Introduction

"The ever-new weaveth the ever-old, Ever telling the never-told."

Just as Egypt is called the Gift of the Nile, so also Chola culture and art may be called the Gift of the Kaveri—a glorious heritage we should be proud of.

In 1910, some thirteen distinguished British art critics declared that they "find in the best art of India a lofty and adequate expression of the religious emotions of the people and of the deepest thoughts on the subject of the divine." A.K. Coomaraswamy has said, "Everything manmade must have a deeply religious meaning, it must be made with the gods in mind and in their image, it must face towards the gods, reach towards the gods and symbolize the gods." And it is this aspect of art that fascinated the Cholas—and it is their survivals we are dealing with here.

Chola—and Pandyan—temples have had no systematic and scientific survey of them made so far. Neither the Central nor the State government, nor any South Indian university, nor any endowed research body has carried out such a survey thus far. For any such comprehensive survey, it will take at least about twenty-five years and cost about twenty-five lakhs of rupees. There will also be a race against time since the temples are not all in a good state of repair and are also in danger of irreparable damage at the hands of zealous renovators. The area to be covered is vast and the task is enormous and utterly beyond the scope of an individual working without resources or facilities. I, therefore, seek the indulgence of the reader for any shortcomings.

The Cholas were the greatest temple-builders of South India—one might say, even of India as a whole. Hundreds of temples of their age have been visited by us, but our attention has been confined here to dated and dateable ones which have inscriptions or other source material to help in their documentation. Nearly four hundred temples have been covered by us in this manner in our series, of which this is the fourth and the last. In a scientific survey, we must select the proper source material, interpret it properly and make correct deductions. Local legends have their value and they should be carefully studied and judiciously used. Literature is also an important source, though, again, it should be used with caution. Every attempt has been made to live up to these guidelines, and it is for the reader to judge how far we have succeeded in this endeavour.

Standard works on Indian Art and Architecture cover only about half a dozen South Indian temples, and these too are treated scrappily and in isolation, without sufficient historical background. What we have attempted in these four volumes has been described by critics as a "major project requiring a whole battery of resources" and as a "monumental documentation" of Chola temples; accounts of about four hundred such temples have been presented in a chronological setting, incidentally providing fairly scientific data for the formulation of canons and the evolution of style in Architecture and Sculpture.

In this volume, we cover the last phase of Chola Art and Architecture, spanning the reigns of Kulottunga I and his successors, ending with the last of them, Rajendra III. With that, the curtain is rung down on a grand period, classic in its stature, magnitude and innovativeness.

We have divided the period of Chola rule into three major phases in relation to temple-building activity, Art and Architecture. Over these three phases, a tiny structure like the temples at Kaliyapatti and Panangudi grows forth into a temple-city of gigantic proportions as we see at Tanjavur, Tiruvarur, Chidambaram, Srirangam, Tiruvanaikka and many others. It was a period of galloping growth in Indian Art.

Hasty generalizations and erroneous views on style have been formulated by some early scholars and blindly repeated and accepted by succeeding generations. We have attempted in these volumes to indicate such of them as need reconsideration. These volumes may be considered a complement (devoted to assessing the Chola achievement in art) to K.A. Nilakanta Sastri's classic, The Cholas, which deals primarily with their history.

There are only a few books on the history of Temple Art and Architecture in South India, and even these deal with only a few temples and perfunctorily at that. On questions of Chola style, wild guesses and vague speculations have been very much in vogue. Even G.J. Dubreuil defined Chola style as covering the period A.D. 850–1100 and as characterised by 'grand vimanas'. This is too much of a simplification of the Chola achievement during this period. And, whereas Chola rule itself extended upto A.D. 1280, he defined the period A.D. 1100–1350 as the Pandyan period, characterized by 'grand gopurams'. There are only three Pandyan temples built in the traditional Chola country during the period of the Pandyan hegemony—Viranarayana vinnagar at Kattumannargudi (a temple of the days of Parantaka I, rebuilt), Bhaktavatsala temple at Tirukkalukkunram, and the Amman temple at the Rajarajesvaram at Tanjavur. A few trophies from conquered lands such as the Nolamba pillars at the Ten Kailasam in Tiruvaiyaru, the Later Chalukyan dvarapalaka from Kalyani (till recently installed at Darasuram but now housed in the Tanjavur Art Gallery) and the Pala metallic image of Nataraja dancing on Nandi at Melakkadambur (near Kattumannargudi) fall outside the purview of any discussion of Chola Art styles. H. Goetz, a foreign Indologist who had a long and distinguished career in Northern India, writes in his book India that the Darasuram temple (erected by Rajaraja II, A.D. 1146–72) was built entirely with the icons and other material looted during the Kalyani raids of Rajadhiraja I (A.D. 1018–54); this ascription is an atrocious anachronism.

I welcome the publication of Early Chola Architecture and Sculpture by Douglas Barrett. He has, however, done scant justice to the brilliant work and achievement of the founder of the Chola empire, Vijayalaya, for a brief account of which see my Early Chola Temples, pp. 344–7. As regards the period of Aditya I, Barrett discusses the two temples of Tiruchchendurai and Kilaiyur. The former of these was built by a member of the royal family. There is an inscription of the 23rd year of a Rajakesarivarman (to be identified with Aditya I), mentioning a grant to that temple. It is described as a karrali (stone temple) in inscriptions of the second and third years of Parantaka I. Barrett concludes from this description that the temple was built of brick in the 23rd year of Aditya I and rebuilt of stone in the second year of Parantaka I. The Anbil plates of Sundara Chola proclaim that the process of converting brick temples into stone was in full swing in the period of Aditya I, and it is highly improbable that a new temple would be built of brick as late as in the 23rd year of Aditya I only to be rebuilt of stone within fifteen years. As for the temple at Kilaiyur, called Avani kandarpa Isvara griham, my Four Chola Temples contains the first comprehensive account of the twin-shrine complex and my Early Chola Art—Part I also a detailed account of the same; both the shrines belong to the same age, and the earliest of the inscriptions here are three in number, one of the thirteenth and two of the twenty-second year of a Rajakesarivarman to be identified with Aditya I; all three refer to gifts of lamps made to each of the twin-shrines, using the words: “iru tali oro(r) nanda vilakku.” Next, in an inscription of the age of Gandaraditya, the twin shrines are referred to as Ten tali and Vada tali (the southern and the northern shrines)—incidentally phrases wrongly interpreted by the Government Epigraphist as ‘gateways’, there being in fact only one gateway and that too in the west: only the word ‘tali’ is used, though each shrine was of stone then itself and thus a karrali: thus, Barrett’s conclusion on the Tiruchchendurai temple based merely on a narrow interpretation of the word ‘tali’ has to be discarded.

The Koranganatha temple at Srinivasanallur has been hitherto considered a typical Parantaka I structure by students of Chola art. I discovered a 26th year Rajakesarivarman inscription on the southern wall of the central shrine; so it really belongs to the period of Aditya I. It was in ruins and has been renovated in the 19th century, and cannot be taken as the prototype of any particular style.

I have to agree with Barrett when he writes that his and my “interpretations of chronology and development of Chola religious art diverge so widely”.

After a careful study of his views and conclusions, I see no alternative to our continuing to differ. To cover all the points of difference between our viewpoints will take up much more space and time than an Introduction would allow. I shall therefore confine myself to a few main points among them. I apply the term "Early Chola" to the period A.D. 850–985, while Barrett and a few others would extend this period upto A.D. 1014, the end of the reign of Rajaraja I. All such divisions of course are only tentative and merely convenient break-ups of time. The Sembiyan Mahadevi style is in evidence throughout the reign of Uttama Chola (A.D. 969–985) and the first sixteen years of the reign of Rajaraja I, i.e., till A.D. 1,000, and during the latter period, we already discover the deterioration from the true Sembiyan spirit. The temples at Tiruppurambiyam and Karandai have suffered much at the hands of unbalanced enthusiasts for the Sembiyan spirit, who installed a large number of additional sculptures in newly made niches, even destroying valuable inscriptions in the process. This thoughtless vandalism must surely have offended the soul of Sembiyan Mahadevi herself, who took elaborate care to preserve all old inscriptions, such as at Tiruvidadaimarudur (4th year, 325th day of the reign of Uttama Chola: p. 256 of my Early Chola Temples) and at Tirukkodikkaval (p. 257, ibid). At Tiruppurambiyam, the original niche sculptures are of Dakshinamurti, Lingodbhavar and Brahma; as many as nine others have been inserted into improvised niches. These are wrongly described by Barrett as inclusive of the Ashta Parivara devatas installed in the tenth year of Rajaraja I. These Parivara devatas are properly those installed in eight sub-shrines rather than in the niches of a temple (see Early Chola Art, Part I, pp. 185–6 and Barrett's Early Chola Art and Sculpture, p. 105). Again at Karandai (Early Chola Temples, pp. 183–5 and p. 269), sixteen sculptures are found installed, of which only five are original and the rest, including sculptures of the Tamil Saivite saints, Appar and Sambandar, are later insertions by the exuberant followers of the Sembiyan spirit.

Further, much as Rajaraja I was a faithful and admiring follower of Sembiyan Mahadevi, his reign saw the introduction of 'cathedral temples' as a grand new experiment in temple architecture: the Rajarajesvaram of his at Tanjavur (A.D. 1004–10) was immediately followed by his son's Gangaikondasolisvaram, and in the Later Chola period by temples at Darasuram and Tribhuvanam. It must have taken easily a decade to conceive the plan and choose proper men and material for the execution of the grand design. The Sembiyan phase may thus be stretched even as far as A.D. 1000; but the year A.D. 1014, while marking the demise of Rajaraja I, does not mark off an epoch in Chola art history, since the structures of his son's period are modelled on those of his. Hence I would place the beginning of the Early Chola period at A.D. 850 and its end at A.D. 985, covering among others the reigns of Vijayalaya, Aditya I and Parantaka I.

Owing to the absence of a scientific survey of Chola temples, erroneous views have been expressed even by eminent modern historians. J.N. Banerjea opines that Nataraja icons appear only after the 14th or 15th century or even later.

Vincent A. Smith held the view that "after A.D. 300, Indian sculpture properly so called hardly deserves to be recognized as art." A reviewer of my Middle Chola Temples observes: "The Chola empire declined rapidly after Kulottunga I's time" (italics mine). Such a statement ignores Chola history and achievement over as long a span as 210 years (A.D. 1070–1280), which is in fact the subject-matter of the present volume. I have covered in this volume about a hundred and sixty temples built, rebuilt of stone or enlarged during this period; the various stylistic developments in architecture and sculpture taking place in this period are quite significant. An elementary account of this period has already been published as the last chapter of my Four Chola Temples.

Just as, in the Early Chola period (especially in the age of Parantaka I), the Lingodbhavar cult was frequently invoked by way of expressing Siva's supremacy over Vishnu and Brahma, so in the present period the Sarabhamurti cult, with the same objective, is found introduced at Tukkachchi, Darasuram and Tribhuvanam.

Incidentally, I would hesitate to accept—nay, I even reject—the postulation of a 'second phase' in the Early Chola period, beginning right in the middle of the reign of Parantaka I, namely during A.D. 940 to 970, as made out by Barrett: for my views and related arguments on this subject, see my Early Chola Art—Part I, pp. 254–5, and my Early Chola Temples, pp. 254–264.

There are many erroneous views on the dates of mandapas and gopurams. The Nritta sabha at Chidambaram belonging to the days of Kulottunga I, like the temple at Melakkadambur, has been attributed by some authors to the 17th century. The independent Amman temple, the hundred-pillared hall, the thousand-pillared hall, and the three walls of enclosure of the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram, with seven-tiered gopurams in the third wall (called the Rajakal Tambiran tirumaligai) all belong to the Later Chola period—and not to the Pandyan or Vijayanagara age. There is no Pandyan gopuram at all in the Chidambaram temple (see The City of the Cosmic Dance by B. Natarajan, pp. 65–83). The srivimana and gopuram at the Tribhuvanam temple belong to the same period. But, because of the ribbed kumudam on the gopuram-basement, some scholars have come to the conclusion that the gopuram belongs to the 16th century A.D. and the main temple to the 13th. Ribbed kumudams are to be found in temples of the 9th, 10th and 11th centuries (as at Takkolam, Tondaimanadu alias Tondaiman Arrur, and Melakkadambur respectively). Thus, on questions of style, one has to draw conclusions or make generalizations with great care.

The expansion of temple campuses (in particular by the addition of independent Amman shrines) and the creation of temple-cities, ratha-vimanas and ratha-mandapas are some of the characteristic features of the Later Chola period.

At Tirukkalukunram, there is a hill called Vedagiri considered to be itself an embodiment of the Vedas and thus of God Himself. There are two temples at the foot of the hill, a rock-cut cave temple midway up the hill, and a structural stone temple at the top of the hill. There has been a lot of confusion in the matter of identification and dating of these temples. Of these four, the oldest (according to me) is the ruined apsidal temple without sikhara, now used as a strong room, in the northern prakara of the present Bhaktavatsala temple. This structure has its walls covered with two hundred years of inscriptions from the ninth century A.D. and has fine devakoshta images assignable to that century. This temple is referred to in inscriptions as that of Tiru Mulasthanam Udaiyar at Tirukkalukkunram. The earliest inscription, of the 27th year of Aditya I, mentions that the temple was originally built by Skanda Sishya (Pallava) and a grant of land was made to it and that this grant was reaffirmed by Vatapi-konda Narasimha and again by Aditya I after his conquest of Tondaimandalam. So this is obviously the oldest temple structure here. The Bhaktavatsala temple, of which the above now forms part, is of the 13th century and was built by Jatavarman Sundara Pandya I.

We next take up the rock-cut cave temple midway up the hill. It was excavated during the days of Vatapi-konda Narasimha and contains an inscription of his, making a grant for worship in this temple—called that of Malai-mel Sri Mulasthanam Udaiyar (the 'mulasthana temple on the hill'). It is thus to be distinguished from the 'Tiru Mulasthanam Udaiyar temple' at the bottom of the hill associated with Skanda Sishya, Pallava Narasimha and Aditya I.

The temple at the top of the hill is a structural stone-temple of the days of Rajasimha II of the eighth century A.D. Thus the oldest temple here is the apsidal temple at the foot of the hill mentioned above and now in the northern prakara of the (later) Bhaktavatsala temple.

The Muvarkoyil at Kodumbalur has been yet another controversial temple. Some authors speak of a southern or Pandyan influence in the structure of the temple. In my Early Chola Temples, I have adduced evidence to show that the temple was built in the days of Sundara Chola by a feudatory called Bhuti Vikramakesari, in his own name and in those of his two queens. This conclusion has also been accepted by Barrett and appears to have generally set at rest earlier controversies. (See the footnote on p. xx).

K.V. Soundararajan has suggested that the Muvarkoyil has been the inspiration behind the temple at Kilaiyur. In view of what has been stated above, it is clear that this suggestion is a chronological impossibility.

I am glad that Barrett's views are in consonance with mine on the dating of some of the Early Chola temples. He has been generous in calling me "the first scholar to take (the claim of the Anbil plates regarding the building of stone temples by Aditya I) seriously" and notes that I have "listed no less than thirty-eight temple-sites in Tiruchchirapalli and Tanjavur districts alone as of the age of Aditya I". "At a few sites. . . . , no fabric of the period remains; at many others, the fabric, I shall argue, is later than he claims, nevertheless the great value of his original work remains" (p. 49, op. cit.).

On Lalgudy, accepting my conclusions, he states: "It seems there is nothing in the style of architecture or sculpture to prevent us from accepting the date of the reconstruction of Lalgudy in or about year 27 of Aditya I (A.D. 897)." On page 59, op. cit., he says: ".....the evidence of the inscriptions on the Odavanesvarar temple...has been admirably presented by Balasubrahmanyam and G.V. Srinivasa Rao." At another point, he writes: "Rajakesari inscriptions 13, 14, 17, 23 and 25 may be confidently ascribed to Aditya I", contradicting his own view (as also of K.V. Soundararajan) that no Rajakesari inscriptions earlier than of the 15th year should be ascribed to Aditya I.

On the Tiruverumbur temple, he observes: "It poses a nice problem of date and style; the evidence of the no less than twenty-one Rajakesari inscriptions is most confusing. Balasubrahmanyam has untangled these inscriptions brilliantly. He has shown that the inscription of the year 19 may be given to Aditya I. He further believes—here I follow more reluctantly—that inscriptions (of years) 4, 5, 6 and 18—with low regnal years—and another (of year) 19 may be referred to the same king". But his conclusion that "Tattan Sandi built a temple of brick in or about year 18 of Aditya I (A.D. 889). All that remains are the surviving Parivara devatas. In or about year 3 of Gandaraditya (about A.D. 952), Velan Viranarayanan rebuilt the temple of stone, and his temple is the surviving fabric" appears untenable. I assert that the surviving fabric is of the age of Aditya I. All the Rajakesari inscriptions accepted by Barrett as of the age of Aditya I are original ones and intact, as confirmed by the Government Epigraphist. It is fantastic to suggest that an earlier structure was built of brick on top of a hill where stone is available aplenty. Apart from the physical incongruity involved, this also goes against the spirit of the Anbil plates according to which even existing brick structures were converted into stone by Aditya I's time. The garbhagriha is original and of his age.

I take this occasion to quote the verdict of Karl Khandalavala on my dating of temples. In his preface to the third volume in this series, he writes: "Reconstructions, renovations and additions further complicate the problem of dating many a shrine, but by far and large it may be said that the material on which the author has based his conclusions is adequate and correctly interpreted with the full consciousness that there are bound to be shrines in each classification on which the last word has yet to be spoken. This nondogmatic approach, so essential in a subject such as Chola temple chronology, is a most admirable feature of the text. The author leads the reader to an understanding of his viewpoint without any jarring notes or arbitrary pronouncements. Epigraphy is necessarily the basis of all studies in relation to South Indian temples and Sri Balasubrahmanyam who is one of the greatest Tamil epigraphists of our time has collected and interpreted a vast amount of material which will ever remain the basis on which further studies can be founded." I shall rest content with this judgement of a great art critic.

Some new light has been thrown recently on the twilight period marking the transition from Pallava to Chola rule. On top of a hill about two kilometres from Tiruttani, there is an ancient temple dedicated to Lord Subrahmanya, but its exact antiquity was shrouded in darkness till recently. The present temple on the hill bears an inscription of the Vijayanagara ruler Krishnadeva raya dated in about A.D. 1525. Therefore, the present structure could be a renovation of a more ancient structure that was of brick and stone. But a recent set of finds of copper plates and icons at the village of Velanjeri, about two kilometres from Tiruttani, has not only thrown light on the ancient history of this temple but also given much valuable historical data about the Pallava rulers during the closing days of the dynasty. The finds made in the last months of 1977 were (a) a set of copper plates dated in the reign of the Pallava king Aparajita (circa A.D. 900), (b) a set of copper plates dated in A.D. 927, corresponding to the 20th regnal year of the Chola king Parantaka I, and (c) a bronze image of Siva with Parvati on His mount Nandi with a prabha over the entire set.

The Aparajita copper plates, five in number, are bilingual (in Tamil and Sanskrit) and are fastened together by a ring and sealed by the Pallava royal insignia; they bear a seated bull, the emblem of the Pallavas, topped by the ashta mangalas, a parasol and two chowris. Along the circumference of the seal is an inscription mentioning that the plates record a royal order of Aparajita (Aparajita varmanaha). Dated in his ninth regnal year, the grant mentions that two villages, Pudur and Melirunjeru, were combined into one revenue unit and the combined village was directed to measure out 1,000 kadis of paddy annually for offerings to Lord Subrahmanya on the Tiruttani hill. The village is now known as Velanjeri, a corruption of Melirunjeru.

The record commences with a recital of the mythical ancestry of the Pallavas and comes down to the days of Kampavarman. It mentions that Kampavarman defeated Nripatunga in battle and captured the powerful Pallava throne; his queen was the Ganga princess Vijaya and Aparajita was their first-born; we are aware that Nripatunga and Kampavarman were the two sons of Nandivarman III but they fought among themselves and finally Kampavarman usurped the throne of the Pallavas from Nripatunga; after Kampavarman, Aparajita ascended the Pallava throne keeping Nripatunga out; Aparajita claims victories over the Bana ruler and the Cholas at the battle of Chirrarur, and to have reduced the Pandya city of Kaaranai. Aparajita on the mother's side came of Ganga lineage and this explains the fact that at the battle of Sripurambiyam, the Ganga ruler Prithivipati I fought as an ally of Aparajita and won for him a great victory losing his own life in it.

From our angle, the Chola copper plates are more important for the information they yield in our study of Chola art history; it is the earliest copper plate charter relating to this dynasty so far discovered. It bears the Chola dynastic crest—a seated tiger, two fish on a bow, topped by an umbrella and a chamara (chowri). The circumferential inscription mentions that the grant was the order of 'Parakesarivarmanah' Parantaka I. This charter which is bilingual (in Sanskrit and Tamil), records the gift of three villages near Tiruttani as a brahmadeya gift to the brahmana residents of Melirunjeru (Velanjeri). A piece of historical information of much value is the mention of a Kochchenganan, a Chola king of whom was born Orriyuran; of the latter was born in turn the warrior Vijayalaya, whose son was the king Aditya. It thus pushes back the genealogy of the Vijayalaya house of Cholas by two generations and mentions a Kochchenganan who could have lived in the late eighth century. We are yet to know what relationship he bore to the more famous Kochchenganan of the Sangam age.

Another interesting piece of information this grant yields on the activities of Parantaka I is that he performed a tulabhara ceremony at Srirangam and gilded the temple of Sri Ranganathar there, just as he gilded the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram. Thus he was a devotee of Sriranganatha as well as of Nataraja.

The bronzes are coeval with the grants and can be attributed to the transition period from Pallava rule to Chola rule in the Tondaimandalam region (A.D. 900 to 925). Their publication is awaited with interest.

In the 11th and 12th centuries, the Cholas conquered and ruled the Pandya country, and during their rule, they built a number of temples there which may be classified as of the Chola-Pandya idiom of the Dravidian style. So also, in the 13th century, the Hoysalas and the Later Pallavas built temples in the Chola-desa, the former at Kannanur koppam, Srirangam and Tiru Anaikka, and the latter at Sendamangalam and Tiruvennainallur (a Vishnu temple called Alagiya Pallava Vinnagaram). These may be classified as Chola-Hoysala and Chola-Later Pallava idioms.

The entire edifice of this series of four volumes is based on epigraphy—a sheet-anchor without which any attempt at surveying South Indian art would end up as a rudderless drift in uncharted oceans. Aid is certainly taken of many other corroborative factors and evidence—very often vital; but let us emphasise that where epigraphy fails we hesitate to speculate, and where we do so speculate, we do so with great caution.

In this volume, as in the earlier ones, we have followed the same technique of handling our theme; we have found no reasons to alter it; we date a monument on epigraphical grounds and delineate its features; the fund of inscriptional material is analysed briefly and chronologically for the light it throws on the growth of art. Traditions and legends are given their legitimate share and noteworthy art and architectural characteristics are highlighted.

Time and place determine style, and bereft of a survey in a chronological sequence, an art work will tend to be a picture album. We do not boast of a host of outstanding plates; our illustrations serve a purpose—to trace evolution. Ours is not an art book, but it deals with a more fundamental theme—the growth of art and architecture, and style. Such growth happens in a time-trellis. We are concerned with that. Our plates, plans and sketches illustrate a point in this time-frame.

We have given massive inscriptional references for future scholars to go deep into individual monuments. South India presents a vast ocean of scope for such delineation.

We have added notes and appendices wherever necessary to amplify points that find only brief mention in the text. We hope they would widen the knowledge of the lover of our art, culture and traditions, hagiology and religion, and our pantheon and their relevance to art and architecture.

Recently, some healthy developments have taken place in Tamil Nadu, thanks to the activities of the State Department of Archaeology under its dynamic Director, Dr. R. Nagaswamy. A drive is on to keep temples clean, and to preserve inscriptions, sculptures and paintings. Whitewashing or coating with drab and vulgar colours has been prohibited. Renovation of temples involving destruction of inscriptions and ancient sculptures and structures has been prohibited by a Government order. These Government orders have to be strictly enforced. Students from neighbourhood colleges and schools have been rightly involved in the preservation and conservation of ancient and venerable monuments and made to take interest and pride in the local history of the homeland. Training is imparted in evening courses of a year's duration and the trainees undertake annual tours for on-the-spot studies of the Pallava, Chola, Pandya, Vijayanagara and Nayak monuments. Annual conferences and exhibitions are special features of interest in making Archaeology attractive and interesting and almost a mass movement, instead of being the close preserve of the scholars alone. Some valuable labelled bronzes have been recently discovered and preserved. A new age is dawning in South Indian Archaeology.

The efflorescence of interest in South Indian studies and in our ancient monuments is amply illustrated by the recent formation, and, what is more, the enthusiastic activity, of the Society for Archaeological, Historical and Epigraphical Research. Their publications are scholarly and valuable in the understanding of South India and its ancient culture.

A recent phenomenon of interest is the entry of a businessman into the field of Archaeology. Sri N. Sethuraman of Raman & Raman, Kumbakonam, started with a study of the Pallavarayanpettai inscription and has made valuable contributions to South Indian history, packing into a brief span of six months what most professionals usually do not achieve in a lifetime.

My association with Pondicherry has been long and intimate. In the twenties, G.-J. Dubreuil, Professor at the College of Pondicherry, was at the height of his powers as a Dravidian archaeologist—he was the first to scientifically survey the Pallava temples of South India and laid the foundations of Dravidian Archaeology. I was fortunate in being close to him and in receiving an autographed set of his publications, which I value highly and which form a precious part of my small library. I sent him one of my reprints on the two stone inscriptions of the days of Vijayalaya and Parantaka I, found by me on the bund of a tank at Munisandai in Tirumayam taluk of Pudukkottai district. They revealed the existence of a sea-faring Tamil mercantile corporation called the Nanadesis and an article on them was published by me in the Journal of the Dutch Society in Batavia, in modern Indonesia. At my request, the inscribed stones under reference have since been moved to the Pudukkottai Museum. (Incidentally, the dates of these records as given in the Annual Report of the Pudukkottah Museum are erroneous). Dr. Dubreuil congratulated me and called the above Guild the Tamil (forerunner of the) East India Company (of the Westerners). Mr. P.Z. Pattabiramin was his chela and in turn he too became a cordial friend of mine. After some time, the French Institute of Indology was founded with Dr. J. Filliozat as its Director, and is doing valuable work in Indological and Tamil studies. The offices of the Ecole Francaise d' extreme-Orient were shifted from Hanoi to, and housed in, the premises of the above Institute at Pondicherry. At Dr. Filliozat's instance, all the publications of the Institute (and, recently, of the Ecole as well) have been regularly made available to me, and the privilege of joining the Institute staff on some of their tours to South Indian temples has been warmly extended to me. The Institute has also provided me (unlike the Bhulabhai Memorial Institute, Bombay) with the bulk of the photographs used as illustrations in all the four volumes of this series, on easy terms. I am indebted to Dr. Filliozat, Dr. F. Gros, Mlle. F. L'Hernault, Mr. V. Srinivasan, in particular the late Mr. P.Z. Pattabiramin, and the other members of the staff of the Institute for their various acts of co-operation in the matter of publication of these volumes.

Dr. Pramod Chandra, Professor of Indology at the University of Chicago and Director of the American Institute of Indian Studies at Varanasi, has been a source of encouragement in the publication of these volumes, along with his late father, Dr. Moti Chandra, formerly Director of the Prince of Wales Museum, Bombay. He was good enough to suggest my participation as a delegate in the Conference on Indian Architecture held at the Varanasi Institute.

The Ford Foundation and its successive representatives in India—Dr. Douglas Ensminger, Dr. Henry E. Wilhelm and Mr. Staples—have extended to me valuable help, which is gratefully acknowledged here.

Shri Karl Khandalavala, Editor of Lalit Kala, has been a constant friend and well-wisher in all my publication endeavours. I owe him a deep debt of gratitude.

I am beholden for their ready help to Dr. R. Nagaswamy, Director of Archaeology, Government of Tamilnadu; Sri N. Sethuraman of Raman & Raman of Kumbakonam; the Secretary of the Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments Board of the Tamil Nadu Government; Dr. M.N. Deshpande, Director-General of Archaeology of the Government of India, Mr. H. Sarkar, Temple Survey Officer, and the Superintending Assistant, Southern Circle, also of the Archaeological Survey of India; Dr. B.G.L. Swami of the Presidency College, Madras; Mr. Sadasiva Gorakshar of the Prince of Wales Museum, Bombay; and Messrs. P.R. Srinivasan and K.G. Krishnan of the Department of Epigraphy, Mysore. There are others, like Mr. N.S. Ramaswamy of the Indian Express and Messrs. Natana Kasinathan and Gandhi of the Tamil Nadu State Archaeology Department to whom I am indebted. I am thankful to all those who have helped me to complete this great project.

In 1920, I had the good luck to get a footing in the Educational Trust of the Late Dr. Rajah Sir Annamalai Chettiar of Chettinad. He was a great and distinguished personality, a sound financier and an industrialist, an able administrator and an educational benefactor, and above all a gentleman. I served his Trust both as a teacher and as an educational administrator, especially during the crucial period of the conversion of the Sri Meenakshi College and the allied institutions of his Trust as the nucleus of the Annamalai University. The College and the University situated so close to the ancient religious and cultural centre of Chidambaram, the home of Nataraja, gave me the necessary background for my academic development. The Nataraja temple is the key to the treasures of Chola art and architecture. I utilised the temple and the facilities of the college and university to the fullest in my self-growth in archaeology. The Rajah Sahib has by his charities, educational and cultural, become immortal. I pay my tribute to his great memory. I am glad that his worthy son, Dr. Rajah Sir M.A. Muthiah Chettiar, closely follows his illustrious father's footsteps. He has a warm corner for me and my family.

It was also my good fortune to enjoy the love and friendship of the late Rt. Hon'ble V.S. Srinivasa Sastri who was the Vice-Chancellor of the Annamalai University for five years from 1935 to 1940. He called me his 'dearest friend and well-wisher'. I delivered a lecture in the University under his presidentship on the Oldest Chidambaram Inscriptions discovered by me. Often he entrusted to me the guidance of distinguished visitors to the University interested in the study of Chola art and architecture in the Nataraja temple. He was greatly interested in my archaeological studies and exhorted me to devote myself exclusively to it. Had he been alive he would have rejoiced at the completion of my project on the Chola temples. He was my hero and exemplar. I pay my homage to his sweet and sacred memory.

Another great friend of the family and a deep devotee of Tyagesa of Tiruvarur, Mr. V.S. Tyagaraja Mudaliar, the industrialist and philanthropist of that place, has helped me and my project in many ways. I am beholden to him.

As this volume goes to the Press, the happy tidings have come of the "Federation of Indian Publishers" in association with the "Authors' Guild of India" giving me the "AWARD FOR EXCELLENCE IN WRITING" in the category of Art and Travel for my earlier volume Middle Chola Temples for the year 1977. I am grateful to them for this recognition.

Mr. Aroon Purie of the Thomson Press (India) Ltd. has gone out of his way to help me with the publication of this book. Without his generous accommodation in many ways, this book will have remained unpublished. No less has been the help and encouragement received from Mr. R.S. Rawal, Senior Sales Manager of the Thomson Press and Messrs. Mehta and Ganju of their Publication Department in taking on themselves more than their due share of strain and responsibility in bringing out this publication. I am deeply indebted to them.

The successive enlightened Tamil Nadu Governments have taken a keen and continuing interest in my project over these two decades and have been a source of great help and inspiration to me.

My thanks are also due to Messrs. D. Kannan, V. Balasubrahmanyam, K.V. Sankaranarayanan, Sankaran, N. Chellappan, P.G.K. Kuttu, M.K. Gandhi and other close associates for their help in various ways in getting the text ready for the Press.

Above all I am deeply beholden to the Acharya of Kanchi Kamakoti Pitham whose deep knowledge of the culture and art of the Cholas and keen interest in my project of compiling and tracing the growth of art and architecture under their inspiration has sustained me through my moments of doubt in my ability to stand up to the staggering strain of the task I had undertaken. I pay my deep homage not only to him but to Adisankara and all his successor Pontiffs who have adorned that Pitham at Kanchi and other centres. A few weeks back, when I had gone to Kanchi to seek the blessings of the great Acharya, he comforted me and assured me of success in the fulfilment of this endeavour.

When I started on this multi-volume series on Chola art history and temple survey, I was a lone man; as the work progressed, my sons and daughters-in-law and later on my grand-children gathered round me and lightened my burden considerably; my eldest son, Sri B. Natarajan, has been a tower of strength to me in this great project; the brunt of the load, however, fell on my second son, Dr. Venkataraman and his wife Leela, who both put up with a great deal of strain and odd hours of work to help me complete this series. The efforts of my third son, Dr. Ramachandran, in meticulously editing the texts with a microscopic eye combined with an incisive mind and typing out many complicated portions must also find mention here.

This sort of a gigantic venture is not for an individual or even a dedicated family but for well-established, well-cushioned Institutions or Government Departments to take up. I would not have embarked on this stupendous task had some effort been made by any such agency. In their absence, I stepped in to fill a vacuum. It has been a great struggle spread over six decades.

I am nearing the end of my life's journey and I have a sense of fulfilment with the satisfaction of my life's ambition—a chronological survey, however far from comprehensive it be, of Chola Temple Art and Architecture, to the studying of which I have devoted most of my life and the limited resources I could call my own.

The Chola kings are no more but they will live in the minds and hearts of discerning men as long as (in the picturesque language of their inscriptions) "the sun and the moon endure."

Let me conclude by saying, as did the mighty Chola kings of old, that all I desire is to be "a bee, partaking of the honey of Divine Grace, at the Lotus Feet of the Lord of the Cosmic Dance" and to ultimately merge in Him.

Note on the Muvarkoyil: Douglas Barrett has suggested a 'southern source' for the evolution of the style of the Muvarkoyil shrines. This 'southern source' can only be Pandyan. But the fact that there are fine devakoshta sculptures in these shrines while the devakoshtas of Pandyan temples are nominal and devoid of sculptures will disprove his contention, and we must rule out any Pandyan influence at Muvarkoyil. Even R. Nagaswamy seems to reconsider his original agreement with the assignment of the Muvarkoyil shrines to the tenth century A.D.: vide his article, "New light on Pallava-Pandya art links" in South Indian Studies (No. 1, Soc. Arch. Hist. & Epig. Res., Madras). Two inscriptions: one of the fifth year of Sadaiyan Maran (Tiruppattur) and the other of the fifth year of Maranjadaiyan (Kuttalam: Maranjadaiyan is identified as Varaguna II) are cited as evidence for a Vira Pandya in the ninth century A.D. These are not applicable to the builder of the temples at Kilmathur. There was no Chola King to kill in about A.D. 869 and no Vira Pandya then to earn the title of 'Cholantaka'. The only Vira Pandya who could claim to be a Cholantaka would be a contemporary of that name of Bhuti Vikrama Kesari and thus of the period of Sundara Chola and Aditya II (tenth century A.D.)

Kulottunga I

(A.D. 1070 to 1125)

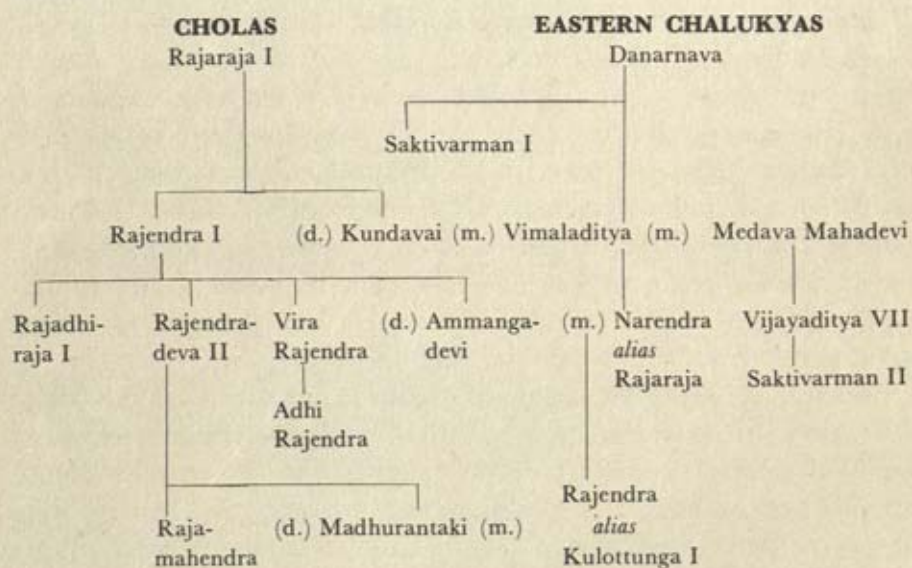

The last phase of Chola history as well as of Chola art and architecture begins with the accession of Kulottunga I, a Chalukya-Chola prince, to the throne at Gangaikonda Cholapuram. It is a strange pattern of destiny that the mighty Chola Empire, that bestrode like a Colossus the southern peninsula and even the lands across the seas, should have had three successive generations of great kings, the last comprising three brilliant brothers, all tough soldiers and able rulers, but then that two of them should have died without male successors and the third left a shortlived one. Rajadhiraja I apparently had no male progeny to succeed him to the Chola throne, and Rajamahendra, Crown Prince for three years under Rajendra II, predeceased the father. Adhirajendra, the son of Vira Rajendra, died in confusing circumstances, hardly a few months after he had succeeded his father. In the result, Dame Fortune Who had smiled on the Chola Empire for three great generations seemed suddenly to frown upon it.

Vira Rajendra, ascending the throne late in life, had very little time to consolidate his position, and a succession of wars kept him busy. As a far-sighted ruler, he saw the wisdom of building up alliances with his erstwhile enemies to keep his frontiers free of war or the threat of it. He gave one of his daughters in marriage to Vikramaditya VI of the Western Chalukyas and by this alliance he wrested from Somesvara II, the hostile Suzerain of Kalyani, half of the Chalukyan Empire for his son-in-law; thus, in one stroke, he weakened that empire and ensured a friendly neighbour on his north-western borders. This also enabled him to have Western Chalukyan support for his ruling peacefully over Vengi, whose western frontier was virtually guaranteed by his son-in-law.

He gave another daughter Rajasundari in marriage to the Eastern Ganga king Rajaraja, ruling over Southern Kalinga, and thus protected the northern borders of Vengi from the inroads they had been so frequently subjected to.

Thus, towards the closing years of his reign, by these diplomatic marital alliances, he had consolidated the empire, and all was set for a grand epoch, when the cruel hand of fate struck the empire. In A.D. 1069-70, Vira Rajendra died and soon thereafter, his son, whatever his qualities and potentialities were, met with an early death, resulting in a period of confusion and claims and counter-claims, that ultimately was terminated by the able Eastern Chalukyan Prince Rajiga, who, on the maternal side, had inherited Chola blood over two generations (and was himself married to a daughter of Chola Rajendradeva II) as shown by the genealogical table below:

Here a word may be said of Vengi-Chola relations. The earliest Chola king who interfered in the affairs of the Eastern Chalukyan country was Rajaraja I. From his inscriptions, we know that he conquered Vengi in the 14th year of his reign (= A.D. 999–1000). Evidently, Rajaraja I placed Saktivarman (I) alias Chalukya-Chandra on the Eastern Chalukya throne the same year, who presumably accepted a status of dependence on the Chola emperor as inferred from the Ranastipundi grant of Vimaladitya, the brother and successor of Saktivarman. Rajaraja I cemented the relationship by an inter-dynastic marital alliance, his daughter Kundavai being given in marriage to Vimaladitya.

Kulottunga I's reign began sometime about June in A.D. 1070 and lasted at least fifty-two* years. He was born under the asterism Pushya. His youth had not been spent on a bed of roses. The death of Kulottunga's (then called Rajendra) father Rajaraja Narendra of Vengi in A.D. 1061 triggered off trouble in Vengi that had its repercussions on the Chola-Western Chalukya relations, which subsided only with the death of the Western Chalukyan ruler Somesvara I. Vijayaditya VII, the step-brother of Rajaraja Narendra, seized the Vengi throne on the latter's death and bestowed it on his own son Saktivarman II, and in this Somesvara I was of great assistance to Vijayaditya. This led to a natural Chola reaction: Vira Rajendra endeavoured to set right the situation resulting from his brothers' neglect of this region. The policy followed by Rajaraja I and Rajendra I towards the newly acquired dominion of Vengi was not vigorously pursued by Rajadhiraja I and Rajendradeva II, but was resumed by Vira Rajendra as mentioned in so many words in his Kanyakumari inscription (Travancore Arch. Series, Vol. III, p. 57, v. 77):

“The Vengi and Kalinga countries which had come into the family of the Cholas for generations, having been left uncared for by his (Vira Rajendra's) two brothers and having been encroached upon by powerful enemies, the glorious king Vallabha-Vallabha (i.e., Vira Rajendra) conquered these highly powerful foes, leaving only those that were frightened, and ruled over the country”.

He invaded the Vengi country and killed Saktivarman II

*Pd. 127. According to recently-discovered inscriptions, it appears that his reign might have indeed lasted for fifty-five years (A.D. 1070–1125).

in battle, but this produced no lasting realignments among the powers. Vijayaditya VII sought the help of Somesvara I and remained on the Vengi throne, much to the discomfiture of Vira Rajendra. This happy state of affairs for Vijayaditya would have continued but for the sudden death of Somesvara I (A.D. 1068); the marriage of Vira Rajendra's daughter to Vikramaditya VI, son of Somesvara I, also brought about a volte face in Chalukyan relations with the Cholas, Vikramaditya claiming the southern portion of the kingdom of Somesvara I, while his elder brother Somesvara II had to be content with the northern half; this had its consequential realignment among the southern powers, resulting in Vijayaditya getting the support of Somesvara II, and Vikramaditya supporting the cause of Vengi's integration with the Chola empire. Thus, with the growing power of Vikramaditya and the waning influence of Somesvara II (with a further enemy in Rajaraja of Kalinga), Vijayaditya of Vengi was subdued; hardly a year had passed after Vira Rajendra had established a state of equilibrium by his farsighted marital alliances and diplomatic moves, when it collapsed with his death. Of this, more later.

The years of Vijayaditya's ascendancy in Vengi were years of wandering and adventure for the disinherited prince Rajendra. Perhaps then only in his teens, Rajendra at his father's death left for the northern regions and, unaided, won a victory over the king Dharavarsha of Chakrakuta (the region of modern Bastar district of Madhya Pradesh) and possibly even ruled as a petty prince over that area, known as Purvadesam. Thus, Rajendra was in virtual exile from the Vengi country for over six to seven years when the death of Adhirajendra at Gangaikondasolapuram brought him hastily to the Chola capital as it did Vikramaditya VI, who was interested in his wife's brother's kingdom for himself. In a treatise on Art history, we have no concern with the intriguing events covering the clouded days from the death of Vira Rajendra to the accession of Kulottunga I; suffice it to say that the available material, literary and epigraphical, is too scanty to enable us to draw a cogent picture of the sequence of events.

Considerable information, often conflicting, is provided by

Bilhana's Vikramanka Charitam, Jayangondar's Kalingattupparani and numerous Chola and less numerous Western Chalukyan inscriptions, in regard to these eventful years. With the death of Adhirajendra and the consequent snapping of any bonds of love that might have existed between the two dynasties, Vikramaditya set about systematically to build up an empire for himself at least as large as his father's and in the process gathered around him a number of allies and vassals, like the Yadava king of Devagiri, the Hoysala Ereyanga, Tribhuvanamalla Pandya and the Kadamba Jayakesari, and having neutralised the influence of his brother, he turned his attention to Vengi whose integration with the Chola kingdom consequent on the accession of Kulottunga I irked him. He invaded the Kolar region of the Chola kingdom sometime before the 6th year of the reign of Kulottunga I; reading between the conflicting lines, we see that Somesvara II, his brother, was taken prisoner, Vengi was left to remain a part of the Chola kingdom and the Tungabhadra stabilised itself as the boundary between the Western Chalukyan kingdom and the Chola empire. Having consolidated his suzerainty over Vengi, Kulottunga I let his step-uncle Vijayaditya VII rule over that province, which he did for fifteen years—till his death in A.D. 1076, upon which Kulottunga I hastened to appoint his own son Rajaraja Mummadi Chola as the Viceroy of Vengi (July, A.D. 1076). For reasons not quite clear, the latter was later recalled and replaced by his younger brother Vira Choda, who administered the province for six years (till Saka 1007 = A.D. 1084–5). He was followed by the eldest brother Rajaraja Chodaganga, whose spell as viceroy seems to have brought discredit on him with the result that he was replaced by Vira Choda again who continued as viceroy for a second term from A.D. 1088–89 to 1092–93. And finally Vikrama Chola, another son of Kulottunga I, assumed the viceroyalty of Vengi, where he continued till he was recalled to the Chola capital to assume the heir-apparency in A.D. 1118. In this period of Vikrama Chola's viceroyalty, the First Kalinga War took place. Some years before his viceroyalty, the territory between the Godavari and the Mahendragiri, known as Southern Kalinga, was part of the Vengi province. The Chief of Kolanu (modern Ellore, near the Kolair lake), presumably instigated and assisted by the Kalinga ruler, attempted to revolt, and a punitive expedition was evidently taken out against him (in A.D. 1095-96) by Vikrama Chola, assisted by the Pandyan vassal Parakrama Pandya. Kulam (Kolair or Kolanu) was taken and Chola authority reasserted, as evidenced by the Tamil inscriptions of Kulottunga at Simhachalam (A.D. 1098-99), Draksharama and other places*.

A second and more famous invasion of Kalinga took place in A.D. 1110, and much information is available on this war from the Kalingattupparani, a heroic poem written by the contemporary court poet Jayangondar. The provocation for the war would appear to have been the default on two occasions of the king of North Kalinga to pay his annual tribute to the Chola Emperor. Informed of this by his Chief Secretary (tiru mandira olai) at his Durbar in his palace at Kanchi, the king ordered an expeditionary force under the Pallava chieftain Karunakara Tondaiman, Lord of Vendai, to invest the Kalinga kingdom. The king, Anantavarman Chodaganga, a grandson of Vira Rajendra by his daughter Rajasundari, made light of it in his capital of Kalinganagara and put up a fight against the invading army; the battle, so goes the Kalingattupparani, ended in a rout for Anantavarman, who sought refuge in flight. His setting up his capital at Cuttack in A.D. 1111 would corroborate the validity of much that is said in this poem on the Kalinga war; however, this defeat does not appear to have caused much harm to his power, for he continued to rule from Cuttack for another thirty-five years, living upto a ripe old age (A.D. 1076-

*About Vikrama Chola, it is said that "in the season of Cupid (i.e., in spring), he grasped the cruel weapon, so that at Kulam (i.e., the Kolair lake) the Telinga Viman (i.e., Bhima) ascended the mountains as refuge and so that hot fire consumed the country of Kalinga" (SII, III, p. 184—ARE. nos. 44 of 1891 and 608 of 1904). These two records also contain a lengthy account of the invasion and conquest of the Seven Kalingas by Kulottunga I which must be different from the one mentioned in the 26th year. Invasion of Kalinga by the Cholas is mentioned (i) in the inscriptions of the 16th year of Kulottunga I, (ii) in the inscriptions of Vikrama Chola, and (iii) in the Tamil heroic poem Kalingattupparani. Under item (i), a reference is made to the conquest of Kalinga-mandalam by Kulottunga I in an inscription at Tiruvidaimarudur (SII, III, p. 158); this invasion must thus have taken place before A.D. 1095-96 (see pp. 52-53 of ARE for the year ending May 1905).

(1112–) 1147). As for the Chola emperor, his writ ran over Southern Kalinga and perhaps portions of Northern Kalinga too, and the empire retained virtually its full extent as under Rajendra I, except for the loss of Sri Lanka (Ceylon).

Sri Lanka never accepted the suzerainty of the Cholas, and during the Middle Chola period, the Sri Lanka Chiefs were chafing at their subordination; (towards the close of the Middle period,) even before the accession of Vira Rajendra, the Sinhalese prince Kitti raised the banner of revolt and set Rohana free and even assumed the title of Vijayabahu in A.D. 1058, when hardly seventeen years old. Both Rajendradeva II and Vira Rajendra were much too pre-occupied with the unceasing wars with the Western Chalukyas to permit of their grip over Sri Lanka remaining firm; it slackened towards the closing years of Rajendradeva II. The confused political situation in A.D. 1070, and the multiple fronts on which Kulottunga I's energies were compulsorily drawn, gave the much-needed breathing spell to Kitti and, in a series of pincer movements, he drove out the Chola army from Polonnaruva (A.D. 1073), Anuradhapura and later from the island itself and in another two years had crowned himself King of all Sri Lanka. Polonnaruva was rechristened Vijayarajapura. He restored the Buddhist religion (ousting Saivite worship) and a temple for the tooth relic of the Buddha was built at the capital.

The Chola hold over Sri Lanka, that had lasted more than seven decades, ceased within the first few years of the accession of Kulottunga I. Kulottunga's inscriptions are discreetly silent about this loss, to which, as a matter of practical wisdom, he became reconciled. Further, he effected a matrimonial alliance by giving his daughter Suttamalli in marriage to Vira Perumal, a Sri Lanka Prince of the Pandyan party in the island.

In the Volume on Middle Chola temples, we have already seen that there was intimate intercourse between the Chola empire and the emperors of Kadaram (see Note 1 at the end of the chapter) who by the end of the 10th century had established their sway over the entire Malay peninsula and the Indonesian archipelago; and that the ruler of Sri-Vishaya and Kataha, named Maravijayottungavarman, of the Sailendra family having the *makara crest, the son of Chulamanivarman, had erected a lofty shrine for the Buddha in the Chulamani-vihara, in the name of his father, at the delightful city of Nagapattana in Pattina kurram, a subdivision of Kshatriyasikhamani valanadu in the Chola desa and that the king Rajaraja I alias Rajakesarivarman gave in the 21st year of his reign (A.D. 1006) the village of Anaimangalam for the maintenance of the vihara and the shrine. The permanent grant mentioned that on the 92nd day after the 21st year (A.D. 1006) of his reign, King Rajaraja I, while he was in the pavilion on the southern side of his palace called 'Rajasrayan', erected in a suburb of Tanjavur, decreed that the income of 8,943 kalam, 2 tuni, 1 kunri and 1 nali of paddy accruing from the payment of the assessment on 97 velis, 2 ma, 1½ kani, 1 mundirigai and odd of land, composing the village of Anaimangalam, should be given as a tax-free Pallichchandam to meet the requirements of the *palli which was being constructed by Chulamanivarman. Thus this palli was under construction in A.D. 1006. This deed was presented to the Sanga on the 163rd day after the 23rd regnal year of Rajaraja I.

Further we saw that after Rajaraja I had passed away his son Madhurantaka (Rajendra I) ordered that the vihara enjoy the grant 'as long as the earth endures'. Years later, in the 20th year (A.D. 1090) of the king Rajakesarivarman alias Sri Kulottunga Choladeva I, 'who was pleased to be seated along with his queen Bhuvanamulududaiyal on his lion-throne, wearing the excellent crown of gems belonging to the royal family, when he was pleased to rest on the reclining couch (pallipaddam) called Kalingarajan, in the bathing hall within the palace at Ayirattali alias Ahavamallakulakalapuram, the ambassadors of the king of Kadaram named Rajavidyadhara Sri Samanta and Abhimanottunga Sri Samanta paid their compliments and submitted a request on behalf of their king that a copper plate charter be made and given conveying (what actually had been already ordered) that (i) all the villages which were the pallichchandas of Rajendrasolapperumpalli and

* Makara—a conventionalised animal with the body of a fish and the head of an elephant.

 palli—a Jaina or a Buddhist shrine.

Rajarajapperumpalli constructed by the king of Kadaram at Solakulavallipattinam in Pattana-kurram, a subdivision of Geyamanikka valanadu, stand exempted from payment of the customary taxes inclusive of antarayam, viraseshai, panmai-pandai-vetti, kundali and sungamera, that (ii) the old kaniyalars who were holding the kanis of the pallichchandas stand removed, and further that (iii) the kanis be invested with the Sangattar of the palli. A royal order was accordingly issued to the adhikarin Rajendrasinga Muvendavelar that he, in conjunction with the sandhivigrahigal Rajavallabha-Pallavaraiyan, should draw up a copper plate charter to this effect. Accordingly a charter note* was drawn up.

The charter gives a list of the pallichchandas belonging to Rajarajapperumpalli, their situation, extent, kanikkadan and nichchayitta-nellu, and goes on to state that (i) the taxes or incomes in money and kind have been assigned to meet the requirements of the monastery and that (ii) the individuals who were previously holding the lands of these pallichchanda villages had now been divested of them and the lands now vested solely with the Sangattar of the monastery. After giving the limits of the campus of the vihara (see Note 2) and details of the boundaries of the pallichchanda villages (see Note 3), the record concludes by saying that the royal order had thus been carried out and that on the direction of the sandhi-vigrahigal and the adhikarin referred to earlier, this copper-plate charter was written by one Nilaiyudaiya Panaiyan Nigarilisolan Madhurantakan, one of the Vikkiramabharanat-terinda vala-valangai-velaikkarar or Utkodi. Certain interesting pieces of information flow from the Smaller Leyden Grant. The names, Nagapattinam and Kshatriya-sikhamani valanadu, of the grant made by Rajaraja I (the 'Larger Leyden Grant'), become Solakulavallipattinam and Geyamanikka valanadu respectively in the reign of Kulottunga I. The fact that the donees figuring in both the grants are identical emerges from the statements (apart from others) in both grants that Anaimangalam was of extent 97 velis and 2 ma and that the kanikkadan was 8,943 kalams. The tenant usually paid an assessment on land to the king, called the kanikkadan, and again, to the royal intermediary collecting the revenue, called the kaniyalar, an amount called the nichchayitta nellu (= pre-determined amount of paddy). The objective of the grant was to increase the income of the vihara by eliminating the intermediaries. The Sangattar of the Palli were the equivalents of the Pan-mahesvaras of Siva temples and the Sri-Vaishnavas of Vishnu temples—a body of the local elite were chosen on their merits to constitute the overseeing agency that took over the grants and gifts, maintained their accounts, ensured the proper utilisation of charities and punished the defaulters.

It may be interesting to note that more than three hundred years after this grant was made, the institution still survived, with a change. A reference to the Rajarajap-perumpalli is found in a stray inscription on a slab built into the ceiling of the gopuram in the Naganathasvamin temple at Nagapattinam in Tanjavur district. On epigraphical grounds, this record could be attributed to the fifteenth century, and it records the gift of the tirumadai-vilagam around the temple for the tiruppani (repair and maintenance) of Rajarajap-perumpalli, which was a Buddhist monastery and which had come to bear the alternate name of Srimahesvaraperumpalli (ARE 290 of 1963–64).

Ever since the conquest of the Pandya country by Rajaraja I and Rajendra I, there was effective Chola control over the Pandya country. This success was due to the wise administrative measures taken by Rajendra I such as stationing a standing army at military stations like Brahmadesam and Kottaru and appointing Chola princes as viceroys, bearing the title of 'Chola-Pandya', in charge of the conquered land. The system seems to have broken down about this time (accession of Kulottunga I) in the face of a struggle for independence in the Pandya country. There is evidence of two wars to quell the resistance having been fought in the reign of Kulottunga I. The first was directed against the 'five Pandyas', followed by the overthrow of the "Cheras with their bow emblem", the capture of Vilijnam, the destruction of their fleet at Kandalur-Salai and the occupation of the "land of the Podiyil mountains and of the pearl fisheries". At Kottaru, sixteen kilometres north of Kanyakumari, a military station was established.

There is a Grantha inscription engraved on the outside of the east wall of the innermost prakara of the great temple of Chidambaram in the South Arcot district, referring to these conquests. It consists of two verses in the Sragdhara metre, each of which eulogises the victories of Kulottunga Chola over the five Pandyas. The first verse further states that the king burnt the fort of Korgara (Korgaradurga = Kottaru) and defeated the Keralas. Korgara is probably a sanskritised form of Kottaru in the Tirunelveli district. The second verse records that Kulottunga Chola placed a pillar of victory on the Sahyadri mountain, i.e., the Western Ghats. This he must evidently have done after his conquest of the Keralas which is mentioned in the first verse.

The following is a translation of these two verses: (Verse 1): Hail! Prosperity! Having defeated the five Pandyas by an army which discharged numerous arrows, having burnt, like straw, the fort of Korgara, just as (Arjuna) the son of Pandu burnt the Khandava (forest), and having crushed the extremely dense army of the Keralas, the illustrious Kulottunga Chola, who resembled Siva in splendour and Indra in might, placed a pillar (commemorative) of (his) conquest of the three Worlds on the shore of the ocean.

(Verse 2): (Having placed) a pillar (commemorative) of (his) conquest of the three Worlds on the sacred peak of the Sahyadri (mountain), and having defeated the five Pandyas with masses of powerful armies, the illustrious Kulottunga Chola, whose fame is voluntarily sung by the tender women of the Parasis, and who has driven away armies, made the trembling crowd of kings subject to his orders." (See SII, Vol. I*).

But, in spite of these measures, political unrest was not altogether eliminated; there was a second Pandya War in about the 28th regnal year of Kulottunga I (A.D. 1098). The conduct of this second Pandyan War was in the hands of Naralokaviran, a General, who claims in his inscriptions to have conquered the

*Both the Vikramasolan Ula and the Kalingattupparani make reference to these events including the destruction of the Chera fleet at Kandalur Salai.

Tennavar (the Pandyas), the Malaimannar (the Cheras), and other, northern kings (enai vada-mannar).

In spite of these victories, the Chola control over the Pandya country during the period was not as effective as in the days of Rajaraja I and his son Rajendra I. Kulottunga I was wise and prudent enough to recognise the semi-independent status of the Pandyan rulers. He contented himself with establishing military cantonments (nilai-padai) at strategic points like the arterial trade and military routes and other vital communication links. Continuing with the Chola names of the administrative units in the Pandyan area, and the collection of tributes annually in token of Chola overlordship and control in this region, buttressed by military posts at strategic places, were the means that Kulottunga I devised to control the recalcitrant region that was sulking over its subordinate status. Wisdom persuaded Kulottunga I, however, to let the Pandyan vassals carry on the administration without much interference and, in fact, inscriptions of the contemporary Pandyan ruler Maravarman Parakrama Pandya were issued in the regnal years of the Pandyan ruler and not of the Chola overlord. Even the gifts of the victorious Chola General Naralokaviran are issued in terms of the regnal years of the Pandyan ruler. Two of his gifts at Tiruppattur in Ramanathapuram district are thus issued in the 3rd and the 12th regnal years of Parakrama Pandya (ARE 98 and 131 of 1908).

From the Chinese annals, we learn that Kulottunga I sent a diplomatic-cum-trade mission to the Chinese Court in the year A.D. 1077, comprising seventy-two men; it should have enhanced the Chola prestige and commercial prospects on the Chinese mainland.

The relations with the kingdom of Kambhoja (modern Cambodia) were equally friendly in the concluding part of his reign. In a 44th year inscription of Kulottunga I, recorded on the northern outer wall enclosing the first prakara of the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram, it is mentioned that the king of Kambhoja gave King Rajendra a katchi (gift) of a precious stone which, at the behest of the Chola king, was installed on the front layer of the lintel of the gateway of Tiru-edir-ambalam (i.e., the Mulasthanam).

shrine opposite the (now) main Nataraja shrine). This inscription, incidentally, gives us two surnames of Kulottunga I—Jayadhara and Abhaya—the inscription itself being dated “in the 44th year of Jayadhara”. Unfortunately, we are not in a position to know the nature of the relationship that existed between the Kambhojan and Chola kingdoms, or the nature and value of the precious gift which merited such special mention.

The sequence of events in the reign of Kulottunga I becomes difficult to arrange, as, unlike the inscriptions of Rajaraja I or Rajendra I, those of Kulottunga I do not bring the narrative up to date; very often references to earlier events are deleted to make room for more current topics; suffice it to say that the following events stand out as major landmarks:

- (i) Around the 5th year, he defeated the King of Kuntala, crowned himself King of the Chola country and decapitated an unnamed king of the South (SII, III, p. 174):
- (ii) by the 11th year, he had driven Vikkalan from Nangili by way of Manalur to the banks of the Tungabhadra river and conquered Gangamandalam and Singamandalam (SII, III, p. 144):
- (iii) by the 14th year, he had put the “five Pandyas” to flight, asserted his suzerainty over the western portion of their country and conquered Kudamalainadu, and
- (iv) he made war repeatedly on the Kalinga country, to which inscriptional reference is found in his records of the 26th, 42nd and 45th years.

The historical introduction of Kulottunga's inscriptions commences in various forms. The earlier epigraphs carry the introduction ‘tirumanni vilangum’; and mention that with the sole aid of his arm and sword he captured herds of elephants at Vayiragaram (Wairagadh) in modern Chanda district, received tribute from Dharavarsha of the Chakkarakotta country and “brought the earth under his parasol” (SII, VII, no. 392). Upto his 4th year, the king is still called (Rajakesarivarman alias) Rajendra Chola. Another, rather infrequent, introduction (6th year, ibid., no. 137) is pumel-arivai. The most common introductions found between his 6th and 49th years, however, begin with: (i) ‘Pugal-sulnda punari', giving a full account of the king's achievements and (ii) 'pugal madu vilanga', which refers in general terms to his victory over the Cheras, the Pandyas, Vikramaditya VI and Simhana, i.e., Jayasimha (SII, IV, no. 813; VII, nos. 874 and 875).

Kulottunga I had many titles and surnames:

Rajendra, Rajiga, Virudarajabhayankara (after his victory over Western Chalukya king Vikramaditya VI), Akalankan (the spotless or blemishless), Ubhayakula Abhayan (the protector of the two kulas or families), Abhayan, Jayadharan, Tirunirruchohan (Trisulam inscription), Sungam-tavirttasolan (meaning "one who abolished tolls", by which title he continues to be called by the succeeding kings of the Chola empire) and Rajanarayanan. A ringing Tamil expression in an inscription states: "sungam tavirndu-irul-nikki-ulaganda" which expression means: 'he ruled the World (well) by abolishing tolls and thereby dispelling the darkness (the evils) of the World'.

