take a new view of 不以濯.

Nearly all the critics suppose them to mean—'without dipping the hand in water.' But to dip the hands in water will not be of much service in laying hold of a heated substance; whereas, if the substance be put in the water and cooled, it may then be handled. I verily believe this is the meaning; but the utmost Wang Tsung will allow to it, is that it may be proposed as a new view (可備一說). The Tso-chuan, under the 31st year of duke Seang, quotes the passage rather in accordance with my view.

St. 6. But those who might have been effectual advisers and helpers to the king had been forced hopelessly to retire from the public service. Ll. 1, 2. 遡風 is 'going against, in the teeth of, the wind.' To do so produces breathlessness (僇).

一飽, 'difficulty in breathing'). Thus a strong opposing wind acts on men's breath; and similarly did the king's oppressive govt. act on men's minds. L. 3 is assigned to men who would take service if they could do any good. 民 is equivalent to 人, meaning men of worth (民 猶人也, 指賢人). 肅—進, 'to advance,' i.e., to enter on public employment.
L. 4. 并—使, 'to cause.' It is best to take it in the passive:—Such men are made to say,
'We cannot do anything (皆使之曰世 亂也, 非吾所能及也)' L. 5—8.
Such men, dispirited, take to be farmers, and are

St. 7. I have observed in the introductory note that, in li 1, 2 here, there seems to be an allusion to the casting out of king Lo, and his flight to Chou. In no other way can L. 2 be explained so naturally. I agree therefore in taking 滅 with Chou, as in the past-complete tense, rather than with Yeu Ts'ao, in the future, as if the writer were speaking of the issue to which things were tending. 我立王, 'the king whom we had established.' Lo would succeed according to the testament of his father; but the ministers would carry that into execution.

L. 3, 4 indicate famine as another evil following in the wake of many others, so that those who had taken to husbandry would hardly find a living by it. 蝥賊—see in II. vi. VIII. 2.
痒—see in II. iv. VIII. 1. 卒—盡, 'altogether,' 'entirely.' L. 5, 6. 哀恫—a compound exclamation;—'alas! alas!' 具—俱
'all together.' 贅 gives us the idea of 'repetition,' 'one thing as connected with another.'
L. 7, 8. 旅力—see in II. vi. L. 3; but the idea is here simply that of 'strength,' or 'ability.' 穹 蒼, 'the concave azure,' is a name for heaven,
—our azure vault. The 'Flower and Essence of

He keeps his heart, and his plans are formed on mature deliberation,

There is one who has no such character,
But reckons only his own views to be good;—
He holds only to his own thoughts,
And causes the people to be distracted.

St. 8. Two pictures;—the good and thoughtful ruler, and the wayward. Kéang contends that by the good ruler here are intended the two loyal ministers,—the dukes of Shao and Chow. But I cannot agree with him. If such had been the writer's intention, he would have indicated it more clearly. The former picture is of what king Le ought to have been; the latter, of what he was. 惠 in L. 1 is defined by its opposite 不順; in L. 5, 惠—順理, 'to act in accordance with reason and principle.' In L. 3, the 'keeping the heart' is expressive of impartiality,—even justice. 宣—徧,—the plans are formed after mature consideration, and large advice. 考,—to examine; with reference to the care with which he looks out for advisers; 慎,—to be cautious; with reference to the care with which he employs them. In L. 6, 俾—以爲, 'to consider, or allow, to be.' L. 7, 肺腸, 'lungs and intestines;—comp. 心腹腎腸 in the Shoo, IV. vii. Pt. III. 5. L. 8. 卒—as in the proc. st.

St. 9. An instance of the disorder of the times is the faithlessness of friends. L. 2 甡甡 represents the deer as 'numerous and moving together.' Comp. 說說 in L. i. V. 1. L. 3. 語—不信, 'not true,' faithless. L. 4. 不相與以善道, 'They do not associate together in good ways;—the intercourse of friends was not like the intercourse of deer. This is an instance of what is called 反典, 'allusion by contrast.' L. 5. 谷 is explained by 窮, 'to be reduced to the last degree,'—to be impracticable.

- 10 Here is a wise man;—
His views and words reach to a hundred le.
There is a stupid man;—
He on the contrary rejoices in his madness.
It is not that I could not speak [all this];—
How is it I was withheld by my fear?
- 11 Here is a good man,
But he is not sought out nor employed.
There is a hard-hearted man,
And he is thought of and promoted once and again.
The people [in consequence] desire disorder,
And find enjoyment in bitter, poisonous ways.
- 12 Great winds have a path;—
They come from the large empty valleys.
Here is a good man,
Whose doings will be good.
There is a man unobservant of the right,
Whose goings will be according to his inward filthiness.

St. 10. The wise man and the stupid;—two classes of the king's advisers. LI. 1, 2 indicate the foresight of the wise man. Choo says, 聖人炳於幾先所視而言者, 無遠而不察. The king's advisers were of the stupid and reckless class. The writer could have warned the king against them; but he was restrained by his fear of his violence.

St. 11. The good man, and the cruel; and the consequence of the king's giving all his favour to the latter. 迪—進, meaning to advance to office, and to employ. 復—重, 'to repeat.' The meaning is as in the translation. The people became like the officers whom the king maintained over them. 寧—甘, 'pleased,' 'to find it sweet.' 荼—see on I. III. VIII. 2. Choo says, 'The 荼 is a bitter vegetable, whose taste is bitter, and its juice is acrid, and injurious to life; hence it is called 荼毒.'

St. 12. The good man and the unprincipled act each according to his nature. 隧—道, 'the way,' or 'path.' Great winds come out from the hollow valleys. 'There is, as it were, their birth-place.' 式 is defined by 用, 'to use'; but it is really nothing more than the copula. Choo says he does not understand LI. 2; but is

The covetous men try to subvert their peers.

Is it in ignorance that I make [this ode]?
[But it may happen] as in the case of a bird on the wing,

But you become the more incensed against me.

willing to accept 征 as 一行, 'to go,' — to do. If we assent to this, then there should be no difficulty with the 中. Its most natural meaning is what I have given (中垢者, 由中而發於外也). Wang Tsou says there is probably an error of the text in 征. This is very likely.

St. 13. Choo says that 敗類 is equivalent to 圯族 in the Shoo, I. 11, which we may admit. Ll. 3, 4 are very variously construed; but the view which I have given of them is as likely as any. 對 here is not 'to answer,' but 'to speak to,' to take the initiative. 誦言, 'to croon one's words to one's self.' Choo Kung-ta'ien says, 無可與語故自誦其言耳. 誦言猶云獨語也. 悖 (or with 言 at the side) — 亂, 'disorder,' 'confusion.' I think the writer must be referring to his own state of mind as indicated in l. 4. Wang Tsou, however, takes 我 as 一我民. In which case 悖 would be expressive of the general disorder that prevailed.

San-ma Ts'ien, in his account of King Le, says that in his 30th year his chief favourite was a duke E of Yung (榮夷公), and that Liang-fu of Juy remonstrated with him on the ground of E's well known covetousness and greed;—but without effect. It may be therefore that he is specially intended by the 貪人 of this stanza.

St. 14. By the 'friends,' whom the writer addresses in this stanza, we are to understand the evil ministers of the king. We need not suppose that the name is ironical,—he would fain be their friend, if they would only allow him to be so. The meaning of l. 2 is, that he knew what reception his sentiments were likely to meet with. He goes on to say, in ll. 3, 4, that, notwithstanding, he might do some good:—as birds on the wing are generally missed, yet sometimes one is brought down (豈無一二或中者乎). 蟲 is used here as 一鳥, 'a bird';—it is often employed not of insects merely, but of all living creatures. 弋—see on Ana. VII. xxi; 弋獲—射中, 'to shoot and hit.' Ll. 5, 6 are an expostulation. 之 is taken as 一往, 'to go,' in consequence of the 來 in l. 6. 陰 (in 3d tone), 'to afford shelter to,'—to

 Choo mentions, with a measure of approbation, a view of these two lines, taking 陰 with its usual meaning and tone:—'I went and privately

 l. 2; but he gives Maou's explanation of it by 薄.
 with reference to the 'light, bad ways' of those in office; and Ch'ing's by 諒—'to be true.'
 He approves of the latter, but manipulates it himself into 'hypocrites (名爲直諒)'

 in l. 3.—They hypocritically say that small men will not do to be in office; but when their backs are turned from you, they show their skill in speaking evil to revile superior men.' So Choo says on ll. 3, 4. On ll. 5, 6, his words are, 'But these men gloss themselves over, and think that they did not speak so; but I have made this song

Ode 4. Narrative. KING SEUEN, ON OCCASION OF A GREAT DROUGHT, EXPOSTULATES WITH GOD AND ALL THE SPIRITS, WHO MIGHT BE EXPECTED TO SUCCOUR HIM AND HIS PEOPLE, ASKS THEM WHEREFORE THEY WERE COUNTERFEITING WITH HIM, AND DETAILS THE MEASURES HE HAD TAKEN, AND WAS STILL TAKING, FOR THE REMOVAL OF THE CALAMITY. King Seuen does not occur by name in the ode, though it is ascribed in st. 1 to a king; and all critics accept the statement of the Preface that it was made, in admiration of Seuen, by Jing Shuh (仍叔)—a great officer, we may presume, of the court. It is mentioned in the Ch'un T'ew, under the 5th year of duke Hwan (B. C. 706), that the king sent the son of

Jing Shuh on a mission to the court of Loo; and this, it is supposed, was the son of the writer of this ode. This is just possible; but Seuen's accession is placed in B. C. 876, and his death in B. C. 781. Jing Shuh may have been the standing appellation of the Head of the family. At what year in Seuen's reign the drought occurred, and whether it extended over a series of years, we cannot ascertain. The 'Bamboo Books' refer it to the 21st year of king Le, and say that it continued on to his death in Cho, and that then, on the restoration of his son (king Seuen) by the two regents, there ensued a great rain. Hwang-poo Mei refers it to the end of Seuen's reign, as a judgment for the errors into which he then fell. The standard chronology places it in B. C. 821.—Seuen's 6th year. This point must be left undetermined. As Kiang says, 疏以宣王遭旱早晚及早年多少經傳無文當闕之是也.

St. 1. Ll. 1, 2 are introductory, and must be translated in the past tense. The author would have us think of the king gazing at night on the sky, to see if there were any indications of coming rain. As there were none, he gave vent to his feelings in the verses that follow. 雲漢—as in I. IV. 4. Ts'ou Say-chung says, 'The appearance of the Han in the sky is like a cloud, and yet it is not a cloud;—hence it is called "The cloudy Han!"' I do not think, however, the name means anything more than 'the Han in the clouds.' What the Han was on the face of the earth, that the Milky Way was in the sky. 昭—光, 'bright'; 回—轉, 'turning'; 'revolving.' Kiang observes that l. 4 is not to be understood as spoken murmuringly;—the king really wished to know what offence he and his people were chargeable with. L. 6 饑饉—

see on II. iv. X. 1. 薦—i. q. 荐, 'to occur repeatedly'; 臻—至, 'to come.' The phrase denotes that the drought had not been of one year only (言非一歲之旱). The 畢

There is no victim I have grudged;
Our maces and other tokens are exhausted:—
How is it that I am not heard?

- 2 'The drought is excessive;
Its fervours become more and more tormenting.
I have not ceased offering pure sacrifices;
From the border altars I have gone to the ancestral temple.
To the [Powers] above and below I have presented my offerings and then buried them:—
There is no Spirit whom I have not honoured.
How-tseih is not equal to the occasion;
God does not come to us.

In L. 7 has a pregnant meaning, 舉而祭之 'to take up and sacrifice to.' Choo illustrates the line by referring to a custom, in times of great calamity, of sacrificing to all Spirits, even searching out sacrifices that had fallen into disuse, and reviving them. L. 8. 愛—to grudge,—as often. 斯牲—our victims. L. 9. We have in the Shoo, V. vi. an instance of the use of the poik and laoi in sacrificing;—see on pp. 4, 5. All such symbols in the royal treasury had been used on this occasion. 卒—盡, 'to be used up,' 'to be exhausted.' L. 10. 寧—何, 'why,' or 'how.' Yen Ts'an remarks that 寧 occurs frequently in this ode, and is explained now by 曾, now by 偏, now by 安 (or 何), and now as expressing a wish. We must not oblige tenaciously, he says, to explain it always in the same way, but follow the exigency of each passage. Here again, K'ang cautions the reader against finding in the line the language of complaint.

St. 2. L. 1. 大甚—'is too or very excessive.' L. 2. The Urb-ya explains 蟲蟲 (with 火 at the side) by 熏, 'steaming vapour.' Here it denotes the fervent heat;—accumulated (蘊—蓄 or 積), and very violent (隆—盛). L. 3—我禮祀未嘗止絕.

my pure sacrifices have never ceased.' 禮祀—as in II. vi. VIII. 4. L. 4. 宮—宗廟, 'the ancestral temple,'—as often. 郊—the border altars, at which Heaven and Earth were sacrificed to; a service, according to Confucius, rendered to God. See the 'Doctrine of the Mean,' XIX. 5. In L. 5, 上 is interpreted of the sacrifice to Heaven, and 下 of that to the Earth. 奠 is the placing of the offerings on the ground (or on the altars) during the sacrifice; 瘞, 'the burying them afterwards in the earth (奠是方祭時事, 瘞是祭畢時事).' The two terms embrace all the articles used in sacrificing;—as Ying-tah says, 禮神之物酒食牲玉之屬, 'the spirits, the outables (grain and cakes), the jade-tokens.' The fact that these were all buried at the conclusion of the sacrifice explains the statement in the preceding stanza about the jade-tokens being used up. L. 6. 宗—尊, 'to honour.' L. 7, 8. How-tseih was not able to deliver from the drought (不克); and God, who could have given the help, would not do it. Hence Choo explains 臨 by 享, 'to accept the offerings.' I prefer translating the term as I have done. Yen Ts'an says, 不肯臨顧

土。寧丁我躬。
早既大甚。則 不可推。兢兢
業業。如霆如 雷。周餘黎民。 靡有孑遺。昊

畏。先祖于摧。

This wasting and ruin of our country,—
Would that it fell [only] on me!

- 3 The drought is excessive,
And I may not try to excuse myself.
I am full of terror and feel the peril,
Like the clap of thunder or the roll
Of the remnant of Chow, among the black-haired people,
There will not be half a man left;
Nor will God from His great heaven
Exempt [even] me.
Shall we not mingle our fears together?
[The sacrifices to] my ancestors will be extinguished.

我 耗 耗—'to waste,' 'to injure'; 斃—'to ruin.' 丁—'to light upon.' Choo takes 寧 as in last stanza, 一何; but there seems to be an opposition between 下土, meaning the country generally, the people, and 我躬, the king's own person. I prefer therefore taking 寧 as—'would that.' Choo himself says that such a construction is not at all unsuitable (或曰, 與其耗斃下土, 寧使裁害當我身也, 亦通). It was one of the Soos who first proposed this view.

St 3. L 2. Both Maou and Choo define 推 by 去, 'to put away,' 'to remove,' so that the line simply says that the drought could not be removed. The significance of the term, however, is deeper than this. Its primary meaning is 'to push away,' and the king is speaking, I believe, of the responsibility for the calamity,—how he acknowledged it as resting on himself, and did not wish to put it off on any other body. 不可推其過於他人. Compare 王無罪歲 in Men. I. Pt. I. III. 3. In II. 3, 4 the king is speaking of his own alarm, and not, as Ch'ing says, of that of the people. 兢兢—

恐 'to be afraid: 業業一危, 'to be or to feel in peril.' L. 4.—as in II. iii. IV. 4. LI. 5, 6.
 周餘—周家所餘之民, 'the people that remain of the House of Chow;— referring, probably, to the way in which the country had been depopulated in the preceding reign. 子—無右臂貌, 'the app. of a person who has lost the right arm;' and hence it comes to signify 'half a man.' See the remarks of Mencius on the absurdity of taking these lines literally, and the important canon which he lays down for the interpretation of the Shu (V. Pt. I. IV. 2). As Choo expands it, we must here bring to the interpretation our understanding of the object of the writer, and then we perceive that the king is grieving over the drought, and does not really mean to say that there would be none of the people left. LI. 7, 8.
 I cannot take 昊天上帝 otherwise than in the translation. Lacharme makes the two parts of the line in apposition:—*Augustum
 celum, qui est summus rerum dominus et dominator.*
 But such an apposition of the personal name and the vague designation of Heaven, especially with the epithet of 'great' attached, is to my mind exceedingly unnatural. 則 in L. 8 has the force of our 'even.' Even the king himself would not be left. The terms are not to be understood as a sort of repetition of II. 5, 6,—that the people would not be left to him. LI. 9, 10. The king tania, as it were, to his officers and relatives, and calls on them to sympathize with him in his distress and fears. Ho K'uei is the only critic, so far as I have observed, who points out this force of the 相 (胡不相畏 對大夫 君子言之 言我君子 何可不相與畏懼乎) 摧—滅 'to be extinguished.' 于 is the particle. By 'ancestors' being extinguished, he means that their sacrifices would be so,—the greatest calamity which a filial Chinese can conceive (先祖之祀將自此而滅也). Throughout the Ch'un T'zu, the extinction of a family or a State means the extinction of its sacrifices.

St 4. L. 2. 沮—止, 'to be stopped.' L. 2 is descriptive of the fierce blazing heat that accompanied the drought (旱氣熱氣). L. 4. Many critics make 云—皆云, 'all say.' It is, however, merely the initial particle. 我無所, 'I have no place,' i.e., of shelter. The suffering was unendurable. L. 5, 6. 大命 occurs in L. 7, meaning 'the great appointment' of Heaven in giving the throne to the House of Chow; but it can hardly have that meaning here, and it is understood to be a designation of 'death.' The 'Complete Digest' says that it must be taken out of the king-only, but of all the people (大命合天下之人);—which I do not see. 止 is the final particle. L. 7, 8 tell us that the king had sacrificed to all the ducal lords of Chow in the early period of the House's history, and their ministers of note;—but without avail. 正 is used of the Heads of official departments (正者長也 先世官之長). Some take 羣公 more generally,—of all princes of States, who had signalized themselves by services to the people and to the kingdom. In L. 9, 10 the king turns to his parents and his royal ancestors, nearer to him than the dukes of antiquity. He could hardly hope that his father, the oppressive Ia, would, in his spirit-state, give him any aid; but we are only to find in his words the expression of natural feeling. Probably it was a regard to the character of Ia, which made Ch'ing, and after him Ying-tah, take the 先祖 as kings Wan and Woo, and refer the 父母 to them as the parents of the people. In L. 10, Yen T'zu and some others take 寧 as—偏, 'partially,' 'what could not have been expected.' In its ordinary meaning of 'how,' it is tautological after 胡.

St 5. L. 2. 滌滌 indicates the appearance of the hills and streams, as scorched by the heat. Macou defines it in the same way as 赫赫 in last st., — 旱氣. The hills were parched, and vegetation on them withered; and the streams were dried up. Ll. 3, 4. 魃—旱神, or 旱鬼, 'the demon of drought.' Ying-tah, from 'The Book of Spirits and Prodigies,' gives the following account of him:—'In the southern regions there is a man, two or three cubits in length, with the upper part of his body bare, and his eyes in the top of his head. He runs with the speed of the wind, and is named Poh. In whatever State he appears, there ensues a great drought.' Ll. 4 is descriptive of the demon's action. 燄—燎 'to set on fire.' Ll. 5, 6. 憯—勞 'to be burdened with,' or 畏 'to fear.' 熏—'to smoke,' 'to steam.'

Ll. 7, 8. Comp. the corresponding lines of last stanza. Ll. 9, 10. 寧 is expressive of a wish. The king supposes that the calamity is owing to himself. As K'ang expands the last line, 'If I do not satisfy the mind of Heaven, it were better to let me withdraw, and give place to one more worthy. Let not the multitudes of this people thus suffer on my account.'

St. 6. In this stanza the king ventures to expostulate with God, and to complain because of the calamity that had befallen the country, which he could in no way understand. Ll. 2. He had expressed a wish that he might retire from the throne; here he says that he was afraid to do so,—best, apparently, he should thereby be leaving his post of duty. 黽勉—'I earnestly exert myself.' 急當思救故黽勉於此

Choo says that he was afraid to go, because he had nowhere to go to (出無所之). Ll. 3, 4.

胡寧—as in st. 4. 瘼—病, 'to distress.'

僭—曾,—as in II. iv. VII. 1, et al. Ll. 5, 6

must be translated in the past tense. They tell what had been the king's practice. The rule was that in the 1st month of spring he should pray to God for a blessing on the labours of the year, and in the 1st month of winter, to the Honoured ones of heaven (天宗—the sun, moon, and stars), for a blessing on the year to follow. He had not allowed the custom to go by. On l. 6, see II. vi. VII. 2. These were sacrifices of thanksgiving, and the king had not delayed to offer them. Ll. 7–10. As the king had thus eagerly discharged his religious duties, God and all spiritual Being should be pleased with him, and bless him, instead of dealing with him as they were doing. 虞—度, 'to consider; here, = to sympathize with. 悔—恨, 'to be angry with.'

St. 7. Ll. 2 is very perplexing. We ask what is the subject of 散, 'to be dispersed;' and it is difficult to tell. Choo says that 友紀 is equivalent to 紀綱 so that 無友紀—

'there is no government;' and he mentions the view of some that 友 is a misprint for 有.

This seems to me very likely. In the misery and confusion occasioned by the drought, the ordinary duties of govt. were suspended, and 'all was dispersion.' Yen Te'nn and others, after Ch'ing, try to explain the 友 in its ordinary meaning, saying that 'a ruler considers his ministers to be his friends, with whom he directs the govt. of the kingdom (相與綱紀四 方者), but now, in the exigency of the drought, all their ordinary duties were suspended.' A meaning is thus brought out, the same as Choo's, but the attempt to explain the 友 is very forced. I must prefer taking 友

for 有. Kiang would interpret 散 of 'a dispersion of the stores of grain, (指散粟賑 濟言);' and though this view derives some support from the meaning given to l. 7, I cannot adopt it in this place. Ll. 3–6. 鞫—窮, 'to translation. 周—救, 'to save,' 'to help.'

Ll. 9, 10. 仰—i. q. 仰, 'to look up to.' 云

is still the particle; 里 is defined by 憂, 'to be sorrowful,' as if it were 懼, which is so explained in the Urb-ya. It is amusing how often almost every word, about which there is any difficulty in these odes, becomes a battle-field of 瞻印昊天云。如何里。瞻印昊天。有。嘒其星。大夫。君子。昭假無。贏。大命近止。無棄爾成。何。求爲我以戾。庶正。瞻印昊。天。曷惠其寧。

- 8 'I look up to the great heaven,
But its stars sparkle bright.
My great officers and excellent men,
Ye have drawn near [to Heaven] with reverence with all your powers.

Death is approaching,
But do not cast away what you have done.
You are seeking not for me only,
But to give rest to all our departments.
I look up to the great heaven;—
When shall I be favoured with repose?

different interpretations. Kiang takes 里 in the sense of 理, and makes 1.10 — 'In what way ought I to manage 不知更當如何辦理?' You Ts'an takes it in the sense of 居, so that the line — 'What will become of the people in the fields and villages (田里之間) 將如何乎?' It seems evident that the view which I have followed is the correct one.

St. 8. The king addresses himself to his officers, and tells them that though they might seem to have done their utmost, and in vain, they must still persevere, and concludes with a final appeal to Heaven. L. 2. 嘒 occurred in L.ii. X., with reference to the stars, meaning 'small-like,' and 嘒嘒 (一有嘒) has twice occurred, onomatopoeitic of the noise made by insects and bells; but neither of these usages suits the exigency of this line. Choo therefore defines the term here by 明貌, 'bright-looking,' which may be the same, only more clearly expressed, as Maou's account of it, — 衆星貌, 'the app. of all the stars.' There was nothing in the aspect of the sky to betoken rain. L. 4 has been variously explained, but I content myself with giving the view of Choo, who takes 假 as 一格, 'to come to,' meaning that the officers 'had come to Heaven,' co-operating earnestly with the king in all the services and measures which he had taken to remove or abate the calamity. They had done this until there seemed nothing left which they could do more (無贏—無餘). Choo's words are—羣臣竭其精誠而助王以昭假於天者已無餘矣. We must give to 昭 the meaning of 'reverently,' 'sincerely.'

Ll. 5, 6. The fruitlessness so far of all that had been done might engender a feeling of despair; but the king himself struggles against that, and encourages his officers to do the same. L. 5, — as in st. 4. Ll. 7, 8 remind the officers that it was not the king's interest only which they were seeking. L. 7 — Is it that you are seeking [relief] for me only (何但求爲我之一身而已)? 戾定, 'to settle.' In ll. 9, 10 the king once more turns to Heaven, and begs its favour. 曷惠其寧—何時惠我以安寧乎, 'When will you favour me with repose?'

Ode 5. NARRATIVE. CELEBRATING THE APPOINTMENT BY KING SEUEN OF A RELATIVE TO BE THE MARQUIS OF SHIN, AND DEFENDER OF THE SOUTHERN BORDER OF THE KINGDOM, WITH THE ARRANGEMENTS MADE FOR HIS EXTERIOR ON HIS CHARGE. Seu-en is not mentioned in the ode, but there is little doubt as to his being the king intended in it. The writer of it was Yin Keih-foo, who appears in II. vii. III. as the commander of an expedition, against the tribes of the Hsien-yun, in the commencement of that monarch's reign. Then in II. viii. III. we have an account of the building of Ssai as the capital of the State, which is also a principal topic in the ode before us. We must accept the date assigned to the piece; but a more important question is whether there had been previously a State of Shin, or whether that part of the country where it lay was now for the first time colonized. None of the Chinese critics have entered seriously on a discussion of this point; but it possesses considerable interest for the inquirer who is anxious to get for himself a definite knowledge of the growth of the kingdom of China. But for the expressions in st. 6 about the chief of Shin's returning to the south, I should adopt without hesitation the view that it was now for the first time that the State of Shin was constituted. We have in this ode and II. viii. III. the building and fortifying of Ssai as the capital city, the erection even of the ancestral temple, the laying out of the country

for cultivation, and the removal of the chief's family from the royal domain to it. All these statements point to colonization. If the undertaking was not entirely of that character, it was so to a great extent. Possibly, there may have been a Shin within the limits of the royal domain, south from the capital, the lord of which had done good service, and was in close alliance with the royal House, whom the king now invested with this newly formed principality, to defend the kingdom against the encroachments of the ambitious and restless Man. This would be a better solution of the difficulty than to suppose that there had been a State of Shin, beyond the limits of the royal domain, and that what was now done was to enlarge its territory, and build a new city as its capital in a situation better adapted to the exigencies of the time. Those, however, who adopt this view place the older capital in the present dia. of Nan-yang in the dept. of the same name, Ho-nan, while Ssai was in Tang Chow, in the same dept.;—See, however, the notes on st. 6.—The movement which the ode celebrates with so much eclat did not turn out happily. King Seu-en's son, Yew, married a daughter of the House of Shin, a daughter probably of the chief mentioned here, and made her his queen. When he degraded her in consequence of his attachment to Paou Sae, her father formed an alliance with the Dog Jung, which issued in the death of Yew, and the removal of the capital to Loh. Subsequently, Shin proved but a very ineffectual barrier against the tribes that were banded together under the rule of Ts'oo, and was extinguished and absorbed by that growing state during the period of the Chun Ts'ew. I may add further here that in the history of the connection between the kings Seu-en and Yew and the House of Shin we have an illustration of how one-sided is the Chinese rule that individuals of the same surname shall not intermarry. This might seem to preclude the marriage of cousins; but it does so only in the male line. King Seuen's mother was a Kiang, and his son's wife was also a Kiang. Husband and wife must have been very closely related by consanguinity.

St. 1. Ll. 1.—4. A mountain large and high is called 崧; and the largest of such mountains again are called 嶽 (or 岳); and the Shoo opens with a 'chief of the four mountains,' as the principal minister of Yao:—see on the Shoo, I. 11. From this distant personage was descended the great family that boasted the surname of Kiang, branches of which, in the time of Chow, ruled over the States of T'ei, (齊), Hou (許), Shin (申), and Lou (呂) or Foo (甫). The four great mountains, or the Spirits presiding over them, were supposed to have a special interest in it, and hence are here said to have sent down a Spirit or Spirits which caused the birth of the princes of Shin and Foo, whom the writer of the ode had in his mind's eye. On the 3d line, 'The mountains sent down spirits,' Hwang Ch'ün (黃樞, Sung dyn.) remarks that it is merely a personification of the poet's fancy, to show how High Heaven had a mind to revive the fortunes of Chow, and that we need not trouble ourselves about whether there were such Spirits or not (惟嶽降神).

乃詩人形容之辭以見上天典周之意不必泥其有無也。

By 申 and 甫 we must understand the princes of those States. There can be no doubt that by 申 is intended the 申伯 of the ode, and as we know that 申 was a marquisate, I have translated those characters by the Chief of Shin, with reference to the authority which we must suppose was given to the marquis over the States of the south generally. Choo supposes that 甫 indicates the marquis of Lou or Foo, to whom we owe the 37th Book of the 5th Part of the Shoo,—a prince of the time of King Mu, anterior to Seuen by nearly two centuries. A contemporary of the marquis of Shin must be intended, a descendant of that previous worthy, who had rendered important service to Seuen. Very absurd is the view of Yen Ta'an, that the person intended was Chung Shan-fu, who was the chief minister to Seuen. This interpretation is traceable to a comment of Ch'ing on the Lie Ke, XXVI. 8, where the stanza is quoted. But we know from other sources that that Chung Shan-fu was not a Kiang at all,—see on the next ode.

Ll. 5—8. 翰,—as in II. vii. L. 3, et al. The 于 in II. 7, 8, and also in L. 4, st. 6, is the preposition, = 於, 'in,' 'at,' &c., the order of the characters being inverted for the sake of euphony. So says Wang Yin-che, the great Authority upon the particles: His words are—于, 於也, 常語也, 亦有於句申倒用者; and then he adduces the above three instances from this ode. 蕃,—as in II. X. 8, 'a screen.' 宜—宜其德澤,—as in the translation.

St. 2. Ll. 1—4. 亶亶,—as in I. 1. 2. Choo, indeed, says the phrase is used differently in the two places, but I cannot see the difference 纘—繼, 'to continue.' It is used here with aliquid force. The king would have him continue his services in a new sphere (王使之繼).

- 3 The king gave charge to the chief of Shin,
'Be a pattern to the regions of the south,
And by means of those people of Sëay,
Proceed to display your merit.'
The king gave charge to the earl of Shaou,
To make the statutory definition of the territory and fields of the chief of Shin.
The king gave charge to the chief's steward
To remove the members of his family to the spot.

事 refers to the services he had already rendered to the throne. I much prefer this to Choo's view of it as 'the services of his forefathers (先世之事)'. 邑 is here used in the sense of 'a capital city,' as in I X 2, and the single term—the 作邑 there. The two 于 have to be disregarded, though there is a plausibility in Ying-tah's explanation of the first by 往, 'to go to,' and the second as the preposition. 式 = 'to give a pattern to (使諸侯以爲法)'. Ch'in P'ang-fei remarks that, in this 4th line, we have the commission of the marquis to take the leadership of the southern States (命爲州牧).

LL 5-8. 召伯—see on II. viii. III. It is supposed that the earl of Shaou was minister of Works, and that on him devolved the duty of arranging the details of every new apportionment of territory. He was also, we may suppose, one of the kung at the court; but all this does not affect the translation of 伯 by 'earl'. 定宅, 'to settle the residences,' must mean to do all that was necessary to be done, as described in st. 4, for the chief of Shin's taking up his residence in Sëay. LL 7, 8 refer to what he should do when settled there. 登 is defined by 成, 'complete.' Yen Ts'an tries in vain to bring out a suitable meaning from the ordinary acceptance of the term, — 'to ascend.' L. 8 identifies him with his descendants.

St. 2. LL 1-4. LL 2-4 of last stanza. L. 3. Sëay was to be the centre of the State. The city and the country round it would be more thickly peopled than other parts; and there the chief should lay the foundations of his influence, which should thence go forth. 因 simply — 'by means of.' 作—奮起, 'to put forth vigorously,' 'to display.' 庸—功, 'merit,' or 'service.' Maou absurdly interprets the term as if it were 墉—城, 'walls.'

LL 5-8. 徹土田.—comp. 徹田, in ii. VI. 5, where duke Lew does for himself what the earl of Shaou is here told to do for Shin. The terms mean to lay out the land on the principle of mutual cultivation, so that a fixed revenue might be made sure for the chief. L. 7. By 傳御, 'master and manager,' we are to understand, probably, the steward or principal officer of the marquis's household in Haou. So Choo takes the terms;—申伯家臣之長. Then 私人, 'private men,' will be all the members of the household, the whole family, rather than 家臣, 'the officers of it,' as Maou explains the phrase. As the 'Complete Digest' expands II. 7, 8, 私人不遷無以遂燕居之樂, 王又命申伯之傳御遷其私人而室家之歡自是安矣. 'While his family was not removed to his new residence, the chief could not enjoy his domestic bliss, and the king further ordered his principal officer to convey the household to Sëay.' The only difficulty in my mind is that I do not see why the king should have given orders for this;—was it not competent for the chief himself to do so?

- 4 Of the services of the chief of Shin,
The foundation was laid by the earl of Shaou,
Who built first the walls [of his city],
And then completed his ancestral temple.
When the temple was completed, wide and grand,
The king conferred on the chief of Shin
Four noble steeds,
With their hooks for the trappings of the breast-bands, glittering bright.
- 5 The king sent away the chief of Shin,
With a carriage of state and its team of horses.
'I have consulted about your residence,
That it had best be fixed in the South.
I confer on you a great sceptre,
As the symbol of your dignity.

St. 4. Ll. 1-4 tell us how the earl of Shaou accomplished part of the charge committed to him. The critics will nearly all of them have it, that Ll. 1 relates to the chief of Shin's occupancy of Slay, so that 功 is merely 一事 'affair'; and then 營 in l. 2 is 'the building of that city.' But I must take 功 with a higher and more general meaning. The line is a prophetic description by his friend, Yin Ksh-too, of the services which the chief in his new sphere would render to Chow; and of which the foundation was laid by the earl of Shaou in fulfilling the commission given to him by the king. 俶—始 'commencement' 城—'walls' i. e., the walls of Slay. 寢廟 together, 'the ancestral temple'; as in ll. v. IV. 4.

Ll. 5-8. We are to suppose that news of the completion of Slay has been sent to the court, and the king dispatches the new marquis to his fief. 藐藐 describes the appearance of the temple as deep and solemn (深貌). 躑躑

—壯貌 'strong-looking';—comp. the same phrase in ll. X. 4. 鈎膺,—as in ll. III. IV. 1.

濯濯—光明貌 'bright-looking.' These steeds with their equipments were tokens of the royal favour, usually granted on occasions of investiture. The subject is continued in the next stanza.

St. 5. St. 2. The state-carriage here would be one adorned with ivory, as being conferred on a prince of a different surname from the royal House;—See on ll. vii. VIII. 1. The team was that described in prec. stanza. Ll. 3, 4. 圖 refers to the thought and consideration with which the king had determined on placing his relative as the chief of Shin in the South. That quarter of the kingdom required his presence and services more than any other. Ll. 5, 6. 圭 was the jade-token of rank, which the princes of States held as the emblem of their dignity, and which they carried with them when they appeared at court. I do not know that we are to find any special meaning in the adjunct of 介—大 'great,' with which the 圭 is mentioned here.

Go, my uncle,
And protect the country of the South.'

- 6 The chief of Shin took his departure,
And the king gave him a parting feast in Mei.
Then the chief of Shin returned, [and proceeded] to the south,
And found himself at last in Sëay.
The king had given charge to the earl of Shaou,
To make the statutory division of the lands,
And to lay up stores of provisions,
That the progress of the chief might be accelerated.

- 7 Martial-like, the chief of Shin
Entered into Sëay.

If it were merely the token of a marquis, it would be the 信圭; if the marquis of Shin, as chief of the South, ranked above an ordinary marquis, it may have been the 桓圭, proper to a duke;—some even say the 鎮圭, which was proper to the king himself. 寶—瑞, in the Shoo, II. i. 7, meaning 'a symbol of rank.' II. 7, 3. 近 is used here merely as a particle, —其 in the line which we have often met with, —彼其之子. 近 is probably a mistake for 近, which is an obsolete synonym of that 其;—see Wang Yin-che on 其 (read 記). 王舅, 'king's uncle,'—my uncle. We thus know that king Souen's mother must have been a Kiang, and that the chief of Shin was her brother. [The 舅 here—舅氏 in I. xi. IX., where I have inadvertently translated the terms by 'mother's nephew,' instead of 'mother's brother.' Lachurne is correct in rendering them there, as 舅 here, by 'avunculus.' Ch'ung-urh was duke Hëen's son, and not his grandson.]
St. 6. II. 1—4. I have said in the introductory note, that the 還 and 歸 here seem to point to the chief's having previously been settled in the south. A closer study of these lines, however, enables us to explain the terms without our being obliged to draw such a conclusion from them. The king gave a parting feast to the chief in Mei, the name of which still remains in one of the districts, dep. Fung-ts'ang. It lay west from the capital Haou, and as Ying-t'ah observes, 'The way from Haou to Shin did not lie through Mei. The king was then on a visit of inspection to K'ue-chow, and so it was that he gave his charge and the parting-feast to the chief in Mei, who immediately after returned to Haou (還歸於鎬), and thence proceeded to Shin.' Thus the 還南 does not refer to the chief of Shin's having been formerly in the south; and 歸 need not have any more meaning than I have given it in the translation. 邁—行, 'to go,' 'to proceed.' 信 and 誠 intimate that the king had detained him once and again (以見王之數留疑於行之不果故也). 餞—see in I. iii. XIV.

II. 5—8. When the chief was once on the way, there was nothing to detain him, as all previous preparations had been made for his journey. I. 6,—as I. 6 of st. 3. 峙—積, or 聚, 'to accumulate,' or 'store up.' 糗—糧, 'provisions.' 式 is the initial particle. 邁—速, 'to hasten.'

His footmen and charioteers were numerous,
And throughout the regions of Chow all rejoiced.
'You have got a good support:—
Very distinguished is the chief of Shin,
The great uncle of the king,
The pattern of the officers, both civil and military.'

- 8 The virtue of the chief of Shin
Is mild, and regulated, and upright.
He will keep all these countries in order,
And be famed throughout the kingdom.
[1], Keih-foo, made this song
An ode of great excellence,
Of influence good,
To present to the chief of Shin.

St. 7. Ll. 1-4. 番番—武勇貌 'martial-looking,'—compare the same characters in the Shoo, V. xxx. 5, where K'ung Gan-kwub would interpret them in the same way. 嘽 嘽,—as in II. iii. IV. 4. 周邦 'the regions of Chow,'—周人, 'the people of Chow.' In II. 5-8 we have the people of Chow congratulating one another—with little cause, as it turned out—on the security which they might now
feel with regard to their southern borders.
戎—汝, 'you,'—as in II. IX. 4. 不顯—as in I. I. 1, et al. 憲—法, 'to afford a pattern to.' Some take the term as—'to take a pattern from,' as if the line—'Taking the kings Wan and Woo as his pattern,' but this does not suit the connection so well.

St. 8. The author of the ode gives expression to his appreciation of his friend, and his hopes of his doing great things in the south. He shows also that he had a sufficiently good opinion of his own composition. Ll. 1-4. 惠

—順, as in III. 8, et al., meaning that the chief's virtue was regulated, so as to be in accordance with reason and principle. 'It contained,' says Yen Ts'an, 'the elements of mild docility, and stout straight-forwardness, the union of which is necessary to make virtue complete.' Choo explains 揉 by 治, and 順 by 順—'to rule,' 'to keep in obedience.' The dict. gives the character with this meaning in the 1st tone.
The 2d tone gives a better meaning,—'to make
what is crooked straight' Ll. 5-8. 誦—in II. iv. VII. 10; with reference to the piece as intended to be sung. Choo defines 風 by 聲,
'sound,' or 'notes.' I must think the meaning of the term here is 'influence.' 'It was sufficient,' says Yen Ts'an, 'to affect and move the good in men's hearts.'

Ode 6. Narrative. CELEBRATING THE VIRTUES OF CHUNG SHAN-FOO, WHO APPEARS TO HAVE BEEN THE PRINCIPAL MINISTER OF KING SEUEN, AND HIS DESPATCH TO THE EAST, TO FORSIEGE THE CAPITAL OF THE STATE OF TS'U. Like the preceding ode, this was also made by Yü Keih-foo, to present to his friend on his departure from the court.

St. 1. Ll. 1-4 would in themselves be difficult to interpret, but we get an idea of the meaning, which has been attached to them from a very early time, by Mencius' quotation of them in support of his doctrine of the goodness of human nature, and the remarks on them which he attributes to Confucius;—see Mencius, V. Pt. I.

VI. 8. 烝—衆, 'all'; and 烝民, 'all the people,'—mankind generally. 有物有則,

—'there are things, and there are their laws (則—法).' But the 'things' must be understood of what belongs to the human constitution; and the critics interpret the term most generally, with reference to all man's bodily faculties and all the relationships of society. Every faculty has its function to fulfil, and every relationship its duty to discharge. The function and the duty are the laws which the human being has to observe;—the seeing clearly, for instance, with the eyes, and hearing distinctly with the ears; the maintenance of righteousness between ruler and minister, and of affection between parent and child. This is the normal nature called 彝 in 1.3, and elsewhere denominated 常性 and 恆性 秉.

I think, must = 'to be endowed with.' In 1.4 the 'admirable virtue' is the nature fulfilling the various laws of its constitution. The student may find the following sentences of Chin Tih-süw interesting:—則者, 準則之謂, 一定而不可易也. 彝而言秉者, 渾然一理, 具於吾心, 不可移奪, 若秉執然, 爲其有此, 故於美德無不知好, 之者, 仁義忠孝, 所謂美德也, 人無賢愚, 莫不好之也.

Ll. 5-8. 監—視, 'to see.' 有周—the ruler of Chow, the same as 'the Son of Heaven' in 1.7. 昭假于下.—昭假, as in IV. 8, 1. 4, denoting the effect of king Seuen's character and conduct of his govt. on Heaven, their immediate effect being 'below,' on the multitudes of the people. Thus the line—明明

在下, 赫赫在上, in 1. IL 1. As Choo Kung-ta'ien says, 明德在下, 而感格于天. The connection between these lines, and those that precede seems to be this,—that Heaven produces all men with the good nature there described; but on occasions it produces others with virtue and powers peculiar to themselves. Such an occasion was presented by the case of king Seuen, and therefore, to mark its appreciation of him, and for his help, it now produced Chung Shan-foo. So, the critics generally. As Wang Chih (王質; Sung dyn.)

- 2 The virtue of Chung Shan-foo
Is mild and admirable, according as it ought to be.
Good is his deportment; good his looks;
The lessons of antiquity are his law;
He is strenuously attentive to his deportment.
In full accord with the Son of Heaven,
He is employed to spread abroad his bright decrees.
- 3 The king gave charge to Chung Shan-foo:—
'Be a pattern to all the princes;
Continue [the services of] your ancestors.
You have to protect the royal person;

says, 民之秉彝好德蓋其常稟然天有特爲時而生者則與常稟不同所謂出乎其類拔乎其萃者 To the same effect Yen Ts'an:—天眷宜王爲生賢佐也. As to the personage, whose birth is thus specially ascribed to Heaven, both Maou and Choo say that the three characters 仲山甫 were his designation. This does not seem quite accurate. He was a descendant of king T'ae, styled Yu-chung (虞仲), whom king Seuen, because of his merits appointed marquis of Fan (樊侯), when he adopted 仲 as his 氏 or clan name. His surname of course was Ke (姬); and Shan-foo was his designation. After a time, the State of Fan lapsed again to Chow, and another family received it as its appanage, taking the surname of Fan. Such is the account given, after much research, by Wang Tsou. The dict. appears to be wrong in saying that Fan became the surname of Shan-foo's descendants.

St. 2.—the virtue of Chung Shan-foo. L. 2. 維則 is to be referred back to 有則 in the last stanza. His virtue mild and admirable, was according to the law for it;—we might translate—was normal. As Leu says, 'If the mildness had gone beyond that standard, it would have been weakness.' L. 3. We must construe 法, 'to take as the law,' 'to imitate.' L. 6. 力 is used as a verb, = 勉, 'to be strenuous with.' L. 7. 若 = 順, 'to be in accordance with.' King and minister were drawn together by a mutual sympathy and a common aim. L. 8. 明命, 'the brilliant orders,' belong to the king. 賦 = 布, 'to spread abroad,' meaning to make known, and carry into execution.

St. 3. L. 1. When the king gave the charge to Shan-foo, which is contained in ll. 2–3, we cannot tell. I apprehend it is merely the writer's way of indicating the important functions with which his hero was entrusted. L. 2. 式—'to give law, be a pattern, to.' 百辟—all the princes of the States. From this line it is inferred that Shan-foo was king Seuen's chief minister (冢宰總領諸侯). L. 3. 戎—汝, 'you'—as in st. 7. of prec. ode. From l. 4. it is inferred that with the office of chief minister Shan-foo united that of Grand-guardian (大保), which latter Choo thinks may have been hereditary in his family. L. 5.

- 4 Most dignified was the king's charge,
And Chung Shan-foo carries it into execution.
In the States, the princes, be they good or bad,
Are clearly distinguished by Chung Shan-foo.
Intelligent is he and wise,
Protecting his own person;
Never idle, day or night,
In the service of the One man.

- 5 The people have a saying:—
'The soft is devoured,
And the hard is ejected from the mouth.'
But Chung Shan-foo

is understood as in the translation. 王命—明命 of last st.; 出 is to receive the king's decrees and send them forth (承而布之); 納 is to report again to the king on the progress and effects of these (行而復之). L. 1.
'Throat and tongue'—mouth-piece. L. 2. 發—起而應之, 'to rise and respond to.' 爰 —hereon. The king expresses the issue, as if it were already an accomplished fact.

St. 4. Ll. 1, 2. 肅肅—嚴, 'grave,' 'dignified.'
將—奉行, 'to carry into execution.'
Ll. 3, 4. 若—順, 'obedient.' 若否—臧

否, 'good or bad.' By the 'States' we are to understand the princes of them. 明—辨而 明之, 'to distinguish clearly.' Ll. 5—8. 明 and 哲 are distinguished as the quality of wisdom (哲) and the manifestation of it (明 者哲之發, 哲者明之實).

St. 5. The virtue of Shan-foo is here shown to have nothing feeble in its mildness, but to be equally characterized by gentleness and firmness.
People generally eat readily what is soft, and cast out of their mouths what is hard for the teeth; and so a bad minister will oppress those who cannot resist, and keep away from those whom it would be dangerous to meddle with.

- 6 The people have a saying:—

 But few are able to lift it.'
 When I think of the matter,
 It is only Chung Shan-foo that can lift it.
 I love him, but can do nothing to help him.
 Any defects in the king's duties
 Are supplied by Chung Shan-foo.
- 7 Chung Shan-foo went forth, having sacrificed to the Spirit of the road.
 His four steeds were strong;

But it was not so with Shan-foo. 茹 = 食.
 'to eat.' Choo explains it by 納 'to receive.'
 'to take in,' which hardly seems necessary. 矜.

 and widows are mentioned merely as specimens
 of the helpless classes, which might be safely
 insulted, but which Shan-foo did not insult.
 彊禦—as in I. 2, 3.

St. 6. Keib-foo exalts here to the utmost the virtue of his friend. Ll. 2, 3. Virtue ought to be light and easy of practice, as it is that for which man was made; but alas! few people are actually virtuous. This is a common saying of those times attested. 輶—輕 'to be light.'
 Ll. 3.—5. 儀—度, 'to estimate,' 'to calculate.' It is much better to take the term thus,
 than to try to keep the meaning of 匹, 'mate,'

'comrade,' which 儀 sometimes has. Ching did so; and Yen Ts'an, after him, says, 'I examine,
 and among my comrades there is none but Chung Shan-foo who can lift up the hair of virtue.'
 Ll. 3 says that he would be glad to help Shan-foo, but his virtue was complete without any help. Ll. 7, 8. 哀—see on I. xv. VI. 1. By 哀職 we must understand 'the duties of the king,' i.e., of him who wore the 哀 dress.

We come at last, in st. 7, to the occasion on which the ode was made, the despatch of Chung Shan-foo by the king to fortify the principal city of T'ê. We must suppose that the city was the capital of T'ê, for if it had been any other,
 it would have been mentioned more particularly.
 We have, however, no record in history of the transaction. In the 20th year of king Lo, B.C. 558, duke Hsien of T'ê moved his capital to Lin-tze (臨淄); but we can hardly suppose that it

object of his mission. L. 5,—as in VI. 8. L. 6.
It is difficult to translate the 穆, which Choo defines by 深長, 'deep and long.' Evidently it is intended to characterize the influence which the ode should have on Shan-foo, like that of a clear and quiet wind on external nature.

Ode 7. NARRATIVE. CELEBRATING THE MAR-QUIS OF HAN—HIS INVESTITURE, AND THE KING'S CHARGE TO HIM; THE GIFTS HE RE-CEIVED, AND THE FARMING FRUIT; HIS MAR-RIAGE; THE EXCELLENCE OF HIS TERRITORY; AND HIS SWAY OVER THE REGIONS OF THE NORTH. The ode is referred by the Preface to the time of king Seuen, which is not controverted by any of the critics, and the authorship to Yü Keih-foo, but this point is not so clear. The ode itself does not say it, nor is there any authority for it independent of the statement in the Preface. The Han which is spoken of was a marquise, held by Kex, sprung from one of the sons of king Woo. After the time of king Seuen, it was extinguished by the State of Tsin, and assigned to one of the ministers of that growing dominion, who took the clan-name of Han. It subsequently, on the breaking up of Tsin, after the Ch'un T'w period, became one of the seven great States into which the kingdom was divided,—of much larger dimensions than the original marquise of Han.

St. 1. Ll. 1, 2. 'Mount Lêng,'—see on the Shoo, III. 1. Pt. 1. 4. It was considered the 'guardian hill' of Han (韓之鎮). 奕奕

is defined by 大, 'great,' but Wang Taou remarks that the reduplication of 奕 here is not to be taken as setting forth the great size of the mountain, but as a dignifying description of it (美大之詞). I think he is correct, and have translated accordingly. 甸—治.

'to regulate.' 治 is the term, in the passage of the Shoo referred to, applied to Yu's dealing with mount Lêng, whatever that was, when the inundation of the Ho was remedied, and the country around made capable of cultivation.

Ll. 3, 4. The most natural interpretation of these lines is that the prince of Han, after the death of his father, came by the regular route
 of communication, which was in good condition,
 to the capital, to receive the king's confirmation of his succession. Maou, however, refers the 道, to the method of king Seuen's administration, brilliantly reformed from the disorder which marked the reign of his father; and 命 he understands of the prince's appointment
 to be chief of the regions of the north (侯伯).
 To this I cannot agree.

Ll. 5—12. Contain the king's charge to the new marquis. Ll. 7. 朕 is the royal 'we' or
 'our.' 命 is the appointment of the prince,
 and all which was implied in it. 無廢—'do not neglect,' 'do not allow to come to nought.'

L. 9. 共—供, 'to discharge'; 虔—敬, 'reverently.' 爾位, 'your position,'—爾職, 'your duties'; i. e., the duties of your position.' L. 10. 易—改, 'to change.' L. 11. Maou takes 庭—直, 'straight,'—as in II. vi. VIII. 1. But 不庭 is in the Tso-chuen a denomination of States whose princes did not, as was their duty, present themselves on the regular occasions in the king's court. The new marquis was to prove himself a support of the throne against such leaders of insubordination. This gives 幹 a pregnant signification, —作楨幹而正之. Choo defines it here simply by 正, 'to correct.' L. 12. The king indicates himself by 辟, here—'sovereign.'

St. 2. Ll. 1—5 belong to the marquis's presenting himself at court. Ll. 1—2. 奕奕—much as in st. 1, denoting the splendid app. of his horses. 修—長, 'long'; 張—大, 'large.' Ll. 3, 4. 觀—見, 'to appear before';—it is the term appropriate to the feudal princes appearing before the king. The 介圭 is here the sceptre belonging to the marquises of

Han,—granted originally by the king; and the prince now brought it with him, that it might be verified at the court, and so vindicate his claim to succeed to the State.

Ll. 6—12 give an enumeration of gifts conferred by the king. The critics say they are mentioned in detail, because the occasion was extraordinary, and king Seuen would show how well he knew to reward loyal duty. L. 7. 旂—as in II. i. VIII. 3, et al. 淑—善, 'good'; but we must take the term here as—'splendid.' So Ch'ing (旂之善色者). By 綏 (in dict. read sy) 章 we are to understand the pennon or signal, carried at the top of the staff to which the banner was attached, made of dyed feathers or of ox-tails, as a piece of blazonry (以爲表章), and somehow indicative of the rank of him who used it. L. 8. 簞第—as in II. III. IV. 1; 錯衡—Et. st. 2. L. 9. 玄袞—as in II. vii. VIII. 1. 赤舄—as in I. xv. XII. 1. L. 10. 鈎膺—as in V. 4. 'An ornament on the forehead of the horse was called gyng (馬眉上飾曰鈎). L. 11. 鞞鞞—the kyō was a cross-board fixed in the carriage, against which the parties in it might lean, and for the sake of greater strength it was bound with leather (橫木可憑者以鞞鞞持之使牢固). 淺 is taken for 虎皮, 'a tiger's skin,' so called from the shortness of the hair. This was laid over the leaning board to cover it (幘). L. 12. 鞞革—as in II. IX. 4. The 金厄 were metal rings, with which these ends of the reins were fitted and ornamented.

St. 3. L. 1. 出 refers to the new marquis's leaving the capital, on his return to Han. 祖—as in VI. 7. L. 2. 屠 must be the name of some place not far from the capital, where the marquis halted,—no doubt, in expectation of the parting feast. L. 3. 餞—as in V. 8. Hsien-foo must have been some noble and high minister, delegated by the king to preside at the parting-feast. Some erroneously suppose that it was given as by himself (奉王命也).

sprouts, are well known as a vegetable; but I cannot tell what the poa were. In the Chow

Le, however, I. r. 61, we find them mentioned

as one of the staple articles for the vegetable dishes, under the name of 深蒲, which Biot

has translated by 'des pieds de jonc pris au fond de l'eau.' L. 10. The carriage would be one of

- 4 The marquis of Han took to himself a wife,—
A niece of king Fun,
The daughter of Kwei-foo.
The marquis of Han went to receive her,
To the residence of Kwei.

The eight bells of each emitting their tinkling;—

Leisurely like a beautiful cloud.
The marquis of Han looked round at them,
Filling the gate with their splendour.

other princes who were at court at the time (觀禮諸侯來朝者之稱) I prefer to take 胥 as the final particle, instead of 一相, with 燕胥 for 相胥 on account of the rhyme. Choo mentions both constructions, himself preferring the latter. I think he would also restrict 侯氏 to the marquis of Han, though he explains the phrase as has been done above. The view in the translation however, is quite legitimate. K'ang-shing says, 諸侯在京師未去者於顯父饒豆之時皆來相與燕其籩豆且然榮其多也.

St. 4. The marriage of the young prince. To this the marquis seems to have proceeded immediately after his return to Han. It was the rule, indeed, that marriage should follow immediately that a feudal prince had concluded the mourning for his father, and had received the royal sanction to his accession. L. 2. By king Fun we are to understand king Le, who was so styled from the river Fun, which was near Che where he lived so long after he was driven from the throne. One of Le's sisters must have been married to the father of the lady, so that she was his 甥 or niece. Kwei-foo was probably the designation of the father of the lady; or, as Ying-tah says, Kwei may have been his clan name, and Foo the designation. That he was a minister of the court of Chow is inferred from L. 2 of next stanza. Had he been one of the feudal princes, his State would have been mentioned. His surname, it appears also from next st., was K'ath,—the surname, acc. to tradition, of one of the sons of Hwang-te. L. 4—5. 迎 intimates that the marquis went in person to meet his bride. 止 is the final particle. 里—居, 'the place of residence.' This was probably the city assigned to Kwei-foo, and would not be far from the capital (必在王城外; Ho K'ang). L. 6, 7. 百兩—as in L. II. 1; 彭彭—as in L. VIII. X. 3. L. 7,—as in VII. 7. L. 8,—as in L. II. 3. L. 9, 10. 諸娣—'all the younger sisters.' The bride was accompanied by a younger sister and a cousin:—virgins from the harem of her father. Then two Houses of the same surname sent, each, a young lady with similar suite, to accompany her; so that a feudal prince was said to marry nine ladies at once (諸侯一娶九女). All these must be included in the 諸女, and might well be said to look like a cloud. Maou defines 祁祁 by 徐靚, 'leisurely and adorned.' The marquis might well look round and admire.

- 5 Kwei-foo is very martial,
 And there is no State which he had not visited.
 When he would select a home for Han-k'eh,
 There seemed none so pleasant as Han.
 Very pleasant is the territory of Han,
 With its large streams and meres,
 Full of big bream and tench;
 With its multitudes of deer,
 With its bears and grisly bears;
 With its wild-cats and tigers.

 And here Han-k'eh found rest and joy.

St. 5. Ll. 1-4. I have referred, on the last stanza, to the evidence these lines supply that Kwei-foo was a high minister of the court, who had been employed on many missions to the different States. He had, evidently, and very properly, taken the opportunity to look out for a good match for his daughter; and Ying-tah is troubled, unnecessarily, to defend him against a charge of violating the established rule that the family or friends of the gentleman must take the initiative. 韓姑 is the daughter,—a K'eh originally, and then distinguished from all other K'ehs as the wife of the prince of Han.

Ll. 5-10 are descriptive of the pleasantness of Han. 訐訐 and 甫甫 set forth the large size of the rivers and marshes, and of their many inhabitants. 麋鹿,—see i. VIII. 2; but evidently they give us the idea in this place of 'deer generally.' 嘖嘖—衆, 'to be in multitudes.' 貓, 'a cat,' is here—a wild-cat. 'It seems strange,' says Pan Ch'oo-s (范處義; Sung dyn.), 'that these wild creatures should be mentioned in proof of the pleasantness of the country; but they came into the mind of the poet, and their existence in such numbers showed how the country abounded in woods. Moreover, the skins of the bears could be worn, and their flesh would afford good eating; while the wild cats would destroy the vermin, and the tigers the wild bears which preyed upon the felds!' Ll. 1 has for its subject Kwei-foo. 慶

(=喜) 既—既慶, the inversion being more euphonious. Ll. 12. 燕—安, and 譽—樂,—as in the translation.

St. 6. Ll. 1, 2. 溥—大, 'to be large.' Yen was the State to which Shih, the duke K'ang of Shao, was appointed; and it would appear that he had been entrusted with the charge to build and fortify the capital of the principality of Han, just as we have seen his descendant appointed by king Seuen to do the same duty for the new State of Shin. LI. 3. 4. 先祖 will be the first marquis of Han, who received charge not only for the rule of that State, but to be president of the wild tribes beyond it. These are called 'the hundred Man,' as being in the Man domain (see the note on the Shoo, III. 1. Pt. II. 22). The 時=是, seems to be 'certain,' referring to the tribes which more particularly required attention and management in the early time. We are puzzled with the 因, which Ying-tah has endeavoured, successfully it seems to me, to account for, as meaning—'to go on to, i.e., to go on from Han to regulate those tribes. The 以 'on the ground of,' is to be carried on to l. 5 and those that follow. L. 6. The Chuy, of whom there is no previous mention in any record, and the Mih must have been two tribes, which were now giving trouble. L. 7. 奄 may here be translated 'forthwith.' By 北國 I must understand the wild tribes of the north, called 'States' by courtesy. L. 8. 因—as in l. 4. LI. 9, 10. The 實—as in II. 1. 5, where see the remark of Kēang Ping-chang upon the term. The walls, moats (壑—城池), fields, and revenues, are those of Han, though I should like to think it was part of the duty of the marquis to promote the civilization of the wild tribes. 畝—治其田畝 'to manage his fields.' 籍—正賦稅, 'to adjust his revenues,' meaning that he should attend to the cultivation of the country on the Chow system of mutual aid. LI. 11, 12. 貔 is given in the Urh-ya as 白狐, 'a white fox.' Other authorities make it a kind of tiger or leopard; some, the white or polar bear. The 皮 must be carried on to l. 12. 豹 is a kind of leopard or panther;—see LI. XIV. 1. et al. 展—as in II. IV. V. 3. 3. The author of the Japanese plates says he does not know either of these animals.

Ode 8. NARRATIVE. CELEBRATING AN EXPEDITION AGAINST THE MORE SOUTHERN TRIBES OF THE HWAE, AND THE WORK DONE FOR THE KING IN THEIR COUNTRY, BY HOO, THE EARL OF SHAOU, WITH THE MANNER IN WHICH THE KING REWARDED HIM AND HE RESPONDED TO THE ROYAL FAVOUR. This is another of the odes of King Seuen's time, and the expedition celebrated in it is assigned in the common chronology to the second year of his reign, B. C. 525 (or, counting A. D. as 1, 526). The Preface attributes its composition, as in the case of the prec. ode, to Yin Keih-foo; but the internal evidence of the piece is sufficient to discredit such an authorship. The 我 in st. 1 shows that it was written by some one—one of the officers—in the expedition; and the date of the composition is to be placed at the time indicated in the second stanza, when the army had returned in triumph to the junction of the Kiang and the Han. The earl of Shaoou, who commanded in it is the same whose services at the formation of the State of Shin are commemorated in ode 5.

St. 1. Ll. 1, 2. The mention of the Kiang and the Han together indicates to us their point of junction at the present Han-k'ow;—see on the Shoo, III. 1. Pt. II. 8, 9, et al. The troops had marched thither from the north, and then pursued their course along the united stream, thus placing themselves on the south of the tribes about the Hwae. It is remarked that they could safely take that decided course, because the tribes of King Chow had previously been reduced to order, as related in II. III. IV. 浮浮, describes 'the appearance of the vast volume of the rivers (水盛貌)'. 武夫 is to be taken of the troops of the expedition generally,—all 'warriors'. 涓涓,—as in I. viii. X. 4. Ll. 3, 4. 安,—to rest, to take the thing easily; 遊,—to wander, to march in a sauntering manner. 來

here and throughout the ode,—是. So, Wang Yin-che. This view of the character makes the construction simple and easy. The statement that the troops were come to seek the enemy strikingly sets forth their ardour. Ll. 5, 6. See II. I. VIII. 2. Ll. 7, 8. 舒—寬舒, 'to be remiss'. 鋪—陳, 'to marshal, or to be in array.' The Hwae,—see on the Shoo, III. 1. Pt. II. 11.

St. 2. The expedition had been entirely successful, and we must suppose that the army was now returned to the junction of the Kiang and the Han, and was halting till an answer should be received from the king to the announcement of the success which had been made. Ll. 1, 2. 湯湯,—as in I. viii. X. 3. 洸洸—武貌 'martial-looking'. Ll. 3, 4 must be translated in the past-completing tense. Ll. 3, 4. The king had given charge to Hoo of Shaou:—
'Open up the whole of the country;

it to order, we had done all that could be done for it. 成一 'success,' the accomplishment of all that had been intended. LI. 3, 6. 四方

—as in I. 2. 王國 must be taken, I think, of the royal State, the king's domain. 庶 is defined by 幸. It expresses an auspice very confidently. In I. 7 the writer perhaps expresses himself too strongly, as if, with the pacification
of the Hwae tribes, there was an end of strife
and confusion throughout the kingdom (其時 靡有叛戾乘爭者). 載 is the particle. Yen T'uan draws a conclusion from this stanza, which can hardly command our assent, that the enemy had submitted without fighting (淮夷望風而服. 不待戰).

St. 3, it seems to me, must be taken as retrospective. The king's charge in it is not in reply to the announcement of success, but that which had been sent to the general, when the army had reached the junction of the rivers on its forward march. If we do not take it thus, we must suppose that the earl of Shaou had again
to return to the country which he had subdued;
—of which there is no intimation. We had to take the second stanza of the story of duke Lēu
in the same retrospective way. LI. 1, 2. 藩—

as in I. vi. VII. 1. 虎 was the name of the earl of Shaou; more commonly known by the honorary title given to him, after his death, of duke Muh

(穆公). We are not to think that the king came in person and gave the charge; but that he sent it (非謂宣王臨江漢之地而命 之; Ch'in P'ang-fei). We see from it that the king's object was not so much the subjection of the wild tribes, as the permanent order and settlement of the country. L. 3. 辟—as in I. VII. 2. L. 4.—comp. I. 6 in V. 3. By the 我 the king asserts it as belonging to himself. The territory had not been assigned to any feo-dal prince, and he was willing, probably, that the aborigines should continue to occupy it, if they would only acknowledge his authority, and observe his regulations. LI. 5, 6. The earl was to execute his charge wisely, and with due consideration for the now submissive people. 王

國,—as in proa. stanza. 極 is here defined by 中 and 中之表, 'that which is exactly in the centre,' 'that which will serve as a standard rule.' Such rule the royal lands would afford. L. 6.—comp. I. 3 in I. III. 4. 于 can be regarded no more than 乃 there. The only difference in the lines is that here we must use the imperative, instead of the indicative. There is no necessity to take 于—往 as K'ang does.

'The southern sea' indicates the sea about the mouth of the Kēang and north of it to the Hwan.
We have a memorable note of the idea of the geography of his kingdom possessed by king Seuen.

- 4 The king gave charge to Hoo of Shaou:—
'You have everywhere diffused [and carried out my orders].
When Wan and Woo received their appointment,
The duke of Shaou was their strong support.
You do not [only] have a regard to me the little child,
But you try to resemble that duke of Shaou.
You have commenced and earnestly displayed your merit;
And I will make you happy.
- 5 'I give you a large libation-cup of jade,
And a jar of herb-flavoured spirits from the black millet.
I have made announcement to the accomplished one,
And confer on you hills, lands, and fields.
In [K'e]-chow shall you receive investiture,

Hoo bowed with his head to the ground, [and said].
'May the Son of Heaven live for ever!'

In att. 4, 5 we seem to have the reply of the king to the announcement of success. I cannot agree with K'ang in regarding st. 4 as merely a continuation of the charge in st. 3 (與上章 皆一時事). Even he and the others who take the same view are obliged to find in st. 5 the reward conferred on the victorious leader; but these two stanzas are connected together. The 王命 of l. 1 in 4 extends to l. 5 in 5. The 命 may be used with reference to any royal communication. In st. 4, the second and other lines, on the view of the whole which I adopt, must be taken indicatively. 旬, — as the founder of the House, who was one of their principal supporters. 翰—幹, as in II. vii.

l. 3, et al. II. 5, 6 are intended to depreciate the king himself and exalt the earl. The king was not to be compared with Wan and Woo, but Hoo was a true descendant of Shih. II. 7, 8.

ed man' is understood to indicate king Wan, which is probable from what is said in 1.5, that the earl should be invested with his new possessions in Chow, or the old territory of K'-chow, in the same manner (自—從) as his great ancestor had originally received investiture. Duke K'ang received the principality of Yen, but a branch of the family continued in the royal domain, holding the appanage of Shaou; and it is some increase of this which is promised to Hoo. LL 7, 8 tell us how the earl received the communication from the king.

St. 6 contains at greater length the manner in which the earl responded to the king's favour; but it is not likely that LL 4—5 were spoken at the same time as the last line of st. 5. Rather I should suppose they should be referred to the time of his being invested with the additional territory. L. 2 對—答 'in response to'; 揚—稱 'to declare, 'to celebrate'; 休—美 'excellent,' without saying what. L. 3 is very enigmatic, and has been construed in very different ways. The view in the translation is that of Yen Ts'an, of which K'ang Ping-chang approves. 考—成 meaning the merit which duke K'ang had achieved in the service of the kingdom; and Hoo now roused himself to similar duty (功之成者爲考也, 作者振起也, 公言虎以孫繼祖敢不奮勉以振起召公之成功而不致傾頽). Choo takes the line as meaning that the duke made some vessel to be used in sacrificing to duke K'ang, and engraved on it this stanza, 以考其成 (these 4 characters I cannot make sense of). He then adduces the inscription on an ancient sacrificial vessel of the time of the Chow dynasty, modelled, apparently, from this stanza; but it is not sufficient to justify his construction of the line. LL 4—5. The critics all unite in praising the earl for advising the king to display (矢—陳) the 'civil virtues' rather than military prowess. 洽— 'to instil into,' 'to imbue.'

Ode 9. NARRATIVE. CELEBRATING AN EXPEDITION OF KING SEUEN AGAINST THE MORE NORTHERN TRIBES OF THE HWAE—ITS IMPOSING PROGRESS AND COMPLETE SUCCESS. The Preface ascribes the composition of the piece to duke Muh of Shao, the earl Hoo of the preceding ode, whether correctly or not we cannot tell. The title—Chang woo, 'always martial'—has occasioned much speculation, as it is not taken, as is the case with the titles generally, from any line of the piece. It may be, as T'wan Ch'ang-woo says, that this circumstance shows that the title possesses a peculiar significance; but the attempts to discover it have been unsuccessful. According to the Chinese canon, 關之可也.