The Cholas brought up-to-date their land survey records from time to time and resettled the revenue rates; the first major survey was conducted in the days of Rajaraja I and the second universal survey was conducted in the 16th year of Kulottunga I (the Surveyor-General was called Ulagalanda-perumal—'he who mapped the world'). A third major survey, of which mention will be made later, was made in the 38th year of Kulottunga III.

Kulottunga I ruled from the capital city of Gangaikondasola-puram or Gangapuri. Kanchi and Palayarai served as his secondary capitals. The Chudamani-vihara grant is issued from Ayirattali, one of the earliest of Chola subsidiary capitals, dating back to the Early Chola period, and now renamed Ahavamallakulakalapuram. Yet another capital and a palace are said to have been located in Perumparrappuliyur (Chidambaram).

Kulottunga I bestrode the South Indian scene like a Colossus for an eventful half a century—from A.D. 1070 to 1120 or thereabouts. His life and rule were full of thrills and momentous events; he moved into the capital of a shaky empire in his teens or early twenties, and his long and enduring reign was marked by a stability that the crucial year A.D. 1070 did not foreshadow. Inheriting (nominally to start with) two kingdoms, from the paternal and maternal sides, he succeeded in maintaining intact the extent of the Imperial Chola domain, with only a minor erosion in the loss of the island of Sri Lanka. He stabilised the northwestern boundary of his empire along the Tungabhadra, and for some years to come, it remained a peaceful frontier, in utter contrast to the preceding decades of war and destruction.

The forty-fifth year marked the apogee of his glory. In the next five years, he was to see some misfortunes, which either his age or the growing might of the Powers beyond his frontiers rendered him unable to prevent. He lost the province of Gangavadi to the Hoysalas, who discarded their mantle of a feudatory of the Chalukyas of Kalyani and became a power to count. Bittiga alias Vishnuvardhana (A.D. 1100–1152) worsted the Chola army at Talakkadu in A.D. 1116 and assumed the title of 'Talakkadukonda'. In this, he was helped by Dandanayaka Gangaraja who fought the Chola feudatory, the Adiyaman Chief of Tagadur (Dharmapuri) in the Kongu country, who, on behalf of the Chola emperor, ruled over Gangavadi as a province of the Chola empire. Conditions in Vengi too were by no means quite happy. In the prolonged struggle for supremacy over Vengi, Kulottunga I withstood all attempts on the part of Vikramaditya VI to wrest it from him; but in the closing years, after his victory over Kalinga, things had not been happy in that province; and the withdrawal of Vikrama Chola from there to take over the reins of administration from Kulottunga I produced a power-vacuum into which Vikramaditya VI jumped, virtually wresting the province from the Cholas. In the result, the Chola empire came back to where it was in the days when Rajaraja I had just ascended the throne. But his able son was soon to set matters right and, by the first few years of his reign, he had re-established Chola suzerainty over Vengi and even portions of Gangavadi. This we shall see in our chapter on Vikrama Chola.

The kings of the Sailendra dynasty, who had the makara crest on their flag, had kept up close contact with India primarily because of religious affinity; even as early as the 7th century A.D., there was regular religious intercourse; in fact, the Guru or the preceptor of the Sailendra king (in A.D. 778) was from the Gauda desa; about the middle of the 9th century, the Sailendra king established a vihara at Nalanda; and king Devapala of Bengal granted at his request a number of villages for its upkeep; here the reference is to a similar vihara established in Nagapattinam at the turn of the 10th century; the details of the grant of a village then are contained in the Larger Leyden Grant.

In the years between A.D. 1006 and A.D. 1091, the relations between the Kataha and the Chola kings went through fluctuating phases. There can be no doubt that the relations between the two kingdoms were nothing but cordial in the days of Rajaraja I, even perhaps in the early years of the reign of Rajendra I; perhaps relations became strained after the latter's 6th year and we have various records confirming the invasion of Kataha and its conquest by Rajendra I—the Tiruvalangadu plates, a Malur inscription of his 13th year and other charters of his 19th, 22nd, 23rd and 27th years. By his 13th year, Rajendra I had made the Sailendra empire a part of his dominions. This state of things continued through the reigns of his sons and we know of a war between the two kingdoms during the reign of Vira Rajendra, who is said to have conquered the kingdom of Kadaram but bestowed it back on its king (SII, III, Pt. II, p. 202). Even in the early years of Kulottunga I, this state of strained relations persisted, and terminated only, we presume, by about the time of the second charter of the Vihara, when peace and amity was restored.

However, close trade and business contacts existed between the two kingdoms, unruffled by the vagaries of the political relationship. At Lobo Toeua in the island of Sumatra was found a fragmentary Tamil inscription dated in Saka 1010 (= A.D. 1088)—just before the grant of the second charter, recording the existence of a celebrated International Merchant Guild called Tisai-Ayirattu-annurruvar (The 'five hundred of (i.e., trading in) a thousand directions').

Note 2

The boundaries of the site and the surrounding grounds of the 'glorious Sailendra Chudamani Varma Vihara alias Rajarajapperumpalli', are given in detail, and the campus measured $31\frac{3}{4}$ veli, 2 ma, and 1 mundirigai, and this land was also given free of all taxes to the palli—inclusive of antaraya, panmaipanda vetti and all other pattams. The boundaries are:

Eastern boundary—'to the west of the sea-shore inclusive of the sand-hill in it';

Southern boundary—'to the north of the well called pugaiunni-kinaru; to the north of the land belonging to the temple of Tiruvirattanamudaiya Mahadevar situated to the west of the said well; and to the north of the line passing westwards from the north bank of the channel dug by Paravai-Kulattu-Marayan and reaching the high road to Karaikkal';

Western boundary—'to the east of the said high road to Karaikkal';

Northern boundary—'to the south of the boundary of the lands in Vadakadanpadi of Solakulavallipattinam'.

Appendix

In my previous volume of this series, entitled Middle Chola Temples, I have discussed briefly the successors of Rajendra I (pp. 334 to 344) and the temples built during their time (pp. 345 to 373). The dates mentioned therein are only approximate. My object is only to present a broad general survey of the development, reign by reign, of Chola art (while accepting the generally ascribed dates for the reigns) so as to enable scholars to enunciate appropriate canons of stylistic features and development during each phase or period of Chola rule. I have neither the time, nor the energy, nor the facilities to verify the dates in a systematic, scientific way. So I welcome the emergence of a rising star in the field of South Indian History and Epigraphy—N. Sethuraman, a businessman of standing from Kumbakonam. Inspired by divine grace and guided by his guru Sri Bujandar's prophetic utterances linking the past, the present and the future, contained in 1800 cadjan leaf manuscripts—Nadi grantham, now in the possession of his friend, R.V. Ramani of Madras, he has published recently a book "Arul-udaich-chola mandalam" centering round the Chola temples at Darasuram and Pallavarayanpettai. The (Later Chola) Pallavarayanpettai inscription of the eighth year of Rajadhiraja II is subjected to a full, critical study. He has studied it scientifically, compared the published text with its original on the temple wall, filled the gaps with his own alternate readings and made some valuable conclusions that merit the attention of the scholars in the field. I shall mention here only his conclusions on the events prior to the accession of Kulottunga I in A.D. 1070. (His views on the Pallavarayanpettai inscriptions and their implications on the course of historical events will be discussed in a later section of this volume.) His critical study based on his verification with the Indian Ephemeris (L.D.S.) reveals that Vira Rajendra's coronation took place in A.D. 1063 (sometime in April to September); that Adhi Rajendra was crowned as co-ruler on the 8th June, A.D. 1068; that Vira Rajendra fell ill and died in A.D. 1070 (sometime in July to November); that Adhi Rajendra also fell ill and died in A.D. 1071 (June) and that even during the time of Vira Rajendra himself, Kulottunga (I), his sister's son, was crowned heir-apparent to the Chola throne on the 13th June, A.D. 1070 (ARE 1947-48, p. 3) in order to avert a civil war of succession and preserve the Chola power from extinction.

Temples of Kulottunga I's Time

CHIDAMBARAM

NATARAJA TEMPLE: EXPANSION OF THE CAMPUS I

Vast building activities were undertaken at Chidambaram. Lord Nataraja had already become the patron-deity of the Cholas. The original linga shrine, known as the Mulasthana, came to be known as the Edirambalam—‘the shrine opposite’ (to the Nataraja shrine), as Nataraja had become the centre of greater attraction. The Mulasthana shrine was renovated in this period, and the inscriptions of the 46th and 47th years of Kulottunga I, originally engraved on the walls of this shrine, were later re-engraved on the northern wall of the newly-built first wall of enclosure of the Nataraja shrine.

The structure and architectural features of the existing Nataraja temple took their shape in this period. The (innermost) first wall of enclosure of the Nataraja temple (surrounding the shrines of Nataraja and Govindaraja) was called both Kulottunga Solan Tirumaligai and Vikrama Solan Tirumaligai. (The second wall of enclosure was called Vikrama Solan Tirumaligai). The work started by Kulottunga I must have been continued by his son, Vikrama Chola, and supplemented by their General and Minister, Naralokavira.

Naralokavira was a native of Arumbakkam and the Chieftain of Manavil, south of the Palar in the modern North Arcot district.

He had various names: Sabhanartakan, Kalingarayan, Kaliyarkon, Manavataran, Porkkoyil Tondaiman, Ponnambalakkuttan, Arulakaran and Madhurantakan. He figures in a large number of inscriptions ranging from the 28th year of Kulottunga I to the sixth year of Vikrama Chola. From the existence of two inscriptions found at Tiruppattur (Ramanathapuram district), of the 3rd and 12th years of Maravarman Parakrama Pandya-deva, which mention Naralokaviran Sandhi and Naralokaviran mandapa, the Government Epigraphist made the inference that he was a Pandyan chieftain. This is opposed to facts. In fact, Naralokaviran claims victories over the Tennavar (Pandyas), the Malaimannar (Cheras) and the Vadamannar (the northern kings). So, he must have been a Chola General of distinction associated with these wars, especially the war with the Pandyas. What Karunakara Tondaiman did in the war with Kalinga, Naralokavira must have achieved in the Chola war against the Pandyas; his title of Madhurantakan is significant in this context.

More than for his military exploits, he is best to be remembered for his benefactions to temples, chiefly at Chidambaram and at Tiruvadigai.

His benefactions at Chidambaram, in addition to providing for various services, included the following: the gilding of Ponnambalam and Perambalam; the provision of streetlights and the watering of the main streets on festival days; the raising of flower-gardens and areca-palm groves; the construction of a road to the sea to take the Deity in procession to the bathing ghat (at Killai), of a mandapa to house the Deity there, and of a fresh-water tank near it; the construction of a wall of enclosure called after him (Naralokaviran Tirumaligai), with two tall towers, the hall resting on a hundred pillars for Pasupati and His Consort, the shrine of the Goddess, with towers and walls of enclosure; the building of a flight of stone-steps for the Sivaganga (the sacred tank); the installation of an image of Sambandar in a shrine, and the construction of a hall for the recitation of his Devaram hymns, the engraving of the songs of the three Devaram hymnists on copper-plates; and the construction of a sluice to a large irrigation tank in the neighbourhood of Chidambaram. Very probably, this last item is a reference to the Viranam tank (Viranarayanan eri), which was considered then as almost the northern boundary of the taniyur of Perumparrappuliyur (Chidambaram).*

This detailed narration of the building activities of Naralokavira at Chidambaram must be studied in conjunction with the meykkirtti (or prasasti) of Vikrama Chola, the son and successor of Kulottunga I. Therein, Vikrama Chola claims the utilisation of the vast tribute paid by his vassals in his tenth regnal year to the enriching and embellishment of the temple of Nataraja, his Kulanayakam (patron-Deity), at Chidambaram.

In the Report of the Archaeological Survey of India for 1908-09, the view was held that the (seven-storeyed) gopuram and the hundred- as well as the thousand- pillared mandapas were works of the Vijayanagara period, especially attributable to Krishnadeva Raya of the 16th century. This erroneous view is also followed by some later scholars. We have the evidence of the inscriptions of Naralokavira that the hundred-pillared halls at Tiruvadigai and Chidambaram were built during the reigns of Kulottunga I and Vikrama Chola. In the hundred-pillared mandapa at Chidambaram, there are some pillars containing the label, Svasti-sri-ittirumandapam akalankan. Akalankan is a surname of both Kulottunga I and Vikrama Chola.

In this age, huge Amman shrines came to be built adjacent to the original shrines. In particular, the shrine of Sivakami Amman at Chidambaram, with walls of enclosure and adorned with a gopuram at the gateway, was built at this time. This enlargement of the temple-court paved the way for the complex temple-cities of the future.

The Nritta Sabha at Chidambaram remained for a long time a great archaeological puzzle. Its age was anybody's guess. More than half a century ago, when epigraphy and allied branches of archaeology were in their infancy, James Fergusson wrote a descriptive account of a few Dravidian temples in his "History of Indian and Eastern Architecture" (1910). Much valuable data have become available since then to enable us to fix the age of at least a few of them.

Fergusson writes thus about the Nritta Sabha at Chidambaram: "The oldest thing now existing is a little shrine in the inmost enclosure, a porch of fifty-six pillars about eight feet high and most delicately carved, resting on a stylobate ornamented with dancing figures more graceful and more elegantly executed than any others of their class, so far as I know, in Southern India. At the sides are wheels and horses, the whole being intended to represent a car, as is frequently the case in these temples. Whitewash and modern alterations have sadly disfigured this gem, but enough remains to show how exquisite and consequently how ancient it was. It is the Nrittya or Nritta Sabha, the hall of dance."

The chariot-shaped mandapa (housing the image of the Urdhva-tandava form of Nataraja) is not the oldest part of the Chidambaram temple. Later, adverting to another shrine in the northern portion of the third prakara of this temple, dedicated to the worship of Subrahmanya, which also has chariot features similar to those of the Nritta Sabha, Fergusson adds: "From its position, however, and the character of the ornamentation, there seems little doubt that it belongs to the end of the 17th and the first half of the 18th century. From its style, however, I would be inclined to ascribe it to the earlier date."

I got a clue to the age of this class of temple architecture from an important temple in the neighbourhood of Chidambaram constructed in the reign of Kulottunga I. It is the chariot-shaped temple of Amritaghatesvarar at Melakkadambur, about 32 km. from Chidambaram, and about 10 km. from the Chola capital of Gangaikonda-Solapuram. Appar (7th century A.D.) has sung hymns on the Lord of this place and he mentions it in his Devarnam as the Karakkoyil of Tirukkadambur.

GREAT TEMPLE-CITIES

In the Early Chola period, there was vigorous and enthusiastic temple-building activity during the reigns of Aditya I and Parantaka I; similarly in the Middle Chola period, the reigns of Rajaraja I and Rajendra I witnessed the building of the largest number of temples belonging to this period; so also, the reigns of Kulottunga I and Vikrama Chola in the Later Chola period saw the erection of a large number of temples—much more than in those of their successors. It has to be mentioned that each period recorded certain distinct and remarkable features of stylistic development.

One important feature of this development in the Later Chola period was the expansion of the area of the temple-campus. Chidambaram was one of the sites of this great experiment. During the time of Kulottunga I and his son and successor, the temple area expanded nearly six times. Two walls of enclosure, Kulottungasolan Tirumaligai and Vikramasolan Tirumaligai, were erected. Later, a third wall of enclosure was started on in the reign of Kulottunga II; almost completed in the reign of Kulottunga III, it came to be called Rajakkal Tambiran Tirumaligai, after a surname of his. The four car streets were also formed about this period. But the fourth wall of enclosure called Virappa Nayakar Tirumaligai—and the moat also perhaps—was the contribution of one of the Nayak rulers of the seventeenth century.

The seven-storeyed gopurams were also the handiwork of the Later Cholas—in addition to the erection of the 100- and 1000- pillared halls and the independent Amman shrine outside the precincts of the shrine of the main deity. Chidambaram became the first of a series of great temple-cities.

Soon after, other great celebrated centres of religion followed suit; among them may be mentioned the Brahmapurisvarar temple at Sirkali, the Tyagarajar temple at Tiruvurur, the Jambukesvaram at Tiruvanaikka, and the Ranganathar temple at Srirangam.*

NARALOKAVIRA'S CHIDAMBARAM INSCRIPTION LISTING HIS CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE NATARAJA TEMPLE

The several benefactions of the Chola General Naralokaviran are listed in a long inscription found on the third prakara wall in the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram; it is in verse form and contains thirty-one verses in Sanskrit and thirty-six venbas in Tamil (SII, Texts, Vol. IV). The Tamil portions, at many places, repeat and confirm the statements contained in the Sanskrit portion.

1. The first verse forms a preamble and states that, to describe the benefactions of Manavatara (another name of Naralokavira), to Sabhapati (Nataraja) performing the Cosmic Dance for the welfare of the three worlds and Whose form encompasses both heaven and earth, even a hundred mouths would be inadequate, and beseeches the reader to 'hear' them in leisure.

2. The second verse states that he set up innumerable street lights (vithi-dipa) to dispel darkness and make the place resplendent as if with eternal sunshine.

*See also The City of the Cosmic Dance (on Chidambaram) by B. Natarajan (Orient Longman Ltd.).

3. The third verse says that he provided for watering the streets of the city on festival days (with waters of the holy tirthas), when Siva, the destroyer of Manmatha, the Lord of Love, was taken out in procession.

4. According to the fourth verse, he, in his infinite devotion to the Lord, planted fifty thousand areca palms, and watered them as it were with the waters of the Ganga flowing from the matted locks of Siva, as they tossed about when He danced. The Tamil portion gives their number as a hundred thousand.

5. The next verse which is a continuation of the previous one mentions that he raised a sacred flower garden (nandavana), extending upto the limits of the sea, with trees tall as the sky and full of fragrant flowers; it was filled with the bustle of the gods who came to witness the dance of Siva.

6. The sixth verse says that he erected a mandapa near the sea whose massive waves rolling towards the shore seemed to invite the devotees as it were with its hands; further he opened a broad road from the city to the sea coast for the tirthayatra of Nataraja. From the Tamil portion, we see that the tirthayatra took place in the month of Masi.

7. The seventh verse mentions that near that mandapa, he excavated a big tank of sweet water, which appeared like the heart of the sea, with a large banyan tree that stood near it like a mandapa, spreading its branches on the bank to provide shade and shelter to the pilgrims flocking thither for the tirthayatra.

8. The eighth verse mentions that he constructed, round the temple of Lord Sabhapati Who took a vow to burn the three cities of the Asuras, a great wall called after his name Naralokavira, with tall towers, on which resplendent flags were flying; the flags flew so high that, when they became hot with the scorching sun so close, they cooled themselves lapping up the waters of the clouds.

9. The ninth verse refers to the same theme as the previous one; and adds that he also built two tall towers reaching on to the sky from which flags flew majestically as if inviting people from different parts to take shelter under their shade from the scorching heat of the sun.

10. The tenth verse says that Naralokavira, whom the poets call Arulakara (the embodiment of piety and grace), justified the name by constructing a hall with a hundred pillars, dabrasabha, i.e., the 'little hall' or Chirrambalam, where Pasupati (Nataraja), seeing that it was a place meet for His dance, disported Himself with His beloved.

11. The eleventh verse refers to the sacred tank in the temple and the flight of stone steps that he built round it which looked like the path by which his fame was to descend to the nether world. On either side of the golden gateway on the southern side (of the temple), he set up auspicious lamps (mangala dipas) which dispelled from the subjects the darkness of earthly life.

12. In the twelfth verse, it is said that the priests of the temple who performed the worship of the Lord having the Nandi banner were the recipients of rich endowments from him. Further he erected a fine hall of gold for the constant recitation of Kumara stotra, a reference to the Devaram hymns of Jnanasambandar, known also as Aludaiya Pillaiyar (see also verse 26 below). From the Tamil verse, it is learnt that he made the lands in the village of Tyagavalli and others tax-free, and constructed an agrahara for the brahmanas to live in.

13. The next verse states that he constructed a sluice for the big tank for irrigating the lands of the brahmanas known as the 'Three thousand of Tillai' (Tillaimuvayiravar).

14. From the next verse, it is understood that he covered "the Great Hall" (mahatim sabham, which refers to the Perambalam) with copper. The import of the latter half of the sloka is not clear.

15. The next verse says that he constructed a golden vehicle with the Nandi mounted on it, and on this vehicle the deity was taken in procession during the bhikshatana yatra (the journey of Siva as a mendicant).

16. The sixteenth verse says that a bugle inlaid with gold intended to announce the arrival of Devadeva (the Lord of Lords, Siva) was presented by him to the temple. The verse adds that, on hearing the bugle note announcing the arrival of Siva, even the hands of Indra automatically folded in adoration over his head, touching his crown.

17. The seventeenth verse says that, for the worship of the 'Dancer in the Hall', he made arrangements for the supply of fresh flowers which bestowed grace both on humanity and on the celestial beings; he also offered gold vessels to keep offerings vying with nectar in quality.

18. The eighteenth verse says that Naralokavira, who knew the essence of Siva worship, gave precious jewels, which were pure and blemishless like the hearts of sages, to adorn the sacred body of the Lord of Dancers of the Hall.

19. The nineteenth verse states that he made provision for the offering of the nectar of milk with sugar-candy to the Lord of Gauri to Whom the celestial beings had given poison to drink. In the Tamil part, Naralokavira is referred to as Tondaiyar-kon, the Lord of the people of Tondai.

20. The next verse mentions that he endowed the temple of Dhurjati (Siva) with ten perpetual lamps (nitya dipa), lit with camphor, whose fragrance pervaded the whole earth.

21. The next verse says that Naralokavira presented to the Lord a water-pot (kalasa) and many other vessels made of gold, the brilliance of which proclaimed to the world that unflinching service and devotion to the feet of Hara brought merit.

22. The next verse states that he presented one thousand milch cows to the God in the temple for conducting His abhisheka with milk that resembled nectar.

23. The next verse states that he set up an image of Nandi (the sacred bull) who by his constant and unceasing devotion to Sambhu had obtained His grace (priti) and from whom permission to enter the sacred presence of Nataraja is sought by the Lord of Vaikuntha (Vishnu) and the other gods coming there for worship every morning; he also presented to the temple an image of the Goddess.

24. The next verse says that Naralokavira presented to the temple many beautiful jewels set with precious stones and also gave away a village, after making it tax-free, to meet the expenses of archana (worship).

25. The next verse says that he made provision of one thousand measures of ghee for performing abhisheka every year to the God enshrined in the sanctum sanctorum (mula-sthana) (Tiru-Mulanathar). From the Tamil part it is learnt that the abhisheka was to be performed with one thousand nalas of ghee.

26. The next verse states that he set up a golden image of Kumara Tiru Jnanasambandar who drank milk from the sacred breast of Girija (Parvati) and obtained the grace of Sarasvati and danced and sang the praise of Srikantha (Siva), and that he also made provision for the offering of payasam (sweetened milk-drink) to the deity.

27. The twentyseventh verse states that he set up an image of Bhattacharya who was the chief among the Brahmanakula and who had defeated in debate the adherents of religions outside the Vedic lore and established the Saiva religion on the earth. (The word 'Bhattacharya' refers to a temple priest of that day. Could it refer to Adi Sankara?).

28. In the next verse, it is said that he erected a prakara and a mandapa to the shrine (Tirukkamakkottam) of the goddess Parvati, Whose image was adorned from head to foot with fine jewels befitting the dancing hall of Her Lord (svapati natanasthana योगyam).

29. The next verse says: he presented to the goddess enshrined in the Kamakoshta (or Tirukkamakkottam, i.e., to Sivakami Amman) of the temple, a pitambara (yellow robe) made of gold, the brilliance of which pervaded everywhere like the smoke emanating from the forest-fire (immolating) the wives of the enemies conquered by him, Naralokavira.

30. The next verse states that Naralokavira erected for the shrine of the devi (Tirukkamakkottam) a high outer-wall of stone, the tower of which touched the clouds.

31. The last verse states that Naralokavira gave a perpetual endowment for the daily supply of oil and milk for children, to signify the universal motherhood of the goddess. The poet further adds that this item should receive the first preference of the person who intends to make charity.

The Tamil portion of the inscription gives some further information about Naralokavira; (1) that he covered with gold several parts of the sabha, (2) that he presented an elephant to the temple, and (3) that he built of stone the temple of sudalaiyamarndan (i.e., He Who took His abode at the crematorium), namely Siva, at Tillai.*

1. The central shrine (Brahmapurisvarar—linga)
2. Toni Appar shrine —facing east, on a mound in the first floor, reached by a flight of steps west of the central shrine.
3. Sattanathar shrine —in a cella facing south in the second floor above no. 2 supra (the deity is a form of Bhairavar or Vadugar)
4. Jnana-Sambandar shrine —in the second prakara, north-west of the central shrine.
5. Sthirasundari (Amman) shrine—west of the sacred tank.

Sirkali is the headquarters of the taluk of the same name in the Tanjavur district. It is a celebrated Saiva centre. It was the birth place of the Nayanar Sambandar and is associated with the legends and festivals of that boy-saint. He was born in a house in a street west of the main temple, now named after him, which has a small temple called (Kulottunga-?) Solisvaram. West of the town is the temple of Tiruttalam Udaiyar Who is held to have presented the boy-singer with cymbals. A few kilometres to the south is Nanipalli (Punjai), the home of his mother, and some kilometres north of it is Nallur-Tirumanam now known as Achchapuram where Sambandar on his wedding day in his sixteenth year attained beatitude with the whole wedding party.

Sirkali has twelve different names (see the Footnote). Brahma is said to have worshipped Siva here. Hence the place is called

The twelve names are: Brahmapuram, Venupuram, Pugali, Venguru, Tonipuram, Pundarai, Sirapuram, Puravam, Sanbai, Srikali or Sirkali, Kochchaivayam, and Kalumalam. These are mentioned in the 'Tirukkalumala Mummanikkovai' (verse 10). For a brief explanation of the legends associated with these names and a list of other names, vide the 'Sikalit-tala varalaru' (in Tamil) published by the Sattanathasvami Devasthanam.

Brahmapuram (or -puri) and the central linga is called Brahma-purisvarar. The devas in their distress took shelter here from the asuras; hence the name of the place Pugali. During the pralaya (the Great Deluge), Parvati and Paramesvarar converted the pranava into a boat and floated on the floods and touched land on the mound here and saved the devas and men from destruction. Toni-Appar is a representation of this legend (cf. the legend of Noah's Ark). 'Karuvarai-sulnda-kadalidai-midakkum-kalumala-nagar', sings Sundarar. Appar also sings the glory of Tonipuram. Sambandar's first miracle happened on the south bank of the sacred tank here. When the three-year old boy cried for milk, Parvati and Paramesvarar in the boat on the mound responded and offered him divine milk which inspired the child of three to burst into an ecstatic hymn: 'Todudaiya seviyan . . . ullamkavar kalvan edudaiya-mala rānmunnai natpanin detta arul seyda Pidudaiya piramapura(m) meviya pemman ivananrey'. This is the reply the child Sambandar gave to his father when he enquired of him as to who gave him the milk.

Sirkali was also the original home of Kali (cult of the mother-goddess). Such an old and celebrated centre has only three inscriptions of the Later Cholas: one of Rajadhiraja II and two of Kulottunga III. The original temple should have consisted of the central linga shrine, that of Brahma-purisvarar, on the southern bund of the sacred tank; the Toni Appar shrine on a mound west of the central shrine, reached by two flights of steps from the inner prakara; and perhaps also the Satta(i)nathar shrine in the second floor reached from the southern prakara of the Toni Appar shrine by another flight of steps. The origins of all these are lost in oblivion. The three Later Chola inscriptions do not throw any light on the earlier fabric. All the earlier inscriptions must have been lost in the later renovation. It is a pity.

It seems that the enlargement of this temple campus must have taken place, as in the case of the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram, in the periods of Kulottunga I, Vikrama Chola, Kulottunga II and completed during the reign of Kulottunga III. This temple has three prakaras with high walls of enclosure. There are two sets of gopurams with seven storeys in the outer walls of enclosure. The Amman shrine (of Sthirasundari) and the Sambandar shrine are also the work of Kulottunga I and his successors. In my childhood, I have seen heaps of stone material—mostly pillars—in the third prakara between the inner and outer gopurams on the eastern side. They were perhaps the ruins of the hundred-pillared mandapa.

Now to the three inscriptions. The oldest inscription in this temple is found on the north wall of the Tiru-Jnana Sambandar shrine. It is an inscription of the eleventh year of Tribhuvanachakravartin Rajadhiraja II (ARE 123 of 1896; SII, V, no. 988) and records a gift of food offerings (kariyamudu) daily and on festivals to Aludaiya Pillaiyar (Sambandar) by one Atkonda Nayakan Tirunattap-Peruman, the headman (kilavan) of Venmani.

The land gifted for the offerings is said to have been in the brahmadeyam of Tiruk-kalu-malam, in Tiru-kalu-mala nadu, a part of Rajadhiraja valanadu.

There are two inscriptions of the days of Kulottunga III, recorded on the south wall of the Brahmapurisvarar shrine. One is of the ninth year and 176th day of "Tribhuvanachakravartin Kulottunga who conquered Madurai" (ARE 125 of 1896; SII, VI, no. 990). It records the gift of land for a perpetual lamp as tiru-nanda-vilakkup-puram to Tiruttonipuram Udaiyar and Periya Nachchiyar. Incidentally, this inscription refers to the land survey conducted by Kulottunga I in his sixteenth year.

The other inscription relates to the fourteenth year of Kulottunga III (ARE 124 of 1896; SII, V, no. 989). It records a gift of land by two ladies for the maintenance of a gardener and a flower-garden for the supply of flowers to Tirut-Tonipuram Udaiya Nayanar for the merit of their husbands, themselves and their descendants. One is Edirilip-Perumal, wife of Palaiyanur Udaiyan Vedavanam Udaiyan of Menmalai Palaiyanur nadu, a subdivision of Jayangondasola mandalam (the great General and Minister of Rajadhiraja II and his successor Kulottunga III—see the section on Pallavarayanpettai and the Note there on Vedavanam Udaiyan) and daughter of Jananatha Kalpam Araiyan, the headman (kilavan) of Anangur Kurram in Naduvil nadu alias Rajaraja valanadu. The other party to the gift is Umai Alvi, daughter of Edirilipperumal, who had married Perumur Udaiyar Nayanar Tiruvengadam Udaiyar of Venmanikkurram, a part of Suttamalli valanadu. They were persons of position and respectability. It was an age of faith and everybody made endowments to the god of his or her choice according to his or her ability and the degree of devotion.

There is a reference from a record in another temple to a gift for a matha in this place. There is a temple called Agastyesvaram at Muniyur (called Munniyur in the inscription) in the Tanjavur district which records that in the 28th year of Tribhuvana-chakravartin Rajaraja III, the residents of Munniyur made a grant of land to the Tirumurai Devarachchelvar matha on the north side of Tiruttondisvaram Udaiya Nayanar temple at Tirukkalu-malam (Sirkali) in Tirukkalu mala nadu in Rajadhiraja valanadu. This is a reference to a matha for the practice and promotion of Devaram.

For a brief account of Sambandar's life and achievements, see B. Natarajan's The City of the Cosmic Dance, pp. 107-111. Here is a para therefrom on his mission and its influence:

'Sambandar was a prodigy and his life was a miracle of miracles. He had no schooling in the modern sense of the word. He had mastery of the four Vedas, six Vedangas and of Tamil in all its range and glory. His songs conform to the best traditions of Tamil literature and lend themselves to interpretation in attractive musical modes. It is amazing how he acquired the wealth of knowledge and wisdom enshrined in his immortal songs. To have visited about one hundred and ten temples during his brief span of sixteen years in those days of difficult communications and to have left behind so great a treasure of religious and philosophical literature is really remarkable. It is an influence which will last, as has been said of the Ramayana, as long as the hills and rivers endure'.

Hallowed are the home and the temple closely associated with the life of Sambandar, who imbibed the divine milk of Parvati and became an inspired devotee to sing the glory of the Holy name.

TIRUVALANGADU

TANDAVESVARAR) TEMPLE

(Tiru) Alangadu, a station on the Southern Railway, lies about 59 km. west of Madras. It is in the Tiruttani taluk of the Chingleput district. It is closely linked in legend and history with the neighbouring village of Palaiyanur, about 1.5 km. east of it. One story associated with these places is that seventy vellalas who had given their word to protect the person of one Palaiyanur Nili's husband performed self-immolation by drowning when the husband was murdered, apparently despite their vigilance. Sambandar sings:

Anjum Palaiyanur Alangattu Amman adihale'.*

Tiru Alangadu and Chidambaram* are two places associated with the urdhva-tandava of Siva in His dance-contest against Kali. (A Purana describes this legend thus: 'idat-tal nitti Arputan Kali torkka adiyatu idu' 'The dance performed by the wonderful Lord to defeat Kali, by raising aloft His left leg'.) Appar refers to this legend in his local hymns: "Adinar Kali kana Alangattu Adihalare". Sundarar sings of "Palaiyanur meviya Attan Alangadan". This celebrated temple thus dates back at least to the 7th century A.D. Yet another of the sixty-three nayanmar, also intimately associated with this place, is Karaikkal Ammaiyar. When her married life came to an unhappy end, she wandered around as a devotee of Siva, assuming a non-human form; after going up to Kailasa in the north, she reached this place on her return and found eternal rest at the feet of the Lord here. In her two Muttutiruppadiyams, she sings the glories of this Lord.

This religious centre is one of the five sabhas associated with the Nataraja cult, being called the Ratna Sabha. The others are: Chidambaram (Kanaka Sabha), Madurai (Rajata Sabha), Tirunelveli (Tamra Sabha)—respectively the Golden, Silver and Copper Halls—and Tiruk-kurralam (Chitra Sabha).

*At Chidambaram, the defeated Kali is held to have been banished for ever to the outskirts of the town. But no pilgrimage to the Nataraja shrine is considered complete without one to the Kali shrine as well.

In local inscriptions, Alangadu is described as located in Palaiyanur nadu, in the Melamalai division of Jayangondasola mandalam.

The principal adjuncts of the temple are: the main shrine and a Nataraja shrine, any original inscriptions on their walls having become lost to us in the course of later renovations; two walls of enclosure, which have to be assigned to the 12th and 13th centuries; and three gopurams. The innermost gopuram contains the earliest extant inscriptions here, namely, one of the days of Rajendra I, giving a fragment of his historical introduction (ARE 483 of 1905). It also contains a few of the days of Rajadhiraja I (of his 13th, 26th and 31st years: ARE 485 of 1905), and one of those of Kulottunga I (of his 46th year: ARE 484 of 1905) mentioning a sale of land to the temple of Tiruvalangadu in Neduvilmalai nadu by the Assembly of Rajanarayana chaturvedimangalam. It further contains two inscriptions of the Vijayanagara days (Saka 1363 and 1493 corresponding to A.D. 1440–41 and 1570–71). The prakara walls contain copies of the inscriptions of the days of Nrpatunga Pallava (ARE 460 and 461 of 1905) and original records of the days of the Later Chola rulers from Kulottunga I to Rajaraja III. It thus seems probable that the earlier Pallava main shrine was first renovated and the temple campus itself enlarged in the Later Chola period, beginning with the reign of Kulottunga I himself. All the Chola records, other than those on the innermost gopuram already cited, are found on the prakara walls. The earliest of these is one of the second year of Kulottunga I ('Rajakesari Rajendra deva'), on the east wall of the second prakara (ARE 14 of 1896). It records the (re)settlement at Tiruvalangadu of 25 families from Sankarappadi and their being entrusted with the duty of looking after 15 lamps in the temple. Another record, on the west wall of the temple, pertains to the 9th regnal year of "Parakesarivarman alias Tribhuvanachakravartin Parantaka deva"—who was a son (presumably the eldest) and co-ruler for some years of Kulottunga I (ARE 16 of 1896). There are four inscriptions of Vikrama Chola's days. An inscription of his 5th year, on the east wall of the first prakara of the Nataraja shrine, records a gift of 12 sheep for a lamp by a native of Urrukkadu alias Alagiya Solanallur in Urrukkattuk kottam (ARE 453 of 1905). One, of his 6th year, records a sale of land by the Assembly of Perumur alias Rajanarayana-chaturvedimangalam in Perumur nadu (ARE 467 of 1905). Another of the same year has the (correct) 'pumadu punara' introduction but contains the incorrect 'Rajakesarivarman' title (for 'Parakesarivarman'); it records a sale of land by the villagers of Valaikulam (ARE 458 of 1905). An inscription of the 7th year mentions a sale of land by the villagers of Polippakkam to a merchant of Tirumayilappil in Puliur kottam.

There are four inscriptions of the days of Rajadhiraja II. One, of his 10th year (ARE 469 of 1905), records a gift of gold for two lamps to the shrine of the Goddess Periyanchchiyar of the Tirukkamakkottam in this temple. (This shrine must have come into existence in the days of Kulottunga I himself). An inscription of the 11th year (ARE 466 of 1905) records a gift of land in the village of Kottur or Ilambayankottur alias Chola-vidyadhara chaturvedimangalam in Kanrur nadu, a sub-division of Manavir kottam—a neighbouring village located near Kuvam. The renewal of the Pandyan Succession War, involving the invasion of Sri Lanka by the Cholas supporting the cause of a rival claimant to the Sri Lanka throne, and the success in this war of Vedavanam udaiyan Ammaiyappan alias Pallavaraiyan of Palaiyanur, are mentioned in an inscription of the 12th year (ARE 465 of 1905). The king rewarded him with a gift of ten velis of land in 'Rajarajan Palaiyanur'. An inscription of the 13th year (with the 'pugal sulnda pumadu' introduction) records a gift of two lamps by the above Pallavaraiyan mentioned with the prefix 'Palaiyanur-udaiyan' to his name.

There are four inscriptions which could be attributed to the days of Kulottunga III. One, on the east wall of the first prakara (Nataraja shrine), is fragmentary (ARE 452 of 1905). One, of his 23rd year, records the sale of the village of Muduvur (ARE 456 of 1905). One, of the 32nd year (ARE 477 of 1905), records a gift of 70 kasus for offerings. It mentions two villages, Valluvankkamm in Olugaiyur nadu, and Perumur alias Rajanarayana chaturvedimangalam (also see ARE 467 of 1905, 6th year of Vikrama Chola) in Neduvinmalai Perumur nadu. Another of the same year, giving him the title of Tribhuvana Vira deva, records a gift of a lamp to the temple of 'Tiruvarangil andamura nimirndarulina Nayanar' at Tiruvalangadu—perhaps a reference to the urdhva-tandava of Siva (ARE 482 of 1905). The donor is named as Arulnilaivisagan Trailokyamallan Vatsarajan of Arumbakkam who had rendered the Mahabharata into elegant Tamil. We thus come to know of yet another translation, not available now, of the great epic.

There are three inscriptions of the days of Rajaraja III. One, of his 8th year, records a gift of 16 cows for a lamp (ARE 463 of 1905). One, of the 12th year, records a sale of land by the villagers of Palaiyanur, a devadana village of this temple. The third registers a gift of four cows for a lamp.

There is an inscription of the 29th year of Vijaya Gandagopala, the Telugu-Choda chief. There are a number of inscriptions of the Vijayanagara kings (Saka dates 1349, 1373 and 1484).

In the Annual Report for South Indian Epigraphy (ARE) for 1905, it is recorded that during the visit to this temple of the late Epigraphist, K.V. Subrahmanya Aiyar, the temple authorities produced a set of thirty-one copper-plates discovered in an underground chamber of the temple along with a number of copper images. Ten of these plates are inscribed in Sanskrit and the rest in Tamil, and the text has been published. A portion of the tenth plate of the Sanskrit part had been left blank, and was in later times used for engraving a Tamil record of twenty-one lines (in comparatively modern characters), conveying information about a donation to the shrine of the Goddess in the temple. Among the 'bronzes' unearthed here is the famous Nataraja of the period of Rajendra I, now adorning the Art Gallery of the Madras Government Museum (see my Middle Chola Temples, pl. 338). Rodin's enthusiastic admiration for this masterpiece is well-known and altogether deserved. These immortal works of art have made their unknown creators as well as patrons immortal.

Tiruvalangadu has thus received the homage over the centuries of saints, kings and the people of the land.

NEYVENNAI

SVARNAGHATESVARAR (VENNAIYAPPAR) 4 TEMPLE

The village of Neyvennai, in the South Arcot district, is 6.5 km. away in a northwesterly direction from the Ulundurpet railway station of the Southern Railway, on the Madras-Tiruchy chord line. In the days of the Devaram hymnists, it went under the name of Tiruvennai-nallur or simply Nel-vennai, and has associations with the saint Sambandar. The deity of the main temple is called Vennai Appar or Svarnaghatesvarar and the Amman is called Nilamalar kan Ammai: the 'goddess with the blue-lotus eyes'.

We have already seen that the region comprising the Tirukoyilur taluk of the South Arcot district and neighbouring areas was administered by the Malaiyaman Chiefs of Kiliyur and Kilur, who were feudatories of the Cholas, over a couple of centuries and more. (For further details on these Chiefs, see under Arakandanallur). The village of Neyvennai and its temples were the recipients of their attention.

From a 9th year record of Kulottunga I found on the south wall of the central shrine, we come to know of the existence of a shrine of the Goddess, for which a gift of land for offerings is made (ARE 379 of 1908). In the 48th year of the same king, Rajendra Chola Chediyarayan, a native of Kiliyur in Tirumunaippadinadu of Gangaikondasola valanadu, set up an image of Nataraja (Kuttadum devar) in the temple of Tirunelvennai (ARE 375 of 1908). One Vikkirma Chola Chediyaraiyan of Kiliyur made a gift of land to the God at Tirunelvennai, in Kurukkai kurram, a district in Miladu alias Jananatha valanadu, in the 8th year of Vikrama Chola (ARE 371 of 1908). In the 12th year of the same king, (Malaiyan Mallan alias) Rajendra Sola Malaiyaman of Kiliyur makes a gift of land for offerings to various shrines in the temple (ARE 373 of 1908). It is for the merit of the same benefactor that, in the 10th year of Rajakesarivarman alias Udaiyar Sri Kulottunga Chola deva—obviously a reference to Kulottunga II, a gift of 64 cows is made for maintaining two lamps, to the temple of Mahadeva at Tirunelvennai (ARE 376 of 1908).

In the days of Kopperunjinga, the deity is called Porkudan-kuduttu Aruliya Nayanar (36th year, ARE 370 of 1908). And by the 15th century (Saka 1384 = A.D. 1462), Tirunelvennai is described as located in Adanurparru, a sub-division of Kurukkai kurram, in Tirumunaippadi nadu.

The earliest inscription found on the walls of the central shrine is one of the 3rd year of Kulottunga I.

VYAGHRAPURISVARAR TEMPLE

Tiruppulivanam, in the Kanchipuram taluk of the Chingleput district, is 5 km. north of Uttiramerur and lies equi-distant from Chingleput and Kanchipuram, south-west of the former and south of the latter, and at a distance of 75 km. to the south-west of Madras city. There is a Siva temple, dedicated to Vyaghrapurisvarar, which lies north-west of the modern village of Tiruppulivanam.

The ancient name of the main deity was Tiruppulivanam-Udaiya Nayanar and the temple is said to have been located at Rajendrasola chaturvedimangalam, a subdivision of Kaliyur Kottam in Jayangondasola mandalam. Uttiramerur was known in the days of the later Pallavas as Uttiramerur chaturvedimangalam (Nandivarman Pallavamalla); in the latter half of the reign of Rajendra Chola I, the place is renamed after the king as Rajendrasola chaturvedimangalam and, still later, in the days of the Telugu Choda chiefs (i.e., in the last days of the Cholas), as Gandagopala chaturvedimangalam.

The Vyaghrapurisvarar temple is a foundation of the days of Pallava Nandivarman II (SII, VI, no. 355) and thus belongs to the 8th century A.D. From an inscription dated in the 37th year of Kulottunga III (ARE 396 of 1923), we gather that in the 14th year of Rajamarattandan alias Aparajita Vikramavarman, four perpetual lamps were authorised to be burnt in the temple and necessary provision was made for the purpose; in this inscription there is a reference to similar endowments for lamps, made in the 13th year of Parantaka I and 18th year of 'Kannaradeva who took Kachchi and Tanjai' (i.e., Rashtrakuta Krishna III). However, we have no trace of the original structure—which should have been in brick and mortar, as the earliest inscription found on the walls of the temple dates back only to the 3rd year of Kulottunga I. His inscriptions are as follows: 3rd year: ARE 398 and 395 of 1923; 25th year: ARE 328 and 391 of 1923; 45th year: ARE 207 of 1923. The first (3rd year) inscription is found on the east wall of the mandapa in front of the central shrine; however, the inscription dated in his 25th year is found on the central shrine itself. We may therefore conclude that the old temple dating back to Pallava days was in brick and that it was rebuilt of stone in the time of Kulottunga I, prior to his 25th year, while the mandapa could belong to an earlier era, probably the days of Rajendra I, when the prakara had come into existence.

The forty-fifth year record of Kulottunga I is found on the west wall of the sabha-mandapa and it mentions a gift of 12 kalanju of gold for burning four perpetual lamps in the temple, by Ponnambalakkuttan alias Kalingaraja of Manayil in Manayir kottam, a subdivision of Jayangondasola mandalam. We have already seen that this Chief (vel) of Manavil, Naralokavira, was a General of Kulottunga I in his later days as well as of Vikrama Chola and that he made extensive benefactions to many temples, particularly the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram. On the north wall of the central shrine is an inscription of the 12th year of Tribhuvana-chakravartin Kulottunga Choladeva (II) recording the royal grant of 60 velis of land free of taxes at Pappannallur in Vetungadu nadu to the temple of Tiruppulivanam Udaiya Mahadevar in Rajendrasola chaturvedimangalam, a subdivision of Kaliyur kottam, a district of Jayangondasola mandalam, on the representation of Minavan Muvendavelan. The record mentions that at the time of issuing the order, the king was seated under a pearl-canopy on his throne in the coronation hall of his palace at Vikramasolapuram (ARE 198 of 1923). Another, belonging to his 4th year, found on the south wall of the mandapa in front of the central shrine and beginning with the introduction 'pu-mevi-valar' records a gift of 24 kasus for burning a lamp, to the temple (called by the same name), by a resident of Vadavur in Vadavur nadu, a subdivision of Venkunrak-kottam (ARE 203 of 1923). On the same mandapa there is an inscription of the days of Rajadhiraja II recording a sale of land, and mention is made of another temple dedicated to Arulalisvaram Udaiya Mahadevar (ARE 204 of 1923). There is a 27th year inscription of the days of Kulottunga III which records only the name of the temple and is incomplete (ARE 206 of 1923). We have already referred to an inscription of his 37th year, wherein he is called Tribhuvana vira deva; it registers an agreement by the Great Assembly (Mahasabha) of Uttaramelur alias Rajendrasola chaturvedimangalam to conduct certain festivals as of old at the temple and for the burning of eight lamps on all the days of these festivals: what is of interest is that four of these lamp-endowments were revivals of endowments made almost four centuries earlier (in the 14th year of Rajamartandan alias Aparajita Vikramavarman); one, of the 18th year of Kannaradeva, the Rashtrakuta king; two, of the 13th year of Madiraikonda Parakesari (Parantaka I); and one, of the 14th year of the current ruler himself. This is a remarkable instance of commitments of earlier reigns (even of other dynasties, friendly or otherwise) being honoured. There is an undated grantha record on the west wall of the sabha-mandapa, mentioning that this mandapa, 'suitable for the dance of Vyaghratavinatha', was constructed by Chediraja, a native of Adamangalam (ARE 205 of 1923). There is an inscription of the 7th year of Sakalalokachakravartin Rajanarayana Sambuvarayan recording an amicable settlement of some dispute between the residents of two villages regarding the flow of water from the tank at Tiruppulivanam and the grant of land as tirunamattukkani to the temple of Tiruppulivanamudaiya Nayanar (ARE 200 of 1923). There is another record of the same

Chief, dated in his 6th year, regarding a gift of 8 cows for a lamp and offerings (ARE 213 of 1923). There are two records of the days of Vijaya Gandagopaladeva, the Telugu Choda Chief, dated in his 8th and 15th years respectively; the former mentions a gift of cows and a lamp-stand by a servant-girl of the temple named Pirainarusiradiyar, to the temple at Uttaramerur—which now takes on another name, viz., Gandagopala-chaturvedimangalam; in the 8th year of the king, she again gifted a gold necklace to the god and also a silver plate and a processional car to the temple, and in recognition of her meritorious services to the temple, she was granted, according to the 15th year record, the privilege of waving the chamara in front of the deity during the car processions, and this privilege was to become a hereditary right (ARE 211 and 210 of 1923). A similar gift of cows to the temple for maintaining two lamps is made by a servant-girl in the 16th year of Perunjin-gadevar. The place continues to be called Rajendrasola chaturvedimangalam.*

The main shrine consists of a srivimana, which is (partially) of the gajaprishtha type and is preceded by an antarala and a mahamandapa. The vimana superstructure alone is in gajaprishtha style, the structure below the prastara being rectangular. There is a circum-ambulatory passage with a tiruch-churru-maligai with a sculpture of Ganesa in the south-west and of Subrahmanya in the south. The temple faces east and has a gopuram on the outermost prakara wall, which can be attributed to the 13th century; the superstructure of the gopuram has been renovated. In the outer prakara, in the south-eastern direction, there is a big hall (mandapa) which contains inscriptions of Vijaya Gandagopala and the Pandya king Maravarman Kulasekhara; it could be attributed to the 12th/13th century. In the northeast of the same prakara, there is a shrine consisting of a garbhagraha which is rectangular in shape with a sala-type vimana on top. It has a mandapa projecting in front.

On the walls of the garbhagriha and the antarala of the central shrine are figures of Ganesa and Dakshinamurti in the south,

*Other records of this temple are: SII, VI, nos. 327, 393, 394, 396, 397, 389, 390, 201, 214, 202.

Vishnu in the west and Brahma and Durga in the north.

The adhishthana consists of the upana, jagati, tripatta-kumuda and prati mouldings. The kantha of the adhishthana depicts in the shape of miniature panels exploits of Siva. Some of the panel figures are: Siva being worshipped by devotees, Agastya, Indra, the elephant Airavata, Kamadhenu, Kannappa nayanar, Arjuna receiving the Pasupata-astra, and Chandesanugrahamurti. The antarala is preceded by a mahamandapa, which reminds one of a similar, later, structure in Darasuram, the entrance to the mandapa being from the side.

The Dakshinamurti shrine inside the main temple is a later (Vijayanagara) structure.

The temple in the present form and structure belongs to the middle years of the reign of Kulottunga I and a noteworthy feature here is that the mandapa in front of the central shrine is on wheels. This temple is coeval with the Melakkadambur temple whose main shrine itself is on wheels, and is perhaps one of the earliest temples having the chariot-structure for one of its constituents. Mandapas on wheels are also found elsewhere such as at Chidambaram, Tukkachchi, Darasuram and Tribhuvanam.

6 SRI RANGANATHASVAMIN TEMPLE

(1) EARLY HISTORY

The famous temple of Srirangam is very ancient and, like the temple of Nataraja at Chidambaram, its origin is lost in the mist of time. Again like the Nataraja temple, it is called the Koyil or the Periyakoyil, the temple par excellence. The praise of the Lord has been sung by Vaishnava Alvars (with the exception of Madhurakavi). A number of them lived here and worshipped at the feet of the Lord; among them are Kulasekhara Alvar, Tirumangai Mannan or Alinadan, and Andal. Other, lesser, Alvars associated with this temple are Tondaradippodi and Tiruppanalvar (who was born in close-by Uraiyur). Ramanuja himself, the apostle of Visishtadvaita Srivaishnavism, was the spiritual and administrative head of this temple for a number of years. Alagiya-manavala or Manavala mahamuni, the acharya of the ten-kalai Vaishnava sect, spent a number of years here, the Pallavarayan-matham in the South Uttira street being associated with his stay. In fact, there is an image of this acharya which is in worship even now. The name of Kamban, the Tamil poet, is closely associated with this temple; the imprimatur of his Ramayana is said to have been made here before the literary elite.

The Government Epigraphist writes: "Architecturally, the Srirangam temple offers many interesting points to the student of Indian Art. It belongs to the uttamottama class of temples, as it has its full complement of seven prakaras running around the garbhagriha, and in addition has separate subsidiary shrines for all the minor parivaradevatas, as prescribed in the Agamas" (ARE 1936-37, p. 61).

(II) THE TEMPLE CAMPUS

The garbhagriha is in mortar and is circular in shape; it is surmounted by the 'Sriranga Vimana' with the representation of Para-Vasudeva, which is gold-plated. It has been recently renovated. The earliest inscriptional material we have here is found on the jambs of the entrance to the garbhagriha and has been dealt with in our earlier volumes on Chola Temples—Early Chola Art, Part I (pp. 59 and 60) and Middle Chola Temples (pp. 355-357). There have been numerous contributions to the growth of this temple from the days of Parantaka I down almost to the end of the 18th century, with the result that one could trace a continuous history of Srirangam and its environs over a thousand years. What a wonder! This has also added to our difficulty in formulating the chronological growth of the temple, as there have often been haphazard additions and alterations, confusing the original design. The introduction of the iconic representation of the Vaishnava alvars, an innovation of the days of Ramanuja and Vedanta Desika, has added to our difficulties as well as to the charm of the original design of the temple. A unique feature is a shrine for the great physician, Dhanvantri, who has been deified, located in the north side of the fourth prakara of the temple. A shrine has been improvised for Eduttakai Alagar (Narasimha in the act of destroying Hiranyakasipu) in stucco; the icon originally served as an embellishment on the north gopuram of the fourth prakara. Other examples of such enshrining are to be found in the Subrahmanya and Ganapati shrines on the inner side of the west gopuram of the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram.

(III) UNDER THE EARLY AND MIDDLE CHOLAS

Inscriptions of the days of Parantaka I, on the jambs of the central shrine, were uncovered when some brass panelling was removed for replacement. The central shrine and the first two prakaras obviously came up between his days and the middle of the 11th century. We have very little information about the growth of the temple during this period. The third, fourth and fifth prakaras, the numerous mandapas, prakara walls and gopurams that came up at different stages in the growth of this temple-city, do not, however, exhibit any great workmanship.

(IV) UNDER THE LATER CHOLAS

However, when we come to the period of Kulottunga I and his son, we begin to get a wealth of epigraphical material on their contribution to this temple; and, in fact, during the Later Chola period and subsequently both under the Hoysalas and under the Pandyas, there is almost a surfeit of records from which we gather that the temple underwent major expansion; and in the hands of the Vijayanagara rulers, the temple continued to receive great attention.

The third prakara wall is a veritable record-room containing a number of inscriptions covering the Chola, Pandya, Hoysala and later dynasties; but the earliest inscription on this wall, on its eastern wing, relates to the 5th year of Kulottunga I (Rajakesarivarman alias Chakravartin Kulottunga Choladeva, beginning with the introduction 'pugal madu vilanga').

Similarly, on the north wall of the fourth prakara, left of the svargavasal (the Gate of Heaven), is a 11th year inscription of Kulottunga I (Rajakesarivarman alias Chakravartin Kulottunga Choladeva) beginning with the same introduction and referring to the affairs of another temple. It mentions that as the temple of Mummudichola Vinnagaralvar at Rajamahendra-chaturvedimangalam, a brahmadeya in Kandara nadu, a subdivision of Nittavinoda valanadu, comprising the modern taluks of Nannilam and Papanasam, was unable to safeguard its properties owing to a burglary of its treasury during a conflict between the left and right hand classes (Idangais and Valangais) in the second year of the king's reign, the Assembly of Rajamahendra chaturvedimangalam received 70 kalanjus of gold from the temple of Mummudisola Vinnagaralvar of that village and exempted certain lands belonging to it from payment of taxes (ARE 31 of 1936-37)*.

On the basis of these epigraphs, we can conclude that the third wall of enclosure was in existence even in the first decade of the reign of Kulottunga I and the fourth wall of enclosure also should have come into existence in about the same period. We know in the case of the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram that Kulottunga I built the first and second walls of enclosure there though perhaps the work was completed by his son; we could hazard the conjecture that the third and fourth walls of enclosure here were also constructed in the (early years of the) reign of Kulottunga I. We incidentally come to know of the existence of a Vishnu temple (Mummudisola vinnagar) at a village named after the ill-fated crown prince Raja Mahendra, the son of Rajendradeva II, who predeceased the father; this temple must have been erected in the days of

* We also learn from this record that in the second year of the king (Kulottunga I), there was a clash between the right and left hand communities, in which the village was burnt down, the sacred places destroyed and the images of deities and the treasures in the temple looted. So, the village had to be rehabilitated, the temple renovated and the deities reconsecrated, and new walls had to be built for the prakara; the sabha took a loan of 50 kalanju of gold (which was half a carat less in fineness than the Rajendra solan madai) from the temple; the interest on this for a year came to 25 kalanju, and out of the capital-cum-interest of 75 kalanju, 5 kalanju was spent on the renovation of the temple in the 3rd year and the balance of 70 kalanju was utilised for purchasing and making tax-free some specified lands for the up-keep of the temple.

Rajaraja I who, in the earlier years of his reign, was known as Mummudi Chola. From an inscription found in the village of Nellittoppu in Papanasam taluk, we gather that this village was close to it (ARE 539 of 1921).

Though there is no inscriptional evidence from Srirangam itself to confirm the fact, we know from the Srirangam Koyilolugu that the fifth wall of enclosure was the contribution of Vikrama Chola, who, like the father, embarked upon massive expansions of the temples of the earlier period by adding more prakaras and subsidiary shrines in them. Strangely, we have epigraphical confirmation of this from an entirely unexpected place. There is an 18th year inscription of Tribhuvanachakravartin Kulottunga Choladeva II found engraved on the western slope of the rock known as Panchanamparai in Sandaipettai, a suburb of Tirukoyilur (the headquarters of a taluk of the same name in the South Arcot district), which states that the adjoining tank and its sluice were constructed for the irrigation of the tiruvidayattam lands of Tiruvidaikali Emperuman of Tirukkovalur, by Ulagamunda Perumal alias Akalankan Brahmamarayan, who constructed the Periya tirumaligai at Tiruvarangam (Srirangam) Periyakoyil (ARE 225 of 1936–37). Reading Koyilolugu and this inscription together, we can conclude that the fifth wall of enclosure and the four gopurams thereon (and some other structures as well) came into existence during Vikrama Chola's days. Akalankan Brahmamarayan might have been the officer in charge of the construction of the wall of enclosure. A record of Vikrama Chola's days found in this temple (ARE 33 of 1936–37 beginning with pu malai midaindu) provides for feeding ten Apurvi Sri Vaishnavas in the temple on Amavasya days and ten Malayana (Malayala) Sri Vaishnava Brahmanas on the festival days in the Panguni month by a certain Tirunadudaiyan. This charity was placed under the protection of Manrumandalattu-abhimanya-bhushanar (cf. padinen-vishayattu-Sri-Vaishnavar)—perhaps a high level body drawn from the Pandi, Chola and Tondai mandalams.

Of Rajakesarivarman alias Tribhuvanachakravartin Kulottunga II's days, there are only two records, relating to the 7th and 11th years (ARE 56 and 55 of 1936–37). The former is an order for and on behalf of the deity, leasing the temple lands to the Kovanavars for growing coconut and areca palms; the latter is an endowment of land after purchase for a flower-garden to the temple by three private individuals (introduction: pu mannu padumam).

The only record assignable to the days of Rajaraja II is of his 11th year (pu maruviya tirumadam). It mentions a gift of a gold lamp-stand set with one ruby and an endowment of money for maintaining the lamp and for the supply of camphor by Kodai Ravivarman of Ven nadu in Malai nadu (ARE 68 of 1936-37).

There are two records of the days of Rajadhiraja II (with the introduction Kadal sulnda), both of his 9th year; one refers to an endowment in money for a lamp, by Perumal alias Rajaraja Uttama Setti of Kurattippattinam in Kaivara nadu, a sub-division of Poysala nadu (ARE 63 of 1936-37). The other is about an endowment of 1,000 kasu by Tirukkuraivalatta Akalanka Nadalvan of Tiruttavatturai (Lalgudi) for special festivals in the temple (ARE 73 of 1936-37). Incidentally, it was this Chief who led an expedition against Kollimalai on behalf of the king.

The earliest of Kulottunga III's inscriptions is one of the 3rd year commencing with the introduction 'Puyal vaiyttu' which seems to record an endowment for the sacred bath and offerings to the deity on special festival days in the months of Aippasi and Panguni (ARE 75 of 1936-37). In a 6th year record where he is called Parakesarivarman Virarajendradeva, commencing with the same introduction 'Puyal vaiyttu', a gift is registered of the village of Tiruvayppadinallur, made tax-free, for special worship and offerings to the god on the day of the Daivattarayan festival, by the gopalas (shepherds) who had proprietary rights over Valluvapadi nadu in Karikalakanna valanadu (ARE 61 of 1936-37). By this deed, they agreed to pay the tax on 250 velis of tiruvidayattam lands for worship and offerings to god Alagiya manavala Perumal and the goddess; the document is signed by ninety-eight representatives (urkkuchchamainda) from sixty-seven villages who should have constituted the Assembly of Valluvappadi nadu (which comprised a portion of the present Musiri taluk in Tiruchy district). A 7th year record of this ruler registers an endowment of 2,000

kasu by a lady and her daughter for the merit of the husband of the former. The beneficiary is Alagiya manavala Perumal (ARE 76 of 1936-37). A record of the 19th year is interesting; beginning with the common introduction 'who was pleased to take Madurai and the crowned head of the Pandya', it records a gift of 12 Bhujabala-madai (coins) for a lamp in the temple by Nunkama Mahadevi, wife of Madhurantaka Pottappichcholan alias Siddharaisan—the Telugu-Choda Chief Nallasiddharasa, who was a subordinate of Kulottunga III (ARE 67 of 1936-37). A 34th year inscription registers an order of Gangeyarayar, fixing the proportions of the produce from several classes of temple lands between the temple and its tenants (ARE 32 of 1936-37); and a 35th year record beginning with the introduction of 'puyal vaiyttu' records that certain lands were purchased and given as tirunamat-tukkani for worship and offerings to the god Alagiya manavala Perumal by Ambalavan Koyilalvar, a lady who was under the support (mudugan) of Ambalavan Periya Peruman alias Jagadekavira Acharya of Rajarajapuram (ARE 1 of 1936-37). One of the last records of this period is dated in the 37th year and refers to a gift of land by a brahmana lady of Rajakesari chaturvedimangalam, a brahmadeya in Nallur nadu, a subdivision of Nittavinoda valanadu, as tiruvidaiyattam to god Alagiya manavala Perumal (ARE 34 of 1936-37). An undated record of Kulottunga III's period mentions that the worship of the god, who was the tutelary deity of the king, and the repairs to the prakara wall called Magadesan alias Adaiyavalaindan tirumaligai were left in the charge of Tayilum-nallan alias Kulottungasola Vanakkovaraiyar (ARE 89 of 1936-37). We saw under Urrattur in Middle Chola Temples that, according to an inscription found on a gopuram of the Siddharatnesvarar temple, the village of Venmanippadi in Kilvalluvappadi nadu was converted into a mercantile town called Tayilunallanpuram in honour of Kulottungasola Vanakkovaraiyar, who must be the same as the Chief referred to here and who bore the alternate name of Tayilum Nallan. This was done by the nagaram and nadu of Urrattur nadu jointly (ARE 521 of 1912).