St. 1. The appointment of a commander-in-chief. The king accompanied, we shall find, the expedition in person, but he wisely entrusted the actual command of the armies to an officer of experience. L. 1 is appropriate to the orders of the king, it being considered necessary that anything emanating from him should be described in grand terms. L. 2 卿士—'minister,' with reference, I think, to the office of Grand-master, which, it appears from l. 4, was held by Hwang-foo, who was now appointed commander-in-chief. He was a descendant, we are told in l. 3, of Nan Chung, the same who is celebrated in II. l. VIII, as having done good service to the State against the Hsien-yun, in the time of King Wan. A minister, styled also Hwang-foo, is mentioned in II. iv. IX, as a very bold and dangerous man in the time of Yew, Seuen's son and successor. Both character and years forbid us identifying him with the worthy in the text; but he may have been his son. Ll. 5—8 contain the charge proper given to the general, though some critics also include in it

ll. 3, 4. 六師, see on I. IV. 3. King Seuen would take the field with all his forces. The 以 in l. 6 can only have the force of 'and.' 戎 一兵器, 'military weapons,'—all the apparatus of war. Ll. 7, 8. The States of the South are all those in the province of Seu which were harassed and disturbed by the movements of the wild tribes that necessitated the expedition. It was to be conducted specially with a view to their relief and comfort. We can hardly do other than translate l. 7 in the imperative mood, though 既 is the sign of the past tense. The command is in the substance of the lines rather than in the form of them. As Ying-tah expands them, 師嚴器備當恭敬臨之, 又當戒懼而處之, 施仁愛之心於此南方淮浦之旁國, 勿得暴掠爲民之害也.

St. 2. The charge to the minister of War. Ll.

1, 2. 尹氏, —The Yin, or the Head of the Yin clan. This is Yin K'ih-foo, author of several pieces in this Book, and whose own military services against the Hsien-yun are commemorated in II. li. III. He appears here as the 內史, 'Recorder of the Interior,' or secretary to the king, and transmits his orders to Hëw-foo, earl of Ch'ing, a district in the

- 3 Full of grandeur and strength,
The Son of Heaven looked majestic.
Leisurely and calmly the king advanced,

royal domain, near to Fung, who was Senen's minister of War (司馬), and would act in the expedition under Hwang-foo, as second in command. I. 3 陳行, 'to marshal the ranks.' 左右, 'on the left, on the right.' Hwang-foo would assign to the diff. divisions of the forces their several places, and see that they were all in good order. L. 4 師旅—as in II. iii. IV. 2, 1. 9. The line here, indeed, is equivalent to that line there. 戒—誓告, 'to address in the way of admonition.' The substance of the address would be to enforce what is said in II. 5—8. 率—循, 'to march along.' 淮浦, 'the banks of the Hwai (浦—濱).' Along these would be the seat of the war; and on the northern bank of the river, the tribes on the south of it having been dealt with in the expedition celebrated in the proc. ode. L. 6 省—視或察, 'to see,' or 'to examine.' The king was confident of success. It would take little more than the presence of his armies to secure the re-establishment of order. L. 7 留 is explained as 宿兵以鎮之, 'stationing troops in the country to overawe it,' and 處 as 遷延不還, 'moving about and protracting

the time without returning.' Choo says he does not understand what the 'three businesses' in I. 8 are, but mentions the view which I have given in the translation (三農之事) 就緒—'to go on as in a thread.' It was expected that on the plan which was proposed the labours of spring, summer, and autumn might go on without interruption notwithstanding the presence of the armies.

St. 3. The majestic advance of the king, and was inspired by it. Ll. 1, 2. Choo defines 赫赫 by 顯, 'distinguished,' and 業業 by 大, 'great,' or 'grand.' 嚴—威, 'awful dignity.' Ll. 2, 4. Choo does not understand I. 3, but he mentions Maou's definitions of the terms, which I have followed. 舒—徐, 'leisurely'; 保—安, 'calmly'; 作—行, 'to march' (So, Ch'ing). By 王 we must understand the king and his forces. 紹—糾緊, 'tied together'; i.e., in masses. 遊—'wandering about,' i.e., in broken lines. The advance was in perfect order. Ll. 5—8. 繹—連絡, 'in continued and uninterrupted succession.' 騷, 'to be moved and agitated.' L. 7. 震驚—'to shake with terror.' L. 7,—as in IV. 8.

- 4 The king aroused his warlike energy,
 As if he were moved with anger.
 He advanced his tiger-like officers,
 Looking fierce like raging tigers.
 He displayed his masses along the bank of the Hwae,
 And forthwith seized a crowd of captives.
 Securely kept was the country about the bank of the Hwae,
 Occupied by the royal armies.
- 5 The royal legions were numerous;
 [Swift] as if they flew on wings,
 [Imposing] as the current of the Kēang and the Han;
 Firm as a mountain;
 Rolling on like a stream;
 Continuous and orderly;
 Inscrutable, invincible;
 Grandly proceeding to set in order the States of Seu.

St. 4. The whole region of Seu was moved and awed by the invading force. This st. tells us how any resistance that was offered was dealt with. L. 2—如震雷之怒, 'like the rage of shaking thunder.' Le Ch'oo-o observes that the two substantive words in the line are to be construed together, without reference to the 如 between them, such repetition of a term being merely one of the characteristics of the ancient style (一句雖有兩如字乃古文之一體). Kēang observes that the 進, 'to advance,' in l. 3 was the work of Hōw-foo. It may have been so; but it suited the poet's purpose to ascribe it to the king. 'The tiger officers' are to be taken of the officers of the army generally (泛言不止皇父休父). L. 4. 闕—奮怒之貌

'the app. of being furiously angry.' 虓 denotes a tiger who has lashed himself into rage. L. 5. 鋪—as in VIII. 1. 敦—厚, 'thick.' Choo gives, apparently for 鋪敦厚集其陳—as in the translation. 濱—浦, 'a river's banks.' L. 7. 仍—就, 'to come to,'—forthwith. 醜(衆)虜, 'a crowd of captives.' L. 7. 截 denotes 'the appearance of being guarded against all attempts (截然不可犯之貌).' The king's army was between the seat of trouble and the Hwae. The wild tribes could not cross it, nor receive any succour from the other side.

St. 5 gives a glowing description of the king's army. 嘽嘽,—as in II. iii. IV. 4. L. 2 in-dictates the rapidity of its march; L. 3, the imposing appearance of its progress; L. 4, its strength and firmness (comp. 苞 in II. iv. V. 1); L. 5, its unbroken advance; L. 6, the continuousness of its lines, and their adjustment (翼翼—as in II. i. VII. 5, et al.); and L. 7, its invincibility (不測—不可知也; 不克—不可勝也). L. 8. 濯—大, 'grandly.' 征 is here = 正, 'to correct,' 'to set in order.'

St. 6 gives the successful conclusion of the enterprise. L. 1. 猶—道, 'method of procedure.' 允塞—'was true and real.' But in what way it was so, the poet does not say. The several 既 seem to denote the rapidity with which the king's plans were crowned with success. The rebellions had come to subjugation almost before the plans were developed. L. 3. 庭 cannot here be the king's court, but his head-quarters in Seu—his court for the time. L. 3. 回, 'to return.' There had not been time to test the sincerity of their submission, but the king felt assured that they would not rebel again. Choo and the dict. explain 回 here by 違, 'to disobey.'

Ode 10. Narrative; but allusive in the last lines. THE WRITER DEPLORES THE MISERY AND OPPRESSION THAT PREVAILED, AND INTIMATES THAT THEY WERE CAUSED BY THE INTERFERENCE OF WOMEN AND EUNUCHS IN THE GOVERNMENT. The Preface says that this piece was composed by the earl of Fan against king Yew. There can be no doubt, I think, that it belongs to the time of Yew, for it will not suit the reign of any

There is nothing settled in the country;
Officers and people are in distress.
Through the insects from without and from within,
There is no peace or limit [to our misery].
The net of crime is not taken up,
And there is no peace nor cure [for our state].

But you have them [now].
Men had their people and followers,

other king; but there is nothing in it to indicate the authorship. We saw that the last ode of the preceding Book was also ascribed to an earl of Fan in the time of king Le. If the note of the Preface be correct, the writer of this ode may have been the son or grandson of the writer of the other.

St. 1. Ll. 1, 2. Comp. ll. 9, 10 in IV. 7, 8. The writer appeals to Heaven, as if the suffering that abounded were caused by it, and then proceeds to indicate and probe the real sources of it,—according to the manner of many of these odes. Ll. 3, 4. Choo, after Maou, takes 填 as 久, 'for a long time,' and 厲—亂, 'disorders';—as in the translation. Kéang suggests another construction which is perhaps preferable, taking 填 in the sense of 塞, 'to be hindered,' 'to be straitened';—this brings on 天 more clearly as the subject of 降 (天何不惠養我乎使我甚抑塞不皇寧處也而又降此大亂之災云云) Ll. 5, 6. 瘵—as in II. vii. X. 2, but the signification is here passive. Ll. 7, 8. 蠹賊,—see II. vi. VIII. 2, III. iii. III. 7. The characters are evidently used here metaphorically of some evil ministers of the king; but there is to me a difficulty with 蟊疾, the other two characters in the line. Choo says nothing about them farther than that 疾 is to be taken as 害, 'to injure,' so that the line—'Insect-like they commit insect injury.' Maou and Ch'ing have neither of them anything on the point; but Ying-tah says that 'Maou-tsh' denotes insects that injure the grain; and maou-tsh' the appearance of their doing so;—as above. More satisfactory is a view given by Kéang from some old writer of the surname Ho (何氏), that 'insects which attack the grain, coming from without, are called tsh, while those that are produced within the grain itself are called tsh' (蠹害苗之蟲自外來曰賊自內生曰疾). On this view, the insects from without will be Hwang-foo and other bad ministers of Yéw, and those from within will be represented principally by the queen Paou San. 届—極, 'limit or end.' 夷—平, 'peace,' 'to be pacified.' Ll. 9, 10. By the 'net of crime (罟—網)' we are to understand the multitude of penal laws, to whose doom people were exposed. These were never relaxed, never modified. Men were continually exposed to them; they acted as a net, which is never taken up, but is always kept in the water. 瘳—as in I. vi. XVI. 2.

St. 3. The point of interest here is to determine to whom to refer the 'you'—whether to the king directly, or to the evil ministers represented by the devouring insects in last stanza. It seems best to refer it to the king, like the 爾 in st. 7. Ll. 1, 3 belong to princes and off-

- 3 A wise man builds up the wall [of a city],
 But a wise woman overthrows it.
 Admirable may be the wise woman,
 But she is [no better than] an owl.
 A woman with a long tongue
 Is [like] a stepping-stone to disorder.
 [Disorder] does not come down from heaven;—
 It is produced by the woman.
 Those from whom come no lessons, no instruction,
 Are women and eunuchs.

 diff. from its meaning in last st. 說,—read

St. 3 was, no doubt, specially intended for Pao Sze and her creatures in the palace; but the form in which the sentiment is given is much too general. Only a Chinese will agree that it is a bad thing for a woman to be wise. The writer seems to have thought that there was something inherently, essentially, vicious in female nature, so that what were virtues in a man,
 and instruments of good, became, when possessed
 by a woman, transmuted into vices and instruments of evil. See the whole stanza translated by Morrison, under the character 城夫婦
 are not here, 'husband and wife,' but man and woman (男子, 婦人). All that Choe says on L. 4 is that k'ou and ch'e are 'birds

 with disagreeable voices,' or birds of evil omen.
Ch'e is the owl, 鷂 in L. XII. VI. 2. I apprehend the k'ou is also an owl, and is only another form of 鷂; but there is no Chinese authority for saying so. The dict. defines it as 'an unfilial bird,' 'a bird which, when grown,
 eats its mother.' Other accounts of it are given;
 —see on 流離 in L. XII. 4. 階 denotes the steps of a stair or a ladder. L. 9 may be taken either actively, as in the translation; or passively—'Those who are incapable of being taught.' L. 10. 時 = 是, 'these,' 'to be.'
 寺—奄人, 'eunuchs.'

St. 4 enlarges on the procedure of the parties
 spoken of and evil done by them, with the impropriety of letting them have anything to do with public affairs. L.1. The subject of 鞠 (=窮, 'to reduce to extremity') is the women and eunuchs of L. 10, st. 3,—Pao Sze and her creatures; and 枝 (=害) 貳 (=變詐)

 are descriptive of their characters. L. 2 竟—終, 'in the end.' 背—反, 'to be contrary to.' Ll. 3, 4 are not a little perplexing. If we take the subject of 曰 to be the false slanderers, then 豈曰 'do they say?' is equivalent to—'They do not say.' They do not say that their words are 不極, 'wrong without limit,' but they make light of them, as in L. 4 (而反曰是何足爲慝—惡)
 乎). This is Choo's construction; and though it is 'chiselling,' nothing better can be made of the lines. I was inclined to translate according to the view of the lines given by K'ang:—May not this be pronounced excessively wrong?
 But he (i.e., the king) says on the contrary,
 "What is there wrong in it?" But to justify this, L. 2 should be 豈不曰極, instead of 豈曰不極. Ll. 5, 6 present a case which would be altogether out of reason. 賈—'a trader.' 三倍 is a profit three times the amount of the capital. A trader may know such a thing and seek it; but it is foreign to the superior man to do so. So ought it to be for a woman to occupy herself at all with public affairs, leaving her proper duties of rearing silkworms and of weaving.

In st. 5 the writer addresses the king directly.
 In ll. 1, 2, 何以 and 何, are equivalents—
 'why,' 'how is it.' Maou defines 富, 'to enrich,' by 福, 'to bless.' Without answering his questions, the writer goes on to expose the king's errors, which, indeed, supplied the best answer to them. Ll. 3, 4, 介狄, 'the great Teih.' There must have been at the time a threatening of trouble from some of the wild tribes in the north; but the king took no measures against them, while he made the writer,
 because of his plain speaking, the special object of his animosity. We are to conclude that it was not in this ode only that the author gave expression to his sentiments. 胥—相. The king magnified the author, so as to put himself on equal terms with him as his adversary. Ll.
 5, 6 further describe the king's ignorance of the situation of affairs, and incompetency for it.
 弔—閱, 'to pity,' 'to regard with compas-

don. 不祥 is expressive of all the calamitous events which were rife, had in themselves, and ominous of what was worse. 不類 = 不善, 'are not good;' or more generally, 'are not as they ought to be.' Ll. 7, 8 tell the consequences, already experienced and impending, of the king's conduct. 人 has to be taken of 善人, 'good men.' 云 is the particle. 亡, 'to disappear,' 'to go away.' 殄瘁, 'to be lacerated and worn with cares.'

St. 6. Ll. 1, 2. By the net which Heaven is represented as sending down must be understood the calamities continually multiplying, in which the people found themselves involved as in a net.

Then 優—多, 'to be many.' Yen Ts'an says, 天降禍以爲羅網多於前, 'Heaven is sending down calamities to act as a net, more numerous than before.' Ll. 5, 6. 幾 is taken here in the sense of 近, 'to be near,' or 將及, 'to be close at hand.' 悲 in 1. 8 is an advance on the meaning of 憂 in 1. 4, as a settled sadness is more than a present grief or sorrow.

St. 7. Ll. 1—4. L. 1,—as in II. vii. VIII. 2. The manner in which the water bubbled up from such a spring was an evidence of its depth; and so the nature of the writer's sorrow showed that it had long been growing. 寧—何, 'how.'

After all, the extremity of the kingdom might prove Heaven's opportunity. 藐藐 is defined by 高遠貌 'the app. of being high and distant,' but the idea which it gives us is that of mysteriousness. 鞏一固, 'to strengthen,' 'to make firm.' Ll. 9, 10 are an admonition to king Yü, grounded on the writer's faith that all things are possible with Heaven. L. 9 summons him to repentance, though that is not expressed. 式 is the initial particle, though we might also give to it the meaning of 用 or 以.

Ode II. Narrative, all but st. 6, which is perhaps metaphorical. The writer bemoans the misery and ruin which were going on, showing how they were owing to the king's employment of mean and worthless characters. The Preface ascribes this piece, like the last, to the earl of Fan; the style is like that of the other, and I believe that the authorship of the two was the same. 'The writer,' says K'ang, 'saw that nothing now could be done for the kingdom, and that the honoured capital of Chow was near destruction; but in his loyal and righteous heart he could not cease to hope concerning his sovereign. In the former ode he expresses his wish that the king would not disgrace his great ancestors, and here that he would use such ministers as the duke of Shao. A filial son will not refrain from giving medicine to his father, though he knows that his disease is incurable, and a loyal minister will still give good advice to his sovereign, though he knows that the kingdom is on the verge of ruin.' The name of the ode seems to be taken from the character 旻 in st. 1, and 召 in st. 7; and it is thus distinguished from the Siao-min of II. v. I.

St. 1. L. 1,—see on II. III. I. 1. L. 2. 篤一厚, 'largely,'—in many and severe ways. L. 3. 殄,—as in IV. 6. 饑饉,—as in II. iv. X. 1, et al. L. 4. 卒盡, 'entirely.' 流亡,—are disappearing as if borne away on a current.

L. 5. 國.—as in III. iv. 居, as opposed to 國, is explained as 國中, 'the centre of the kingdom,'—perhaps the capital, or more generally the royal domain and the feudal States (內而國中, 外而四境卒皆荒蕪空虛). 荒, as in the passage just quoted, 'to be desolate.'

St. 2. L. 1, 2.—comp. II. 7, 9 in st. 1 of last ode. 訌.—i. q. 虹 in II. 8. The action of these insect-like creatures works 'within,' i. e., I suppose on men's minds. L. 3. Maou and Ch'ing take 昏椽 as a designation for eunuchs; and the passage is referred to in the dict. under the meaning of 'to castrate,' which belongs to 椽. I prefer, however, to take the terms as in the translation (昏而不明, 椽而肆虐). 靡共 may be taken as in the translation, 共 being=供, 'to discharge one's duty,' or as= 'disrespectful,' 共 being=恭. L. 4. 潰潰—敗亂其事, 'ruining and disordering their affairs' (So, Fan Ch'oo—). 回遘,

—as in II. 12, et al. Thus far these destroyers of the country appear as a pest from Heaven; but L. 5, intimates that it was the king who was the cause of all the misery by employing them. 靖夷—治平, 'to regulate and order.'

St. 3. L. 1 is further descriptive of the parties branded in last st. 皋皋—'to be insolent.' Both Maou and Choo agree in this definition of the terms. 訛訛.—as in II. v. I. 2. L. 3.—as in IV. 3. This and L. 4 are descriptive of the writer and of others like-minded with him. L. 4.—as in st. 1 of last ode. 貶,—'to be degraded.'

St. 4. L. 2. Both Maou and Choo define 潰 here by 遂, as in II. v. I. 4, last line. L. 3. There is a difficulty with 棲苴. The dict., under the pronunciation che, defines 苴 by 水中浮草, 'grass floating in the water.' If that mean an aquatic grass, then 棲苴 will denote the same taken from the grass and stuck upon a tree, where of course it will get dry and withered;—and this seems to be the view of the line taken by Choo (棲苴, 水中浮草, 棲於木上者, 言枯槁無潤澤).

也). The dict., however, quotes the gloss of Ying-tah, that 苴 is the name for any withered vegetation. A withered branch hanging on a tree, and the same fallen into the water, and floating about in it, are equally called 苴. In 1.5, 止 is the final particle. 潰—亂, as in the translation. On the diff. meanings of 潰, Yen T'w'an says, 'In I. iii. X. 6, we have 有洸有潰, where 潰 is explained by 怒, "anger;" in II. v. 1.4, we have 是用不潰于成, where 潰 is explained by 遂, "to succeed in," "to attain to," as in 1.3 of this stanza; in st.2 of this ode, we have 潰潰, and here 無不潰止, where the term is explained by 亂, "disorder." On all the instances Hsiao-shu (項氏; probably Hsiao Gan-shu 項安世; cf. 平甫, cf. 容齋; Sung dyn.) observes, "When water is 潰, it breaks forth violently in every direction, hence great anger is 潰怒; great progress is 潰遂; great disorder is 潰亂—the same idea underlies each application of the term." But this explanation is very lame, because the term is used without 怒 and the other adjuncts. K'ang insists on 敗 as the explanation of the term in every instance. Thus 1.2 is with him—'Does not the grass have its luxuriance destroyed?'

St. 5. Ll. 1,2. Choo says that 時—是, 'this,' having in mind probably the 茲 in 1.4; but I prefer Ch'ing's 時—今時, 'the present time.' Formerly men who deserved it got wealth, i.e., the emoluments of office; now only worthless creatures were in office. Ll. 3,4. And the distress of good men at this time was beyond all precedent. L. 5. 彼—those, referring to the worthless men who enjoyed the favour of the king; 斯—these, referring to the good men who were discountenanced. 疏—'coarse,'—耦, rice that has not been hulled. 稗—'rice that has been hulled fine,'—fine. In ll. 6,7, the writer addresses himself to the king's favourites. 替—廢, 自替—'to retire of themselves.' 職—'because of this,' compares III. 15,16, and the other places where the character has occurred. 兄—悅; comp. 倉兄 in III. 1. 引—長, 'to be prolonged.' 斯 has its descriptive power,—like 其. St. 6. Choo gives this stanza like the others

Ll. 1-4 mention two things, each of which had its cause; and so the cause of the present disorder and threatening ruin might be discovered. Ll. 2 and 4 must be construed interrogatively, 云 being disregarded as expletive. 頻—涯, 'banks.' These are mentioned as the feeders of the pool, because through them the water would be conveyed into it; whereas the spring fed itself, 'from its centre.' Ll. 5. 溥—大或廣, 'great,' 'wide.' 斯—'this,' or 'the.' Ll. 6—as l. 7 in last stanza. 弘—大, 'great.' 裁—災, used as a verb. The whole line is interrogative.

Ah! solemn is the ancestral temple in its pure stillness.

In response to him in heaven,
Grandly they hurried about in the temple.
Distinguished is he and honoured,
And will never be wearied of among men.

TITLE OF THE PART—頌四. 'Part IV.
Odes of the Temple and the Altar.' Choo's definition of 頌 is 宗廟之樂歌 'Songs
for the music of the Ancestral Temple'; K'ang's, 祭祀之樂歌 'Songs for the music at Sacrifices.' The term 頌 itself means 'to praise (稱頌成功謂之頌), so that I have in previous volumes spoken of the odes in this Part as 'Songs of Praise.' In the Great Preface we have:—頌者美盛德之形容 以其 成功告於神明者也. 'The Song are pieces in admiration of the embodied manifestation of complete virtue, announcing to spiritual Beings their achievement thereof.' This account takes its form from the ancient interchange of the characters 頌 and 容. We find, indeed, in the Dict. yung given as the first pronunciation

of 頌, with the definition of 貌, 'appearance,'
'form.' As all the pieces cannot be referred to the services of the ancestral temple, I have combined in the name of the Part the definitions of Choo and K'ang. Yet there are some odes whose only claim to have anything to do with sacrifices is that they are found in it. Choo adds, in opposition to the older interpreters,

that of the thirty-one pieces in the Sung of Chow, while most were made (or fixed, 定) by the duke of Chow, there are perhaps some among them belonging to the reign of king K'ang, and even of a later date. To the Sung of Chow, he says, were annexed the four pieces called the Sung of Loo, and the five forming the Sung of Shang, because of their analogous character.

TITLE OF THE BOOK, AND OF THIS SECTION OF IT. As this stands in the K'ang-he edition, and was fixed, I suppose, by Choo, we have 周頌.

清廟之什四之一, 'Book I. of Part IV.; the Decade of T'ing-miao in the Temple Odes of Choo.' But this ordinary distribution of the different portions of this Part is defective, making five Books, instead of three only:—the odes of Choo; of Loo; and of Shang. Then, as the odes of Choo have been arranged into Decades (with eleven pieces in the last, as in the third Book of Part III.), we have to divide the title of the Book, and that of the Decade; as I have done. The former will be—周頌

四之一, 'The Sacrificial Odes of Choo; Book I. of Part IV.;' and the latter, 清廟之什四之一, 'Decade of T'ing-miao; Section I. of Book I., Part IV.'

Ode 1. NARRATIVE. CELEBRATING THE RITUAL MANNER IN WHICH A SACRIFICE TO KING WÁN WAS PERFORMED, AND FURTHER PRAISING HIM. Choo agrees with the Preface in assigning the composition of this piece to the time of the sacrifice mentioned in the Shoo, V. xiii. 29, when, the building of Loh being finished, king Ching came to the new city, and offered a red bull to king Wán, and the same to king Woo. The ode seems to me to have been sung in honour of Wán after the sacrifice was offered.

L. 1. 於 (woo),—the exclamation, 穆 is, with Mao, —美 'admirable,' 'elegant,' with Choo, —深遠, 'deep and distant,' 'solemn.' The term is descriptive of the temple, further said to be 清, 'pure,' or as Choo defines the term, 清靜, 'pure and still.' Mao and Ch'ing make it applicable rather to the worship or the worshippers in the temple; but why should we depart from the natural and appropriate signification of the line? L. 2 belongs to the princes of the States who were assembled on the occasion, and assisted (相=助) the king in the service. 肅=敬, 'to be reverent'; 雝=和, 'harmonious.' L. 3 belongs to the officers who took part in the service,—in the libations, the prayers, and the various arrangements. 濟濟

—衆, 'numerous';—as often. I refer L. 4 both to the princes and the officers, who are said to be characterized by the same virtues which had marked king Wán. 文之德 can hardly be

'the virtues of civil life,' but—文王之德;—as in the translation. L. 5, 6. There is an opposition of 在天 and 在廟, the former referring to king Wán as in heaven, the latter to him as present by his spirit-tablet in the temple.

對, 'responding to,'—配; 越 is defined by 於. The line is rugged; but it leads us to think of the worshippers as being awed by the thoughts of king Wán in his exalted state, and consequently being most exact and alert in all their duties in the temple. 駿 is defined by 大

而疾, 'grandly and alertly.' Wang Tsao takes 越 as—揚, a meaning found in the Urh-

ya; and 對越, he says, —對揚 in III. iii. VIII. 8. L. 7, 8 indicate the testimony borne by all the service to the virtue of king Wán. L. 7 must be taken interrogatively, or we may disregard the 不承=尊, 'to honour,' 'to be honoured.' 斯—as in III. iii. II. 7, et al. 斯 is the final particle.

There are no rhymes in the ode. Choo observes that in these odes of Choo, there are many of them that do not rhyme,—a peculiarity which he cannot account for. It is mainly owing to this circumstance, I suppose, that we have no longer the odes divided into 章 or stanzas.

They are marked off, however, into 節 or small paragraphs. I have indicated those by a space between them in the translation, and by a ○ in the text.

Ode 2. NARRATIVE. CELEBRATING THE VIRTUE OF KING WÁN AS COMPARABLE TO THAT OF

HEAVEN, AND LOOKING TO HIM FOR BLESSING IN THE FUTURE. The Preface says that in this ode there is an announcement of the realization of complete peace throughout the kingdom; and Maou and Ch'ing particularize and refine upon this, referring it to a sacrifice to king Wän by the duke of Chow, when he had completed the statutes for the new dynasty in the sixth year of his regency. But neither the ode nor any ancient testimony authorizes a more definite argument of the contents than that which I have given.

LL 1, 2. Choo, after Ch'ing, defines 天之命 by 天之道, 'the way of Heaven.' One of the Ch'ings of the Sung dyn., however, discriminates between 天道 and 天命, saying that the former is indicative of what Heaven is in itself (天之自然者), and the latter of what Heaven gives to its creatures (天子萬物者). The phrase in the text means, I apprehend, the will and operations of Heaven as seen in nature and providence. 不已 = 不息, 'do not rest or cease,' i.e., operate without intermission. Choo's definition is 無窮, 'inexhaustible,' and Maou's, 無極, 'limitless.' Maou defines 純 by 大, 'great.' Choo, better, by 不雜, 'unmixed,'—the 'singleness' of the translation, and the 不二 of Ch'ing. See Tze-ssu on the 4 lines in the 'Doctrine of the Mean,' XXVI. 10.

LL 5—6. The Tso-chuen, under the 26th year of duke Ssang, quotes 1, 5 as 何以恤我, and Choo would adopt that as the correct reading. I have no doubt that it indicates the meaning, and have translated accordingly. Maou takes 假 as 嘉 (as in III. II. V. 1), and 溢—慎, so that the line—以嘉美之道戒慎於我; but I can hardly make sense of this. 收—受, 'to receive.' Maou defines it by 聚, 'to collect.' 駿惠—大順, 'to be greatly in accord with.' 曾孫—後王, 'future kings.' Any of the descendants of Wän, after king Ching, might be so denominated. 篤—厚, 'generously devoted.' The whole line is expressive of a hope, or prayer, as line 8 expresses the purpose of the writer for himself.

I do not think we are to inquire minutely wherein the accord with king Wän was, or was to be manifested. As a specimen of how the Chinese critics enlarge on the ode, I subjoin the remarks of Keang Ping-chang, in his expansion of it:—The virtue of king Wän, above and beneath, flows forth equally in the same streams with that of Heaven and Earth. King Wän is just Heaven;—[as seen] at the present time in the quiet of all the States, the succession of abundant years, gentle winds, sweet rains, the happiness of the people, and the abundance of all natural productions. In whatever way Heaven may show its favour to us, king Wän will also do the same. We will receive it, and hereby be in great accordance with the ways of king Wân. To be in accordance with his ways is the same as to be in accordance with the ways of Heaven. And why should we speak only of the present time? His descendants hereafter are sure as well largely to carry out his virtue, and not forget him.

There are no rhymes.

Ode 3. Narrative. APPROPRIATE AT SOME SACRIFICE TO KING WÂN, AND CELEBRATING HIS STATUTES. According to the Preface, this ode was sung to accompany the performance of the dance of king Wân, called Sung (奏象舞).

That dance consisted in going through a number of bodily movements and evolutions, intended to illustrate the style of fighting introduced by Wân in his various wars, and of which, it is supposed, we have an example in the speech of king Woo at Muh:—Do not advance more than six or seven steps, and then stop and adjust your ranks. Do not exceed four blows, five blows, six blows, or seven blows; and then stop and adjust your ranks (Shoo, V. ii. 7, 8). Choo observes, however, that there is no reference in the piece to the dance, and the imperial editors allow this, while at the same time they are very unwilling to give up the view of the Preface, accumulating a great number of authorities in support of it. But the fact is, all we can say about the ode is that it is appropriate to some sacrifice to king Wân. The 典 is to me irreconcilable with the old view, which takes it in the sense of 法, 'laws,' or 'methods,' meaning the style of fighting which Wân, it is said, introduced. But the term has a higher meaning than that, and—'canons,' 'statutes.' The piece has the appearance of a fragment. As Choo says, 此詩疑有闕文.

L. 1. 清 is defined by 清明, 'perplexions,' 'clear.' The term is indicative, and not, as Choo and many others say, to be taken in the imperative mood. 緝—續, 'to continue,'

熙—明, 'clear.' These two terms are to be translated as I have done (所當緝熙者). L. 2 may be taken, as in the translation, of the time when Wân was first sacrificed to (謂武王有天下始祀文王以王禮之時); or, so far as the terms are concerned, of the time when Wân himself first offered a particular sacrifice which the writer has in his mind (文王受命始祭天而枝伐也. 周禮以禋祀祀昊天上帝. Ch'ing). I much prefer the former method. 禋—simply—祀

'to sacrifice.' L. 4. 迄—至, 'till,' 'down to.' It covers the rest of the line:—till by the use of them there is completion; the meaning being, apparently, what the translation indicates.

L. 4. 禎—'a happy omen.' See on the 'Doctrine of the Mean,' ch. XXIV.

Rhymes are found in 成禎, cat. II; 典, 禎, cat. 13.

Ode 4. Narrative. A SONG IN PRAISE OF THE PRINCES WHO HAVE ASSISTED AT A SACRIFICE, AND ADMONISHING THEM. The Preface says that this piece was made on the occasion of king Ching's accession to the government, when he thus addressed the princes who had assisted him in the ancestral temple. Choo views it as a piece for general use in the ancestral temple, when the king presented a cup to his assisting guests after they had thrice presented the cup to the representatives of the dead. These two views considerably affect the interpretation of several of the lines. The imperial editors incline to maintain the occasion of the composition as assigned in the Preface. But there is nothing really in the piece to enable an impartial student to give his vote in favour of either view. K'ang Ping-chang, for a wonder, agrees with Choo, saying, 儀禮賓三獻尸之後主人酌賓歌烈文在此時蓋先之以載見之詩而後歌烈文也. But in the text of the Shi there is no mention of the singing this piece.

L. 1. 辟公—諸侯, 'the feudal princes,'—the 'distinguished assistants' of ode I. 公 has here the general signification of 'prince,' and the phrase—'ruling princes.' 烈—光, 'brilliant,'—some give it the signification of 'meritorious.' It is certainly most natural to take the princess as the subject of 錫 and 惠 in ll. 2, 3; and

無封靡于爾。邦維王其崇。之。念茲戎功。繼序其皇之。○無競維人。四方其訓之。不顯維德。辟其刑之。於乎前王不忘。

Be not mercenary nor extravagant in your States,
And the king will honour you.
Thinking of this great service,
He will enlarge the dignity of your successors.

What is most powerful is the being the man:—
Its influence will be felt throughout your States.
What is most distinguished is being virtuous;—
It will secure the imitation of all the princes.
Ah! the former kings are not forgotten!

'the happiness' as referring to the sacrifice which had been performed with their assistance. The 'Essence and Flower of the Shu,' however, understands 神, 'the Spirits (no doubt, of Wan and Woo),' who had been sacrificed to, as the nominative to 錫, and the happiness will be the blessing they had pronounced through their representatives (我君臣各竭誠敬之心神用錫此福祉). Even this is better than Maou's finding the subject of 錫 in king Wan, and making the 'happiness' to be the States conferred on the princes after the overthrow of the Shang dynasty. By this the 我是 made—汝! Nothing in exegesis could be more licentious. The antecedent to 之 in l. 4 is not clear. I suppose it is to be sought in the 惠 of l. 3.

Choo says he does not understand 封靡 in l. 5; but accepts the meaning given in the translation. 封—專利以自封殖 'Feng means to be entirely devoted to gain to enrich one's self.' 靡—汰侈, 'to be extravagant.' Maou brings out, substantially, the same meanings. The 其 in ll. 6, 8, 10, and 12, as well as that in ll. 1, 6, are referred by Wan Ying-che to the category of 乃. They are a repetition of the subject, and must be translated by 'will.' In l. 7, 戎—大, 'great;'—as often. By 'this great service' is intended the assistance the princes had given at the sacrifice. It seems out of the question to understand the words, with Maou and a host of others, of the service which the princes rendered when they gathered round king Woo in his struggle with the last sovereign of Shang. l. 8, 繼序—以序相繼, 'succeeding to one another in order.' The successors of the princes before the king are intended. 皇—大, 'to make great.' As Choo expands the line, 使汝之子孫繼序而昌大之.

ll. 9—12. Compare what was said on III. ll. II. l. 13 sends the thoughts of the princes back to kings Wan and Woo, and they are reminded that by obeying the admonitions now given to them, they would be following out their grand example.

Twan-che gives as rhymes here, 福 (prop. cat. 1), 保., cat. 3, l. 2; 邦崇, 功, 皇 (prop. cat. 10), cat. 3; and 人訓 (prop. cat. 18), 刑 (prop. cat. 11), cat. 12, l. 1. Koo-che, 公, 邦崇, 功; and 疆, 皇, 忘. Choo, quite erroneously, 公, 疆.

Ode 5. Narrative. APPROPRIATE TO A SACRIFICE TO KING T'AE. The Preface says the piece was used in the seasonal sacrifices to all the former kings and dukes of the House of Chow;—see in II. i. VI. 5. Choo confines it to a sacrifice to king T'ae. The imperial editors allow that both views have their difficulties. As only kings T'ae and Wān are mentioned in it, why should the Preface extend it to all the ancestors of the House of Chow? As they are both mentioned, why should Choo confine it to king T'ae? They themselves favour the view of the Preface; but there is force in an observation of Choo Kung-t'ien, that, as the piece puts forward mount K'e both in the beginning and the end, it is plain it was made for a sacrifice to king T'ae. See the account of T'ae's labours there in III. i. VII.

LL 1, 2. By 'the lofty hill' we are evidently to understand mount K'e, and 荒—治, 'to bring under cultivation.' Maou takes 荒 as—大, 'to make great,' and seems to take 高山 generally, 'Heaven produces all things that are found on the high hills, but king T'ae by his practice of right ways was able to increase them.' Foo Kwang observes that 'to bring wild desolation (治荒) to order is called 荒 just as the regulation of disorder (治亂) is called 亂.' LL 3, 4. I can only get a running out of these lines by referring 彼 to king T'ae, and taking 康—安, as in the translation. Ch'ing explains 彼 by 萬民, 'all the people;' i. e., all the people dwelling about mount K'e. They set to work and built residences (作宮室) there, so that king Wān could comfortably occupy it! LL 5, 6. Maou read 彼徂矣, making l. 5, and joining 岐 to 有夷之行 as l. 6. But the meaning that can be forced from the lines read so is very insane:—'He, i. e., king Wān, went away, but by that time there were level roads about K'e;' or, acc. to Ch'ing, 'Those who went there afterwards, did so because the ruler of K'e exercised an easy government;' or, acc. to Kiang, 'Although king Wān moved away from it, yet his govt. of K'e was a model for the practice of a hundred ages.' Choo adopted the reading of 岨 for 徂, which had been proposed by Ch'is Kwah (沈括) Sung dyn.; earlier than Choo). In a chapter of the Books of the after Han (西南夷傳) we find the line as 彼岨者岐. There seems a necessity for altering Maou's reading and arrangement of the lines. 夷—平, 'level.' 行—路, 'roads.' L. 7 is to be taken as a wish, or the expression of an assurance. It figured ill with the kings of Chow after they parted with the territory of K'e to the lords of Ts'in.

The rhymes are—荒康行.. cat. 10.

Ode 6. Narrative. APPROPRIATE TO A SACRIFICE TO KING CHING. The different views which are taken of this ode depend on the interpretation of the characters 成王 in l. 3. Is 成 the honorary title given to Sung (誦), the son and successor of king Woo? Or are we to take them as in the line 成王之孚, in III. i. IX., where they mean 'to complete the sincerity befitting a true king?' The old interpreters adopted the affirmative reply to the latter question; Choo, that to the former. With them consequently the ode was to be sung at the sacrifice (or sacrifices) to Heaven and Earth; with Choo, it was to be sung at a sacrifice to King Ching, and its date must be posterior to his reign. I have no hesitation in giving in my edition to the view of Choo, which had been advanced, indeed, before him by Gow-yang Sew, and moreover was held in the Chün T'ü period by eminent scholars;—see the 'Narratives of the States' (國語周語下, art. 4.). No student, coming to the study of the piece without a foregone conclusion, would take 成王 as meaning anything but king Ching. When Choo was asked how he interpreted the same characters differently in III. i. IX., he replied that he was obliged to do so by the context; and Léw Kin observes, 'In III. i. IX., Choo exposed the error of former scholars, and showed that the characters 成王 were not to be taken as the honorary title of the king Sung. Here he corrected the error of former scholars, and showed that the same characters were that king's honorary title. His determination was correct in each case.'

Ll. 1, 2. The 'two sovereigns' are Wán and Woo. The appointment of the House of Chow to the sovereignty of the kingdom had long been determined on (成一定) by Heaven, but the accomplishment of the divine will took place in their time. Ll. 3, 4. 康—安寧, 'to rest quietly; accepting, that is, the appointment as an accomplished fact, about which he needed not to give himself any concern. 基命, 'to found the appointment; meaning, here, to strengthen it, enlarging, as it were, the foundation, so that it might bear the superincumbent dynasty for ages. 宥—宏深, 'wide and deep,' 密—

靜密, 'still.' These two terms seem to be descriptive of the virtue of Ching. Li. 5—7, L. 5,—see III. 1. 1; but both 緝 and 熙 are to be taken as verbs, their object being the inheritance which Ching had received from Wān and Wou. 單—盡 or 竭, 'to exert to the utmost.' 聿 may have here the meaning given to it of 故, 'therefore,' 'so that.' 靖—安, 'to tranquilize,' 'make secure.'

There are no rhymes.

Ode 7. NARRATIVE. AN ODE APPROPRIATE TO A SACRIFICE TO KING WĀN, ASSOCIATED WITH HEAVEN, IN THE HALL OF AUDIENCE. There is happily an agreement between the schools as to the occasion of this ode. The Preface, indeed, makes no mention of Heaven in its argument of it; but its mention of the Hall of Audience (明堂, 'Brilliant Hall') sufficiently shows the occasion to which it referred. We must suppose that the princes are all assembled at the royal court, and that the king receives them in the famous hall. A sacrifice is there presented by him to God, and with Him is associated king Wān, the two being the fountain from which, and the channel through which, the sovereignty had come to the House of Chou. It is unnecessary to enter into the controversies on the hall itself, and God as sacrificed to in it, whether to be conceived of as one or as five.

Li. 1—5. Maou defines 將 by 大, 'great,' 'greatly,' and 享 by 獻, 'to offer,' 'offerings'; but it is much better to take 將—奉, 'to bring,' 'to present,'—with Ching and Choo. The reduplication of 我 is simply in the style of the Shu, to which attention has been called repeatedly; and we may regard 享 as under the regimen of 奉—as in the translation. The 其 in 1. 3 gives to it all the force of a prayer. The worshipper does not dare to presume that Heaven will accept the offering, but he asks that it will do so (不敢必也). 右—尊, 'to honour,' not—助, 'to assist.' The offerings were on the left of the Spirit-tablets, so that if God accepted the sacrifice, he would descend and be on the right of the offerings. It has been observed before, that the right was anciently the place of honour.

Li. 4—7. From Heaven the ode turns to king Wān, and the worshipper is sure that he does accept the service, rendered to him. Observe the contrast between the 既 of 1. 7 and the 其 of 1. 3. 儀, 式, and 刑 are all of cognate signification, —法, 'to take as the law.' Yen T'wan observes that the accumulation of the terms is for the sake of emphasis (謂法之不已). 伊 is merely an initial particle. 嘏—'the Blessor (錫福),' Maou's construction,—We have always received blessing from king Wān, 'comes to the same thing.

Li. 8—10. 于時—于是, 'thus.' Some prefer to keep the proper meaning of 時, so that 于時—'ever.' The antecedent to 之 in 保之 is very differently given. Kang-shing makes it the ways of king Wān (於是得安文王之道). Choo makes it the regard of Heaven and Wān, as seen in their descending to accept the offerings (以保天與文王所以降鑒之意), and also the appointment by Heaven to the sovereignty (天命可以長保矣).

Ode 8. Narrative. APPROPRIATE TO KING WOO'S SACRIFICING TO HEAVEN, AND TO THE SPIRITS OF THE HILLS AND RIVERS, ON A PROGRESS THROUGH THE KINGDOM, AFTER THE OVERTHROW OF THE SHANG DYNASTY. Here again there is, happily, an agreement between the schools. The Tso-chuen, under the 12th year of duke Seuen, quotes I. 11 as from a Song of king Woo, and in the Narratives of the States (國語).

周語, art. 1) the piece is ascribed to the duke of Chow. No doubt, it was made by the duke, soon after the accession of Woo, for the purpose mentioned in the argument. Of such progresses through the kingdom, the example was set by Shun, as related in the Shoo, II. 8; and they were made an institution of the Chow dynasty. This was not done, however, till the duke of Chow had completed his code of statutes in the reign of king Ching. The Progress in this ode must have been made by Woo in assertion of his being appointed by Heaven to succeed to the rulers of the dynasty of Shang. The difficulty with a translator is as to the person in which he will translate the piece. In I. 14 we have 我, 'I.' The rest is all narrative,—in the 3d person; and I am strongly of opinion that the 'I' is to be taken of the duke of Chow. As he made the piece, he probably also recited it on occasion of the sacrifices, in the hearing of assembled princes. In speaking of Woo throughout as 'the king,' he sufficiently guarded himself against having any designs on the throne, and he could speak of himself as the legislator of the dynasty without presumption. Lacharme seems to have recognized the duke of Chow as the speaker throughout; but the 我 in I. 11 he refers to Woo, introducing, however, an inquit, 'he says,' for which I do not see any necessity:

—'Iam inquit, eo spectant animi totius mei studium, ut virtutem colam.'

II. 1. 2. I prefer to take 時 as 一今時.

'now,' rather than 以時, with Ying-fah and Choo, so that 時邁 would be 'making the seasonal progress through the States.' This, it seems to me, was a special tour through the kingdom, with a special tentative object in it, to ascertain whether Woo's possession of the throne was acknowledged. 邁, 一行, 'to go,' 'to make a progress through.' 其 is taken as in I. 1 of last ode, giving to the whole line the force of a wish (不敢必也). Heaven's accepting Woo as its Son would be its acknowledgment of him as the holder by its will of the kingdom. As Yen Ts'an says, 有天下曰天子子之謂以周繼夏商也.

II. 2.—3 contain the assertion of the writer, and what he considered the proof, that Woo's occupancy of the throne was acknowledged by Heaven, by men, and by all Spirits. 實 is emphatic, 'Yes,' 'really.' Then 天 must be understood as the subject of 右 and 序, the former referring to the exaltation of Woo above all the princes (尊於諸侯之上) and the latter to his place as assigned to him in the line of sovereigns of the kingdom (次於帝王之統). 有周 may be 'the House of Chow, or Woo, the chief of that House.' II. 4, 5 give the proof of Woo's sovereignty from his influence over all the States, for they must be understood as intended in the writer's mind by the 之 and the 莫不. Choo says, 薄言震之而四方諸侯莫不震懼. The 1st 震 is active,—expressive of the way in which he moved the States. 疊—懼, 'to be afraid. 薄言,—as in I. 1. VIII. It is of no use trying to translate them. II. 6, 7 contain the proof of Woo's sovereignty from his influence on spiritual Beings, i. e., on the Spirits of the rivers and hills throughout the kingdom. We have of course to accept the statement on the word of the writer. 懷 is defined by 來 'to attract'; 柔 by 安 'to give rest to.' The Spirits came and accepted his sacrifices; they found rest in Woo as their host. The Ho and the lefty mountains (喬—高) are mentioned because, if their Spirits were satisfied with Woo, those of all other streams and hills, no doubt, were so. L. 8 is the writer's exulting assurance of the triumph of his House.

II. 9—14 carry out the spirit of L. 8. 式 and the two 載 are particles. L. 10 belongs to Woo's distribution of the fiefs of the kingdom;—see the Shoo, V. III. 10. 載—聚 'to collect,' to call in. 釁,—as in II. III. I. 3. A time of peace had been inaugurated. On II. 12, 13 I have made some observations in the introductory note. I must take them of the duke of Chow speaking of himself, and telling how he would go on to labour for the consolidation of the dynasty, elaborating all its statutes, which should be established throughout the kingdom. 肆—陳, 'to diffuse,' 'spread abroad.' 時夏—是夏, 'this Hsia,' Hsia being a name for the kingdom, as we find it used in the Shoo II. i. 20, even before the rise of the Hsia dynasty. 保之—保天命, 'to preserve the appointment of Heaven.' That had been gained by war; it would be preserved by peace and good government. The characters 肆夏 in I. 18 are sometimes used as the name of the ode. There are no rhymes.

Ode. 9. Narrative. AN ODE APPROPRIATE IN SACRIFICING TO THE KINGS WOO, CHING, AND K'ANG. Here again, in the interpretation of this ode, Choo differs from the Preface, and from Maou and his school. On the place of king Woo in the piece there is no disagreement, but whereas Choo, after Gow-yang Siew, finds also Ching and K'ang in it, the others restrict it to king Woo alone. Difficulties attach from the text to both views; nor do I accord so readily with Choo as in the interpretation of ode VI. We are obliged to strain the terms 成 and 康 in II. 3, 5 if we take them as descriptive of king Woo; and on the other hand the predicates in II. 4, 8 seem extravagant, when taken of Ching and K'ang. The Imperial editors say that Choo himself, before he published his great work on the Shu, held the view of the old interpreters, but they do not say that he was wrong in changing his mind, while yet they think it right to preserve the older interpretation alongside of his more matured one. It is an occasion for the application of the canon, — to put on one side what is doubtful.

II. 1—4. The critics are all anxious that I. 1 should be understood of the firm moral purpose of king Woo, maintaining in his heart his strong and unswerving will to deliver the kingdom from tyranny, subduing every wrong impulse in himself, and resolute to secure universal good order. The writer, it appears to me, would simply indicate the impression which he had of Woo's vigour and force. With I. 2 comp. I. 9 in ode 4. 烈 — 'ardour.' Maou and Choo take it of the result of that, — 業 and 功業. There is no difficulty with I. 5, if we take 成 and 康 as meaning the kings who were so styled. If we refer the terms to Woo, then the line — 'most illustrious was he, who completed his great work and secured its tranquillity.' So says Maou, — 不顯乎其成大功而安之. It is difficult to get at Ching's exact idea of the line, but he says, — 不顯乎其成

安祖考之道. L. 4. 皇 — 君, taken as a verb, 'to establish as ruler or king (上帝之所君). This is much better than Maou's making the term — 美, 'to admire,' which is immediately manipulated by Yung-tah into 'to bless.'

II. 5—7. Choo says nothing on the 奄 here. Maou explains it by 同, 'together,' where I cannot follow him. The dict. defines it by 大有餘, 'grandly and more,' which suits the connection. It could not be said that Ching and K'ang were kings equal to Woo; but, coming, in immediate succession to him, one of them after the other, to the throne, they maintained what he had acquired. They were not without great qualities, which justified their being associated with him in the honours of sacrifice. 斤斤 is defined by 明察 and 明之察, 'clearly examining,' 'the examining of intelligence.'

II. 9—10. The writer has done now with the characters and achievement of the kings sacrificed to; and he proceeds to speak of the music at the sacrifice, and the blessing conferred on the worshippers. 喤喤 is here defined by 和, 'to be harmonious,' 'to sound in harmony,' 筦 — i. y. 管, which occurred in I. III. XVII. 3, meaning simply a reed or tube. We shall meet with it hereafter as an instrument of music, — a kind of flute; which is its meaning here. 將將 is defined by 集和集, 'to blend harmoniously.' The subject of 降福 must be found, I apprehend, in the Spirits of the kings sacrificed to (此時神降之福). 稷稷 is defined in the Urh-ya by 福, 'happiness,' or 'blessing'; but we are obliged to take the terms here of the abundance of the blessing. Maou defines them by 衆, and Choo, by 多.

LI. 11.—14. 簡簡一大, 'great,' in large measure. 反反—as in II. vii. VI. 3. L. 13 belongs to the conclusion of the sacrifice, when those engaged in it all drank together by way of fellowship and refreshment. Compare in III. II. III. 1, though the language there has reference to the feast that followed a sacrifice in the ancestral temple. 來反—是反. Choo defines 反 by 覆, 'to be redoubled.' The blessing would not be received and then expire. It would keep coming back, and be, as it were, repeated (此福祿反覆, 日至而未艾).

Ode 10. Narrative. CELEBRATING HOW-TSEIH;—AN ODE APPROPRIATE TO THE BORDER SACRIFICE, WHEN HOW-TSEIH WAS WORSHIPPED AS THE CORRELATE OF GOD. It is not worth while to go into minor controversies on the argument of this ode. There is a sufficient agreement upon it, but in the interpretation of the lines and characters there are, as we shall see, various differences of view. Compare the Legend of How-tseih, in III. III. I.

LI. 1, 2. 思 is the initial particle,—as in III. I. VI. 1. We can only give 文 the general sense of 'accomplished,' as in the panegyric of Yaou, in the Shoo, LI. 1. 配天, 'to correspond to Heaven,' is to be taken, I think, of the achievements of How-tseih's life, rather than of the place assigned to him at the border sacrifice. LI. 3, 4. Choo follows Ch'ing in taking 立

粒, 'to supply with grain-food,'—as in the Shoo, II. iv. 1. Then 極一至, 'the utmost amount,' and the meaning of 1 & 4 is as given in the translation. Maou says nothing on 立, but he defines 極 by 中, 'the middle,' i.e., the proper Mean of human nature, and this meaning is most unnaturally forced out of the lines:—'Thou didst preserve and establish the true life of all people under the sky, so that by thee, How-tseih, we might all get the correct Mean of our nature (存立我天下衆民之命, 使衆民無不於爾后稷得其中正, 言民賴后稷復其常性).' LI. 5, 6. 來 is taken as—小麥 or 'wheat.' Wang Taou contends that it is merely the particle, or—是; but 來, when used in that sense as no doubt it frequently is, is followed by a verb. 牟 (often with 麥 at the side)

—大麥, 'barley.' L. 4 says that grain-food was specially designed by God for universal (率—徧) nourishment. It was thus by How-zeih that the design of God came to be realized. Ll. 7, 8. I can make nothing of the 爾 in l. 7; and the only one among the critics who has tried to keep in it the sense of 'you,' in his expansion of the passage, is Ch'ing K'ang-shing. His words are—天命以是循存后稷養天下之功而廣大其子孫之國無此封竟於汝今之經界乃大有天下:

but I leave it for others to make out their meaning. I interpret 爾 as if it were 彼, opposed to the 此, and enabling us to explain the whole line as in the translation. 常—常道 'the constant path,' the duties of social life. 時夏,—as in ode 8. When the people were supplied with food, they could be taught to be virtuous. See Confucius' saying in the Ana. XIII. ix. 4.—This ode is sometimes called the 納夏.

TITLE OF THE SECTION.—臣工之什 四一之二, 'The Decade of Shin-kung:
Section II. of Book I. of Part IV.'

Ode I. Narrative. INSTRUCTIONS GIVEN TO THE OFFICERS OF HUSBANDRY;—PROBABLY AFTER THE SACRIFICE IN THE SPRING TO GOD FOR A GOOD YEAR. According to the Preface, this was an ode sung in the ancestral temple, when the king was sending away the princes who had been at court and assisted him in the spring sacrifice to his ancestors. The imperial editors say that Choo himself at first accepted this view, but afterwards adopted that which I have given above in the first part of the argument,—'simply because the text only speaks of the business of husbandry (蓋以經文言農事耳)'

They add that later scholars have urged that if Choo's view be correct, the piece should have had its place among the Ya, and not among the Sa-yi.
But on the view of the Preface, the same thing might be urged, so far as the words of the ode themselves are concerned. There is no doubt in my mind that the old view is incorrect. Upon it we have an ode to the princes, and not a word in it is addressed to them. Nothing could be more far-fetched than Maou's method of accounting for this,—that the king chose to address the ministers of the princes, only the better to admonish the princes. Add to this the use of 我 in l. 13; and I do not see how any unprejudiced student of the piece can hold to the account of it in the Preface.

II. 1-4. The reduplication of 嗟嗟 'ah!' is emphatic. 工—官, 'an officer.' 臣 工—羣臣百官, 'all ye ministers, all ye officers,' but we must suppose that only the officers of husbandry are intended. 敬爾 在公—敬爾在公之事, —as in the translation. The meaning is apparent, but how to construe 在公 is difficult. Comp. 在 御 in I. vii. VIII. 2. 釐—賜, 'to give,' —as in III. II. III. 8, et al. I do not see the necessity of taking 王 as—前王, 'the former kings.' 成—成法, 'perfect rules.' The redoubled 來 is simply—是, and is not to be translated 'come.' 咨—'to deliberate,' 茹— as in II. III. III. 4. 'There would be many things,' says Ts'ien Ts'uen-sieh (錢天錫; Ming dyn.), 'such as peculiarities of soil and situation, to be taken into account in the application of the general laws.'

II. 5, 6. The meaning of 保介 is quite undetermined, and has to be fixed by the connection. Maou says nothing on the terms. They occur in the Le Ke, IV. 1. 13 in connection with the king's praying to God for a blessing on the labours of the year. There the king appears in his carriage, with his plough between the charioteer and a 保介; and Ch'ing explains the phrase as meaning 勇士, or 車右, the mailed soldier who sat on the charioteer's right (保—衣 and 介—甲); and he insists on the same meaning here. But whether he be correct or not in his interpretation of the terms in that passage, such a signification of them is inapplicable here; and therefore Choo makes them a denomination of the assistant officers of husbandry (農官之副). Even K'ang accepts this determination, and argues in favour of it (保—安 and 介—助). 莫春, 'late in spring,' i.e., the third month of the season, is to be understood with reference to the Hsia year. II. 7, 8. L. 7 may also be translated, 'And what more do we require of you?' So, the 'Flower and Essence of the Shu (其他又何所求於民),' 新—新田, 'new fields,'—see on II. III. IV. 1; 畬 denotes fields in the third year of their cultivation. A 治 has to be understood before 新 (所求者惟此新畬之田, 治之如何耳). II. 9, 10. 於皇 is said by Choo to be 'an exclamation of admiration,'—於乎, 美哉. 來麥— as in [I.] X. 明 is taken by Choo as—明賜, 'the bright gift,' i.e., of God. But the meaning which I have given is more natural and suitable. Fan Ch'oo-si says, 'The wheat and barley were ripe in summer. In the end of spring they were beginning to ripen. Hence the speaker is led on from the mention of that time to think of them.' II. 11, 12. 迄—至, 'to come to,' here—our 'will.' 用—以, 'by means of the wheat and the barley.' 康年,— 'make the year happy,' i.e., grant a fruitful year. II. 13—15. 衆人, 'all the men,' is, of course, to be taken of the husbandmen,—甸徒 錢 (2d tone) is defined by 兆 (兆 with 金 at the side), said by Medhurst to be 'a spade or shovel, a weeder or hoe.' Ts'ien Ts'uen-sieh says it was used to raise the earth (起土). The 耨 was a kind of hoe; the 耨, a short reaping-hook or sickle. 奄,— 'soon,' 'anon.' 艾 (read 4, to distinguish it from the plant 艾),— 'to cut,' 'to reap.'

Rhymes are found in 工, 公, cat. 9; to which we may add 求, 牟, cat. 3, 1. 1; and 年, 人, cat. 12, 1. 1.

Ode 2. Narrative. INSTRUCTIONS TO THE OFFICERS OF HUSBANDRY. PROBABLY, LIKE THE PRECEDING ODE, AFTER SOME SACRIFICE TO GOD FOR A GOOD YEAR. The Preface says that this was an ode sung on the occasions of sacrifice by the king to God, in spring and summer, for a good year. But there is no intimation of sacrifice in it; nor would any one ever have thought of seeking for it but for the place of the ode in this Part of the She. Evidently the place is of a kindred nature with the preceding ones.

LI 1, 2. 噫嘻 form a compound exclamation; but it is not easy to determine its peculiar significance. The dot, says that e is an exclamation 'of pain,' 'of anger,' 'of perplexity,' none of which meanings suits this passage. Maou, again, defines he by 和, and Ying-tai by 敕 with which meanings I cannot construe the line. You Sze-koo (T'ang dyn.) however, explains the term as 自得之貌 'the app. of satisfaction,' or 'self-possession.' So I understand it; and the two together—Oh! yes! The 成王既昭假爾 are all but unmanageable. That 成王 can only mean king Ching seems clear. Maou gives for the terms—成是王事, which become still more obscure in Ying-tai's expansion of them. Ch'ing makes out the six characters to mean—能成周王之功其德已著至矣謂光被四表格于上下. Choo, of course, takes 成王 correctly, but he says that 昭假爾 is like the 格爾衆庶 of the Shoo, IV. 1, 1, et al., and expands—成始置田官而

嘗戒命之也. 'King Ching first appointed officers of the fields, and cautioned and charged them.' This also is quite unsatisfactory. K'ang mentions an older view of Choo's

一我之成其王業者既昭假于爾上帝. 'Our establishment of our royal possession has been brightly approved by Thee, O God.' K'ang rightly objects to this, that it introduces confusion into the piece, the 爾 here

being referred to God, and those in II. 5, 7 to the people; and then he gives the view of one of the Soos, of which he himself approves:—天之

所以成我王業者既昭至矣. 'The way in which Heaven has established our royal possession has been made brightly to appear;—taking 爾 simply as—矣. But to both these views, besides other objections, there applies especially this, that the interpretation of 成王 is inadmissible. The view which I have adopted in the translation is a modification of one suggested in 'The Flower and Essence of the She.' We are to suppose that king K'ang, in connection with his sacrifice at the border altar, had performed some service at the shrine of king Ching, asking, perhaps, what day would be propitious for the sacrifice (卜日於成王之廟. Then when the sacrifice had gone off happily, and he had assembled the officers of husbandry, he begins his address to them by saying that king Ching had come brightly near, and directed them to a fortunate day. This is the only way in which I can make any sense out of these lines. 爾 is simply—矣. I. 3. 時—是. 'these.' I. 4. 百穀. 'the hundred kinds of grain,'—the various kinds.

II. 5. 6. 駿發爾私—大發爾私
田. 'grandly turn up your private fields.' Choo defines 發 by 耕 'to plough,' but the term should be taken more generally. Ch'ing says, 'In the cultivation of the ground, the allotments of families were separated by a small ditch (遂);

ten allotments, by a larger (溝); a hundred, by what we may call a brook (澗); a thousand by a small stream (澮); and ten thousand, by a river (川). The space occupied by 10,000 families formed a square of a little more than 33 1/2.

We may suppose that this space is intended by the round number of 30 1/2 in the text. Ch'ing further says that it constituted a pao (一部) and was under the charge of a special officer. The mention of the 'private fields' seems to imply that there were also 'the public fields,' cultivated by the husbandmen in common on behalf of the government;—contrary to the view of Choo, that in the royal domain, in the portion of it here contemplated, the public revenue was derived from a different system. As the people are elsewhere introduced, wishing that the rain might first fall upon the public fields, to show their loyalty, the king here speaks only of the private fields, to show his sympathy and consideration for the people. II. 7. 8. 服 is here explained by 事, as often; but we must take it with verbal force, 'to attend to the business of.' 十千—一萬, the ten thousand holders of the 30 1/2. They were all to be called forth to labour, in pairs to each plough. Choo takes the meaning to be that, though so numerous, they were to work with good will and union of strength and attention, realizing on a grand scale the harmony of a single pair of labourers (萬人畢出并力齊心如合一耦).

There are no rhymes.

Ode 3. Allusive. CELEBRATING THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE TWO FORMER DYNASTIES, WHO HAD COME TO COURT TO ASSIST AT SACRIFICE;—MAY HAVE BEEN SUNG WHEN THE KING WAS DISMISSING THEM IN THE ANCESTRAL TEMPLE. The Preface simply says that in this ode we have the representatives of the two previous dynasties, who had come to court to assist at sacrifice (二 王之後來助祭);—to which account of the piece Choo adds nothing. The larger argument which I have adopted is taken from K'ang (二王之後來助祭遣于廟之樂歌也).

II. 1—4. 鷺—as in I. xii. I. 2, 3. The bird was prized for the pure white of its plumage, and its movements were also supposed to be remarkable for their elegance (鷺本潔白又善飛舞以爲容).

振 is defined by 羣飛貌 'the app. of the egrets flying in a flock.' 離 is defined, from the connection, by 澤, 'a marsh or pool.' 'The 100' says Ying-tah, 'is a water-land, and hence it could be flying only to a marsh. This gives us the meaning of pang. The marsh in question was in the west; but no stress to be laid on the 西. It is generally held that 西離 is the pool about the 辟雍 of III. I. VIII. 3, 4, which, it is said, was in the western suburb of the capital; but this point cannot be determined. Wherever the pool was, the egrets were in their element at it, and so the visitors whom the piece celebrates were in their element at the court of Chow. Those visitors, it is affirmed in the argument, were the representatives of the dynasty of Hsia, from the principality of Ke (杞), and of Shang, from that of Sung. It is of course only from tradition that the term 客 is thus restricted. 至—至, 'to come to,' 止 is the final particle. 斯—such. The deportment of the visitors was supposed to be as elegant as the movements of the birds (斯指鷺言), so there is a metaphorical as well as an allusive element in these lines.

II. 3—8 are in praise of the two nobles, and contain assurance of the king's confidence in them and good will to them. 在彼, 在此—'there,' 'here,'—their own States, and at the court of Chow. 無惡, 無讟—無有惡之者, 無有厭之者,—as in the translation. 庶幾, along with the wish of the king, convey his assurance, that so it would be with them. They would ever conduct themselves so as to deserve the praise which II. 5, 6 expressed. 永終, together,—to perpetuate. Kiang says, 'The rise of the three dynasties was entirely from the appointment of Heaven, without the shadow of partiality displayed in it. The displacement of one arose from such men as Kieh and Shou; and the elevation of another from such men as Tang and Woo. The descendants of the occupying and of the displaced Houses stood to one another in the relation of host and guest, without any consciousness of undue exaltation on the part of the former, or of shame on the part of the latter.' But this would require more than mortal virtues on both sides.

The rhymes are—離, 容, cat. 9, and 惡, 讟, 夜, 譽, cat. 5, 1, 1.

Ode 4. Narrative. AN ODE OF THANKSGIVING FOR A PLENTIFUL YEAR. Both the Preface and Choo say further that the ode was used at the sacrifices in autumn and winter, and Choo adds that the thanksgiving was to the Father of Husbandry (Shin-nung,—see on II. vi. VII. 2,—the First Husbandman, or Hou-tsieh), the Spirits of the land and those of the four quarters (方社; as also in II. vi. VII. 2), &c. But opinions are endlessly divided as to the Spirits who were sacrificed to; and Fan Ch'oo-si, after enumerating half a dozen conflicting views, concludes by saying that 'the sum of the matter is that it was a piece to be sung at a sacrifice of thanksgiving (要之爲報祭之樂章)'

L. 1. 稌—稻 'paddy or rice.' This line is understood as referring to the grain of the people, that there would be no scarcity in their families, while II. 2, 3 refer specially to the stores of the king. Under millet and rice, we may suppose, all other kinds of grain are comprehended. II. 2, 3. Choo observes here that 亦 is merely an expletive particle,—so I have treated it in nearly all cases of its occurrence. 萬, without question, means 10,000; and 億 is most commonly accepted as the name for 100.

000. I must also agree with Kweh and others in taking 秬 as meaning a million. If we do not take the terms as thus rising in decimal progression, then 億 will be  $10,000 \times 10,000 = 100,000,000$ , and 秬—億  $\times$  億— $10,000,000,000,000,000$ . The latter seems to be the view of Maou and Choo here (數萬至萬曰億數億至億曰秬). The common use of 秬 is as the denomination for a hundred millions. LI.5-7. 爲—'to make.' 烝—進 'to set forth'; so that 烝畀—'to offer to.' 祖妣—'grandfather and grandmother,' 妣 taking that meaning from 祖. But we must extend the meaning to ancestors, male and female, generally. 洽—備 'to be provided for.' 百禮—'all ceremonies,' meaning all sacrifices and feasts whatsoever. LI.8. We must understand a 神, meaning all the Spirits who had been or might be sacrificed to, as the subject of 降. 皆—徧, 'universal.' Choo takes the line as in the future tense, which, possibly, is the better construction (而神降之福將甚徧也).

The rhymes are—秬 醴 妣 禮 皆, cat. 10, 1, 2.

Ode 5. Narrative. THE BLIND MUSICIANS OF CHOW; THE INSTRUMENTS OF MUSIC; AND THEIR HARMONY. The Preface, which is followed by Choo, says that this piece was made on the occasion of the duke of Chow's completing his instruments of music, and announcing the fact in a grand performance in the temple of king Wan.

The critics generally admit that it was not made for any occasion of sacrifice (非祭祀之時所奏).

LI. 1, 2. 有瞽—like 矇矇 in III.1. VIII.4. The repetition of the phrase serves to denote that the blind musicians were many. In the Chow Le. III.1.22, the enumeration of these blind musicians gives 2 directors of the 1st rank (大師), 4 of the second (小師), 40 performers of the 1st grade, 100 of the 2d, and 160 of the 3d; with 300 assistants who were possessed of vision. I must say that I am incredulous as to this collection of blind musicians about the courts of Chow. 庭—'a court-yard.' Here we must understand it of the court below the raised hall of the temple of king Wan.

LI.3-8. All the instruments here were performed on in the open court below the hall. LI.3, 4.—see on III.1. VIII.3. Choo says that the feathers spoken of were stuck or placed (樹—置) on the teeth of the face-board. More probably they were employed as ornaments for the tops of the posts;—as, the 'Flower and Essence of the Shu (虞之上角置羽爲飾)' 應 is generally taken as the name of a small drum, and 田 as that of a large one. 'The ging and the xien were the suspended drums';—under the Hsia dynasty. It is said, drums were made with feet on which they stood; under the Shang, they were supported on pillars; the duke of Chow introduced the practice of suspending them from a frame. 鞀—i.e. 發;—see Ana. XVII. ix. 4. The instrument was a small drum, which could be held in the hand, with two ears, or balls attached to it by strings. The balls struck the ends and made music, as the handle was twirled about. 祝 and 圉 did not themselves discontinue music, but were used to direct the band, the former giving the signal for the performers to commence, the latter for them to stop. The ch'ui was a sort of wooden box, with a handle in the top, which moved a cross piece of wood at the bottom, that gave the signal as it struck against the sides. The yu was made to resemble a couching tiger, with a toothed ridge upon his back, along which a stick was drawn to give the signal to stop. Another name of it is 敵. Medhurst, under ch'ui, has confounded the two instruments together. 奏—作樂, 'to make music.' The shun was a sort of pan-pipe, made on a large scale with 23 tubes of bamboo, or on a smaller, with 16 tubes.