In the 21st year of Rajaraja III, an endowment of 1,000 kasu was made for burning a lamp in the temple and for supplying flower-garlands to the deity, the donatrix being Deviyar Somaladeviyar, who, it seems reasonable to guess, must be one of the queens of Rajaraja III mentioned in a record from Jambukesvaram (ARE 22 of 1931).

Between the 10th and the 24th regnal years of Rajaraja III, we find the Hoysalas spreading themselves out all over the Chola country and the inscriptions of their rulers and their generals and local officers are found at Kanchipuram, Tiruvadatturai (Vriddhachalam taluk in South Arcot district), Tirumalavadi, Srirangam and Tirugokarnam (in Pudukkottai district).

(V) UNDER THE HOYSALAS

The contribution of the Hoysalas to the development of the temples of Ranganathar and Jambukesvarar (in Tiru Anaikka, close to Srirangam) is noteworthy indeed. The earliest Hoysala record seems to be one that is dated not in regnal years but in Saka 1154 (A.D. 1232), in which a gift of land is made for offerings to god Ranganathar during the early morning service by one Bharadvaja-kulatilakan Srirama Bhattan of the temple of Tirukkulaludina Pillai (He who played the sacred flute: Krishna or Venugopala) consecrated by Umadevi, the queen of Vira Vallaladeva at Dorasamudram. The inscription, which is in Grantha and Tamil, mentions in a Sanskrit verse at the beginning that this Srirama Bhattan was the son of a great teacher of Kuruhapura, an ardent Vaishnava and one well-versed in mantric lore. He was a contemporary of Narahari-bhupala (i.e., Narasimha), who bore the title of Cholendra-pratishtha guru, in recognition of his services to the Chola ruler in restoring him to power and the throne in A.D. 1232.

Singularly conspicuous by their absence at Srirangam are inscriptions of Vira Somesvara, in contrast to their profusion in the adjoining Jambukesavarar temple, explained by the plaint of Jatavarman Sundara Pandya I that Somesvara had 'reduced to a pitiable state the lotus-pond of Srirangam' (Ep. Ind., III, p. 14).

In the 3rd year of Pratapachakravartin Vira Ramanatha deva (A.D. 1255-95), a salai was founded on the west side of the gopuram in the fourth prakara, enshrining the god Eduttakai-alagiya Nayinar in the Ranganathar temple, and an endowment of land was made for its upkeep by Changadeva Singanna Dandanayaka, a pradhani of the king. The salai was entrusted to the care of Garudavahana Pandita, who is designated the rakshaka of the donor (ARE 80 of 1936-37).

This third-year record is engraved on a slab of stone set up in front of the Dhanvantri shrine in the fourth prakara of the temple, and makes interesting reading. Changadeva makes this gift to Garudavahana Bhatta (who was his Royal Physician) for maintaining the salai (hospital) in the tirunadaimaligai to the west of the north gopuram in the fourth prakara of the temple. The gifted land was in Mummudisola chaturvedimangalam in Vila nadu, a subdivision of Pandikulasani valanadu. Evidently this hospital was in existence even earlier and the Bhatta was appointed as Royal Physician afterwards; the hospital seems to have been of considerable importance, for, a reference to it is made almost two hundred and forty years later, in another inscription dated in Saka 1415 (= A.D. 1493), found engraved on another slab nearby, according to which a descendant of Garudavahana Bhatta, by name Srinivasa Bhatta (also bearing the surname of Garudavahana), repaired the hospital (arogya-salai) which had suffered damage during the vanam (Muhammadan raid) and installed an image of Dhanvantri Emperumal in it. Fortunately for us, this rare image of Dhanvantri is still intact in a shrine in the fourth prakara. We have another image of Dhanvantri in the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram (gopura panel) (Ep. Rep., 1935-36, p. 94; see also B. Natarajan's The City of the Cosmic Dance). The hereditary physicians were scholars too and the senior Garudavahana, the contemporary of Vira Ramanatha, is said to have composed a prabandham called Rangaghoshanai, which is no longer available, while his descendant has been identified with the author of the Divya-suri-charitam, a kavya in Sanskrit on the lives of the Vaishnava Alvars and Acharyas.

Sarvabhauma Vira Ramanatha's 7th year record mentions a gift of land for a flower-garden by a member of the Mint establishment community (Kambattattu Anikkarar). In the 8th year of this ruler, a gift of land at Tirukkuraiparru is made for a flower-garden to a certain Vaikunthadasar who had to supply flowers and garlands to the temple, for the merit of queen Kamaladevi, the daughter of Ariyappillai Dandanayaka, a pradhani of the king, and her two daughters (ARE 62 of 1936-37). Adjoining the above plot was another piece of land which was purchased and gifted to the same donee by Somaladeviyar, another daughter of the same pradhani, for the merit of her daughter Sirutangi. A similar gift is made again by queen Kamaladevi for her own merit (vide two undated inscriptions, ARE 64 and 65 of 1936-37).

Similarly, in the 8th year, one Sahala Bhatta, son of Ahala Bhatta of Sakala gotra (belonging to the community of Paradesi Savasi—merchants from Kashmiradesa), makes a gift of gold for offerings during one service in the temple and for supplying garlands to the god, for the merit of the donor and his son.

In the fifth prakara of the temple there is a beautiful ornate shrine dedicated to Venugopala Krishna, whose sculptures and general texture bear the imprint of the Hoysala style. Though there is no inscriptional confirmation, this shrine should be attributed to the period from A.D. 1230 to 1275 and could be treated as representative of Hoysala art in Chola mainland.

(VI) IN THE POST-CHOLA PERIOD

There is a later structure called the Seshagirirayan-mandapa on the east side of the fifth prakara, which is a noteworthy Vijayanagara contribution, with its sculptural wealth and macro-carving.

The unfinished gopuram in the outermost prakara is a piece of ornate construction.

There is a wealth of metals, of various deities, Alvars and Acharyas, many of which date back to the 12th and 13th centuries. There is a group of ten icons, taken out in procession on important occasions, called the Dasamurtis. Annamurti is another special image (two-armed, with a bowl of curd-rice in one hand and a kalasa of payasa in the other).

Srirangam continued to attract the piety and attention of the successor-dynasties as well, namely the Pandyas, the Vijayanagara rulers and later the Nayaks, whose contribution to the wealth, maintenance and expansion of this grand temple continued well into the late 18th century. It is still a living institution of great celebrity.

(VII) ALLEGED PERSECUTION OF RAMANUJA BY KULOTTUNGA I

We have discussed such allegations in a previous volume, Middle Chola Temples, pp. 355–357, and refuted the identification of Krimikanthan with Kulottunga I and the belief popular among Vaishnavites that Ramanuja fled to Melkote in the Karnataka country as a result of his being persecuted by the Chola king, living in exile there from A.D. 1098 to 1122. It is a fact that Ramanuja was away in Karnataka over this extended period, during which he even succeeded in converting the Hoysala king Bittideva from Jainism to Vaishnavism; the king was re-christened Vishnuvardhana, and his help and zeal enabled Vaishnavism to strike deep roots in that land. But it has also to be observed that Kulottunga I had Vaishnavite sympathies as well and that he, the members of his family and his subjects all made various gifts to Vishnu temples (see Note 3, pp. 356–357 of my Middle Chola Temples). We have seen how, according to an inscription at Srirangam itself of his 11th year, a Vishnu temple was helped out of its financial problems by the local Assembly (ARE 31 of 1936–37). Two inscriptions at Srirangam, of his 15th and 18th years, register gifts respectively for the singing of the Tirup palli eluchchi and the recitation of the Tiruvoyimoli, and for the singing of the second decad of Kulasekhara Alvar's hymns (ARE 61 and 62 of 1892). (Ramanuja's flight to Karnataka, incidentally, occurred in the 28th year of the reign of Kulottunga I.) Coming to his successors, even during the rule of the most bigoted Chola ruler Anapaya (Kulottunga II), there is mention in an inscription (dated in his 18th regnal year) from Tirukkoyilur that a Chola chieftain constructed the periya tirumaligai (the fifth prakara) of the Srirangam temple (ARE 225 of 1936-37). In this connection we may briefly consider the supposed destruction of the Govindaraja shrine in the campus of the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram, and the submersion of the idol of the 'Little God' into the sea, 'the original abode of Vishnu', as described in the Ula on Kulottunga II by the court poet Ottakkuttan. It seems undeniable that from the time of the foundation of the Nataraja cult at Chidambaram, the shrine of Govindaraja in the Terri-ambalam ('Platform shrine') stood opposite to the Chirrambalam (of Nataraja). This Vishnu shrine was closed and worship remained suspended from the days of Kulottunga II to the days of the Vijayanagara emperor Achyutappa Raya (16th century A.D.). We are not sure if the Govindaraja idol was actually thrown into the sea. Could it not be a poetic flight of fancy of a loyal and devoted poet to his bigoted Saivite royal patron? Such acts of vandalism are unknown to Hindu tradition in ancient South India. Even foreign Hindu conquerors respected the temples in the conquered land, and in fact, even made gifts and endowments of their own to the temples in the conquered territory as evidenced by the gifts of Chalukya Vikramaditya II to the Kailasanatha temple at Kanchipuram. Govindaraja worship should have been in a state of suspended animation for about four centuries, till its revival under the patronage of Achyuta, with his strong Vaishnavite leanings.

TIRUKKANNAPURAM7 RAMANANDISVARAM (RAMANATHISVARAM)
TEMPLE*SOURIRAJA PERUMAL TEMPLE

Tirukkannapuram, in the Nannilam taluk of the Tanjavur district, is on the south bank of the Mudikondan river and is reached from Nannilam railway station by proceeding 6 km. eastwards to Tiruppugalur and then 1.6 km. southwards, crossing the above river. In our Middle Chola Temples, we have dealt with the Uttarapatisvarar temple at Tiruchchengattangudi, a village about 1.5 km. east of Tirukkannapuram, where inscriptional references are found to the Ramanandisvaram temple at the latter place, as well as with the latter temple itself briefly.

RAMANANDISVARAM TEMPLE*

On the north wall of the mandapa in front of the Ganapatisvarar shrine in the Uttarapatisvarar temple mentioned above, there is an inscription of Kulottunga III, dated in his 11th year, 175th day, and mentioning that a document connected with the temple of 'Tiruviramanandisvaram Udaiyar at Tirukkannapuram', described as a brahmadeya village in Marugal nadu in Geyamanikka valanadu, was engraved on the walls of the former temple (ARE 65 of 1913). This inscription refers to the 5th and 10th years of 'Periyadevar Kulottunga Chola deva', in whose time the temple is stated to have come into existence. The Government Epigraphist comments that the phrase 'Periyadevar' should refer either to Kulottunga I or to Kulottunga II and observes that the 'greater possibility' is that the reference is to the former (ARE of 1923, p. 111). Now, there is an inscription in the Ramanandisvaram temple, of the 10th year of Kulottunga II ('Tribhuvana chakravartin Konerinmaikondan Kulottunga Chola deva'), on the east wall of the mandapa in front of the central shrine, recording a gift of land made for worship and offerings to the image of Udaiyar Ramanandisvaram Udaiyar, stated to have been reconsecrated in place: the inscription adds that the land, measuring 50 velis, was named after the donor, the king, as Sivapadasekhara mangalam (ARE 553 of 1922). Taking these two inscriptions together, we may agree with the Government Epigraphist that 'Periyadevar' refers to Kulottunga I and conclude that the temple suffered from neglect for some time and that the principal deity had to be reconsecrated in its original place in the days of Kulottunga II.

*For a discussion of the correct name of this temple, see Middle Chola Temples, pp. 96-102.

The temple appears to have fallen on evil days again, as revealed by an inscription on the west and south walls of the mandapa, relating to the 16th regnal year of Rajaraja III (ARE 537 of 1922 and p. 107 of this ARE). We learn that the Mahesvaras and Tanattar (Sthanikas) of the temple of 'Udaiyar Iramanandichchuram udaiya Nayanar, set up as a Pauraniya devar (?) at 'Tirukkannapuram' approached the temple authorities of Perumparrappuliyur (Chidambaram) and represented to them that, as the fifty velis of land granted as devadana to the temple had become reduced in extent, and other sources of income also diminished, the customary donations from the Mahesvaras of Chidambaram and others should be continued without any reduction, especially since there was no other means of income for the temple to fall back upon. On hearing this representation, the Assembly of Mahesvaras of Chidambaram resolved that in the districts within the influence of the temple as well as in surrounding and far-off lands, all servants of Siva temples should contribute 20 kasus per annum for the purpose, as before (Sola mandalam, Rajaraja Pandimandalam, Virasola mandalam, Naduvil nadu and Jayangonda sola mandalam are names mentioned in this context). Further, those 'marked with the sacred trident' should also pay 20 kasus per annum, and the Mahesvaras and the brahmanas should pay 10 kasus. The collections made in coin or in kind (paddy) were to be paid into the temple treasury to be converted into a capital fund meant for expenses of worship, offerings and various services. The Sthanikas and Vira Mahesvaras who acted as collecting agents were to receive one kalam of rice from temples owning more than ten velis of devadana land and one tuni and one padakku from the rest. The devakanmis and the accountants were to co-operate with the Mahesvaras in making these collections. An interesting instance of co-operative endeavour in helping out a temple in distress!

A Pandyan record of the 32nd year of a Srivallabha deva (ARE 535 of 1922) states that the central shrine of "Tiruviramesvaram Udaiyar" (note the re-emergence of the original name) was the gift of one Deyvanayakan. The central shrine, originally of the days of Kulottunga I, was thus renovated once in the days of Kulottunga II and apparently again a second time in the Pandyan days.

Thus this temple is a foundation of the days of Kulottunga I (prior to his fifth year); the mandapa was constructed of stone in the days of Kulottunga II.

SOURIRAJA PERUMAL (TIRUKKANNAPURATTU ALVAR) TEMPLE

On the first prakara walls of this temple, there are a number of inscriptions of Kulottunga I and Vikrama Chola as well as of their successors. The earliest one (ARE 521 of 1922) is dated in the 34th year of Kulottunga I. Beginning with the introduction 'pugal sulnda', it registers a gift of a lamp, silver utensils and land for a twilight lamp by one Vira Keralan Adhirajarajadevar of Tiruppattur in Kongu nadu. Two years later, the same Chief and a Minister of Kulottunga I called Bharadvajan Naranarayanan alias Vira Santosha Brahmachakravarti made a gift of money and land for burning lamps thrice daily in the temple (ARE 519 of 1922). Mention is made of a liquid measure called the Kulottunga solan nali. This Chief was also a Minister of Kulottunga I and the inscription mentions that, while making the gift to the temple, he placed it under the protection of 'the Srivaishnavas of the eighteen nadus'.*

*A reference to this body is also made in a record (ARE 168 of 1923) in the Sundara varada Perumal temple at Uttaramerur, where they are designated as the guardians of

In the 46th year of Kulottunga I, a gift is made of land at Kakkaimangalam which had been lying fallow since the 20th regnal year, at the instance of one Rajaraja Brahmadhiraja Govinda Pillai, for worship and offerings to the Lord of Tirukkannapuram in Geyamanikka valanadu at the time of the four ayanas (solstices and equinoxes) of the year and of certain festivals (ARE 501 of 1922). We learn from this record that the said Govinda Pillai was a principal officer in the kingdom like Arumbakkilan Ponnambalakkuttan alias Kalingarayan of Manavil.

There are two records of the tenth year of Vikrama Chola. According to one, a certain Kakku nayakan of Velur made a gift of tax-free land at Palli, a brahmadeya in Tiruvarur kurrām, for growing red lotuses for use in the temple of Tirukkanna purattu Alvar (ARE 507 of 1922). According to the other, twenty families of weavers—four from each of five specified villages—migrated to this place for service in the temple in return for some privileges granted to them.

In the 11th year of the same king, a brahmana of Tirumarugal made a gift of 20 kalanjus of gold of '9½ degrees of fineness' (mali) for the daily maintenance of a twilight lamp supplying ghee and camphor both morning and evening; he also presented for the purpose a bronze lamp-stand made in his own likeness. The gift was accepted on behalf of the temple by the Sri Vaishnavas of the village and those well-versed in sacred lore (kalai ilangu moliyalar) grants made to the temple. Their permission is sought by the temple authorities for receiving gifts and for entering into transactions of any kind with the donors regarding their management. This body would appear to have been a high-powered one, with jurisdiction over a number of Vaishnava temples spread over a delimited area of the empire.

This record is of interest, throwing some light on the community of weavers referred to in it as Ayogavas. Quoting a Sanskrit verse, it defines Utkrisha Ayogavas or Pattanavar as weavers supplying cloth to gods, kings and people and adds that an Ayogava was of mixed caste, born to a Sudra male and a Vaisya female. It states that in the presence of the mahasabha comprising 350 members ('elaimbadinmar'), the merchants of five towns gave an undertaking to depute four weaver-families each to settle down permanently at Tirukkannapuram and serve the Vishnu temple in consideration for being exempted from all taxes. They were to supply cloth for the sacred banner of the temple and for other purposes during the Chittirai and Aippasi festivals each year and also to feed srivaishnavas in a matha called Ayogana (va?) salai.

assembled in the Tiruniravi (mandapa) of the temple (ARE 509 of 1922). Another record of the same year, beginning with the introduction 'pumalai midaindu', mentions a sale of land by the trustees of the temple to a private citizen on condition that he should bring it under cultivation and utilize the produce for providing certain offerings in the temple after paying the land dues (ARE 502 of 1922). Also during Vikrama Chola's days, a shrine for the Vaishnavite saint, Tirumangai Alvar, was set up in the west street of the town by one Narayana Padar, and a gift of land made as archana bhogam (ARE 510 of 1922).

There are a number of records relating to the last three kings of the Chola dynasty, of which one, of the days of Rajaraja III, is interesting. Of his 14th year (A.D. 1230), it mentions that land was leased to certain merchants in a street called Savirip Perumal perun teruvu, for the building of shops and houses, with the stipulation that they should pay certain taxes on their goods to the temple.*

The temple continued to be prosperous even in the post-Chola period.

While a foundation in stone of the days of Kulottunga I, like the Siva temple in the same place, this temple apparently did not, unlike the latter, suffer from neglect periodically.

TIRUVOTTUR

8 VEDANATHESVARAR (VEDAPURISVARAR) TEMPLE

Tiruvottur is a village in Cheyyar taluk of North Arcot district, lying about 30 km. southwest of Kanchipuram. Both the Palar and the Cheyyar rivers are close by, and the latter flows west of

* This inscription (ARE 503 of 1922) adds that the relevant order was issued at the time of the singing of the Satagopa (Nammalvar) hymns on the fifth day of the 'marriage festival', with the deity ceremonially seated on the asana called Nambi kaliyan in the Niravi mandapa under a pearl-canopy called Ravana-antakan. The leasing merchants were to engage themselves in the trades of gold and bell-metal fabrication, and they were to be allowed to fix themselves the rate of tax to the temple.

the Vedanathesvarar temple here. It was a Jaina centre in the seventh century A.D. Sambandar is said to have wrought a miracle here by converting male palmyra trees into the female variety so as to yield fruit and thereby overawed and subdued the Jainas. Sambandar's hymn on this temple is an expression of this triumph. In the last stanza of the hymn, the following line is significant: Kurumbai-aanpanai-yin-kuli-Ottur. 'Ottu' means the Vedas; and local legend has it that the Lord of this temple expounded the Vedas and their significance to the Devas and the sages. Hence the name of Ottur.

This temple might have been an earlier foundation, but the existing inscriptions relate to the Middle and Later Chola periods. The earliest inscription here, found on the north wall of the first prakara, is one of the fourth year of Rajadhiraja I. It records the gift of a lamp (ARE 76 of 1900). An inscription of the second year of Vira Rajendradeva records the gift of ninety cows for maintaining three lamps. While on a hunting expedition, a person missed his aim and shot a man. So the local Assembly decided, in the sixth year of Kulottunga I, that the guilty man should make a gift of sixteen cows for a lamp in the temple in expiation of the sin (ARE 77 of 1900). An inscription, of the eleventh year of Kulottunga I, records a gift of land for a lamp. A great flood destroyed both the village and the crops and the villagers were unable to pay the taxes; so they sold two thousand kulis of wet land for twentyfive kasus to one Adittan Uyyavandan. This amount was given to the pujari of the temple. This is recorded in an inscription of the sixth year of Vikrama Chola (ARE 87 of 1900). Incidentally the name of the measuring rod used in the land survey (perhaps of the sixteenth year of Kulottunga I) is mentioned (for similar references, vide ARE 125 of 1890 at Sirkali and ARE 84 of 1897 at Tirunagesvaram). An inscription of the eighth year of Vikrama Chola (ARE 85 of 1900) records the sale of 4,250 kulis of dry land by the same villagers for twenty kasus. The purchaser made it tax-free and gave it away to those who had to look after the prakaras of the Tiruvottur temple.

A record of the eighth year of Tribhuvanachakravartin Rajadhiraja II concerns a gift of 92 cows for a lamp (ARE 81 of 1900). There are two inscriptions of the days of Tribhuvana-chakravartin Tribhuvana Vira deva, i.e., Kulottunga III, of the 33rd and 39th years. The first records a gift of land by Sengeni Ammaiappan Alagiyasolan alias Edirilisola Sambuvarayan (ARE 94 of 1900). The other, of the 39th year, records a gift of two gold ornaments.

The Chief who figures as the donor in the 33rd year inscription of Tribhuvana Vira deva makes a gift of the village in the sixteenth year of Rajaraja III (ARE 89 of 1900). In the latter's twentieth year, a gift of land for a lamp is recorded (ARE 90 of 1900) and another for a flower-garden (ARE 91 of 1900). In his twentyfirst year, there is a gift of a lamp (ARE 84 of 1900).

A record of the second year of Rajendra III relates to a gift of ninety sheep for a lamp.

CHIDAMBARESVARAR SHRINE

In this temple, there is another shrine called that of Chidambaresvarar. There are five inscriptions on its walls. Two of them belong to the fourteenth year of an unspecified Parakesari-varman who may be Parantaka I (ARE 102 and 104 of 1900). Another is one of the 27th year of Kannaradeva, i.e., the Rashtrakuta king Krishna III (ARE 101 of 1900). There is also an inscription of the 21st year of Rajaraja I (ARE 103 of 1900).

There is, however, a foundation inscription (ARE 103 of 1900) without the mention of the name or the regnal year of the ruler. It simply records that the Sankaranarana Isvaragriham was built by Aditta Kuttayar for the merit of his elder brother Sankaranaranar. A provision for a flower-garden was made by the sabha of Tiruvottur. This shrine has Early Chola inscriptions—earlier than those of the main shrine of Vedapurisvarar. What is now called the Chidambaresvarar shrine is the Sankaranarana Isvaragriham of the inscription. It should be an Early Chola foundation of the age of Parantaka I or Aditya I, assuming that the inscriptions are original.*

*I regret that I could not study the paleography of the inscriptions on the spot to ascertain if they are originals or copies.

NANDALURCHOKKANATHA PERUMAL
(SOUMYANATHASVAMIN) TEMPLE

Nandalur(u) is in the Pullampet taluk of the Cuddapah district of Andhra Pradesh. It is about 2 km. from the Renigunta-Cuddapah section of the Southern Railway, and about 82 km. from Renigunta Station. It is located on the northern bank of the Cheyyaru (also called Bahuda nadi) which is a tributary of the Pennar. It is also on the Pullampet-Cuddapah road, about 20 km. north-west of Pullampet. The ancient town of Tangattur, also on the Cheyyaru, is about 12 km. north-east of Nandalur. It is about 100 km. west of Nellore, one of the later headquarters of the Telugu Chodas.

This region passed under Chola rule during the Middle Chola period; in the reign of Rajaraja I; and his son Rajendra I should have been largely responsible for the conquest of this region during the course of his expeditions to contain the Western Chalukyan expansion and to bring the Eastern Chalukyas under Chola supremacy.

It is stated that one Jata Choda Bhima defeated the kings of Anga, Kalinga, Vaidumba and Dravida, and in the heyday of his glory exercised authority over the entire coastal region from Mahendragiri to Kanchi. He invaded Tondaimandalam in A.D. 1001. Rajaraja I, who had given his daughter in marriage to Vimaladitya of Vengi, finally defeated Jata Choda Bhima in A.D. 1002-3 and established Saktivarman I, Vimaladitya's elder brother, on the Vengi throne. It is likely that some friendly subordinate Telugu Choda Chiefs were set up in the Cuddapah region. Later on, Rajendra I made war with the Western Chalukya Satyasraya and this region should have remained under Chola rule. The existence of Rajendra I's inscriptions in this area (ARE 145, 188, 226 and 486 of 1907) confirms Chola control over this region. Further, in Later Chola inscriptions, this division is designated as Adhirajendra mandalam. Some of these inscriptions are in Grantha and Tamil scripts. All these facts go to establish Chola overlordship in this region.

By the time of the Later Cholas, we find the area falling within the present-day districts of Nellore, Chittoor, Cuddapah (all in the Andhra Pradesh State) and portions of North Arcot and Chingleput districts (of Tamil Nadu) being ruled by a family of feudatories of the Cholas known as the Telugu Chodas. To begin with, the region around Nandalur was the home of a branch of local Telugu Chodas called the Pottappi Cholas. They claimed descent from Karikala Chola and were generally loyal to the Cholas even as late as the end of Kulottunga III's reign. The founder of the line was one Madhurantaka Pottappi Chola Siddharasa, a contemporary of Kulottunga I. Participation in some operations against Madurai, aiding the Cholas, evidently gave this Chief the title of Madhurantaka; and Pottappi was the capital that this Telugu Choda feudatory Chief founded, at a place not far from Nandalur, in the crook of the Cheyyaru before it joins the Pennar. Pottappi has been identified with the modern village of Potapi near Tangattur, also in the Pullampet taluk of Cuddapah district. These local Chiefs became closely connected with the Later Cholas as were the Muttaraiyars of Niyamam, the Paluvettaraiyars of Paluvur and the Irukkuvels of Kodumbalur and the many Nadu-nadu Chiefs during the Early and the Middle Chola periods.

In the closing years of Kulottunga I, another Pottappi Chief called Pottappi Kama Choda Maharaja is heard of (Tripuranthakam, ARE 262, 263 of 1905). By the time of Vikrama Chola's accession to the Chola throne, we hear of Mahamandalesvara Bettarasa ruling in Pottappi nadu (A.D. 1121; ARE 583 of 1907). He was succeeded by Erasiddhi, who had three sons, Nalla Siddha alias Manma Siddha, Beta and Tammusiddha. The first and the third would appear to have crowned themselves at Nellore in or around Saka 1127 (= A.D. 1205). Even from an earlier date, A.D. 1187, Nallasiddharasa is seen ruling from Nellore, but acknowledging the overlordship of Kulottunga III. We hear of his queen Nungama in the context of the generous gifts she makes to the temples at Tiruppalaivanam, Nandalur and Kalahasti. Even as late as A.D. 1213, Nallasiddha acknowledges the overlordship of Kulottunga III. These Chiefs were to play a more independent role in later years.

Nandalur, a brahmapuri, is called in inscriptions by various names such as Nirantanur, Nelandaluru and Nirantarapura. In Chola records, it was known as Kulottungasola chaturvedimangalam, the agra-brahmadeya of Nirandanur in Merpakkai nadu in Adhirajendra mandalam. Nandalur is called Nelandaluru alias Nirantarapura is an inscription of the 17th century (ARE 589 of 1907, Saka 1541 = A.D. 1619). Later Chola inscriptions mention that it was located in Merpakkai nadu, part of Adhirajendra mandalam. Pakkai nadu embraced the region of the modern Chittoor (Madanapalli) and Nellore districts.

The ancient temple of this place is now known as Chokkathatha Perumal temple and is on the left bank of the Bahuda river, on a plot of about twenty acres. The deity is referred to as Soumyanatha (Sanskrit form) in the old records of the temple. The earliest of the Chola inscriptions on the walls of the Soumyanatha temple, inscribed on the second, third and fourth tiers of the south base of the mandapa in front of the central shrine, is one in Grantha and Tamil belonging to the 8th regnal year of Vira-Rajakesarivarman alias Chakravartin Sri Kulottungasola deva. The present temple of Soumyanathasvamin is called in the inscription that of Sri Kulottunga-sola-vinnagara alvar in Kulottungasola chaturvedimangalam, the agra-brahmadeya of Nirandanur in Merpakkai nadu, a subdivision of Adhirajendra mandalam. It adds that Madhuran-taka Pottappi Chola Siddharasa got the boundaries of the temple engraved on stone.

The prefix 'Vira' is peculiar and is a feature in vogue in this area. The astronomical details given in the inscription are irregular and correspond to none of the three Kulottungas. Still, I am disposed to assign it to Kulottunga I (ARE 572 of 1907; V. Rangachari, Topographical List I—No. 786, p. 643). There is another inscription on the eastern inner gopuram, dated in the 27th regnal year of Kulottunga I, wherein also the village is called Nirandalur alias Sri Kulottungasola chaturvedimangalam, situated in Merpakkai nadu, in Adhirajendra mandalam (ARE 600 of 1907). Thus it is clear that the temple, together with the inner eastern gopuram, was a foundation of the age of Kulottunga I.

There are two inscriptions of the days of Vikrama Chola, which record gifts for the success of the king's arms (ARE 583 and 579 of 1907). Perhaps this indicates trouble from the Western Chalukyas or from the Kalinga kings, in confronting which the local Chola feudatories should have played a prominent part. An inscription of an unspecified Rajadhiraja (ARE 571 of 1907), which is incomplete, records a gift of land; this has to be assigned to Rajadhiraja II. There are six inscriptions of the days of Kulottunga III, of which one dated in the 26th year (ARE 576 of 1907) refers to the order of exemption from certain taxes in respect of Kulottungasola chaturvedimangalam by Nallan Siddharajan, son of Madhurantaka Pottappich-chola alias Irama Irama Siddharasan (ARE 576 of 1907). The next, which belongs to his 31st year, provides for a gift of land for two lamps to the deity of this temple called Kulottungasola vinnagara emperuman (ARE 581 of 1907). Another inscription of the same year records a gift of a lamp by Madhurantaka Pottappi-chola Tirukkalatti-deva for the merit of his father. There is an inscription of the 36th regnal year of Kulottunga III (ARE 602 of 1907). Herein provision is made for offerings to Vedanayaka Perumal. Another Chola inscription is one dated in the 23rd regnal year of an unspecified Rajarajadeva, recording a gift by a native of Malai nadu (ARE 596 of 1907). This seems assignable to Rajaraja III who came to the throne in A.D. 1216. The last Chola inscription seems to be that of the 13th regnal year of Vira Rajendradeva, who may be Rajendra III, the last of the Chola kings (A.D. 1246-79). It refers to the restoration of the ownership rights in respect of lands in a village to the brahmanas who had been dislodged by certain vellalas. This was done by the Telugu Choda Chief Manmasiddhi (the son of Tikka I) and the patron of the poet Tikkana Somayaji "to secure the religious merit for his father called here Tirukkalatti deva Maharaja".

As mentioned earlier, the genealogy and chronology of the Telugu-Chodas is not yet well established. One synchronism may be mentioned. One Mamma Siddha, the patron of the Telugu poet Tikkana Somayaji who translated the Mahabharata into Telugu, is said to have been ousted from his throne; and at the intervention of the poet with the Kakatiya king Ganapati, Mamma Siddha was restored to the throne. He was also the contemporary of the Chola king Rajaraja III and the Hoysala Vira Somesvara (mid-thirteenth century A.D.; vide also Kanchi Arulala Perumal temple inscription ARE 37 of 1893 and ARE (Report) for 1900, pp. 19-20).

The temple has a tritala vimana; upto the kapota of the second tala, it is made of stone; the rest (the superstructure) is of brick with stucco decorations. It has a square griva and sikhara.

The upapitham is high and is of the mancha type. Its mouldings consist of the upana, padma, kantha with kampas, urdhva-padma and pattika. Above the mouldings of the upapitham is the adhishthanam which has the following mouldings: upana, jagati, tripatta kumuda, kanthi with kampas, pattika and prati (the last three mouldings forming vedi). The pranala (or gargoyle) is in the form of a curved water-chute emanating from a makara's mouth, resting on the vritta kumuda.

The outer walls of the garbhagriha are divided into five bays corresponding to the kuta, sala and panchara of the hara above the prastara of the first or adi tala. The pilasters have bevelled cross-corbels with tenon-like projections in the centre. Those at the corners are rectangular in section; the northern devakoshta houses a sculpture of Vaikunthanatha. In the haras of the upper tala we have sculptures of a four-armed Varaha in the south, and a seated Vishnu in the north and west sides. The griva has Narasimha on the west and Vaikunthanatha on the north.

A standing four-armed figure of Vishnu is installed in the sanctum (mulasthanam). It has sankha and chakra in its upper hands, and the lower are in varada and abhaya poses.

There is a late 13th century inscription of the Pandya king Sundara Pandya which mentions that provision was made for the ceremonial bathing of the God and the Goddess in this temple (ARE 586 of 1907). But there is now neither an idol of the Goddess nor a separate Nachchiyar shrine.*

*A local correspondent of "The Hindu" (of Madras) reported on this temple on 13-12-1971 as follows:

"The ancient temple of Chokkanatha Perumal (otherwise called Soumyanathasvami)

EDAYAR(RUP)PAKKAM

MAHADEVAR (SIVA) TEMPLE

This village, in the Chingleput district, was known in ancient times as Purisai or Idaiyarrup-pakkam. The Saivite temple of Tiruppadak-kadudaiya Mahadevar here perhaps came into existence as a stone structure in the reign of Kulottunga I, its builder being a certain Chandrasekharan Ravi alias Cholendra Simha Achari. According to an inscription of the 12th year of Kulottunga I, found on the north side of the base of this temple, a piece of land was purchased for the maintenance of a lamp in this temple from the money which a brahmana lady had left in the hands of the shepherds of Edayarpakkam (ARE 254 of 1910). The reason was that these shepherds apparently could not buy enough sheep for the purpose out of that amount and refused to supply ghee. In this inscription, the temple is said to be in Idiyar-rupakkam alias Rajavidyadhara chaturvedimangalam. There are two other inscriptions of the same ruler, both dated in his 38th year (ARE 252 and 251 of 1910) and found on the same (north) side of the base of the temple, which relate respectively to (a) a gift of 95 sheep for a lamp to the temple of Tiruppadak-at Nandalur (Cuddapah district) built by Kulottunga I in the 11th century A.D. on a plot of 20 acres is in a dilapidated condition. It is on the left bank of the Bahuda river. Its existence and antiquity are hardly known to the outside world. There are as many as fifty-four inscriptions (most of them in old Tamil script) in the temple to tell its tale.

"When I recently visited this shrine and saw the huge structure and the spacious compound, sadness overtook me. It is in ruins. It has three gopurams of which one on the left side is completely gone, and the other two are also damaged by weather. The compound wall built of stone is damaged in many places.

"It is a pity that this ancient shrine is in obscurity and in utter neglect. There are Hindu temple protection committees in Tamil Nadu to look after ancient temples. But there is no such organisation in Andhra Pradesh. The Tirumalai Tirupati Devasathanams Board and the Visva Hindu Parishad will do well to bestow attention on this beautiful temple and take up the renovation in earnest."

I join the correspondent in this appeal but with a warning that renovation should be done by modern scientific methods without violence to its old features and damage to its sculptures and inscriptions.

kadudaiya Mahadevar at Purisai in Purisai nadu, a subdivision of Manavirkottam in Jayangondasola mandalam, and (b) a gift of two lamps to the temple. There is a 11th year inscription of Rajadhirajadeva (II), on the south side of the base, referring to a gift of cows in exchange for land. The village is called Purisai, a devadana village of Tiruppadakkadudaiyar; and Idaiyarruppakkam bears the alternate name of Rajavidyadhara chaturvedimangalam.

From this temple we find a fine example of the high sense of duty that the residents of a village showed towards discharging the responsibility of maintaining their local institutions, during this period (ARE 254 of 1910). The one veli of land purchased from the villagers by the brahmana lady and presented to the temple for the maintenance of a perpetual lamp was found unsuitable for irrigation on account of the high level at which it was situated. Besides, the land was in a distant corner of the village with the result that no one came forward to cultivate it. The lamp had consequently to be given up and the trustees of the temple would appear to have requested the villagers to take back into their own management the land which they had once sold to the brahmana lady and to supply instead the required number of cows, to maintain the lamp. This was done and the land was resumed by the villagers.

NANGUPATTI

MADATTUKKOYIL (TIRUP PERUMAN ANDA 11 NAYANAR KOYIL)

What is now called Madattukkoyil at Nangupatti, a village in the Kulattur taluk of the Pudukkottai district, was once called Tirup-peruman-anda Nayanar Koyil. On the wall of the north verandah of the first prakara of this temple, there is an inscription (ARE 341 of 1914) of the 13th year of an unspecified Parakesari-varman, who, on account of the mention of the name Virasolan Uttamasolan, may be identified with the Early Chola king Parantaka I (acc. A.D. 907). This is the earliest of the existing inscriptions in this temple. At the entrance into the first prakara of the temple, there is a record of the 13th year of Rajakesarivarman alias Tribhuvanachakravartin Kulottunga I (= A.D. 1084). It records a gift of land by a native of Marudavur as a present for the composition of verses in praise of a certain Vedavanamudaiyan (ARE 335 of 1914). An inscription of the 14th year of Kulottunga II records a gift of money for the celebration of the New Moon day festival and another, of his 20th year, registers a gift of 100 sheep for a lamp (ARE 333 and 334 of 1914). There are three inscriptions of the days of Rajadhiraja II. One, of his second year, registers the gift of the village of Nedungiraikkudi by Edirilapperumal alias Kulottungasola Kadambarayan (ARE 337 of 1914). Another inscription, of his 12th year, registers a gift of land for offerings to the Periya Nachchiyar—evidently to the Amman shrine—by a merchant of Sarappattanam alias Vikramasolap-perunderu (ARE 336 of 1914). The third, of his 13th year, relates to the building of the Nritta mandapa (ARE 340 of 1914). The last Chola inscription is one of the 35th year of Tribhuvanavira deva (i.e., Kulottunga III). It records a gift of the village of Punnangudi (modern Pinnangudi) to the temple of Tirup-peruman-anda Nayanar for worship and repairs by Udaiya Perumal alias Edirilisola Kadambarayan for the merit of the king, during the latter's stay at Madurai (about A.D. 1213; ARE 339 of 1914). Punnangudi was renamed Udaiyaperumal-nallur after the name of the donor, and a local highway was named Tribhuvanaviran-peruvali after the new name of Kulottunga III following his celebration of victory at Madurai.

An inscription records the names of the four rishis who are held to have worshipped the Lord of this temple—Jamadagni, Parasara, Agastya and Visvamitra.

A record of the 17th year of Jatavarman Sundara Pandya I (A.D. 1267) registers a gift of land for festivals and repairs in the temple of Tirup-peruman-anda Nayanar for the welfare of the king and the country by the people of Vadakonadu (ARE 342 of 1914). A late Vijayanagara inscription of the time of Vira Ranganna Udaiyar, found on the west face of the Amman temple, records a political mutual defence compact between the residents of Perambur and Kilaikkurichi (ARE 344 of 1914).

This village is an important religious centre in the Mayuram taluk of the Tanjavur district. In an earlier volume, while dealing with the vira-sthanas, where Siva is held to have demonstrated His powers by the destruction of evil forces, we mentioned that Tirukkadaiyur alias Tirukkadavur was the centre where Siva reputedly subdued Yama, the God of Death (pp. 85, 86 of my Early Chola Temples).

On the walls and base of the central shrine of the Amritaghatesvarar temple here, there are a number of inscriptions belonging to the period of the Middle and the Later Cholas. Those of the days of the Middle Chola rulers Rajaraja I and Rajendra I are found on the north, east and south sides of the base, while the earliest to be found on the walls of the shrine are of the days of Kulottunga I.

On the east side of the base of the shrine is the earliest of all inscriptions here—one relating to the fourteenth year of the king Rajarajakesarivarman, recording a grant of land; the temple is called that of 'Sri Kalakaladevar at Padai eviya Tirukkadavur in Ambar nadu' (ARE 122 of 1906). We learn from another inscription of the fifteenth year of the same king that the sabha of Kadavur gave some land as kani to a person for performing certain services in the temple. There is also a reference to a shrine called that of Tiruvirattanattu perumanadigal (ARE 23 of 1906). There are two inscriptions of the days of Rajendra I, one of which is incomplete, and the other, of the 15th year, records an agreement of the sabha of 'Padai eviya Tirukkadavur in Ambar nadu in Uyyakkondan valanadu' (ARE 20 of 1906). These are all (as stated above) found on the base of the shrine. There is only one record of the days of Kulottunga I found on the base of this shrine, registering an agreement of the Assembly of Ulpadam eviya Tirukkadavur (ARE 43 of 1906) in Ambar nadu, a district of Rajanarayana valanadu. We note that, by the time of Kulottunga I, Uyyakkondan valanadu had been renamed Rajanarayana valanadu, perhaps after a surname of his (also cf. ARE 25 of 1906).

Of the inscriptions of his days found on the walls of the shrine, two are dated in the forty-fourth and forty-eighth years, and the years of two others have been lost (ARE 16 to 19 of 1906). There is a second year inscription of the days of Vikrama Chola on the walls of the shrine (ARE 32 of 1906).

The earliest record found on the walls of the mandapa in front of the shrine is one on the south wall and relating to the sixth year of Vikrama Chola (ARE 30 of 1906).

On the south wall of the first prakara of the temple, there is a record of the fourth year of the king Tribhuvanachakravartin Kulottunga Chola deva (ARE 39 of 1906). It records a gift of land in the locality by one Sekkilan Ammaiappan Parantakadevan alias Karikalasola Pallavaraiyan of Kunrattur in Kunrattur nadu, a subdivision of Puliur kottam alias Kulottungasola valanadu. In view of the reference in this inscription to the poet Sekkilar who was a contemporary of Vikrama Chola, Kulottunga II and Rajaraja II, the Kulottunga referred to in the inscription must be Kulottunga II alias Anapaya. We have a record of the 18th year of a Rajarajadeva on the same south wall, registering the lamps granted to the temple and the lands reclaimed at Mannarkunru in Erukkattuch-cheri for their maintenance; one of the donors is Vedavanamudaiyan Ammaiappan of Palaiyanur in Melmalai-Palaiyanur nadu. Hence the king referred to must be Rajaraja II, Vedavanamudaiyan being one of the Generals who fought successfully on behalf of the Chola emperor in the Pandyan war of succession (ARE 32 of 1906). We have two inscriptions relating to the period of Rajadhiraja II found on the same wall (ARE 35 & 36 of 1906). There are a number of inscriptions relating to the period of Kulottunga III, starting with one of his second year, in which the deity is still called 'Udaiyar Sri Kalakaladevar at Tirukkadavur in Ambar nadu, a subdivision of Akkur nadu, a district of Jayangondasola valanadu' (ARE 34 of 1906). A record of his sixteenth year mentions a gift of land to the image of Rajaraja Isvara by the sabha of Ulpadameviya Tirukkadavur and another, also of the same year, records a gift of land to the same image, which, it adds, was set up by Araiyan Rajarajadevar alias Vanadharayar (ARE 43 & 42 of 1906). From a record of the seventeenth year, we gather that 'Svamidevar' countermanded an order of the king appointing two Saiva acharyas, and put in two others who possessed hereditary rights to the offices. The inscription mentions the shrines of Kalakaladeva, Kuttadum devar, Kulottunga Cholisvaramudaiyar, and Vikramacholisvaramudaiyar in the temple of Tiruvirattanamudaiyar (ARE 40 of 1906).

On the basis of the epigraphical records, we may arrive at these conclusions: that the central shrine was in existence even in the days of Rajaraja I (with possibly the stone-base as of now and the superstructure including the walls of the garbhagriha in brick). Sometime in the early years of Kulottunga I, the brick walls were replaced by stone walls; the mandapa in front of the central shrine came into being during the reign of Kulottunga I or was perhaps started during the latter part of his reign and completed during the first year or two of Vikrama Chola's. The presence of an inscription dated in the fourth year of Kulottunga II on the walls of the prakara would go to show that that wall had come into existence in the last days of Vikrama Chola or the first few years of the reign of Kulottunga II. Thus, the entire complex of the temple excluding the basement of the central shrine can be said to have come into existence during the reigns of Kulottunga I and Vikrama Chola.

From a Tamil verse found on the third gopuram of the temple, we gather that a certain brahmana named Apatsahaya of Tirukkadavur repaired the temple. It is mentioned that he was also a military officer, who took part in a war against Raichur. The record belongs to the Vijayanagara period (ARE 47 of 1906).

MADHURANTAKAM (KADAPPERI)

SVETARANYESVARAR (TIRUVENKADU 13 UDAIYA MAHADEVAR) TEMPLE

The town of Madhurantakam is in the Chingleput district, not far from the district headquarters. The Svetaranyesvarar temple is situated close to, and to the west of, the Madhurantakam railway station on the Madras-Villupuram section of the Southern Railway. Its foundation goes back to the days of Parantaka I (see my Early Chola Temples, pp. 100-1).

On the north, west and south walls of the central shrine in this temple, there is an inscription of the 15th year of Kulottunga I, from which we learn that the temple was built during the early years of this ruler by a Sengeni Chief who bore the name of Sengeni Sattan Solan alias Senapati (General) Vanaraiyar. The relevant portions of the inscription read as follows:

“Svasti Sri : pugalsulnda punari agal sulnda puviyal . . . Bhuvanamulududaiyalodum virrirundaruliya kovirajakesaripanmarana Udaiyar Sri Kulottungasola devarkku yandu 16 avadu naal 165, Jayangonda solamandalattu Kalattur kottattu taniyur, Sri Madhurantaka chaturvedimangalattu perungurisabhaiyom innaalaal . . . Sembian Mahadevi perumandapattu . . . (cha)turvedimangalattup palli Sengeni Sattan Solanana Senapatigal Vaanaraiyar nammur eduppitta tirukkarrali tiruvenkadudaiya Mahadevarkku havisale archchanaikkum archchana homattukkum ullittuch cheyyavendum nivandangalukku naangal kudutta uravadu engalur tenpidagai viracholappereri kil” (ARE 138 of 1896; SII, V, 1003).

Thus we may conclude that this temple was built by the General, Vanaraiyar, before the 16th regnal year of Kulottunga I (A.D. 1086); he is given the alternate name of Sattan Virasolan alias Vanaraiyar, further down in the same inscription. This inscription gives us the names of the members of the Perunguri sabhai of the taniyur, who approved the arrangements for granting to the temple the revenue receipts from the lands of the village which were in lieu of two thousand kasus received from the same donor; from this inscription, we also gather the names of a number of wards of Madhurantaka chaturvedimangalam; they are: Madhurantakach-cheri; Sri Irumudichcholach-cheri; Singalan-takach-cheri; Virasolach-cheri; Sri Kodandaramach-cheri; Sri Purakesarich-cheri; Sri Rajase . . . cheri; Sri Surasulamanich-cheri; and Tribhuvana-mahadevich-cheri. There might have been others.

On the east wall of the central shrine, there is another inscription of the days of Kulottunga I, dated in his 29th year, beginning with the introduction "pugal madu vilanga jayamadu virumba"; it relates to a gift of ninety sheep for the purpose of burning a perpetual lamp before the deity of the temple (ARE 135 of 1896). A similar gift of ninety sheep was given, according to another inscription beginning with the same introduction; this is dated in the 35th year and says that one Periyal, daughter of Puliurnattu Velar, set up a perpetual lamp in the temple and gifted the sheep for the maintenance of the lamp (ARE 137 of 1896).

On the outer side of the east wall of the second prakara of the temple, there is an inscription dated in the ninth year of Rajaraja II; it begins with the introduction 'puyamaruviya tirumadam puvimadam jayamadam naamaruviya kalai madum'. This inscription deals with the celebration of the utsavam (festival) when the processional deity called Madurai-Nayaka-devar was taken out in procession on Saturdays (sani-bhavani), by one Udayapalan alias Tiruchchirrambalam Udaiyan, belonging to Kiranur, in Tiruvalundur nadu, in Rajanarayana valanadu, in Chola mandalam (ARE 132 of 1896).

There is an inscription whose date is lost belonging to the reign of Rajadhiraja II, whose introduction begins with 'Kadal sulnda paarmadarum pumadarum'; this is found on the same wall as the preceding and mentions the grant of 300 old kasus (palan-kasu) to arrange for the supply of tirumerpuchchu for the deity of Tiruvenkadu Udaiyar. The place is described as the taniyur of Sri Madhurantaka chaturvedimangalam in Kalattur kottam in Jayangondasola mandalam; we get to know the names of different types of temple servants or agencies: (i) Sri Mahesvara kankaniyar; (ii) Devakanmis; (iii) Srikaryam seyvar; and (iv) Koyil-kanakkan (ARE 129 of 1896).

Besides these, there is a fragmentary inscription of the days of Kulottunga III; a few inscriptions belonging to the Pandya and Vijayanagara rulers are also found here.

Thus, this temple is an old one of Parantaka I's age reconstructed in the days of Kulottunga I. The second prakara was perhaps added during the days of Kulottunga II alias Anapaya.

AMBAR-MAKALAM

MAKALANATHAR TEMPLE

Close to both the Peralam and Peruntottam stations on the Southern Railway, in Tanjavur district, there are two celebrated Siva temples—those at Ambar and Ambar-makalam. Ambar is 3 km. southeast of Peruntottam, and Ambar-makalam is only one km. east of Ambar.

We shall be concerned here only with Ambar-makalam, but it may be mentioned in passing that the Brahmapurisvarar temple at Ambar is a madakkoyil (for a discussion of such temples, see my Early Chola Art, Part I, p. 22). The temple is constructed on an artificial mound, the mythological reason being to make it inaccessible to elephants: similar temples or shrines are to be found at Nallur, Kilvelur and Sirkali. Koch-chenganan (the 'red-eyed king'), of the Chola dynasty of the Late Sangam age, is believed to have originally built this temple, along with a number of other madakkoyils. Appar calls it Perunkoyil ('Ambar nagar perunkoyil'), and Sambandar has sung in praise of the Lord here.

In inscriptions of the days of Kulottunga I, the presiding deity is called Mangalesvarar and Ambar Tirumangalam Udaiyar, and the place is called (Ambar) Tirumangalam. The present-day name of the deity is Makalanathar, and the Amman is called Bhaya-kshaya-nayaki (meaning 'the Goddess who dissipates fear'). Kali is believed to have done penance here to absolve herself of the sin of having killed two rakshasas called Amban and Ambasuran. There is a shrine for Kali on the southern side of the outer prakara.

According to an inscription of the 10th year of Vikrama Chola (on the south wall of the first prakara), the (separate) shrine for the goddess (called Uma Paramesvari) came into existence in the 15th year of 'Rajendra Chola deva' and a gift of land was made to it by the Assembly of Madhurantaka chaturvedimangalam. In continuation of this inscription is another, also recording a gift of land for the same shrine and calling the place Ambar-nagara (ARE 100 and 101 of 1910). As we have seen, Rajendra (II) was the name which Kulottunga I went by when he was a Vengi prince and which he kept on for some years after ascending the Chola throne. Coupling this with the fact that separate Amman shrines elsewhere date only from his reign onwards, the 'Rajendra Chola' under reference must be identified with Kulottunga I. Vikrama Chola made his own contribution to the expansion of the temple by building the first prakara wall (tiru-maligai) of the main temple, according to an inscription on the south wall of that prakara (ARE 99 of 1910). A number of inscriptions of the days of Kulottunga I, all of his 42nd year, are found on the walls of the central shrine of 'Mangalesvara'. One of them records an order of the king, issued from his throne called Vanadhirajan, located in the 'Rajendrasolan hall', at his palace in Mudikondasolapuram (Palayarai), and gives the location of Ambar as being in Ambar nadu, a sub-division of Uyyakkondan valanadu; the deity is called Ambar Tirumangalam Udaiyar (ARE 93 of 1910). Three other records relate to the bestowal of devadana villages of the temple on individuals, all done at the request of a Chief called Nulambarajan: (i) of Puravuvilagam to one Tiruchchirrambala Nandarajan of Mattur; (ii) of Vandalur to one Udaya Marttandan of Ambar; (iii) of Eyinikudi to one Serkalan Velan Tiruvayk-kulam-udaiyan (ARE 94, 95 and 96 of 1910). There are three more records of the same reign, which relate to gifts of money or land for lamps: money by Vira Vichchadira Pallavaraiyan, a native of Anniyur in Kurukkai nadu, a subdivision of Virudarajabhayankara valanadu (44th year: ARE 103 of 1910); money for a lamp by a native of Kundavai chaturvedimangalam in Mulaiyur nadu, a subdivision of Geyamanikka valanadu (43rd year: ARE 106 of 1910); and another gift, the details of which are lost (44th year: ARE 105 of 1910). In a 50th year record of this ruler, we find the name of the valanadu in which Ambar was situated changed to Bhupalakulavalli (ARE 107 of 1910).

In the 12th year of Kulottunga I, a certain gift is made of land for offerings to the images of Atkonda Nayakar and Consort, both of which had been presented to the temple at Tirumangalam (i.e., this temple) by the ancestors of one Amudan Tiruchchirrambala-mudaiyan alias Udayamarttanda Muvendavelan, a native of Siruvelur in Panaiyur nadu which was a subdivision of Kshatriyasikhamani valanadu (ARE 102 of 1910). We get to know the name of the father of this Chief, from a 15th year Parakesarivarman inscription found on a stone lying in the courtyard of the temple, as Mannamudan of Siruvelur; the son makes a gift of 90 sheep for a lamp; this record relates to the reign of Vikrama Chola. In a third year record relating to this ruler, a gift of land to the shrine of the goddess is made by certain residents of Siruvelur in Panaiyur nadu, a subdivision of Kulottungasola valanadu. Another record dated in the tenth year of the same ruler refers to a gift of paddy for offerings, also to the image of Atkonda Nayakar. Thus Kshatriyasikhamani valanadu becomes Kulottungasola valanadu in the days of Vikrama Chola (ARE 104 of 1910).

In view of the antiquity of this Saivite centre, it is likely that the Makalanathar temple existed in some form till the early years of Kulottunga I, and, in his 15th regnal year, a shrine for the Amman was built. As the only inscriptions found on the walls of the main shrine of Makalanathar are all either of the 42nd year of Kulottunga I or of Vikrama Chola, we may reasonably conclude that, by his 42nd year, Kulottunga I had got the main shrine also rebuilt of stone; this inference gets support from the presence of slabs in the courtyard of the temple, containing Rajakesari and Parakesari inscriptions including one of 'the Parakesarivarman who took the head of the Pandya' (pandiyandin-talai-konda). Thus both the main and the Amman shrines were foundations of the days of Kulottunga I, while the prakara with the madil was a contribution of the days of his son, Vikrama Chola.

SIDDHALINGAMADAM

15 VYAGHRAPURISVARAR (TIRUPPULI-BHAGAVAR) TEMPLE

During the early years of his reign, Kulottunga I still went under the name of Rajendra Chola (II), carrying over his Vengi titles; it is during these years that the temple at Siddhalingamadam (Sirringur of the inscriptions) appears to have been rebuilt of stone.

This place is located in the Tirukkoyilur taluk of the South Arcot district, and lies about 8 km. to the southeast of Tirukkoyilur, the taluk headquarters.

The Vyaghrapurisvarar temple in this village seems to have been in existence at least from the days of Parantaka I. There are, on the walls of this temple, three inscriptions of Parantaka I and three inscriptions of the Rashtrakuta king Krishna III. These inscriptions, however, seem to be copies of earlier inscriptions recording endowments made prior to the reconstruction of this temple. On the south wall of the mandapa in front of the central shrine, there are two inscriptions, both of them being undated and both in Grantha script and Sanskrit language, which refer to the reconstruction of the temple. The first one records that the Minister of King Rajendra Chola named Sabhanarttaka, and surnamed Kalingaraja and Manavatara, the ruler of Manavil, built a stone temple for Siva at Siddhalinga. The composer of the Sanskrit verse was a certain Andapillai Bhattan (ARE 367 of 1909). The other refers to the king, during whose reign the inscription was engraved, as Jayadhara, and records that the ruler of Manavil, who bore the surnames of Manavatara and Narttaka (which is merely a contraction of Sabhanarttaka), built a vimana, a prakara surrounded by areca palms and a mandapa, at the agrahara called Siddhalinga, for the god Siva, 'whose feet were worshipped by Sage Vyaghrapada' (ARE 369 of 1909). We know that Jayadhara was one of the many surnames of Kulottunga I. In all the inscriptions, the deity is called Tiruppulippagavar, the Tamil equivalent of Vyaghrapadesvarar. At the time of renovation, the lithic records which were engraved on the walls of the original temple appear to have been copied into books and after renovation re-engraved on the walls of the new structure, as in the case of the Tiruvallam temple in the North Arcot district, though it is not distinctly stated, as in the case of the latter, that this was so done under authority. (Another instance of inscriptions being ordered to be preserved, by copying them first into books (pottagangal) and then re-engraving them after repairs or renovation, is furnished by two records of Rajaraja I and Rajendra I at Tirumalavadi (ARE 92 and 91 of 1895), already referred to in my Middle Chola Temples, pp. 267-9). Consequently, on the walls of this temple, we find copies of inscriptions of: the Rashtrakuta king Krishna III ("Kannara deva who took Kachchi and Tanjai") (ARE 370, 375 and 385 of 1909); an unidentified Parakesarivarman (ARE 374, 377, 384, 420, 421 and 422 of 1909); Madiraiikonda Parakesarivarman (ARE 376, 387 and 390 of 1909); an unidentified Rajakesarivarman (ARE 379 of 1909); and Rajakesarivarman Rajarajadeva I (ARE 392 of 1909).

The above (last mentioned) record of Rajaraja I is of his 28th year, and refers to a gift of gold for lamps and offerings to the image of (his favourite deity) Adavallar and of land situated near the tank called Rajarajap-pereri for offerings in the main shrine.

Coming to the inscriptions of the days of Kulottunga I, we have already noted the two undated ones referring to the reconstruction of the temple by a Manavil Chieftain. A tenth year record of his days refers to a gift of 64 cows for two lamps on behalf of one Sedirayan Malaiyan alias Rajendrasola Malaiyaman of Kiliyur on the southern bank of the Pennai, in Tirumunaippadi, a subdivision of Damar nadu, in Rajendrasola valanadu (ARE 419 of 1909). A 16th year inscription mentions a gift of land to the temple of Tiruppulippagavar of Sirringur, a brahmadeya in Kurukkai kurram, a subdivision of Maladu alias Jananatha valanadu (ARE 368 of 1909). In his 36th year, a gift is made for offerings to the minor deities in this temple by the wife of one Malaiyaman Nanuruvan Malaiyan alias Rajendrasola Chedirayan of Kiliyur in Tirumunaippadi (ARE 388 of 1909). The verandah round the central shrine is stated to have been the gift of one Villavar alias Megudat-tyagi (ARE 399 of 1909). Another gift of 32 cows (valued at 10 kasus) was made in his 49th regnal year for a lamp by a brahmana lady who had prayed for a son and was blessed with one (ARE 371 of 1909).

There are a number of inscriptions relating to the period of Vikrama Chola. In the third year, a gift of money is made for a lamp by Sadri, the daughter of Tillai-nayakan Devargandan Agamudaiyan Malaiyan alias Rajendrasola Chedirayan of Peringur in Peringur nadu, a subdivision of Tirumunaippadi in Gangaikondasola valanadu. The lady also presented a lamp-stand and three bell-metal vessels (ARE 378 of 1909). In the fourth year, a gift of land is made for offerings by Adavallan Vasudevan alias Mudikondasola Muvendavelan of Munnur alias Panditagoshti-chaturvedimangalam in Oyma nadu (ARE 383 of 1909). In the sixth year, a gift of land for offerings after purchase is made by the wife of a Malaiyaman Chief (ARE 409 of 1909). In the ninth year, a gift of land is made to the shrine of the Goddess built by Alavandal, the daughter of Malaiyaman Nanurruvan Malaiyan alias Rajendrasola Chedirayan of Kiliyur, and wife of Malaiyaman Raman Surriyan alias Rajendrasola Malaiyakularayan of the same place, for the merit of her mother, Nirait-tavanjeydal (ARE 401 of 1909). In the 13th year, a gift of gold is made by a native of Anattur-Siruvannainallur in Kilamur nadu, a subdivision of Tirumunaippadi, to the temple of Tiruppuli (-pagavar) at Sirringur (ARE 372 of 1909). In the 15th year, the same lady (Alavandal) who built the shrine gifted lands to the deity (ARE 409 of 1909). It mentions that the shrine was caused to be built by the mother, Nirait-tavanjeydal.