管,—this was a kind of flute. But it was double in structure somehow, so that two were blown together.

LL 9—13 Nothing is said in the above lines of the stringed instruments, which were used in the hall above the court, nor is the enumeration complete of all the instruments which were used in the court below. We cannot account for the omissions; but in LL 9, 10, the writer proclaims the excellence of the performance. 嗶嗶—

Ode 6. Narrative. SUNG IN THE LAST MONTH OF WINTER, AND IN SPRING, WHEN THE KING PRESENTED A FISH IN THE ANCESTRAL TEMPLE. In the Le Ke, IV, vi, 49, it is mentioned that the king, in the beginning of winter, gave orders to his chief fisher to commence his duties,

He partook of the fish first captured, but first presented one as an offering in the back apartment of the ancestral temple; and in the first month of spring, when the sturgeon began to make their appearance (IV. I. 25), the king presented one in the same place. On these notices the argument in the Preface is constructed; and no doubt, some analogous ceremonies were observed by the kings of Chow. When the fish generally, and then the sturgeon, came into season, choice specimens would be presented to their ancestors, as an act of duty, and an acknowledgment that it was to their favour that the king and the people were indebted for the supplies of food which they received from the waters.

II. 1, 2. 猗與 is a compound term of exclamation. 漆沮, —rivers of K'o-chow; the same that are mentioned in II. III. VI. 1. Some take 潛 here as the verb, = 'to lie hid'; but both Maou and Choo define the term by 椽 a place constructed of wood, if we can speak of construction in the case, thrown into the water for the comfort of the fish, to afford them warmth, and where they might breed. This meaning of the character is found in the dictionary (魚之所息謂之潛).

II. 3.—see on I. v. III. 4. We have met with all the names in I. 4 but 鱸 or 白鱸 which is described as 'a fish, long and narrow.' Williams thinks it may be a species of Clupea or agronia. The 'increase of happiness' would come from the Spirits of their ancestors. 'So offering and sacrificing,' says Le Hwa, 'the Spirits would aid them with great happiness (神助之以大福). But we are not to suppose that the Spirits would send down happiness, because of the many fishes that were offered to them. They would do so because of the reverence and sincerity with which they were offered when they were in season.'

The rhymes are—沮 魚, cat. 5, 1, 1; 鱸, 鯉 祀 福, cat. 1, 1, 2.

Ode 7. Narrative. APPROPRIATE AT A SACRIFICE BY KING WOO TO HIS FATHER WAN. This account of the ode is that given by Choo. According to the Preface, the piece was appropriate to the 禘, or great quinquennial sacrifice offered by the kings of Chow, mentioned in the Annals, III. x., xl., and Ying-tah further thinks that it was made by the duke of Chow for king Ching to celebrate the universal peace which was established throughout the kingdom. Maou also says that the great ancestor contemplated in it was king Wan, which seems to me inconsistent with the nature of the 禘 sacrifice. The Imperial editors allow that the ode better admits of explanation on Choo's view. There is, in fact, no end of the perplexities and conflicting opinions in the interpretation of the details on the old view, and Choo exercised a wise discretion in departing from it. In Confucius' time the three great families of Loo used this ode in sacrificing in their ancestral temples;—to the great dissatisfaction of the sage (See Ana. III. ii.). They used it at the conclusion of the sacrifice, when the sacrificial vessels and their contents were being removed (以離徹) and the probability is that it was made at first to be used at that time, and hence we find it called by the name of 徹 (徹) as well as yung.—Even on the view of the ode given by Choo, he has some difficulties to dispose of. II. 1—4 are plainly narrative, and proceed from an onlooker. The king would never speak of himself in the terms 天子穆穆 II. 5—8 are as plainly from the lips of the king, the sacrificer; and so are II. 13—16. But if II. 9—12 stood alone, we should take them, like II. 1—4, as descriptive, and translate in the 3d person.

II. 1—4. II. 1, 2 are predicates of the princes (辟公,—as in [I.] IV.) assisting in the service. 離離 and 肅肅,—as in III. I. VI. 3.

And ensuring prosperity to thy descendants.

'Thou comfortest me with the eyebrows of longevity;
Thou makest me great with manifold blessings.
I offer this sacrifice to my meritorious father,
And to my accomplished mother.'

I can only regard 止 as a particle. Choo says on 穆穆 simply that it is descriptive of the king (天子之容). Ying-tuh, after the Urh-ya, finds nothing more in it than the general idea of 美, 'admirable,' 'elegant.' But that does not exhaust its meaning. The 'Complete Digest' expands it into 至和無迹 至敬無聲 端默無爲. 'Profound' comes nearer it than any one English term I can think of.

II.5-8. Here we have king Woo speaking, though there is no indication in the text of any change of person. LI 1.2 Choo takes 於 as the exclamation Oh!, and this obliges him to understand that the bull was contributed by the assisting princes (此和敬之諸侯薦大牲以助我之祭事). But the imperial editors observe that there is no evidence that such a thing was ever done by the princes, while there are abundant testimonies as to the victims being provided by the king. The difficulty is altogether avoided by reading 於 with its usual pronunciation, which gives the meaning of the line as in the translation. 肆一陳肆祀 - 'to arrange, set forth, the sacrifice.'

LI.7.8 假一大, 'great,' we might also take it as 嘉, 'admirable.' 皇考 - 皇, as in

III.1.X.5; 考 is 'a deceased father.' 綏 - 'to comfort,' 'to give support and settlement to.'

LI.9-12 must be translated in the 2d person, though the lines themselves, as I have said, rather indicate the 3d. 維人維后 - compare the 維人 in [I.] IV, L.9. 宣 - 通 or 徧, with reference to the comprehensive range and penetration of Wan's wisdom. 燕 - 安, 'to give rest to.' Hwang Tao, referring to the statement in III.1.VII.1, that 'God surveyed the four quarters of the kingdom, seeking for some one to give settlement to the people,' adds, 'Thus what Heaven has at heart is the settlement of the people. When they have rest given to them, Heaven is at rest.' 昌 - 盛, with equal force, 'to make prosperous.'

LI.13-16. 眉壽 - as in II.ii.VII.4. 繁 - 'manifold.' 右 - 尊, 'to honour,' - with reference to the sacrifice that had been offered. 烈考 - i. 7, 皇考, in 1.7. 文母 must be referred to T'ao-sao, the queen of Wan. Ode 8. Narrative. APPROPRIATE TO AN OCCASION WHEN THE FEUDAL PRINCES WERE ASSISTING KING CHING AT A SACRIFICE TO KING WOO. The Preface and Choo agree so far regarding this ode in that they regard it as having been made with reference to a sacrifice by king Ching in the temple of his father. Wherein they differ is, that the Preface says the sacrifice was on the first occasion of the princes making their appearance before the shrine of Woo, while Choo allows no such specification of time in it. Which view we are to adopt depends on the meaning given to the commencing term 載. Is it the initial particle, and untranslatable, as Choo holds? Or has it the meaning of 始, as Mao says, so that 1.1 will mean, 'on the first appearance of the princes at the court of their sovereign?' The character itself will admit of either interpretation of it, and there is nothing in the piece to fix its meaning. The imperial editors give their decision in favour of the view of the Preface, which Choo himself at one time admitted. There was an appropriateness, they say, in king Ching's leading them to the temple of his father, on their first presentation at his court. This I allow, but there would be nothing inappropriate in his doing so on some subsequent occasion as well. The point is one which cannot be positively determined.—The ode, it will be observed, is about the sacrifice; but it was not said or sung at the sacrifice. 1.1. 載, is the initial particle; or—始, 'first,' 'on the first occasion of;—see above. 見 (read shen)—朝覲, 'to appear at court before the king.' We must understand 辟公, 'the feudal princes,' as in 1.12, as the subject. 辟王, 'the ruling king,' is of course king Ching. 曰 is not to be translated. Mih-tze quotes the line with 聿 (尙賢篇) 章—法度, 'laws and rules,' meaning the various regulations which were delivered to the princes when they appeared at court, to be put in force in their own States. 1.1.3—6 all describe the state with which the arrival of the princes at the capital was accompanied. 旂—as in III. VIII. 5. This is the first time we have found the descriptive 龍 along with it. 陽陽 expresses the brilliance of the flags. Bells attached to the front-board of the carriage were called 和; those fixed at the top of the banner-staff, 鈴; other bells on the yoke or the horses' bits were called 鷩. 央央 is intended to give the sound made by the bells. From III. III. VII. 2 we learn that the end of the reins were adorned with metal rings; 有鷩 denotes the glittering appearance which these made. So Ch'ing explains the phrase (金飾貌):—better than Choo's taking it of the sound made by the rings. 休—美 'admirable.'

1.1. 7, 8 have for their subject the king, who, after giving audience to the princes, proceeded to present them, as it were, to the Spirit of his father. 見—as in 1.1. 昭考 is not to be translated—'his illustrious father.' 昭 has here the technical sense which is explained under chapter 19th of "The Doctrine of the Mean." Woo's place in the Ancestral Temple was on the left of the shrine of the great ancestor of the House of Chow. The reduplication of the 以 might be disregarded. The offerings were the expression of the king's filial piety. Ho K'uei says, "Hsiao denotes the filial thoughts,—the inward tasking of the mind; Hsiao denotes the offerings, the outward contribution to the utmost of the ability (孝者孝思內盡志也享者獻享外盡物也)"

Li 9-14. The subject of 介 will be 神—the spirit of king Woo, who would respond with blessing to the filial offerings of his son. 言 is the expletive particle. On the 之, the "Complete Digest" says, 之字指今日言, which I do not understand. The meaning of L2 evidently is that king Ching, through the favour of his father, would long preserve his dignity, and all the blessings of his lot. 思 is the initial particle:—as in the 10th ode of last Decade, et al. 祐—福, 'happiness,' 'blessings.' L1.12-14, are in compliment to the princes assisting at the sacrifice, intimating that it was to their co-operation that the king was indebted for the favourable answer which would be given to his sacrifice. This seems to me the only natural or legitimate construction of these lines; and I am surprised that the imperial editors should demur to it, and call attention to Ching's view that L. 13 is to be understood of the blessing which the princes themselves would receive, and not of that which they secured for the king (綏之以多福是神安辟公以多福非謂安孝子也) L. 12,—as in ode IV. of last Decade; 緝熙,—as in ode VI. of the same. 于 has perhaps the force of 'up to the point of.' Adorned with such great dignity, It is very natural that he should be blessed.

of one of the former dynasties, and the mention of his white horse (or horses) is a sufficient substantiation of the tradition in the Preface, that he was the famous viscount of Wei (see the Shuo, IV. xi.), an elder brother, or an uncle, of the last king of the Shang dyn. When the rebellion of that king's son was put down, and the son himself put to death, the viscount of Wei was made duke of Sung—there to continue the sacrifices of the House of Shang. In this ode he is represented as coming to the court of Chow, where he would assist king Ching in the sacrifices in his ancestral temple. Ho K'iao says, 'The language, like that of ode 3, is all in praise of the guest, but it was sung or recited in the temple; and therefore it is rightly placed among the Sung.' Perhaps there is an indication in it of the temple,—in the last line.

II. 1—4. The repetition of the 有客 serves to call attention to the visitor, and to intimate the joy which the sight of him occasioned. K'iang is the only critic I have met with who finds in it an indication that more than one visitor is indicated by it,—the duke of Sung namely, and his attendants. With the dynasty of Yin white had been the esteemed and sacred colour, as red was with Chow, and hence the duke, as the representative of Yin, had his carriages drawn by white horses. Riding on horseback being a thing not mentioned in the Shu, we must take 馬 in the plural. The use of 白駒 in II. iv. II. may be pleaded in favour of a singular construction of 馬; but perhaps, in that ode also we ought to take 駒 as plural.

At any rate, the duke of Sung would come to the court of Chow, as the other princes did, in a carriage. Choo says 亦 is merely the initial particle, but I prefer regarding it here, with Soo Ch'eb, as 仍, with all the meaning in the translation. 有萋有且 is descriptive of the 旅 in I. 4, the officers in attendance on the duke. Choo acknowledges that he does not understand 萋且; but Maon gives the characters the meaning of 敬慎貌 'the app. of being reverent and careful.' It is as well to accept this explanation, though given merely because it would suit the connection. Compare 萋萋 in II. v. VI. 1. 敦 (read ng) 豕 is defined by 選擇, 'selected.' The characters, no doubt,—追豕 in III. i. IV. 5. There they are used of metal and jade engraved and chiselled; here they are metaphorically applied to the officers of Sung. 旅,—'a company;' here, the suite of the duke.

II. 5—6 are indicative of the esteem felt at the court for the duke, and how gladly the king would have detained him. Compare the similar phraseology in II. iv. II. 1, 2. 'To lodge one night in a place is called 宿; to lodge two nights is called 信.' The Urh-ya explains the repetition of 宿, as meaning 'to lodge two nights (再宿)' and that of 信 as meaning 'to lodge four nights (四宿).' 言 is merely the expletive particle. The first 繫—a 'rope,' the second.—'to tie or tether.' If his horses were tied, the duke would be obliged to remain.

LL 9—12. The duke would not be stayed, and here the king tells how he would continue to show his appreciation of him, when he was gone. 薄言 is the compound particle with which we are familiar. 追之 is taken as—送之. 'I will escort him,' including the giving to him a parting feast. L. 10 has been taken variously. Choo understands 左右, 'on the left and the right,' as—in every possible way; and the meaning of the line is as I have given it in the translation. The construction is natural and unstrained. Ch'ing understood 左右 of the king's ministers (左右之臣), who would be present at the feast, and show their desire for the happiness of the distinguished visitor. The 'Essence and Flower of the She' adopts this view. K'ang takes 左右 of the members of the duke's suite, who deserved, as well as their master, to be esteemed and honoured. L. 11 is referred to the duke of Sung, the greatest of the feudatories of Chow, and worthy of his dignity; so that 淫 has the sense of 大, 'great.' The only critic who takes a diff. view is Fan Ch'oo-e, who refers the line to Woo-k'ang, on whom the duke of Chow had dealt the terrors of justice (威), because of his rebellion (淫). Thus the line contains a warning to the duke of Sung; but this is foreign to the spirit of the whole piece, to say nothing of the 'chiselling' of the construction. I said that in l. 12 there is, perhaps, an indication of the ode's having been sung in the temple;—before the shrine of king Woo. The subject of 降福 is not expressed, but 神 may very well be understood, and the line,—'Very easy is it for thee, O spirit [of my father], to send down blessing on him.' I have left the meaning, however, indefinite in the translation. 夷—易, 'easy,'—natural.

The rhymes are—馬, 旅, 馬, cat. 5, l. 2; 追, 綏, 威, 夷, cat. 15, l. 1.

Ode 10. Narrative. Sung in the ancestral temple to the music regulating the dance in honour of the achievements of king Woo. This account of the piece, given in the Preface, is variously corroborated, and I do not know that any of the critics have called it in question. The dance was made by the duke of Chow, and was supposed to represent in some way the success of Woo's career. Perhaps the brief ode was sung as a prelude to the dance; or it may be that the seven lines are only a fragment. This, indeed, is most likely, as we have several odes in the next section all referred to the same occasion. The 爾 in l. 7 has made me use the second person in the translation throughout.

LL 1, 2. 於 (wo),—the exclamation. The structure of l. 2 is like that of 無競惟人, which we have met with in III. li. 11, et al. 烈,—in the sense of 功, 'merit,' 'achievement.' Nothing could be conceived of grander or stronger than what Woo had accomplished. LL 3, 4. But if Woo had reared the superstructure,

Wan had laid the foundations of it. 開厥 後—'opened the future,' i.e., prepared the way for all that should be done by those who came after him. 115—8. 嗣武—'inheriting
Woo,' i.e., Woo, as the successor and heir of Wan. 受之—'received it; i.e., all that Wan had done. 遏—'to repress,' as in III.ii.
IX. 劉—殺, 'to kill,' meaning all the murderous oppression exercised by Show. 耆—致, 'to bring about,'—as in III. i. VII. Even Maou thus explains 耆 here. Fan Ch'oo-e is again singular in insisting on the usual meaning of the term, as —老, so that 1.7 is with him—'When thou was old, thou did'st establish thy merit!'

There are no rhymes.

Ode I. Narrative. APPROPRIATE TO THE YOUNG KING CHING, DECLARING HIS SENTIMENTS IN THE TEMPLE OF HIS FATHER. The Preface says merely that we have here 'the heir-king presenting himself in the ancestral temple (嗣王朝 於廟也);' but the common consent of Maou
and all the critics is that the king was Ching.
The only question is as to the date of the composition, whether the place was made for him

on his repairing to the temple when the mourning for his father was expired, or after the expiration of the regency of the duke of Chow.
K'ang supposes that it was made for Ching's regular use (平日朝於廟), so that both these occasions may be embraced in it.

LI 1-5. 閔—病, 'distress,' 'to be dis-the Shoo (s. p., V. vii. 2, 9, et al.). It may seem appropriate in the lips of him who was only a boy; but elders also employed it. It occurs, for instance, in the Shoo, V. vi. 10, used by the duke of Chow of himself. 家-國家, which we may translate 'the kingdom.' 造 is defined by

成, which Ying-tah endeavours to explain by saying, 'When there is progressive action, there will be completion in the end; hence 造-成

(有所造爲終必成就故造猶成也)' Whether there be a reference to any special calamities in 1. 2 we cannot tell; but compare king Ching's complaint in the Shoo, V. vii. 1. 嬖-i q. 戕. The redoubled character gives the idea of being solitary and unsupported (孤獨). 疚—as in III. vii. 3, et al. 皇考, is, of course, king Woo. 永世-終身, 'all his life.' The young king proposes the filial conduct of his father as the great thing to be imitated by himself.

In ll. 6-9 king Woo is still the subject of ll. 6, 7. 祖, 'grandfather,' refers to king Wên, Ching's grandfather and Woo's father. 茲-此

'this,' but we must substitute 'my' for it in the translation. L. 7 indicates how Woo kept the thought of his father before him, as if he were continually seeing him ascending and descending in the court (常若見我皇祖之陟降於庭). This is a much more likely construction than that proposed by Maou, who would take 庭, as he does elsewhere, as 一直, so that the line—'who was upright above and below,' i.e.,

Heaven-wards and man-wards. The 止 in ll. 7, 9 are both the final particle.

LL. 10, 11. The 皇王 are to be taken of both Wên and Woo. Maou defines 序 by 緒, 'the thread of a clus or cocoon,'—the line of succession in the kingdom. 思 is emphatic, 慕 'to long for,' 'to strive.'

The rhymes are—造, 疚 (prop. cat. 1), 考, 孝, cat. 3, 12; 庭, 敬, cat. 11; 王, 忘, cat. 10.

Ode 2. Narrative. SEEMS TO BE A SEQUEL TO THE FORMER ODE. THE YOUNG KING TELLS OF HIS DIFFICULTIES AND INCOMPETENCIES; ASKS FOR COUNSEL TO HELP TO COPY THE EXAMPLE OF HIS FATHER; STATES HOW HE MEANT TO DO SO; AND CONCLUDES WITH AN APPEAL OR PRAYER TO HIS FATHER. The Preface says that this piece relates to a council held by Ching with his ministers in the ancestral temple; but we can hardly affirm anything so definite about it.

L. 1. 訪-問, 'to ask,' or 謀, 'to take counsel.' 落 is defined by 始, 'the beginning,' i.e., here, the commencement of Ching's reign. The term is supposed to have this signification from the use of 落 to denote the feast or ceremony with which any great building was inaugurated (凡宮室始成則落之故以落爲始). Ching's accession to the throne, or to the govt., would stand in that relation to his future reign. Ching supposes that L. 2 is the counsel which had been given by the ministers, but I prefer to take it as in the translation. 時-是, 'this,' but we must render it by 'my.' 昭考, —as in [II.]

VIII. LL 3, 4. 悠—遠 'far-reaching,' referring to the plans of king Woo. 艾 is here defined by 盡 'to carry on and out,' which is not found in the dictionary. A reference is made, in illustration of this meaning, to the use of 艾 in II. III. VIII. 2, q.v. L. 5. 將 is with many of the critics taken as—扶推, (comp. its use in II. vi. 2), or—助, 'to help,' so that

Ching is asking his ministers to support him and help him to attain to the example of his father. But we may understand it of his expressing his own purpose to try and advance

(就) in that direction; and then L. 6 says that though he might do so, his course would be diverging still, and like a dispersion of his father's achievements. 判—分; 渙—散

L. 8. 堪—勝 'to be equal to bear,' or 'to cope with.' LL 9, 10 are puzzling, but I think we have the key to them in L. 7 of last ode. As

Woo, there, is represented as keeping his father's example always before him, as if he saw him ascending and descending in his court, so does Ching here say that he would keep Woo's example before him. 紹—'to continue,' i.e.,

Ching was now in his father's room continuing the line of Chow. Kiang takes 紹 rather differently, but his general view of the lines is what I have given:—念我皇考之紹

我皇祖也上下于庭陟降于家時見之無一事不相契

合. In II. 11, 12, the king addresses himself to his father, and indicates his dependence on his help.

The only rhyme which Twan-she makes out is—渙難 cat. 14.

Ode 3. Narrative. KING CHING SHOWS HIS SENSE OF WHAT WAS REQUIRED OF HIM TO PRESERVE THE FAVOUR OF HEAVEN, A CONSTANT JUDGE; INTIMATES HIS GOOD PURPOSES; AND ASKS THE HELP OF HIS MINISTERS TO BE ENABLED TO FULFIL THEM. The Preface says that in this piece his ministers present cautionary warning to the king; but that can be an account of the first six lines only. The general view is that in those lines we have the admonitions of the ministers, and in the remaining six the reply of the king.

In II. 7—12 the king speaks certainly in the first person, and in the others I think the king is also the speaker, recapitulating, it may be, with his own view of it, the counsel which had been given. The only claim which the piece has to a place among the Temple odes is that it may be a portion of the consultation which, it is affirmed, took place between king Ching and his ministers,—in the temple.

LL 1—6. The 之 after 敬 serves to bring out its meaning as in the translation. In L. 4, 思 is the final particle. 顯—明 'evident'; and this makes us take 天 as—天之道.

'the way or course of Heaven.' L. 3—see III.

I. 6, 7. L. 4. It might be supposed that Heaven being so high above us, does not take account of our affairs. The reply to this is given in II. 5, 6. 士—事, 'affairs';—compare its use in

L. xv. IV. 1. Ho K'ue says, '士 is a designation of men of talent, as being equal to the management of affairs (其人足任事), and hence the term has the signification of "affairs" in the text.' The indefinite 厥 must be rendered by 'our.' 在茲—'here,' i.e., in every place, wherever we are.

II. 7—12. In I. 8 止 is the final particle. There may, possibly, be a reference in the line to the rumour about the disloyalty of the duke of Chow, which the young king had given credit to for a time. I. 5—'Daily going towards, monthly advancing (將—進).' The words have given rise to a variety of expressions for continuous progress:—日有所就 月有所進; 日成月長; 日有所造 月

有所往, &c. L. 10. 'Learning,' it is said, is opening the door of intelligence, the way by which one enters into reverent attention to duty. 緝 is the continuation of the daily and monthly progress. 熙 has reference to the light which, from day to day and month to month, is so obtained. We are to regard II. 11, 12 as addressed by the king to his ministers. 佛—i.e., 弼—輔, 'to assist.' 仔—任, 'to sustain a burden.' 時仔肩, 'this burden on my shoulders';—the duties incumbent on me. Choo seems to take 顯 as an adjective (示我以顯明之德行). The construction is simpler if we take it as a verb.

The rhymes are—之, 思, 哉, 茲, cat. 1, 1. 1; 子, 止, 毖, 1. 2; 將, 明, 行, cat. 10.

PURPOSE TO BE CAREFUL IN THE FUTURE; HE WILL GUARD AGAINST THE SLIGHT BEGINNINGS OF EVIL, AND IS PENETRATED WITH A SENSE OF HIS OWN INCOMPETENCIES. This ode may be considered as the conclusion of the service in the ancestral temple with which it and the previous three are connected. The Preface says that in it king Ching asks for the assistance of his ministers. No such request, however, is directly expressed.

L.I. 戀—to reprimand, 'to warn.' Ching had offended somehow in the past,—probably in indulging suspicions of the duke of Chow. 其 gives emphasis to the declaration. 蚩—

愼, 'to be careful against;—compare its use in III. III. 5. L.I. 2, 3. Maon and most of the critics take 莫—do not;—addressed to the ministers. Then 莽 is defined by 擊曳, as if the ministers had dragged him into contact with a wasp; but if this were a correct exegesis, L.8 would not begin with 自求, 'seeking for myself.' Choo defines 莽 by 使, as in III. III. 5, meaning 'to cause or employ,' or, more generally, 'to have to do with.' This gives a more satisfactory meaning, and the 莫 will be indicative, or—'let me not.' By the 'wasp' is intended, I suppose, the king's uncle, who had joined in rebellion with the son of Choo of Shang, and whom the king had been inclined to trust in preference to the loyal duke. L.I. 4, 5 are intended to set forth how evil at first looks small, but becomes large as it develops.

桃蟲, 'the peach-tree insect' is the name of a small bird, called also 鷽鷽 巧婦

('the clever wife,' from the artistic character of its nest), and by other names. Williams says it is 'a wren, turin, tody, or some such small bird.' 拚—飛貌, 'the appearance of flying,' the bird on the wing. 鳥—大鳥, 'a large bird.' Choo refers to a fabulous belief that the wren grows into a hawk; but it took its origin probably from these lines, which do not necessarily imply it. What we have to see in them is what is small at the beginning

(肇—始) developing to be something great. L.I. 6, 7 again express the sense which the king had of his insufficiency, and L.7, perhaps, of the trouble which it had brought him into in the past.

蓼 is the name of 'a plant with a red stalk, and of a bitter taste;—perhaps the smart-wood. Ching's experience had brought him, as it were, into the midst of a patch of it.

The only rhyme which Tsao-shue gives is that of 鳥, 蓼, cat. 3, 1, 2. To this we may add, 蜂蟲, cat. 10.

Ode 5. Narrative. THE CULTIVATION OF THE GROUND, FROM THE FIRST BREAKING OF IT UP, TILL IT YIELDS ABUNDANT HARVESTS;—AVAILABLE SPECIALLY FOR SACRIFICES AND ON FESTIVE OCCASIONS. WHETHER INTENDED TO BE USED ON OCCASIONS OF THANKSGIVING, OR IN SPRING WHEN PRAYING FOR A GOOD YEAR, CANNOT BE DETERMINED. The Preface says the ode was sung in spring, when the king ploughed a furrow in the field set apart for that purpose, and prayed at the altars of the Spirits of the land and the grain for an abundant year. Choo says he does not know on what occasion it was intended to be used; but comparing it with

[II.] IV., he is inclined to rank it with that as an ode of thanksgiving. The imperial editors give a decision, more positive than is their wont, in favour of the earlier view. The student will see that there is absolutely nothing in the ode itself to determine him in favour of either view. It brings before us a series of pleasing pictures of the husbandry of those early times, and has more interest for the reader than most pieces in the Shu. The imperial editors also say that its place in the Sung makes it clear that it was an accompaniment of some royal sacrifice; but, without controverting this, the poet evidently singled out some large estate, and describes the labour upon it, from the first bringing it under cultivation to the state in which it was before his eye, and concludes by saying that the picture which he gives of it had long been applicable to the whole country.

Li 1, 2 seem to commence with the first breaking up of the ground, which has not been brought under cultivation before. The redoubled 載 is merely the initial particle. 芟—除草 'to remove or clear away grass,' 柞—除木 'to remove bushes and trees.' When this was done, the plough could be set to work, and, as it turned up the ground, the earth became pulverised through the action of the elements which now found free admission to it. This seems to be the meaning of 澤澤, which is explained by 解散 'to be opened and dispersed.'

Li 3, 4. If Li 1, 2 be explained correctly of the first taking in of the ground, then the 耘 or 'weeding' here will be the clearing away of the roots of the grass and bushes;—so, Ch'ing (耘爲除根株). At one time Choo took the same view, but in his 'Collected Comments' he defines 耘 as 'the removal of the grass among the growing corn.' But he is incorrect, for it is not till li 12 that mention is made even of the sowing. 'A thousand pairs would be two thousand men. 隰 denotes the low wet grounds, specially intended for the fields; 畛, the raised banks, serving for paths, which were made alongside the ditches and channels by which the ground was divided. 徂—往 'to go to,' here indicating the places where the labour was applied.

Li 5—12. We are now, I conceive, to withdraw our thoughts from the labour thus far indicated, and to have before us a large, cleared estate, on which the proprietor and his dependants are at work in the spring of the year. The redoubled 侯 in li 5, 7 is evidently a particle like the 載 in li 1. 主—家長, 'the Head of the family,' 伯—長子, 'his eldest son,' 亞—仲叔, 'the younger sons (Ying-tah says, 亞訓次也, 次於伯故知仲叔也),' 旅—子弟, 'the younger members of the family' (Ying-tah says, 旅訓衆也, 幼者之衆, 即季弟(?)及伯仲叔之諸子也); 彊—有力者, 'the able-bodied men (By these, I apprehend, we are to understand the labourers of different clans, regularly attached, as helpers, to the family. Ying-tah supposes they were strong men who, after doing their own work, were able to go and give a hand where they were needed),' 以—能左右之者, 'men who could be sent to the left or the right (Choo says that they were like the hired labourers of a later time,—若今時傭力之人隨主人所左右者也)' But they must have got some remuneration for their labour even in those early days.

Maou defines 噉 by 衆貌 'the appearance of a multitude,' and then 饁 will indicate those bringing their food to the workers in the fields. He understands 士 in L. 10 of 子弟 all the younger people who have come with the wives bringing the viands. Much more pleasing, and I believe correct also, is Choo's view of L. 8—10. 噉 is the sound made by the workers as they partake of the viands brought to them (衆飲食聲). L. 9 belongs to the husbands lovingly regarding their wives, and L. 10 to the wives keeping close to their own husbands. 士—夫, 'husband.' I do not think that Maou's explanation of the term by 子弟 is admissible. There is hardly a picture in the She equal to that which these three lines give us:—'a picture,' says Yen Ts'an, 'of a well-ordered, happy age (治世之氣象) 略—利, 'sharp.' The meal is over, and the husbandmen go to work. 俶—

始, 'to begin.' 載—事, 'to set to work on.'

Ll. 13, 14. We come to the work of sowing. 實—種子, 'the seed.' 斯—則, so that L. 14—'what the seed contains is living.' The 'Flower and Essence of the She' seems to take 斯 as—此 in a vague sense,—not more than our 其 其穀實之種子, 皆舍此生活之氣.

Ll. 15, 16 tell of the first appearance and subsequent progress of the plants. 驛驛—苗生貌 'the appearance of the young grain growing;—we must understand it of the blade. 達—出土, 'developing from the earth.' 傑 is the same, 'growing long (先長者) through the abundance of the moisture (有厭—受氣足也). Ll. 17, 18. 苗 is the plant now risen to a considerable height, and looking fresh and well-nourished (厭厭). 麋—耘 'to weed,' 'weeder.' 綿綿 describes the weeders as many and close on one another (詳密).

Ll. 19—24. We come to the reaping. 載—the particle. 實 is here the fruit of the field, —the corn cut down, and gathered into sheaves or bundles. 積—as in Hl. II. VI. 1. Ll. 21—24,—comp. in [H] IV., only L. 20 here belongs to the number of stacks, and there to the measures of grain in the granaries.

LI. 25—28. 馨—芬香 'fragrant.' Choo does not know of what things 1.25 is spoken. 1.27 is understood to be descriptive of the spirits, and Fan Ch'oo-s would refer 1.25 to the viands of a feast. The paragraph shows the further use which the results of the husbandry would serve, in addition to sacrifices direct;—for the feasts to visitors and guests at the royal court, which would be the glory of the State; and especially for the comfort of the old, whom we have seen, in III.IV. 4, specially attended to at the conclusion of sacrificial services; or on other occasions. 胡—壽, 'advanced in years,' or 遐, 'with nearly the same meaning,—in the connection.

LI. 29—31 say that the country had for very long been blessed with abundant years. 且—此, 'this.' The first 且—此處, 'here;' the second—此有年之事, 'this abundant harvest.' Similarly, the first 今—'the present time;' the second—'the present prosperity.' Maou defines 振 by 自, 'from'; Choo,

Ode 6. NARRATIVE. MUCH AKIN TO THE PRECEDING:—PRESUMABLY, AN ODE OF THANKSGIVING IN THE AUTUMN TO THE SPIRITS OF THE LAND AND GRAIN. This is the account of the piece given in the Preface. Choo, indeed, says that as there is nothing in ode 5 to lead us to think of it as a prayer for a good harvest, so there is nothing here about thanksgiving. But in the concluding paragraph there is a description of the victim in a sacrifice; and the whole character of the ode suits well with a service of thanksgiving. Yen Te'an says, 'This ode was made for the thanksgiving to the Spirits of the land and the grain in autumn, and it was proper therefore that it should set forth the beginning

There are those who come to see them,
With their baskets round and square,
Containing the provision of millet.

With their light splint hats on their heads,
They ply their hoes on the ground,

These weeds being decayed,
The millets grow luxuriantly.

They fall rustling before the reapers,
And [the sheaves] are set up solidly,

and the end of the labours of husbandry. Hence, though the sacrifice was in the autumn, it recapitulates the ploughing of the spring, and anticipates the harvest of the winter. The imperial editors say that 1.20 plainly indicates, in the use of a bull, a royal sacrifice, and 1.23, as plainly, that it did not take place in the ancestral temple, so that the account given of it in the Preface should be received without hesitation; while, as this is thus an ode of thanksgiving, the connection between it and the preceding is sufficient evidence that that was one of supplication.

11.1, 2. — comp. 11.11, 12 in last ode. 戛 — 嚴利, 'very sharp,' descriptive of the plough-shares. Some say that the phrase expresses the appearance of the shares going into the soil (耜入地之貌). The meaning is much the same.

11.3, 4. — as 11.13, 14 of last ode.
11.5—7 are all to be referred to the wives and children of the workers, bringing their food to them in the fields. 1.5 is difficult, and the sudden change of person in the use of 汝, 'you,' is to me inexplicable; and I have adhered to the 3d person in the translation. 瞻, 'to see,' is also a strange term, and 或 also. 11.6, 7 show that we are to understand 1.5 of the wives and children bringing the food of the workers (婦子之來饌者). Fan Ch'oo-e gives, indeed, a different view of 1.5, as to be taken of the surveyor of the fields (11.11) coming to inspect the ploughing; but I cannot entertain it. 載 is the particle. 筐筥, — as in 11.14. 2. 其饌, — 'the food brought' in the baskets. 伊 — 維, having the force of the copula.