There are a few inscriptions relating to the days of Parakesarivarman Rajaraja (II). A record belonging to his seventh year mentions a gift of land made for the maintenance of flower-gardens. Another record belonging to his 19th regnal year deals with a gift of land made by Malaiyaman Attinathan Sökkapperumal alias Rajagambhira Chediyarayan of Kiliyur for offerings to the deity (ARE 409 and 411 of 1909).

There is an eighth year record of Tribhuvanachakravartin Rajaraja deva, who could be Rajaraja II or Rajaraja III, referring to a gift of money made by a brahmana woman for offerings to the shrine of Kshetrapala Pillaiyar, built by her in the temple (ARE 407 of 1909).

There are a number of post-Chola inscriptions also. From a 14th year inscription of Maravarman Tribhuvanachakravartin Vira Pandya deva, we gather that a merchant of Sirringur set up a shrine of Alagiya Tiruchchirrambalam Udaiyar in the northern prakara and made a gift of land for offerings to this deity (ARE 393

From another record, dated in the sixth year of Vikrama Pandya devar, we get to know that a gift of land was made for offerings to the shrine of Adavallar in the temple of Tiruppulippagava Nayanar, by the merchant community (Nagarattar) of Tirukkovalur (near Marudur) alias Maduraikkuvaytta-perumal-puram (ARE 380 of 1909).

From this survey of the inscriptions found in the temple, the following essential points emerge:

The temple of Vyaghrapadesvarar had been in existence even as early as the days of Parantaka I and had received attention from subjects of Parantaka I, Krishna III and Rajaraja I. An image of Adavallar (Nataraja) was set up during the days of Rajaraja I. By the 16th year of Kulottunga I, the central shrine, which was evidently then a brick structure, was replaced by a stone structure, and along with it a prakara and a mandapa came into being. The tiruchchurumaligai was the contribution of an archer in the Chola army. In the ninth year of Vikrama Chola, we learn that the shrine of the Goddess had been built by the daughter of a Malaiyaman Chief named Rajendrasola Chediyarayan of Kiliyur. By the eighth year of Rajaraja II, a shrine for Kshetrapala had been set up in the temple. In the Pandyan period, a shrine for Alagiya Tiruchchirrambalam Udaiyar was set up in the northern prakara.

LADDIGAM

16 NILAKANTHESVARAR (IRUNGOLISVARAM) TEMPLE

Laddigam which is in the Chittoor district of Andhra Pradesh lies about 5 km. to the northwest of Punganur, between Madanapalli and Chittoor, and is about 150 km. northwest of Vellore. It was formerly called Kunganur alias Valavanarayana chaturvedi-mangalam, situated in Perumbanappadi, as gathered from local inscriptions; after a spell of direct rule by the Cholas, this region passed into the hands of the Chola-Gangas of the Irungola dynasty about the tenth century A.D.

Ancient Kongu nadu comprised a portion of the present-day Salem district and the whole of the Coimbatore district of Tamilnadu. There were two distinct divisions of Kongu nadu, the northern and the southern. Northern Kongu was probably the region north and east of the Kaveri river while Southern Kongu comprised the whole of the Coimbatore district. Kongu is called Sola-Kerala mandalam in an inscription of Kulottunga III at Karur. In the past, the Cheras seem to have lived south of the Kongu country and they seem to have conquered Southern Kongu.

North of the Kongu country and around it, there were the petty kingdoms of the Banas, the Gangas, the Nolambas and the Vaidumbas. The Kongu country was temporarily conquered by the Chola kings Aditya I and Parantaka I. The final Chola conquest of the Kongu country, however, took place in the days of Rajaraja I and his son Rajendra I. Then this region became a subdivision of Jayangondasola mandalam, later renamed Rattapadi-kondasola mandalam after Rajadhiraja I and Rajendradeva II.

Namakkal in the northern Kongu country has a cave temple of Vishnu; there are sculptures of Ranganatha, Narasimha and Adivaraha in the rock-cut cellas of this cave temple. In this cave there is an archaic Pallavagrantha inscription which may be assigned to the eighth century A.D., and from this we learn that the name of this cave was Atiyendra-Vishnu-griham, i.e., the Vishnu cave temple excavated by, or in the name of, Atiya, Adiyana or Adiyaman. A Chera king is said to have conquered the Adiyamans and taken their capital Tagadur, which has been identified with modern Dharmapuri (ARE 1906, paras 36 to 38, pp. 76 to 79).

The region, formerly known as the Punganur Zamindari, in which Laddigam is situated, was ruled by the Banas in the eighth and the ninth centuries A.D. Their country was known as Perumbanappadi. Eight of their inscriptions in the Kannada language are found at Punganur, Madanapalli (Chittoor district) and Bangapadi (Mysore region). The Bana king Mahavali Banarasa is said to have ruled over "Vadugavali 12000 and Manne 200" and his territory is said to have extended from Punganur in the west to Kalahasti in the east. There is reference, in a slab inscription close to the Punganur-Chadum road, to the battle of Soremata where the Bana opposed the Nolamba Rachmalla and Mayindadi on behalf of Perumanadi (Western Ganga ?) (ARE 543 of 1906). The same battle of Soremata is mentioned in a Telugu hero-stone inscription of the Vaidumba king, Kandatrinetra-Vaidumba-Maharaja at Pedda-tippa-samundram. It states that one Prabhu-Chalavundu of the Vaidumba Chiefs distinguished himself in this battle between his Lord and the Nolambi and fell. This is to be assigned to the latter half of the ninth century A.D.

Mahendradhiraja Nolamba claims to have destroyed the Banas (ARE 1900-01, para 11). The Chola king Parantaka I is said to have destroyed two Bana kings and bestowed the Bana kingdom on the Ganga king Prithivipati II (about A.D. 912). Perhaps the distant descendants of the Ganga ruled over the Kongu region on the eve of the accession of Kulottunga I.

The earliest inscriptions on the walls of the Nilakanthesvarar temple at Laddigam are those of the Chola-Gangas. On the south wall of the temple, there is an inscription belonging to the 14th regnal year of a certain Uttama Chola-Ganga alias Sembakachchipati Nayanar which registers a gift to the temple of Irungolisvaram Udaiya Nayanar at Koyarrur. This is the modern temple of Nilakanthesvaram at Laddigam and it is thus a foundation of the Irungolars of Koyarrur. (See 'Map of South India during Kulottunga I's time'). The Chola-Ganga Chief should have been in the enjoyment of a fair degree of political independence as we find him issuing grants reckoned in his own regnal years (ARE 549 of 1906). This place apparently derives the name of Uttamasola-puram from that ruler. So, though it is not definitely stated that he was the builder of this stone temple, it is highly probable that he was.

In the (chronologically) next inscription figures a donor called Adavallan Gangaikonda Chola alias Irungolan (ARE 553 of 1906). Perhaps he was the son and successor of Uttama Chola alias Sembakachchipati Nayanar. This Adavallan Gangaikondan makes a gift of the village of Madamangalam in Puli nadu, a district of Rattapadikonda-sola mandalam, to the temple of Irungolisvaram Udaiya Mahadevar built at Koyarrur alias Uttamasola-puram in the same nadu. The village of Madamangalam was re-named Gangai-konda-chola-nallur after the donor. The present donor does not date the grant in his own regnal years but in the 16th regnal year of the Chola king Rajakesarivarman alias Chakravartin Kulottunga Chola deva I. As the wording of the inscription 'built at Koyarrur' indicates, the construction of this temple of stone begun under Uttama Chola-Ganga was completed about the 16th regnal year of Kulottunga I (A.D. 1085). A gift of 96 sheep for maintaining a lamp is recorded in an inscription of the 20th regnal year of Kulottunga I (ARE 550 of 1906).

After the conquest of Gangavadi by Rajaraja I, the region was being administered as a part of the Chola empire, later under the provincial name of Rattapadikonda-sola mandalam; the ancient line of Adigaimans of Tagadur acted as the representative of Chola power in this region. Under Bittiga Vishnuvardhana (A.D. 1100-52), the Hoysalas became prominent in this area. Gangaraja, who was a Dandanayaka under the Hoysala, helped Vishnuvardhana to build up a big kingdom for himself within a few years of his inheriting a small principality which at best covered a limited territory around Belur; by A.D. 1116, the latter had already assumed the title of Talakkadu-konda, and in the same year he is said to be ruling in Talakkadu and Kolala (Kolar) over the entire Gangavadi as far south as Kongu. The Hoysala inscriptions mention that the Chola Samanta Adiyaman was stationed at the strategic ghats near Talakkadu on the borders of Gangavadi, and that on persuasion failing and the Adiyaman Chief refusing to surrender, a battle ensued in which besides Adiyaman, two other Chiefs, Damodara and Narasimha Varma, and other Samantas fought on the side of the Cholas and lost. With this defeat, Chola rule over Gangavadi came to an end and in fact for some time till the beginning of the reign of Vikrama Chola, the traditional territory of the Adiyamans too, including the Laddigam area,* came under Hoysala rule. However, by the ninth year of Vikrama Chola, we find Chola inscriptions again in the temple of Laddigam, indicative of restoration of Chola rule in this region.

*The claim of capture of Koyarrur by the Hoysala Vishnuvardhana only confirms the overthrow of Chola rule in this region. It may be added that Koyarrur which earlier

On the south wall of the prakara of this temple, there is an inscription belonging to the ninth year of Vikrama Chola (A.D. 1127) which, however, is incomplete. But the name of the deity of this temple finds mention, viz., Irungolisvaram Udaiya Mahadevar at Koyarrur alias Uttamasola-puram.

In the middle of the 12th century A.D., this region seems to have come under the effective control of the Adigaimans of Tagadur. We get to hear of the extensive benefactions of the ruling Chiefs of this family. A Chief called Rajarajadevan alias Adigaiman of Tagadur made a gift to the temple of Tiruvannam, of the entire village of Malaiyanur on the banks of the Pennar in Tegadur nadu, in the tenth regnal year of Kulottunga III (ARE 536 of 1902). This Tagadur Chief Rajaraja perhaps began his chieftaincy as a vassal of Rajaraja II (A.D. 1146-73). It is likely that Vidugadalagiya Perumal who figures in a large number of inscriptions at Laddigam and in other places in Salem and North and South Arcot districts (and who calls himself the 'son of Rajaraja') was his son and successor and a powerful feudatory of the days of Kulottunga III (A.D. 1178-1216).

Tagadur Adigaiman alias Vidugadalagiya Perumal claims to be the Lord of Ten Tagadai (which is the same as Tagadur, identified with the present day Dharmapuri, formerly in the Salem district, now the headquarters of a separate district of the same name) and the conqueror of the lands of the Kadava, the Magada and the Ganga. His bow emblem is inscribed along with the royal insignia. Near Polur which is close to Tiruvannamalai (between Villupuram and Arakkonam on the Southern Railway in Tamil nadu), there is a hill known as Tirumalai; at the foot of the hill is a village known as Vaigai or Vaigavur; the hill is also referred to as Vaigai- (or Vaigavur-) Tirumalai; there is a tank (also at the foot of the hill) known as Kadapperi, with a number of sluices scholars identified as Coimbatore should be Kovattur (ARE 542 of 1906) or Koyattur, i.e., modern Laddigam.

and canals; there is also a rock-cut cave-temple here with paintings. On this, we learn, were certain ancient sculptures including Yaksha and Yakshini figures, attributed to Elini, the Chera king of the Sangam age; these sculptures had in course of time become worn out and possibly damaged. We learn these facts from an inscription on the outer wall of the doorway, leading to the painted cave; this is much obliterated; it consists of three parts; a passage in Tamil prose, a Sanskrit verse in Sardula metre, and a third passage again in Tamil prose (EI, VI, pp. 331-33). From this inscription we gather that the then Chief of the Chera kingdom, with his capital at Tagadur (Takata, or Tagadai), named Vyamukta Sravanojjvala (in the Sanskrit portion) or Vidugadalagiya Perumal alias Adigaiman (in Tamil), son of Rajaraja, and a descendant of the Sangam Age Chief Elini, King of Vanji (identified with Karur), repaired and installed on the hill of Tirumalai the sculptures of Yaksha and Yakshini referred to above; that he also constructed a channel for feeding the local tank called Kadapperi at the foot of the hill and presented a gong for the deities.

A brief outline of his various inscriptions on the walls and the gopuram of the Laddigam temple is given below:

1. To the right of the entrance of the gopuram there is a Tamil inscription in praise of the sword of Adigaiman, with his name and emblems carved beside it.
2. There is another inscription to the left of the entrance of the gopuram similar to that to the right, depicting his sword, emblems and name.
3. There is a third inscription in Grantha and Tamil on the north wall of the prakara, which is in praise of the Kerala king Adikendra Vyamukta Sravanojjvala. The Chera bow, a stand with an umbrella above and a fly-whisk (chamara) on each side are engraved here.
4. There is a Tamil verse on the east wall which is in praise of Vidugadalagiyan of Ten Tagadai, mentioning the Kadava, the Magada and the Ganga as his enemies.
5. There is one more inscription on the south wall of the central shrine which records a gift of money for three lamps, and perhaps this too could be attributed to him.

One Samanta Adigaiman is said to have presented a golden prabha to the deity of Tirumanikkuli in the 19th year of Kulottunga III (ARE 161 of 1902); and in the 22nd year of the same ruler, he claims to be Lord of the three rivers, the Palar, the Pennai and the Kaveri, and to have built a stone temple at Sirukottai on the banks of the Pennai (Kambayanallur, ARE 8 of 1900). This temple was called after his own name. Perhaps these two records as well have to be attributed to the above Adigaiman Chief. An inscription at Chengamma in the South Arcot district (ARE 107 of 1900), which is undated, records a political compact between this mighty feudatory, Vidugadalagiya Perumal, son of Rajaraja devan, on the one hand, and Karikalasola Nadalvan and Sengeni Ammaiappan Attimallan Vikramasola Sambuvarayan on the other, pledging their mutual loyalty, that they would consider the enemies of one party as the enemies of the other party also, and further that neither party would form an alliance with certain other Chiefs like Siya Gangan. As the central government became weak, local Chiefs forged such alliances in their bid for political power and mutual protection against other formidable rivals. Vidugadalagiya Perumal has to his credit a large number of other religious benefactions as well.

A Chola inscription of the ninth regnal year of a Rajaraja perhaps relates to the reign of Rajaraja III (ARE 551 of 1906); it would then correspond to A.D. 1225. It is inscribed on the south wall and records a gift of money for the merit of Uttama-chola-ganga Vettum Amarabharanar by one Akalankan Siyagangan alias Sitravida devar. The temple is referred to by the old name of Irungolisvaram Udaiya Nayanar at Koyarrur alias Uttamasola-puram in Vada Puli nadu included in Perumbanappadi, in Jayangondasola mandalam.

The Nilakanthesvarar temple at Laddigam is thus a foundation of the Irungolas who ruled over this region in the 11th century A.D. Perhaps it was begun in the days of Uttamasola-ganga alias Sambakachchipati Nayanar, and completed by the 16th regnal year of Kulottunga I. It was originally called Irungolisvaram at Koyarrur. We do not know if it was a renovation of an older temple; there is no evidence of its earlier existence.

It is a small compact eka-tala temple built of stone; it faces east; it consists of the garbhagriha, the ardhamandapa and the enclosed mukhamandapa. The garbhagriha is 2.75 m. square, the adhishtana is 90 cm. high. On the north side, there is a stone gargoyle resting on a makara-head; above it on the northern wall of the garbhagriha, there is inscribed a bow resting on a pedestal and crowned by a chhatra (umbrella), with a fly-whisk on either side of the (vertical) bow. There is also an inscription in Tamil which reads "Tagadur Adiyaman Vidugadalagiya Perumal". Below the cornice, there is a bhutagana frieze; the griva has koshtas, in which there are the following deities; Balasubrahmanya sitting on an elephant, in the east; Dakshinamurti in the south; Yoga Nrsimha in the west; and a seated Brahma in the north. There are simha heads over each of these koshtas; there is a spherical stone sikhara crowned with a stone stupi.

The deities in the devakoshtas of the main shrine are Ganapati and Dakshinamurti in the south; a standing figure of Vishnu, with a gada in the right hand, in the west; and Brahma in the north. The other northern niche (which must have been occupied by an image of Durga) is empty.

The ardhamandapa stretches east by 2.15 m. in front; there is a covered mukhamandapa whose walls contain the main inscriptions of this temple, chiefly those of Kulottunga I, the Gangas and the Adiyamans.

Stone sculptures of Valampuri-Ganapati and Chandesvarar are lying loose in the prakara and they seem to belong to the ashta-parivara shrines. There is a stone Nandi of this age in front. There is a madil enclosing all the parts of this temple; in the centre of the eastern wall of enclosure, there is the gopuram; this simple gopuram, all in stone, consists of a dvara (main entrance), a griva and a sala-type of sikhara crowned by stupis of which only one has survived (See Laddigam, by B. Venkataraman, p. 16).

This simple single-storeyed stone gopuram resembles the elementary type of gopuram erected in front of the Shore Temple of Mamallapuram and in the Kailasanatha temple at Kanchi, of the eighth century A.D. During one and the same span of time, covering the days of Kulottunga I and his successor, Vikrama Chola, in the early 12th century A.D., we see in the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram the evolution of a seven-storeyed gopuram (elu-nilai-gopuram) on the one hand, and on the other hand we have at Laddigam a simple, almost elementary, single-storeyed gopuram. Hence great caution is necessary in assessing the stages of evolution of style in architecture and dating them; and structural identity and common features by themselves cannot be depended upon in determining the age of monuments or their coevality. Their location and age are necessary to define the progression of style.

UDAIYARKOYIL

17 VISHNU TEMPLE (KULOTTUNGASOLA VINNAGARAM)

The village of Udaiyarkoyil is close to the village of Tiruchchirai, about 12 km. from Kumbakonam on the road to Kodavasal. Other important centres of interest close by are Nalur and Tirumayanam, where there are fine Chola temples (see my Early Chola Art, Pt. I, pp. 186–88).

The earliest inscription found on the walls of this temple relates to the 16th regnal year of Kulottunga I, the record beginning with the introduction pugal sulnda punari (dated in A.D. 1086); the sabha of Sribhuti chaturvedimangalam met in the temple of Kulottungasola vinnagar and gave to the temple good land, easy of cultivation, in exchange for old gifts of land made by them which were not so good. Signatures in the record affixed by the donees are called sayijnai at the end of each name (ARE 399 of 1902; SII, VII, 1032). The next record relates to the 14th year of Kulottunga II, beginning with the introduction pu mannu padumam. The sabha of Tribhuvana mahadevi chaturvedimangalam is seen here accepting 8 kasus for making some land iraiyili. The interest rate was $\frac{1}{4}$ tiramam per month per kasu (?) (ARE 401 of 1902; SII, VII, 1034). The name of the village obviously underwent a change during the intervening period from Sribhuti- to Tribhuvana mahadevi - chaturvedimangalam. A sixth year record of Rajaraja II, beginning with the introduction pu maruviya tirumadam, mentions that the sabha of the same chaturvedimangalam made iraiyili lands given by a donor to the temple of Tirukkalavudaiyar for lamps for adhyayana on festival days when the God was seated in the yagamandapa and for punyaha and adhyayana on other specified occasions (ARE 407 of 1902; SII, VII, 1040). Another instance of conversion of lands to iraiyili comes from a tenth year record of the days of Rajadhiraja II which the sabha of Tribhuvana mahadevi chaturvedimangalam did, in lieu of interest on thirty kasus yielding interest at $\frac{1}{4}$ sinnam per month per kasu (ARE 402 of 1902; SII, VII, 1035). And, finally, there is an interesting record of the days of Kulottunga III dated in his 18th year. The sripitha of the temple was presumably of brick masonry and there had been unsuccessful efforts (of engineering) earlier to replace it by a stone sripitha; and land was gifted to a person (name not mentioned) who successfully substituted a stone sripitha in the temple, called here that of Tirukkala Udaiya Perumal, in place of the old masonry one (ARE 408 of 1902; SII, VII, 1041).

From these records, it is clear that Udaiyarkoyil was originally called Sribhuti chaturvedimangalam and later on was re-named Tribhuvana mahadevi chaturvedimangalam; and that a temple for Vishnu was built here by about the 14th year of Kulottunga Chola I's reign and named after him, Kulottungasola vinnagaram. Later, in the days of Kulottunga II, the name of the deity was changed to Tirukkala Udaiyar.

SOMANATHESVARAR TEMPLE (KULOTTUNGASOLISVARAM UDAIYAR)

The village of Rajendrasolagan is situated in the Chidambaram taluk of the South Arcot district and is not far from Chidambaram, the taluk headquarters, and close to Viranallur and Melakkadambur, the site of the chariot-type temple dedicated to Amritagatesvarar. At Rajendrasolagan there is a temple now called that of Somanathesvarar. On the walls of this temple, there are two inscriptions, both relating to Kulottunga I, one dated in his 18th year and the other without a date, from which we get the name of the deity of the temple as Kulottungasolisvaram Udaiyar. The former inscription is a record of a gift of land to this deity and the latter registers a gift of land in Bhupendrasolanallur, to the local temple, making it tax-free. There is again an undated record of Kulottunga III found in four fragments on the tiers of the temple which refers to the division of lands of a certain temple and to the incorporation of a portion of it with another, by the members of the mahasabha. Since all these inscriptions are found in fragments built into the tiers of the temple, it would appear that the temple was renovated at a subsequent unknown date.

SRIMUSHNAM

19 NITYESVARAR (TIRUMUTTAM-UDAIYA MAHADEVAR) TEMPLE

There are two important temples at Srimushnam, which is in the Chidambaram taluk of the South Arcot district; one is the Bhavaraha or Adi Varaha temple, about which there is no epigraphical evidence prior to the Vijayanagar days. However, the other (Siva) temple, called that of Tirumuttam-udaiya Mahadevar in the inscriptions and currently named Nityesvarar temple, seems ascribable to the Later Chola period. Inscriptions here contain cross-references to the Adi Varaha temple.

On the west wall of the central shrine, there is a record of the 30th year of Rajakesarivarman Kulottunga Chola (I), which appears to be the earliest record on the existing structure of this temple. This registers a gift of the villages of Sungantavirttasolanallur (named after Kulottunga I) and Adivaraha-nallur to the temples of Tirumuttam-udaiya Mahadevar and Srivaraha Alvar respectively, at Mudigondasola-nallur in Vilandaiyir kurram, a subdivision of Irungolappadi, by the king when he was seated on the throne called Sedirajan in his palace at his camp at Tirumaluvadi in Poygai nadu, a subdivision of Geyavinoda valanadu (ARE 231 of 1916). There is another record of the same ruler two years later (32nd year) which mentions that, at the instance of Kulottungasola Sauvarnadhiraja and another, the separation of the above two villages was ordered by the king when he was seated on the throne called Sedirajan in his palace at Ayirattali, which now bore the alternate name of Minavanai-venkonda-solapuram, the later name given to it after his repeated victories over the Pandyas. Confirming the contents of the first inscription, the former village is described as a devadana of Tirumuttam-udaiya Mahadevar at Terrampattu alias Mudigondasolanallur in Vilandaiyir kurram, a subdivision of Irungolappadi, and the latter as a devadana of Srivaraaha Alvar (ARE 233 of 1916). Evidently Terrampattu and Mudigondasolanallur were the earlier names of the present town of Srimushnam. There is another Chola record on the walls of the main shrine, relating to the sixth year of Rajaraja (III), which registers a gift of padikaval and other income from certain villages towards worship in the same temple, by Alappirandan Elisaimohan alias Kulottungasola Kadavarayan for the merit of himself and his descendants (ARE 232 of 1916).

These records would seem to indicate that this temple came to be built before the 30th year of Kulottunga I (i.e. A.D. 1100). On the south wall of the mandapa in front of the main shrine is a record of the 44th year of Kulottunga Chola deva I; it mentions a sarvamanya gift of three kasus for three lamps to the temple of Tirumuttam-udaiyar by Anantisan Adavallan of Suravalundur (ARE 236 of 1916). On the walls of the prakara, there are two records of the eighth year relating to Vikrama Chola and a large number relating to the Vijayanagara rulers. We may thus assign the mandapa to the same period as the main shrine of the temple, which, as we have mentioned, had come into existence at the latest before the 30th year of Kulottunga I.

PATANGESVARAR TEMPLE

Palur or Palaiyur is in the Chingleput taluk of the district of the same name. There is an ancient temple here, whose deity is called Patangesvarar. There are a number of old inscriptions in this temple. The earliest ones, found on the west and south walls of the central shrine, relate to Rajakesarivarman alias Chakravartin Kulottunga Chola deva (I), dated in his 31st and 38th regnal years respectively; the former (ARE 26 of 1932-33) commences with the introduction pugal sulnda punari and registers a sale of land as tax-free madappuram, by the Uravar of Palaiyur alias Rajendrasola-nallur in Palaiyur nadu, a subdivision of Urrukattu kottam in Jayangondasola mandalam, to a native of Rajendra-solapuram in Maiyur nadu of Kalattur kottam and to a native of Kanchipuram, for the maintenance of a matha called Valmaravan matha established by them for feeding brahmanas, tapasvins and destitutes. The latter commences with the introduction pugal madu vilanga after a few words beginning with virame tunaiyagavum, and registers a gift of oil made by the Nagarattars of Rajendra-solapuram in Maiyur nadu, a subdivision of Kalattur kottam, for a perpetual lamp in the temple of 'Tiruppatangadudaiya Mahadevar of Rajendrasolanallur in Palaiyur nadu'. We may, therefore, conclude that though there is no foundation inscription, the structure of this temple came into existence by about the 31st year of Kulottunga I (i.e., A.D. 1101) and that the deity bore essentially the same name which it does now. There is another record belonging to the 29th year (364th day) of Tribhuvana-chakravartin Konerinmaikondan alias 'Kulottunga Chola deva who was pleased to take Madurai, Karuvur, Ilam and the crowned head of the Pandya' (i.e., Kulottunga III), which registers the royal orders issued at the instance of one Nayidaraiyar, remitting certain taxes in kind and coin due on some devadana lands belonging to the temple of Tiruppatangadu Udaiyar for worship and repairs therein. The document is signed by nine officers including the royal secretary.

There is a mandapa in front of the central shrine on whose walls there are a number of inscriptions ranging from the days of Vikrama Chola through Kulottunga III and Rajaraja III to the Vijayanagara period. The record of Vikrama Chola makes provision in his fifth regnal year for feeding apurvins in the matha called Acharasilan matha on Amavasya days by a resident of Kurichchi in Pandikulasani valanadu, a district of Chola mandalam. One of the Vijayanagara records mentions that provision was made for repairs to the temple and for the maintenance of dancing masters and drummers of the temple.

ARAKANDANALLUR

OPPILAMANISVARAR TEMPLE

Arakandanallur in the Tirukkoyilur taluk of the South Arcot district has been celebrated by Tirujnanasambandar in a decad of verses, where the place is described under the name of Araiyanallur, which means "the place adorned by the rock"; this is also the form in which this place is described in the several inscriptions found in this temple. But the name of the deity in the inscriptions is Opporuvarumillada Nayanar, which means 'the Lord who is unequalled or incomparable'. This name, however, does not find mention in the Devaram hymns.

(I) THE CAVE TEMPLE

The main temple of Oppilamanisvarar is located on the top of a great hummock of rock on the northern bank of the river Pennai, and close by on its eastern side is a small declivity where there is an unfinished rock-cut cave consisting only of two aisles; the quality of the rock naturally found here and in which these aisles have been excavated is poor, with the result, perhaps, the main cells for housing the deities of this incomplete shrine were never possibly excavated. The cave would appear to belong to the Pallava period but in the absence of any epigraphical evidence, little more could be said about it.

(II) THE CENTRAL SHRINE

The main temple consists of the central shrine, with two mandapas in front, one of them being known as the Navaratri mandapa;

the temple is encompassed in a compound wall which thus provides the prakara; adjoining the wall is a pillared raised verandah; in the south-eastern corner of it is the kitchen; there is a second prakara in which is located the utsava mandapa; in addition there is a shrine for Amman with a verandah in front of it.

From an incomplete record (ARE 118 of 1934-35) found engraved on a rock in the first prakara of the temple, dated in the 24th year of Rajaraja I, registering a gift of sheep for burning a lamp in the temple of Opporuvarumillada Nayanar at Tiruvaraiyanallur we may be led to assume that, this being the earliest record in this temple, the latter should have come into existence by or been in existence before the 24th year of Rajaraja I with perhaps only one wall of enclosure. The central shrine was completely renovated in the 32nd year of the reign of Kulottunga III (A.D. 1210) by a certain Pattanasvami of Pandimandalam. The relevant inscription (ARE 387 of 1902) reads as follows:

Svasti Sri Tribhuvana Chakravartin Sri Kulottungasola devarkku yandu 32-avadu Irajara Pennai vadagarai Udaikkattu nattu Tiruvaraiyanallur udaiyar Opporuvarumillada nayanar koyil it-tirukkarrali saattuvittan Pandimandalattu Vadavellarru kurrattil Attamburil Attamburudaiyan Tirukkalotti Udaiyan Aduvanan Pattanasvami (SII, VI, 1019; ARE 387 of 1902).

In the process of pulling down the original structure the care of the Sembiyan age was no longer exercised; and thus we have lost much of the valuable information which must have been recorded on the walls of the original structure. The present central shrine will thus be ascribable to the age of Kulottunga III. From inscription ARE 390 of 1902, we learn that in the 11th year of Kulottunga III, an image of the Goddess was set up.

(III) THE NAVARATRI MANDAPA

The mandapa in front of the central shrine and the Navaratri mandapa should have come into existence during the early part of the reign of Kulottunga I as they bear inscriptions in large numbers of Kulottunga I and Vikrama Chola, which are found engraved on the north-west and south walls of the former as well as on the east wall of the latter.

We learn from a record relating to the 46th year of Kulottunga I that a gift was made of the receipts from taxes levied on the lands and residents of Virasolanallur, a devadana village in Kiliyur, by Malaiyaman* Nanurruvan Malaiyan alias Rajendrasola Chediyarayan for the purpose of worship and lamps to the God Dakshinamurti deva set up by him in the temple (A.D. 1116). The gift was made on the day of the asterism Uttiram which was the natal star of the donor. We have a few records relating to the period of Kopperunjinga as well. A ninth year record of Kulottunga III (ARE 135 of 1934-35) refers to a gift of tax-free land called Kannanedal in Devanpur by Attimallan Edirilisola Vanakovaraiyan for the daily worship of the goddess Palliyarai Nachchiyar consecrated by Malaiyan alias Kulottungasola Chediyarayan of Kiliyur in the temple of Opporuvarumillada Nayanar at Tiruvaraiyaninallur alias Virasolanallur in Udaikkattu nadu.

(IV) THE NRITTA MANDAPA

A Malaiyaman Chief, Periya Udaiyan Iraiyan Sarrukudadan, a contemporary of Rajadhiraja II and Kulottunga III, was among the more well-known Malaiyaman chiefs, who contributed to the temples of their area. Known also as Rajaraja Chedirayan alias Vanniyarayan, he built the Nritta mandapa in the temple of Opporuvarumillada Nayanar here (ARE 171 of 1934-35). An inscription at Kollur (ARE 204 of 1934-35) mentions that his wife, Kudi-uyyavandal, instituted a festival in the month of Aippasi in this temple.

(V) AMMAN SHRINE

On the east wall of the mandapa in front of the Amman shrine in this temple, right of the entrance, is a record of the fourth year of Tribhuvanachakravartin Vijayarajendra deva (i.e., Rajendra

*See Appendix to this section for a note on the Kiliyur Malaiyaman Chiefs.

III) which mentions that a shrine for the goddess Ponnanaiyar in the temple of Opporuvaramillada Nayanar was built of stone in the 39th year of Tribhuvanavira deva and that one Atti Tiruvannamalai Udaiyan alias Irungolan of Kurukadu made a gift of the taxes from Perunilaiyar-nallur for the expenses of providing worship in that shrine. This shrine should therefore be dated in A.D. 1216-17. It is possible that this native of Pandi-mandalam held some important position in this outlying province, to which Pandyan influence had by then extended.

(VI) THE UTSAVA MANDAPA

The Utsava mandapa in the second prakara of this temple belongs to the 14th century as seen from a record dated in the tenth regnal year of Maravarman Tribhuvanachakravartin Sundara Pandya and found on the east wall of the Utsava mandapa; and similarly the eastern gopuram has to be assigned to the 15th century A.D. on paleographical grounds; a record on the east wall of the gopuram mentions that the "gopuram of the temple of Oppilada Nayinar was the gift of Goppu Nayakarayyan, Valu Nayakar, Bommanar Bappu Nayakar and Nagama Nayakarayyan."

(VII) THE NATARAJA SHRINE

There is a shrine dedicated to Nataraja in the north verandah in the first prakara of the temple. There are two records found on the lintel of the entrance to the shrine and on the south wall of the shrine respectively; we learn that this shrine was built by one Kuttan Jayasingadevan of Tirukkottiyur. The latter record, which begins with the introduction samastabhuvanaikavira etc., has to be assigned to the period of Vikrama Pandya and records that Alvan Kuttan Jayasingadevan of Tirukkottiyur in Keralasinga valanadu, a district of Pandi mandalam built this shrine (tiruvarangu). From a fragmentary record of this Pandyan ruler found in this temple, we learn that a gift was made to the god for the success of his digvijaya. This may refer to the extensive wars of conquest that he undertook early in his reign, after which he gave himself the title of samastabhuvanaikavira. Taking Vikrama Pandya's accession as in A.D. 1269, we may presume that the Nataraja shrine came into existence in A.D. 1273 (i.e., almost towards the end of the Chola rule (Rajendra III's period). Apart from building this shrine, the same Alvan Kuttan Jayasingadevan also built a portion of the tiru-nadai-maligai in this temple and named the same Vikrama Pandyan Tirunadai. This label 'Vikrama Pandyan' is found engraved on all the pillars of the circumambulatory verandah.

Thus the Oppilamanisvarar temple at Arakandanallur received attention at the hands of the Cholas and the Later Pandyas, as well as the local Chiefs. Dating back to the Devaram days, and beginning with a simple structure in the days of Rajaraja I, it underwent major expansion during the Later Chola period culminating in finer additions by the Pandyan and Vijayanagara kings.

Appendix

MALAIYAMAN CHIEFS OF KILIYUR

The region comprising the present-day Tirukkoyilur taluk of the South Arcot district and the adjoining areas was a distinct political unit of administration during the Chola and the Later Pandya periods, ruled by a succession of able and loyal feudatories of the Cholas and later of the Pandyas, from their headquarters at Kiliyur. There is hardly a temple in this region that has not received the imprint of their benefactions; in fact, there is such a large number of inscriptions conveying their grants and gifts that a fairly cogent picture of their activities in various fields can be drawn from them. In this book, however, we shall briefly touch on this theme with reference to the Later Cholas. From the days of Kulottunga I to those of Kulottunga III and Rajaraja III, the Malaiyaman chiefs of Kiliyur held sway in this region as subordinates of the Chola sovereigns; in the days of Kulottunga II, we have already seen that Malaiyaman Malaiyan alias Kulottungasola Chediyarayan and his son Attimallan alias Edirilisola Vanakkovaraiyan made many contributions to temples in the Nadu Nadu region; and in the days of Rajaraja II and Rajadhiraja II, they continued to play an active part in the political and religious life of this area; one such Chief of this period is Attimallan Sökkaperumal alias Rajagambhira Chediyarayan; he would appear to have been succeeded by Periya Udaiyan Iraiyan Sarrukkudadan alias Rajaraja Chediyarayan (who is mentioned in ARE 186 of 1934-35 dated in the sixth year of the king). These Chiefs also bore the title of Vanniyanayan (the Chief of the Vanniyas). Sarrukkudadan was a biruda one of these chiefs mentioned earlier bore, meaning 'he who does not yield'. He would appear to have had very loyal and devoted servants and subordinates; this is borne out by the large number of brief records found in the temples containing vows made by them to the effect that they would die if their master died and not survive him. One of these inscriptions (ARE 203 of 1934-35) runs as follows:

1. Seasti Sri Iraiyan Periya Udaiyanana Irajara Chediyara-
2. yan velaikkaran Anjadanana Aiyankakkaran en ivarkup pin-
3. bu savadirundenagil en ottaiyarkku en minattiyaik ku
4. duppen ivarait tavira ennaichevakan kolvan tan minat-
5. tikku minalakak kilvan.

A velaikkaran (a security man, or body-guard or a soldier of the army) named Anjadan alias Aiyankakkaran, of Iraiyan Periya Udaiyan Rajaraja Chediyarayan vowed that he would die with his master in case of the latter's death and uttered an imprecation that any other Chief who would take him in service after the death of that master would come to grief.

There are as many as twenty such vows recorded on the walls of the temple here; one interpretation could be that this Chief was extraordinarily popular with his followers; this however seems a less plausible explanation; what, however, may be more probable is that those were unusual and difficult times and these male and female servants were so dedicated to the master that they did not want to survive the master. Velaikkarars were very valiant and dedicated personal body guards of the chieftains and they banded themselves together to protect their masters, both in battle-field and elsewhere, and vowed to die along with them in case of their death; a vow to that effect being taken by the female attendants (velaikkari) seems less easy to explain. Similar vows are also recorded in the temple at Elavanasur, another important place in the same taluk. We have already seen that this period was one in which there was considerable political unrest in the Chola empire, and a large number of compacts and non-aggression treaties were entered into among various local Chiefs (vide Laddigam, p. 48).

There is a 20th year record of Kulottunga III (ARE 163 of 1934-35) from which we gather that this Rajaraja Chediyarayan concluded a pact with another Chief named Eriyappan Marundan alias Muvendaraiyan; both these chiefs were subordinate to Vanakkovaraiyan. In this compact they agreed to stand by each other in times of danger and not to enter into any negotiations with each other's enemies. We find, however, that after some years in the 28th year of Kulottunga III (i.e. A.D. 1205) he enters into another alliance with one Alagiyanayan Aharasuran alias Rajagambhira Chediyarayan (ARE 189 of 1934-35) whose terms make interesting reading. We find that his loyalty to the erstwhile chief Vanakkovaraiyan has been given up. Perhaps times were bad and expediency dictated shifting loyalties.

VILVANATHESVARAR TEMPLE

Tiruvaigavur, which is in the Papanasam taluk of the Tanjavur district, is at a distance of 16 km. north-west of Kumbakonam. It is only 2.5 km. west of Vijayamangai. It is on the southern bank of the Kollidam. The god Vilva-vanesvarar (or -nathesvarar) has been sung by the Tamil saint Sambandar. 'Valaikkai Nayaki' is the name of the Amman. The sacred tank is called Yamatirtham and the sacred tree is Vilva. According to local tradition, a hunter chased by a tiger climbed the vilva tree, and, while spending the night on the tree, plucked and dropped the vilva leaves (dear to Siva); in the morning, Siva appeared before him and blessed him. The Nandi, unlike in other temples, has his back to the deity; this is explained by local tradition as Nandi being engaged in an attempt to destroy the God of Death.

The Vilvanathesvarar temple at Tiruvaigavur is an old temple dating back to the period of the Pallavas; the earliest reference to it is found in an inscription of the Pallava ruler Nandivarman dated in his 22nd year, in which the deity is called Tiruvaigavudaiya Mahadevar. In that year, a gift of land is made for offerings and a lamp. However, this inscription is not the original one; the inscription itself mentions that it is a copy, presumably re-engraved after the temple was reconsecrated in the Later Chola period. Of this we have inscriptional confirmation, in a record of the reign of Kulottunga I (who is mistakenly called a Parakesari-varman) found on the south wall of the mandapa in front of the central shrine. Dated in his 40th regnal year, it states that one Pundi Udaiyan Suriyan Pavalakkunranar alias Vannadudaiyar of Paravaichchurru-Pundi in Rajaraja valanadu petitioned to the king in his 32nd year and built of stone the central shrine and the mandapa of the temple of Tiruvaigavudaiya Mahadevar in Andattu kurram, a subdivision of Ulaguyyavandasola valanadu, after removing the old brick structure which was dilapidated. He also increased the temple devadana by augmenting it with gifts of lands in the village of Kalappakudi in Virai kurram to meet the increased requirements of the temple (ARE 51 of 1914). In the days of Kulottunga II, the temple is described as being located in Innambar nadu, a subdivision of Vadagarai Vikramasola valanadu (ARE 49 of 1914). Presumably Ulaguyyavandasola valanadu was renamed Vadagarai Vikramasola valanadu, and Innambar nadu was a part of Andattu kurram. In the 11th year of Rajaraja II, a lady-servant (devaradiyal) of the temple makes a gift of 30 kasus for a lamp to the temple (ARE 50 of 1914). In his 17th regnal year, an image of (presumably a shrine* also for) Nittavinoda-Kalyana-Sundaradevar was set up in the temple and a gift of money for offerings to the image was made (ARE 53 of 1914). In the 33rd year of Tribhuvanachakravartin Tribhuvanavira deva, 'who, having been pleased to take Madurai, Ilam and the crowned head of the Pandya, was pleased to perform the anointment of heroes and the anointment of victors', i.e., Kulottunga III, the temple accounts relating to the period from the 24th to the 33rd regnal years were audited by Pillai Munaiyadaraiyar who was in charge of the temple lands, when certain arrears were detected; and so a sale of land and two houses was made for recovery of revenue due on a devadana land. Similar sales were made in respect of two other pieces of land; in one case the land was sold to the temple (shrine) of Nittavinoda Isvaram Udaiyar at Tiruvaigavur (in Innambar nadu, a subdivision of Vadagarai Vikkirasola valanadu) (ARE 57, 58 and 60 of 1914). In Saka 1351 (A.D. 1429), in the days of Virapratapa Maharaja of Vijayanagara, the Assembly of Parantaka nadu, a subdivision of Innambar nadu, and the 'Valangai 98' and the 'Idangai 98' sects entered into an agreement regarding the payment of dues to the king (rajagaram) (ARE 59 of 1914). We have no records of any later period.

The present structure of the temple including the central shrine and the mandapa in front of it belongs to the days of Kulottunga I and should have been built between the 32nd and the 40th regnal years (i.e., A.D. 1102-1110), as vouched for by the 40th year record. The shrine for Nittavinoda-Kalyana-Sundaradeva

*In a later record of the days of Kulottunga III, there is a reference to a shrine for this deity.

(Isvaram Udaiyar) was brought into existence evidently in the days of Rajaraja II.

We have referred to this temple in our Early Chola Temples (vide p. 257) when dealing with the sanctity the people and the rulers attached to places of worship and to endowments made to temples, as a result of which, when old temples were pulled down and new ones built in their place, the builders sought prior permission from the king or the regional Chief, and the earlier inscriptions were religiously transcribed into registers kept in safe custody, to be reinscribed on the walls of the new structure when complete. These are illustrated here by the copy of Nandivarman's inscription of his 22nd year being engraved on the walls of the newly erected mandapa, and the elaborate ritual of seeking royal permission to replace the old brick structure by a new stone structure.

NANDAVANA

23 CHENNAKESAVA (SRI KULOTTUNGASOLA NANADESI VINNAGAR) TEMPLE

Nandavana is a small village in the Sidlaghata taluk of the Kolar district (Karnataka State). There is a temple here dedicated to Chennakesava. In the ancient days it went under the name of Sri Kulottungasola Nanadesi Vinnagar, evidently a Vishnu temple built by the then internationally famous merchant guild called the Nanadesis.

On the basement of this temple, there is an inscription in Grantha and Tamil characters, beginning with svasti sri Pugal madu vilanga jayamadu virumba etc. It relates to the 33rd year of Kulottunga I and mentions Irattaipadikonda-sola mandalam, Melai-Marayapadi therein, Koyyakkurai nadu thereof. In that nadu was situated Vema ngal alias Rajendrasolap-pettai, where was located the Irudamaraya . . . rukkun-tiru-merkkoyil alias Sri Kulottungasola-Nanadesi-tiru-vinnagar-alvar-koyil, which was built by Vairagarajan, who was also known by the name of Virakkilan Kamban Tiruchchirrambalam Udaiyan, of Peruvanjyur, in Velimaanallur nadu in Urrukkattu kottam of Jayangondasola mandalam. He also raised the madaivilagam (91, Sidlaghata tq., Kolar district, Epi. Car.) round the temple.

Thus this temple named after the Chola emperor by the Nanadesis is a foundation of the days of Kulottunga I (A.D. 1103).

TIRUMANIKKULI

MANIKKYA VARADAR (VAMANAPURISVARAR) 24 TEMPLE

Tirumanikkuli is a village on the Gadilam river, 3 km. from Tirup-padirip-puliyur (i.e. Cuddalore New Town) called in the past the Southern Pataliputra. It was formerly a great Jaina centre with which Appar is associated. Sambandar has a hymn on the Lord here. He calls the place Udavi-Manikkuli and refers to the legend that Vishnu as Vamana (one of His avatars) paid adoration to this Lord, and alludes to it as follows: 'Nedumal kuralangi migavum chittam torukki valipadu seykinra sivalokam'. We get it confirmed by the Periyapuram (Taduttatkonda puranam), which mentions 'Pandu vamananey man irandu Senganavan valiketta Tirumanikkuli'.

In the Manikkyavaradar temple located in this village, there are four inscriptions of the days of Kulottunga I. One, of the 34th year, found in the mandapa (ARE 154 of 1902) records the gift of a lamp. The next, of the 35th year (ARE 156 of 1902), records a gift of two lamps to Surya devar and Kshetrapalar (Bhairavar). Two others, of the 42nd and 49th years, concern the sale of some land (ARE 152 and 160 of 1902).

Vikrama Chola inscriptions, which are seven in number, range from the third to the 13th years; the third year record concerns a gift of land; the next, of the fourth year, refers to a gift of money for two lamps; one, of the sixth year, records a gift of twelve sheep for a lamp. An inscription of the 11th year, found on the west wall of the central shrine (ARE 148 of 1902), records a gift of land. In his twelfth year, Vikrama Chola, during his stay in his palace at Chidambaram, is said to have made a gift of land to an image which he had set up in the temple. We do not know what that image was. Two other inscriptions are incomplete.

There is an inscription in this temple which states that Kulottunga II alias Anapaya made 'Tillai-ma-nagar' (Chidambaram) famous by his celebration of his coronation there. 'Tillai-ma-nagar sirappudait tagat tirumudi sudiya Sri Kulottungasola devar'.

There are seven inscriptions of the days of Kulottunga III. The eighth year inscription (ARE 164 of 1902) is damaged and records a gift of land. The gift of a gold girdle by an Adiyaman is mentioned in an inscription of the 19th year (ARE 161 of 1902). Two of his 21st year record gifts of land (ARE 169 and 170 of 1902).

There are two inscriptions of the days of Rajaraja III. One, of the fifth year, records the gift of a buffalo and calf by a paraiya (harijan).

NARASINGAPURAM

25 LAKSHMI NARASIMHA PERUMAL TEMPLE, NACHCHIYAR SHRINE

Narasingapuram is a village near Kuvam in the Tiruvallur taluk of the Chingleput district. It is 57 km. from Madras City. It is referred to, in inscriptions of the days of Kulottunga I found here, as Madhurantaka-nallur, a village in Kunrur nadu, a subdivision of Manavir kottam.

The local Lakshmi Narasimha Perumal temple consists of two shrines, the subsidiary one being now referred to as the Nachchiyar shrine. On the walls of this shrine are found the earliest Chola inscriptions, all four of the days of Kulottunga I. From one, of the 35th year of Rajakesarivarman alias Kulottunga Choladeva, found on the south wall of the shrine, we learn that a shrine was erected for Rama, Sita and Lakshmana consecrated in the temple of Madhurantaka Vinnagar in Madhurantaka nallur, and a gift of oil for two lamps was made by the inhabitants of Kadarangondasolapuram in Pasali nadu of the same (Manavir) kottam (ARE 244 of 1910). Another, found on the south wall of the shrine, and undated, formally registers and affirms the consecration of the same shrine by an oil-monger (vaniyan) called Pannanandali Surai alias (Sr)iramaduta of Kidarangondasolapuram; mention is also made of provision for lamps and offerings (ARE 245 of 1910). A third, of the 34th year, found on the north wall, registers a gift of land by the inhabitants of Madhurantaka nallur to the God, Goddess and Ilaya-alvar (Lakshmana) in the temple of Madhurantaka Vinnagar Alvar (ARE 249 of 1910). The fourth (ARE 247 of 1910) gives merely a portion of the historical introduction, beginning with pugal madu vilanga, of Kulottunga I. We also have, on the north wall, an inscription of the seventh year of Vikrama Chola, which appears to register a sale of land by the Assembly of Kottur alias Solavichchadira chaturvedimangalam in Kunrur nadu, a subdivision of Manavir kottam in Jayangondasola mandalam (ARE 948 of 1910). Kottur is short for Ilambayam-kottur, where a temple of stone for Siva was built in the days of Rajadhiraja II, as we shall see later.

On the walls of the main shrine, there are seven inscriptions, all relating to the reigns of two Vijayanagara rulers. Virapratapa Achyutayya deva Maharaja (of Saka years 1455, 1456 and 1457) and Vira Venkatapatideva Maharaya (Saka 1530). Of the two earliest (of Saka 1455; ARE 238 and 242 of 1910), one relates to the gift of the village of Periya Puliur alias Narasimhapuram to some brahmanas for the merit of the king, by one Tittara Pillai, on the occasion of the consecration of Lakshmi-Narasimhamurti; the other also concerns a gift of land to brahmanas on the same occasion. An inscription of Saka 1457 (ARE 239 of 1910), found on the south wall of the main shrine, relates to a gift of land to Sri-vaishnavas by the same Tittara Pillai for the merit of 'Periyasvami Narasa Nayaka' (the father and predecessor of the king), on the occasion of the consecration of the image of Prahlada Purandhara (to be taken in procession) in the "Lakshmi Narasimha Perumal temple at Kuvam- Tyagasamudra-nallur* alias Narasanayakapuram in Kunrur nadu in Tenkarai Manavir kottam in Chandragiri Rajya in Jayangondasola mandalam."

It is not possible for us to conclude on the basis of the available evidence whether the shrine for Rama, Sita and Lakshmana consecrated in the days of Kulottunga I, was itself the Madhurantaka Vinnagar of the inscriptions on its walls, or whether it was built (as a subsidiary shrine) in the campus of a then extant Vishnu temple of that name. It is however clear that the present main shrine was consecrated to Lakshmi Narasimha Perumal in the Vijayanagara days (presumably in honour of Narasa Raja) and that, at that time, the other shrine (then perhaps in disuse) originally dedicated to Rama in the days of Kulottunga I was converted into a subsidiary shrine for Nachchiyar (the Divine Consort in Vaishnavite temples).

TRISULAM

26 DHARMAPURISVARAR (TIRUCH-CHURAM UDAIYA NAYANAR) TEMPLE

Trisulam is a small village situated about 3 km. from the railway station of Pallavaram near the city of Madras. The local Siva temple faces east. The original temple consisted only of the garbhagriha and the ardhamandapa. It is apsidal both in the garbhagriha portion and in its superstructure. The Amman shrine and the madil are later additions.

There is an inscription on the lintel of the entrance to the temple. It reads "Tiruch-churam Udaiyar", which seems to be the old name of the deity of this temple. With the exception of an inscription of the 38th regnal year of Maravarman Kulasekhara Pandya of the 13th century, all the other (thirteen) inscriptions belong to the Later Chola period. They range from the time of Kulottunga I to that of Rajaraja III. The earliest is one of the 36th year and 107th day of Kulottunga I (SII, VII, No. 538; ARE 312 of 1901). It concerns a tiru-mukham (a royal order) of 'Sungam tavirtta Kulottunga sola deva'. The temple is called that of 'Udaiyar Tiruchchuram Udaiya Nayanar situated in Pallapuram alias Vanavan Mahadevi chaturvedimangalam in Churattur nadu, a subdivision of Puliyur kottam alias Kulottungasola valanadu, a part of Jayangondasola mandalam. According to the inscription, the priest and the temple servants petitioned that the worship in the temple had come to a stand-still and prayed for the revival of the celebration of the temple festival. At the request of Vanarajan, the king made a gift, as devadana, of 41 velis of land in the village of Munnalur which was renamed Tiru-nirru-chola-nallur (after one of the surnames of Kulottunga I). Another, of his 38th regnal year (ARE 317 of 1901), makes provision for two twilight lamps, while a third inscription (whose regnal year is lost) mentions a gift of land by the local Mahasabha for the midnight service of the Lord (ardhajamam).

There are four inscriptions of the days of Vikrama Chola in this temple. In the inscription of his ninth regnal year, the 'Urom' of Manarpakkam made a gift of land (972 kuli in extent) called Tiruch-chura-vilagam for food offerings (ARE 314 of 1911). One, of his 14th regnal year, mentions a gift of land for food offerings to Palliyarai Nampirattiyar, the Consort of the Lord. In the 37th regnal year of Tribhuvana Vira deva (Kulottunga III, A.D. 1215), the Vanigar-nagarattar of Poondamalli alias Uyyakkondasolapuram made a gift of various temple utensils to Tiruchchuram Udaiya Nayanar; all other inscriptions relate to gifts for lamps.

The following chart brings out the features of the devakoshta figures and the respective torana figures of this temple:

Brahma has lotuses in the two upper hands, and the other two hands are in the abhaya and the varada poses. There are some interesting panels of sculptures above the kodungai and in line with the vyala-vari at the corners; they are, on the right: a cow pouring milk over a Linga (Gokarnesvarar), Brahma worshipping a Linga, and Kannappa pulling out his eye; and on the left: an elephant worshipping a Linga, Vali worshipping a Linga, and a monkey riding a crocodile.

This temple, built in the northern part of the (Chola) empire, in the region known as Tondaimandalam, also belongs to the days of Kulottunga I, and its interesting feature is its apsidal structure, a regional characteristic of Tondaimandalam.

SOLAPURAM

- 27 1. KASI VISVANATHAR TEMPLE
 (KULOTTUNGASOLISVARAM)
2. KAILASANATHAR TEMPLE
3. BHAIKAVAR (SIVA) TEMPLE

The village of Solapuram which is in the Kumbakonam taluk of the Tanjavur district lies at a distance of 9 km. in a northerly direction from Kumbakonam on the Kumbakonam-Lower Anicut route which is now part of the State Highway from Kumbakonam to Madras. On the same road about a km further north of Solapuram is another village of importance called Manambadi. In the 10th, 11th and 12th centuries, these two villages were part of a common mercantile village known as Viranarayanapuram. In the days of the Middle Cholas (i.e., from A.D. 850 to 1070) this village bore the earlier name of Ilaichchikkudi as we find this village being referred to in the inscriptions of Rajendra I by this name, alias Viranarayanapuram. Today, however, there are two distinct villages known as Manambadi and Solapuram, separated by a km distance between them. There are five main temples in these two villages and four of them are in Solapuram and one in Manambadi.

In Solapuram, as the State highway from Kumbakonam to the Lower Anicut (which runs through the village) meanders through the town, it takes an easterly turn for a distance of a hundred metres or so before continuing in a northerly direction; and as one proceeds from the local bazaar in the direction of Manambadi, there is a totally abandoned temple lying to the north (left) of the road. This temple is locally called Kasi Visvanathar temple. In addition, on the right hand side (i.e., east of the town bazaar which is on the State highway), there are two more temples adjoining each other, having a common sacred tank in front of them. They both face east; the one on the southern side is a less damaged, tolerably well-preserved temple known as the Kailasanathar temple; worship is still conducted here; the northern temple is totally abandoned, and except the garbhagriha portion, is in ruins. Locally called the Bhairavar temple,* it is now completely surrounded by encroachments and has to be approached through forcibly occupied cultivated land. All these three temples are of stone and belong to the Chola period.

Besides these, there is a fourth temple which is dedicated to Vishnu and is called the temple of Venkatachalapati Perumal. It lies to the west of the town (and the main bazaar street). The temple is in a state of disuse and decay. There is a sacred tank at the rear of the temple. The mulavar (the main deity) is a standing figure of Vishnu.

We may take up these temples for detailed study.

1. Kasi-Visvanathar Temple (Kulottungasolisvaram)

The temple faces east. It is in a state of utter disrepair. It consists of the garbhagriha, the ardhamandapa and the mukhamandapa. The garbhagriha is a square of 3.42 metres to a side. The srivimana is an eka-tala structure. The main cella is of stone. But the griva and sikhara are of brick. Both are round in cross section. The bhadrasala is 1.22 metres broad and projects forward; the karna faces are 1.10 metres wide. The niche on the south wall of the garbhagriha which must have housed a Dakshinamurti icon is now empty. The image has fallen from the niche and is now half-buried at the foot of the niche. In the grivakoshta there is a figure of Dakshinamurti in brick and stucco. In the western niche on the garbhagriha wall there should have been a figure of Vishnu; but it is now missing; in the corresponding (western) griva-koshta however, there is a diminutive figure of Vishnu. The garbhagriha devakoshta figure of Brahma in the west is, however, intact; but the griva-koshta Brahma is somewhat displaced from its rightful niche and finds a place to the east of it.

The false antarala between the garbhagriha and the ardhamandapa is adorned with a beautiful koshta-panchara. On the walls of the ardhamandapa both the niche figures, namely Ganapati in the south and Durga in the north, are intact and are good specimens of stone sculpture of the period.

The mahamandapa has partially collapsed and the roof is missing. There is a stray panel of Jyeshtha devi on the northern wall of the mahamandapa.

The adhishtanam, common to both the garbhagriha and the ardhamandapa, consists of the upanam, padmam, kandam, kumudam, varimanam and vari mouldings.

The only inscription found in this temple is engraved on the west and south faces of the adhishtanam over the jagati and padma mouldings and is partially buried in earth.

Of the parivara-devata shrines, only the Chandesvarar shrine is in existence, in a bad shape though. It is a brick structure. The stone image inside faces west and has thus been interfered with at some unknown point of time. The temple is surrounded by a thick madil and at its south-western corner is an image of Ganapati. A stray loose headless Bhairava image is found close to it. In the north-western corner is an image of Gajalakshmi. It is buried neck deep in debris. The gopuram in the east is without a superstructure.

The inscription referred to earlier (ARE 99 of 1931-32) is dated in the 38th year of Rajakesarivarman Kulottunga deva (I), whose prasasti begins with pugal sulnda punari. It mentions the remission, by the Nagarattars of Viranarayanapuram, of taxes on certain lands purchased by some persons for the temple of Kulottungasolisvaram. The inscription refers to this town of Viranarayanapuram as being located in Milalai nadu in Vadagarai Virudaraja-bhayankara valanadu (Virudaraja-bhayankara is a biruda or title or surname of Kulottunga I). The valanadu (district) was situated north of the Kaveri and hence was called Vadagarai Virudaraja-bhayankara valanadu (Vada = north, kara = bank). In the days of Rajendra I, this valanadu (or district) was known as that of Rajendrasimha (a surname of Rajaraja I).

This temple is thus a definitely dated temple and must have come into being before the 38th year of Kulottunga I (A.D. 1108).

The local villagers have shown considerable enthusiasm for the renovation of the temple and I have requested the Director of Archaeology of Tamil Nadu Government to take up the conservation of this important temple on a priority basis.

2. Kailasanathar temple

This temple, and the Bhairavar temple to be taken up next, adjoin each other and have many common and many totally different features. The former consists of a garbhagriha, a false antarala, an ardhamandapa and a second antarala, constituting the original composition; a mahamandapa with a manimandapa in front of it has been added subsequently; these two separate components have been dovetailed into each other without any attempt to integrate the mouldings of the *adhishtanam*s or *upapitham*s of the two. In the antarala of the original composition, we notice the side entrances, that have since been closed, possibly after the mahamandapa was added, and access to the temple has been provided by similar side entrances to the foremost hall, viz., the manimandapa. We concern ourselves here only with the original composition.

The srivimana is an all-stone structure and consists of a high upapitham with plain mouldings supporting an ornate adhishtanam consisting of a token upanam, a padmam, a curvilinear kumudam, a yali frieze and a vari. The garbhagriha walls are segmented by octagonal pilasters and cantons mounted with a kumudam, padmam and palagai (in two layers, octagonal below and square above) followed by the tenoned corbel and the uttiram. In the prastara portion, there are the usual elements, the bhutagana frieze, the cornice with massive kudus mounted with simha-mukhas and then the yali frieze above. The srivimana is eka-tala with kutas in the corners and salas in the centre on each side of the hara over the garbhagriha walls. The griva and the sikhara are octagonal, nandis adorning the corners of the platform over which the griva rises. The stupi is missing. The garbhagriha walls are divided into three bays and in the recesses between them are kumbha-pancharas; the niche deities are: Dakshinamurti in the south, Vishnu in the west (rear) and Brahma in the north. Ganapati and Durga are housed in the south and north niches of the ardhamandapa. The flanking bays of this hall are bare and bereft of any icons, unlike the Kasi Visvanathar temple, dealt with earlier. The mouldings of the adhishtanam and the upapitham of the ardhamandapa are the same as, and a continuation of, those of the garbhagriha, establishing the unity of composition.

There is an improvised mandapa in front of the Dakshinamurti icon on the garbhagriha wall; and the gargoyle in the north wall is supported by a conch-blowing bhutagana, as found in the Kasi Visvanathar temple and also in the Bhairavar temple which we shall discuss shortly, indicating coequality.

There is an Amman shrine to the north of the Siva temple.

It belongs to another age.

Both the shrines are encompassed in a common compound wall. They are under worship and are in a good state of repair.

There are no inscriptions in this temple; we have to take recourse to iconic and art and architectural characteristics to deduce the age. Taking all aspects together like the mouldings of the adhishtanam, the prastara features as well as the general iconic features, we could assign this temple to the age of Kulottunga I.

3. Bhairavar Temple

As mentioned earlier, this (Siva) temple is an excellent specimen of the Kulottungan style of temple architecture; at the time of our first visit, the temple was overwhelmed by vegetation (as may be seen from the photographs) and encroached on all sides by paddy fields. The Tamilnadu Director of Archaeology has since taken up its conservation, which is in progress as this book goes to the press. Our gratitude to him.