11.8—10. The workers have partaken of their meal, and go to their weeding. 糾 is descriptive of their hats as light, and easily moved. Mao says nothing on the term, but Ching says, — 戴糾然之笠, and Choo says that 糾然 denotes the ease with which the hat was lifted (笠之輕舉). In the 'Complete Digest' we read, 首動則笠動, 'when the head moved, the hat moved.' The line altogether is obscure to me. 鋪, — as in [11.] 1. 趙 = 刺, 'to cut,' — descriptive of the action of the hoe upon the ground. 伊 and 斯 are synonymous, and cannot be attended to in the translation. 薅, — 去, 'to remove,' 'to clear away.' Choo observes that 荼 and 蓼 are here one plant, with different names; called 荼 in the dry soil, and 蓼 (smartweed) in the wet. Ying-tah also observes that the 茶 here is not the 苦茶

Choo, a clan (一族之人), whose members all helped one another in their field-work, so that their harvest might be said to be carried home to their stack-yards at the same time. Then would come the threshing, or treading, and winnowing, after which the grain would be brought into the houses. So, the 'Flower and Essence of the

Ode 7. Narrative. AN ODE, APPROPRIATE TO A SACRIFICE, AND THE FEAST AFTER IT. Few pieces in the odes give more trouble to a translator than this one, short and apparently trivial as it is. The Preface says that it belongs to the entertainment of the personators of the dead
in connection with the supplementary sacrifice on the day after one of the great sacrifices in the ancestral temple (釋賓尸也);—see HIL II. IV. Choo says that this view is not correct, and gives the argument of the ode as stated above; but he does not say what sacrifice he thought was intended. The imperial editors argue at length in favour of the old view, to which I am half inclined to give in my adhesion.

II. 1. 2 bring before us an officer, or officers (士, an officer of inferior rank) in the sacrificial dress in which they assisted at the services of the ancestral temple (士祭於王之 服). 紕 describes the appearance of the alkies robes as pure and clean (潔貌). 載
—戴, 'to wear on the head.' 弁 is what was called the 爵弁, 'a cap of linen, dyed purple.' 俛俛—恭順貌 'reverent and deferential-looking.' II. 3—5 describe the movements of this officer (or officers) preparatory to the sacrifice (if we are to find a sacrifice in the ode), or to the feast (if it relate only to a feast). 基 is defined by 門塾之基,

'the foundation (i.e., the foot of the stairs) of the apartments at the gate';—intending, I suppose, what we may call the vestibule at the gate leading to the ancestral temple. Two buildings there were outside the gate, fronting the south, and two inside it fronting the north. We are to suppose that the officer goes from the hall to the foot of the stairs to inspect the various dishes arranged for the sacrifice or the feast, and then similarly goes to see the animals, and the tripods for the boiling of the flesh, &c. Whether the 堂 be the great hall in the temple, or merely the hall in the inner buildings of the vestibule, we cannot say. I incline to the latter view, as it was in that hall that the per-sonators of the dead were feasted; and if the ode speaks only of the entertainment to them, which consisted of the provisions of the previous day heated up again, the 羊 and the 牛 will simply be the meat remaining over. 鼐 is 'a small tripod,' and 鼎 'a large one.'

II. 6—9 are understood to describe the good order which characterized the drinking at the feast, or at the conclusion of the sacrifice. The cup of rhinoceros horn was drunk as a punishment; but we are to conceive of it here as standing idly, with no occasion to resort to it. 思
is the particle;—having the force of the copula.
Choo, after Maou and Ch'ing, defines 吳 by 譁, 'noisy.' The dict. gives it as—娛, 'plea-

These lines must belong to the feasters, and not to the officer or officers in II. 1—5; and of the feasters, therefore, we must understand I. 9. 胡考—as in ode 5. 休—徵, 'a proof,' here an admirable thing from which an auspice might be drawn.

Ode 8. NARRATIVE. AN ODE IN PRAISE OF KING WOO. The Preface says that this ode was made to announce in the temple of king Woo the completion, by the duke of Chow, of the Woo Dance, intended to represent the achievements of the king in the overthrow of Shang and the establishment of the Chow dynasty. The 10th ode of last section was also sung, we saw, in connection with that dance. The same thing is affirmed of several of the odes that follow this. The whole may be portions of a larger composition which has not been preserved in its integrity. The name (酌) does not occur in the piece itself. Attempts are made to explain it from the term as meaning 'to deliberate,'—as if we were to find in the lines the proof of Woo's movements being regulated by a deliberate consideration of the times (酌時而行). The Preface says—言能酌先祖之道以養天下也. It means that Woo was guided by the ways of his ancestors, in nourishing the kingdom; which is very far-fetched. The name should probably, be Choh (勺), which we find twice in the Lo Ke (X. li 34), and in the Li Le (燕禮), apparently as the name of a dance. L. 1. 樂—盛, 'complete,' 'powerful.' The most likely meaning of L. 2 is that which I have given in the translation. As Ying-tah says, 'High Heaven's time to take off Chow was not yet come, and king Woo quietly waited its arrival, thus acting in accordance with the way of Heaven (上天誅紂之期未至, 武王靖以待之是遵天之道也).' Gow-yang Sew says, 'He had his army, but he did not display his warlike terrors, but nursed it in obscurity (有師而不耀其威武, 養之以晦也).' L. 3 is in opposition to the 時晦 of I. 2. The darkness passed away; the bright light (熙—光) clearly shone, and Woo acted accordingly. L. 4. 是用—是以, 'thereon,' 介—甲, 'small,' 大介—the 一戎衣 of the Shoo, V. iii. 8. L. 5. 我 is to be understood in the first place of king Ching. 龍—龍—as in II. iii. IX. 2; meaning, I suppose, 'by the favour of Heaven.' L. 6 is in apposition with the 之 躋躋—武貌 'martial-looking.' 造—爲, 'achievement.' For L. 7 the 'Complete Digest' gives 我將何所用以

Ode 9. NARRATIVE. CELEBRATING THE MERIT
AND SUCCESS OF KING WOO. I have mentioned on the last ode, that this is considered (on the authority of the Tso-chuen), as having been a portion of the larger piece which was sung to the dance of Woo. Evidently its subject is king Woo. The Preface says that it was used in a declaration of war in sacrificing to God and the Father of war, which Ying-tah explains as if it had been made by king Woo when he finally took the field against Shou. But this is evidently absurd, as it contains the honorary title given to the first king of Chow after his death,—king Woo. It may be that the piece came to be used on the occasion which the Preface mentions;
but we must refer it in the first place to the reign of Ching.

LL 1, 2 are descriptive of the happy condition of the kingdom under Ching. A revolution is generally followed by famine; but it was not so, when Woo had overthrown the dynasty of Shang. L. 3. 天命—the favour of Heaven?

解—解 'to be mulled,' 'to be tired.' L. 4.

桓桓—武貌 'martial-looking.' L. 4.

ing, probably, the great leaders whom king Wān
had gathered around him, and whom Woo retained equally attached to himself. L. 5. 于

L. 7 is understood of the virtue of Woo, as recognized by Heaven. 皇—as in [1.] IX. Chao says he does not understand 閔, but he ac-

Thus it is that the appointment belongs to Chow.

Ode 10. Narrative. CELEBRATING THE PRAISE OF KING WAN. This is the only account of the piece that can be given from itself. The Tso-chuen says, however, that it was the third of the pieces sung to the dance of Woo; and the Preface says it contains the words with which Woo accompanied his grant of fiefs and appanages to the chief of his followers in the ancestral temple (大封於廟). On this view the 我 is to be understood of king Woo, speaking of himself. Choo's exposition of the lines is more or less affected by this; but if the piece ought to be understood in this way, the author has very imperfectly expressed his meaning. The name Lau (賚-子 'to give') has contributed to this interpretation, as it has been connected with the use of the term in the Analects, XX.14, 周有大賚善人是富, and in the Shoo, V. iii. 9, 賚子四海而萬民悅服.

L. 1. 止 is the final particle. 勤-勞 'to labour diligently.' The 'Complete Digest' observes that 既 is here not 'since,' nor the sign of the past tense, but - 盡 'entirely,' -

Wan left nothing undone. L. 2. 我, it seems to me, is not naturally referred to king Woo; but to all the descendants of Wan; and to his vicine they attribute their possession of the kingdom. L. 4. Their right to the kingdom being such, they would occupy in it accordingly. 時-是 'this,' which we can only explain by referring it to the virtue of king Wan. 繹-尋繹 'repeatedly,' 'ever.'

L. 4. 徂-往 'from now on,' 'henceforth.' The line, literally, 'we henceforth only seek settlement,' i. e., tranquillity and order.

L. 3. 時, here again, is to be referred to king Wan, so that the line - 蓋我文王當日之勤勞是周之所以受命 - as in the translation. Choo makes it - 凡此皆周之命非復商之舊矣 'all these fiefs are now the appointments of Chow, and not, as heretofore, of Shang.'

L. 6. is a repetition of part of L. 3, an admission of the descendants of Wan to themselves. Following out his interpretation of L. 3, Choo understands it as addressed to the appointed feudal chiefs.

Ode 11. Narrative. THE GREATNESS OF CHOW, AND ITS FIRM POSSESSION OF THE KINGDOM, AS SEEN IN THE PROGRESSSES OF ITS BEGINNING SOVEREIGN. In [i.] VIII. we have an ode akin to this, relating a tentative progress of king Woo, to test the acceptance of his sovereignty. This is of a later date, and should be referred, probably, to the time of king Ching, when the dynasty was fully acknowledged. Many critics, however, maintain that this piece likewise was a portion of the ode so often referred to; - in which case we should have to translate in the 3d person, and not the first. The meaning of the title is very uncertain. Maou makes it 樂 -

Soo Ch'eh, the same, - 遊 K'ang makes it 游, - according to the Shwob-wan, 旋

L. 1. 時 is, probably, - 今時 'now,' L. 2. 3. The hills were ascended in the course of a royal sacrifice, and sacrificed to. 墮山 -

L. 4 is very obscure, Choo does not profess to understand 允猶, and we are obliged, as usual in such cases, to fall back on Ch'ing, who takes 允 in its usual signification of 信, 'truly,' and 猶 = 由, 'to travel along' 翕 =

和, 'harmonious,' referring, we may suppose,

assembling the princes in the different quarters

of the kingdom, during his progress, and giving audience to them. They all now responded loyally. L. 7,—nearly as L. 6 of last ode.

TITLE OF THE BOOK.—魯頌四之二. It *Praise-odes of Loo; Book II. of Part IV.* It is impossible to render here 魯頌, by 'Sacrificial odes of Loo,' because they are not such.
Choo says, 'King Ching, because of the great services rendered to the kingdom by the duke of Chow, granted to Pih-k'in [the duke's eldest son, and the first marquis of Loo], the privilege of using the royal ceremonies and music, in consequence of which Loo had its Sung, which were sung to the music in its ancestral temple.
Afterwards, they made in Loo other odes in praise of their rulers, which they also called Sung.' In this way it is endeavoured to account for there being such pieces as the four of this Book in this Part of the Shu. Confucius found them in Loo, bearing the name of Sung; and it was not for him to do otherwise than simply edit them as he did, and he thereby did not commit himself to anything like an approval of their designation. This is the best explanation of the name which can be given; but it is not complimentary to the discrimination or the moral boldness of the Sage.

The statement of Choo that such a privilege was ever granted to the first marquis of Loo is very much controverted. If it were granted to him, how is it that we do not have a single sacrificial ode of that State? It is then contended that the royal ceremonies were not usurped in Loo till the time of duke He (僖公; B. C. 658 —626). Without entering into this question, it will be seen that it does not affect the application to the odes here of the name of Sung. We cannot suppose that such application was made by Confucius; he used it, because he found it in use, and he allowed it just as he published the events of the Ch'un T'ien, without any indication of his own opinion about them, whether in the way of censure or approval. It has often been asked why there are no Fung of Loo in the 1st Part. The question cannot be answered further than by saying that the pieces of this Book are really Fung; but as they were wantonly called Sung, we have them here instead of in their proper places.

Loo was one of the States of the east, having its capital in K'uei-tow (曲阜), which is still the name of one of the districts of the department of Yen-chow, Shun-tung. Choo says that king Ching appointed the duke of Chow's eldest son directly to it. See-ma Tsien's account is rather diff. — that the duke of Chow
was himself appointed marquis of Loo, but that,

being unable to go there in consequence of his duties at the court, he sent his eldest son instead; and that the territory was largely augmented after the termination of his regency, he still remaining in Chow.

Ode 1. NARRATIVE. CELEBRATING SOME MARQUIS OF LOO FOR HIS CONSTANT AND ADMIRABLE THOUGHTFULNESS.—ESPECIALLY AS SEEN IN THE NUMBER AND QUALITY OF HIS HORSES. The Preface says that the marquis was Shin (申), known as duke He, who is mentioned in the preceding note. It refers indeed all the four pieces to duke He, who was the 19th marquis of the State, reckoning from the duke of Chow. But, as Choo observes, it is only the 4th ode of which it can be alleged with certainty that it belonged to the time of He.

LL 1, 2, in all the stanzas. 駟駟 is descriptive of the body of the horses—"the belly and ribs"—as fat and large (腹幹肥張貌). L. 2 gives the breeding and pasture grounds of the studs. "The region beyond the city is called 郊, or suburb; beyond the suburb it is called 牧, or pasture; beyond the pasture it is called 野, or wilderness; beyond the wilderness it is called 林, or forest; beyond the wilderness it is called 坰, or waste." Morrison, after thus translating the classical passage on the subject, gives for the line—"In the wastes of the wilderness."—But 野 in the text can only mean "uncultivated plains;" and 坰 is better rendered as I have done.

LL 3—5. 薄言 is the compound particle, which we have often met with. Many of the colours which are mentioned in ll. 4, 5 may seem strange to connoisseurs of the animal; but I can only follow the definitions of the terms in critics and the dictionaries. 駟 is defined as "a black horse, white in the stride (駟馬白跨);" 騄 is "a pure black horse;" 皇 is "a horse, yellow and white (黃白曰皇);" 黃 is "a horse, yellow and red (黃騄曰黃);" 騄 is "a horse with green and white intermixed (蒼白雜毛);" 駘 "a horse with yellow and white intermixed (黃白雜毛);" 騄 "a red yellow (赤黃; probably, a chestnut);" 騄 "a greenish-black (青黑);" 騄 "a greenish-black scaly-like, the colour here deep, there light, marked like the scales of a fish (青騄鱗色有深淺斑駁如魚鱗);" 駟 "white and black-maned (白馬黑鬣);" 騄 "a red horse, black-maned (赤身黑鬣);" 騄 "a black horse, white-maned (黑身白鬣);" 駟 is probably a cream-coloured horse (陰白雜毛, 今泥騄); 騄 "red and white, intermixed (彤白雜毛);" 騄 is described as having white hairy legs (豪在胫而白), and also as "black with a yellow spine (騄馬黃脊);" 魚 is "a horse, with its eyes white like those of a fish (二目白曰魚, 似魚目也)."

3. Fat and large are the stallions,
 On the plains of the far-distant borders.
 Of those stallions fat and large,
 Some are flecked as with scales; some, white and black-maned;
 Some, red and black-maned; some, black and white-maned;
 [All], docile in the carriage,
 His thoughts never weary;—
 He thinks of his horses, and such they become.
4. Fat and large are the stallions,
 On the plains of the far-distant borders.
 Of those stallions, fat and large,
 Some are cream-coloured; some, red and white;
 Some, with white hairy legs; some, with fishes' eyes;
 [All], stout carriage horses.
 His thoughts are without depravity;—
 He thinks of his horses, and thus serviceable are they.

Li 8 tells the quality of the horses. 以車 一以此馬而駕車 'use or yoke
 these horses in a carriage.' 彭彭 = 盛貌
 'looking everything that could be desired,' as Maou says, 'both strong and handsome (有 力有容) 倜倜 = strong (有力)
 釋釋 = 不絕貌 = keeping together.
 'obedient to the driver. 祛祛 = 強健
 'very strong.'

Li 7, 8 praise the thoughtfulness of the marquis to whom the ode refers, and the result of that as seen in his horses. 無疆 = 深廣
 無窮, 'deep, wide, and inexhaustible.' 無 期 denotes the penetration of his thoughts, —

unending; 無駟 that they were unwearied; 無邪 that they were without any element of depravity or perversity. One is startled to find here this last characteristic, which Confucius mentions (Ana. II. ii.) as covering the whole of the Sa, or indicating the result to which the study of it will lead. We should not expect to meet with it in such an ode. 斯一 則, 'then,' with a vivid descriptive force.
 The 'Complete Digest' says that it indicates the marvellous quickness with which the thing
 was realized (斯字見神效之速) 臧 = 善, 'good'; 才 = 材力, 'of capable strength'; 作 = 奮起, 'to start up'; 但 = 行, 'to go,' or 'proceed,' referring, probably,
 as Ho Kéou says, to the speed of the horses.

- 2 Fat and strong, fat and strong,
Fat and strong are the teams of stallions.
Early and late are the [officers] with the prince,
With the prince drinking.
[They are as] a flock of egrets on the wing,
Of egrets flying about.
The drums emit their deep sound;
They drink to the full, and then return home:—
Thus rejoicing together.

- 3 Fat and strong, fat and strong,
Fat and strong are the teams of iron-greys.
Early and late are the [officers] with the prince,
With the prince feasting.
'From this time forth,
May the years be abundant.
May our prince maintain his goodness,
And transmit it to his descendants!'—
Thus they rejoice together.

Li. 7—8 in st. 1, 2. The drum is mentioned, but we are not to suppose that it was the only instrument of music employed on the occasion. Choo says that 咽 here is equivalent to 淵, so that its reduplication indicates the long roll of the drum;—as 淵 in iii. L. 2. Manu keeps to the sound of yea, in the character, meaning the rapid change of sound with the drum near at hand. See the dict. on the character. 言 is the expletive particle. The 歸 is understood to intimate that the festivity was conducted with decency and order.

L. 9, in all the st., sums up the whole. 于 may be taken as = 于是, 'thus.' 胥 = 相, 'mutually,' 'together.'

Li. 5—8 in st. 3 contain the expression of their good wishes and prayers by the officers (頌禱之辭). L. 5: 'From this time as a beginning' seems to intimate that there was then a good year. 其 gives the line the force of a prayer. 有—有年, 'abundant years.' 穀—善, 'goodness.'

The rhymes are—in st. 1. 黃明, cat. 10; 下, 舞, cat. 5, t. 2; in 2. 牡, 酒, cat. 5, t. 2; 飛, 歸, cat. 15, t. 1; in 3. 駟, 燕, cat. 14; 始, 有, 子, cat. 1, t. 2. The 樂 in the three stanzas are understood to rhyme together, cat. 2.

- 1 Pleasant is the semi-circular water,
And we will gather the cress about it.
The marquis of Loo is coming to it,
And we see his dragon-figured banner.
His banner waves in the wind,
And the bells of his horses tinkle harmoniously.
Small and great
All follow the prince in his progress to it.

Ode 3. Allusive and narrative. Is PRAISE OF SOME MARQUIS OF LOO, CELEBRATING HIS INTEREST IN THE STATE COLLEGE, WHICH PERHAPS HE HAD BUILT OR REPAIRED, TESTIFYING HIS VIRTUES, AND ADDICING FOR HIM A COMPLETE TRIUMPH OVER THE TRIBES OF THE HWAE, WHICH WOULD BE CELEBRATED IN THE COLLEGE. It is not unlikely that the marquis in this ode is Shin or Duke He, for we know that he was engaged in operations against the tribes of the Hwae. His part, indeed, was but a secondary one in them, and he was only a follower of dako Hwan of Tse, who had the supremacy among the feudal States; but it was not for the poet to dwell on the inferior position to which his State and ruler were reduced. To Loo had in the first place been assigned the regulation of the east; and in this ode and the next the writer, or the writers, would fain ascribe a return of its former glories. There was a muttering at the time of an expedition against the barbarous hordes, and the piece predicts, or at least anticipates, its triumphant conclusion.—all due to the troops and civilizing influence of Loo. The immediate occasion of its composition must have been some opening or inauguration service in connection with the repair of the State college.

Ll. 1, 2 in st. 1—5. 思 is the initial particle, and the whole line may be compared with 1, 4 in III. I. VIII. 3. 思 corresponds to 於 there; and 泮水 to 辟宮. That was, under the Chou dyn., the name of the principal royal college; and this was the name of the corresponding building in the feudal states. That we have seen was surrounded by a circle of water; this only by a semi-circle, the edifice connecting on the north with the adjacent ground. This semi-circle of water gave its name of 泮宮 to the college, 泮 being one of the characters of the third class, where the meaning of the whole combines the signification of both the elements, here 水, 'water,' and 半, 'half,' which latter is also the phonetic portion of the compound. In the Lo Ke, however, III. II. 20, et al., the name appears as 類宮. The situation is said to have been in the western suburb of the capital. It is not easy to describe all the purposes for which the college was used. In this ode the marquis of Loo appears as feasting in it, delivering instructions, taking counsel with his ministers in it, and receiving the spoils and prisoners of war. In the Lo Ke, VIII. II. 7, it is mentioned as connected in Loo with sacrifices to Heaven; Wang Taou says, 'In the Pwan Kung the officers of a state, in autumn learned ceremonies; in winter, books; in spring and summer, the use of arms; and in autumn and winter, they practised dancing. It was the great college of the States, and there especially were trials of archery, and the feasting of the aged.' 芹—as in II. vii. VIII. 2. 藻—as in LI. IV. 1. 莼 is probably another name for one of the duck-weeds (鳬葵). Williams says, 'An aquatic vegetable like mallows. The leaves are smooth.' 薄 is the initial particle. These plants about the water of the college are all understood to be allusive of the men of talents about the marquis, whom he was careful to encourage (皆是言倍公能育人才也).

Ll. 1—3 in st. 1, 2. The writer describes the marquis of Loo coming to the college on the day of its inauguration, and occupied there. 戾—至, 'to come to.' 止 is the final particle. 言 is the initial particle. 伐伐—旆旆 in II. I. VIII. 2. T'wen Wan-tz says, that the characters

- 2 Pleasant is the semi-circular water,
 And we will gather the pondweed in it.
 The marquis of Loo has come to it,
 With his horses looking so grand.
 His horses are grand;
 His fame is brilliant.
 Blandly he looks and smiles;
 Without any impatience he delivers his instructions.

denote the appearance of a cluster of leaves, and that as did the streamers of the banner hang down. L. 6, in st. 1, — as in II. III. VIII. 2. The 'small and great' of L. 7 are probably to be understood of the old and young of the capital, all following the marquis towards the college on the great occasion. We cannot translate the particle 于 in L. 8. 邁—行, 'to go,' — as often.

In st. 2, II. 4, 5. 躋躋, — as in III. III. V. 4. On L. 6 Choo says nothing; Ching takes the 音 as —德音, 'fame for virtue.' 載 in L. 7 is the particle. According to the usage of the reduplication in the Shu, the 色 and 笑 must be taken together, and show us the countenance of the marquis wreathed with smiles. 匪怒, — 'without anger,' but anger is too strong a term in the case, — 'without impatience.' 伊 is the particle, — 維. On what subjects he gave forth his instructions we do not know.

II. 5–8 in st. 3. The marquis is now feasting, and the writer expresses his wishes for him. All the other stanzas are the sequel of this, partly praise and partly prayer; yet the prayer is not direct, and we get the spirit better by translating in the future tense, the writer feeling sure that what he auspiced would be fulfilled. L. 6 難老 may mean old age that is seldom reached, or the perpetual youth which refuses to put on the appearance of age. This last is the view of Ying-tsh; — 難老者言其神力康強, 難使之老. The critics understand 神 or 天, 'the Spirits,' or 'Heaven,' as the nominative to 錫. Our passive voice enables me to leave the line as indefinite in this respect as it is in the original. L. 7.

- 4 Very admirable is the marquis of Loo,
Reverently displaying his virtue,
And reverently watching over his deportment,
The pattern of the people.
With great qualities truly civil and martial,
Brilliantly he affects his meritorious ancestors.
In everything entirely filial,
He seeks the blessing for himself.
- 5 Very intelligent is the marquis of Loo,
Making his virtue illustrious.
He has made this college with its semicircle of water,
And the tribes of the Hwae will submit in consequence.
His martial-looking, tiger leaders
Will here present the left ears [of their foes].
His examiners, wise as Kaou-yaon,
Will here present their prisoners.

長道.—'ways of length,' or 'permanence.'

Choo says the phrase is equivalent to 大道.

'grand ways.' L. 8. 屈—服. 'to subdue,' or

收服. 'to keep in subjection.' 羣醜—

羣衆. 'the multitudes of the people.' The phrase means, acc. to most critics, the people of Loo (魯國之羣衆), though some find

also a reference in it to the tribes of the Hwae (已含淮夷在其中; Foo Kwang).

St. 4 is altogether of praise; celebrating the good and gracious qualities of the marquis. 穆

穆 is here simply 美 intensified = very admirable. L. 6. 昭假—昭格. 'brilliantly reaching to.' The idea is that the fine qualities of the marquis affected his great ancestors in their Spirit-state, and would draw forth their protecting favour. L. 8. 'What he seeks of himself—by the natural outgoing of his qualities—is blessing or prosperity.'

St. 5. L. 8. 作 need not mean that the marquis had built any college which did not exist

before, but that he had executed important repairs. As the 'Flower and Essence of the Sās' says, 仍其故址而修治之. L. 4 seems to say that the making of the college

would make the tribes of the Hwae submit.

They would care very little or nothing about it, but it pleased the poet thus to write. The 'Flower and Essence' goes round about the text, saying that he who thus showed his interest in the welfare of the State would have the means to subdue the tribes (伐淮夷自 有所以服之也). L. 5. 矯矯—

alone for 泮宮 讖—as in III. i. VII. 8. The left ears of the man were cut off. Those who surrendered or were taken prisoners (囚) were questioned, and in 1.3 it is said their questioners would be as skilful (淑—善) as the famous Ksan-yaou, Shun's minister of Crime;—see the Shoo, II. III., et al.

St. 6 is an auspice concerning the body of the officers who would be engaged in the expedition to the Hwae,—those inferior in rank to the 虎臣 of last stanza. 1. 4 狄—di 邊 (III. IX, et al.) or 逖, 'to keep back,' 'drive to a distance.' 'The east and south,' means the tribes of the Hwae. Ll. 5—7 set forth the orderliness and discipline of the officers, and also their mutual complaisance, one not disputing the claims of another to any particular merit. Maou defines 烝烝 by 厚 'generous,' 'imagnanimous,' and 皇皇 by 美 'admirable.' Chao says the two phrases together give the idea of 盛, 'all-complete.' The Urh-ya makes 烝烝—作, 'rising up,' 'vigorous.' 不吳—as in I. [III.] VII. 1. 不揚—肅, 'grave.' Yen Ts'an defines it by 不輕浮. 訕 is here the judges who decided questions of dispute in the army (治訟之官).

In st. 7, the writer describes a battle with the wild tribes as if it were going on before his eyes, and celebrates the complete victory, concluding with a word of admonition to the marquis. Ll. 1—4. 角弓,—as in II. vii. IX. 1. 其 讖, represents the bows drawn with strength into a curve (持弦急; Ch'ing). 其 搜—the whizzing sound of the rapid arrows. 束矢,—the bundles of arrows; consisting, some say of 50, others of 100. We must drop the 束 in translating. 博—廣大, 'wide and large.' 無斃—無厭倦, as in the translation. Ll. 5, 6 give the result of the victory, i. e. describing the wild tribes as transformed and no more rebellious (淮夷甚化於善. 不逆

其命。I must take II. 7, 8 as a counsel to the marquis suddenly interjected. In no other way can we deal fairly with the 爾, 'you.' 式 is the initial particle. 卒—盡, 'entirely.'

SLS. As the result of the expedition, the writer sees the tribes of the Hwae coming to the college with their articles of tribute. II. 1—4.

翩 is defined in the Shewh-wan as 'the rapid flight of a bird.' 林—'trees.' There might be a grove about the college, but there could not be a forest. 黽 is the fruit of the mulberry tree; i.e. 甚 懷 presents a difficulty. Both Maon and Choo are silent about it; but Ch'ing brings it under the category of 歸 or 歸就.

'to come to.' An owl is a bird with a disagreeable scream, instead of a beautiful note; but the mulberries grown about the college of Lo would make it sing delightfully. And so would the influence of Lo, going forth from the college, transform the nature of the wild tribes about the Hwae! II. 5—8. 憬—覺悟, 'to awaken to a proper consciousness.' Standing as the character does, it brings the 驚 before us so quickened and transformed. 琛 is defined by 美寶, 'admirable, precious things.' 元—大, 'large.' 賂—遺, 'to give,' 'to contribute.' By the 'metals of the south' are understood metals from King-chow and Yang-chow. Of both these provinces it is mentioned in the Shao that among their articles of tribute were 金三品, gold, silver, and copper;—see the Shao, III. I. Pt. I. 44, 52.

Ode 4. Narrative. IN PRAISE OF DUKE HE,
AND AUSPICING FOR HIM A MAGNIFICENT CAREER OF SUCCESS, WHICH WOULD MAKE LOO ALL THAT IT HAD EVER BEEN:—WRITTEN, PROBABLY, ON AN OCCASION WHEN HE HAD REPAIRED ON A GRAND SCALE THE TEMPLES OF THE STATE, OF WHICH FIGURE AVE HIS SUCCESS WOULD BE THE REWARD. Ll. 5, 6 of stt. 3 and 8 leave no doubt that the marquis Shin or duke He is the hero of this piece. It is a great offense to K'ang, who deprecates the sanction which it gives to the epitaph, false according to his view, that the princes of Loo were privileged to employ royal ceremonies and sacrifices, and condemns the exaggerated representations in it of the character and successes of duke He. But it was not for the writer, a minister, probably, of Loo, to call in question the legality of celebrations in which he took part, and which he considered to be the glory of the State, and he was evidently in a poetic rapture as to what his ruler was and would do. K'ang thinks Confucius would have tast the ode out of the She, but that there are certain admissions and cautions gently insinuated in it (夸誕已極而聖人弗 削則以猶有箴規責難之 微意焉).

St. 1. Ll. 1, 2, and the concluding stanza, give us the occasion on which the ode was made,
—some great temple-repairs executed by order of the marquis. Maou thinks the temples were those of K'ang Yuen, mentioned here, and
of his predecessor, duke Min, mentioned in st.
9; but K'ang Yuen is introduced as being the mother of How-tseih, and without any reference to her being sacrificed to. The opinion of Choo, that He had repaired all the temples of the State (魯之羣廟), commends itself even to K'ang. There were in Loo the Chow temple (周廟), specially dedicated to king Wan; the Grand temple (太廟), dedicated to the duke of Chow; the temple of Pih-k'in, the first marquis, called 世室; and the temple of duke Woo, called 武世室. In later times we find mention of a 高祖廟, 曾祖廟, 祖廟

and the 禘廟, 宮—廟, 'temple.' Maou explains 閤 by 閉, 'shut,' meaning, acc. to Ying-tah, that the temple had been shut up and not used. Choo's account of it is 深閉 'deeply shut,' K'ang's 深窅, 'deep and far-reaching,' and Ch'ing's, 神 'Spirit-tenanted.' I must believe that our 'solemn' gives the idea. 值—清靜, 'pure and still.' 實實 describe the solidity of the temples (鞏固. Choo; Maou says, not nearly so well, 廣大; Tsou Ts'uen, well, 下之盤基固也); 枚枚 their completeness, furnished with every thing which temples ought to have (器物完備. K'ang; Choo explains these characters of the fine and close structure, especially in the roof, 壘密 (so,
also, Tsou Ts'uen, 上之結構密也).

Ll. 5—17 are intended to magnify Loo and its rulers tracing their origin up to How-tseih. On
ll. 5—8, about K'ang Yuen's birth of How-tseih, see III. B. I. 1, 2. The idea of being distinguished, rather than of being majestic or awe-inspiring, seems to be conveyed here by 赫赫
依—眷顧, 'to regard with favour.' Ll. 7—

II.9—17 pass to How-tseih, giving a summary of his doings and the distinction which he gained. Compare I. [L.] X., and III. II. L. 天 is understood as the subject of 降 in I.9, but our passive voice enables us to make the line as indefinite as the original. In I.10, 種 belongs to 黍 and 稷 to 稷. 'What, though earlier sown, ripens later is called 種, and what, though later sown, ripens earlier, is called 稷' L. 11.

種 is applied to what is planted early, and 稷 to what is planted late. Ying-tah observes that 重稷種, and 稷 are denominations applied to the growth and ripening of plants as early or late, and not names of kinds of grain (生熟早晚之異稱非穀名). L. 12 is most naturally understood of the investiture of How-tseih with the principality of T'ae, as mentioned in III. II. I.5. The only difficulty is with I.16. Ying-tah, indeed, gives to the two lines the same meaning, and considers II.13—16 to be no more than a repetition of II.9—12. But 下土 may very well mean the whole kingdom; 'the land below,' in correlation with 上天, 'the sky above,' but such a meaning of 下國 is, I believe, unexampled. Nor am I sure that 下國 denotes an inferior State. The phrase occurs in the next Book, as a designation of the feudal States generally. How-tseih was invested with T'ae, and made minister of agriculture subsequently by Shun, and gradually the benefits of his husbandry extended throughout the land. He did not become king like Yu, and immediately found a dynasty; but as Yu's labours had extended to all, so did his, and therefore he might be said to continue the line or work of Yu (緒—業).

St. 2 gives a very summary outline of the growth of the family of Chow, down to the overthrow of the Shang dyn. by king Woo, and the establishment of the State of Loo by king Ching. II.1—4 relate to king T'ae;—comp. III. I. VII.1, 2. Dukos Léw and T'ao-tse are passed over without notice. The 'clipping' in I.4 is not to be understood of any active operations of king T'ae against Shang, nor even, says Choo, of any thought or purpose in his mind. But his management of his territory drew the thoughts of the people in other States to the lords of Chow. A new centre of attraction was established, and served to increase the dissatisfaction to the govt. of Shang. II.5—8. Passing over king Ku, the poet sketches the career of Wán and Woo, and especially of Woo. Of him only are we to think in II.7, 8. 屆—to come

And make him marquis of Loo.

I will greatly enlarge your territory there,

To be a help and support to the House of Chow.'