The temple consists of a srivimana, all-stone from pitham to stupi, reminiscent of Gangaikondasolisvaram at Kulambandal (Rajendra I's temple) with an antarala (nominal), an ardhamandapa, a mukhamandapa and a manimandapa or a second antarala with gateways on its south and north flanks. There is an agramandapa in ruins further east of the manimandapa, and this is shared between the Amman shrine and the central 'Bhairavar' shrine.

The srivimana of the main temple is ekatala; the garbhagriha rests on an adhishtanam which consists of the upanam, the semi-circular kumudam, and vyala-vari mouldings that are simple, high and majestic. The garbhagriha is square. The entablature consists of a bhutagana frieze, the cornice adorned with kudas and a yali frieze on top. Dakshinamurti, Lingodbhavar and Brahma adorn the garbhagriha niches; the pilasters are square, with massive palagais, over which rest the bevelled corbels. Over the garbhagriha walls there runs a hara containing kutas in the corners and bhadra-salas in the middle of each side. The superstructure, consisting of the griva and the sikhara crowned by a stupi, is octagonal and all-stone. On the walls of the ardhamandapa are some beautiful sculptures—Ganapati, Nataraja and Kankalamurti on the south face, and Ganga-Jathadharar, Durga and Ardhanari on the north wall (in both cases from east to west). A special feature noticed in this temple, not found elsewhere, is the existence of two niche figures on the antarala walls, Bhikshatanar in the south recess and an eight-armed Urdhva-kesa Bhairavar in the north recess constituting the walls of the antarala.

The presence of a gargoyle in the ardhamandapa, below the niche housing Durga on the north wall (this is in addition to the one on the north wall of the garbhagriha) would point to the dual role served by this chamber, i.e., also as a snapana mandapa. In the entrance chamber (second antarala or manimandapa) of the temple which provides access to the shrine through the ardhamandapa and the first antarala, there are two giant man-size dvarapalas (highly damaged and covered by dust and earth), reminiscent of the grandeur of such sculptures of the Middle Chola period.

There are unfortunately no inscriptions in the temple to give us a clue to dating it precisely; therefore, we have to fall back exclusively on architectural and iconographic characteristics and iconic disposition to assess the date.

In this context, it would be worthwhile to examine a few temples which share many characteristics with this temple; Ramanathankoyil near Palayarai, for instance, has a similar temple named in ancient days 'Panchavan Madevisvaram', where the ardhamandapa images are Bhikshatanar and Ganapati (in the south) and Gangadharar, Durga and Ardhanari (in the north). There are no sculptures in the recesses between the ardhamandapa and the garbhagriha. A similar disposition of niche sculptures is found in the Isvarar temple (Kulottungasolisvaram) at Chintamani-Agaram near Villupuram (dealt with in Sec. 47 of Ch. 2). They are: Bhikshatanar, Ganapati and Urdhvatandavamurti (in the south, east to west) and Alinginamurti, Durga and Bhairavar in the north (both sets on the ardhamandapa walls). A third temple falling in this group is one at Manambadi, a kilometre or so from Solapuram. We deal with it in the supplement to this book (Sec. 2). This temple is attributable to the days of

	South wall	North wall
E	Bhikshatanar	Ganga-Jathadharar	E
to	Nataraja	Durga	to
W	Ganapati	Ardhanari	W

Here again the ardhamandapa-garbhagriha recess does not have any niche or icon, thus resembling Panchavan Madevisvaram. A comparative chart of the iconic disposition in these four temples is given below for convenience of study:

Place	Niche-figures on the ardhamandapa walls
	South			North
Manambadi	Bhiksha- tanar	Nataraja	Ganapati	Gangajatha- dharar	Durga	Ardhanari
Ramanathan- koyil	Bhiksha- tanar	?	Ganapati	Gangajatha- dharar	Durga	Ardhanari
Chintamani Agaram	Bhiksha- tanar	Ganapati	Urdhva- Tandava- murti	Uma-Alingina- murti	Durga	Bhairavar
Bhairavar temple, Solapuram	Ganapati	Nataraja	Kankala murti	Gangajatha- dharar	Durga	Ardhanari

Besides the special feature of having Kankalamurti on the ardhamandapa wall, the additional ones of recess-niche images of Urdhva-kesa Bhairavar and Bhikshatanar here suggests an evolution in iconic disposition that would bring this temple to the days of Kulottunga I; had there been no recess icons, it would be attributable to the days of Rajendra I or his immediate successors. The latter possibility gets support from the presence of two massive dvarapalas on the eastern entrance to the ardhamandapa from the outer (second) antarala (which as mentioned earlier functions as a manimandapa) providing access from the flanks (cf. the Rajarajesvaram at Tanjavur) to the ardhamandapa and the sanctum. There is yet another feature that one notices on close study, viz., the absence of formal niches with pilasters in the a perpetual lamp and certain lands whose details are specified (83 ibid.).

This temple is thus a foundation of the days of Kulottunga I, and named after one of the local chiefs.

CHELLURU

VISHNU TEMPLE

Chelluru is a village in the Kakinada taluk of the East Godavari district in Andhra Pradesh. It is about 40 km. from the district headquarters of Rajahmundry in a south-westerly direction, approached through the village of Pasalapundi; the more famous ancient city of Draksharama is also approached through the same village, being in a south-easterly direction from there.

There are two temples in the village of Chelluru, one dedicated to Siva and the other to Vishnu; the latter is called that of Sri Gopalakrishnasvami.

In ancient days, it was in the heart of Vengirashtra. Some decades back, a copper plate grant consisting of five leaves (plates) was found in the possession of the 'karnam' (the village servant) of this village, which turned out to be a grant of Vira Chola made in his 21st year (A.D. 1100). It throws much light on the Eastern Chalukyan rulers of Vengi (ll. 26 to 46) tracing the descent of Vimaladitya (Kundavai's husband) from Kubja Vishnuvardhana and then traces the links of the Later Eastern Chalukyas with the Tanjavur Suryavamsa Cholas (ll. 47 to 78).

This grant conveys an order addressed by the Mahamandalesvara Vira Choda deva (l. 79) alias Vishnuvardhana (l. 78) to the inhabitants of Guddavati vishaya. It may be mentioned that during the reign of Kulottunga I, his sons were appointed Viceroys of the Vengi province by turns, and one of them, Vira Choda deva alias Vishnuvardhana IX acted as the Viceroy from Saka 1001 (A.D. 1079).

The copper plate grant further mentions that in his 21st regnal year (A.D. 1100), Vira Choda made a grant of a village (whose name is not very clear in the Copper Plate but is probably Kolaru) to a Vishnu temple at the agrahara at Chelluru. According to the grant, this temple was founded by the king's Senapati, Medamarya alias Gunarathabhashana, son of Potana of the Mudgala gotra, who had also excavated a tank in the same village, and founded two feeding houses (sattras) for indigents at Draksharama and Pithapuri, the old name for modern Pithapuram (vide Vira Choda Grant*; SII, I, No. 39). Thus we have evidence of yet another temple built in the Vengi province of the Chola empire during Kulottunga I's time.

*The relevant portion of the Vira Choda Grant says:

(Verse 13)—To these two (Kulottunga I and Madhurantaki) were born (seven) sons, who were as pure as the (seven) streams of the Ganga, who like the (seven) Adityas, had destroyed the darkness (of sin).

(Verse 21)—In the Saka year, which is reckoned by the moon, a pair of cyphers and the moon (i.e., 1001), while the Sun stood in the Lion (Leo), while the moon was waning on the 13th lunar day, which was a Thursday, while Vrischika (Scorpion) was the lagna and Shavana, the nakshatra (asterism), having been anointed to the kingdom of the whole earth, the sinless king, the illustrious Vira Choda, joyfully put on the crown of the world.

(Verse 33)—At holy Draksharama and at the sacred place of Pithapuri, this charitable one (Vira Choda) joyfully founded two sattras for brahmanas, in order that they might daily enjoy their meals (three) till the end of the kalpa.

(Verse 34)—On the north side of the lovely agrahara of good people, which is famed by the name of Chelluru, he whose mind is full of compassion caused to be constructed a large pond which is filled with sweet water.

(Verse 36)—On the west side of that village, this powerful, mighty and charitable chief of the Vaishnavas caused to be built a temple of Vishnu.

(Verse 37)—In this lofty (temple), which is as white as the rays of the moon, which is the abode of splendour (of Lakshmi) and which pleases the eye, the God himself, who is the husband of Lakshmi, made his appearance, his conch and discus being distinctly visible.

The purpose of the grant was to record the gift of the village of Kolaru, for the purpose of meeting the expenses on the daily performance of charu, bali and puja and for the repairs of gaps and cracks and towards this end the lands of the village were exempt from all taxes making it the property of the temple.

The grant ends with the usual imprecations customary to all such grants and warns that any one who shall cause obstruction to this grant will become possessed of the five great sins. The last line of the grant mentions that the sasana was executed by the five ministers, the pancha-pradhanah.

YANNAGUMBA31 RAMESVARA (RAMESVARAM UDAIYAR)
TEMPLE

Yannagumba is a small village in the Chamaraja taluk of the Mysore district (in the Karnataka State). There is a local temple dedicated to Ramesvara. In the early days, the deity was known by the name of Ramesvaram Udaiyar.

On a stone close to this temple, there is an inscription dated in the 40th year of Kulottunga I, portions of which read as follows:

"In the 40th regnal year of Chakravartin Kulottunga Chola deva, Malana of Erumaikumba in Ennai nadu, in the Gangaikondachola valanadu of the Mudikondasola Mandala, Nagan . . . kondachola gamunda, ruler of the Gangaikondachola valanadu and Kachchala Kongavela, made a grant of land for the great god Ramesvaram Udaiyar of engalur (our village). And the Udaiyar of the matha in this village, Devasiva Pandita's son, Amurtakattar and his four brothers will, for the work of building this temple, receive the tax on grazing, the tax on digging and any other taxes" (197 Chamaraja, Epi. Car.).

Thus, we can conclude that, at 'Engalur' in Ennai nadu, in Gangaikondasola valanadu in Mudikondasola mandalam, in the year A.D. 1110, a temple was built, dedicated to Ramesvaram Udaiyar. Now the deity is called Ramesvara and the village Yannagumba.

MELAKKADAMBUR

32 AMRITAGHATESVARAR TEMPLE

Melakkadambur is an obscure village in the Chidambaram taluk of the South Arcot district. It is about 32 km. by road from Chidambaram and 4 km. from Kattumannarkoyil (or Kattumannargudi) which was a city founded by Parantaka I and named Viranarayanapuram or Viranarayana chaturvedimangalam after one of his surnames. It is 6.5 km. north-west of Omampuliyur.

About a kilometre and a half in an easterly direction from this temple is Kadambur-Ilangoyil, a vaippu-stalam.

At Melakkadambur, there is a Siva temple which is at least as old as the days of the Tamil saint Appar of the 7th century A.D. He has sung hymns on this Lord. He called the place Tirukkadambur and the temple here Karakkoyil. According to local tradition, Indra is said to have worshipped the Lord here and obtained nectar; hence the temple has the alternate current name of Amritaghatesvaram. A fragmentary inscription found on one of the slabs used in the pavement of the prakara of this temple gives Kadambur the alternate name of Uttama Chola chaturvedi-mangalam (ARE 112 of 1946-47). Thus, it is clear that a temple was in existence at the site even during the Early Chola period.

On the outer wall of the ardhamandapa, below the sculptures of Agastya and Ardhanari, is found an inscription of the 43rd year of Kulottunga I beginning with one of his many historical introductions, Pugal madu vilanga (ARE 110 of 1946-47). It records the provision made for burning a perpetual lamp by the Mahesvaras of the temple which is mentioned as being located at Mekkattuk-kadambur in Virudarajabhayankara valanadu, for six kasus received by them from Iraiyr Kilavan alias Eraman Sanan of Iraiyr situated in Velima nadu in Urrukkattuk kottam included in Jayangondasola mandalam. There is also an earlier inscription of Kulottunga I dated in his 41st year. It is thus clear that this temple was an Early Chola one rebuilt of stone sometime before his 41st or, in the latest, 43rd year (A.D. 1113). This gets confirmation from the style of its architecture and sculptures.

The temple faces east. After passing through the main gateway of the gopuram, one finds the porch and a closed mandapa of a later period, in which are housed a number of fine old bronzes.

On reaching the southern prakara, there bursts into view a unique monument of Dravidian art, a graceful temple in its original form covered with sculptures almost from the bottom to the top, a veritable sculpture-gallery of the early twelfth century A.D. It is in sharp contrast to many other temples, whose pristine glory has been greatly altered, if not completely spoiled, by the modern renovator.

This temple is planned in the shape of a chariot on wheels, two on each side, drawn by caparisoned horses in a prancing posture. It was conceived of as a heavenly chariot come down to earth with the Lord as its occupant.

The main structure of the temple rests on an upapitham on whose sides are placed the wheels of the chariot on axles, realistically carved.

Above it rises the adhishtanam consisting of a few mouldings: the upanam, the padmam, the kandam, the kumudam with ribbed edges and the agarappattiyal. There are panels of bas-reliefs between the last two.

The temple as rebuilt in the days of Kulottunga I consists of the garbhagriha and the ardhamandapa. There are three devakoshtas on the walls of the garbhagriha. The deities housed in these niches are Dakshinamurti (south), Vishnu (west) and Brahma (north). Each devakoshta has a projecting porch which rests on two tall pillars. It has a cornice, adorned with an ornamental kudu on its facade. Above the cornice is a frieze of yalis with twisted tails. Each devakoshta is crowned with a huge decorated kudu with a simhalalatam as its top (kirtimukha).

Each of the big kudus has, as an inset, a panchara (like a turret) with a deity housed in it; and the top of the kudu touches the cornice of the second tala, and from behind the kudu rises the second tala; there is a figure-niche flanked by a rearing lion (sardula) on each side.

On the outer walls of the ardhamandapa, there are two more devakoshtas adorned with porches resting on pillars, similar to those of the garbhagriha but not projecting so prominently forward. Ardhanari (south) and Alinginamurti (north) are housed in these niches.

The walls of the garbhagriha and the ardhamandapa are covered with sculptures in bas relief. Ganapati and Agastya are found one on either side of the Ardhanari-koshta (on the south face). The squat standing figure of Ganapati has four hands, holding ankusa, pasa, a broken tusk and a sweet cake respectively. Agastya, a burly figure, is seated, with his two hands carrying the akshamala and the kamandalu. He has jatamakuta and necklaces and he wears an udarabandha round his corpulent belly. His drapery is vividly indicated by wavy lines. Uma-Sahitar is in another niche. Correspondingly on the north side, there are sculptures of Bhikshatanar, Alinginamurti, Gangadharar, and Durga. A description of these icons is given later in the section.

Further, on the walls of the temple, there are a series of sculptures of rishis and devatas who are believed to have done penance in this place during the various aeons (yugas). Under the base of each figure, there is a label in Tamil and Grantha characters of the twelfth century giving the name of the figure. These are the names inscribed: Oromaya Maharishi (Romapada), Devendra, Surya and Chandra in the Treta Yuga, Parvataraja and the Ashta-kula-parvatas in the Dvapara Yuga and Patanjali-deva in the Kali Yuga. A similar tradition is found in Brahmadesam, in the North Arcot district. An inscription found on the north wall of the temple of Chandramoulisvarar there registers the building of that temple in the Kali Yuga at the spot where Agni, Chandra and Romasamuni worshipped the God Pondanatha in the Krita, Treta and Dvapara Yugas (ARE 196 of 1915; also 109 of 1946-47).

Below the cornice of the first tala, there are bracket figures resting on the palagai of the pilasters. They comprise rampant lions and dancing female figures in supple as well as vigorous poses.

The second tala rests on the walls of the garbhagriha. In earlier Chola temples, generally a series of miniature shrines called salas (rectangular in shape and wagon-roofed) in the centre and karnakutas (square shrines with curvilinear *sikhara*s) on either side of the sala are mounted in the first tala over the garbhagriha wall. There are no such miniature shrines in this temple. But there are four figure-niches (koshtas) in each of the main cardinal points; further, there are four pancharas (a single tala porch with cornice, griva, cupola-like sikhara, and circular stupi), one at each of the four corners, between the koshtas. There is a rearing lion on either side of the panchara. The arrangement of the second tala here is unique, and marks a new stylistic development in Dravidian architecture.

The outer side of the cornice of the second tala has a corrugated finish and is octagonal in shape. Over another yali frieze rests the griva. There are four figure-niches and four sculptures in the round. Local people say that these are dikpalakas, but it has not been possible for us to verify this. The present sikhara is circular, with four kudus at the cardinal points. It is, however, of recent origin and it seems likely that the original sikhara was also octagonal so as to be in harmony with the cornice of the second tala. The copper stupi is also modern.

The pilasters are heavy and octagonal in shape. Each of them, including the shaft, is covered with scrolls and sculptures in bas-relief. The base has a floral scroll. Above this there is a sculpture-panel with two lions at the end and with three crowning elements; again another set of panels of miniature-sculptures like Urdhva-Tandava of Nataraja, Lingodbhavar, and other figures. The kalasam (of the pilasters) is also octagonal and adorned with scrolls. Equally so, the kumudam. Above this there is a well-developed padma-idal (lotus-petal) on which rests the thin palagai (abacus). Bracket-figures—dancing figures with players on musical instruments—adorn the gap between the palagai and the cornice.

Sculptures:

This temple is rich in sculptures which could be definitely dated. The more important ones are briefly described below:

Jnana Dakshinamurti: This image of Siva is placed in the southern koshta of the garbhagriha. Siva sits under a spreading tree, his right leg resting on his left thigh. He wears a kesabandha and the matted ends of his locks fall on both sides of his head. His front right hand is in the chinmudra pose, and he holds a pustaka, a sarpa and agni in his other hands. Nandi is to the proper right, and the Apasmara-purusha is pressed down under the right foot.

Durga: The sculpture is in a northern devakoshta. The head of the buffalo is shown separately below the pedestal on which the Devi stands. There is a spirited lion (her vehicle) behind her. She wears a karanda-makuta, necklaces, a breast-band, the channavira, armlets and wristlets. The antariya is well-designed. She has six hands. Her front right hand is in abhaya pose; the other two right hands carry khadga, and chakra with flames on its rim. The front left hand is in the katyavalambita pose and, of the other two left hands, one carries sankha with flames and the other is in the kataka pose.

Ardhanari: "When Siva is united to Sakti, He is able to create; otherwise He is unable even to move," says Sankaracharya. This figure has two hands on the right and one on the left. Though this sculpture is not as good as its counterparts on the Dharmaraja Ratha, at the Nagesvara temple at Kumbakonam and at the Muvarkoyil at Kodumbalur, this is a good specimen of the twelfth century A.D.

Alinginamurti: The Devi is seated on the lap of Siva. Siva has knicker-like dhoti and Parvati has drapery with wavy folds. Siva's yajnopavita is a thick band. His right hand is extended to the Devi's chin in a caressing gesture.

Gangadhara: This panel represents Siva receiving the Ganga, and Parvati is in an agitated and jealous mood on seeing Her rival.

Ganapati: In addition to the devakoshta Ganapati with four hands, there is another, more interesting, one. It is a sitting figure in the sub-shrine in the south-west corner of the temple. The right leg is raised and the left bent. It has two hands and the right holds a broken tusk, and the left a noose. It is a valampuri type of Ganapati. Perhaps this is a Parivaradevata figure of the old Early Chola temple. There is also a stone sculpture of Bhairavi in the premises of the temple.

Bas reliefs:

There are a few scenes from the lives of the Tamil saints depicted in bas-relief on the plinth. One depicts a linga worshipped by devotees. In another, an old man is shown prostrate before a young man who wields an axe. It seems to tell the story of Chandesvara who, offended at the insult to the linga offered by his father, cut off his father's leg. Another batch seems to depict two stories. One panel portrays a person trying to prise out an eyeball with an arrow, in the presence of the linga. It is an illustration of the story of Kannappa Nayanar. By its side there is a linga in a slanting position, and a person with the help of a rope tries to restore it to its upright position. This illustrates the legend of a female devotee named Tatakai connected with the Lord of the temple of Tiruppanandal. She used to adorn the Lord with a garland every day. It so happened one day that her saree slipped at the time of her adoration. The Lord, to protect her modesty, turned His face away. The efforts of all the local people including the king failed to bring the linga to its original upright position. At last the efforts of Kunkiliyakkalaya Nayanar were crowned with success.

Bronzes:

There are some fine bronzes also in this temple. The Alinginamurti is a fine set and may belong to the Early Chola period. Saint Manikkavachakar, Bhikshatanar, Vrishabhavahanar, Nataraja and dancing Balasubrahmanyar may be assigned to about the twelfth century A.D. Parvati may be of a later period.

Pala Nataraja: There is another interesting bronze, of Siva dancing on Nandi. The style of the figures, the prabha and the attendant deities seem to indicate its Pala origin. It is likely to have been a trophy brought by Rajendra I in the course of his expedition to the Gangetic delta and presented to this temple (situated so close to the new Chola capital of Gangaikondasolapuram). There is a similar sculpture in the Dacca Museum which P.R. Srinivasan has reproduced in Roopa Lekha (Vol. XXVI, No. 2, Fig. 1, against page 6). It is also of Siva dancing on Nandi. It has ten hands. It is in the chatura pose. There is no Apasmara Purusha to dance on, as in South Indian figures. The right hand—not the left—is in the gajahasta posture. Both the sculptures carry the same weapons, though some hands of the Dacca Museum sculpture are broken. There is an additional chain of bells attached to the hind portion of the Dacca figure. Two Gandharvas with garlands in their hands are shown flying, in the prabha portion. While there is only Parvati by the side of Siva in the Dacca sculpture, the Melakkadambur bronze has eight small devotees keeping step with the Divine Dancer. This metal is similar in form to, but more graceful, less ornamented and has better finish than, the Dacca sculpture. This posture of the dancing Siva was popular in Bengal in the 9th and 10th centuries A.D. (See also plate XLIV, Siva dancing on Nandi, Chapter IX, Art of Bengal, and Trouvailles de Nedoungadou, Tandavas of Siva by P.Z. Pattabhiramin, Pondicherry). There is a figure of Siva dancing on Nandi in the Papanasi temple in the Lingaraja temple campus at Bhubaneswar, and another in the Kapilesvara temple situated $1\frac{1}{2}$ km. to the south of the Lingaraja temple. (See Archaeological Remains at Bhubaneswar by K.C. Panigrahi, pp. 49–50 and 175.)

A New Architectural Tradition:

This brief account will bring out the noteworthy features of this temple. It is a dated one built before the forty-first year of Kulottunga I. It is in stone and its vimana is fashioned like a chariot—the earliest experiment in this new style of temple architecture so far known. The outer walls are studded with sculptures. The devakoshtas have projecting porches surmounted with big kudus which have again niche-figures as insets. The second tala has new features, with koshtas in the centre and pancharas having cupola-like sikharas at the four corners. These features make this temple very important from the point of view of evolution of South Indian architecture. Here Architecture and Sculpture are so intimately blended that their distinction loses its meaning. This is one of the best-preserved and the finest of existing temples of the age of Kulottunga I.

The temple of Balesvar built by Chavundarasa at Haragoudi (about A.D. 1090?) is said to have resembled the vimana of Devendra—which perhaps means that the whole structure was designed as a flying car complete with wheels and horses (See Early History of the Deccan, edited by G. Yazdani—p. 426; SII, IX, (i), 163, pp. 19–20).

A distant descendant of Kulottunga I on the female line and a famous Eastern Ganga ruler, Narasimha, built an incomparable Sun temple in the form of a ratha at Konark (Orissa, 13th century A.D.). There is a Ratha-mandapa at Hampi, and a Garuda shrine in the shape of a ratha at Tadpatri (16th century A.D.) in Andhra Pradesh. Melakkadambur set the pace for the ratha vimana type of temples.

PERAMBAKKAM33 CHOLISVARAR (KULOTTUNGASOLISVARAM UDAIYA MAHADEVAR) TEMPLE

In the central shrine of the Cholisvarar temple at Perambakkam, a village in the Tiruvallur taluk of the Chingleput district, there is an inscription on the second tier of the south wall dated in the 42nd year of a . . . kesarivarman alias Chakravartin Kulottunga Chola deva, who should be identified with Kulottunga I, in view of the high regnal year and also the introduction to the king's prasasti, which begins with the usual expression, pugal madu vilanga. It records the gift of the village of Perumbakkam alias Irattapadikonda-sola-nallur (after a surname of Rajadhiraja I) in Pasalinadu of Manavir kottam, a subdivision of Jayangondasola mandalam, as devadana, free of taxes, to the deity, Kulottunga Cholisvaram Udaiyar of the village, by the Pagai-yaruttu-kondasolar velaikkarakar, evidently the name of a regiment of the Chola army (ARE 68 of 1947-48). A gift of money is made in the 44th year of the same ruler, for burning a lamp before the deity, Kulottunga Solisvaram Udaiya Mahadevar, by one Kuttadi Takkaraisan Telungarayan of the same army unit mentioned above. This record is found on the tiers of the west wall (ARE 69 of 1947-48). On the tiers of the east and the south walls of the central shrine, there are three records of Tribhuvana Chakravartin Tribhuvana Vira deva (Kulottunga III) dated in his 15th, 33rd and 35th years; the first appears to record a donation in money made by a lady to the deity who is still called by the same name; the second records a gift of money for burning a lamp in the temple by a member of the Niyayam of Perumbakkam, and the third registers a gift of lamp by one Sankaranti Pallavaraiyan, again a member of the Niyayam of Perumbakkam to the deity, called in the inscription Kulottunga Cholisvaram Udaiyar (ARE 64, 65, and 66 of 1947-48). There are three inscriptions of a Rajarajadeva, two of them dated in his 10th year and one in his 13th year, which should be ascribed to Rajaraja III. They respectively mention (i) a gift of money for the expenses of burning a lamp by one Arumbanayaka Pallavaraiyan, one of the Niyayattar of the village, (ii) a grant by the Niyayattar of the village, free of taxes, of three velis of land in Anaikattuputtur to Ariya Tolapillai, son of Kuttaya-vandar, one of the Pauttar-pendugal, after receiving 100 kasus, and (iii) that Irumudi Chola Pallavaraiyan alias Udaiya Pillai, one of the Niyaya-mudalis of the village, donated 3 kasus for the expenses of burning a lamp; in these inscriptions, the deity continues to be called Kulottunga Cholisvaram Udaiya Mahadevar (ARE 73, 75 and 72 of 1947-48).

There is an undated inscription on the tiers of the north wall of the shrine recording "the construction of the prakara wall of the temple by Irul-nikkinan with the consent of the Niyayattar of the village" (ARE 74 of 1947-48).

This temple is a dated one and came into existence in the days of Kulottunga I prior to his 42nd year (A.D. 1112) and was named after the emperor himself. We learn of the administration of the village affairs by a local body called Niyayattars, who evidently had quasi-judicial authority as well. Its members also figure as donors in several endowments to the temple. We have evidence of similar bodies in the Chola administrative set-up at the grass-root level, like the alumganattar.

PALAIVANANATHAR TEMPLE

34

Tiruppalaitturai is in the Papanasam taluk of the Tanjavur district, 1.6 km. northeast of Papanasam town. There is a temple here named that of Kshiravanesvarar or Palaivananathar. There is an Amman shrine to the south of this temple.

Appar has sung the praise of this Lord (seventh century A.D.). The Dharukavana rishis (the sages of the Dharuka forest) according to local legends, set up a tiger to attack Lord Siva, who, however, killed the tiger and wore the skin.

There are ten inscriptions on the walls of this temple. The earliest of them (ARE 434 of 1912) is one of the 43rd regnal year of Rajakesarivarman alias Tribhuvana-chakravartin Kulottunga deva I (A.D. 1113). This record registers that at the request of Madhurantakap-paravainattu Muvendavelan, the king granted the remission of antaraya-pattam and other taxes in respect of the devadana village of Tiruch-chirrambalanallur belonging to the temple of Mahadevar of Tiruppalaitturai in Nallur nadu, a subdivision of Nittavinoda valanadu. An inscription of the 10th year of Vikrama Chola (A.D. 1128) mentions a gift of jewels to the temple of Mahadevar at Tiruppalaitturai. There is an inscription (ARE 440 of 1912) of the 12th year and 264th day of Parakesari-varman alias Tribhuvana-chakravartin Rajaraja II (about A.D. 1150). It records a gift of land (kaval-kadu) in the grove called Kunjiran alias Bhuvana-mulududaiyal, under the new name of Rajagambhira-nallur (after a surname of Rajaraja II), for worship in the temple and for maintaining a flower garden. Reference is also made in this inscription to the revenue survey (nila-alavu) of the 16th year of 'Sungam-tavirtta-devar' (Kulottunga I).

There are three inscriptions of Kulottunga III. One, of his 4th regnal year (ARE 439 of 1912), mentions that a person called Periya-devan Nambi of Pennagadam, who had proprietary rights in the devadana villages of Tiruch-chirrambalanallur and Rajagambhira-nallur, consecrated the shrines of Periya devar and Nachchiyar in this temple, evidently named after the donor, and made a gift of gold jewels. Another, of his 12th year and 93rd day (ARE 441 of 1912), registers the distribution and assignment of lands in the village of Kuladipa-nayaka-puram with the corporate consent of the Saliya (weaver) merchants and this arrangement was engraved on the walls of the temple. The third inscription, which is of the 15th regnal year, is very much damaged. The last Chola inscription, of the 28th regnal year of Rajaraja III (A.D. 1244), mentions that the shrine of Tirujnana-Sambanda-Isvaram Udaiyar was consecrated in the eastern verandah of the temple of Tiruppalaitturai Udaiyar by one Neela Gangaraiyan and it adds that a gift of land by purchase was made in the villages of Tiruch-chirrambala-nallur and Raja-gambhira-nallur to this newly built shrine.

MADIVALA

GANGADHARESVARA (GANGAIKONDA-ISVARAM UDAIYA MAHADEVAR) TEMPLE 35

In the village Madivala in the Malur taluk of the Kolar district in Karnataka State there is a temple of Gangadharesvara. In ancient days the deity of the temple was called Gangaikonda-isvaram Udaiya Mahadevar.

On the wall to the left of the doorway to the temple, there is an inscription in Grantha and Tamil characters, which begins with the introduction Pugal madu vilanga Jayamadu virumba etc. It mentions that in the 43rd year of the reign of Kov-Irajakesarippanmar alias emperor Sri Kulottunga Choladeva, one Rajarajan Kulottungasolan alias Kulottungasola Atimurkkachchengirai, granted as devadana for the god Gangaikonda-isvaram-udaiya Mahadevar of Maaliyur, in Kurukkundaadachchi nadu of Vikkirmasola mandalam, certain lands, specified, together with all kinds of taxes, some named, along with the one veli of land granted as a devadana to provide for offerings of rice for the same god by Rajarajan Piraan alias Rajendrasola Atimurkkachchengirai, lord of Kulalur alias Jayavarmanallur in Arikesari valanadu (Epi. Car., Kolar, Malur tq. 101—dated in A.D. 1112). On the basement of the same temple to the south, there is an inscription in Tamil and Grantha characters which relates to the third regnal year of 'Posaviraamanaa-Devar' (possibly a reference to the Hoysala ruler Vira Ramanatha). It mentions that one Madhurantakasola Viruvinaldalvar alias Paalaandai Naayan granted certain lands, specified, for a perpetual lamp and for morning offerings of rice for the god Gangesvaram Udaiyar (98, ibid). In the 38th regnal year of the same ruler, one Aludaiyar, son of Taamaraikilaar Ambalavar, granted for the god Gangisuram Udaiya nayanar of Madaivilagam in Maaliyur certain lands below the tank named Ponnambalap-putteri (99, ibid). This inscription is found in the same place as the former.

To the north-east of the temple, there is again a Grantha and Tamil character inscription, which is of general interest; Prata-pachakravarti Poysala Villala devan addresses the following petition to the heads of mathas and sthanikas in the temples situated in the Mesar Kundaani kingdom, Virivi nadu, Masandi nadu, Murusa nadu, Sokkanayan Paruru, Pennaiyaandaarmada nadu, Aimbulugur nadu, Elavur nadu, Kuvalala nadu, Kaivara nadu, Ilaiyakka nadu and all other nadus that from 'the date specified, we have remitted all kinds of taxes, several named, hitherto paid on the gifts to temples—devadanam, tiruvidaiyattam, madappuram and pallichchandam—of our kingdom and granted, with pouring of water', (such and such) vibhavanas for (such and such) gods 'to provide for worship, offerings of rice, enjoyments and temple repairs.'

From these inscriptions we gather that towards the closing years of Kulottunga I's rule in this region, A.D. 1112, there was a temple at Maaliyur village, in Kurukkuntadachchi nadu, in Vikramasola mandalam, the deity of which bore the name of Gangaikondisvaram Udaiya Mahadeva; it could have come into existence in the middle or late 11th century as the name indicates. It was named after either Rajendra I himself or one of the chiefs of this region who bore the name of Gangaikondasolan. This is a Chola period temple.

We know of a Setti family, in this region, who were evidently chiefs of the nadu; the members of two successive generations of this family bore the title of Gangaikondasola gamundan. The father Paalaiyan Setti built a temple called Gangaikonda-sola-isvaram Udaiya Mahadevar temple at Chilakalanerpu, nearby, and so it may be a safe guess that this temple at Madivala (which is perhaps a corruption of Madaivilagam) could have come into existence during their time (i.e. about the turn of the 11th century) (see section 29 on Chilakalanerpu).

SURYA TEMPLE (KULOTTUNGA-SOLA-MARTTANDA-ALAYAM)

Suryanarkoyil is close to the town of Kumbakonam in the Tanjavur district, and the village takes its name after the local temple, dedicated to Surya deva (the Sun god) and the attendant planetary deities. This Surya temple is the only one of its kind in South India; though we have numerous temples with shrines therein dedicated to the Sun god, we have nowhere else an independent temple for this deity.

There are two inscriptions of Kulottunga I on the base of the mukhamandapa. According to one of them, this temple is called the Kulottunga-sola-marttanda-alayam, the temple of the Sun god named after Kulottunga I. This inscription, of his 44th regnal year, begins with the historical introduction of Pugal sulnda punari. It records a royal order granting the accountantship of the village of Dammadana-vinoda chaturvedimangalam and the devadana village of Suryadeva to the highest bidder. The other, of his 48th year and 245th day, beginning with the historical introduction Pugal madu vilanga, also records a royal order, granting the accountantship of all the devadana lands of Suryadeva to two private individuals. There is a third inscription, of the days of the Vijayanagara ruler Krishnadeva Raya (16th century), which records a gift of land made tax-free by a vassal of the emperor on behalf, and for the merit, of Krishnadeva Raya (ARE 229, 231 and 230 of 1927; ARE 1908, para 60, p. 78).

Kulottunga I was on friendly terms with the rulers of the Gahadwal dynasty of Kannauj (A.D. 1090–1194) who were fervent devotees of Suryadeva. In the Chola capital of Gangaikonda-cholapuram there is an incomplete inscription of one of these rulers; it may pertain to Madanapala or his son Govinda Chandra and is coupled with the 41st regnal year of Kulottunga I; though there is no clear indication of the nature of the grant, the association of the Gahadwal rulers of Kannauj with Kulottunga I is well-established. And it is legitimate to infer that the Gahadwals might have been responsible for the propagation of Sun worship in South India during the reign of Kulottunga I. The temple of the Sun God at Suryanarkoyil is a tangible expression of their influence in South India.

It may be mentioned in this connection that the worship of the Sun is as old as the Vedas, and the gayatri, the most sacred prayer of the Hindu, is addressed to the Sun. In the preamble which is recited before the gayatri is performed, Vishnu is described as being seated in the midst of the sun's disc. In later times the worship merged into that of Vishnu himself as is clear from the fact that the most ancient images of Surya are practically identical with those of Vishnu excepting for a slight variation in symbolism. The name Surya-Narayana given to Vishnu is significant.

The existence of Aditya grihas and Sun shrines from early times is to be traced only in North India, while the South can now claim only one temple exclusively dedicated to the Sun deity, namely Suryanarkoyil. In North India, as early as B.C. 400, Ktesias mentions a place of about 15 days' journey from Mount Abu where people worshipped the Sun and the Moon (Vaidya's Medieval Hindu India, Vol. I, p. 255). Bhandarkar (p. 153, Vaishnavism, Saivism and minor religious systems) notices an inscription from Mandasor recording the construction of a temple to the Sun god in A.D. 437 by a guild of weavers. There are several temples dedicated to Surya in the northern, western and eastern parts of the country like Martand in Kashmir; Osia in Rajastan and Konark in Orissa.

While separate and independent shrines for Suryadeva are thus a rarity in the South, there are a number of instances of images of Surya being set up as a subsidiary deity of worship in the southern temples. An inscription in the Rajarajesvaram temple, dated in the 29th year of Rajaraja I, mentions the setting up of a copper image of this deity by one of his officers. There is a 11th year record of Rajaraja I on the wall of the central shrine of Tirukkodika(val), rebuilt in the days of Uttama Chola, from which we know that, in Rajaraja I's days, one Ilayan Aditta Pidaran set up an image of Suryadeva in the temple (see my Early Chola Temples, p. 176). References to shrines for Suryadeva in the temples set up during the days of Rajendra I are available, as for example in the temples at Alagadriputtur (ARE 289 of 1908) and Ennayiram (ARE 1909, p. 92 and ARE 1918, para 26).

In the time of Kulottunga I, two lamps were presented to the shrines of Suryadeva and Kshetrapala in the temple of Tirumanikuli in the South Arcot district (ARE 156 of 1902). At Tirup-paraitturai in the Tiruchi district, an image of the Sun God was set up in the ninth year of a Parakesarivarman (ARE 177 of 1907). A shrine for Surya deva is referred to in a record of the 10th year of Jatavarman Vira Pandya from Tiruppattur in Ramanathapuram district (ARE 134 of 1908). In the time of Rajaraja III, a gift of land was made for offerings to the shrine of Surya deva in the temple of Usattanam Udaiyar at Koyilur (ARE 198 of 1908).

The Suryanar temple faces west. The central shrine is dedicated to Surya deva, and near it on a platform are images of Visvesvara and Visalakshi, deities associated with Varanasi. Brihaspati is installed in a shrine opposite the main shrine; all round are those of the other planets as Parivaradevatas—Rahu, Sukra, Ketu, Chandra, Angaraka, Budha and Sani.

The garbhagriha and the mukhamandapa of the main temple are built of stone and the shrines of the other grahas are of brick.

PERUNGALUR (PERUNGOLIYUR)

VAMSODDHARAKANATHAR TEMPLE (KULOTTUNGA-SOLISVARAM)

Perungalur, called Perungoliyur in inscriptions, is a village in the Alangudi taluk of the Pudukkottai district. There is an ancient temple here, now called that of Vamsoddharaka-nathar. In an inscription, the earliest of those found here, on the south wall of the central shrine, of the 45th year of 'Tribhuvana-chakravartin Kulottungasoladeva' (who has to be identified with Kulottunga I in view of the high regnal year), a gift of land to the temple of 'Kulottunga-solisvaram Udaiyar' by the residents of Perungoliyur is recorded (ARE 193 of 1914). Thus the temple must have been built during the reign of, and named after, Kulottunga I.

Two records, found on the south wall of the mandapa in front of the shrine, mention gifts of the Unjalmandapa, and images of Sundara Perumal and Surya (ARE 195 of 1914), and of a lamp to the image of 'Kuttadum-devar' (Nataraja) in the temple (ARE 197 of 1914).

There are two inscriptions, of the 14th and 29th years of Jatavarman Vira Pandya (acc. A.D. 1253), co-ruler of Jatavarman Sundara Pandya II (acc. A.D. 1257), on the east and west walls respectively of the central shrine (ARE 196 and 194 of 1914). There are two inscriptions of the Vijayanagara days on the walls of the mandapa mentioned above; Perungoliyur is described as located in Ten Panangadu nadu, a sub-division of Jayasinga-kulakala valanadu and the main deity is given the name of Alagiya Kulottungar (ARE 200 and 202 of 1914).

There is a separate Amman shrine, the deity being called Mangala Nayaki.

KANNAMBADI

38 KANVESVARA (KANNESVARA) TEMPLE

Kannambadi is a small village in the Krishnarajapet taluk of the Mysore district in the Karnataka State. There is a temple dedicated to Kanvesvara; in the ancient days, however, the deity was known by the name of Kannesvara.

On a stone found near the temple, there is an incomplete inscription, dated in the year A.D. 1115 which runs as follows (translation) (Epi. Car., Mysore, Krj., 34):

“Kulottunga Chola deva ruling the kingdom of the world: in his 45th year, the year of Jaya, Madiyanna, son of Koramuta Hadeya Baya of Vadugavile, caused the two temples of Kannesvara to be erected”.

On a stone to the north of the doorway in the inner enclosure of this temple, there is an inscription dated in A.D. 1119, which mentions the rule of Tribhuvanamalla Vira Ganga Vishnuvardhana Hoysala deva ‘over the kingdom of the world’ which reads as follows (extract):

“for the god Kannagondisvara, the king, being in Talakad in the enjoyment of peace and wisdom, directed his minister” (The rest of the inscription is lost.)

Another incomplete record dated in about A.D. 1150 found on a loose stone close to the temple mentions that the “Mahamandales-vara who captured Talakad, Kongu, Nangali, Uchchangi, Banavasi and Hanungal, the strong armed Vira Ganga Pratapa Hoysala Narasimha deva was in the city of Banavasi ruling the kingdom in peace and wisdom—his wife, the senior queen and crowned queen Mailala devi . . .”

On the pillars of the mandapa south of the central shrine, there is an inscription which mentions grants made by some residents of the great agrahara of Kannambadi for the god Kanvesvara. This is a much later record dated in A.D. 1579 (?)

This temple is attributable to the last decade of Kulottunga I.

SOMANATHESVARAR (UMAIYODU NILAVINA PERUMAL) TEMPLE

Nidur is a northern suburb of Mayuram, the headquarters of a taluk of the same name in the Tanjavur district, and a railway station on the main line from Madras to Tiruchy. The deity of the main temple here is called Somanathesvarar and the Amman is called Toli-ammai. The sacred tree of the temple (sthala-vriksha) is the makilam tree. Tradition has it that the place received its name from its 'eternal character'. Indra, Surya, Chandra, Kali and a crab are believed to have offered worship to the deity. The place has the alternate names of Vakularanyam, Makilaranyam and Magilavanam. The Tamil Saiva Saint Sundarar of the 9th century A.D. has sung the praise of the Lord here and calls Him 'Nidur-kuttan' ('the Dancer of Nidur').

The ancient structure of the temple is no longer there; what we have now is the one rebuilt of stone in the first decade of the twelfth century A.D. On the walls of the mandapa at the southern entrance to the central shrine is an inscription of the 46th year of Kulottunga I in Tamil verse, from which we learn that one Kandan Madavan of Kulattur, the Chief of Milalai nadu, built of stone the vimana of the temple of 'Umai-yodu Nilavina Perumal' at Nidur, a village in Tiruvindalur nadu in Sonadu, and we further learn that this record was also engraved on the northeastern side of the hall (ambalam) of the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram (ARE 535 of 1921). A record (ARE 534 of 1921) of the 48th year of the same ruler, found on the south wall of the central shrine, confirms the fact of construction of this temple by Kandan Madavan who was the vel (Chief) of Milalai nadu and the nephew of the Chief who was the patron of the literary figure Amita Sagarar (Amrita Sagarar), the author of Yapperungalak-karigai, a treatise on Tamil Prosody.* From these inscriptions we learn that the author Amita Sagarar came to live in Siru-kunra nadu at the instance of an ancestor of Kandan Madavan of Kulattur.

There is an interesting record of Tribhuvanachakravartin Rajaraja deva, who must be identified with Rajaraja III, relating to his 16th year (A.D. 1232), which mentions inter alia that the country was formerly ruled by Kopperunjinga; this inscription, found on the wall of the southern prakara, mentions that the Great Assembly met in the Pugalabharana Vinayaka-pillaiyar temple in Rajasikhamani chaturvedimangalam, a village in Tiruvindalur nadu, a subdivision of Rajadhiraja valanadu, and revised the earlier rules in regard to tenancy cultivation (ARE 536 of 1921). As will be seen in a subsequent chapter, after the Second Pandyan invasion of the Chola country in A.D. 1228 and the defeat of Rajaraja III, he was reduced to a mere titular king and many of his subordinates started asserting their independence; the most spectacular among them was the Kadava chief Kopperunjinga, who functioned from his provincial capital of Sendamangalam. From Vriddhachalam, we get records of Rajaraja III dated in his 14th year, which go to show that his rule still persisted in this region and that as late as that year, the Kadava (Pallava) Chief was a feudatory of the Chola ruler; seeing Rajaraja III worsted in battle by the Pandyas, the Kadava Chief entertained ambitions of building an independent kingdom for himself and so attacked the Chola army at Tellaru, where a furious battle ensued, resulting in the defeat of Rajaraja III, who was taken prisoner along with his queen and other relatives and his ministers and confined at Sendamangalam, the Kadava capital. That he and the other prisoners were rescued by the Hoysala king Vira Narasimha, after worsting the Kadava Chief at the battle of Mahendramangalam on the banks of the Kaveri, is seen from the Tiruvahindrapuram record of Rajaraja III dated in his 16th year, and as if to confirm that Rajaraja III was back as the Chola monarch we have in this Nidur inscription a reference to the temporary eclipse of the Chola emperor, between his 14th and 16th regnal years.

A beautiful specimen of Later Chola bronzes is found in this temple. Siva with Uma and Skanda on the same rectangular bhadra-pitham presents a picture of perfection. Less rounded than bronzes of the Middle period, tending, particularly in the female figure, towards the concept of slender beauty, Siva is shown with the malu and the mriga in the upper arms. They are held aloft between the stretched fore and middle fingers in both hands. The proper right lower arm is in the abhaya pose and the left lower in the ahuya pose. Jata-makuta adorns the head, and the ears sport the patra and the makara kundalas. Siva is seated on a padma asana, the right leg hung down to rest on the ground, the left being folded in a sitting posture. Vajibandha, upavita, udarabandha, bracelets and anklets adorn the icon. Uma wears a karanda makuta, has a sharp narrow waist followed by broad hips and very slim legs. Her left leg is hanging from the (separate) padmasana on which she is seated and the foot rests on the ground. The right leg (corresponding to Siva's left) is folded in a sitting posture and raised at the knee as in a yoga posture. The left arm is resting on the left thigh and the right arm is holding a lily (missing). Skanda is a diminutive nude figure standing in the samabhanga pose, wearing a karanda makuta. He stands on a thin rectangular flat platform; all the three figures are on a common bhadra-pitham, which has the usual mouldings of upanam, kumudam and kantham with a vari on top.

This set of Somaskanda is a fine example of Chola metals of the late 11th century and of the early phase of the Later Cholas.

DEVAR TEMPLE)

About 1.60 km. north of Tiruvisalur of Rajaraja I fame, which in turn is about 6.5 km. east of Kumbakonam is a much neglected and dilapidated temple, locally called Nandan Koyil. It is far away from any habitation and surrounded by shrub jungle and cultivated land. The campus of the temple, about 120 metres by 60 metres, presents a pathetic spectacle of fallen glory and local indifference. The ruins with an intact gopuram are encircled by what once must have been a moat. From the inscriptions found in the temple, we learn that it was situated in the ancient village of Tirundu-devangudi, which no longer exists. This name however finds mention in Sambandar's hymns.

This temple is among the 275 sacred places sung by the Nayanmars. Sambandar (seventh century A.D.) visited the temple and has eleven stanzas composed in praise of the Lord of the temple.

The name of the deity of the central shrine is Aru-marundu-isar or Karkatakesvarar (Karkataka = crab) and the deity in the Amman shrine is known by the name of Aru-marundu ammai. The original names of the temple and the deity are lost and forgotten. The original name might have been Tiru-Nandu-devar-kudi, which in course of time got corrupted to Tirundu-devan-kudi.

According to local legends, the Lord of this sacred place was worshipped by a crab. This is depicted in a panel on a stone pillar where the crab is in the posture of paying adoration to the deity of the temple. A golden crab crawling on the crown of the linga is said to be visible to a devotee, when 'he has offered sacred bath with milk drawn from a number of cows of the same colour'. Hence the name of Karkatakesvarar for the main deity—the Lord worshipped by the crab.

Another local tradition tells of a king who was visited by a fell disease, and finding no cure, resorted to severe penance at the feet of the Lord here. The Lord appeared before him in the guise of an old mendicant, and rid him of his disease; he also promised to reveal to him the medicine for other diseases and led him to the site of the temple; there he directed him to dig at the place where to-day the main deity is located and, as he dug, blood began to spurt and the old mendicant disappeared. This tradition is corroborated by the Linga, the main deity, being broken in the front at the top.

Thus this temple dates back to the age of Sambandar (7th century A.D.). It was possibly of brick and was converted into a stone temple in the reign of Kulottunga I. The Amman shrine (Aru-marundu-ammai) also should have come into existence almost at the same time. This is confirmed by a damaged inscription of the 47th regnal year (A.D. 1117) of this king, referred to as Rajakesarivarman alias Tribhuvanachakravartin Kulottunga Choladeva (obviously a reference to Kulottunga I). It mentions that the village of Tirundu-Devangudi was a devadana of Gangaikondasolisvaramudaiyar, a reference to the deity of the main temple at the Chola capital (ARE 51 of 1910). A reference is made in this record to a hall called 'Rajendrasolan' in the palace at Mudikondasolapuram.

The temple consists of the garbhagriha, the ardhamandapa and the mukhamandapa. At the entrance to the ardhamandapa, on the lintel is recorded an inscription (ARE 53 of 1910) which reads: It-tiru-mandapam Kulottungasolan—"This hall known as Kulottungasolan"—an obvious reference to Kulottunga I. The lintel bears a panel just above the inscription depicting Gajalakshmi in the middle and the ashtamangala-sutra images in the flanks viz., the lamp, the boar, the bull, the umbrella, the chair, the drum, the svastika and the flag staff.

Vikrama Chola made a gift of money for a lamp in his fourth year (A.D. 1122, ARE 48 of 1910); and, in his sixth year (ARE 47 of 1910), there is a record referring to the gift of land to a private individual for playing on the vina (vinaik-kani) before the deity, which is referred to as Aru-marundu-udaiyar at Tirundu-Devangudi, in Milalai nadu, a subdivision of Virudarajabhayankara valanadu. In a record (ARE 49 of 1910) of a few decades later found on the north wall of the ardhamandapa, dated in the 16th year of Rajarajadeva II (A.D. 1162) mention is made of a gift of money for a lamp by Araiyan Siraladevan alias Rajaraja Muvendavelan of Sennimangalam in Tirunaraiyur nadu, a subdivision of Kulottungasola valanadu. Finally in the days of Rajadhiraja II a gift of lamp is made (ARE 50 of 1910).

Since then the temple seems to have gone into insignificance, and today, it is in utter ruin.

The temple* is covered with vegetation (possibly of great medicinal value?). In its days of glory, it should have been a primary medical centre or hospital with an Ayurvedic dispensary; in the earlier volumes we have seen similar hospitals run by temples, viz. Sundarasolan atular salai at Tanjavur, the Tirumukkudal hospital etc. This place was also the site of a University (Ghatika), like Kanchipuram.

Tiruvisalur, associated with Rajaraja I's tulabharam ceremony, and Tirundu-devangudi deserve to be clubbed together and formed into a "Gandhi-gram" for social service and rural upliftment, and made into a Primary Health Centre with the divine grace of the Lord of Medicine and Healing (Aru-marundu-devar). It would be appropriate if an Ayurvedic or Siddha School of medicine is attached to this temple of great celebrity and rich associations.

* Alexander Rea, Superintendent of the Archaeological Department, Southern Circle, Madras visited this temple in 1909 and reported: "This historical old temple now in ruins, is situated in the midst of paddy fields and surrounded by a tank on all sides. The temple is recommended to be placed in the list of monuments". (Report of 1909-10). The conservation of the temple and its inclusion as a protected State monument are overdue. In spite of many pressing commitments, this work should be urgently taken up by the State Department of Archaeology (Courtesy of N. Sethuraman, Indian Express dated 4.12.1976).

 Jagatguru Sankaracharya of Kanchi Kamakoti Pitham desired that specific mention of this fact should be made in the book.

KOVILANGULAM

AMBALAPPASVAMI (MUKKUDAIYAR)

In the village of Kovilangulam in the Aruppukkottai taluk of the Ramanathapuram district, there are the remains of a Jaina temple, dedicated to Mukkudaiyar, which term literally means "the god under a canopy of three umbrellas", i.e., the Jina. This Jaina temple, or whatever is left of it, which is now called Ambalappasvami temple, is in ruins and all that we see now are the basement and two Jaina images placed over it. From a 48th year record of Tribhuvanachakravartin Kulottunga deva (I), found on the west and south sides of the base of this temple, we come to know that a golden vimana with a mandapa for the god Mukkudaiyar was constructed at Kumbanur Sengattirukkai, a subdivision of Venbu valanadu. Two copper images of the god and Yakshi were also presented and land was given for a watershed at the temple-site (ARE 397 of 1914). This inscription of this period from Kovilangulam deserves to be taken note of on account of its contents as well as its literary style not generally found in inscriptions. We learn that about twenty-five persons, of whom some were evidently well-versed in the Tamil language, built for the 'god of the three umbrellas' a temple and a golden shrine and presented stone and metallic images of the god and his Yakshi. They also provided gifts for meeting the expenses of taking out processions of the deity and the upkeep of the various charities made by them.

This temple, of which unfortunately nothing but the bare vestiges remain, was built in the last days of Kulottunga I (i.e., A.D. 1118). This is proof of the continuing royal benevolence towards Jainism even during the Later Chola period. Of active royal patronage we have seen adequate evidence in the days of Rajaraja I at Dadapuram where Kundavai-piratti built, with equal devotion, three temples, dedicated to Siva, Vishnu and the Jina. The fact that the Kundavai Jinalayas at Dadapuram and Polur-Tirumalai as well as this Jaina temple at Kovilangulam have been either allowed to collapse or deliberately destroyed would indicate neglect towards Jainism, if not bigotry, of a later period.

KALLAPERUMBUR

KAILASANATHAR TEMPLE (KULOTTUNGASOLA ISVARAM)

Kallaperumbur lies on the main road from Tanjavur town to Budalur in the district of Tanjavur. In this place there is a temple dedicated to Kailasanathar. There are five inscriptions on the walls of this temple and a sixth on the gopuram. According to these inscriptions, this place was called Rajasundari-chaturvedimangalam. The present temple of Kailasanathar is called in an inscription of the 49th year of Kulottunga I as that of Srikailasam alias Kulottungasolisvaram Udaiya Mahadevar (SII, XVII, 627 and 628; ARE 581 and 582 of 1904). So this temple should have been built some time before the 49th regnal year of Kulottunga I (A.D. 1118-19). There are two inscriptions recorded in the 23rd and 25th regnal years of Kulottunga III, relating to certain gifts (ARE 585 and 584 of 1904). An inscription of the 12th regnal year of Rajaraja III mentions the dismissal of the accountant of the temple for misappropriation of temple funds. The latest Chola inscription is one of the 12th regnal year of Rajendra III (A.D. 1257-8).

Udaiyalur, a small village in the Kumbakonam taluk of the Tanjavur district, is at a distance of about 12 kms. from Kumbakonam and is on the southern side of the Nallur-Valangaiman road (at the second mile stone). It was formerly called, according to local inscriptions, Sivapada-sekhara-mangalam. The Siva temple found here is called Sri Kailasanathar temple now. The earliest of the inscriptions here is found, not on the walls of the central shrine, but on the south wall of the mandapa in front of it, and belongs to the 49th year of Kulottunga I (= A.D. 1119) (ARE 306 of 1927). Therein, the Lord of the temple is called Sri Kailasam Udaiyar (alias) Sivapadasekharisvaramudaiya Mahadevar, and a gift of land by the Mahesvarap-perundarisanattar for the chanting of the Tiruppadiyam hymns in the temple is recorded.

In an inscription (ARE 303 of 1927) of the third year of Vikrama Chola (A.D. 1121) Sivapada-sekharamangalam is called a Sri Mahesvara-sthanam (a settlement of Sri Mahesvaras). A gift of money for purchasing $1\frac{1}{2}$ velis of land was made by one Araiyan Ulagudaiyan. An inscription (ARE 305 of 1927) of the sixth year of Vikrama Chola (with the pu madu punara introduction) (= A.D. 1126) records a gift of one kasu by one Panchanadivanan Parantakadevan alias Kulottungasola Kongarayan of Kurichchi in Vennik kurram, for burning a twilight lamp in the temple of Kulottunga-solisvaramudaiya Mahadevar at Sivapada-sekhara-mangalam, the temple presumably having come to be named after the late ruler. On the base of the north wall of the mandapa in front of the central shrine, there is an inscription (ARE 313 of 1927) of the 25th year of Kulottunga III; one Devanayakan Rajarajadevan alias Solendrasinga Pichchan, of Sivapada-sekhara-mangalam, consecrated a new shrine to Lord Devanayaka Isvaram Udaiyar, and two individuals made gifts of land for providing worship to this deity. Another inscription of that year records details of several parcels of land aggregating three velis and odd, gifted to the images of Nayanmars installed in the temple (ARE 314 of 1927).

There are five inscriptions of the days of Rajaraja III. One, undated, records that some temple documents were lost, and replacements thereof made, in his fifth year. Another of the sixth year, mentions the pilferage of some jewels and vessels belonging to the temple and the penalties imposed on the guilty parties (ARE 309 and 308 of 1927). An inscription of the 24th year informs us that the accountant of the temple was removed and later re-instated and another of the same year mentions a grant of land to him (ARE 304 and 307 of 1927). In his 30th year, provision was made for the chanting of Tiruppadiyam hymns in the temple (ARE 310 of 1927).

The temple would appear to have been constructed in the closing years of Kulottunga I's rule; in fact, Vikrama Chola had already ascended the throne by the 49th year of his father (which corresponds to his first regnal year) and by the eighth year, the earlier name of Sivapadasekharisvaram had been changed to Kulottungasolisvaram. Thus this temple should be attributed to Kulottunga I.

The temple faces east and consists of a garbhagriha 6.00 metres square, an ardhamandapa that projects another 6.00 metres eastwards and a mukhamandapa nearly 11.50 metres square. There is an entrance to this last mentioned mandapa from the southern side also. The images in the wall niches of the ardhamandapa and garbhagriha are, in a clockwise order:

Dakshinamurti (a substitute), Bhairavar and Agastya (on the south ardhamandapa wall), Dakshinamurti, Lingodbhavar and Brahma (on the three walls of the garbhagriha) and Nandikesvarar, Durga and Ardhanarisvarar (on the north face of the ardhamandapa). At the rear of the central shrine there are subshrines for Subrahmanya and Ganesa.

The temple is in a good state.

KANCHIPURAM (Vishnu Kanchi)

SRI VARADARAJA PERUMAL TEMPLE

Kanchipuram is an ancient and celebrated city. It was considered as one of the seven mukti kshetras of this country. It was a place where flourished many religions—Saivism, Vaishnavism, Jainism and Buddhism. It was a centre of Sakti and Skanda cults. The Ghatika (University) of Kanchi produced great scholars.

Mayurasarman of the Kadamba dynasty came here to study the Vedas. Kanchi sent out renowned scholars to Nalanda University and also to other famous foreign universities of Asia. Besides Jaina Kanchi on the western bank of the Veghavati river, Kanchi proper consists of two parts—Vishnu Kanchi (the little Kanchi) and Siva (the big) Kanchi. Of the many temples in this large city, there are three in Vishnu Kanchi—the Tiruvekha (or Yadyotkari) described in the Pattuppattu, Perumbanarruppadai, one of the Ten Idylls of the Sangam age, the Ashtabhujam and the Attiyuran (later known as the Varadaraja Perumal or Hastigiri) temple, sung by Bhutattalvar, one of the three earliest Alvars, of the early Christian era. In later Vaishnavite literature (about the 11th century A.D.) Attiyur becomes changed into Hastigiri (the elephant hill), in connotation of Gajendra, the devotee gaining his salvation by the Lord's grace. Hence the name of the deity is Varadaraja (or Arulala) Perumal. Perhaps the deity's name of Attiyurar stems from the tradition that the original deity was made of the Udumbara (Atti) wood. An inscription at Nagarjunakonda mentions the consecration of the Ashtabhujasvamin (Vishnu) made of the Udumbara wood. It may be added that in the sacred tank called the Ananta Saras, there is, in addition to the Nīrāli-mandapa in its centre, a four-pillared mandapa with a vimana. Perhaps it is here that the original but mutilated adi-atti Varada image is housed and preserved with due adoration.

The first prakara is on the Hastigiri hill. It houses the garbhagriha, the antarala, and the two co-axial walled mandapas. The garbhagriha is a square cella housing the mula bhera of Varadaraja Perumal—a standing figure. It has a dvitala vimana of the sala type, called the punyakoti vimana. The garbhagriha and the two mandapas in front have architectural features of the Middle Chola period (11th century). At the western foot of the sanctum is the Narasimha (Yogic form) shrine, conceived in the form of a cave. The inner faces of the walls of this shrine are covered with inscriptions; the earliest of these is one of the period of Rajadhiraja I dated in his 32nd year (= A.D. 1050; ARE 519 of 1919). This is also the earliest inscription of this temple. The inscription calls the presiding deity of the temple only by the name of Tiruvattiyur Alvar.

The expansion of the temple campus and further developments took place during the reign of Kulottunga I and his son Vikrama Chola. The second and third prakaras and the kitchen bearing an inscription of the Chola General and Minister, Naralokaviran, are to be assigned to this age. An inscription of the third year of Kulottunga I (= A.D. 1073) is found on the basement of the entrance to the second prakara. Inscriptions of the 30th, 31st and 36th years of the same ruler on the third prakara wall refer to the construction of the lofty stone-built prakara wall (madil) for the temple. Mention has already been made of the kitchen of the temple having been built by the Chola general and administrator Naralokaviran.

It was also at this time that the expansion of the temple areas of many of the temples in Chola desa and adjoining mandalams took place, as in Chidambaram, Sirkali, Tiruvarur, Tiruvanaikka (val) and Srirangam. This was an age of temple cities and rapid expansion of the campus with additional walls of enclosure.

Among the subshrines and mandapas built in this temple campus during the Later Chola period may be mentioned:

- 1) Karimanikkap-Perumal (A.D. 1129—11th year of shrine Vikrama Chola)
- 2) Anantalvar shrine (A.D. 1212)
- 3) Abhisheka mandapa (A.D. 1236)
- 4) Perun-devit-tayar (first half of the shrine 13th century A.D.).

There are eighteen inscriptions of Kulottunga III (covering the regnal years from the third to the 37th), twentyone inscriptions of his successor Rajaraja III (from his seventh year to his 31st year) and some of Rajendra III.

With the weakening of central authority after the end of Kulottunga III's rule, the Chola hold over Kanchi slackened considerably. In fact even in the last days of Kulottunga III, the Pottappi Chola chief took possession of the city of Kanchi and the Chola king had to lead an expedition to retake it (A.D. 1196). During the last days of the Cholas, this city became the cock-pit of contending powers among which the more powerful were the Hoysalas, the meteoric Kopperunjingan, the Later Pallava chief, the Telugu Cholas from the Nellore region and the Pandyas who were rising as a new power. A complicating political element was added to this confusion by a lightning foray by the Muslim rulers from Delhi which resulted in an utter collapse of government. The situation was remedied by the emergence of the Vijayanagar empire that restored peace and order in this region and under their long spell of peaceful governance, this temple received great patronage. It was during this period that the later additions, like the huge eastern gopuram, the Kalyana mandapam, and the Tulabhara and the Unjal mandapas were raised. It was the brightest period in the history of this temple city as well as of this temple.

KANAKA-SOLISVARAR TEMPLE

45

Kaniyamur is a village in the Kallakkurichchi taluk of the South Arcot district and is two kms. from Chinna Salem on the Chinna Salem-Kallakkurichchi road. In this village there is a temple called that of Kanakasolisvarar. It is a Later Chola temple. On the north wall of the main shrine, there is an inscription of an unspecified Kulottunga who may be taken to be Kulottunga I.

The temple consists of the garbhagriha, the ardhamandapa, and the mukhamandapa. There is a Nandi in front, and the small Amman shrine of Soundarya Nayaki is located just north of it. There is a prakara enclosed by walls, with a simple gateway in front.

The devakoshtas on the walls of the ardhamandapa have a dancing Ganapati and Durga. Dakshinamurti, Vishnu and Brahma are on the garbhagriha walls. Kumbha-pancharas adorn the front portion of the garbhagriha both to the north and to the south.

The srivimana is eka-tala; the griva and the sikhara are octagonal. The griva-koshtas are adorned with Yoga-Dakshinamurti (south), Yoga-Narasimha (west) and Brahma (north).

Ganapati and Shanmukha are housed in the western section of the tiruch-churru-maligai. The Chandesvarar shrine is north of the ardhamandapa. Bronzes of Ganapati, Chandrasekharar and Pidari are housed on the platform on the north side of the mukhamandapa.

ELAVANASUR (Iraivanaraiyur)

ARDHANARISVARAR TEMPLE

Elavanasur(-kottai) is in the Tirukkoyilur taluk in the South Arcot district. There is an ancient Siva temple dedicated to Ardhanarisvarar—named in inscriptions Gramardhanathesvarar or Urbhagangondaruliya Nayanar. It is on a hill called Tirumalai perhaps originally part of a fort (kottai = fort). It is not a temple visited or sung by the Tamil Nayanmars; though one inscription of Vikrama Chola's mentions the provision for the recitation of Manikkavasagar's hymns, the Tiruchchalal.

An interpretation that would appear to be valid and reasonable has been made of the name Ur Bhagam Kondaruliya nayanar for the deity of this temple. There was one Purana Tirumalai natha who composed the Chidambara Puranam in Saka 1430 (A.D. 1508). This Puranam throws light on the above-mentioned name: "Deivigan, the Malaiyaman Chief, slays the asura Karundan, who was a brahmin in a previous birth. Because of this, the sin of brahmahatti attaches itself to him. As a measure of expiation, he performs a sacrifice and colonises four neighbouring villages with 400 brahmins and takes 400 other brahmins to this place. However, he finds that there are 400 more still left to be provided for. When he is unable to solve this problem of housing for these 400, the Lord of the temple appears before him as a brahmin and tells him: 'Gift away this village now. Give one half to the brahmins and the other half to me alone; then they will be satisfied'. The Chief does so. The brahmin disappears and reveals himself as Lord Siva of the temple. From that incident he came to be known as Ur Bhagam Kondaruliya nayanar—the Lord who accepted one half of the village".*

In this light the sanskritised version of the name, Grama-

Ardhanarisvarar, would seem to be incorrect.

There are inscriptions of Rajaraja I and of Rajendra I, but they are either fragmentary or later copies engraved on the walls of the prakara of the temple; so the temple seems to have undergone renovation during the Later Chola period. The earliest is an inscription of the seventh year of Rajaraja I found on a slab built into the floor at the entrance to the temple (ARE 176 of 1906). It refers to the 15th year of Uttama Chola, described as the son of Sembiyan Mahadevi. Venkayya's inference that the seventh year of Rajaraja I corresponded to the 15th year of Uttama Chola and consequently that the accession of Uttama Chola is to be fixed at A.D. 977-8 does not seem to be correct. (See V. Rengachary's Inscriptions of the Madras Presidency, I, p. 193, no. 534). His inscription of the 14th year (copy) refers to the deity as Urbhagangondaruliya Nayanar (ARE 134 of 1906). There are two of his 19th year and one of his 24th (ARE 143 of 1906). There are inscriptions of his son Rajendra I (fifth or 13th year—copies). The Lord is called Urudaiya Paramasvamin in them.

There are a large number of inscriptions of the Later Cholas. Of these, those of Kulottunga I, about eleven, range from his second to his fortyeighth regnal year. His tenth year record gives us Urudaiya Paramasvamin as the name of the central deity (ARE 149 of 1906).

His inscription of the 35th year (ARE 167 of 1906) records that the temple of Urbhagangondarulina Mahadevar was situated at Iraivanaraiyur alias Sri Sola-Kerala chaturvedimangalam in Palur kottam, a district of Miladu alias Jananatha valanadu. This is the earliest mention of the alternate name of this village as Sola-Kerala chaturvedimangalam. So it seems that Sola-Kerala was a biruda of Kulottunga I himself. It need not be the name of one of the relations of Rajendra deva II (A.D. 1052-63) as suggested by V. Rangachary (see p. 137—Elavanasur). His inscription of the 48th year records a sale by the local sabha of land which belonged to two absconding accountants who had incurred debts and left the village without discharging them (ARE 164 of 1906).

There are five inscriptions of Vikrama Chola. As stated already the inscription of the 17th year makes a gift of land not only for meeting the daily requirements of the temple but for the recitation every Sunday of Manikkavasagar's hymn Tiruchchalal.

There are about six inscriptions of the time of Rajaraja II. In a record of his sixth year there figures an influential local chief called Kudal Alappirandan Mogan alias Rajaraja Kadavarayan who claims to have conquered the four quarters (nalu tikkilum venra) who is the third Later Pallava chief (in succession) celebrated in an inscription in verse (ARE 74 of 1908, 463 of 1921 and 166 and 170 of 1906. See also my Kopperunjingan in Tamil, pp. 10-35). Two records of his sixth year refer to gifts of taxes by this chief to the temple and the building of the tirumaligai (walls of enclosure?). An inscription of his 13th year is recorded in the second gopuram and so it should have existed even at that time (ARE 163 of 1906). From an inscription of the 17th year, we gather that the village was still called Sri Sola-Kerala chaturvedimangalam.

Two gifts are recorded in the period of Rajadhiraja II. Some records of Sola-Kerala deva and Tribhuvana chakravartin Virarajendra might belong to Kulottunga III. An inscription of the tenth year of Rajaraja III records a gift of 132 cows for a lamp by a person who shot another by mistake in the course of a boar chase. Two gifts are recorded in the 30th year of Pallava Kopperunjinga (= A.D. 1273). There are a number of Vijayanagara records.

The outer gopuram, a general view of the temple, three kinds of Ganapati, Dakshinamurti, a dvarapala and Durga with the deer mount in the mandapa of the Amman temple are illustrated.

CHINTAMANI AGARAM

VAIDYANATHISVARAR TEMPLE (KULOTTUNGASOLISVARAM)

Chintamani Agaram, in the Villupuram taluk of the South Arcot district, is now a small village about two km. to the east of the Villupuram-Madras trunk road, about 12 km. from Villupuram. There is a compact, well-preserved temple in this village locally known as Vaidisvarar Koyil, or merely Isvarar temple.

Not far from it is another village by the name of Ayyur-Agaram, which is about 5 km. from Villupuram in a northerly direction. In the latter village is a famous temple built in Rajaraja I's days and originally dedicated to Sasta but now to Siva, called the Abhiramesvarar temple (see my Middle Chola Temples, pp. 141-4).

The village was known in ancient times by the name of Dina-chintamani-nallur, evidently named so after a queen of Kulottunga I. Kulottunga I, as Rajendra (II) of Vengi, had married Madhurantaki, a daughter of Rajendradeva (II) of the 'Solar race' (Chola dynasty). She is generally referred to as Bhuvanamulududaiyal, or Avani-mulududaiyal, 'the mistress of the world', and she also bore the surname of Dina-chintamani. She seems to have been the chief queen during the first thirty years of Kulottunga I's rule, and on her death was succeeded by Tyagavalli. The village of Chintamani was evidently a creation of the days of Kulottunga I.

The main deity of the temple in this village, now known as Isvarar or Vaidisvarar, was known in ancient days as Kulottunga-cholisvaram Udaiya Mahadevar of Sri Kailasa at Dina-chintamani-nallur, or for short, Cholisvaram Udaiya Mahadevar, according to two inscriptions of Parakesarivarman alias Chakravartin Vikrama Chola, engraved on the north wall of the temple, one dated in the sixth year and the other without a date. They begin with the usual introduction pu madu punara and the undated one records that the members of a regiment of the Chola army designated the "Four thousand of Minavanai Venkandan Vikramasolanudaiya Velaikkarar*" of Dina-chintamani-nallur in Panaiyur nadu, a subdivision of Rajaraja valanadu, agreed among themselves to set apart the taxes called kalalavu, korkuli and angadi-pattam, levied from their village, for the purpose of conducting festivals of the god Cholisvaram Udaiya Mahadevar (ARE 389 of 1922). The sixth year inscription is unfinished but we get to know from it that some gift was made by a person from Okurppalli in Tirumunaippadi nadu, a subdivision of Rajaraja valanadu, to the god Kulottunga-Cholisvaram-Udaiya Mahadevar of Sri

*This means: "The Four Thousand of the crack-troopers of Vikrama Chola, who defeated the Pandya (Minavan)".

Kailasa at Dina-chintamani-nallur.

Thus we learn from these two inscriptions that (i) the temple was built before the sixth year of Vikrama Chola and was named after Kulottunga I, (ii) the modern village called Chintamani Agaram was named Dina-chintamani-nallur, located in Panaiyur nadu, which was a subdivision of Rajaraja valanadu, which during the days of Rajaraja I and his son Rajendra I was known as Vadagarai Rajendrasimha valanadu and (iii) Dina-chintamani-nallur was a part of Nripatunga Jayatangi-chaturvedimangalam. We also get the name of one of the regiments of the days of Vikrama Chola which must have been part of the royal crack-troopers, the term Velaikkarar being applied to those who were at the beck and call of the emperor in any crisis, and often entrusted with the protection and proper administration of temples and their properties.

From the inscriptions found in the Sasta temple at Ayyankovilpattu and the Valisvarar temple at Pundottam in the Villupuram taluk of the South Arcot district (ARE 32 to 38 of 1947-48), we learn that these two temples were located in, and these two villages were a part of, a bigger village called Nripatunga-Jayatangi-chaturvedimangalam, which was a brahmadeya with the usual adjuncts of the Sabha and the governing body called the alunganattar. These two villages are close to the modern town of Villupuram, the taluk headquarters, and so are Ayyur-Agaram and Chintamani-Agaram. Evidently, this extensive jurisdiction of Nripatunga-Jayatangi-chaturvedimangalam which embraced all these four villages, was an important centre in the late Pallava and the Chola periods and probably took its name from an important local Chief, he deriving his name in turn from Nripatunga, the well-known Pallava ruler of the 9th century A.D., unless of course it took its name from Nripatunga himself.

Incidentally, we get to know from the inscriptions of Rajaraja I dated in his 20th and 22nd years that the Abhiramesvarar temple was indeed a temple for Ayyanar (Sasta) and it might have been erected during the days of Rajaraja I (ARE 36 and 37 of 1947-48).

The Isvarar temple of Chintamani Agaram faces east and consists of a garbhagriha 4.60 m. square, the sanctum being a smaller square 3.33 m. to a side, the walls at their thickest being 68 cm. The adhishthanam is 1.23 m. in height, consisting of an upanam, a jagati, a tripatta kumudam, a plain varimanam and a vari mouldings. The ardhamandapa projects 5.22 m. forward and is supported by four finely moulded pillars. There is no prakara round the temple and no trace of any madil or any gopuram. The garbhagriha and the ardhamandapa constitute a single architectural composition. The srivimana is eka-tala, the griva and sikhara being circular.

The main feature of the temple is the set of sculptures found in the niches on the southern and northern walls of the ardhamandapa. They are from east to west:

South wall

1. Bhikshatanar
2. Ganapati
3. Urdhva Tandavamurti

North wall

1. Siva-Uma-Alinganamurti
2. Durga
3. Bhairavar

Besides these, the sculptures in the niches of the garbhagriha are: Dakshinamurti in the southern niche, Lingodbhavar in the west, and Brahma in the north. The Dakshinamurti image is dislodged from the devakoshta and is now lying on the ground broken into two pieces.

The noteworthy feature of this temple is not merely the disposition of the devakoshta images, but the presence of Urdhva Tandavamurti, Siva Uma Alinganamurti and Bhairavar, which are peculiar to this temple. Alinganamurti as a niche figure is found in the rear niche of the Visha-mangalesvarar temple at Tudaiyur (see my Early Chola Temples, Illustrations, supplement), near Tiruvasi, in the Tiruchi district. Bhikshatanar is found in a few Early Chola temples as a devakoshta sculpture, but so far as my survey goes, this is one of two (or three) temples in all, with Urdhva Tandavamurti and Bhairavar as devakoshta images, though they are found installed in gopurams of the Later Chola period. The other temple, also of this period, is the Bhairavar temple at Solapuram (Section 27 of this Chapter).

VISHNU TEMPLE

An inscription found at Draksharama in the East Godavari district (A.P.) mentions the construction of a Vishnu temple at Alavely in the 33rd year of Kulottunga I. (ARE 349 of 1893; SII, iv, 1239; E.I., xxii, pp. 138-45). This temple was built by Pallavaraiya Karunakara Tondaiman. He is described as the son of Sirilango of Mandalanjeri in Tirunaraiyur nadu and bore the alternate names of Vanduvaraja and Sadvaishnava. His personal name was Tiruvarangan; he is said to have destroyed Kalinga, conquered the Ganga in battle and humbled Devendra-varman and others with the aid of the Kosala army and to have planted Rajendra Choda's pillar of victory in the Odra frontier.

This inscription dated in the 33rd year (A.D. 1103) mentions that he built a temple of black stone to Vishnu at Alavely and endowed land to it by purchase. He also made gifts at Draksharama.

PAUNDARIKAPURAM

SIVA TEMPLE

Paundarikapuram, in the Kumbakonam taluk of the Tanjavur district, has a very beautiful, well-preserved but unidentified temple dedicated to Siva. There are no inscriptions on the walls of the temple and, therefore, its dating as well as identification will have to be based on grounds of style. There is a striking similarity between the composition of this temple and that of both the Rajarajesvaram at Tanjavur and the Gangaikondasolisvaram at Gangaikondasolapuram. At the same time there is considerable iconic similarity with the temples of the Kulottunga I and Vikrama Chola periods.

The temple consists of a garbhagriha which is square in cross-section with the central bays on the three free faces projecting forward; these bays house in their devakoshtas the images of Dakshinamurti in the south, Lingodbhavar in the west, and Brahma in the north. Unlike the gigantic parallels quoted earlier, this is a much smaller temple, not unlike the Kulambandal temple, with a low plinth comprising an upapitham and an adhishtanam, the latter containing the upanam, padmam, kantham, kumudam, varimanam and vari mouldings. The srivimana is eka-tala with a hara of kutas and salas. The griva is narrow and tall and the sikhara rests perched on it. The ardhamandapa is in line with the garbhagriha; but further eastwards, the temple bulges out into a big mahamandapa as in the case of Gangaikondasolisvaram at Kulambandal. The similarity to that temple in this respect is striking. On the four walls of this mandapa there are beautiful, well-chiseled sculptures which may be dated to the period of Kulottunga I/Vikrama Chola. Among these sculptures may be mentioned a few: Chandesanugrahamurti, Ganga-Jathadharar, Chandrasekharar and Ardhanari. The Chandesanugrahamurti icon that adorns the eastern wall of the garbhagriha in the great temple at Gangaikondasolapuram finds a not dissimilar imitation at Paundarikapuram, though the latter is smaller in dimension and occupies a different position in the lay-out (here it is on the western wall of the mahamandapa). Parvati too is missing at Paundarikapuram but the tying of the garland over the head of Chandesa is well brought out. Here the right foot of Siva seems to be almost resting on Chandesa's right knee. This iconic representation of Siva blessing Chandesa is rare even in Chola sculptures and Paundarikapuram thus acquires added significance. This icon is not found in the Later Chola period in any of the other temples we have surveyed. The icon of Ganga-Jathadharar bears a striking resemblance to its counterpart in the Kulottungasolisvaram temple at Chintamani-Agaram while both the Chandrasekharar and Ardhanari icons have close resemblance to icons of Kulottunga II/Rajaraja II's period. In other words, the temple at Paundarikapuram marks the transitional phase in sculpture and architecture spanning the end of the Middle Chola and the beginning of the Later Chola periods.

In general, Later-Chola iconic features begin to be noticeable at Paundarikapuram exhibiting an easily discernible similarity of its icons to those found in the first and second tiers of the basement of the west gopuram of the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram, which belongs to the days of Vikrama Chola.

I would therefore date it sometime in the middle of the reign of Kulottunga I.

KULOTTUNGA PS STYLE

The reign of Kulottunga I marks a significant milestone in Chola art. In the outlying province of Kongu nadu, there came to be built by the local Adiyaman chief a temple dedicated to Nilakanthesvarar at Koyarrur, now called Laddigam (in Chittoor district near Madanapalli), having a garbhagriha and an ardhamandapa enclosed within a madil with a simple sala-type gopuram with a griva and sikhara, marking a regional idiom of Kulottunga's time. At Trisulam, an ancient centre in the Tondaimandalam region, the local idiom superposes itself on the evolving Chola style, producing a gajaprishta srivimana with the usual niche deities. At Melakkadambur, an entirely new concept of temple structure was put on the ground. The srivimana and the ardhamandapa together were fashioned into a complete chariot, drawn by horses. This new style of temple came to be known as the terk-koyil or Karak-koyil. And finally, Kulottunga I continued and refined the tradition of building temples in the style brought into vogue by Sembiyan Mahadevi, as structures with a garbhagriha and an antarala, false or real, followed by an ardhamandapa with three niches on each of its lateral faces. Excellent examples of this tradition and style are the temples of Isvarar at Chintamani Agaram and of Bhairavar at Solapuram.

Thus, in Kulottunga I's period, there are four different trends: (i) a provincial style, (ii) the Tondaimandalam style or gajaprishta style, (iii) an altogether new style of temple in the shape of a chariot called the terkkoyil and (iv) finally, a further development of the Sembiyan style of temples in the heartland of the Cholas. The features of all these types of temples must be taken into consideration when we enunciate the architectural and art style of the period of Kulottunga I.

Vikrama Chola

Vikrama Chola ascended the throne as co-ruler in A.D. 1118 and counted his regnal years from that date even though his father Kulottunga I continued to live for at least two (or, according to some recent reckoning, seven) more years after that date. His asterism was Uttirattadi in the month of Ani. His prasastis take two forms, a shorter form commencing with pu-madu (or -magal) punara, and the other (longer) with pu madu midaindu; it is from the modified later form of his longer prasasti that we come to know of his benefactions and temple-building activities in Chidambaram and we could date them as having taken place in or before his tenth regnal year (A.D. 1128).

He bore many titles, the most frequently used one being Tyagasamudram (the “ocean of generosity”) occurring both in his inscriptions and in the Vikrama solan ula. This also takes the variant form, Tyagavarakara; Akalankan (‘one without blemish’ or ‘spotless’) is also applied to Vikrama Chola, though mainly Kulottunga I bore this title (Ep. Ind., vi, pp. 227–30). Very often he assumed to himself the titles of his father even including the Rajakesari, though by Chola practice he was a Parakesarivarman.

Mukkokilan and Tyagapataka are among his better-known queens, the former being the chief, and on her death (A.D. 1126–27), the latter became the chief queen. Nampirattiyar Nariyan Madeviyar was perhaps a third queen.

The late 11th and again the first three quarters of the 12th century A.D. were prolific in quasi-historical literature. The court poet Ottak-kuttan who adorned the Chola court during the reigns of the three emperors, Vikrama Chola, Kulottunga II (Anapaya) and Rajaraja II, wrote an ula on each of them; he also composed a parani (heroic poem) on the Kalinga war of Vikrama Chola. This work is unfortunately lost to us; but reference to this is found in the ulas on the latter two kings.

With the accession of Vikrama Chola in A.D. 1118 and his shifting his headquarters from Vengi, that province came under the administrative control of the Velanadu prince, Choda (son of Gonka I). The Western Chalukyan Vikramaditya VI took advantage of this absence of Vikrama Chola from Vengi and established suzerainty over the Velanadu chief; but this was short-lived, and with the death of Vikramaditya VI in A.D. 1126, the region was brought back to the control of the Cholas. Similarly, Vikrama Chola re-established, to a large extent, Chola authority over Gangavadi, which had been lost to the Cholas during the closing days of Kulottunga I.

Vikrama Chola was a great devotee of Lord Nataraja of Chidambaram. In his 10th year (A.D. 1128), he diverted a substantial portion of the revenues of the state to meet the cost of extensive additions to the structures of the Chidambaram temple. Apart from the liberal grants made for worship and offerings to this family deity, he also bestowed considerable attention on the Vishnu (Ranganathasvamin) temple at Srirangam.

The Vikrama Cholan Ula mentions a large number of feudatories, who were closely associated with the peaceful administration of the empire. Among them are Karunakara Tondaiman (the conqueror of Kalinga), the General Solakon and the great General Naralokaviran (Kalingar-kon), who distinguished himself in the wars in Pandi nadu, Tondai nadu, Malai nadu and Vengi during Kulottunga I's days and who served his master with loyalty, devotion and distinction. Naralokaviran's son was also a prominent Chief in the days of Vikrama Chola, and bore the name of Surai Narayanan alias Madhavarayan, son of Arumbakkilan Ponnambalakkutan alias Naralokaviran. The Sengeni Chiefs who bore the title of Sambuvaraya were prominent feudatories, whose descendants were to become quasi-independent ruling Chiefs in the Tondaimandalam region, as Chola authority waned in the 13th century.

The reign of Vikrama Chola was one of peace and tranquillity, of consolidation of the empire and of great activity in the field of temple-building, which mostly took the form of enlargement or expansion of existing temples. A few new temples also came into existence during this period. But his greatest contribution was in Chidambaram.

Temples of Vikrama Chola's Time

AGNISVARAR (PUGALUR DEVAR) TEMPLE 1

Tiruppugalur is a village in the Nannilam taluk of the Tanjavur district. The Agnisvarar temple here has already been dealt with in my Early Chola Temples (pp. 246-7). From an inscription of the second year of Vikrama Chola found in this temple (ARE 97 of 1927-28), it is learnt that a piece of land was sold for the maintenance of a hospital for tending the sick and the destitute; it was established on the north bank of the Mudikondasolappereri at Tiruppugalur. And the Assembly of Kshatriyanatha chaturvedimangalam met in a hall known by the name of Naralokaviran mandapa in the temple of Pugalur devar and made a remission of the tax on land gifted for the maintenance of the hospital.

SUGATUR

SOMISVARAR TEMPLE 2

Sugatur (also spelt Soogutoor in the old records) is a small village in the Sidlaghata taluk of the Kolar district (in Karnataka State). When this region was under Chola suzerainty, Sugatur is said to have been a flourishing local political centre with palaces and pavilions, and the regional chief lived here.

There are three inscriptions from this village (Epi. Car., Kolar dist., Siddhalaghata, nos. 8, 9 and 10). They relate to a Somisvarar temple; they are however not found in any temple but in the fields.

No. 9* is dated in Saka 1042, corresponding to A.D. 1120. It is in Tamil. It says that in the second year of the reign of the king of Puli, the head of the family of the Cholas (Koliyar kula pati) Sri Vikrama Choladeva alias Sri Rajayar, the renowned Udaya-martanda Brahmamarayan alias Kuvalaiya Tantiran, the head of Nallur, with his residence in Arumolideva-chatuppedimangalam, the child born of Vichchamai, the senior wife of Paappanapperumal Samundaiyan, who was well-versed in Tamil, caused to be constructed, in the name of the older brother Selumaraivanan, the temple of Somichchara, the holy god with golden matted hair, praised by the celestials, in the village of Sugattur, where damsels learn dancing, situated in Kaivara nadu in Nigarilisola mandalam; he also presented a footstool made of gold and caused to be set up the images of Siva and Parvati so that these might be worshipped by all the world, and had a tank dug to the west of the temple for the priests. He also provided for worship to the other deities in the temple like Ganapati and Suryadeva.

Another inscription dated in A.D. 1120 (no. 16 ibid.) mentions that the members of the Assembly favoured certain lands to the goldsmith Savai Aasaari and confirms that Sugattur was called Arumolidevach-chatuppedimangalam in Kaivaara nadu of Nigarilisola mandalam. Sugutur, Hosapete, Sundrahalli, and Dodda-chokkandahalli seem to be near one another. At Hosapete there is a ruined temple called Kallesvara temple. There is also another temple called Channarayasvami temple. At Dodda-chokkandahalli, there is a Basavanna temple. We are unable to say if any one of these three is the Somisvara temple; or has the Somisvara temple gone out of existence? We may assign this temple to the early years of Vikrama Chola's rule.

Perumukkil is now a small village on the roadside 11 kilometres to the east of Tindivanam on the way to Marakkanam, the ancient port town of Eyilpatna. It is in the Tindivanam taluk of the South Arcot district. There are two temples in this village, one at the foot of a hill and the other on top of it. It is with the latter that we are concerned here. The ancient name of the temple was Tiruvanmigai Isvaram.

Perumukkil or Perumukkall was the scene of much severe fighting between the French and the English in the eighteenth century and still bears the battle scars in the shape of the fallen walls and roof of the prakara of the temple at the foot of the hill.

Local legend connects the name of the place with the epic Ramayana and the place derives its name from the pains of parturition which Sita is believed to have undergone at this place. Accordingly, the locality where the hill is situated is called the hermitage of the sage Valmiki; this also explains the name the temple assumed in the post-Chola period, viz., Valmiki-isvaram Udaiyar temple.

On the west wall of the central shrine of this temple, there is a third-year inscription relating to the period of Vikrama Chola which records that the temple for Tiruvanmigai-isvaram Udaiyar was built by one Kakku Nayakan alias Kanakarayan. Thus this temple is a foundation of the third year of Vikrama Chola. On the north wall of the mandapa in front of the temple is an eighth year record of Parakesarivarman alias Tribhuvanachakravartin Vikrama Chola deva from which we get the alternate name of Palamukkil, in Perumukkil nadu for the village (ARE 45 of 1905). A ninth year inscription of the same ruler, on the west wall of the central shrine, relates to a gift of land to the temple, where the name of the temple is given as Tiruvanmigai-Isvaram (ARE 41 of 1905). On a rock to the right of the steps to the top of the hill where the temple is situated is a record (ARE 37 of 1905) relating to the 16th year of Rajakesarivarman alias Tribhuvanachakravartin Kulottunga Choladeva (who should be Anapaya), mentioning a gift of 30 cows for a lamp to the temple of Tirumalai Tiruvanmisvaram Udaiya Madevar at Perumukkil. There is mention of the gifts made by Kulottunga I in his 43rd and 45th years to the same deity; this would imply that the temple existed in some form even in the days of Kulottunga I and that in the early years of Vikrama Chola it was reconstructed in stone. In the 16th year of Parakesarivarman alias Rajaraja deva (II), a gift of 32 cows was made for a lamp in the temple; and in this record Perumukkil is called Edirili-Cholanallur (perhaps after the name of the future Rajadhiraja II who before his accession bore that name). In the fifth year of Rajadhiraja II, a gift of 32 sheep for a lamp is made to this temple called in the inscription Tiruvanmisvaramudaiya Mahadevar (ARE 44 of 1905). On the north wall of the central shrine, there is another record of the same regnal year of Rajadhiraja II, from which we get the name of Gangaikondanallur for Perumukkil (ARE 39 of 1905). Reference to a chief of the locality belonging to the Vrishabha family is made in a Sanskrit and Grantha inscription dated in Saka 1090 (A.D. 1168) found on the south wall of the mandapa. A late Pandya inscription dated in the 6th year of Maravarman Vikrama Pandya found on the north wall of the mandapa in front of the temple refers to a gift of a salt-pan to the temple of Valmikiśvaramudaiya Nayanar; it is said that the salt-pan had been in the possession of the temple for a long time but that it had remained unused since the time of Kopperunjinga, the Pallava chieftain of the thirteenth century.

From an undated inscription of the Vijayanagara days, we get to know that a certain Lingappa of Padaividu built the steps leading up to the temple from the foot of the hill (ARE 38 of 1905).

This shrine is now in a state of neglect.

TUKKACHCHI

TEMPLE

The village of Tukkachchi, closely connected with Kulottunga I and Vikrama Chola, is situated on the northern bank of the river Arasalaru, a distributary of the Kaveri. It is off the beaten track, about seven km. from Nachchiyarkoyil in the Kumbakonam taluk of the Tanjavur district. One has to take off from Pudukkudi on the road from Nachchiyarkoyil to Puntottam which runs on the southern bank of the Arasalaru, cross the river and proceed about a kilometre and a half along the northern bank of the river in a north-westerly direction to reach Tukkachchi.

In this village, there is a magnificent but much-neglected temple dedicated to Apatsahayesvarar, of which little notice has been taken so far and whose significance in the growth of Chola architecture has not been so far realised. It faces east and consists of a garbhagriha (7.35 m. \times 5.70 m.), an ardhamandapa (7.35 m. \times 7.72 m.) and a snapana mandapa (12.35 m. \times 15.50 m.). The srivimana is a dvi-tala structure, the superstructure being of brick and mortar. The griva and the sikhara are circular in cross-section. Icons of Dakshinamurti, Lingodbhavar and Brahma adorn the niches on the south, west and north walls of the garbhagriha respectively. In the south-western corner, there is a sub-shrine for Ganapati, while in the west is the Subrahmanya sub-shrine. The first prakara extends 65.00 m. in length by 38.50 m. in width. Over the eastern portion of the wall of enclosure, there is a three-tiered (munru-nilai) gopuram coeval with the main temple. There is a second (outer) prakara and a second wall of enclosure with an opening on the eastern wall, over which rises a five-tiered (ai-nilai) gopuram. In the north-eastern corner of the second prakara is the Amman shrine dedicated to Soundara Nayaki.

In this temple and its neighbourhood, there are three Chola inscriptions. The earliest of them (ARE 6 of 1915) is found on a slab set up in a garden in this village and is an inscription of the fourth year of Rajakesarivarman (an error for Parakesarivarman) alias Tribhuvanachakravartin Vikrama Chola deva (A.D. 1122). It records a gift of land free of taxes by the Great Assembly of Vijayarajendra chaturvedimangalam in Tirunaraiyur nadu, a subdivision of Uyyakkonda valanadu to the temple of Ten-Tirukkalatti Mahadevar at Kulottungasola-nallur for the recitation of Tiruppadiyam (Devaram) hymns. It also refers to the thirtieth regnal year of Kulottunga I. The place is named Kulottungasola-nallur and the Lord of the temple Ten-Tirukkalatti Mahadevar —of the southern Kalahasti, as distinguished from the celebrated northern Kalahasti, a Saiva centre on the northern borders of ancient Tamil Nadu.

The next Chola inscription is one of the 35th year of Tribhuvanachakravartin Tribhuvana vira deva, which was the title assumed by Kulottunga III after his third victory over the Pandyas (about A.D. 1213). It is engraved on the south wall of the first prakara of the temple (ARE 2 of 1915). It mentions a gift of a lamp to the temple of Vikramasolisvaram Udaiyar at Vikramasola-nallur by Arayan Rajarajadevan alias Munaiyadaraiyan of Gidangil (Tindivanam) in Oyma nadu, a district of Jayangondasola mandalam.

By this time, Kulottungasola-nallur becomes renamed Vikramasola-nallur and the temple of Ten-Tirukkalatti is re-christened Vikrama-solisvaram.

The third Chola inscription (ARE 10 of 1918), also inscribed on the same south wall of the first prakara of this temple, is one of the 23rd year of Tribhuvanachakravartin Rajarajadeva III (A.D. 1239) in whose time the Chola administration fell to the depths of inefficiency, racked by revolts and defiance of the central power. Rajaraja III was defeated and imprisoned at Sendamangalam by the Pallava ruler Kopperunjinga but was later rescued by the Hoysala Narasimha II (A.D. 1231–32). In this period of disorder is recorded this inscription of the 23rd year of Rajaraja III. From this we learn that the cultivators of the devadana lands given as gifts to this temple of Vikrama Cholisvaram Udaiyar by Sendamangalam Udaiyar, Chief of Vikrama-sola-nallur alias Irumapundy, for conducting worship and offerings, for supplying unguents and garlands of Sengalunir flowers and for meeting the other requirements of the temple, failed to pay the kadamai when demanded. And the income was found insufficient to meet the requirements of the temple. Seeing their distress, Sirandan alias Muniyadaraiyan, one of the Kaval-kaniyalars (officers leasing out lands and realising their assessment) dissuaded the defaulting tenants from absconding by giving them what was required for their maintenance, and personally attended to the daily requirements of the temple and supplemented its funds so that the fixed scale of expenses might be met; he also set up processional images of Sani and Brihaspati, appointed a person to perform a number of prostrations to the Lord of the temple for the welfare of the King, nominated Nambis to perform homa, and ministered to the wants of Brahmanas and Vellalas who had taken up residence in the village from outside. In return for all these services, the Kaniyalan was given the privilege of entering the temple armed with a bow, of getting one of the nimandas (privileges) for himself, of receiving half of the emoluments of the persons who had to carry the God in procession, of getting a house in the temple premises and of letting it out to any person of his choice and to have this order engraved on stone.

He reappointed the persons who had given up cultivation of the lands in previous years and was able to obtain an income of 2000 kalams of paddy for the temple.

The temple is named Vikrama-solisvaram and the place is called Vikramasola-nallur, in this inscription.

There is a post-Chola inscription to the left of the entrance of the inner gopuram of the temple (ARE 4 of 1918), which records the gift of the image of Pallakku-sokkar to the temple of Vikrama-solisvara-tambiran at Tukkaiatchi—a name nearest to the modern one of Tukkachchi—by an agent of the minister of Kottaniraya Maharaja whose identity and dates are unknown. Does it belong to the post-Vijayanagara period?

Another inscription in modern characters on the outer gopuram (ARE 5 of 1975) states that the measuring rod for dry lands was fixed at $16\frac{1}{2}$ units during the time of Samanta Nayaka Ayyan.

The temple, which perhaps existed even earlier in some form, was known as that of Ten-tirukkalatti Mahadevar and the locality was known as Southern Kalahasti; the present name for the village of Tukkachchi or Tukkaiaatchi would appear to be a corruption of Ten-Tirukkalatti (Ten-Tirukkalahasti). The place should have assumed some importance even in the days of Kulottunga I, as the temple here is said to be located in Kulottunga-sola-nallur. Even in the early years of Vikrama Chola, perhaps, this temple existed, as deducible from his fourth year inscription. He erected the temple as a new complex, as an all-stone structure (except for the superstructure of the srivimana) and the deity was named Vikramasolisvarar, after him.

This temple is of great significance in the evolution of Chola art and architecture during the Later Chola period. Apart from that, its importance lies in the fact that it is perhaps the only big temple built during the days of Vikrama Chola. His contribution to temple-building activity, as observed earlier, was mainly in the form of expanding existing temples—adding new prakāras and walls of enclosure and raising multi-pillared halls, a tradition which he and his general Naralokaviran set up in the first three decades of the twelfth century.

At Tukkachchi, Vikrama was not handicapped by any compulsions of existing structures dictating a plan to accommodate buildings already there. Planned as a total unit of building and executed as an entirely new composite structure, the Vikramasolisvaram temple accommodated the chariot hall, in juxtaposition to the other three chambers. This ratha mandapa faces south, while the temple itself faces east. The ratha has two wheels and is 'drawn' by two horses. The mandapa accommodates an Amman shrine at the northern end. The entire edifice is on a high plinth which it shares with the other three chambers. On the eastern and northern sides, the hall is closed up by walls, except for an opening in the east to allow a direct view from the gopuram gate to the sanctum. In the south, the hall has a decorative façade having a multi-pillared covered landing, equivalent to an agra-mandapa. This mandapa is reached by a flight of steps from the eastern side, and the steps are flanked by a low sinuous balustrade, which on its outer face dons a straining elephant with two riders. The pillars supporting the agra-mandapa blaze a new trail in pillar carving.

Round and square pillars with plain surfaces of the earlier period give place to square pillars which are segmented on each face into a number of box and open panels depicting a variety of themes, gods and demigods, animals and flora and so forth. On the outer face of the walls on the south, east and west of this hall, there are niches housing various deities.

The snapanamandapa which is an elongated chamber linking the hall-on-wheels with the garbhagriha and the ardhamandapa, also has a number of niches, four on each side, on the northern and southern outer faces, some of which are empty, while others house some fine sculptures, like Nataraja and Ardhanari, which are typical of the Later Chola period, in their features.

Vikrama Chola's contributions to temple-building activities are considerable, but the temples built by, and named after, him are only a few. The Tukkachchi temple is a grand edifice built in his time and named after him. There is another temple built in his time, also called Vikrama-solisvaram, at Madarvelur in the Sirkali taluk of the Tanjavur district.

The Amritagatesvarar temple at Melakkadambur built by Kulottunga I was the proto-type for the Vikramasolisvaram at Tukkachchi which in turn formed the model for the Airavatesvarar temple built by Rajaraja II at Darasuram and the Tribhuvanesvarar temple built by Kulottunga III at Tribhuvanam.

The precursor of the ratha-vimana type of temple architecture is however the temple of Balesvara built in about A.D. 1090 by Chamundesvara Halegondi.*

The Siva temple at Tirunaraiyur, which is at a distance of about 10 km. southeast of Kumbakonam and gets its name from the sweet fragrance of the flowers grown here (narai = sweet smell), has been dealt with in my Early Chola Temples (p. 178). It is an

*It is a pity I could not visit this temple (see SII, IX, 197, 33-38; also Yazdani, p. 426).

Early Chola temple reconstructed in the days of Uttama Chola.

The mandapa in front of the central shrine however seems to be an addition made in the days of the Later Cholas. There are six inscriptions (ARE Nos. 125 to 131 of 1931-32) all belonging to the days of Vikrama Chola, three of them dated in the fifth year, and the other three are also presumably of the same date though in the inscriptions the dates are lost. They are all records of gifts, mostly of twilight lamps. These lend credence to the possibility that the mandapa came into existence either late in the reign of Kulottunga I or in the early years of Vikrama Chola's reign.

DAKSHINAPURISVARAR TEMPLE

The village of Melaperumballam (and also of Kilaperumballam) is situated in the Mayuram taluk of the Tanjavur district and is close to Kaveripattinam, Akkur and Tillaiyadi, all very ancient centres of importance.

In the Chola days, this village went under the name of Talaichchangadu, located in Akkur nadu which was a sub-division of Jayangondasola valanadu. The deity of the main temple in the village is presently called Dakshinapurisvarar, but in ancient times was known as Tiruvalamburi Udaiyar as seen from inscriptions. It is a dated temple having been built as an all-stone structure by one Tiruvichchi Tiruvalampura-nambi alias Kalumalam Udaiyar Aludaiyan Pillaiyalvan. The earliest inscription in the temple is dated in the fifth regnal year of Vikrama Chola and the temple appears to have been completed by about that date. A portrait of the builder is found on the temple wall. Besides some undated inscriptions, there is one of the sixth year of Vikrama Chola (A.D. 1124) found on the south wall of the central shrine (with the pu malai midaindu beginning) which relates to a gift of 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ velis of land by one Velan Gandaradittan of Alangudi in Vela nadu, a subdivision of Kulottungasola valanadu, for offering worship to the images of Kuttadum devar (Nataraja), His Consort and Tiruppalliyaraip-Pirattiyar set up by him in the temple. It is said that the assembly of the village (mulapaurushai) met in the hall called the Mummudisolan Perambalam and remitted the taxes on the land by accepting cash payment of 70 kasus from Gandaradittan (ARE 222 of 1925). The assembly of Perunjirainallur, a brahmadeya in Nangur nadu in Rajadhiraja valanadu received 40 kasus from the temple of Tiruvalamburam Udaiyar at Talaichchangadu in Akkur nadu, a sub-division of Rajanarayana valanadu, and sold some land and remitted some taxes on that and other lands measuring $3\frac{1}{2}$ velis belonging to this temple (ARE 220 of 1924, dated in the ninth year of Vikrama Chola, north wall of the central shrine). From another record of the same reign, undated, also found on the north wall of the central shrine, we learn that the same Chief Velan Gandaradittan set up images of Kuttadum devar and Tandanganni Nachchiyar and that some private individuals of Marachcheri in Akkur nadu sold land, made tax-free, to the temple of Tiruvalamburam Udaiyar to provide worship and offerings to these images (ARE 215 of 1925). In the days of Kulottunga (II?), the temple paid 100 kasus to the assembly (mulapaurushai) and gifted land free of taxes for two flower gardens measuring 18 mas in extent (fifth year, ARE 221 of 1925). A native of Menmalaip-Palaiyanur in Jayangondasola mandalam set up certain deities in the eighth year of Rajadhiraja II (introduction kadal sulnda par madarum) and the assembly gifted some lands, made tax-free, to the temple for worship and offerings to these images (ARE 223 of 1925).

There are four records on the walls of the temple, all undated, which relate to sales of persons to the temple: (i) Kavakasi Kalaiyan Kumaran alias Tambirantolan of Talaichchangadu sold eight persons to the temple of Tiruvalamburi Udaiyar in the (same) village, in Akkur nadu, a sub-division of Jayangondasola valanadu (sixth year, ARE 216 of 1925); (ii) Soman Tattan of Nangur alias Sripadaduli chaturvedimangalam in Rajadhiraja valanadu sold six persons to the temple for 13 kasus 13th year, ARE 217 of 1925); (iii) Arayan Perungadi sold herself and her husband Sodi Tali alias Chandesvarap-Peraiyar of Ambar along with six others to the temple (same year as before, ARE 218 of 1925); (iv) Nambanambi Kadugal Nangai, wife of a Vellala residing in Cholapandyanallur, a hamlet of Talaichchangadu, sold to the temple 15 persons including herself, her daughter, grandson, his children and others for 30 kasus (same year, ARE 219 of 1925).

It seems reasonable to conclude that this temple came into being in the present form during the early years of Vikrama Chola and might have been in existence in the last years of Kulottunga I; however, it is possible that even earlier there might have been another structure, as the temple itself seems to be more ancient than the Later Chola period. Some important images were added during the days of Vikrama Chola and Rajadhiraja II: Kuttadum devar, his consort, Palliyarai Nachchiyar, Tandanganni Nachchiyar and some other images.

Kiratamurti and Consort

In this temple there is a metallic image locally called Dakshinaraaja accompanied by the Consort. It is two-armed, stands in the alidha pose over a padma-pitham placed in turn on a bhadra-pitham. The left arm is raised in the posture of holding the bow and the right hand is in the kataka pose for holding the arrow. The body which is bare with a rotund belly and a deep sunken navel, is criss-crossed by a channavira; the face is marked by a narrow forehead, a moustache and a flowing beard; ears are adorned with patra-kundalas; the arms don bands of beads and elbow bands (vaji bandha). The image wears the hero's leg band. This is thus a beautiful specimen of Kirata in his natural form, unlike the images found at Tiruvetkalam, Radhanarasimhapuram and others.

The icon is accompanied by its consort, a beautiful metallic image with a charming face, the hair done up in the dhamila fashion. The right arm is in the lola hasta posture, the left in the kataka pose; the arm-band is well turned and so is the vajibandha; the breasts are rounded, the waist narrow and the hips broad and sweeping gracefully; the chest is adorned by the channavira; the lower garment is held round the waist by a simha-mukha clasp. The image has all the features of a Rajarajan-Rajendran bronze and, but for the date of the temple, could be attributed to the Middle period. Though belonging to the Vikrama era, we could say that the icons of Kirata and Parvati were the product of the Middle period tradition.

Kuttadum Devar

An image of Nataraja is under worship in the temple. Besides, another image of Nataraja along with his Consort was unearthed in the same village some time back and is now housed in the Madras Government Museum. We are not sure which of these two Natarajas (Kuttadum devar) is the one gifted by Velan Gandaradittan; but it seems the one under worship in the temple may be his gift. They both share the characteristics of the age.

Bhikshatanamurti

It is a fine piece of metal, standing in the tribhanga pose with the deer shown leaping towards his finger. This is an interesting metal image representing Bhikshatanar. The upper left arm probably held a trisula across the back; the other two arms are in the posture of holding and playing on the vina, which makes this image distinct from the rest. This is the first Bhikshatana image depicted as playing on the vina; and another feature is that the figure is not shown in his nude form. However the latter is not an uncommon feature in Chola bronzes or stone sculptures. Among the images set up by a Menmalai-Palaiyanur citizen in the eighth year of Rajadhiraja II referred to earlier, mention is made of an image of 'Vattanaipada Nadantha Naayakar'. Dr. R. Nagaswamy has identified the icon of Bhikshatanar found in this temple with this gift. Appar in a hymn addressed to the Lord (deity) of Tiruvalampuram (modern Melaperumballam) called him the 'great Lord Siva, with a captivating smile on his lips and a vina in his arms, moving around as a Bhikshatana' ('territtatoru vinaiyaraaich-chelvar . . . Vattanaigal padanadantu mayam pesi . . .'). The term 'vattanaigal pada nadantu' of Appar's hymn has given the name of 'Vattanaigal pada nadanta nayakar' for the icon of Bhikshatanar as found in the inscription. It almost seems that the artist tried and succeeded in presenting in a sculptural form what Appar conceived in his fervid imagination. This is thus a dated bronze of great significance, one among a few, enabling us to build up a gallery of such sculptures in metal of the Later Chola period.*

SARANAGATA-RAKSHAKAR TEMPLE

The village of Tillaiyadi is situated in the Mayuram taluk of the Tanjavur district and is not far from Tirukkadaiyur, Akkur and Melaperumpallam, all important religious centres.

The Siva temple in this village was evidently in existence during the Middle Chola period as there is a reference to the Gangaikondasolan chaturalai (hall) where generally the assembly met to take decisions. Possibly, the central shrine (the garbhagriha) has undergone renovation and replacement at a later date with the result that we have no epigraphs of the period prior to the days of Vikrama Chola. However on the west wall of the first prakara of this temple is found a record of the sixth year of Vikrama Chola which mentions a gift of 10 kasus to the temple towards the charges for measuring a tuni and padakku of salt on a daily basis from the salt pan called Aiturai alias Rajendrasolap-peralam, granted by the king for meeting the expenses of offerings during the ardhayama service called the Vikramasolan sandhi in the temple of 'Tillaiyali Isvaram Udaiyar'. This was possibly the name of the temple during the Middle Chola period (ARE 239 of 1925). But a record of the 12th year of Kulottunga II (pu mannu padumam introduction) mentions the name of the deity as Vikramasolisvaram Udaiyar at Tillaiyali-nallur. Six individuals sold to the temple for 15 kasus two velis of land at Sattamangalam after making it tax-free. In this connection the assembly of the village met in the hall called the Gangaikondasolan chaturalai. An undated record (possibly of the days of Rajaraja II or Rajadhiraja II) mentions that one Rajaraja Pichchan made over the right of tiruppadiyakkani and madapattiyam in the temple of Tillaiyali-nallur in Kurumbur nadu, a subdivision of Jayangondasola valanadu, to persons of his own choice. This was done with the approval of the king, granted at the request of Pallavarayar (ARE 236 of 1925).

Much later, in the days of Perumal Parakrama Pandya 'who was pleased to take all countries', the weavers residing in the streets round the temple agreed to raise subscriptions among themselves at the rate of a kasu on each working loom for renovation of the entrance (gopuram) to the temple of Vikramasolisvaram Udaiyar, because it had cracked in many places. This agreement is recorded on the west wall of the inner gopuram of this temple (ARE 238 of 1925).

This temple comprising the central shrine and the first wall of enclosure and the gopuram thereon was the creation of Vikrama Chola and was named Vikramasolisvaram.

In our Middle Chola Temples (pp. 293–9), we have already dealt with the magnificent temple at Tiruppachchur, which is at a distance of 48 km. northwest of the city of Madras and about 6.50 km. north of Kadambattur railway station. This temple continued to attract the attention of the Chola princes during the Later Chola period. We have mentioned that the Amman shrine adjoining the central shrine of Vachisvarar could be attributed to Kulottunga I.

Naralokaviran's son who was called 'Surainayakan Madhavarayan, son of Ponnambalakkuttan alias Porkoyil Tondaimanar of Manavil' finds mention in a ninth year record of Vikrama Chola at Tiruppachchur (ARE 128 of 1929–30). His presents to the deity include a makara torana (aureole) made of gold and silver, together with a pearl parasol crowning it, an image of Gangadevi, a sacred thread of three strings in gold, and a gold plate set with hundreds of pearls and rubies, big and small, and diamonds both cut and uncut, to represent the upper cloth (angavastram).

SIVAKKOLUNDISVARAR TEMPLE

Sivankudal is a village in the Kanchipuram taluk of the Chingleput district and bore the name of Sivak-kudal in ancient days. There is a local temple dedicated to Sivakkolundisvarar.

On the south and west walls of this temple, there are a large number of inscriptions of the days of Kulottunga I, ranging from his fifth year (ARE 284 of 1912) through his 25th, 28th, 49th and 50th years (ARE 278, 280, 281, 282); and all of them are either mutilated or disposed in disorder. There are, however, three Vikrama Chola records on the walls of the central shrine and they are in order; they relate to his 9th, 10th and 11th years respectively (ARE 283, 285 and 286 of 1912). There is, besides, one stray record dated in the third regnal year (ARE 289 of 1912) of Parakesarivarman Rajendra I which is found on a pillar lying in the temple.

It would seem that this temple was in existence even in the days of Rajendra I and possibly also earlier, as this record mentions that the Assembly of Sivakkudal in Nirvelur nadu, in Urrukkattuk kottam, a district of Jayangondasola mandalam, received money from a private citizen and declared certain lands, below the tank of Brahmadhiraya-putteri, rent-free in order to provide for offerings and lamps in the temple of Mahadevar of Sivakkudal.

The records of Kulottunga I all refer to gifts of land and sale of land for gifts to the temple; and the deity is called Sivakkolundudaiya Nayanar (ARE 287 of 1912).

Of the three records of Vikrama Chola, one refers to a sale of land to the temple for conducting a festival of seven days beginning with Ani-Uttirattadi, the asterism under which the king was born; and another refers to the purchase of some land which was later gifted to the temple of Mahadevar or Sivakkolundandar at Sivankudal. The third record of Vikrama Chola is unimportant.

The Amman shrine called that of Maragatavalli Nachchiyar in the temple of Sivakkolundudaiya Nayanar came into existence perhaps during the time of Vijayagandagopala deva, as we have a reference (in his 25th year record: ARE 287 of 1912) to the purchase of some land in his days.

I would infer that the temple was possibly in existence even in the Middle Chola period, how much earlier is not known, and that during the days of Kulottunga I, it received extensive attention and gifts and that the srivimana of the temple either underwent major repairs or was altogether rebuilt before the tenth year of Vikrama Chola. This conclusion is based on the fact that all the records relating to Kulottunga I are jumbled and mutilated, while those of Vikrama Chola on the walls of the srivimana are intact. If this surmise is right, the present structure could be attributed to Vikrama Chola and must have been built between A.D. 1120 and 1128.

The Amman shrine is a foundation of the mid-13th century.

10

The Siva temple at Gudimallam in the Chittoor district of Andhra Pradesh derives its importance from the antiquity of the linga of the central shrine. T.A. Gopinatha Rao has expressed the view that this linga has Scythian features and is the earliest extant linga in South India (Satavahana period: 2nd century B.C.). C. Sivaramamurti, in his Nataraja (p. 169), describes it as "Siva as Agnirudra and Yajamana as against Siva shown trampling on Apasmara".

We are concerned here with the architectural features of this temple, locally called the Parasuramesvarar temple.

On the west side of the base of the central shrine of the temple, there is a dated inscription of the days of Vikrama Chola, which refers to the foundation of the temple. It reads as follows:

Svasti Sri : Poomadu punarap puvimadu valara naamaadu vilanga kopparakesaripanmarana chakravarti sri Vikramasoladevarkku yandu 9-avadu Jayangondasolamandalattu Perumbanappadi Tiruvengadamudaiyarkku Naranadevan Kulottungasolak-karuppurudaiyaarkku nan-raaga ittirukkarrali eduppittu or tirumundavilakkum . . . ippadi

silalekhai pannikkudutten Naranadeva Pudolaraisanana Vikkirama-solak-karuppurudaiyaanen iddanmam rakshippaan sri padam en talaimelena

From this record we learn that one Vikramasolakkapurudaiyan constructed the stone temple in the ninth year of Vikrama Chola and made endowments to it for the merit of his father Narayana deva Pudola-araisan alias Kulottungasola Karuppurudaiyan. From a record of the previous year (eighth regnal year), we gather that the temple was under erection and that an image of the god Chandesarar was set up (ARE 213 of 1903).

There are a large number of Rajarajadeva inscriptions both on the walls of the central shrine and on those of the mandapa in front. They belong to the reigns of Rajaraja II and Rajaraja III.

One of them (ARE 204 of 1903) found on the south wall of the central shrine dated in the 15th year of Rajaraja deva mentions the name of the deity as Parasuramisuramudaiya Nayanar; in the same year are made a gift of gold for a lamp (ARE 205 of 1903) and another gift of gold and paddy (ARE 206 of 1903 found on the west wall of the central shrine). A ninth year record of Rajarajadeva (III) mentions a gift of land by Chalukki Narayana Yadavaraya alias Ghattiyadeva (ARE 210 of 1903).

On a slab set up in front of the central shrine is a fourth year inscription of a Rajakesarivarman, recording a gift of land for offerings to an image set up by Madurantakan Gandaradittar (ARE 222 of 1903). On similar detached stones, we have an inscription dated in Saka 820 (A.D. 898) of Vijayaditya Mahabali Banaraya, making a gift of gold for a lamp (ARE 223 of 1903), and another of the same ruler in Saka 827 (A.D. 905) mentioning a similar gift for a lamp; we have similarly a 32nd year inscription of Madiraikonda Parakesari and one of Vijayadanti Vikkiravarman of his 49th year (when "Vijayaditya Mahabali Banaraya was ruling the earth") (ARE 226 of 1903). There is again an inscription of the 24th year of Nripatunga, recording a grant made while Vanavidyadhara Mahabali Vanarayar was governing the country to the 'west of the Telugu Road' (ARE 228 of 1903); and finally a 23rd year record of Pallava Nandippottaraiyar records a gift of land made while Vikramaditya Mavali Vanarayar was governing the country to the 'west of the Telugu Road' (ARE 229 of 1903).

Thus this temple had been in existence even from the days of the Bana ruler Mahabali Banaraya and had the benefactions of Pallava Nandippottaraiyar and later of Madiraikonda Parakesarivarman Parantaka I. It is not clear if the temple was then of brick and stone. The temple, however, was converted into a stone shrine in the first decade of Vikrama Chola's rule.

MADIVALA BECHIRAK

ISVARA (ULAGISVARAM UDAIYA MAHADEVAR) II TEMPLE

The present-day Kolar district continued to be a part of the Chola empire well into the 12th century, long after the Hoysala ascendancy in the Karnataka region. Madivala Bechirak is a small village in the Srinivasapur taluk of this district (in Karnataka State). There is a temple locally known briefly as the Isvara temple. In the days of its creation, its deity went under the name of Ulagisvaram Udaiya Mahadevar. There are some important inscriptions in this temple. On the south basement of the temple, there is an inscription in Grantha and Tamil characters which reads as follows:

"Svasti sri saka varusham ayirattu narpattionbadu mukkakkilana-digalodu virrirundaruliya Kopparakesarivarmar-ana tribhuvanach-chakravartigal sri Vikkirma sola devarkku yandu pattavadu Nigarilisola mandalattu Pudanattu nattu-kamundan Muduvarayan Marayan ana Rajendra sola Pu . . p-Puda nattu manda . . n magan ta . . . na Vikkiramasa Vira Nulamban Kuranelli Ulokisvaram Udaiya Mahadevarkku . . paanaa distavi-pariyantam srivimanam elundaruluvittu devarkku sripadamum saarduvittu deva . . viba . . nellip-perieri-kil pe . . ." (61, Srinivasapur taluk, Kolar Dist., Epi. Car.)

alias the emperor Sri Vikrama Choladeva, Vikiramasola vira Nulamban, son of the mandalika of Puda nadu ... Muduvarayan Marayan, alias Rajendra Sola ..., the gamunda of Puda nadu in Nigarilisola mandalam, caused a vimana to be built for the god Ulokisvaram Udaiya Mahadevar of Kuranelli, presented a golden plate to the god and also granted certain lands, whose details are given.

At the same place, on the north and west basements, there are records dated in A.D. 1225 which seem to mention that one Rajasrayan Pulladeva Mandalikan alias Vāragunap-perumal, son of Sakki deva Mandalikan, who was the original mandalika of Puda nadu in Nigarilisola mandalam, made a grant for the god Tiruvalisvaram Udaiyar on the hill of Kuranelli in Puda nadu (63, ibid.). One record which is in Tamil is dated in the 38th year of Poysala Iramana devar (A.D. 1292) and merely mentions the name of the nadu and mandalam and is incomplete. A fourth inscription is found on a stone lying in front of the temple, whose characters are in Tamil and Grantha and which tells us that Pulladeva Mandalikan along with some other man of Kuranelli made a grant of land to a Siva-brahmana of the Bahudhanya (Bodhayana) sutra for the god Ulokisvaram Udaiya nayanar; this could be dated about A.D. 1231 (60, ibid.).

From another inscription found on the basement of the Valesvara temple on the Valesvara hill at Guttapalli, in the same hobli, we gather that Makkovai ... Varagunap-Perumal alias Pulladeva Mandalikan, son of Rajapati Sakkideva Mandalikan of Puda nadu in Nigarilisola mandalam made over ... for as long as the moon and the sun endure, the temple, together with panchangam, of the god 'Tiruvalisvaram Udaiyar Who has graciously taken His abode on the top of the hill at Kuranelli of this nadu.' He also granted certain lands, with details (specified), for the above god. He had the temple and the mandapa of this god and of the god Ulokisvaram Udaiya Nayanar of old Kuranelli repaired. He had the repairs of the temple done at the instance of the Siva-brahmana who was the holder of the temple land in Kuranelliperru This could be dated in A.D. 1231 (49, ibid.).

Thus we get to know that there were two temples at Kuranelli, one dedicated to Tiruvalisvaram Udaiyar on the top of the hill, which temple now bears the name of Valesvara, and another dedicated to Isvara, called in the old days Ulokisvaram udaiyar temple, at the modern village of Madivala Bechirak, which was part of the old town of Kuranelli, in Puda nadu in Nigarilisola mandalam.

Thus this temple of Ulokisvaram could be attributed to the Vikrama Chola period. We have no clue as to when the Tiruvalisvarar temple was built, but we do know that it was in existence by A.D. 1225 (i.e. in the period of Rajaraja III).

On the walls of the Apatsahayesvarar shrine at Alangudi, a village about 15 km. south of Kumbakonam, in the Papanasam taluk of the Tanjavur district, there is an inscription of Vikrama Chola which mentions that in the eleventh year and the fifteenth day (after accession), seated on the throne in the hall of Akalankan in his palace at Vikrama Chalapuram and having resolved (to that effect) after two visits, on the 115th day and the 313th day respectively of the tenth year of his reign, to Perumbarrappuliyur (i.e., Chidambaram), the king was pleased to issue an order that in lieu of royal revenue (kadamai) due from the village of Jananathasaruppedimangalam (which was the old name of the village of Alangudi) in Mudikondasola valanadu, the said village should pay old paddy fit for consumption (ponagap-pala-nel) amounting to 1,181 kalams, 2 tunis and 2 nalis, as long as the sun and the moon endure, towards the maintenance of daily worship in the temple of Nataraja at Chidambaram. It was further stipulated that the paddy should be carted and conveyed in safe custody and handed over to the authorities of the temple treasury known as "Udaiyar koyil Ponmeynda Perumal Bhandaram," correct to the standard measure of the temple known as 'seppukkal tiruchchirrambala-mudaiyan'. (See my article in QJMS, XXI, No. 3). This order (ulvari) was signed by a number of royal officers, and after it had been entered in the account books, it was communicated to the Great (Perunguri) Assembly whose members met in full strength. With the approval of their representatives, the royal order was caused to be engraved on the walls of the Tiruvirumpulai* Udaiya Mahadeva temple of Jananatha chaturvedimangalam.