- 8 Accordingly he appointed [our first] duke of Loo,
And made him marquis in the east,
Giving him the hills and rivers,
The lands and fields, and the attached States.
The [present] descendant of the duke of Chow,

the sovereignty to Chow was fully come. There is no necessity to give to 居 the meaning of

'to carry out.' The subject of it is king Woo.
Li 9—12 continue the sketch of the overthrow of Shang. Li 9, 10, —see III. Li 11. 8, 11. 7, 8.

by his principal commander had laid deep hold on the minds of the people. 敦 (to) —治 term in I. [H] IX. It is here equivalent to our slang expression, — 'to polish off.' 咸—同.

which possessed all the army of Woo. Li 13—17. The sketch now converges to the State of Loo. The 'king' is king Ching as appears from 叔父 or 'uncle,' meaning the duke of Chow. 元子 is the duke's eldest son, Pih-k'in. 啟—開, 'to open,' here equivalent to 'to enlarge.' 宇—土宇, 'territory.' Pih-k'in was to be the first marquis, yet the State is still spoken of as belonging to the duke,

his father.

The principal subject in st. 8 is duke He's offering the border sacrifice to God, in the spring-sacrifice for a good year, with Hou-tseih
as his correlate, and his seasonal sacrifices in the ancestral temple. Li 1—4 are a sequel to Li 13—17 of last stanza, stating the fact of the investiture of Pih-k'in with the marquisate of Loo. 附庸—see on Ana. XVII. 1, where mention is made of one of the small States attached to Loo. Li 5—8 belong to duke He,
and the state with which he proceeded to the sacrifices. The immediate successor of duke Chwang was a boy, called K'e and K'e-fang

They are the white bull and the red one;

(啟：啟方) known as duke Min (閔公) who was murdered in the second year of his rule; and then, our duke He, an elder brother by a lady of the harem was raised to the State.

承祀—奉祀 'to offer the sacrifices,' or 視祭祀 'to look after the sacrifices.'

耳耳—柔從—as in the translation. Ll. 9—17. L. 9 refers to the seasonal sacrifice in the ancestral temple. Spring and autumn, two of the seasons, are mentioned by synecdoche for all the four. 匪解—as in [註] IX. L. 10—所

獻所祀不有差忒. K'ang insists on taking this of the offerings at the border sacrifice; but it connects more naturally with L. 9. Ll. 11—13. Lacharme gives for L. 11—

St. 4 continues the subject of the seasonal sacrifices, and auspices, or prays for the blessing which duke He might expect from his reverent discharge of them. Ll. 1, 2 refer to the autumnal sacrifice and the preparation in summer for it;—a specimen of the provision made for the sacrifices of the other seasons. 嘗 is the name of the autumnal sacrifice, used as a verb, — to offer that sacrifice. 載—始—'to begin,' showing that line 2 mentions what was a preparation for the service. 福衡 was the name of a piece of wood fixed across the horns of the victim-bulls to prevent their goring; but one does not see how this could contribute to improve their condition. Acc. to Ying-juh's definitions in the Chou Le (XII. or II. 5).

the 犧 was fixed on the horns, and the 衡 was another thing, fitted to the nose. L. 1 specifies the victims. 剛—特, 'a bull fit for sacrificing.' Williams erroneously speaks of it as 'a bullock.' K'ang-hsi's dictionary does not give this usage of the character; but under 剛, it mentions that 剛 is interchangeable with it. In sacrificing to the duke of Chow a white bull was used by way of distinction. His great services to the dyn. required that the victim offered to him should bear some mark of his peculiar dignity. A white bull therefore was employed, and he was thereby put on a level with the kings of the former dynasty of Shang. For Pih-k'in and the other dukes of Loo a red victim was employed,—according to the usual practice of the Chow dyn. L. 4. is descriptive of a goblet or vase used to contain the spirits for libation and other purposes. It is called 'the victim vase (尊—樽),' because there was the figure of a bull upon it (畫牛於尊腹), or because it was made in the form of a bull, with a hollow chiselled out in the back to contain the spirits (尊作牛形鑿其背以受酒). 將將—嚴正貌—as in the translation.

L. 5. 毛魚 is explained from the Chow Le, II. v. 4, where we have 毛魚之豚, 'a pig, from which the hair has been scalded off, and then roasted (燂去其毛而魚之)' 載一切肉, 'must cut up fine.' Two kinds of soup are to be understood:—plain soup, the water in which meat has been boiled; and the same with salt and vegetables added to it. L. 6. 大房 was a species of the 俎 (see II. vi. V. 3), and was also called 房俎. It was large enough to receive half the roasted body of one of the bulls (半體之俎), having from its size and the form of the supporting frame the app. of a small room or apartment. L. 7. 萬舞—see on I. iii. XIII. 1. 洋洋—盛貌, 'complete-looking.'

L. 8—17. 'The filial descendant' is duke Ho. Sacrificing to his ancestors as he did, he might expect their blessing (有慶言祭而獲福). We may translate from L. 9 in the future tense (假尸祝之言以報僖公; Fan Ch'uo-u), or as a prayer 祝願

騰 is used of a river rising and overflowing its banks. Ts'ou Say, on II. 14, 15, says finely:—

不虧如日常盈; 不崩如山常固; 不震如地常靜; 不騰如水常平. L. 16, 17. The meaning of 三壽, 'three longevities,' is very obscure.

Ch'ing thinks they refer to the three principal ministers of Loo (三卿); and Yen Ts'ou says,

願有三壽考之三卿爲朋友, 皆如岡陵之固, 祝其君臣同慶也. 'The line contains a prayer for blessing to be shared by the ruler and his ministers together, he and his three aged ministers associating together in friendship, firm as the hills and mountains.' Nothing better can be made of the text.

St. 5 passes from the marquis's sacrifices to his resources for war, and ability to cope with his enemies, and concludes with a prayer or auspice for him, which is not so warlike as we might have expected. L. 1—9. 'A thousand chariots' was the regular force which a great State could at the utmost bring into the field. Each chariot contained three mailed men;—the charioteer in the middle, with a spearman on his right, and an archer on his left. And there were attached to it 72 foot-soldiers and 25 other followers, 100 men in all; so that the whole force would amount to 100,000 men. But in actual service, the force of a great State was restricted to three armies, or 375 chariots, attended, inclusive of their mailed occupants, by 37,500 men, of whom 27,500 were what were called foot-soldiers, given in round numbers, in L. 4, as 30,000. 朱英二矛, — see on I. vii. of strings of vermilion colour (朱綬, 所以綴貝而飾胄也). 增增—衆, indicating the number of the soldiers. 戎—

西戎, 'the hordes of the west.' 狄—北

狄, 'those of the north.' In the 10th year of duke He, Hwan of Ts'ou had led an expedition against these, but Loo took no part in it. Perhaps He had been engaged in some operations against them of which we have no record, or, which is more likely, his encomiast is only speaking of what he could do. 荆 is another name for the great southern State of Ts'ou

Looked up to by the State of Loo.
We grandly possess also Kwei and Mung;
And we shall extend to the limits of the east,
Even the States along the sea.
The tribes of the Hwae will seek our alliance;—
All will proffer their allegiance:—
Such shall be the achievements of the marquis of Loo.

(楚) and 舒 was applied to several half-civilized States to the east of it, which it brought, in the Ch'un T'ew period, one after another, under its jurisdiction. The marquis of Loo had taken part under T'ew, in his 4th year, in a great expedition against T'ew, which came to an unsatisfactory conclusion with the treaty of Shao-ling (召陵之盟). 膺—當, 'to withstand'; 懲—艾, 'to punish.' Chang Foe (章甫; Ming dyn.) distinguishes the two words thus:—彼入寇而我當之爲膺, 我伐寇而彼畏之爲懲. 承—禦, 'to withstand,' 'to resist.'

LL 10—17, like the latter half of last stanza, may be taken either as auspice or prayer. LL 12, —comp. L 5 in III. II. 4. 'The Flower and Essence of the She' connects this line with the next thus:—且願黃色之髮, 齡文之背, 此壽考者, 相與爲公所試用, adding 蓋不特三壽作朋而已, 其所用皆老成之人也. 試—用, 'to employ.' 艾—養, 'to nourish'; here, —vigorous, well-nourished.

St. 6, ↑ auspice great achievements for the marquis in forcing the acknowledgment of the superiority of Loo on all the territories lying to the south and east of it, which could be considered as included in the original grant and commission of king Ching. L. 6. Mount T'ae was the great hill of Loo, between it and T'ew. Kwei and Mung were also two hills in Loo. The latter was probably the eastern hill of Mencius, VII. Pt. I. xxiv. 1, p. v.

奄有一—'We grandly have.' These were all in Loo proper; but the marquis would extend his sway beyond. 遂荒—遂 is the conjunction, —'and thereon,' but 荒 is not easily construed. Choo simply repeats Ching's 荒—奄. The likeliest meaning here, given in the dict., is that of 蒙, 'to cover over.' 'That which covers the sides is called 帷, "a curtain," that which covers above is called 荒.' I take the term, therefore, as here—'to overspread.' 大東—'the great east,' —極東, 'the extreme east.' 同—同盟, 'to covenant together.' The tribes of the Hwae would come, and seek for treaties, —acknowledging the superiority of Loo,

- 7 He shall maintain the possession of Hoo and Yih,
And extend his sway to the regions of Seu,
Even to the States along the sea.
The tribes of the Hwae, the Man, and the Mih,
And those tribes [still more] to the south,
All will proffer their allegiance;—
Not one will dare not to answer to his call,
Thus showing their obedience to the marquis of Loo.
- 8 Heaven will give great blessing to our prince,
So that with the eyebrows of longevity he shall maintain Loo.
He shall possess Chang and Heu,
And recover all the territory of the duke of Chow.
Then shall the marquis of Loo feast and be glad,
With his admirable wife and aged mother;

as l. 7 more fully declares, — 莫不相率 以從於魯國, 'all will lead one another on to follow Loo.'

St. 7. Hoo and Yih were two hills of Loo, —
in the pres. district of Tsow (鄒縣). 徐 宅, 'where Seu dwells,' i. e., all the States in the region of Seu. In l. 4 the writer expresses himself wildly and extravagantly. 蠻貊 means properly the wild tribes of the south and of the north; — see Ana. XV. ii. 2, and the Shoo, V. iii. 8; but it is impossible to understand here
the expression any but the wild hordes south of the Hwae. Then in l. 5 he seems to go farther south still. 諾, 'yes,' i. e., to respond obediently. 若, 'to accord with,' — in the connection, — 順服, 'to submit to.'

St. 8 is akin to the two preceding, auspicing
for the marquis, — through the help of Heaven,
the recovery of all the territory which had at any time been taken from Loo, and then the enjoyment of purest domestic and social happiness to a great and hale old age. L. 1. 純

may here be defined by 大, 'great.' Ll. 3, 4.
常 (or 嘗) was a city, with some adjacent territory, — in the pres. dis. of T'ang (滕), dep.
Yen-chow, which had been taken from Loo by Ts'ao. 許, called in the Ch'un Ts'ew, 許田,
'the fields of Heu,' was on the west of Loo, and had been granted as a convenient place for the princes of Loo to stop at on their way to the royal court; but it had been sold or parted
with to Ch'ing in the first year of duke Hwan.
The writer of this ode desires that he might recover possession both of Chang and Heu, and so have got back all the territory, which the duke of Chow could have claimed. 宇, 'territory,' Ll. 5—7. The marquis would feast in the inner apartment appropriate to such a purpose (內寢) with his wife (called Shing
K'ang, 聲姜), and his mother (called Ching Fang, 成風); and in the outer banqueting room (外寢), with his worthy officers and ministers. 宜, '魯侯所宜有,' such as brought to have.' LI. 8—10. 有 is emphatic.

—常有 'ever have.' 兒齒, 'child's teeth,' is perplexing. The Ueh-ya quotes the line with 齟齬, and the Shwuh-wan explains that phrase by 老人齒, 'old men's teeth.'
I think, however, the meaning must be this, that the marquis would ever be renewing his youth,
and never be sans teeth. They might fall out, but they would be replaced by others, as in the case of a child!

St. 9 returns to the subject with which the ode commenced,—the temple, duke He's repair of which gave occasion to the composition of the piece. The materials were got from Tsao-lao and Sin-foo, two hills in the pre. dep.
of Tso-gan. When the trees were felled, and prepared for use, they were sawn up into the proper lengths, determined by the fathom and cubit measures. L. 5 栢 = 榱, meaning, I think, the 榱題, of Mencius, VII. xxxi v. 2,

g. n. 鳥—大貌 'large-looking.' L. 6 路 寢 is the back apartment of the temple put for the whole; 路 being simply —大 'large.'
Or we may take 路寢 of the state, retiring apartment of the marquis. It was on a grand scale, but the renewed temples were on a grand-
or. 奕奕 = 美 'beautiful,' 'admirable.'
The work had been executed under the superintendence of He-sze, a brother of the marquis,
known as 'Duke's-son Yu (公子魚)' 曼
—長 or 廣, 'long,' or 'wide' L. 8 —順 萬民之望,—as in the translation.

Maou arranges the whole piece in 6 stanzas;
1, 2, of 17 lines, each; 3, of 12; 4, of 28; 5, 6, of 8, each; and 7, 8, of 10, each. The present arrangement was fixed by Choo, after Soo Ch'eh.
Subsequent scholars,—Woo Ch'ing, Kin Lets'ang, Hwang Kwang-shing, Ho K'iao, and others, have proposed various alterations;—but,
as K'ang says, to no purpose.

Very admirable is his music.

TITLE OF THE BOOK.—商頌四之三.
'Sacrificial odes of Shang; Book III. of Part IV.'
Here we return, for several odes at least, to the proper meaning of 頌 in this Part of the Sho, the character having the same meaning as in the title of Book I. Shang is the name of the second of the three ancient feudal dynasties, and remains still as the name of the small department of Shang Chow in Shen-se. The ancestor of the dynasty was Ssch (勢), who appears in the Shoo as minister of instruction to Shun. Whether he received his investiture from Yao or from Shun is a disputed point. In the 14th generation from Ssch was a T'ien-yih (天乙), the celebrated Tang, who overthrew the dynasty of Hsia, and made himself master of the kingdom;—in B. C. 1,763, (or B. C. 1,557, acc. to the Bamboo Annals). His descendants ruled in China, down to B. C. 1,120 (or 1,101), when Chow or Shoo, the last sovereign, was put to death by king Woo of the dynasty of Chow. Among them there were three, more particularly distinguished:—T'ao-k'ash, T'ang's grandson and successor, who received the title of 太宗; T'ao-mow (B. C. 1,636—1,560, or 1,474—1,398) known as 中宗; and Woo-ting (B. C. 1,323—1,263, or 1,273—1,213 known as 高宗). The temples or shrines of these four sovereigns maintained their places in the ancestral temple of the dynasty, after their first establishment, and if all its sacrificial odes had been preserved, they would have been in praise of one or other of them. But it so happened that at least all the odes of which T'ao-tsung was the subject were lost. Of the others we have only a small portion, — five odes in all.

Of how it is that we have even these, we have the following account. The viscount of Wei was made duke of Sung, there to continue the sacrifices of the House of Shang; but the govt. of that State fell subsequently into great disorder, and the memorials of the dynasty seem to have been lost. In the time of duke T'ao (戴公; B. C. 798–785), one of his ministers, Ching-k'ou-foo, an ancestor of Confucius (Vol. I, proleg., p. 57) received from the Grand music-master at the court of Chow twelve of the sacrificial odes of Shang, with which he returned to Sung, and used them in sacrificing to the former kings of that dynasty. This story rests on a statement in the 'Narratives of the States' (魯語下, art. 17) by a contemporary of Confucius. As we have only five odes in the Classic, it is supposed that seven of those twelve had perished during the two centuries that elapsed between Ching-k'ou-foo and his descendant.

Choo adds that in the odes that remain there are many lacunae, and passages of which the meaning is doubtful, so that he could not presume to be positive in the interpretation of them. To the same effect is a remark of Fan Ch'oo-son on the 1st ode, that the student must deal with these pieces as in reading the P'wan-kung and the Announcements in the Shoo, not insisting on the literal meaning of the text, but well satisfied if he can catch the writer's drift (學者要當如讀盤詰,不必以文義相屬識其大旨可也).

Ode 1, Narrative. APPROPRIATE TO A SACRIFICE TO T'ANG THE SUCCESSFUL, THE FOUNDER OF THE SHANG DYNASTY, DWELLING ESPECIALLY ON THE MUSIC, AND ON THE REVERENCE WITH WHICH THE SERVICE WAS PERFORMED. By which of the sovereigns of Shang the sacrifice to which the ode refers was performed, we cannot tell. He is simply spoken of as 'a descendant of Tang.' Are we to take the piece as from him, whoever he was, or as narrative rather, composed by some one, probably a member of the royal House, who had taken part in the service? On the former view the several 我 in the piece, and especially the 予 in the last line but one, find an easy explanation, but on the other hand, I cannot conceive the principal in the sacrifice speaking of himself simply as 湯孫 or that he could say of himself 於赫湯孫 as in l. 11. I understand the whole therefore as narrative, and translate the personal pronouns in the plural.

LL 1–4. Sacrifices, during the Shang dynasty, were commenced with music; during the Chow dynasty with libations of fragrant spirits;—in both cases with the same object, to attract the Spirit or Spirits sacrificed to, and secure their presence at the service. Ch'in Hsiao (陳浩; Ming dyn.) says:—'The departed Spirits hover between heaven and earth, and sound goes forth filling all the region of the air. Hence, in sacrificing, the people of Yin commenced with a performance of music, wishing thereby to call the attention of the Spirits, who, hearing it, would perhaps come to be present at the service and to enjoy it.' I do not vouch for the correctness of this explanation; but the sacrifices of Yin or Shang did begin with music; and hence we have so much about it in this ode.

L. 1. 猗與—as in l. [II] VI.; but I translate here—'How admirable,' as we must take the terms as an exclamation of admiration (美而歎之; Ying-tah). 那—as in l. [II] VII. L. 3. The line must refer, I think, to the instruments of music. L. 2. 置—陳—to set forth. 鞀鼓—as in l. [II] V. L. 3. 奏 denotes the striking up of all the drums. 簡 簡 is defined by 和大.—as in the translation. LL 4. 衍—as in l. [II] VII. L. 2. 'The meritorious ancestor' is T'ang.

LL 5–12 L. 5. 'The descendant of Tang' is the sacrificing sovereign. Ch'ing, erroneously insisting on 孫 as meaning 'grandson,' says we are to understand T'ao-k'ab. Maou takes 假

—大, so that the line—'The descendant of Tang performs this grand music.' Much better is it to take 假 as—格, 'to come to,' so that the meaning of 奏假 is as I have given it, or, perhaps, stronger. L. 6 has perplexed the critics very much, though Ch'ing got hold of what seems to be the correct view of it. In the Lo K'o, XXVI. Pt. 1, 2, 3, we are told how the sacrificer, as preliminary to the service, had to fast for several days, and to think of the person of his ancestor,—where he had stood and sat, how he had smiled and spoken, what had been his cherished aims, pleasures, and delights; and on the 3d day he would have a complete image of him in his mind's eye. Then on the day of sacrifice, when he entered the temple, he would seem to see him in his shrine, and to hear him as he went about in the discharge of the service. The line seems to indicate the realization of all this. The 'Complete Digest' says on it—綏安也; 思成言未祭而有所思既祭而若有形聲可接則所思者於是乎成矣謂神命來格也. LL 7, 8. 淵淵 indicate the deep sound of the drums, and 曄曄 the clear, shrill notes of the flutes. LL 9, 10. These sounds were in harmony and blended together (高上相均謂之平), being regulated by the music which came from the hall above the court. Of the music in the hall only one instrument is mentioned,—the k'ing. This, we are told, was not the ordinary k'ing, or sounding stone (石磬), which was among the instruments in the court, but the 'gem k'ing' (玉磬, or 玉球). I cannot describe it more particularly. Ll. 11, 12: I have said I cannot conceive of the sacrificer speaking, as in L. 11, of himself. K'ang says the line is in praise of T'ang, and not the sacrificer's boasting of himself (頌湯, 非自誇也); but that is a mere evasion of the difficulty.

Ll. 13—16. The preceding paragraph is supposed to cover the offering of the sacrifice, and all the feasting of the departed T'ang through his representative. In this the service is drawing to a conclusion. L. 13. 庸—the same character with 金 at the side, in III. i. VIII. 3. Both Maou and Choo say on 有數數數然盛也, meaning the richness and compass of the notes of the bells and drums. There is nothing in the dict., under the character, to give us this meaning of it; but Wang Tsou observes that 數驛 and 驛 were anciently interchanged. Either of the latter forms will suggest the meaning adopted here. L. 14. 有奕—奕奕然, 有次序, denoting the orderly gracefulness with which the dances were performed.

Ll. 15, 16. 客.—as in I. [ii.] III, et al.; only the term should here, perhaps, be taken in the singular, the visitor being the representative of the former dynasty of Hsia. There may have been another also, the representative of the Family of Shun. L. 16 must be construed interrogatively. 夷 and 懌 are synonymous, = 悅, 'to be pleased.'

Ll. 17—20 celebrate the mildness and reverence of the sacrificer in all the service, showing him to be the true representative of all the great men of former times. Choo Kung-t'ien refers the 'former men' to such as T'ang, noted for his 敬; Yu, for his 祗; Shun, for his 恭; and Yao for his 欽. The force of the 作—行, 'to practise,' must be carried on to the next line. 恪—敬, 'to be reverent.'

Ll. 21, 22 are expressive of a prayer or wish (言湯其尚顧我烝嘗哉). Two of the seasonal sacrifices are mentioned, by synecdoche, for all the four. 將—奉, 'to offer;—the offering of the descendant of T'ang.

The rhymes are—鼓, 祖, cat. 5, 1, 2; 成, 聲, 平, 聲, 聲, cat. 11; 數, 奕, 客, 懌, 昔, 作, 夕, 恪, cat. 5, 1, 3; and 嘗, 將, cat. 10.

Ode 2. NARRATIVE. PROBABLY LIKE LAST ODE, APPROPRIATE TO A SACRIFICE TO T'ANG, DWELLING ON THE SPIRITS, THE SOUP, AND THE GRAVITY OF THE SERVICE, AND THE ASSISTING PRINCES. It is the view of Choo that the object of the sacrifice here was also T'ang the Successful. The Preface says that it was T'ae-mow, the second of the three Honoured ones (中宗) among the sovereigns of Shang. The Imperial editors go at length into a discussion of the question, and say all that can be said in favour of the earlier view. But I am persuaded that Choo is correct. There is no getting over the 烈祖 of L. 1, and the 湯孫 of L. 23. It would be very strange to have a sacrifice to T'ae-mow, and not a word in the piece in praise of him, which can be interpreted in any way of him, unless it be L. 4.

There is the same difficulty with the personal pronouns as in the former ode, and I can see no other method to dispose of it but that which I there adopted. The student can try if he can get any satisfaction from the following remarks of Loh Kin, who has on this ode endeavoured to cope with it:—'The Sung odes all celebrate the complete virtue and set forth the accomplished merit of their subjects; but this is done by the singer (or writer), giving expression to the sentiments of the principal at the sacrifice. When from the stand-point of his own person he refers to that principal, he calls him "you." From the stand-point of the ancestor (sacrificed to), he calls him "the grandson of T'ang." When he introduces him in his own person, he uses the first personal pronoun. It is one and the same person who is indicated by these different forms of expression. The case is the same in the previous ode. So in the Chow Sung, [ii.] VII., the writer, from the stand-point of his own person mentions the sacrificer as "the Son of Heaven;" then, as "the filial son," also as here we have "the grandson of T'ang;" and again we have the sacrificer speaking in the first person just as here (頌詩

L. 1-4. 嗟嗟—as in L. [ii.] L. 'The meritorious ancestor' is, with all critics, T'ang,—as in last ode. The 'Flower and Essence of the She' expands L. 2 into 烈祖眷顧後人有常者此福. 'This happiness with which our meritorious ancestor blesses his posterity is his permanent possession.' Being permanent, he could confer it on one descendant after another. The 爾 in L. 4 must be referred to the principal in the sacrifice with reference to which the ode was first made. On which of the kings of Shang he was, not even a conjecture can be hazarded. 斯所, 'this place'—in this place. His sacrificing to T'ang in the ancestral temple was the greatest possible proof of his inheriting from him the royal dignity.—Of course those who hold by the Preface refer the 'you' to T'ae-mow;—against all natural interpretation.

cates their being 'contained' in their proper vessel. L. 6,—like L. 6 in last ode. The soup is, I suppose, spoken of in II. 7, 8,—a part of the articles used in the sacrifice for the whole. 和 denotes the harmonious mixture or tempering of all the flavours in it. The same idea is repeated in the 平, and so the 戒 also must refer to the soup as carefully prepared beforehand. L. 9, 10 are quoted in the 'Doctrine of the Mean,' XXXIII. 4, with 奏 instead of 饌, and Choo adopts the former as the true reading, so that 饌假—奏假 in L. 5 of last ode. Ode 3. Narrative. APPROPRIATE TO A SACRIFICE IN THE ANCESTRAL TEMPLE OF SHANG;—INTENDED SPECIALLY TO DO HONOUR TO THE KING WOO-TING. The Preface says that the sacrifice to which the place refers was entirely to Woo-ting (祀高宗). Choo on the contrary says nothing about Woo-ting, but simply that it belonged to the sacrifices in the ancestral temple, tracing back the family of Shang to its origin and to its attaining the sovereignty of the kingdom. If we accept the view of the Preface, we are obliged to adopt what seems to me an unnatural interpretation of ll. 10, 11; but if it were not intended in some way to do honour to Woo-ting, we cannot account for the repeated mention of him in it. Ch'ing would change the 祀 of the Preface into 祫, maintaining that the sacrifice was in the third year after the death of Woo-ting, and paid to him in the temple of Szech, the ancestor of the Shang dynasty. Woo-ting is mentioned in the Shoo, V. viii., and ix.

LL. 1-5. LL. 1, 2. 玄鳥, 'the dark bird,' is a name for the swallow (玄鳥 鷗也). derived from this passage and the traditions connected with it. The mother of Szech, it is said, was a daughter of the House of Sung (有娥氏女), belonging to the harem of the ancient emperor K'uh, and named K'ien-teih (簡狄). Acc. to Maou, she accompanied the emperor at the time of the vernal equinox, when the swallow made its appearance, to sacrifice and pray to the first March-maker, and the result was the birth of Szech.—see a very similar legend, as to the birth of Hw-tsieh, on III. ii. l. 1. See-ma T'ien, and also Ch'ing, after him, make the birth of Szech still more marvellous. K'ien-teih was bathing in some open place, when a swallow suddenly made its appearance and dropt an egg, which she took and swallowed; and from this came the birth of Szech. We need not believe the legends, say the imperial editors;—the important point is to believe that the birth of Szech was specially ordered by Heaven. 生商, 'gave birth to Shang,' i.e., to Szech who became lord of Shang:—see the note on the title of the Book.

LL. 3. 宅—居, 'to dwell in.' We must understand 子孫, 'Szech's descendants' as the subject of 宅. As it was not till the reign of P'wan-kang, that the name of Shang came to be interchanged with Yin, we must suppose that the land of Yin is here improperly spoken of. 殷 was a name for the district about 亳, where P'wan-kang fixed his capital. The poet, writing after him, gives the denomination to the early seat of the family. 芒芒—大貌, 'great-looking;—to be understood of Szech's descendants and their territory. As the 'Flower and Essence of the Shoo' expands the line,—其子孫宅居殷土, 國遂芒芒然. 大 LL. 4, 5. 古—昔, 'anciently.' The 帝 is 上帝, 'God.' I translate L. 5 acc. to Gow-yang See's exposition of it, which is the simplest I have met with.—謂湯始受命以正四方之疆域

LI 6-10. 方—四方, —throughout the four quarters, or in each of the four quarters.

厥后—諸侯, 'the feudal princes.' 九有 is explained by 九州, both by Maou and Chow, with reference to the division of the country by Yu into nine provinces;—see the Shoo, III.1. The dictionary repeats the same definition without attempting to account for this signification of 有; nor will I set myself to do so. LI 8-10 seem plain enough, but the meaning of them is very much disputed. To begin with LI 10—武丁孫子—武丁之孫子, 'the descendant of Woo-ting.' So say Gow, Yang Siew, and Fan Ch'oo-s, the latter adding that the expression denotes the sacrificing sovereign (指主祭之君). On this view, 在—the appointment is now in the person of the descendant of Woo-ting. If we adopt this view of LI 10, the other lines present no difficulty, and I understand

先后 of T'ang, rather than, in the plural, of the former kings of Shang anterior to Woo-ting. Many of the critics, however, Wang Sui the first among them so far as I have been able to ascertain, take 武丁孫子 as—武丁之爲人孫子—武丁善爲人之孫子, and 在—'lay in,' 'depended on,' so that the meaning of the three lines is that the permanence of the appointment to the sovereignty of the kingdom, which T'ang received, was owing to Woo-ting's approving himself a worthy descendant of him. Ying-tah claims Maou as in favour of this view; but it is merely by way of inference. I do not think it would ever have been heard of but for the statement of the Preface that the sacrifice celebrated in the ode was one to Woo-ting. It is not a fair construction of the text.

LI 11-14. The diff. views of LI 10 of course affect the interpretation of LI 11, 12; but I need not enter on them again. Choo says that 武王 is properly a denomination of T'ang, but that his descendants also so designated themselves. This hardly seems to be necessary, if we translate—'a martial king.' 勝—任 'to bear,' 'to sustain.' 靡不勝—無所不勝,—as in the translation. LI 12, 14 relate to the feudal princes who came to assist the king in sacrificing. I do not think we are to lay stress on the specification of ten chariots. You Ts'an says we are to take the ten as referring to the more illustrious among the princes;—if they came, all the others would be sure to do so. Ch'ing and Ying-tah have other ways of accounting for the number. 大糗 is explained as a denomination of 'millet and sacrificial millet.' The dict. quotes, under the character, this line, and also LI 1 of II. I. VI. 4, where we read 饋. The two characters are interchanged, but Ying-tah observes that the radical 米 determines the meaning here to be what I have just stated. 承 must be under-

II. 15—17. II. 15—16, —see in the 'Great Learning,' Canon III. 1. 肇—始, 'to begin.'

There may, possibly, be a reference in the lines to the vigour of Woo-ting and his martial descendant, as re-establishing the ancient way of Tang over all the kingdom. On 'the four seas,' see Ana. XII. iv. 祈祈—衆多貌, 'the app. of multitudes.' L. 17 is very obscure, and Choo acknowledges that he does not understand it. The most likely construction is to take 景 as the name of a hill, near which was the capital, to which it served as a shelter and defence. 員 —like 隕 in the next ode, l. 6; but it is there explained by 周, 'all round.' As we must take 河 of the Ho, the Yellow river, I do not see how it could be represented as going all round the capital. The translation gives what I conceive the line may have been intended to say. Lacharue has—Regio King (ubi arboribus) tota finis cingitur. L. 22. 何—任 'to sustain.' Ch'ang says that the line—擔負天之多福, 'He sustains (or enjoys) the many sources of happiness conferred by Heaven.'

The Preface, indeed, says it was made on occasion of the great Ts sacrifice (大禘), when the principal object of honour would be the emperor K'uh, with Sêh as his correlate, and all the previous kings of the dynasty and the lords of Shang, and their famous ministers and advisers, would be associated in the service. Choo is of opinion that the occasion was the Heih sacrifice (禘祭). Other views have been advanced; but it is not necessary to enter into a discussion of them. There are many difficulties in construing and explaining the paragraphs and lines, and the remark of Fan Ch'oo-e quoted in the note on the title of the Book is often brought to mind;—if we think we have got the drift of the writer's meaning, we must be satisfied.

It is difficult to determine exactly the meaning of 下土. The connection might seem to justifiare called 幅; spoken of with reference to the extent they embraced, 隕 (自其直言之, 日幅自其周圍言之曰隕).

It has been mentioned, in the introductory note, that the mother of Sseeh was a daughter of the State of 有城. 方將 — 始大 —

as in the translation. 帝 — 上帝, 'God.'

So, all the critics, except Ch'ing, who says that the 帝 was the 黑帝, one of his five

elemental Gods, whom he called 叶光紀

(see the preface to the Shoo, pp. 97, 98).

St. 2. Ll. 1-5 are occupied with Sseeh, who is styled 'king' in I. 9; not that he ever was a king himself, but the title of his descendants is carried back to him. It is vain to inquire why he is styled the dark king. 撥 is defined by 治,

'to rule,' — with reference to the meaning of the term as 'to scatter,' 'to remove.' — Sseeh took away the confusion and ignorance that prevailed.

桓 is explained, by Choo, by 武, 'martial,' and by Wang Taou, by 大, 'great.' It does not seem proper to speak of Sseeh's rule as warlike,

his work being to instruct the people in the social duties; — see the Shoo, II. I. 19. Ll. 2, 3.

'A small State,' 'a great State,' may refer to Shang, small at first, but increased by subsequent grants; but I prefer to understand the expressions of the States small and large, as they were subjected to the influence of Sseeh's lessons. 達 — 通, 'to have free course,' — to be successful. Ll. 4, 5 tell us how Sseeh exemplified his lessons, and how rapidly he accomplished his object. 履 is taken as — 禮, 'the rules of conduct to be trodden by men.' 不

越 — 不過, 'without transgression.' Ll. 5 —

遂視其民則發以應之, 'thereon

he looked at the people, and they had stirred themselves to respond to him.' As Wang Che-

Ch'ang (王忠長; Ming dyn.) says, 契能

[Then came] Ssang-t'oo, all-ardent,
And all [within] the seas, beyond [the middle region], acknowledged his restraints.

- 3 The favour of God did not leave [Shang],
And in T'ang was found the subject for its display.
T'ang was not born too late,
And his wisdom and virtue daily advanced.
Brilliant was the influence of his character [on Heaven] for long,
And God appointed him to be a model to the nine regions.

以身教故在寬而奏效捷)

Ll. 6, 7 introduce Ssang-t'oo, who appears in the genealogical lists, as the grandson of Sseh. 烈

烈, 'all-ardent' or 'very meritorious.' Ll. 7

is very obscure. 海外 is literally, 'outside the seas;' but we cannot think of the influence of Ssang-t'oo as extending beyond the China of his day. The phrase—四海之外, 'the outside of the four seas,' the 'four seas' being a denomination of the kingdom in all its extent,

and the 'outside' leading us to conceive of all the feudal States in distinction from the royal domain. Choo defines 截 by 整齊, 'to be adjusted and made regular;' but that is merely a portion of Ch'ing's account of the line, and a result of the 有截. He says, 四海之

外率服截然整齊. 截 means 'to cut off,' 'to intercept; 有截 sets the States

before us as submissive to the restraints put upon them by the lord of Shang, whatever they were. Ch'ing says that Ssang-t'oo was employed by the then king of Hsia as a sort of director

or president of all the other princes; but that is merely an inference drawn from this line.