In fact, most of the inscriptions of Vikrama Chola after the tenth year mention, as in this case, the benefactions of the king to the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram. From a close reading of the text, one is almost tempted to conclude that in the tenth year of his reign, there must have been a grand celebration (a coronation or a durbar) on his birthday, which was attended in large numbers by his subject princes who brought heaps of precious gifts (porkuviyal) and poured them at the feet of their emperor. These tributes were utilised by the king for the construction of buildings to his 'family god' (tan kula Nayakam) Nataraja at Chidambaram. Possibly, the tenth year was very significant in the life of Vikrama Chola. He was preoccupied in the first ten years with the task of retaking the territories which had been lost to the empire in the last five years of his father's reign; and having restored the empire to its original extent, he celebrated his achievement by gathering his feudatories and subordinate princes at Chidambaram and ceremonially accepting their tokens of fealty. We shall see more of this in the next section.

NATARAJA TEMPLE

Vikrama Chola, who participated along with his father in the last years of the latter's reign in the various temple-building and other activities, continued the expansion of the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram, so elaborately started by his father. It must be noted that during this period the combined efforts of these two rulers and their famous general Naralokaviran brought about a six-fold expansion of the campus of the temple. As mentioned in the earlier chapter on Vikrama Chola, he brought these constructional activities to a successful conclusion, which should have been around the tenth year of his reign and presumably decided to inaugurate the remodelled temple of Nataraja in a fitting manner, to which we have made reference, as contained in the Alangudi inscription. Vikrama is reported to have given away all the tributes paid to him by the feudatories in his tenth year, towards the building and embellishment of the shrine of Nataraja, his kulanayakam, the tutelary deity. Among the structural additions he made out of these funds, he mentions:

*Irumpulai or Tiru-Irumpulai or Tiruvirumpulai was another old name for the present-day Alangudi village.

- 1) the tirumaligai (wall of enclosure round Ponnambalam),
- 2) the gopura-vasal (tower-gateway),
- 3) the kuta salas (halls), and
- 4) the bali pitham, which he covered with gold.

We are not sure if Vikrama Chola made all these contributions during his reign, or was only totting up the contributions made during the closing years of his father's by the three of them—his father, the general Naralokaviran and himself (SII, V, 458).

An inscription found at Chidambaram registers a gift of land made by a native of Tiraimur for a flower-garden at Manarkudi-Kattalai, a hamlet of Jayangondasola chaturvedimangalam. It also mentions another gift of land in Pannangudichcheri alias Parakesarinallur, a hamlet of Perumparrappuliyur, with four tenants, for maintaining the garden and for providing the mantra-pushpa in the temple of Tiruchchirrambalam Udaiyar (ARE 268 of 1918).

An inscription of his fourth year from Tiruvengadu mentions a gift of land made for a flower-garden by the Assembly of Irukaiyur (modern Erukkur) in Nangur nadu (now in Tanjavur district) to Tiruchchirrambalam Udaiyar at Perumbarrappuliyur (ARE 508 of 1918).

These building activities may have been undertaken by way of completion of continuing construction work on the second wall of enclosure, the gateway of the western tower (melgopuram) and the Hundred-Pillared Hall, which had been started by Naralokaviran, his feudatory and general. The western entrance to the temple through this second wall of enclosure, which is a grand gateway, was completed and named 'the Akalankan Tiruvasal' (see the photograph of the inscription found on a wall of the entrance). This second wall encloses the Nataraja shrine-complex comprising the Kanaka Sabha and the Chit Sabha, the Govindaraja shrine, the dhwajastambham, the balipitham, the Nritta Sabha built during the days of Kulottunga I south of the new shrine of Nataraja, the edir-ambalam (the original temple of Tiruch-chirrambalam), yaga-salai and the famous site (chamber) from which the Devaram was recovered by Nambi Andar Nambi.

Among his other contributions to this temple should be mentioned the gift of a temple-car to carry the Divine Dancer in procession during the great festival instituted and named the Perum Peyar Vila after the king, the laying of a street also named after him, and the gifts of a kalpaka tree, a necklace of pearls, and dishes of pure gold. All these gifts were made on the 15th of April, A.D. 1128. The king takes great pride in calling the Lord of Dance, Nataraja of Chidambaram, his kulanayakam. He also constructed a large number of big mansions (nilai mani maligaigal) along the road by which Lord Nataraja is said to have been taken in procession for the sacred bath in the eastern sea about eight km. east of the city of Tiruch-chirrambalam.

In spite of the foundation of the Gangaikondasolisvaram temple in the new Chola capital by Rajendra I, the temple of Nataraja at Chidambaram, which had won the homage and patronage of Parantaka I and other Early Chola kings, and had acquired a halo of glory after the recovery of the Devaram hymns of the trio during the days of Rajaraja I, began to exercise a strong fascination over princes and people alike and the special devotion of this royal house to Nataraja reached the greatest heights in the reigns of Vikrama Chola and his son Kulottunga II.

By the end of Vikrama Chola's reign, the completion of the first (inner) wall of enclosure, called Kulottunga- and also Vikramasolan-tirumaligai, the construction of the second wall of enclosure (Vikramasolan tirumaligai), the completion of at least the main Amman shrine and the building of the Hundred-Pillared Hall at Chidambaram had taken place. The campus had expanded considerably and was to expand still more in the succeeding decades.

BHULOKANATHASVAMIN TEMPLE (VIKRAMA CHOLISVARAM)

From Kuttalam railway station on the Southern Railway, Tiruvelvikkudi is 4.8 km. in a north-easterly direction; and about 3 km. from the latter village are located three important villages of ancient fame, viz., Edirkolpadi (or Mel-Tirumananjeri), Kil-Tirumananjeri and (Rajarajan-) Tirumangalam. They are situated in the Mayuram taluk of the Tanjavur district. The temple at Tirumangalam is dedicated to Siva under the name of Bhulokanathasvamin.

From a tenth year record of one Tribhuvanachakravartin Konerinmaikondan, found on the south wall of this temple, we find a royal order at the instance of one Ganitach-chakravarti approving a gift of land as compensation to the temple of Rajendrasolisvaram Udaiyar, for the construction of a new compound wall (tirumadil), a gate-way (tiruvasal) and other extensions to the temple of Vikrama-cholesvaram Udaiyar at Rajarajan-Tirumangalam in Virudarajabhayankara valanadu. This temple is obviously attributable to the days of Vikrama Chola though the exact date of its erection is not easy to determine. In a stone set up in front of the Madhyannesvarar temple at Tirumananjeri, also in the same taluk and quite close to Tirumangalam, it is inscribed that the land (where this stone should have been originally set up) was gifted to the god Vikramasolisvaram Udaiyar at Irararajan-Tirumangalam. A sula (spear) is engraved at the top of the inscription (ARE 111 of 1927). A sixth year record, found on the north wall of this temple and belonging to Parakesari-varman alias Tribhuvanachakravartin Virarajendradeva (Kulotunga III), beginning with the introduction Puyal vaittu, registers the reassignment of lands belonging to several temples and individuals, necessitated by the erosion by floods of the Vikkirasolappereri.

There is another record found on the east wall of the second prakara of the temple, relating to Kulottunga III, which registers a grant of land for the maintenance of one Kasyapan Tirunattamadi Avimuttisvaram Udaiyan alias Ananda nayaka Bhatta doing worship in the temple of Vikramasolisvaram Udaiyar at Rajarajan-Tirumangalam, in Kurukkai nadu, a subdivision of Virudarajabhayankara valanadu (ARE 112 to 117 of 1926).

There are three pillar effigies in this temple which are worthy of attention; they presumably represent donors or important persons of the locality worthy of recognition, and over the figures are given the following names:

- i) Maddalaperumal (for the figure shown beating a drum);
- ii) Bhogamattal alias Bhuvananayaki Manikkam (for the female figure); and
- iii) Yerri alias Virapperumal Manikkam.

We may conclude that the temple of Bhulokanathasvamin at (Rajarajan-) Tirumangalam came into being by about the tenth year of Vikrama Chola and was named after him.

KANCHIPURAM

15 ARULALAP-PERUMAL (VARADARAJA PERUMAL) TEMPLE: KARUMANIKKA-VARADAR (VIKRAMASOLA VINNAGAR ALVAR) SHRINE (IN THE SECOND PRAKARA)

As we saw in the section on Kanchipuram (Chingleput district)—Section 44 of Chapter 2, this ancient city was divided into three major parts, of which Chinna- or Vishnu- Kanchi was one. This sector of the city was called Tiruvattiyur in olden days. It has three major temples. We have traced the growth of the Arulala Perumal (Varadaraja Perumal) temple in the above-mentioned section of the book.

In the second prakara of this temple there is a shrine dedicated to Karumanikka-varadar. We learn from an 11th year record of Chakravartin Vikrama Chola deva found in this temple that the king set up in this temple an icon called Vikramasola vinnagar Alvar, and for its daily worship made a gift of land as devadana in the village of Vilvalam which was renamed Akalankan-nallur in Kaliyur nadu, a subdivision of Kaliyur kottam (ARE 590 of 1919). The icon is to be identified with the one in the Karumanikka-varadar shrine.

Tiruvoymur is about 24 km. south-east of Tiruvarur and is about 3 km. to the south-east of Tirukkoli, both sacred places in the hagiology of the Tamils. It is one of the Saptavitanka Kshetras and Surya is said to have worshipped the Lord of Tiruvoymur. There is a sacred tank in front of the temple called the Surya-tirtham. The main deity of the temple is called Tiru-voymurnathar and the Amman is Palinu (m) nanmoli-ammai. The Lord of the place has been sung by both Appar and Sambandar. When Appar was worshipping the Lord of Vedaranyam, He is said to have appeared before him and commanded him to go and worship the Lord at Tiruvoymur; and the tradition is that as he was proceeding there to sing the praises of the Lord of Tiruvoymur, Sambandar also joined him and they sang His praises together.

The temple, presently known as Thyagarajasvamin temple, received the attention of the Early Pandyan and Early Chola rulers, as a number of inscriptions of the Early Pandya kings, Varaguna and Maranjadaiyan, are found engraved on the tiers of the central shrine of this temple (ARE 605 and 608 of 1962-63). The Government Epigraphist has identified Varaguna with the Varaguna figuring in the Aduturai, Kumbakonam and Tiruchchirrambalam records (SII, XIV, Nos. 7, 8, 14). There are also a few Rajakesarivarman and Parakesarivarman inscriptions and they could be attributed to the Chola rulers of the tenth century. On palaeographic grounds, all these records appear to be copies of original inscriptions made in the early 12th century, and the earliest original record would appear to be one of Vikrama Chola, dated in his 12th year (ARE 598 of 1961-62). This points to the fact that the temple was reconstructed sometime prior to the 12th regnal year of Vikrama Chola (A.D. 1130).

A 11th year record of Rajadhiraja II (ARE 596 of 1962-63) mentions the existence of the Amman (shrine) also, a gift of 50 kasu being made and paid into the temple treasury by one Panchavan Villuparaiyan to maintain two perpetual lamps, one to be burnt before the Lord Tiruvoymur Udaiyar for the merit of one Velan Bhattan and the other before the goddess in the temple for the merit of the donor's forefathers. Another record of Rajadhiraja II, found on the south wall of the shrine and dated in his 12th year, corresponding to A.D. 1178, also refers to a gift of money for a lamp (ARE 603 of 1962-63).

The earliest of (Virarajendra) Kulottunga III's records is found on the south wall of the mandapa and relates to his sixth year, recording a gift of 112 kasus by one Punangai, a devaradiyal of Tiruvoymur, for a perpetual lamp. The Sivabrahmanas received the amount and undertook to maintain the lamp (ARE 588 of 1962-63). A 26th year inscription of Kulottunga III records a gift of a brass lamp with narasam (rod) and 600 kasus for maintaining the same, by Udaiya Nachchi alias Sivan Perundevi, wife of Vaippur Udaiyan Tirunagisvaram Udaiyan, a merchant residing at Pasai. The Sivabrahmanas received the amount and agreed to maintain the endowment (ARE 597 of 1962-63). Another inscription of the same reign whose date is lost records the exemption from taxes granted by the Perunguri-sabha of Paramesvara chaturvedimangalam in Rajendrasola valanadu to some lands endowed for worship and offerings, and for meeting the expenses during the procession of some deity set up by an individual whose name is not known (ARE 600 of 1962-63). From another record we get to know that the Perunguri-sabha of Kattimangudi alias Solapandya-chaturvedimangalam of Vandalaivelur kurram in Rajendrasola valanadu provided funds and undertook to widen the street leading to a toppu (grove) to which the deity was to be taken in procession (ARE 579 of 1962-63). Another record of the same ruler (Tribhuvanavira), also dated in his 33rd year, mentions an undertaking given by the Sivabrahmanas of the muppadu-vattattuk-kani of the temple of Tiruvoymur Udaiyar to provide the necessary commodities for the tiruk-kalabhach-chirappu on the occasion of two festivals to (Adal) vitanka devar out of the interest on 1200 kasus deposited with them by Tiruchchirrambalam Udaiyan Divakara . . . who seems to have received the amount from the Sribhandaram of the temple for some lands sold to it (ARE 586 of 1962-63).

A 20th year record of Rajaraja III mentions a gift of 600 kasus by one Sembonsodi Vottanaiyadal udaiyar of Kattur for maintaining three sandhi lamps to be burnt before the deity Alagiya Vinayakap-pillaiyar set up by him in front of the sri-pitha in the temple. The Sivabrahmanas received the amount and undertook to burn the lamps (ARE 598 of 1962-63). A 27th year record (A.D. 1243) mentions an exemption from taxes granted by the Perunguri sabha of Kattimangudi alias Solapandya chaturvedimangalam to lands endowed for services and offerings to Pillaiyar, the deity set up by Sri Krishnan alias Udappirappu-Alagiya-peraraiyan, residing near the temple (ARE 584 of 1962-63). A similar exemption was granted in respect of lands in their village endowed to the same deity granted by the sabha of Isanur alias Paramesvara chaturvedimangalam (ARE 585 of 1962-63). A 29th year record mentions the sale of land as chandesvarapperuvilai (temple auction) for 4,000 anradu-narkasu (standard current coin) by the authorities of the temple to Pattarayappanivar alias Atkondavilli of Neydalvayil, to provide for worship and offerings to the image of Tirujnanam-perra-Pillaiyar (Sambandar) set up by the purchaser of the land (ARE 581 of 1962-63). Another inscription of the 30th year of the same ruler records an undertaking by Sirramur-udaiyan Arayan Kambikkadan Pavalakunran to provide for the expenses on the Tirukkappu day of the festivals, in the months of Purattasi and Chittirai to god Vattanaiyadal Udaiyar (Nataraja) from the proceeds of some land received by him as kani from the temple after paying the specified taxes thereon (ARE 582 of 1962-63). A record of the same ruler in the same year refers to the sale of land for 1400 kasus by the authorities of the temple to Atkondavilli alias Pattarayap-panivar of Neydavayil, referred to earlier (compare ARE 581 of 1962-63), who in turn endowed the same to meet the expenses for worship, offerings and taking in procession of god Vattanaiyadal Udaiyar (Nataraja) on the day of Tiruvadirai in the month of Margali (ARE 587 of 1962-63).

A 11th year inscription of Rajendra III records the declaration of the Perunguri mahasabha of Isanur alias Paramesvara-chaturvedimangalam exempting from taxes the lands endowed by Vanakkovaraiyar as madappuram to the Tirutturai Nayakan tirumadam built by him near the temple (ARE 583 of 1962-63). A 20th year inscription (disarranged) records the sale of some land by the authorities of the temple in favour of Kuttan Andapillai of Iraiyanakudi who endowed the land as jivitam for a guard at the western entrance of the temple after renovating it. The guard was to pay the taxes on the land into the temple treasury (ARE 589 of 1962-63). Another record of this ruler (year not clear) records a tax-free gift of some land to provide for the expenses in a matha which was established by a person (name lost) in the street on the southern side of the temple, by Kuttadu-nayan alias Rajendrasola Karaikkadudaiyan (ARE 604 of 1962-63). A 21st year record of the same ruler found on fragments built into the gopuram of the temple refers to a grant of land made tax-free as madappuram for a matha by Rajendrasola Karaikkadudaiyan and mentions that it was lying fallow (ARE 619 of 1962-63).

This celebrated temple has had a long and chequered history.

SARKAR PERIYAPALAYAM

VARADARAJA PERUMAL TEMPLE (VIKRAMA-CHOLA-VINNAGARAM)

In Sarkar Periyapalayam in the Erode Taluk of the Coimbatore district, there are two temples: (i) Sugrisvarar temple and (ii) Varadaraja Perumal temple. The former belongs to the post-Chola period. The Varadaraja Perumal temple was called in the past, according to inscriptions on its walls, Vikrama-chola-vinnagaram.

From one of the two inscriptions in the latter temple, found on the west and south walls and partly damaged, belonging to the reign of Tribhuvana Chakravartin Konerinmaikondan, who should be none other than Vikrama Chola, and the only dated one (14th year), we find that a Vishnu temple called Vikrama Chola Vinnagar, named after the Chola emperor, was set up in his time in the (presumably) newly-established village of Vikrama Chola chaturvedimangalam, also named after him (ARE 317 of 1908). Another inscription, found on the west wall, mentions the name of the deity as Perumal Varadarasar in Mugandanur (ARE 316 of 1908). This place and the temple may be taken to have been named after the Chola king Vikrama Chola.

MADARVELUR

1. VIKRAMA CHOLISVARAM UDAIYAR TEMPLE 18
2. MATALISVARASVAMI TEMPLE

Madarvelur is a village about 6.5 km. west of the railway station of Sirkali on the main line of the Southern Railway

From the only record on the west wall of the Siva temple here (ARE 38 of 1918), we come to know that in the 19th year of Tribhuvana-chakravartin Rajarajadeva, a gift of land was made to the temples of Matulisvaram Udaiyar and Vikramasolisvaram Udaiyar at Matuli-velur alias Akalanka chaturvedimangalam in Venpanaiyur nadu, a subdivision of Rajadhiraja valanadu, by the Great Assembly for offerings and repairs. The christening of the village as Akalanka-chaturvedimangalam would indicate that it was named after a surname of Vikrama Chola. The inscription refers to two temples, both of which may be attributed to Vikrama Chola's period.

The temple has an upapitham on which rests the adhishtanam which consists of the upanam, padmam, jagati (carrying inscriptions), vritta-kumudam, kantham and vedi mouldings.

It is an ekatala stone temple with a circular griva and sikhara.

On the three free sides of the garbhagriha there are three well-adorned devakoshtas with a frontispiece fashioned like a mancha with pilasters on either side with two engaged pillars at the ends.

This temple may be identified as the Vikrama Cholisvaram of the inscription found on the wall of its garbhagriha. (Pls. 190-2).

TIRUKKODIKKA(VAL)

19 TIRUKKOTISVARAR TEMPLE: MAHAMANDAPA AND TIRUCH-CHURRU-MALIGAI

In our earlier book, Early Chola Temples (pp. 174-6), we have dealt with the temple of Tirukkotisvarar at Tirukkodikka(val) in extenso indicating that this temple was rebuilt of stone in the days of Uttama by queen Sembiyan Mahadevi who ordered that all the inscriptions found in various places in the earlier structure of the temple should be re-inscribed on the walls of the new structure (ARE 36 of 1930-31). While dealing with the Sun temple at Suryanarkoyil and generally Sun worship in the south, we have also mentioned the fact that one Ilaiyan Aditta-pidaran of Koravayil in Tenkarai Panaiyur nadu gifted money to the servants of the temple of Tirukkodikka in Vadakarai Nallarrur nadu to supply offerings to the image of Surya deva which he had set up in that temple (ARE 35 of 1930-31).

In the maha-mandapa of the Tirukkotisvarar temple, we find a number of inscriptions belonging to the days of Kulottunga I and his son Vikrama Chola. They all relate to his 42nd and later regnal years. We may presume therefore that this mandapa should have come into existence during the last decade of Kulottunga I. Encircling the main central shrine and also the mandapa along with the subsidiary shrines of Ganapati and Chandesvarar in the prakara, is a wall with a raised, pillared and covered platform running the entire length of the wall; on the east wing of this structure, outside the prakara, there is a brief inscription which mentions the words "svasti Sri Vikkiramason tirumaligai." Evidently this wall was built during Vikrama Chola's days and at his instance and named after him. We have noticed that in his and his father's days a large number of temples were expanded, by adding to the area of the temple campus by building what are termed tirumaligai or tiruch-churru-maligai, i.e., compound walls round the existing temple, frequently with raised covered platforms running the entire length thereof, thus allowing for a circumambulatory passage and space for sub-shrines for Ganapati and others. We know for instance that Kulottunga I and Vikrama Chola built the first and second prakara walls of the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram (ARE 9 to 58 of 1930-31), apart from many others.

CHIDAMBARAM (PARAKESARINALLUR)

VIKRAMASOLISVARAM UDAIYAR TEMPLE 20

Chidambaram, presently the headquarters of a taluk of the same name in the South Arcot district and known in ancient days as Perumbarrappuliyur or Tiruchchirrambalam, was a great temple city, which during the Chola period expanded in extent and importance enormously and covered a number of hamlets (pidagai) for miles in all directions. Parakesarinallur was one of these pidagais. To the north-west of the town of Chidambaram and about 3 km. from the Nataraja temple lies the comparatively obscure suburb now known as Singarattoppu. It has rich historical associations with the Nataraja temple. Umapati Sivacharya made this place his home and paid worship to Lord Tirukalanchedi Udaiyar here. From an 11th year inscription of Kopperunjinga found on the south wall of the Brahmapurisvarar temple in this suburb, we learn that the temple of Nayanar Tirukalanchedi Udaiyar was located in Panangudich-cheri alias Parakesarinallur, a hamlet of Perumbarrappuliyur. From other inscriptions in this temple, we learn that there were also other temples in this suburb such as Arumolisvaram. The Tirutondattogai-isvaram referred to in these inscriptions has been identified with Tirukalanchedi Udaiyar temple (i.e., the present day Brahmapurisvarar temple) (vide The City of the Cosmic Dance by B. Natarajan, pp. 29, 35, 36 and 39).

We learn from an inscription in the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram that a certain Edirilisolai alias Irungolan founded a temple called Vikramasolisvaram Udaiyar at Parakesarinallur, after having acquired land for the purpose from various people and after providing for houses for brahmanas and temple servants. Tribhuvana-chakravartin Kulottunga Chola, 'who was pleased to take Madurai and the crowned head of the Pandya' ordered in his 12th year, 125th day that the assessment of this land be deducted from the revenue of the village, the same be entered in the temple accounts with the original documents preserved in the temple and that the whole transaction be engraved on the walls of the temple (ARE 309 of 1913). It is now found on the north wall of the second prakara of the Chidambaram temple.

This temple was a foundation of the period of Vikrama Chola, named after him. The record, however, relates to the period of Kulottunga III and is engraved on the walls of the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram.

SAR(A)NGAPANI TEMPLE

Kumbakonam is the headquarters of a taluk of the same name in the district of Tanjavur and is on the main line of the Southern Railway. It is a celebrated city of temples, both Siva and Vishnu. This city has a very long and eventful history. It was known in the past as Tiruk-kudamukku or Tiruk-kudandai.

According to local legends there was a deluge after the Dvapara yuga: the Almighty placed in charge of Brahma a pot of nectar (amrita) and the seeds of creation, and left it adrift in the deluge. The drifting sacred pot finally got stranded at this place. Siva, as Kiratamurti, appeared on the scene; and with his arrow pierced the pot and spilt the nectar, which flowed all over. The greater part of it flowed into a tank, now called the Mahamakha tank, where even today a great bathing festival is celebrated once in twelve years. It is believed that all the river goddesses dwell in this tank. Govinda Dikshitar has built on its banks several mandapas for the reception of deities on various festival days. The legend goes that the remnants of the amrita were mixed with sand and the Lord of Adi-Kumbhesvarar was created out of it. The deity of the Adi-Kumbhesvarar temple is sung by all the three early Nayanmars.

On the north bank of this tank is the Kasi Visvanathar temple (called later on the Karohana temple). This temple is celebrated by Sambandar in a hymn. One of the important temples of Kumbakonam is the Nagesvarar temple. It is an Early Chola temple and a gem of art. We have dealt with it in detail in our Early Chola Art, Part I (pp. 133-5).

Besides, there are two Vishnu temples in this city, the Ramaswami temple and the Sar(a)ngapani temple. The former which is full of rich and elaborate sculptures is of more recent origin, having been erected in the seventeenth century A.D. The earlier and more celebrated temple is that of Sar(a)ngapani. Its importance in South India is next only to that of the Srirangam temple. It is believed that the Vaidika vimana of the Sar(a)ngapani temple is the offshoot of the Srirangam Pranava vimana and a replica of the vimana presented to Vibhishana of Lanka by the Ikshvakus of Ayodhya at the time of Rama's coronation.

The vaidika vimana is conceived of as a chariot with wheels drawn by horses and elephants, on a grander scale than that of the Melakkadambur temple built in the period of Kulottunga I (early 12th century A.D.). As in Vaikuntham, the srivimana has two gateways, the uttarayana vasal (the northern gate, opened on the Makara Sankranti day) and the dakshinayana vasal (opened on the 18th of the month of Adi in the Tamil calendar).

This temple has had a long past, from the early centuries of the Christian era, as Bhutattalvar and Peyalvar (2nd century A.D.) have sung hymns on the Lord of this temple ('aiyarum vaippanpasaich-cherndu kudamukkil koyilakkondu'—Bhutattalvar; 'Padamukkinayiravaip-pambanai mel serndai—kudamukkil koyilakkondu'—Peyalvar). Periyalvar and Andal have sung hymns on the Lord of Kudandai; also Tirumangai alvar (eighth century A.D.). Tirumalisai alvar seems to have spent his last years and attained salvation here. Nammalvar also is associated with this temple.*

*Nathamuni is said to have heard the recitation of one of the hymns of the

Though the temple existed in the Pallava and Chola periods, the present structure—a stone temple, in the shape of a chariot—seems to be attributable to the period of the Later Cholas, most likely the reign of Vikrama Chola (modelled after the Melakkadambur temple of Kulottunga I's time). The gateway portion of the gopuram of this temple is also attributable to the time of the Later Cholas, but the super-structure of eleven nilais (storeys), about 46 metres high, may belong to the Vijayanagara period. (It may also be a later renovation).

The main deity of the central shrine (mulavar) is Pallikondar (Vishnu reclining on the snake Adishesha). The processional deity (Utsava murti) is Sarngapani. His Consort is Komalavalli. There is a legend associated with these two deities.

Bhrigu muni once entered the chamber of Lord Vishnu and Mahalakshmi; he was not recognised; and the muni kicked the Lord on His chest and departed. Lakshmi got vexed that Her Lord did not punish the offender. So in a fit of anger She left Her Lord and went to the Earth and settled on the banks of the lotus tank at Kudamukku and did penance to win back the Lord.

In the next aeon, Bhrigu was reborn as Hema Rishi. He repented for his past offence to Vishnu and did severe penance. The Lord was pleased with his devotion and appeared before him and asked him what his desire was. Hema Rishi prayed that Lakshmi be born as his daughter and he be given the privilege of offering her to the Lord as his spouse. The prayer was granted. One day when the muni went to the lotus tank, he found a girl on a lotus in the pond. The muni took her home and brought her up as his own daughter. When the auspicious time came, Komalavalli, the girl, was offered in marriage to Lord Sarngapani.

Thus Sarngapani and Komalavalli constitute the processional

Nalayira Prabandam—the four thousand hymns of Nammalvar (Sadagopan)—and was eager to unearth the rest of the hymns. And credit is given to Nathamuni for the recovery of the Vaishnavite Prabandam. What Nambi Andar Nambi did for the recovery of the Devaram hymns of the Saivite Nayanmars, Nathamuni is said to have done for the Vaishnavite hymns. Nathamuni spent his last years in the Chola capital of Gangaikondasolapuram and died there. We saw in our Middle Chola Temples (p. 253) that his grandson Alavandar built a temple for Vishnu at the capital as a memorial temple to honour the great acharya.

deities of the temple. Sarngapani (as the name indicates, Sarnga being Vishnu's bow) bears a bow in his hand.

The Consort's shrine, dedicated to Komalavalli (tayar sannidhi), is to the right of the Dakshinayana gateway of the temple.

An interesting feature of this temple is that there are labelled sculptures depicting the karanas of Bharata's Natya Sastra, found on the first tier of the gopuram—in contrast to the arrangement in the generality of other temples containing the karana sculptures, where they are found on the wall surface of the entrance portion itself, or on the kantham of the tiruch-churru-maligai (as in the case of the Tiruk-kamak-kottam Udaiya Nachchiyar temple and also the thousand-pillared hall, both at Chidambaram.) (Pls. 193–202).

SOMANATHAR (OR SOMALINGAR) TEMPLE 22

The village of Palayarai in the heart of the fertile delta of the Kaveri was once the celebrated secondary capital of the Pallavas and later of the Cholas. Known as Nandivarma- or Nandipanma- or merely Nandi- puram under the Pallavas, it was the political centre of their hold over Chola mandalam till the rise of the Muttaraiyars and the line of Kochchenganan, Orriyuran, and Vijayalaya. It went into temporary eclipse in the Early Chola period but during the Middle Chola period resumed its importance. In this capital many a Chola monarch got himself anointed. It is referred to in a record of Kundavai Pirattiyar, the sister of Rajaraja I, as the home of her nephew, Rajendra I. It is noticed from a number of grants of the early years of Kulottunga I, including the Tirukkalar copper plate grant that during the Middle Chola period, Palayarai was known by the name of Ahavamalla-kulakala-puram, evidently so christened to commemorate Chola victory over the Western Chalukyan ruler, Ahavamalla*. But its importance grew considerably during the Later Chola period when many of the ruling monarchs made it their home for long stretches of time. Vikrama Chola would appear to have resided here in preference to the Chola capital and to have built a palace for himself at Palayarai that went under the name of Vikramasolapuram. One hears less and less of Tanjavur or Gangaikondasolapuram; and the area between the Kaveri near Kumbakonam and the (later) Tirumalairajan channel became the cradle of Tamil culture and literature and the focal point of temple building activity. Pattisvaram, Ramanathankoyil*, Tiruchchattimurram, Darasuram, Mulaiyur, Udaiyalur, Kurikkai, Kumbakonam and Tribhuvanam are not more than three or four kilometres from this village. Today it is in utter ruins and bears no relation to the greatness it enjoyed during the heyday of the Later Cholas.

*During this period, the nearby Ayirattali bore the names of Mudikondasola-puram, Pandiyanai-ven-kanda-sola-puram etc. Mudikondasola was a title of Rajendra I.

It is about 11 km. south-east of Kumbakonam (along the road) and is approached via Darasuram, Pattisvaram and Mulaiyur; Tirumalai-rajagan river (canal) lies to its immediate north and is crossed by a temporary bamboo bridge.

A mere cursory look at this temple will immediately place it among the great temples of the Later Cholas; it shares many of the characteristics of Vikramasolisvaram at Tukkachchi, Rajarajesvaram at Darasuram, and Tribhuanesvaram at Tribhuvanam. With no inscriptional material on its walls to give us a clue to its age (none belonging to the Later Chola period), one has to indulge in some amount of speculation in dating it; but one would seem almost to be sure to put it as a Vikrama Cholan monument which presumably got embellished or completed by Rajaraja II. In any case, it would definitely be a monument built during A.D. 1130–1160, some additions and accretions taking place in the subsequent periods.

The temple has two walls of enclosure. The outer one is in ruins with only the gopuram at the eastern side remaining. Even that which should have been a grand seven-tiered gopuram comparable to those of Chidambaram, Tribhuvanam and Tiruvalur is in a bad shape, all the upper tiers having collapsed. Portions of the first tier remain to give us an idea of the architectural features of the superstructure. The solid all-stone gopura-vasal (the dvara, that is the base) is in two tiers, as at the above-mentioned places, and bears a close resemblance to, and is almost identical with, the eastern gopuram of the outer-most prakara (third wall of enclosure) at Tiruvalur. The pilasters, the niches and the entablatures over them, which now take the form of salas in lieu of makara-toranas of an earlier period, and more than these, the majestic vyalas of graceful form alternating with the niches, point to the unequivocal conclusion that this gopuram and the non-extant wall of enclosure must have been the contributions of Kulottunga III. The dance panels, depicting the karanas of Bharata's Natya Sastra, strung like a festoon down the flanking wall-faces of the entrance through the gopuram, bear the same architectural and iconic features as are noticed at Chidambaram, Darasuram and Tribhuvanam. The Later Cholas took the cue for their gopurams from the grand vimana of the Rajarajesvaram at Tanjavur and the Gangaikondasolisvaram at Gangaikondasolapuram and adapted the technique to suit their plans of manifold expansion of existing campuses of earlier temples. By and large, the srivimana receives diminishing importance, the gopuram getting increasing attention. The gopurams of Kulottunga III would have for us less of iconographic significance, the heyday of iconic display on the gopurams being left behind with the end of Rajaraja II's rule. Inscribed icons as at the western gopuram or the inscribed karanas (defined from the slokas of the Natya Sastra) of the classical dance form as found in the eastern as well as the western gopurams of the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram would almost fix their period as of Rajaraja II's. The main Darasuram gopuram falls into this group.

The inner wall of enclosure with the gopuram at the eastern entrance through it is, however, part and parcel of the Somanathar temple. The inner campus measures 20 m. north-south and 78 m. east-west. The temple faces east and has only one approach through the eastern wall. The madil has a tiruch-churru-maligai 4.30 m. in width along the lengthwise walls and 5.30 m. along the breadthwise walls. The main shrine consists of a garbhagriha 10 m. square, an ardhamandapa 5.16 m. by 4.37 m. inside with uneven external dimensions caused by the new structural innovations that came into being from the Vikramasolisvaram days. The structure is seen to lose the axial balance that characterised the temples of the days of the Middle Cholas; in fact it would be true to say that structural asymmetry was brought about even by Rajendra I as noticed at Kulambandal. The northern wall is flattened out into one continuous straight wall surface with decorative niches evenly placed along the entire length; the southern wall evolves its undulations and embellishments, almost as if to attract the pilgrim to the temple who begins his circumambulation in a pradakshina fashion commencing with the southern prakara; and only when he has worshipped the lord does he wend his way through the western and finally the northern prakara before exiting through the eastern gateway. A look at the temple plan would emphasise this asymmetry. Measured on the northern side, the temple is 42.60 m. long, the garbhagriha and the ardhamandapa wall portions measuring 16.25 m. and the remaining chambers measuring 26.35 m. externally. There are ten niches on the northern wall covering the mahamandapa and the mukhamandapa, evenly spaced out (with an intervening distance of 2.64 m.); corresponding to them on the southern face, wherever a niche could be accommodated, we find one and in other places, other architectural innovations like the sopana and the platform with an entrance to the mukhamandapa make their appearance. The other important feature is the ratha-mandapa (or the chariot hall) with horses and wheels, south of the mahamandapa.

The srivimana is tri-tala with kutas and salas in the haras and a circular dome (sikhara) on top. Like Vikramasolisvaram at Tukkachchi, the superstructure of this temple is of brick.

In terms of style evolution, we could place this temple midway between Vikramasolisvaram mentioned above and Rajarajesvaram at Darasuram. If one were not conscious of the fact that Kulottunga II concentrated much attention on the Chidambaram temple, one could say that this was a temple of the period of Kulottunga II. The only inscription found here (ARE 254 of 1927) states that the big mandapa and the sopana (flight of steps) were constructed by Vanadarayan Narasingadevan of Poruvanur in Saka 1375 (A.D. 1453). We must recollect that Palayarai was sacked by the Pandyas after the defeat of Kulottunga III in the closing years of his reign and much of the damage to the temple here and the strange absence of almost all the niche icons would be ascribable to this sack. Evidently Palayarai remained an abandoned city for a long time. The renovation referred to is possibly of the mahamandapa and the ratha-mandapa and its steps.

The noteworthy feature of the niche figures is the presence of Ardhanarisvarar in the rear niche of the garbhagriha—a departure from Later Chola style Lingodbhavar noticed at Darasuram as well as at Tribhuvanam. Ardhanarisvarar as the rear-niche figure occurs again in the Siva temple at Mulaiyur, close by.

The Amman shrine dedicated to Somanayaki is attributable to Kulottunga III, on stylistic grounds.

Panda, the dandadhipa, and matula of Velananti Gonka, built at Ikshupalli a fine temple to Siva and gave lands for worship and lamps (ARE 163 of 1897; SII, VI, 123).

24. no regnal year: Tirukkodikkaval, Tanjavur dist. Tirukkotisvaram is called Tyagasamudram (ARE 49 of 1931); on the east wall, outside the first prakara, is an inscription referring to 'Svasti sri Vikramasolan tirumaliga' (ARE 56 of 1931).
25. no regnal year: Tirumalam, Tanjavur dist. A prakara wall built by Vikrama Chola is called after his name (ARE 99 of 1910).

Kulottunga II

Kulottunga II, the son and successor of Vikrama Chola, became the Crown Prince in A.D. 1133, and his regnal years are counted from then onwards. Vikrama Chola continued to rule for a period of two more years at least. The reign of Kulottunga II, like the latter half of his father's and the entire period of his successor's, was one marked by peace and a welcome freedom from wars. The extent of the kingdom was preserved as it was after Vikrama had re-established Chola suzerainty over the areas seized from the Cholas in the last few years of Kulottunga I's reign; in fact, the restoration of Chola authority over Vengi was complete and effective, as attested by the Chelluru plates. The Western Chalukyas, who had temporarily eclipsed the Cholas in this region, are not heard of there. The Chola overlordship is attested by the prevalence of a large number of Chola inscriptions of this period in this region.

Kulottunga II continued to rule from the old capital of Gangaikondasolapuram or Gangapuri. It is likely that he had a secondary and well-frequented capital at Chidambaram, otherwise called Tillai, which became a centre of considerable attention from the period of the Later Cholas. We have already seen the massive alterations and additions that Kulottunga I, his son Vikrama Chola, and their general and minister Naralokavira had made to the temple of Nataraja. It is likely that Kulottunga II celebrated a coronation in this city, as, in one inscription, he is described as the 'king who wore the crown in such wise as to shed lustre on Tillainagar' (ARE 155 of 1902). Apart from these two palaces, he would appear to have erected a new palace at Vikramasolapuram, a reference to which is contained in the inscriptions (ARE 271 and 533 of 1921) relating to his third regnal year.

From an inscription at Tirumalavadi, we come to know that he had two queens; the chief queen was called Tyagavalli, alternatively called Bhuvanamulududaiyal; the other was a Malaiyaman princess, by name Mukkokilan (ARE 85 of 1895). We are aware that the Kilur chiefs were wielding considerable authority in the region of the present-day South Arcot district and that they played a vital role in the political activities of this and the succeeding decades.

Kulottunga II was a great devotee of Nataraja of Chidambaram and was a staunch Saivite. In fact, he was the exception to the rule among the kings of the Vijayalaya House and later those of the Chola-Chalukya line, who were catholic in their attitude to religion, paying equal attention to Saivism, Vaishnavism and Jainism. But Kulottunga II was almost a bigot as exemplified by the closure of the worship of Govindaraja in the campus of the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram.

Kulottunga II bore many surnames; the most frequent name by which he went was Anapaya; this is borne out by the fact that a large number of old villages were renamed Anapaya-nallur and new villages created with that name; even his Secretary (tirumandira-olai) who conveyed the royal orders was named Anapaya Muvendavelan. In the inscriptions and in the Ula on Kulottunga II by Ottakkuttan, the Court poet, he is called Anapaya (ARE 271 of 1915; 533 of 1921; 346 of 1911; 531 of 1912). We have noted his intense devotion to Tillai Nataraja and the additions and improvements he made to that growing temple-complex; he covered the sacred Perambalam with gold and hence came to be called Pon-veynda-Perumal, 'the king who gilded (the Nataraja temple)' (ARE 157 of 1902); for the same reason he also bore the title of 'Tirupperambalam pon meyndaruliya Rajakesarivarman', as seen from inscriptions (ARE 349 and 315 of 1928-29) from Tiruppalaivanam (also see ARE Report of 1927). Among other titles, less frequently used, are Tirunirrucholan (a surname he shared with his grandfather Kulottunga I), Edirilisolan and Kalikadinda-solan.

His inscriptions display a large variety of introductions or prasastis. They are:

Pu mannu pavai	ARE 53 of 1893
Pu maruviya puvi elum	ARE 85 of 1895
Pu meya (mevi) malar	ARE 422 of 1904
Pu mannu padumam	ARE 255 of 1929
Pu mevu tirumagal	ARE 572 of 1907
Pu mannu yanar	ARE 83 of 1895 (also see ARE 1913, II, 35).

Ottakkuttan whose life spanned three generations of kings wrote an Ula on Kulottunga II also, known as the Kulottunga-solan-ula. He was also the author of Pillait-tamil, a poem on this king, rich in diction and imagery.

Possibly due to the prevailing peace and prosperity in the land, the numerous chiefs and subordinates of the Chola emperor found time to make extensive gifts and contributions to temple-building activities. Among them were the Kadavas. Prominent among them during Anapaya's days was Mohan Alkolli alias Kulottungasola Kadavarayan. Towards the closing years of Kulottunga II, this chief's powers had grown considerably and his authority spread over a wide area covering Vriddhachalam, Tirunamanallur, Tirumanikkuli and Tiruvadigai, whose temples were the recipients of his growing benefactions; in fact, he assumed the title of Alappirandan Elisai Mohan alias Kulottungasola Kadavar-Adittan, 'the Sun among the Kadavas'.* It is from these humble beginnings that this branch line of the Pallavas grew gradually in strength, till the second quarter of the next (12th) century, when a scion of this line, Kopperunjangan ('the Big Lion'), shook the very foundations of the Chola empire. We shall see in the next chapter the extensive benefactions of this ancestor of Kopperunjangan and contemporary of Kulottunga II.

Kulottunga II's rule appears to have ended about A.D. 1150, giving him a reign of seventeen or eighteen years.

NATARAJA TEMPLE

In the earlier chapters, we traced the breath-taking expansion that many temples like those at Srirangam and Kanchipuram underwent, besides the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram. The latter held the Cholas under a spell, with the result that successive Later Chola rulers devoted more and more attention and State resources to the expansion and embellishment of this temple of their kulanayakam or Ishta devata. We shall briefly survey the expansion of this temple during the reign of Kulottunga II.

The Kulottunga-solan-ula sung by his court poet Ottakkuttan attributes to him the gilding of the Perambalam, the creation of seven-storeyed gopurams and of walls of enclosure provided with inner covered pavilions, the building of the shrine of the Goddess of Tiruk-kamak-kottam Udaiya Periya Nachchiyar and the laying of the four main streets. The Rajarajasolan Ula sung by the same poet on Rajaraja II, the son and successor of Kulottunga II, mentions additions to the Chirrambalam, Perambalam, of cloistered halls with towers, streets, gateways and the shrine of the Goddess (Sivakami) and its front enclosure. The Takkayagapparani, a poem by the same poet, credits Anapaya with the installation of a sri-pitham resembling Mount Meru.

From these references, we can assume that Kulottunga II carried out the gilding of the Perambalam, and the construction of a portion of the third wall of enclosure which was probably completed during the time of Kulottunga III and named the Rajakkal-tambiran Tirumaligai after one of his surnames. The building of at least the stone gateway portion of the eastern and northern gopurams, and the completion of the shrine of the Goddess Sivakami and its front enclosure can be attributed to him.

The greatest achievement of his reign from the point of view of literature and art was the composition of the Periyapuranam and its exposition in the Thousand Pillared Mandapa by its author Sekkilar, the king's scholar-statesman. I am not able to agree with the view of T.V. Sadasiva Pandarathar who ascribes its composition to the period of Kulottunga III and with his identification of Edirambalam with Perambalam. In my view Edirambalam is to be identified with the Mulasthanam shrine north of the Nataraja shrine and Perambalam is the Deva sabha, east of the Nataraja shrine.

It is said that Anapaya had Jaina leanings and his minister weaned him away from Jainism by singing the glory of Saivism. After listening to the stories of Saivite Saints as described by Sundaramurti Nayanar and Nambi Andar Nambi, Anapaya wanted Sekkilar to compose a full and detailed account of the lives of the Tamil Nayanmars. A large sum of money was provided and Sekkilar was sent on this sacred errand to Chidambaram. He went there and prayed to Lord Nataraja for divine grace. The Lord blessed and hinted to him to begin his work with the word Ulakelam. Thus the Tiruttondar-puranam consisting of 4263 stanzas on the lives of the Saiva Saints of Tamil land came to be composed. The king came to Chidambaram and again there was heard a divine voice that the work should be expounded by the author himself in the Thousand-Pillared Hall. The exposition took a year to complete. The king conducted a festival. The Puranam was wrapped in silk and placed in a gold-box. The 'Tillai Three Thousand' paid great adoration to it and declared it as the fifth veda. Sekkilar was honoured with the title of Tondar-Seer-Paravuvuar—one who glorifies the Lord's devotees. This greatly enhanced the already growing glory of Chidambaram. Kulottunga is said to have celebrated his coronation here—most probably in the Thousand-Pillared Hall. In later times this Hall or Sabha came to be called Raja Sabha. An inscription from Tirumanikkuli states: “Kulottunga who crowned himself so as to shed lustre on Tillainagar (Tillainagar Sirappudaitaga-Tirumudi sudiya Sri Kulottungasola devar)”. No wonder that Tillai became ‘Kailasa on earth’. A Sanskrit inscription at Tiruvarur calls him “a bee at the lotus-feet of Natesa of the golden hall at Vyaghra-agrahara” (Chidambaram).

THE THOUSAND PILLARED MANDAPA

Fergusson assigned the age of the Thousand Pillared mandapa to the sixteenth century A.D. The Archaeological Department (H. Krishna Sastri) held that the hundred- and thousand-pillared mandapas were the work of Vijayanagara rulers, especially Krishna-deva raya.

We shall consider the age of the Thousand Pillared Mandapa at Chidambaram. Kulottunga I, his son Vikrama Chola and their soldier-statesman-philanthropist, Naralokaviran, enlarged the Nataraja temple-complex six-fold. The two inner walls of enclosure with at least the west gopuram gateway in the third wall of enclosure, the Hundred Pillared mandapa and the main sanctum of the Amman shrine were built during their period. The Amman shrine should have been completed during the time of Kulottunga II. Kulottunga III claims the construction of a mukha-mandapa and a gopuram. The Later Pallava Kopperunjingan also made a contribution to the gopurams—we do not know the exact nature of his additions, apart from the south gopuram.

Kulottunga II is credited with the help rendered to Sekkilar for composing and expounding his Periyapuranam in this Thousand-Pillared Hall. This great classic recorded its imprimatur in this hall. It may be stated that this hall lies east of the Sivaganga tank for which stone steps were provided by Naralokaviran. It is in the third prakara of the enlarged Nataraja temple enclosed by the third wall of enclosure called Rajakkal Tambiran Tirumaligai after Kulottunga III's surname and adorned in the centre on all four sides by seven-storeyed gopurams. The western gopuram had been completed and the foundation laid for the eastern and the northern gopurams by the time of Vikrama Chola; so the Thousand Pillared Hall must have received the attention of the Chola kings before Kulottunga III's time. The southern gopuram was built by the Pallava Kopperunjingan in the middle of the thirteenth century A.D.

Umapati Sivachariyar (A.D. 1244–1320), one of the gurus of the Saiva Siddhanta school, has written a poem on the life of Sekkilar. He mentions the existence of the Thousand Pillared mandapa (Aiyiru-nuru-kal-mani-mandapam) where the Periyapuranam was expounded.

Anapaya's full attention and the huge material resources of a rich and prosperous empire were devoted to embellishing and enriching the noblest of temples of the Tamil land from the point of view of the Saivites. And so it is not unlikely—though we would wish for more positive evidence—that the Thousand Pillared mandapa was completed, or at least nearly, during the reign of Kulottunga II. Chidambaram was his Bhuloka Kailasam (Heaven on Earth). It may be added that the dance-pose sculptures on the basement of the Amman (Sivakami) temple and the Thousand Pillared mandapa, have close affinity.*

Uttattur, whose ancient name was Urrattur, is about 3.20 km. to the south-east of Padalur, which is about 34 km. from Tiruchy on the Tiruchy-Madras trunk road. It has an Early Chola temple with a long history. We have dealt with this temple in Middle Chola Temples (pp. 256–59).

In the outskirts of Uttattur, there is a dilapidated temple on top of a low mound. It belongs to the Later Chola period. There are two inscriptions found on the south wall of this temple, one on either side of the entrance. The earlier one, beginning with the introduction pu mannu padumam, relates to the 13th year and 124th day of Kulottunga II's reign (A.D. 1146-47), and records that the temple (of Cholesvaram) was built by a certain Vana-vichchadira Nadalvan, the younger brother of Brahmadaraya Muttaraiyar, in the reign of Rajakesarivarman Tribhuvana-chakravartin Kulottunga Chola deva (II). The same inscription further avers that the income from the village of Siruvolaippur in Kannakkiliyur nadu was assigned to this temple (ARE 531 of 1912). The second inscription to the right of the entrance on the south wall of this temple records that in the fourth year and 226th day of the reign of Parakesarivarman Tribhuvana-chakravartin Konerinmaikondan Rajaraja deva (II) (A.D. 1150-51), the village of Uluttambadi in Kannakkiliyur nadu was gifted as a devadana to the temple of Kulottungasola-Isvaram Udaiyar of Urrattur. The grant is recorded and attested by the Royal Secretary (Tirumandira-olai) bearing the name of Rajasraya Pallavarayan (ARE 530 of 1912).

This temple is thus a foundation of the days of Kulottunga II and the deity was named after the Chola emperor. (Pls. 214-8).

MAGARAL

3 AGASTISVARAM TEMPLE (TIRUMAALISVARAM)

Magaral is in the Kanchipuram taluk of the Chingleput district. It is 16 km. south of Kanchipuram on the road to Uttaramerur which is 12 km. further south of Magaral. This village lies on the north bank of the Cheyyaru. At Magaral, there is a celebrated Siva temple called Agastisvaram and across the river is another well-known temple, of Kadambarkoyil. Sambandar has a hymn on the Lord of this place. It is believed that whoever worships the Lord will attain a permanent place in Sivalokam. There is a saying current here:

"Agni-tirtha snanam Agastyesvara darsanam; Yamalokey bhayam nasti Sivalokey niranantaram," meaning 'a bath in the Agni-tirtha (the name of the sacred tank of the temple) and worship of Lord Agastisvarar (at Magaral) mean permanent attainment of Sivaloka (Heaven) and the total absence of fear of the God of Death'.

During the Chola period, Magaral was a very prominent place and finds frequent mention in the records of the period.

The present temple seems to be a Later Chola structure. On the south wall of the central shrine, there is an inscription of the 11th year of Parakesarivarman alias Tribhuvana-chakravartin Kulottunga Chola deva, with the pu mevi valar introduction. It is to be attributed to Kulottunga II. We have no foundation inscription. How much earlier it was built, we do not know. It records a gift of land to Tiru-Agastyesvaram Udaiyar in Magaral nadu of Eyil kottam in Jayangondasola mandalam. It is stated that Periya Udaiyar (Kulottunga II) camping at the tirumaligai (palace) at Perumparrappuliyur (either Chidambaram or a local place named after it) listened to the Devaram hymns and gave to the temple as devadana iraiyili two villages, Kulottunga-solanallur and Sivapada-sekhara-nallur yielding 2925 and odd *kalam*s of paddy (ARE 215 of 1901). Kulottunga II's devotion to Saivism and patronage to Siva temples are well-known. On the south wall of the mandapa in front of the central shrine there is an inscription of the tenth year of Parakesari Tribhuvana-chakravartin Rajaraja deva II (Kadal sulnda par madarum introduction). It registers a gift of land for a lamp by a number of persons in atonement for having caused the death of a person in an irrigation dispute (ARE 219 of 1901).

On the north wall of the mandapa, there is an inscription of the 32nd year and 356th day of Tribhuvana Vira deva (Kulottunga III). It records that, at the request of one Nandivarman, certain devadana lands which had previously belonged to the Agastyesvaram temple, were restored as devadana iraiyili (rent-free); the Tirumandira-olai was Rajanarayana Muvendavelan (ARE 220 of 1901). A sale of land to the temple by the sabha of Ukkal alias Vikramabharana chaturvedimangalam is recorded in an inscription of the fifth year of Rajaraja III (ARE 217 of 1901).

There are two inscriptions of the seventh year of Jatavarman Sundara Pandya I (acc. A.D. 1251). One of them records that a private person opened new streets and settled persons to reside in them.

The temple has in its recent renovation unfortunately lost all its old features.

There is a Vishnu temple in this place, built in the days of Rajaraja III with which we shall deal later.

MUNNUR(U)

ADAVALLISVARAR TEMPLE

Munnuru is a village close to Tindivanam in the taluk of the same name in the South Arcot district. There are two temples here, one dedicated to Siva called the Adavallisvarar temple and the other dedicated to Vishnu called the Arulalap-Perumal temple. The latter is an abandoned and neglected one. The former belongs to the Later Chola period and the latter to the Later Pandya period.

The earliest inscription found on the walls of the Siva temple relates to the 11th year of Rajakesarivarman alias Tribhuvana-chakravartin Kulottungasola deva whose prasasti begins with the introduction 'pu mevu valar'. He is thus to be identified with Kulottunga II. In this record a certain Palakannan Kaman Tiruvagattisvaram Udaiyan, a native of Iraiyr in Kunra nadu of Urrukkattuk kottam makes a gift of land to the temple of Mulasthanam Udaiya Mahadevar, for offerings to the image of Udaiya Pillaiyar which he had set up in the temple (A.D. 1144; ARE 65 of 1919). He seems to have been a prominent nobleman of the region; for, some years later (Kulottunga II's 20th regnal year), he is seen making a gift to the Assembly of Munnur alias Rajanarayana chaturvedimangalam for strengthening the bund of the big tank of the village (A.D. 1153; ARE 66 of 1919). Yagna Bhatta of Pasindipuram, one of the members of the alunganattars of Munnur sold land for 8 kasus to certain brahmanas for maintaining half a lamp which was presented by a shepherd to the temple (of Mulasthanam Udaiya Mahadevar) (11th year of Kulottunga II, ARE 69 of 1919). Kulottunga II himself makes a royal gift in his 12th regnal year (A.D. 1145) of lands at Nagar alias Dinachintamaninallur, constituting them into a new village under the name of Kulottungasolanallur (ARE 75 of 1919) (pu mevu valar introduction).

In the reign of his successor Rajaraja II, one Ammaiappan Siyan Pallavandan alias Rajanarayana Sambuvarayan purchased and gifted land made tax-free to the temple of Adavalla Nayanar for celebrating the hunting festival of the god during the month of Chittirai (ARE 52 of 1919). Gifts came in flowing during the reign of Rajaraja II. In his second year a certain Periya nachchiyar of Kairur set up the images of Periya-Vinayakappillaiyar and gave land for offerings and lamps to it. She also built the sopana mandapa in front of the Dakshinamurti shrine in the temple (ARE 81 of 1919). Sengeni Ammaiappan alias Rajaraja Sambuvarayan made a gift of certain taxes for a flower garden and other requirements to the temple of Mulasthanam Udaiyar (ARE 57 of 1919). A native of Rajasimhapuram of Tirumunaippadi made a gift of money for a lamp to the temple (of Mulasthanam Udaiyar) at Munnur alias Rajanarayana chaturvedimangalam in Oyma nadu alias Vijayarajendra valanadu in Jayangondasola mandalam (ARE 76 of 1919, introduction pu maruviya tirumadam). In the west prakara of the temple there is an empty shrine carrying an inscription at the top of the entrance to it which reads that one Ariyan Andan Kamalakara Bhattan set up the image of Visvesvara deva and repaired the temple (ARE 78 of 1919). He made a gift of a lamp to the shrine of Visvesvara deva, confirmed as having been built by him in the western prakara (tiruch-churru) of the temple of Aludaiyar Sri Mulasthanam Udaiyar (15th year ekadasi, tiruvadirai, somavara; ARE 72 of 1919). In the same year another gift is made for offerings and lamps to the same image (ARE 74 of 1919). In the 18th year of Rajaraja II, the grandson of Yajna Bhatta referred to earlier gifted 16 cows for another half a lamp (From this record we get the name of Sökkapperumal for Kulottunga II). In the same year a lady and her two daughters belonging to Silachintamani parigiraha in Naduvil nadu gave a gift of three lamps to the temple (ARE 55 of 1919).

In the 11th year of Rajadhiraja II (A.D. 1177), Sengeni Ammaiyappan Siyan Pallavandan alias Rajanarayana Sambuvarayan made a gift of taxes for repairing the 'Ediraganayan tirumaligai' and other structures in the temple and for other repairs generally (ARE 71 of 1919). One Siyan Pallavandan alias Edirilisola Sambuvarayan gave a gift of land, made tax-free, in Sirupadi alias Kulottungasola-nallur under the orders issued by the king at the instance of Gangeyaran and others for the temple of Adavallar. The royal secretary Minavan Muvendavelan is mentioned in this connection.

In the days of Kulottunga III, a native of Kiranur constructed the walls of the mandapa called 'Madavarayan mandapa' in the second prakara of the temple and gave land for a flower garden (year not known, ARE 64 of 1919). In his 33rd regnal year, Kudal Alappirandan Alagiya Pallavan alias Kadavarayan confirmed the gifts made to the temple by his grandfather (ARE 64 of 1919). Again in his 38th regnal year, at the request of a certain Vattarayan, the king made a gift of land at Vanniyanallur for a festival in the month of Avani named after the king, and for repairs to the temple of 'Adavalla Nayanar' at Munnur (the royal secretary is Rajanarayana Muvendavelan, ARE 50 of 1919).

In the third year of Kopperunjinga (A.D. 1246), Alagiya Pallava Virarayan alias Kachchiyaran confirmed certain gifts made by Aiyadevar for repairs and worship in the temple (ARE 62 of 1919).

In the fifth regnal year of Jatavarman Vira Pandya, the people of Nagaraikkattu nadu gifted two hamlets in Kilinjalur with their names changed into Chittirameli-nallur for worship and repair of the temple of Adavalla Nayanar; in his tenth year, the people of the nadu made a gift of the village of Viluvur alias Adavallakuttanallur to the temple of Adavalla Nayanar of Munnur for a festival in the month of Masi (ARE 64 of 1919).

By the 33rd year of Kulottunga III (A.D. 1211), the Kamakshi Amman shrine in the temple would appear to have come into existence. The Tribhuvanachakravartin Konerinmaikondan referred to in ARE 89 of 1919 with a regnal year of 23 years could be Kulottunga III himself; this record mentions that a shrine for Tirukkamakkottam Udaiya Periya Nachchiyar was set up in the temple of Adavallar (ARE 89 of 1919).

The main temple of Adavallisvarar (Adavalla Nayanar) faces south. It consists of a square sanctum preceded by an antarala, an ardhamandapa and a mahamandapa. Ganesa, Dakshinamurti, Vishnu, Brahma and Durga are found in the niches of the ardhamandapa and the garbhagriha. A wall of enclosure with a tiruchchurru-maligai with square and cylindrical pillars goes round the temple. There are a pillared mandapa, an unfinished gopura, a bali-pitha and a nandi in front of the shrine.

Outside the first prakara is the shrine for Tirukkamakkottam Udaiya Periya Nachchiyar, now in a dilapidated condition.

Vishnu (Sittiramel vinnagar emperuman) temple

On the north wall of the Vishnu temple in the village, there is a record dated in the tenth year of Jatavarman Tribhuvanachakravartin Vira Pandya which mentions that a tax-free gift of Singavanendal, a pidagai of Munnuru with its name changed into Purushottama-nallur was made by the people of Oyma nadu for worship and repairs to the temple of Purushottama alias Sittarameli vinnagar emperuman. In view of the presence of this inscription on its walls we could attribute this temple, now called the Arulalap-Perumal temple, to Vira Pandya. A Gajapati (Orissa) chieftain called Dakshina Kapilesvara Kumara Mahapatra son of Ambiradeva (Hamviradeva) made a gift of land for the festival called 'Ahamvira-bhoga'—presumably in the name of the father—and repairs to the temples of Tirumulattanam Udaiya Mahadeva and Perumal Purushottama (ARE 92 of 1919). A copy of the same grant is found engraved also on the east wall of the central shrine of the Siva temple in the village (ARE 51 of 1919). Both the grants are dated in Saka 1386 (= A.D. 1464).

The Vishnu temple is a Pandyan foundation of the days of Jatavarman Vira Pandya (13th century A.D.).

Ammaiappan Siyan Pallavandan alias Rajanarayana Sambuvarayan was a powerful chief in the Nadu Nadu region in the days of Rajaraja II and his immediate predecessor Kulottunga II and the village of Munnur would appear to have been named Rajanarayana chaturvedimangalam after him. Oyma nadu in Tondaimandalam was renamed Vijayarajendra valanadu after a surname of Rajadhiraja I.*

*Dr. R. Nagaswamy has dealt in detail with two interesting miniature panels carved in sandstone and considerably weathered and found embedded on either side of the entrance to the garbhagriha of the Adavallisvarar temple. He calls them the Linga and the Jyeshtha panels. They are attributed to the fifth/sixth century A.D. A similar panel also belonging to the Pallava period was discovered by him at Munnur.

Rajaraja II

Parakesarivarman Rajaraja II became the Crown Prince in A.D. 1146 during his father's life time, and Kulottunga II must have lived on for some years after this date as the latest regnal year found in inscriptions of the latter is the seventeenth year. Like his father's reign, Rajaraja II's rule appears to have been peaceful and was a period of great literary activity. The extent of the empire remained unaltered, and abundant epigraphical evidence of Rajaraja II's hold over the Gangapadi and Nolambapadi regions as well as over the Vengi region is available. The feudatory Velanadu Chiefs still owned their loyalty to the Chola Emperor, though they seem to be growing in might and autonomy during this period. A number of inscriptions at Draksharama in the East Godavari district in Andhra Pradesh attest Chola hold over Vengi. We have evidence of temple-building activity by a Kaduvetti chieftain, a subordinate of the Cholas in the Kolar district region of modern Karnataka State; Kongu and the eastern part of the Ganga country were still firmly in the hands of the Cholas, as attested by an inscription from Tagadur nadu, a part of Ganga nadu of Nigarilisola mandalam.