St. 3. The writer passes over all the other lords of Shang, and brings us, with a bound, to T'ang, the founder of the dynasty. Ll. 5, 2. 違

去, 'to go away,' 'to leave.' The favour of Heaven, to be seen in due time, in its appointment of the House of Shang to the sovereignty of the kingdom, had never left it, but it was not till T'ang that the proper man to receive it appeared. This seems to be the meaning of 湯濟, which Choo says he does not understand. Soo Ch'eh, Fan Choo-s, and others, explain 濟 by 會, 'to meet with,' as if in T'ang the man and the decree of Heaven met together (Mao says, 至湯與天心會;

Soo, 與天命會; Fan, 至于湯則

德與命會). Ll. 8, 4. 降=生, 'to be born.' 不遲, 'not late,'—at the proper time. 聖敬—his sagely reverence, 躋—

升, 'to ascend,'—to increase. Ll. 5—7. 昭

假 expresses how the virtue of T'ang brilliantly affected Heaven (其德昭明感格 於天), and this it did by a continuous and gradual process (遲遲; comp. the phrase in

L. xv, 2, et al.). 祗—敬, 'to reverence.' 式

—法, 'to be, or to give, the law.' 九圍—

九有 in last ode. Ying-tai says, 'All under heaven being divided into nine parts, there they were, distinct as if each part had been marked out by a compass (九分天下, 各爲 九處, 若規圍然).'

And he supported them as a strong steed [does its burden];—

St. 4. T'ang appears now as sovereign of the kingdom. Ll. 1, 2. Choo does not understand 1. 1. 球 is explained as 美玉, 'an admirable kind of jade.' We must give it the same meaning as 璫, in the Shoo, II. 1. 7, the jade-tokens of rank;—the 圭 of the Chow dynasty, varying in shape and size, according to the rank of the prince. They received them from the king in the first place, and they brought them to the court, when they appeared there, as the tokens of their dignity. 小球 大球 will be the tokens belonging to small and to great States respectively. The prince now rendered them to T'ang, acknowledging his sovereignty. L. 2 expresses his sovereignty in another way. 旒 denotes the tassels or pendants attached to a banner. 綌 'to be connected.' To T'ang all the States were now attached as the pendants to a banner (言爲天子而爲諸侯所係 綌如旗之旒 爲旒所綌著也). L. 3. 何—荷, 'to bear,' 'to sustain.' Ll. 4—7, describe the manner of T'ang in his government. 綌—綌 'to be slow or remiss' 優優 is expressive of gentleness and magnanimity. L. 29. 適—聚, 'to be collected.' 百祿, 'all the dignities and their emoluments.'

St. 5. Ll. 1, 2 are both in themselves unintelligible to Choo. Taking 共 as 一供 in the sense of contributions, and keeping in mind the analogy of L. in last st. 1, we get the meaning of L. 1 which I have here given. Other explanations have been tried, but I need not dwell upon them. L. 2 is more perplexing. 駿, indeed, has commonly the meaning of 大, 'great,' but 旒 seems to baffle critical ingenuity. Maou explains it by 厚, and Ying-tah gives the meaning as—爲下國大厚謂成其志性使大純厚也,—which is very unsatisfactory. Evidently this stanza and the last are of similar structure, and as the 2d line there contained a comparison, so ought the line before us to do. Now, the Ts'ao copy of the Shu read here 駿驥 a character which K'ang-ho's dictionary does not acknowledge, but which is found in the Urh-ya, the Yuh-p'ien, and the Shih-wan, meaning a horse, with characteristics variously defined (See in the 皇清經解, ch. 1, 408.) I must adopt this reading, and then the line may be translated as I have done (是喻湯有力量能負重致遠之意).

 And with reverence grasped his axe.
 It was like [the case of] a blazing fire,

 The nine regions were effectually secured by him.
 Having smitten [the princes of] Wei and Koo
 He dealt with [the prince of] Keun-woo, and with Kēeh of Hēa.

 kindred meaning—恐 or 懼, 'to be afraid.'
 L. 9. 總, 'to be together,'—遄 in last stan-

St. 6 details the military achievements by which T'ang made himself master of the kingdom. Ll. 1,2. 旆 is a streamer attached to a flag; but it is here used for the flag itself, and with a verbal force, 'he raised his banner.'
 載 is the particle. 有虔—'reverently.'
 T'ang had no wish to dethrone Kēeh, but it was a duty which he owed to Heaven to take the course he did. Ll. 5,6. 曷, 'have, i. q. 遏, to repress, 'to check' 我 had better be translated in the 3d person. L. 8 is a metaphorical way of describing Kēeh the last king of Hēa, and his three principal adherents. He was the root (苞—本); they were the shoots springing from it. L. 6. 莫遂, 莫達 are to be explained with reference to the figure in

 l. 5. As Ho K'ue says, 皆從蘖字生 出. L. 7. 九有 as in last ode. 有截—as in the translation. Ll. 8,9. The three great helpers of Kēeh were the princes of Wei (or Ch'uewei, 豕韋), Koo, and Keun-woo; but the exact site of these principalities I have not been able to make out. Their chiefs are represented as descended from Chub-yung, a son of the ancient Chuen-hēh. We must repeat the 伐 at the commencement of l. 9.

St. 7. 葉—世, 'age'; 中葉, 'the mid-

 T'ang. As Ho K'ue says, 此詩前言相

And vigorously did he attack King-ts'oo.

And brought the multitudes of King together,

during that period of decadence. 業—危
'to be in a perilous condition.' L. 3. Choo takes this line as meaning—'But truly did he—T'ang —prove himself the Son of Heaven.' I much prefer the view of Ch'ing, which is followed in the 'Flower and Essence,' taking 子 as in i. [1.]

VIII. 天子—天愛湯而子之
'Heaven loved T'ang, and made him its son.'
L. 4—5. Heaven showed its favour for T'ang, by raising up (降) and giving him the famous K Yin, who became his principal minister and director. See on him the note in the Shoo on the title of IV. 17; and on 阿衡, his name, or the name of his office, under IV. v. 1.

Choo and the critics generally resume in regard to this ode the arrangement of the lines in stanzas, which seems to me to show that it is not a Song piece.

The rhymes are—in st. 1. 商祥芒方

Ode 5. Narrative. CELEBRATING THE WAR OF WOO-TING AGAINST KING-TS'OO, ITS SUCCESS, AND THE GENERAL HAPPINESS AND VIRTUE OF HIS REIGN;—MADE, PROBABLY, WHEN A SPECIAL AND PERMANENT TEMPLE WAS BUILT FOR HIM
AS THE 'HIGH AND HONOURED' KING OF SHANG.
The Preface merely says that this was made on occasion of a sacrifice to Woo-ting. The concluding stanza indicates further that it was made on the occasion which I have indicated in the argument. After his death his Spirit-tablet would be shrined in the ancestral temple of Shang, and he would have his share in the seasonal sacrifices; but several reigns would elapse before there was any necessity for making any other arrangement, so that his tablet should not be removed and his share in the sacrifices not be discontinued. Hence K'ang refers the composition of the piece to the reign of T'ang (帝乙), the last but one of the sovereigns of Shang.

St. 1. L. 1. 撻—疾貌 'rapid-looking.'
殷武—殷王之武—as in the translation. L. 2. In 荆楚 we have two names of the same State combined together, just as we have so often the combination Yin-shang as the name of the Shang or Yin dynasty in II. iii. 1. But the combination here is more strange and perplexing. Both the names of Yin and Shang were in common use in the time of King Wan, who uses them combined in III. iii. 1; but we should say, but for this ode, that the name of Ts'oo was not in use at all till long after the Shang dynasty. The name King appears in the Ch'un T'ew several times in the annals of duke
Chwang, and then it gives place to the name Ts'oo in the 1st year of duke He, and subsequently disappears itself altogether. The common opinion is that the name of Ts'oo first came into use about the beginning of duke He's rule of Loo, i.e., about B.C. 658,—between four and five centuries after the overthrow of Shang. If the ode before us be genuine, that opinion of course is incorrect. Han Ying, however, referred this piece to the time of duke Ssang of Sung,—and I must say that the balance of the argument rather inclines in favour of that view. I introduce here a long note from Kuang on this point, and King-ts'oo, or King and Ts'oo, generally:—楚雄南服立國在江漢之間其強最久周以前世系無所考武王封熊繹為楚子春秋莊公之世楚皆書荆至傳元年乃書楚人伐鄭嚴氏曰解頤新語疑商時未有荆楚乃欲假此以實韓詩宋襄公時作商頤之說殊不思禹貢荆楚也荆岐既旅至于荆山乃在西雍州之荆也詩人耳孰謂周時始有荆楚哉李綱曰荆楚在商周之時為夷狄之國世亂則先叛世治則後服當湯之時不敢抗衛及商中微為中國患此高宗以討之也按郝氏敬援二

L. 3. Maou defines 采 by 深, 'deeply'; Choo, after Ch'ing by 冒, 'daringly.' Either meaning suits the connection. 阻—險阻—as in the translation. L. 4. 哀—聚, 'to collect'; 旅—衆, 'multitudes.' Perhaps the 'Essence and Flower of the She' is correct in understanding the line of the king's making all the people of King-ts'oo prisoners (荆州之衆負固不服者哀聚而俘虜之).

L. 5. 其所, 'their places,'—meaning the whole territory. 有截—as in last ode. L. 6. 緒—功, 'meritorious achievement'; but it also indicates that the merit was a sequence of that of T'ang and other sovereigns.

St. 2 contains an address which we are to suppose Woo-ting to have spoken to the people or chiefs of King-ts'oo. L. 2. Maou explains 鄉 by 所, 'place,' so that 南鄉 simply—'the south,' or 'the southern parts.' Woo-ting's capital being in the north of the present Ho-nan, he might very well speak thus of King-ts'oo.

which was in Hoo-pih. Ll. 3—5. The Te-k'ang still existed in the time of the Han dynasty,
occupying portions of the present Kan-suh.

享<sup>獻</sup> 'to offer,' i.e., to present as a tribute
the productions of their country. 王 is used in a technical sense, — 世一見, 'once in the life-time to appear at the king's court.' This was the rule laid down anciently for the chiefs of the wild tribes, which lay beyond the nine provinces of the kingdom. Every chief once in his time was required to present himself at court.

The rule, in normal periods, was observed by a chief, immediately after he succeeded to the headship of his tribe. Ll. 7 is an explanatory remark of the king, and 曰 is merely — 蓋

'for.' 商是常 — 此商之常禮 —
in the translation. If the tribes of the Te-k'ang had thus acknowledged the sovereignty of T'ang
so long ago, much more might those of King-tao be expected now to acknowledge that of Woo-ting.

St. 3 relates how all the feudal princes loyally presented themselves at the court of Woo-ting:
— that more so, we are to suppose, because of the way in which he had subdued the tribes of King-tao. Two ideas seem to underlie ll. 1, 2 — that though the princes had their appointments from the king, these might also be ascribed to Heaven. The same ideas occur in the Shoo, IV.
viii. Pt. II. 2, in the words of Yuch, the chief adviser of Woo-ting. 多辟<sup>諸侯</sup> like 辟公 in I. [1.] IV., et al. 于禹之績 'in the merit of Yu.' — 于禹功所及之處 —

as in the translation. In l. 3, 辟 is here the king, and 來辟 is analogous to 來王 in last stanza, meaning that the princes appeared at the royal court (來朝觀於我殷王).

The 'yearly affairs' which brought them there,
were that they might take their part in the seasonal sacrifices, and to report on the condition of their States. We are to take ll. 4, 5 as spoken by the princes, praying the king to deal gently with them, and promising to attend to the husbandry of their States, — their most important duty.

St. 4 seems to refer to the general govt. of Woo-ting as strictly just, and regulated by a regard to the sentiments of the people, and to the firm establishment of his throne in consequence. The sentiment in ll. 1, 2 is understood to be the same as that in the Shoo, V. Pt. II. 7, 天視自我民視 天聽自我民

聽 'Heaven sees as my people see; Heaven
hears as my people hear.' 嚴 — 威可畏.

'an awfulness which is to be feared.' The 命 in l. 1 is perplexing, as the whole is equivalent to saying that 'Heaven descends and inspects,'

商邑翼翼。四方 之極。赫赫厥聲。 濯濯厥靈。壽考 且寧。以保我後

- 5 The capital of Shang was full of order,
The model for all parts of the kingdom,
Glorious was his fame;
Brilliant, his energy.
Long lived he and enjoyed tranquillity,
And so he preserves us, his descendants.
- 6 We ascended the hill of King,
Where the pines and cypresses grew symmetrical.
We cut them down, and conveyed them here;
We reverently hewed them square.
Long are the projecting beams of pine;
Large are the many pillars.
The temple was completed,—the tranquil abode [of his tablet].

or that 'Heaven exercises an inspection here below.' The 命 is to be taken adverbially, or as expressive of the law or method of procedure which Heaven prescribes to itself. Woo-ting recognized this, and showed that he did so, as is described in II.3.4. 僭 is understood of 'error in rewarding or bestowing favours (賞之差), and 濫 of 'excess in punishing (刑之過)'. 遑—暇, 'to have—or to allow one's self—leisure.' L. 5, 'Being appointed (i.e. by Heaven) over all the feudal States.' L. 6. 封—大, 'grandly, 'on a great scale.' 'His happiness' will mean his firm possession of the throne, and the prosperity of the country.

St. 5 may be considered as an expansion of I. 8 in last stanza. L. 1. 邑 = 都, 'capital,' as in III.1. X. 3, so that 商邑—王都, 'the royal capital.' 翼翼—整敕貌, 'the appearance of the city as well-built and ordered.' L. 2. 極 = 表, 'a model,' the type of what a city and government should be. L. 4. 靈 has the meaning of 'energy,' 'majesty.' On II.3.4 Yen Ts'an says, 聲譽赫赫乎顯盛威靈濯濯乎光明. L. 5. Woo-ting's reign is said to have lasted 59 years. L. 6. 後生—後嗣子孫, 'his heirs and descendants.'

St. 6. relates to the temple which had been built for Woo-ting, and which was to last as long as the Shang dynasty should last,—for ever, as the writer of the ode imagined. Choo remarks on the similarity of structure between this stanza and the last stanza of II. IV., and says he does not know how to account for it. It is certainly suspicious, and must be added to the peculiarity in the use of the name King-wo in st. 1, as suggestive of the later origin of the piece. L. 1. 景山,—see on III. 1. 20. L. 2. Choo explains 丸丸 by 直, 'to be straight.' Mao by 易直, 'easy and straight.' The meaning of 丸, 'anything round,' suggests the symmetrical appearance of the trees as the real meaning of the phrase. L. 4 方-正, 'square,'

 'exact (以繩墨取方正)' I take 虔 in its most frequent sense of 敬, 'to do reverently.' The dict., with reference to this passage, defines it by 楫, of which it is difficult to see the meaning in the connection.
 Equally obscure is the 亦載 of Choo. L. 5.
 挺-長貌, 'long-looking.' L. 6. 閑-大,
 'large.' L. 7. 寢 is 'the inner apartment of the temple,' put for the whole. 安-所以

安高宗之神, 'wherewith to give repose to the spirit of Kao-tzang.'

THE 4TH RADICAL

乃
no

(1) A conjunction, at the beginning of lines, and of members of lines; frequently repeated in successive lines. The idea of connection which it indicates is various. We have it — but. I. vii. X. 1, 2; III. 1. VII. 1. — and accordingly, and so, III. 1. II. 2; III. 5; II. VI. 3, 4; IV. II. IV. 3. — then. II. v. VIII. 1; IV. 1. [II.] V. — If. II. iv. VIII. 9. It gives the force of the future in a wish or prayer. II. iv. V. 6, 8, 9; VI. 4; vi. VII. 4. — however. III. II. 1, 2. (2) As a possessive pronoun; but not as in the Shoo, of the second person. — 厥, their. IV. 1. [II.] I. (3)

乃如 — but. I. III. IV. 1, 2, 8; iv. VII. 8. Long, for long. I. III. XII. 3; II. III. III. 6; v. VIII. 3.

久 leu 之 che

(1) Of. The sign of the possessive case. The regent follows the 之, and the regimem precedes it. I. I. I. 1; II. 1, 2; VI. 1, 2, 3; et passim. (2) The objective case of the 3d personal pronoun, of both numbers. I. I. 2, 3; II. 2; IV. 1, 2, 3; et passim. (3) 之 is in many cases to be explained by 其, aiding the descriptive power of the line. In illustration of this usage, Wang Yin-che refers to 1.2 in I. III. XII. 1, 旄邱之葛今何誕之節, saying, 下之字, 則訓其言旄邱之葛何疏闊其節而不相附; and 1.8 in I. ix. VII. 3, 樂郊樂郊誰之永號, adding, 言樂郊之民誰其悲歎而長號者, 明皆喜樂也. In the notes in this latter passage, I have tried to bring the 之 under 1; but this descriptive usage of the term is very common throughout the Shoo. (4) In the middle of lines, 之 has very often to be disregarded, and treated as a mere expletive. In illustration of this usage, Wang Yin-che adduces 1.2 in I. iv. III. 2, 玼兮玼兮其之翟也, adding that 其之翟 — 其翟; and 1.4 in II. v. VIII. 8, 鮮民之生不如死之久矣, saying that 不如死之久矣 — 不如死久矣也. It may be possible to bring some instances of this usage also under 1; but there are multitudes of others in which we can simply admit the fact. (5) 之 often gives substantive force to the verb, or makes verbs of other characters. I. III. II. 2; iv. IX. 1, 2, 8; II. II. V. 3; iv. V. 3; VIII. 5; et passim. In II. vii. VIII. 3, 福祿申之, 之 seems to give 申 a passive force. There are other similar cases. (6) This, these; both masculine and feminine. I. I. VI. 1, 2, 3; IX. 2, 3; II. I. 1, 2, 3; XI. 1, 2, 3; III. III. 1, 2, 3; IV. 1, 2, 3; II. vi. X. 1, 2, 3; vii. I. 3; viii. II. 3; V. 1, 2, 7, 8; et passim. (7) To come to, — 至; to go to, — 往. I. iv. I. 1, 2; X. 4; III. III. III. 14. The expression 如之何 may be brought under (2), or (4).

woo

(1) A particle of exclamation, to which it is difficult to assign any positive meaning. I. vii. V. 1, 2; xi. X. 1, 2; II. viii. IV. 4. Often used with other characters of similar nature. 于嗟乎, I. II. 予 (2) To serve. II. vi. I. 4; III. i. II. 2; iii. VI. 4.

THE 7TH RADICAL. 二

二 Two; the second. I. iii. XIX. 1, 2; vii. V. 1, 2; xv. I. 1, 4, 8. 二三, —see 三.
二人, parents. II. v. II. 1. 二國, the two dynasties of Hsia and Shang. III. i. VII. 1. 二后, the kings Wan and Woo. IV. i. [1] VI. 二矛, the two spears set up in a war-chariot. IV. ii. IV. 5.
予 (1) A preposition, —in, on, to, &c. I. i. II. 1, 2; VII. 2, 3; iii. III. 1, 3; II. i. IV. 4 (inside); IV. i. [iii.] III. (up to); IV. (among); et passim. It is found often after 至, 至于, coming to, as to. I. v. IV. 1; II. vi. III. 1; III. i. III. 2; VI. 2; et al. Sometimes there is a peculiar inversion of 予 and the other characters in the line to which it belongs. E.g. III. iii. V. 1, 四國于藩四方于宣, for 蕃于四國宣于四方; and in st. 3, 謝于誠歸, for 誠歸于謝. Obs. 悵于羣小 I. iii. I. 4. (3) It is everywhere used as an expletive particle, which cannot be translated, and is interchangeable with 曰, 聿, and 呶. This usage constitutes a peculiarity of the Shu. I. i. II. 1; VI. 1, 2, 3; IX. 2, 3; II. i. 1, 2; iii. III. 1, 2, 3; II. i. VIII. 3, 6; et al. In many of these cases the old interpreters explained it by 往, to go; but this must be disallowed. So 予以 is to be taken as a compound expletive 'I. ii. II. 1, 2; III. VI. 3. (3) —爲, to make. The example of this usage given by Wang Yin-che is from I. iv. VI. 1, 作于楚宮, 作于楚室; but it may be doubted if this should not be brought under (1); comp. 篤于周枯, III. i. VII. 5. (4) —是, to be; —as in the last lines of II. i. VIII. 3, 6.

于 吁, in 于嗟, and 于嗟乎, ah! alas! I. i. XI. 8, 2; II. XIV. 1, 2; III. VI. 5; v. IV. 3; xi. X. 1, 2.
于 (1) To say. II. iv. X. 6; ? III. iii. III. 6. To praise, to speak of flatteringly. II. iv. VIII. 12. (2) —是, to be. II. iv. VIII. 4; v. V. 1; vi. III. 2, 3. (3) Throughout the Shu, 云 is used everywhere as an expletive particle, which we cannot translate: —at the beginning of lines, I. i. III. 4; iii. XIII. 4; II. v. V. 2, 3; vii. IV. 2; III. iii. 3; et al.; in the middle of lines, I. iii. VIII. 3; II. v. X. 5; vi. III. 1, 2, 3; viii. III. 2, 3; et al.; in the end of lines; II. v. V. 1; I. vii. XIX. 1 (員—云).
于 (4) Wang Yin-che makes it sometimes —或, some one, something. III. iii. II. 7; III. 5.

五 Five; the fifth. I. ii. VII. 1, 2, 3; X. 1; XIV. 1, 2; iv. IX. 3; viii. VI. 2; xi. III. 1; xv. I. 4, 5; et al.

亞 (1) Used for 姻, the terms by which brothers-in-law call each other. 姻亞 —relatives by affinity. II. iv. VII. 4. (2) The younger sons of a family. IV. i. [iii.] V. Quickly. I. xv. I. 7; II. v. V. 5. To be in haste. III. i. VIII. 1. To be reduced to extremity, urgent need. I. iii. XVI. 1, 2, 3.

THE 8TH RADICAL. 亡

亡 (1) To go to ruin. II. vii. IX. 4; III. iii. II. 4. (2) To go away; not to be more. III. iii. X. 8; XI. i. (流亡); I. x. XI. 1, 2, 3; xi. I. 3. (3) To be in poverty. I. iii. X. 4. (4) Used for 忘, to forget, to be forgotten. I. iii. II. 2.
交 (1) Emulantly. I. iii. xv. 2, 3. Together. I. xi. III. 3. To be in intercourse. II. vii. I. 4; VIII. 3; IX. 3. 交錯 —all round. II. vi. V. 3. 交亂 —see 亂. The conjunction of the sun and moon. II. iv. IX. 1. (2) 交交, to flit about,—as birds. I. xi. VI. 1, 2, 3; II. v. II. 5; vii. 1. 1, 2.

A conjunction;—also, and. It occurs everywhere, both at the commencement and in the middle of lines, and in the great majority of cases, its connective force must be disregarded, and it must be treated simply as an expletive particle. Wang Yü-ché instances 亦既見止 in I. ii. III. as an example of its expletive use at the beginning of lines, and 不

顯亦世 in III. i. I. 2, of the same use in the middle of lines. After 蓋, as in I. ix. III. 1, 2, and 苟, as in I. x. XII. 1, 2, 3, it is meaningless. I. iii. I. 1, 2; II. ii. IX. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 (indeed); IV. i. [ii.] VII. IX. (—仍); II. IV. 3; iii. II., may be specified as cases where the connective force should be indicated.

Used for 烹, to cook. I. xv. I. 6; II. vi. V. 3; viii. VII. 1.

To present offerings,—in sacrifice. II. i. VI. 4; vi. VI. 5, 6; III. i. V. 4; IV. i. [i.] VII. [ii.] VI. VIII. II. IV. 3; iii. II. To bring contributions. IV. iii. V. 2.

(1) A large height, or mound. I. iv. VI. 2; II. vi. VII. 4; III. ii. VI. 3. (2) A capital. I. xiv. IV. 1 (周京), 2 (京周), (京師) 3; III. i. I. 5; II. 2, 5; VI. 1 (here 京=周); VII. 6; IX. 1, 2; X. 6, 7; II. VI. 3 (here 京師 first occurs), 4. (3) 京京, to be great, intense. II. iv. VIII. 1.

(1) Truly. II. i. IV. 8; iv. I. 5; IX. 6; III. ii. I. 8. Sincerity. III. ii. X. 1. (2) 皇 (huáng) 父, the grandfather of king Wan. III. i. III. 1, 2.

(1) 臺臺, to be vigorously active. III. i. I. 2; iii. V. 2. (2) 臺臺, a river-gorge. III. ii. IV. 6.

THE 9th RADICAL. 人

人

Man; men. Passim. Sometimes it is feminine, as in I. iv. V. 3; xii. X. 1, 2, 3 (一人, a lady); et al. To be, or play, the man. I. iv. VI. 3; III. iii. II. 2; IV. i. [i.] IV. [ii.] 7. Used for man of official rank, in opposition to the people. III. ii. V. 1; iii. II. 5; III. 8; X. 2. —you and others. III. iii. I. 6. 懷人, the man whom I cherish,—the man of my heart. I. i. III. 1. 古人, the ancients. I. iii. II. 2, 4; et al. 寡人, I, me; used depreciatingly of one's self. I. iii. III. 4.

See under 一, 信, 侯, 行, 良, 犬, 鉦, 牧, 聖, 農, 私.

To sustain a burden. IV. i. [iii.] III. (仔肩).

To employ men in offices; to be employed in office. II. iv. VII. 4; X. 6; v. X. 6; III. i. X. 8.

伉伉, to be very strong. III. i. VII. 8.

To supersede. III. iii. III. 6.

Good; to make good. I. iii. VII. 2; II. ii. IX. 3; X. 3, 4; iv. IX. 3; vii. IV. 2; VI. 4; IX. 3; III. i. I. 2. (令聞); II. III. 3. (令終); V. 1; VIII. 6. (令聞, 令望); iii. VI. 2; VII. 5; VIII. 5; IV. ii. IV. 8.

(1) To order; orders. I. viii. V. 2; xi. I. 1. (2) 令令, sound of the rings at a dog's neck. I. viii. VIII. 1. (3) 脊

令, the wagtail. II. i. IV. 8; v. II. 4.

Other, another. I. iv. I. 1, 2; vii. XIII. 1, 2; x. II. 1, 2, 3. II. v. IV. 4; et al. In I. vi. VII. 1, 2, 3, 他人—a stranger.

其他—any other thing. III. v. I. 6.

Passim. (1) A ground or reason;—for what is mentioned. I. iii. XII. 2. This is, probably, the primary meaning of the character, and we may derive from it the usage of 何以, wherefore, whereby, wherewith. I. ii. VI. 2, 3; iv. IX. 1, 2, 3; III.

II. VI. 2; III. X. 5; IV. I. [L.] II. (假以):

et al. 是以, therefore, thereby, I. ix.

I. 2; et al. (用 often takes the place of 以):

and of 可以, I. III. I. 2; ix. I. 1; xii.

III. 1; et al. (2) The same primary meaning may be traced in its most frequent usage, as our to, the sign of the infinitive

mood—to, in order to, so that, thus, and thereby, &c. I. I. III. 2, 3; v. III. 3; II. I.

I. 3; VI. 1, 3; iv. VII. 10; vii. VI. 1; III.

I. III. 5; V. 5; II. I. 1, 2, 7; II. 4; IV. I.

[ii.] III. IV.; et passim. (3) We must often take it as a preposition,—by, by means of, on account of, where still there is an indication of the primary meaning.

I. III. I. 1; IX. 4; X. 1, 3; iv. VI. 1; II. iv.

IV. 3; III. II. 3; III. VII. 6; et al. (4)

—與, along with, I. III. VI. 2; et al. Akin to this are the cases where it = with,

bringing along with, I. III. X. 1; II. vii. 3;

VIII. 4; vii. X. 3; III. i. VII. 7; et al. (5)

—用, to employ, I. II. XI. 1; II. vi. IV.

4; IV. I. [iii.] IX. II. I. 1—4 (to use in).

(6) It is often used before 爲, —to take to be, to regard as, I. III. X. 5; iv. V.

1, 2; v. IV. 1; et sup. Before other verbs, its meaning is sometimes lost, as in

以告, I. x. III. 2. (7) Wang Yin-che gives it as 而, and; and under this usage I would bring, I. III. V. 2, 4; v. III.

3; xiii. I. 1; et al. The word following may be translated as a verb in the present

participle. (8) 于以 has been noticed,

under 于, as a compound particle. So 越以, I. xii. II. 3. And 以 alone, in

I. xi. III. 2, and perhaps, III. II. II. 2; iii.

VII. 3. (9) —與, to give to, II. vi.

III. 4. (10) We must translate by

when, or as—及 in III. II. I. 4, 5; iii. IX.

1; IV. II. II. 3. (11) — hired servants,

those who may be ordered about at pleasure.

IV. I. [iii.] V.—It is difficult to classify the various usages of the character.

I. vii. xxi. 1, 2; v. X. 1, 2, 3; and some other passages, are good illustrations of Julien's reduction of it merely to a sign of the accusative case.

To look up; to look up to, II. vi. I. 5;

vii. IV. 5.

The second in order of birth. We have 仲氏 applied to two ladies, I. III. III.

4, III. I. II. 2; but in, II. v. V. 7, 仲氏 means the younger of two gentlemen. It becomes equivalent to a name. 仲子

—Mr. Chung, I. vii. II. 1, 2, 3; but 子

仲 is a designation in I. III. VI. 2, while it—a clan-name in I. xii. II. 1. We have 仲行, in I. xi. VI. 2; 南仲, in, II.

i. VIII. 2, 5, 6; III. III. IX. 1; 張仲

in, II. III. III. 6; 仲允, in, II. iv. IX. 4.

It is a clan-name in, III. III. VI. 1—5.

2; VI. 1.

The appearance of being high, III. I. III. 7.

(有仇)

伎伎, the app. of moving slowly, II.

v. III. 5.

Passim. (1) This, I. xi. IV. 1, 2, 3; II.

i. V. 1 (but 伊人 hardly—more than a man); iv. II. 1, 2; et al. Wang Yin-che brings under this meaning, I. III. VIII. 1;

II. vi. III. 3; I. xv. III. 2; et al. (2) Its most common use is as—維, hardly translatable, but sometimes having the force of the copula, I. II. XIII. 3; III. X.

2, 6; vii. XXI. 1, 2; II. iv. VIII. 4; v. I.

2; et sup. (3) In II. vii. III. 1, 豈伊

異人, Wang explains it by 有, to be; in the same way 伊假文王,

in IV. I. [L.] VII. But it is better not to perplex ourselves to seek a substantive meaning for the character in such cases.

(4) 伊威, the large sow-bug, I. xv.

III. 2.

(1) To be lying down, I. xii. X. 3.

(伏枕): III. I. VIII. 2. (2) To lie hit, II. iv. VIII. 11. (3) —to suffer for, bear the consequences of, II. iv. X. 1.

(1) To cut down; to fell, I. I. X. 1, 2;

ii. V. 1; iv. VI. 1; III. II. 1, 3; et al. To this should be referred 斬伐, II. iv.

X. 1. (2) To smite,—in war, II. I. VIII.

IV. 9; V. 1; et al. (3) Applied to beating drums, II. III. IV. 3; vi. IV. 2. (4)

A shield of medium size, I. xi. III. 2.

(1) To rest,—as under the shade of trees, I. I. IX. 1. To rest or cease from labour, III. III. X. 4. To rest to be unemployed, I. X. 1, 3. To find rest,— from suffering, III. II. IX. 2. To be at rest, at ease, II. III. II. 4; iv. IX. 8; X. 5

(處休) 休休, to be quiet and serene, I. x. I. 3. (2) Excellence; excellent, admirable, I. xv. IV. 3; III. III.

VIII. 6; IV. I. [ii.] VIII.; [iii.] II.

—favour, IV. III. IV. 4. A favourable

auspice, IV. I. [iii.] VII. (3) 休艾,

a designation, III. III. IX. 2.

IV. I. [II.] 1 (在公). (3) — 功, merit, service. II. III. III. 3; III. I. VIII. 4; X. 4; III. VIII. 4; IV. I. [III.] VIII.

Passim. The character is peculiar to poetical compositions, occurring at the end of lines, and of the members of lines, emphasizing the statement, and generally in the way of admiration. Dr. Williams gives an erroneous account of it, that it is 'used as an exclamation of admiration or interrogation, according as it is in the middle or end of a sentence.' It must often be left untranslated, or rather not indicated in a translation. It occurs about 130 times.

Sharp, pointed, weapons of war. I. III. VI. 1; xi. VIII. 3; III. III. II. 4.

Passim; — more than 300 times. (1) The pronoun of the 3d person; personal and possessive, of both numbers, and all genders. I. I. II. 1; II. IX. 1, 2, 3; vii. XXI. 1, 2; et sequens. In this usage it is called in Chinese — 指事之詞.

Sometimes, we cannot do better than translate it in the 1st person, as in I. x. VIII. 1, 2, 3; IV. I. [III.] II. 2; at other times, in the 2d person, as in I. xii. I. 2, 3; III. III. III. 5. (2) Its most common usage is with a descriptive force; and Wang Yin-che specifies two cases: — 1st, when the thing is mentioned first, and the descriptive term follows, as in 擊鼓其鏜.

I. III. VI. 1. 雨雪其雱, XVI. 1, 2, 3, when the descriptive term or terms come first, and the thing follows, as in 灼灼其華, I. I. VI. 1, 殷其雷, II.

VIII. 1, 2, 3. In this usage, 其 is called 狀事之詞. (3) It is often used as a repetition of the subject of a sentence, as we may say in English, — The Lord, He is God. In this usage, Wang Yin-che would, probably, say that 其 — 殆. (4) It is sometimes — 將, 'will,' indicating the future; — as in I. x. I. 1. 今我不樂日月其除.

xv. 1, 7. 其始播百穀. (5) It sometimes gives an optative force (— 尚) to a line. I. v. VIII. 3; xi. V. 1; II. I. VIII. 1; vii. VI. 2; et al. (6) Occasionally, it — 若, 'as,' as in 謀之其臧, 則具是違, II. v. I. 2. (7) It must not unfrequently be translated as if it were — 乃, 'so be,' as in I. x. I. 1, 蟋蟀在堂歲聿其莫, II. v. VI.

4. 豈不爾受既其攸遷. (8) Wang Yin-che construes it sometimes as if it were — 之, as in II. II. III. 4, 5, 6, in the 1st line of each of which stanzas he says it — 之, while in the second it is the personal pronoun. (9) Occasionally it must be taken as merely an expletive particle (語助無意義也); — as in II. vii. X. 3. 子何其

臻—Some of the cases under these different usages may be resolved into the others, and the number of the usages might possibly be reduced; but the character has certainly a Protean application.