Gangapuri or Gangaikondacholapuram continued to be the capital of the Cholas. Rajaraja II, however, would appear to have stayed mostly in the subsidiary Chola capital of Palaiyarai alias Ayirattali; in the Rajaraja-solan Ula composed by the Court poet, Ottakkuttan, the capital city is referred to as Rajarajapuri, which must have been a sprawling big city covering the present day villages of Palaiyaru, Mulaiyur, Darasuram and others. The name of his capital city of Rajarajapuri or Rajarajapuram is now borne in a corrupted form by one of the villages mentioned above, viz., Darasuram. What is noticeable is the absence of references in the inscriptions to the movements and tours of the king during this reign; we have noticed that during the Middle Chola period and even during the reigns of Kulottunga I and his son Vikrama Chola, the Chola Suzerain was constantly on the move to different parts of the empire. We find him at his palaces in various regions of the empire; but during the reigns of Kulottunga II and his son Rajaraja II, we notice a comparative relaxation of vigil, which possibly explains the growing power and autonomy of the various feudatories of the Cholas. We have already noticed the Kadava Chiefs becoming prominent; and the Velanadu Chiefs of Vengi were no less quick to grab local power retaining a semblance of loyalty to the overlord. The Kadava Chief during Rajaraja II's reign was Kudalur Alappirandan Mohan alias Rajarajak-Kadavarayan, who may be the same Chief who finds mention during Kulottunga II's reign, merely changing his name as was the practice of those days, to identify himself with the then Chola suzerain. Another Pallava Chief is also seen as a prominent feudatory, with his headquarters at Kanchi; for, we hear of him as building a temple of stone on a hill in the Kolar district, to which we have referred earlier. Yet another prominent Chief during this period was the Pallavaraiyar of Karigai Kulattur who built the stone temple of Rajarajesvaram Udaiyar at Pallavarayanpettai; we shall see more of these Pallavaraiyar chiefs later, as they played a crucial part in fighting the cause of the Pandyan claimants to the throne of Madurai, the Sri Lanka king taking the opposite cause. In fact the closing years of the reign of Rajaraja II and almost the entire reign of Rajadhiraja II were marked by continued and savage fighting between the armies of the Chola kings and those of the Pandyas and of the Sri Lanka king Parakramabahu. The growing strength of the Sengeni chiefs, Nittavinoda Sambuvarayan and Rajanarayana Sambuvarayan alias Ammaiappan Siyan Pallavandan is noticed during this period.

Rajaraja II bore other titles like Rajagambhira, Edirilisola and perhaps also Neriyaichchola. In the Rajarajan Ula of Ottakuttan, he is called Cholendra Simha; in the closing verses of the same Ula he is also called Viradhara and Virodaya.

The most common prasasti of the reign is the one beginning with pu maruviya tiru madum; the others are pu maruviya polil elum; puyal vayttu valam peruga; and kadal sulnda paar maadar. The third one, occurring in a record of the fifth year of Rajaraja II, was later on adopted by Kulottunga III; similarly, the fourth one, occurring in a record of Rajaraja's tenth year, is adopted by his successor Rajadhiraja II; and in fact, it becomes his chief prasasti.

We hear of the names of three queens of Rajaraja II, Avani-mulududaiyal, Dharani-mulududaiyal and Bharani-mulududaiyal; they all appear to be titles and not the personal names of the queens.

Tamil literature received royal patronage during the reign of Rajaraja II and one of his prasastis beginning with pu maruviya polil elum refers to the flourishing condition of Tamil literature. The king is called muttamilukkuttalaivan, 'the patron of the three-fold Tamil'. In the Takkayagapparani, his descent is traced in the following terms: "he was the son of the son of the son of the king who abolished tolls", an obvious reference to Kulottunga I who was thus the great-grandfather of Rajaraja II.

The Rajaraja-solan Ula and the Takkayagapparani, both sung by his court poet Ottak-kuttan, mention his temple building activities. While both Vikrama Chola and Kulottunga II concentrated their attention mainly on expanding and embellishing existing temples, construction of new temples being comparatively few, the reign of Rajaraja II saw the coming into being of some magnificent new structures; among them is the Rajarajesvaram Udaiyar or Rajarajapurisvarar temple which he built at the secondary capital of Ayirattali (renamed Rajarajapuri) and named the deity after himself and the new name of the capital; this temple has now come to be called the temple of Airavatesvarar at Darasuram. Another temple of importance also called Rajarajesvaram was built during this reign at Pallavarayanpettai; we have already seen that this was the temple that the Karigai Kulattur Pallavaraiyar built; apart from its art value, it contains a very important historical document in the shape of the famous inscription known as the Pallavarayanpettai inscription of much political and socio-economic importance. We shall deal with these temples in the next chapter.

Rajaraja II ruled for 26 years and must have died sometime in A.D. 1172.

Temples of Rajaraja II's Time

AIRAVATESVARA TEMPLE (RAJARAJESVARAM AT RAJARAJAPURAM)

This is one of the four gigantic all-stone-vimana temples built by the Imperial Cholas, the others being the Rajarajesvaram at Tanjavur built by Rajaraja I, Gangaikondasolisvaram at Gangaikondacholapuram, built by his son, Rajendra I, and Tribhuvana-isvaram built at Tribhuvanam by a Later Chola ruler, Kulotunga III. In grandeur and sheer beauty of sculpturing, each vies with the others and each is great in its own way and unique. The tradition of building big cathedral-like temples, of the Middle Chola period, was continued by the Later Cholas.

The temple-complex, enclosed within a massive compound wall measuring 107.50 metres east-west and 69.40 metres north-south, faces the east, the dhvajastambha and the nandi-mandapa both being outside this enclosure.

The main temple consists of the garbhagriha, the ardhamandapa, the mukha- (or maha-) mandapa, and the hall (tiru-mandapam) of Rajagambhira (i.e., Rajaraja II), which is the agramandapa. This entire structure built all at the same time rises from a high plinth (upapitha) and covers an area approximately 23 metres by 63 metres. The garbhagriha is an unencumbered cell of 12 metres square externally, having thick massive walls on which the vimana tower rises gracefully. There is no circum-ambulatory passage immediately round the garbhagriha. The ardhamandapa linking the garbhagriha to the mukhamandapa is in two parts. The first chamber, which is close to the sanctum is a closed one with an entrance from the eastern side only; it is supported by four pillars and has almost all the features of an antarala. The other half of the ardhamandapa is really a continuation of the mukhamandapa and has two side entrances, resting on four pillars. The entire ardhamandapa measures 12 metres by 7 metres. On the outer face of the wall separating the two elements of the ardhamandapa are two massive and impressive dvarapalas flanking the entrance. The next constituent element in the building is the maha-mandapa, measuring 23.60 metres by 17.43 metres externally. It is supported by six rows (north-south) of eight pillars each and is enclosed by walls on the south, east and north; the eastern wall, which is thicker than the other two, has an entrance in the middle connecting this mandapa with the bigger one, viz. the agramandapa (also called the manimandapa).

The next constituent in this structure is the agramandapa, called the Rajagambhiran-tiru-mandapam after the builder. It deserves special attention on account of the fact that it is conceived as a chariot, with artistically and realistically carved out wheels with hubs and spokes, and drawn by caparisoned and straining horses, reminiscent of the Melakkadambur Amritaghatesvarar temple built in or before the 41st year of Kulottunga I (A.D. 1111), the Nritta-Sabha (the chariot-mandapa) housing the Urdhva Tandava Nataraja at Chidambaram, which can be presumed to be contemporaneous with the Melakkadambur temple, as mentioned earlier and the Vikramasolisvarar temple at Tukkachchi. Darasuram thus anticipates the giant-wheeled temple of Konarak in Orissa (A.D. 1235-53) by more than a hundred years and Melakkadambur in turn anticipates Darasuram by half a century. This mandapa, which measures 23.60 metres by 21.20 metres externally is supported by nine north-south rows of ten pillars each, the perimeter pillars being panelled up to make the hall a closed one excepting for the porch on the southern side and a gap in the eastern side to permit a direct view of the sanctum from the main dvara. The porch in the south is a composite part of the agramandapa, and measures 7 metres by 7 metres. It is reached by a set of ornately carved flights of steps from the east and the west. Facing this mandapa on the eastern side is the balipitham, outside the main podium, and is approached by an ornately carved balustraded flight of steps, which produce musical notes of varying frequencies. These steps are, therefore, known as the 'singing steps'.

The main temple rests on a high podium and the faces of the upapitham (sub-basement) carry named panels depicting scenes from the lives of the Saiva saints (Nayanmar) as given in the Tirut-tondattogai of Sundarar. Rajaraja II seems to have tried to depict in stone what his father's court poet Sekkizhar so admirably succeeded in depicting in verse in the Tirut-tondar Puranam or Periya Puranam (see Appendix 1 to this section).

The sri-vimana has a total height of 83 feet (25.2 m.), the superstructure over the garbhagriha being of height 63.5 feet (19.35 m.) and in five talas, crowned by a circular griva and a sikhara. The stupi (finial) is damaged, only the central stem being in position. The first two talas and the superstructure over the ardhamandapa are adorned with pancharas in front. The steep, graceful profile of the vimana makes it a close parallel to the Rajarajesvaram temple at Tanjavur, with this difference that in the last tala below the griva, there are karnakutas here instead of the nandis at Tanjavur.

The pillars of the Rajagambhira hall rise from the heads of sitting lions and are crowned and decorated by broad palagais and podigais. The peripheral pillars support beams which in turn support the parapet wall: this wall is relieved by well-spaced sculptures of nandis located all round.

There is only one prakara, which is encompassed by the outer compound wall and the adjoining tiruch-churru-maligai—a colonnaded raised platform running the full length of the compound wall (part of which has collapsed) and having a width of 5.32 metres in the north and south and 5.18 and 5.46 metres on the west and east respectively. Along the western half of the southern compound wall are sculptures of 108 hymnists who were perhaps engaged in reciting the devaram.

A unique feature of the eastern gopuram is the series of labelled sculptures which must have once adorned all four faces of its first tier and of which only the labels now remain mostly. The labels on the various faces are:

North: 1. Adi Chandesvara, 2. Gangadevi, 3. Tumburu Nardar, 4. Vaisravana, 5. Chandra, 6. Maha Sasta, 7. Nagaraja, and 8. Vayu.

West: 1. Devi, 2. Rudrani, 3. Vaishnavi, 4. Brahmi, 5. Varunan, 6. Nandidevar, 7. Periyadevar, 8. Santyatita Sakti, 9. Santa devi, 10. Vidya Sakti, 11. Pratishta Sakti, and 12. Nivarti Sakti.

South: 1. Daksha Prajapati, 2. Yamuna devi, 3. Rati and 4. Kamadevan

East: 1. Agni devar, 2. Agastya devar, 3. Sri devi, 4. Durga devi, 5. Devendran, 6. Padma Nidhi, 7. Surya devar, 8. Subrahmanya devar, 9. Kshetrapalar, 10. Sarasvati, 11. Visvakarma, and 12. Isana devar.

Some sculptures listed here, but not to be found in the west gopuram of the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram (which also carries labelled sculptures), are: Maha Sasta, Padma Nidhi, Daksha Prajapati, Vaishnavi, Rudrani and Brahmi of the Saptamatrika group, and some Kalasakti cult figures, namely, Santyatita Sakti, Santa devi, Pratishta Sakti and Nivarti Sakti. The inclusion here of these Sakti images is particularly noteworthy.

It is indeed a pity that almost none of the sculptures is extant. They were perhaps casualties of the wars between the Pandyas and the Cholas marked by a victory celebration of Maravarman Sundara Pandya I in A.D. 1228 at Ayirattali near Darasuram or of later invasions or even of vandalism.

A small cella has been improvised in the northern portion of the agramandapa to serve as a shrine for the Amman called Deivayanayaki. It is supposed to be a later addition, made in the days of Kulottunga III, whose exact contribution to the temple complex is not known. But we cannot rule out the possibility that the cella is of even date with the main shrine, since separate Amman shrines had been ushered into vogue as early as in the days of Kulottunga I. It has been held that this temple at Darasuram is distinctive in style and bears an unequivocal imprint of Chalukyan influence.

In the Report of the Archaeological Survey, it is said:

"The statuary on the walls include some unique syncretisation of divinities, like an eight-handed, three-faced Ardhanarisvarar, Hari-pitamaha, etc., consistent with the impact of Deccani concepts on the local cults . . . some of the niche sculptures of the temple evince an influence of the art idiom of the Later Chalukyas of Kalyani—a fact also attested to by the inscribed dvarapala figure, which was brought to this temple by the royal builder from Kalyani as a war-trophy."

Goetz in his book India dwells at length on South Indian Art. After dealing with the main temples built by the Imperial Cholas, he turns to Darasuram and says as follows:

"To a certain extent, Darasuram should be considered an exception to the rule (regarding Chola art). After the grand victory that Rajadhiraja I, the Chola ruler, had won over Ahavamalla Somesvara I of the Western Chalukyas, the Crown Prince Vijayarajendran brought home unmeasurable booty and with those sculptures built this temple and understandably the temple has taken on Western Chalukyan features; the Chola king enshrined the dvarapala sculptures plundered from Kalyani and reared this temple."

All these views are unsound. For one, this temple is solidly Chola in all its features; it was not any 'Crown-Prince Vijaya Rajendra' who built this temple at Darasuram; this temple is a foundation of a much later date and belongs to the days of Rajaraja II, who was a great-grand-nephew of Rajadhiraja I, the son of Rajendra I, who took Kalyanapuram and brought this Dvarapala as a trophy to his capital. Incidentally, 'Vijayarajendra' was none other than Rajadhiraja I, who after his victory over the Western Chalukyas and the sack of Kalyani called himself (as averred by inscriptions) Vijaya Rajendra. This was almost exactly a hundred years before the erection of the Rajarajesvaram at Rajarajapuri (i.e., later Darasuram). Presumably the trophy-sculpture found a respected place in the subsidiary capital of Ayirattali even in the days of Rajadhiraja I (A.D. 1018–1054).

The Darasuram temple is, like the grand campuses at Tanjavur and Gangaikonda-solapuram, the concept of a single mind, the product of one master-plan, and luckily for us, has acquired none of the bizarre later accretions under Pandya, Vijayanagara or Nayak rulers. There is nothing Chalukyan about it; if it does show any marked change from its compeers, it is towards greater stylisation and surface elaboration; the stark grandeur of height, mass and volume is tempered by detailed ornamentation and stylisation. It is in full keeping with Chola traditions, and its sculptures are exquisite. Some of the sculptures, like the complete Bhikshatana group and incidentally the war-trophy sculpture of a dvarapala, have been shifted to the Thanjavur Art Gallery where they now stand in mute grandeur, though torn out of context.

Percy Brown in his Indian Architecture (Vol. I) indulges in a similar speculation of Pandyan impact on this temple, selectively. He, following many early writers to whom the treasure-house of inscriptional material was either not available, or who, if it was available, did not make use of it, propounded (or, more appropriately, repeated following others, the postulate of) a Pandyan phase of Art after A.D. 1100 and gave Darasuram a place in the Pandyan phase sometime in the early years of the fourteenth century. This view too is incorrect.

This temple called Rajarajesvaram was built between A.D. 1146 and 1173, perhaps in the latter half of his reign, by Rajaraja II, at a time when the Chola Empire was at the height of its glory, peace prevailed all over the empire and the rumblings of its fall were still five decades away. This was a continuation of the golden age of the Cholas begun by Rajaraja I. (For inscriptional material from this temple see Appendix 2 at the end of the section.)

The two temples of Rajarajesvaram at Tanjavur completed towards the end of Rajaraja I's reign (A.D. 1014) and of Gangaikonda-solisvaram at Gangaikonda-sola-puram built around A.D. 1020 to A.D. 1040 were simple in design and grand in stature. A two-tiered garbhagriha with a srivimana of breathtaking slope upwards to the crowning piece has a small ardhamandapa integrated into the srivimana structure; in fact, with all the other appendages removed, the two constitute a perfect structural design; the mukhamandapa in both Tanjavur and Gangaikondacholapuram does not contribute either to the balancing of the structural complex, as the bhog-mandir does in the case of the Kalinga temples whether at Puri (Jagannath) or at Bhubaneswar (Lingaraj) or at Konarak (the Surya Deul), or add to the sculptural wealth that is found in the three outer faces of the garbhagriha. They would appear to be there to satisfy the agama requirements and the practical needs of managing the temple and state affairs conducted in the royal temple; the Melakkadambur temple of a century later is designed purely as a chariot and the great stride that the Darasuram temple makes over its illustrious predecessors is to integrate the two plans into a happy blend by adding the chariot-characteristic only to the agramandapa, which gives the much-needed balance to the structures of both the Tanjavur and Gangaikondacholapuram temples, which is achieved by an increase in the width of the temple and pulling the front out over a greater distance to give the srivimana a depth of view commensurate with its height.

Narasimha I of the Eastern Gangas (A.D. 1238-1269) was to add a further element of stability to the structural concept of a chariot-temple in his version built at Konarak by putting the garbhagriha, the ardhamandapa (an incipient one) and the mukhamandapa (bhog mandapa) all on wheels, leaving the Nat-mandir out of the complex, to avoid structural unwieldiness.

Ottakkuttan, the court-poet of three successive Chola rulers, Vikrama Chola, Kulottunga II and Rajaraja II, has sung an ula on each of his patrons; besides, he has also sung a heroic poem called Takkayagapparani. This work depicts the story of the destruction of Daksha and his associates (who performed an unorthodox Yaga) for which purpose Siva created Virabhadra. While, in a parani, the victor's story is sung, as in Jayangondar's Kalingatupparani, there seems to be, as R. Nagaswamy has pointed out, a slight variation in the theme here. It seems as if the poet has conceived the Lord of this temple of Rajarajesvaram built by Rajaraja II as Himself the hero of this poem. There is a suggestion in this poem that Daksha slighted the Lord Siva of this temple and began his unholy sacrifice. The following lines are quoted to prove this contention:

*'Ellai Nayakan Rajarajapuresar
Isar Idark-kenum*

Tollai Nan-marai nirkka

Kelvi velvi todangiye'

The Lord is portrayed to have taken his Devi round the battle-field and described this heroic deed and the final victory. This is a bold departure from the traditional approach of such works and deserves consideration. One of the magnificent sculptures for which Rajaraja II's age is deservedly famous is the spirited stone-sculpture of Virabhadra in truly ferocious form.

Moreover, the devils (Peygal) do not sing the glory of Siva or of Kali but of the Lord consecrated in this temple as the following lines illustrate:

'Oru marungudaiya ulaganayakiyodu

Orrai vellaividai oordi mel

Iru marungum marai tola elundaruliya

Rajarajapuri Isare'

The poet no doubt sings the glory of the king but it is conceived as his reflected glory derived from that of the Lord of this temple built and consecrated by Rajaraja II at Rajarajapuram (Rajarajapuri), modern Darasuram. This poem of Ottakkuttan should be considered a glorious description of the construction and consecration of this temple by a contemporary eye witness, namely the gifted court poet patronised by the Chola ruler.

Another important stone sculpture in front of the mandapa of this temple is one of Ardhanari with three heads and eight hands (is this a Sakti cult image?). There is also a sculpture of Annapurna Devi.

West of the Rajagambhira mandapa, there is a sculpture of Sarabhamurti carved on the wall of the mandapa, with a shrine enclosing it. This is the second instance of the appearance of this icon in a Chola temple. At Tribhuvanam, there is a separate shrine for Sarabhamurti with a metal image as well. The first instance of occurrence of Sarabhamurti was noticed in the Vikramasolisvaram temple at Tukkachchi. The Sarabha cult represents a temporary phase of Saivism's dominance over Vaishnavism. Vishnu's incarnation as Narasimha resulted in the infliction of violence and ferocity on the devas and men, who appealed to Siva for help. Siva took the form of Sarabhamurti, subdued Vishnu's ferocity and released Him to go back to Vaikuntham and thus relieved the world's distress.

Rajaraja I had made provision for the singing of the Devaram hymns in his temple at Tanjavur by appointing fortyeight Tirup-padigam-Vinnappam-seyvar. At Darasuram, a similar body comprised one hundred and eight. Their original and diksha (consecration) names are engraved along with their images in the enclosed prakara wall.

The images of Rajaraja II and his queen (as traditionally believed) found in the north prakara of the temple are now in the Tanjavur Art Gallery; also those of the Rishi-patnis and the Kalyani dvarapala.

The age of Rajaraja II marks the ascendancy of Saivism, the patronage of architecture and sculpture and the encouragement of religious and secular literature. (Pls. 225-56).

Note: C. Sivaramamurti writes thus about the Darasuram temple (pp. 266-267) in his 'The Art of India' :

'The most beautiful Chola monument of this period, a sculptor's dream re-lived in stone, is the temple at Darasuram, which is unequalled in its technical perfection and exuberant ornamentation. The wheel-and-horse motif here transforms the mandapa into a chariot. This Chola device was appreciated and adopted by other craftsmen in the Eastern Chalukya and Kalinga territories, most notably the sculptor of the famous temple at Konark.'

The model for this chariot-temple is the ratha vimana at Melaikadambur near Gangaikonda cholapuram, built in the 41st year of Kulottunga I—also the Nritta mandapa in the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram. It may be added that Narasimha, the builder of the Konark temple, was a distant descendant of Kulottunga I. A chariot-shaped mandapa is also found close to the Vittala temple at Hampi, Vijayanagar (16th century A.D.).

Sivaramamurti has high praise for the excellent quality of the Darasuram sculptures. Among them, he mentions (p. 505), 'there are small reliefs on the pillars illustrating mythological episodes such as the attack of Manmatha on Siva, the penance of Parvati, the birth of Kumara, and Siva's marriage'.

The front of the base of the mandapa's extension is decorated with panels showing Tripurantaka, Kamantaka, Kaumari, Virabhadra, Agni, Indra, Brahma, Vishnu and Vayu reverently attending Siva'.

Among the noteworthy sculptures in the main hall may be mentioned a fine Ardhanarisvara with eight arms and three faces (R. Nagaswamy identifies the figure as Tantri Mahamaya*), a four-armed Nagaraja, Agastya, dancing Martanda Bhairava, Sarabhamurti, Narasimha, Ganesa and Dakshinamurti, Lingodbhava, Bhuvanesvari, Tripurantaka, Gajantaka, six-armed Bhairava, and Mahesamurti (pp. 505-506).

*The existence of an ancient temple for a Tantri image called Chakrayi of about the 12th century (similar to the Kamalamukhi image of the 7th century in the site-museum at Badami) proves the prevalence of Tantric cults in the region of Darasuram during the period of Rajaraja II) (vide R. Nagaswamy's article on pp. 134-143 of South Indian Studies published by the Society for Archaeological, Historical and Epigraphical Studies, Madras).

PERIYAPURANAM SCULPTURES IN THE TEMPLE AT DARASURAM

Detailed descriptions of the scenes seriatim are appended below.

1) AVANASIYANDAR MUDALAI VAY PILLAI

Here a crocodile disgorges a male child, which is being received by a woman, evidently the mother of the boy; in accordance with the tradition relating to this incident, Sundaramurti Nayanar, by singing a hymn in praise of the local Lord, makes the crocodile in the tank in front of the temple at Avanasi (in the district of Coimbatore) surrender the child which it had swallowed whole while the mother was bathing. The father of the child is close by, his hands uplifted in an attitude of worship.

2) TIRUMURUGANPUNDIYIL PERRAPADI

Enroute to Tiruvarur from the Chera country and very near Tirumuruganpundi, the treasure which Sundaramurti had obtained from the Chera king was carried away by the pseudo-robbers sent by God. At this, he addressed the deity in the temple at Tirumuruganpundi, Who commanded the wealth to be restored to him. The thieves are shown piling up the wealth in front of Sundarar.

3) UDAIYANAMBIYAI VEDAR VALIPARITTA PADI

This also refers to the above incident. The thieves are seen molesting the men who accompanied the treasure and carrying it away.

4) UDAIYANAMBIKKU OLAI VENRARULINAPADI

Herein the sculpture refers to quite a different story altogether from what is understood by the label above. There was a young woman by name Sangili who was leading a life of celibacy, spending her time in the service of the Lord of Tiruvorriyur. Sundarar was enamoured of her and the Lord arranged to get them united in marriage but stipulated that Sundarar should take an oath, as desired by Sangili, 'never to part'. As it was sacrilegious to take oaths in a temple, Sundarar prayed to the Lord to absent Himself from the temple temporarily and stop below a tree. But the Lord instructed Sangili to insist on the oath being taken below the tree under which He would stop. She is shown pointing out the tree, in the sculpture. Every year a grand festival is conducted in commemoration of this event under (what is believed to be) that particular tree.

5) UDAIYANAMBIYAI ANDUKONDARULINAPADI

When the marriage of Sundarar was arranged, God in the form of an aged brahman suddenly appeared before him and provided documentary evidence that he was his vassal from his grandfather's time. When asked to point out his residence, the old brahman entered the temple at Tiruvonnainallur and there miraculously disappeared into the linga while Sundarar was looking on.

6) VANA-OLAI KATTINAPADI

This portrays Siva displaying the cadjan leaf containing the bond referred to in No. 5 above.

7) UDAIYANAMBI ELUNDARULUGIRAR

This sculpture cannot be identified clearly. Probably this refers to the birth of Alalasundara, one of the beloved devotees of God Siva. On one occasion, Alalasundara, while collecting flowers for Siva, met by chance the two celestial women, Anindita and Kamalini, who also had come there to gather flowers for Parvati. There was mutual admiration. Siva on this account directed Alalasundara and the two ladies to be born on earth in order that they might live together as husband and wives. Alalasundara was born as Sundaramurti and the ladies as Sangili and Paravai both of whom married Sundaramurti.

(The above seven scenes relate to miracles in Sundarar's life.)

8) ISAIJNANIYAR

The mother of the great Sundarar.

9) SADAIYANAR

The father of Sundarar.

10) TIRUNILAKANTHAP PERUMBANAR

This bhakta (devotee) is reputed for playing, on a harp-like instrument then in vogue, songs in praise of the Almighty. Here he is seen in front of the temple at Madurai, with the instrument. His devoted wife is holding a pair of jalaras (cymbals) to help her husband keep to the beat.

11) KO-SENGAPPERUMAL

This is a Chola king, who, by his great devotion, attained to the rank of Saints (Nayanmars). As befits a king, he is represented with a crown.

12) NESANDAR

This weaver of Kampili was so devoted to Saivas that he gave away his all as presents to the deserving and thus attained salvation. He is seen here distributing clothing.

13) PANDIMADEVI

She was the wife of the Pandya king Nedumaran and the daughter of a Chola king, by the name of Mangaiyarkkarasiyar. When the king favoured Jainism, she, with the help of Sambandar, who had been invited to Madurai, got him reconverted to Saivism, curing him also of his hunch-back in the process (also see no. 27 below).

14) APPALUM ADICH-CHARNDA ADIYAR

This general term applies to staunch Saiva devotees living outside the traditional realms of the Cheras, Cholas and Pandyas; three such are represented here in a praying attitude in front of a temple.

15) MULUNIRU PUSIYA MUNIVAR

These are Saiva devotees who smear the sacred ash over the whole body in accordance with the prescriptions of the Agamas. Six of them are shown here seated in front of a temple.

16) MUKKALAM TIRUMENI TINDUVAR

Those offering worship to the linga thrice a day according to the Agama rules are counted among Saiva devotees. Three such in the act of such worship are shown here.

17) TIRUVARUR PIRANDAR

Those born in the holy city of Tiruvarur are automatically reckoned Saiva devotees. Four (presumably such) devotees are portrayed here in front of a temple.

18) PARAMANAIYE PADUVAR

These are devotees who refuse to recognize any God other than Siva. Three such (lady) devotees are shown singing His praises.

19) PATTARAIYE PANIVAR

Those who honour the Saiva devotees are themselves honoured as Nayanmars. Several such are shown here in various postures of adoration of Saiva devotees.

20) KOTPULIYANDAR

This Nayanar of Tirunattiyattangudi in the Tanjavur district was commander-in-chief under a Chola king. When going to serve with the Army, he left instructions that the paddy stored by him be made use of only for services to God, but during a famine his relations used the grain themselves. On his return, he executed them for the sin thus committed, without sparing even a baby. This pleased the Almighty very much. Who appeared before him with His Consort on the sacred bull and admitted him amongst his retinue (ganas).

21) PUGALTTUNAIYAR

This gurukkal (temple-priest) of Srivilliputtur was faithfully worshipping the linga of the place even during famine days. On account of the poor food he had then and his consequent weakness, he once dropped the brass pot containing water on the linga while bathing it and in his state of shock fell into a stupor but the Almighty appeared to him in a dream and gave him to understand that under the bali-pitha, there would appear a coin daily, with which he could have his daily needs satisfied. In the illustration, the individual is seen bathing the God and the bali-pitha is also shown.

22) SERUTTUNAIYANDAR

He was a native of Tanjavur. While worshipping in the temple at Tiruvarur, the Nayanar observing the wife of Kalarsingar (a devotee who was also present then) smelling the flowers intended for God, could not put up with this sacrilegious act and cut off her nose with a sword. We find another person in a sitting posture preparing garlands out of the flowers given by a lady. (Also see No. 24 below).

23) IDANGALIYANDAR

He was a king of Kodumbalur. A man who stole the paddy in a granary was produced before him to be punished, and he inquired into the case. On ascertaining that the paddy was stolen in order to feed Saiva devotees, Idangaliyandar not only released him but also made it public that anybody in need of wealth to feed bhaktas might freely make use of his granary and his treasury. While he is shown seated, another standing below is seen tom-tomming.

24) KALARSINGANAR

This was a Kadava (Pallava) king 'who subdued all other kings and repaired all Siva temples'. One day his queen took a flower intended for worship, without realizing that it was so intended, and smelt it. Seruttunai Nayanar (see No. 22 above), who was witness to this, immediately severed her nose. When news of her disfigurement reached the king, he rushed to the spot, but, on ascertaining what exactly had transpired, he cut off the two hands of his queen, as well, as being the culprits in the sacrilegious act: this action of his is portrayed in this panel.

25) MUNAI ADUVAR

This native of Nidur in the Chola country used to go to the rescue of the weak in battle, and devoted his income to the feeding of the devotees of Siva.

WEST WALL

1) VAYILAR

This Nayanar was a native of Mayilappur and dedicated himself to meditating on Siva in total silence. He is portrayed here with a beard and telling his rosary-beads, seated under a tree.

2) NEDUMARANAR

The Pandya king Kun Pandya (the 'hunch-back') who had embraced Jainism was brought back to Saivism through the influence of Saint Sambandar and the efforts of his queen Mangayarkkarasi and his minister Kulasirai. He was also cured at the same time of his hunched back and came to be known from then on as Nedumaranar or Ninra-Sir-nedumarar. The king is shown seated on a pedestal, flanked by attendants.

3) KARIYAR

This native of Tirukkadayur (Mayuram taluk, Tanjavur district) was highly proficient in Tamil literature and was the author of Tirukkovai. He obtained plenty of wealth from all three famous lines of kings—Chera, Chola and Pandya—but spent all in renovating Siva temples. Towards the end of his days, he undertook a pilgrimage to Mount Kailasa. In the illustration, he is seen approaching the Holy Mountain.

4) SIRAPPULIYANDAR

Born at Akkur in the Tanjavur district, he spent his time worshipping Saiva devotees, giving them money and feeding them. He is shown here making presents to his fellow devotees.

5) KANAMPULANDAR

He was born at Irukkuvelur (Vaidisvarankoil) in the district of Tanjavur. He was in the habit of regularly burning lamps in temples. Once, in Chidambaram, when he could not get money to buy ghee, he began to collect grass, from the sale proceeds of which he started burning lamps. On a certain day, when the grass collected could not find a sale, he burnt the grass itself. But finding that the grass was not sufficient to keep the fire burning until the required hour, he set fire to his own hair. This panel portrays him in this act, with his wife behind him holding a burning grass-bundle (torch?).

6) AIYADIGAL KADAVARKONAR

This Pallava king of Kanchipuram was a dedicated Saiva and relinquished his kingdom in favour of his son and went about renovating Saiva temples. He has sung hymns on the important temples he visited, now found in the anthology called Kshetrakkovai.

7) SATTIYANDAR

A native of Varinjiyur in the Chola kingdom, he was in the habit of cutting off the tongues of those that spoke ill of Saiva devotees. Here he is seen in such an act, wielding a sickle for the purpose.

8) KALIYANAR

This wealthy oil-monger of Tiruvorriyur, after exhausting his wealth in burning lamps in temples, was in the habit of using his wages for pressing oil for burning lamps in temples. On a certain day, when he could not get his wages, he slit his throat and used blood instead of oil to burn the lamp. The Nayanar is seen in front of the temple in the act of severing his head to obtain blood for the purpose.

9) KALIKKAMBANDAR KADAI

This bhakta was in the habit of feeding Saiva devotees daily. One day, at meal-time, while about to wash the feet of one who appeared as a bhakta he found his wife hesitating to pour water as the individual turned out to be their old servant. This roused his anger and he cut off her hand with a sickle. In this portrayal of that scene, piles of pots with food are shown heaped up; three persons are sitting down at their meal. Siva and Parvati appear seated on their rishabha (bull) mount to give salvation to them.

10) ADIPATTAR KADAI

This fisherman of Nagapattinam was in the habit of dedicating the best of the fish he got daily from the sea to the Lord of the place. One day when he secured an only golden fish, he willingly offered it to God. Siva and Parvati appeared on the rishabha and gave him salvation. The Nayanar is shown holding the fish in one hand and others drawing the net spread out in the sea.

11) NARASINGA-MUNAIYARAIYAR

This king used to give presents to all wearing holy ashes, especially on the days of the Ardra asterism. On such a day, even when a pseudo-Saiva appeared before him, he extended his generosity to him by paying double the usual amount. The king is shown with a beard, seated with his queen beside him. Six others are seen in front receiving presents.

12) PUGALCHCHOLANAR

This Chola king who was ruling at Uraiyur (in Tiruchirapalli district) once ordered his army to proceed against Adigan, a chieftain who failed to pay tribute. On returning thence, they brought the heads and the wealth of the enemies' army. On noticing in the midst of the heaps of heads one with matted hair, and finding it to be one of a bhakta, he became compunctious and entered a sacrificial fire with that head placed over his in a gold plate. Then Siva and Parvati appeared before him, as shown in the illustration.

13) POYYADIMAITILADA PULAVAR

This refers to the poets of the last sangam (the learned assembly) of Madurai, who were staunch Saivites. Nine of them are seen in the illustration, between a shrine and a mandapa.

14) KURRUVANAR

This devotee conquered many chiefs and acquired enormous wealth. He had all the paraphernalia of an anointed king except the crown. When the brahmanas of Tillai (Chidambaram) refused to crown him, saying that they would crown none but the Chola king, he prayed to God Nataraja to crown him with his holy foot. God blessed him accordingly. His vassals are seen paying homage to him.

15) GANANADANDAR KADAI

This devotee of Sirkali (Tanjavur district) was in the habit of daily instructing all who approached him in the matter of performing several kinds of services to God—raising flower-gardens, bringing water for the sacred bath, etc. In the illustration he is seen instructing several disciples, who are standing on either side, in front of the Almighty.

16) SERAMAN-PERUMAL KADAI

This is another name of Perumakkodaiyar (Lord of Mahodai or Musiri, now Cranganore), who was king of the Chera country. As directed by God in a dream, he gave plenty of wealth to poet Banapattirar of Madurai, and with Sundarar reached Kailasa in his last days. In the illustration he is seen getting down from an elephant and worshipping the poet Banapattirar.

17) SIRUTTONDAR KADAI

This devotee of Tiruchengattangudi in the district of Tanjavur was a military officer at the beginning and led a successful campaign against Vatapi (the modern Badami in Karnataka). He would not eat his daily meal unless he found one to partake of the same. Later on, he was residing in his own village and doing service to God, Who, in the disguise of a Bhairava mendicant, commanded him to cook the flesh of his only son for him, which he did without the least hesitation. But then God in disguise would not eat in the house of a childless couple. When the husband and wife were standing perplexed, the mendicant Bhairava commanded them to call for the boy who immediately came running as if nothing had happened. The boy being received by the mother in her arms is shown in the illustration.

18) SAKKIYANAR

This devotee first adhered to Jainism. Finding it to be untrue, he went back to Saivism and spent his days in the worship of linga. In the act of worshipping, he forgot himself so much in his devotion that he mistook the bricks that were lying by for flowers and threw them onto the linga without perceiving what he was doing. Thinking that this act of his should have had the sanction of Siva Himself, he continued to do the same. Siva was much pleased with this form of worship.

SOUTH WALL

1) EYARKON KALIKKAMANDAR

He was a hereditary military officer, and became in his later years a true devotee of Siva. He executed repairs to the temple at Tiruppangur near Vaidisvarankoil. On learning that God acted as a mediator between Sundaramurti and his wife Paravai, he got offended with Sundarar. In order to show him what a true devotee Sundarar was, God made him suffer from paralysis and sent Sundarar to cure him of it. Being displeased at the idea of getting cured at Sundarar's hands, he killed himself. When Sundarar approached the house, he was informed that the Nayanar was sleeping on the cot. On approaching the cot, Sundarar recognised the true state of affairs and attempted to commit suicide. Thereupon Kalikkamanayanar was restored to life and in turn prevented Sundarar from killing himself.

2) ALUDAIYA-PILLAIYAR

This is the boy-devotee Sambandar. While yet a child, his father left him on the bank of the tank within the temple of Sirkali. When the child started crying for mother's milk, Siva asked Parvati to feed him instead. He was thus favoured with divine milk in a golden cup. On completing his bath, the father, finding a cup of milk in the hands of his boy, began to chastise him and asked him from whom he got it. The boy pointed to Toniappar in the temple close by. We find the boy depicted holding a cup in his hand and the father with a cane in his hand as if about to punish him.

3) NAMINANDI-ADIGAL

He was a native of Emapperur near Tiruvarur. He was desirous of burning a lamp in the shrine of Araneri within the temple at Tiruvarur. On the Jains residing near the temple refusing to let him have some ghee for the purpose, he was much perplexed, when there arose an aerial voice directing him to burn the lamp with the water of the tank close by, which he did to the astonishment of all. He is seen in the act of carrying water in a pot, on the left side of the panel and lighting the lamp in front of the shrine on the right.

4) SEYJNALUR-PILLAIYAR KADAI

This is Chandesvara whose sculpture is seen installed in all Siva temples. When he was devoutly worshipping the linga, his father scolded him and kicked the pot containing the milk intended for the sacred bath. For causing this obstruction Chandesa cut off his father's leg with an axe. Pleased with this high devotion, Siva made him the head of all His devotees and also crowned him with a garland. Both the acts of cutting off of the father's leg and his being crowned with a garland are seen in the illustrations.

5) TIRUKKURIPPUTTONDAR

This washerman-devotee of Kanchipuram was in the habit of washing the clothes of all bhaktas. To test his sincerity, God Ekamranatha in the disguise of an old brahman gave his rag for being washed and returned before dusk the same day, and at the same time brought on a heavy storm and darkness soon after. Unable to fulfil his promise, this Nayanar attempted to dash his head against the washing-stone which God prevented and gave him salvation. To the left in the panel, Siva appears as an old Brahman holding a stick and in front of him this Nayanar with the torn cloth on his shoulder.

6) TIRUNALAIPOVAR

This is the famous pariah (harijan) saint Nandan who joined the Nayanars by the grace of God Nataraja at Chidambaram. When he was precluded from entering the temple because he was an outcaste, God Nataraja directed him to get himself 'purified' by entering a sacred fire. This he did as seen in the illustration.

7) ILAIYAMARANGUDI MARAR KADAI

This bhakta was fond of feeding all true devotees of Siva. At a time when he had no foodgrains, Siva disguised as an aged brahman went to him at midnight and asked for food. He collected the paddy seeds he had just sown in the morning and got the food ready. Then he woke up the aged brahman who was pretending to be asleep. The brahman manifested himself into Siva with Parvati seated on the sacred bull. The Nayanar is seen (on the left) in the act of holding a basket, and the brahman sitting (in the middle); while (on the right) on a bull the God and Goddess are seen.*

APPENDIX 2

INSCRIPTIONS IN THE AIRAVATESVARAR TEMPLE AT DARASURAM

- ARE 16 of 1908 On walls of the central shrine basement: inscribed sculptures of the Tamil Nayanmars (corresponding to Sundarar's Tiruttondattogai).
- 17 of 1908 East Wall, 1st prakara: 21st year of Tribhuvana Chakravartin Rajaraja (II ?) (= A.D. 1167).
- 18 of 1908 East Wall, a fragment; Rajadhiraja II, Kadal Sulnda introduction.
- 19 of 1908 East Wall, unfinished; 12th year of Rajadhiraja II (A.D. 1175).
- 20 of 1908 South Wall, 8th year of Parakesari Tribhuvanachakravartin Kulottunga (III; A.D. 1186); gift of land for repairs and gilding the sikhara of the temple of Rajarajesvaram Udaiya Nayanar at Rajarajapuram. It is likely that the Amman Temple for Deiva Nayaki was built at this time.
- 21 of 1908 South Wall, Pandyan: 3rd year of Maravarman Tribhuvana-chakravartin Vira Pandya Devar.
- 22 of 1908 Inner gopuram, Saka 1408 = A.D. 1486, gift for worship and offerings to the temple of 'Irasuram'.
- 23 of 1908 Maravarman Sri Vallabha devar—provision for repairs and festivals in the temple of 'Irasuram Udaiya Nayanar'.
Note: The names given in ARE 22 and 23 of 1908 are almost the same as the modern name of Darasuram.
- 24 of 1908 This inscription is at the base of the dvarapala image brought by Vijaya-Rajendra (Rajadhiraja I) after the sacking of Kalyani and the celebration of a virabhishekam around A.D. 1054. It reads:
'Svasti Sri Udaiyar Sri Vijaya Rajendra devar Kalyanapuram erindu kodu vanda dvarapalar'.
- This war-trophy must have been deposited in some temple or palace at the then Chola secondary capital of Palayarai. It was discovered located on the front platform on the outer (eastern) side of the inner gopuram of the Darasuram temple, and is now housed in the Tanjavur Art Gallery. Rajaraja II ruled about a century later (A.D. 1146–73) than the expedition to Kalyani of Rajadhiraja I's. It is thus contrary to historical accuracy to conclude, as some have, that Rajaraja II built this temple out of the spoils of an expedition to Kalyani. It is fully Chola in style and follows the course of the natural evolution of the cathedral-type temples whose forerunner was the great Rajarajesvaram at Tanjavur.
- 25 of 1908 On the walls of the outer gopuram, labels of the names of the deities whose sculptures were once installed in the niches at the basement of the stone gateway; almost all the sculptures have now disappeared, and only the labels remain.
- 26 of 1908 A part of the historical introduction of Kulottunga I is inscribed on two stones in the court-yard of the temple.

- 27 of 1908 On a (third) stone in the court-yard, near the outer gopuram, with the text:
Igai Muvendaraiyar tiruk-gopuram—this gopuram was built by Igai Muvendaraiyar.

SOME VIEWS ON THE DATE OF THE DARASURAM TEMPLE

ARE Report for 1908 (pp. 65–66): 'It is not impossible that the Airavatesvara temple was either renovated or built by the Chola king Kulottunga III'.

ARE Report for 1920 (para 22, p. 102): '(It was) definitely built by Kulottunga III'.

Vincent A. Smith, History of Fine Art in India and Ceylon (pp. 225–226): 'The architecture and sculpture of the temple of Darasuram in Tanjavur district closely resemble those of the temple at Gangaikonda Cholapuram and must be of approximately the same age'.

These views are based on insufficient evidence at the time for fixing the age or are mere surmises based on superficial similarities with others of the fabric and its decorative elements.

CHANDRAMALLESVARA TEMPLE

Kendatti hill is near Holeranalli in the Kolar district of Karnataka State. There is a Siva temple on the hill; the temple is now called that of Chandramallesvara; but its original name was Somisvaram udaiya mahadevar koyil.

On the basement of this temple, there is an inscription in Grantha and Tamil characters which belongs to the period of Rajaraja II. It contains the usual prasasti beginning with pu maruviya polil elum. Dated in the seventh year of the reign of this king, who is described as "the lord of the seven cities," this record mentions that Rajendrasola Pallavaradittan alias Mukkarasar Ka(n)duveti, lord of Kanchipura, caused to be built for the god Somisvaram udaiya Mahadevar a temple on the hill called Virasri-tirumalai at Surur situated in Kuvalala nadu of Nigarilisolamandalam and granted Purakuttai as a devadana for the god Mahadeva and the temple-servants; and ordered that Udaiya Bhatta should be the owner of this property (Epi. Car., Kolar, no. 75).

We are aware that after the Cholas were pushed back from this region, the Gangas, who had traditionally ruled this region, came back to power, but now as feudatories of the Hoysalas; while under the Cholas, their chiefs bore the combined name of Chola-Ganga. Even under the Hoysalas this tradition evidently continued. We have two inscriptions of these Chola-Gangas in this temple, one relating to Vedumaara Baana alias Uttama Sola Ganga, the lord of the city of Kuvalala, a descendant of the Ganga family, Kaveri-vallabha and the lord of Nandigiri, who remitted the land-tax and a few other taxes in the devadana of the god Somisvaram udaiya Nayanar of Surur. The inscription is in Tamil and is dated in about A.D. 1280. The other record is of his son, Vikkrama Gangan, in which he says that he, and two brothers, one Talaisiyarayan, one of his ministers, and Gangaadaraayan alias Viman, his younger brother, the three together granted some lands for offerings of rice for the god Somisvaram Udaiya Nayanar. They also granted some tax-free temple property to Ponna Bhatta, a Siva-brahmana of the Harita gotra. We learn that there were other deities in the temple, like Sri Kailasam Udaiya nayanar and Vimisvaram udaiyar. This record is dated in A.D. 1320 (Epi. Car., Kolar, no 77).

Thus, this temple came into existence during the reign of Rajaraja II and the claim of Vikrama Chola of having restored Chola rule over this region, which had been wrested from the Cholas in the last days of Kulottunga I, seems to be valid; this region appears to have continued as a part of the Chola empire at least till Rajaraja II's rule if not even later. The temple dates back to A.D. 1153.

Ponnamaravati is an important town in the Pudukkottai district (formerly Pudukkottai state) and is 37 km. south-west of the district headquarters of Pudukkottai. Situated on the traditional northern borders of the Pandya country, this town was politically and strategically important and many a war between the Pandyas and the Cholas was fought in the region in and around this town. For more than three centuries, this region was under Chola rule (say A.D. 910 to A.D. 1216). After Maduraikonda Parakesari (Parantaka I) took Madurai and integrated the Pandyan kingdom with the Chola empire, Ponnamaravati became and remained a part of the empire till the end of the Middle Chola period. When Kulottunga I, the first Later Chola ruler, was engaged in wars in the north-east borders of the empire, Pandyan resurgence began to raise its head and the Pandyas became a thorn on the side of the Cholas, particularly after the days of Kulottunga II. Foreseeing the difficult situation developing, Kulottunga I established military colonies, not unlike what was done by Rajaraja I and Rajendra I. Ponnamaravati was one such colony. During the days of Rajaraja II and his successors, the control over this region vested in a family of vassal chiefs known as the Nishadarajans. They ruled over the adjoining areas of Piranmalai or Kodungunram and hence bore the title of Tiruk-kodungunram Udaiyar. These Nishadarajas continued to rule from Ponnamaravati till the 13th century when they were replaced by the Banas or Banadirajas, who ruled over this region as feudatories till the beginning of the 16th century.

Ponnamaravati played an important role during the Pandya revival in the latter half of the 12th century. The Nishadarajas played therefore a vital part in the wars of the two giants and the city suffered often in the process. The Sri Lanka chronicle Mahavamsa describes Ponnamaravati, the provincial capital, as having a royal palace of three storeys, which was destroyed in the first major clash between the Cholas and the Pandyas. This capital city was the scene of the surrender of Kulottunga III before Maravarman Sundara Pandya I which is described in eloquent terms in prasastis of the latter's inscriptions.

In a ceremony, already referred to, Sundara Pandya returned the capital city and restored the title of Solapati (the Chola lord) to Kulottunga III “...Pandilanda Solapati ennum namamum tonnagarum mila valangi vidaikoduttu vittaruli...”

The same meykkirti describes Ponnamaravati in the following words:

“Kolamalar mel ayanum kulirndulai malum aliya malar sevadi vanangi vangu silai yannam tuyiloliya vandeluppum pungamala valvisul ponnamarapatiyil...*”

There are two temples in this town, viz., the Cholisvarar temple and the Alagiya-perumal (Sundararaja) temple. The former belongs to the Later Chola period while the latter came into being during Later Pandyan rule.

Cholisvarar (Rajendrasolisvaram Udaiyar) Temple

There are four Chola records here, two belonging to the time of Kulottunga III and two others (ARE 4 & 9 of 1909) to the time of Tribhuvanachakravartin Rajarajadeva. The rest of the inscriptions in this temple are Pandyan, the earliest belonging to the time of Jatavarman Kulasekhara (A.D. 1190–1217). The Chola records refer to the building of the srivimana and the consecration of a Siva-linga named Rajendra Solisvaram Udaiya mahadevar by the local Chief Vinam Rajendra Solan Keralan alias Nishadarajan:

*See p. 76, Kopperunjingan (Tamil), by S.R. Balasubrahmanyam; also see Chapter 11 (on Kulottunga III) of the present work.

“Svasti Sri Tribhuvanachakravartigal Sri Rajarajadevarkku yandu ettavadu Rajaraja Pandi nattu Rajendrasola valanattu Puramalai nattu Po . . . Nishadarajanar Sivalinga-pratish-taikkum vimanap-pratish-taikkum . . . ”

Ponnamaravati is said to be located in Puramalai nadu, in Rajendrasola valanadu, a district of Rajaraja Pandi nadu, by which name the entire Pandi mandalam (the traditional region of the Pandyan kingdom) was known after Rajaraja I's reconquest of that kingdom.

In the 12th year of Tribhuvanachakravartin Kulottunga deva (presumably III), there is a grant jointly made by the Nishadarajan and Udaiyar Tiruppuvanam Udaiyar Tachchacharyan Udaiyar alias Adi Acharyan (Inscriptions of the Pudukkottah State, 147). Evidently the latter was the temple architect.

From an undated inscription (ARE 13 of 1909), we find that the steps and the verandah around the shrine (tirunadai-maligai) were built by one Nilaimai Alagiyan; from an 18th year record (A.D. 1196) of Tribhuvana-chakravartin Kulottunga Chola deva (III) (ARE 5 of 1909), we find that a gift of land was made by one Tiruk-kodungunram udaiyan Alagiya Devan alias Nishadarajan in favour of a matha called Nilamai Alagiya tirumadam, evidently a matha built within the temple by, or on behalf of, Nilaimai Alagiyan. Hence we can presume that this matha and also the verandah and the steps were constructed in the days of Rajaraja II.

The Editor of the Pudukkottai State Gazetteer has contended that the temple of Cholisvaram (its modern name) would appear to have been built by Rajaraja II in memory of his great-grandfather Kulottunga I (who was earlier known as Rajendra Chola II). This seems rather far-fetched, though it is not impossible, because, in spite of the apparent gap of generations, Rajaraja II ascended the throne within 26 years of the death of Kulottunga I. It is however reasonable to conclude that the temple was built in the name of the local chief Nishadarajan, who, as we saw, bore the name of Rajendra Solakeralan.

As to when the Amman shrine inside this temple was consecrated we have no direct evidence: but it must have come into existence certainly within two or three decades of the main shrine, as we find that one Tirukkodungunram udaiyan Keralan alias Nishadarajan (perhaps the successor of Rajendra Solakeralan) makes certain presents to the shrine of Tirukkamakkottam-udaiya-Aludaiya-nachchiyar in the temple of Rajendrasolisvaram Udaiyar, in the 23rd year of Jatavarman Tribhuvanachakravartin Kula-sekharadeva (A.D. 1213; ARE 10 of 1909), which would show that this border area was wrested from Chola control in the last days of Kulottunga III (A.D. 1178–1218).

The garbhagriha, the ardhamandapa and the mahamandapa form a single architectural unit. The sanctum rises over a moulded adhish-thanam, having an octagonal kumudam. The pilasters are square with thick palagais and bevelled corbels. The cornice is thin, and the kudus are plain. The niches on the projecting posts of the three sides have square pilasters with arched tops, while those in the recesses are surmounted by pancharams. The southern niche contains a sculpture of Jnana Dakshinamurti and the northern one of Brahma, while the western is empty. Pieces of the original vyalavari, which were evidently removed when the brick vimanam was renovated, have now been built into the prakara wall. At the junction of the ardhamandapa with the sanctum, and in the middle along its length, there are empty niches, each of which is surmounted by an arch; on either side of the central niche are two shallow niches surmounted by pancharams. Between the ardhamandapa and mahamandapa there is a porch, with doorways on the south and north which are now closed. There is a niche surmounted by pancharams on either side of the entrance to the sanctum. The pillars inside the mahamandapa are cylindrical and carry tenoned corbels. To the north of the mahamandapa is the Amman shrine which is a crude imitation of the main shrine. Among the bronzes in this temple is a Somaskanda group belonging to the Later Chola period. (Pls. 257-60).

Vishnu Temple

The Vishnu temple to the west of the village must have come into existence in the days of Maravarman Sundara Pandya I, two of whose dated inscriptions are found in the temple. There are also six inscriptions found on it belonging to Saka years 1367 to 1375 (A.D. 1445-53), which refer to the temple of Alagiya-perumal Vinnagara Emperuman at Ponnamarapadi situated to the west of the village. There is a reference to a servant of the temple, who sang the hymns of Sadagopan (i.e., Nammalvar). This is a much later foundation, of the period of Maravarman Sundara Pandya of the Later Pandya.

PALLAVARAYANPETTAI (KULATTUR)

SUNDARESVARAR TEMPLE (RAJARAJESVARAM) 4

Pallavarayanpettai is a village on the outskirts of Mayuram in the Tanjavur district. There is a temple here, now called that of Sundaresvarar. The place as well as the temple would appear to be the creation of a great and powerful Minister of Rajaraja II, called Tiruch-Chirrambalam-Udaiyan Peruma(1)nambiyan alias Pallavarayan. Perhaps the place was named Kulattur in fond recollection of his native place called Karigai Kulattur (see below and also Appendixes 2 and 3 to the section), and the temple named Rajarajesvaram in honour of his royal patron.

There are nine inscriptions in the temple of the days of Rajaraja II, one of those of Rajadhiraja II, and one of those of the Pallava Kopperunjinga. One of the inscriptions of the days of Rajaraja II (ARE 427 of 1924) is the foundation inscription; its date is lost and could be any of the first ten years of his reign. It records a gift of sheep for burning a lamp in the "temple of Rajarajesvaram Udaiyar, which had been constructed at Kulattur in Tiruvindalur nadu, a sub-division of Rajadhiraja valanadu, by a certain Kulatturan Tiruch Chirrambalam Udaiyan Perumal-nambiyan alias Pallavarayan, a native of Karigai-Kulattur in Siru-kunra nadu, a sub-division of Amur kottam in Jayangondasola mandalam." Another inscription, of the 10th year (ARE 434 of 1924), records a sale of land to the temple by two private individuals of Tiruvudalur. A third, of the same 10th year, (with the pu maruviya tirumadum introduction: ARE 431 of 1924), records the gift of some lands, tax-free, for offerings, worship and a flower-garden to the temple of Rajarajesvaram udaiyar at Kulattur by "Pallavarayan by whom the temple had been built" (mentioned in ARE 427 of 1924). Thus, this temple, built by Pallavarayan, came into existence (was completed) by about A.D. 1155. Two inscriptions of the 14th regnal year refer to gifts of lamps (ARE 429 and 431 of 1924). There are four inscriptions (ARE 428, 430, 436 and 437 of 1924) of the 16th year (A.D. 1162): one of them records an agreement by a shepherd to burn lamps in the temple; others refer to gifts of land to the temple; the last-cited in particular mentions the sale of some land belonging to the adjacent Vishnu temple of Kirttinarayana Vinnagar Alvar to the Rajarajesvaram udaiyar temple.

The (chronologically) next record, on the south wall of the mandapa in front of the central shrine (ARE 433 of 1924), is historically very important. It belongs to the eighth year of Rajadhiraja deva II (with the kadal sulnda par madarum introduction). It records the circumstances of the king's coronation through the exertions of Tiruch-chirrambalam-udaiyan Perumal-nambiyan alias Pallavarayan, after the death of Rajaraja II. Pallavarayan appears to have been the chief among the trusted officers of Rajaraja II, enjoying the king's confidence, honours and preference. Rajaraja II died at the height of his power, leaving behind him two infants aged two years and one year respectively. The times were potentially insecure and perilous. The infants were transported from Ayirattali* to a place of safety in Rajarajapuram†

*This Ayirattali is not to be confused with its namesake alias Niyamam (modern Nemam) in Tanjavur district. It was part of the secondary Chola capital of Palayarai—the successor of Nandipuram of the Pallavas.

†Modern Darasuram (Tanjavur district): it was the Chola capital during the days of Rajaraja II—vide Ottakkuttar's Takkayagapparan.

After a thorough enquiry and study of the claims of the next of kin of the late king, Pallavarayan raised to the Chola throne Edirilip-perumal, son of Neri-udaip-perumal and grandson of Vikrama Chola, who had been designated by Rajaraja II himself to succeed him; the new ruler was invested with the title Rajadhiraja (II) in the fourth year of his reign (nalam tirunakshatram) with the unanimous approval of the chief's retinue on council (udankuttam) and of the whole nadu. Some overt as well as covert opposition continued to be there, and Pallavarayan carefully guarded the royal infant heirs and maintained law and order in the kingdom.

It was also at this time that Kulasekhara Pandya was driven out of his kingdom by a rival who was supported by the Sinhalese (Ceylonese). Kulasekhara sought and received Chola help for the restoration to him of his throne. The Ceylonese Generals (dandanayakas) were defeated and killed and their heads nailed to Madurai's gateway. Arrangements were in full swing for the restoration of Kulasekhara, when, as ill-luck would have it, Pallavarayan fell ill and died. This was a big blow to the Chola king who lost an able, loyal and trusted Minister and General at a critical point. In recognition of his invaluable services to the royal family, his estate (kani) of 40 velis of tax-free land at Solendrasinga-nallur in Kurukkainadu, a sub-division of Virudarajabhayankara valanadu, was redistributed within the circle of his relatives, by royal order. Besides, the mother, sister and other relations of Rajaraja II were also provided with lands: eight ma of land was given to the widowed queen and the children of Rajaraja II; to "the daughter of Vaippur Udaiyan", mother of Rajaraja II, one veli of land was given, and two velis to his sister, "wife of Valiyur Udaiyan", and her children. The services of Pallavarayan, the pilot who ably weathered the political storm, were suitably and dutifully rewarded by a grateful ruler. The work of distribution of the lands covered by the grant was entrusted to Palaiyanur udaiyan Vedavanam udaiyan Ammaiappan alias Pallavarayan of Men-malai Palaiyanur in Jayangondasola mandalam, who succeeded the late Pallavarayan as Chief Minister. Pallavarayanpettai and the temple of Rajarajesvaram are a fitting memorial to a loyal and talented General and Administrator who ably held office at a critical juncture in Chola history. (For further details on these two generals, see Appendix 1 to this section.) (Pls. 261-70).

APPENDIX I

Three Chieftains mentioned in inscriptions at Arpakkam, Pallavarayanpettai and Palaiyanur-Tiruvalangadu.

1. EDIRILISOLA SAMBUVARAYAN

An inscription at Arapakkam, of the 5th year of Rajadhiraja II (ARE 20 of 1899; SII, VI, 456), mentions the following: 'The army of Sri Lanka, having taken possession of the Pandyan country and driven the king, Kulasekhara, out of Madurai, began offensives against the feudatories of the Chola king. The prospect of war spreading to the Tondai and Pasi districts of the Chola country struck terror into the hearts of its people. The Chieftain Edirilisola Sambuvarayan besought 'Svamidevar' (Umapatideva alias Jnana Siva, a native of Dakshina Lata in Gauda desa) to offer prayers, oblations and worship (japa, homa and archana) to Lord Siva to help avert the calamity. Such worship (Aghora-supuja) was conducted for twenty-eight days, and an olai (letter) was received from the General, Pillai Pallavarayan, announcing the flight of the Simhala Generals (dandanayakas) Jayadhrata, Lankapuri and others. In gratitude to the Svami for his intercession with the divine powers, Sambuvarayan gave the village of Alappakkam consisting of 167 velis of land as a tax-free endowment (eka-bhoga iraiyili) to the Svami, who, in turn, distributed the income from the village among his relatives. We have already discussed the great Minister and General Pallavarayan in the account on Pallavarayanpettai (ARE 433 of 1924; EI, XXI, 31)—also see below. This Sambuvarayan was the father of that Pallavarayan.

Venkayya (SII, I, pp. 86 ff.) opined that this Sambuvarayan must have been an ancestor of Alagiya Solan (alias Edirili) of the Poygai inscription of the 22nd year of Rajaraja III (SII, I, p. 59) and interpreted Sambuvarayan's solicitude for the Chola victory as due to his being a devotee of Siva and of brahmanas and the invaders being enemies of both as evidenced by their removing the sacred door and plundering the treasures of the Ramesvaram temple.

2. TIRUCH-CHIRRAMBALAM-UDAIYA PERUMA(L)NAMBI(AN)
ALIAS PALLAVARAYAN

As noted in the text of this Section, a Pallavarayanpettai inscription of the 8th year of Rajadhiraja II (ARE 433 of 1924; EI, XXI, 31) records the invaluable services to the Chola royal family rendered by this Chieftain, who hailed from Karigai-kalattur (or -kulattur) in Sirukunra nadu, a sub-division of Amur kottam in the district of Jayangondasola mandalam, and served as Chief Minister to both Rajaraja II and Rajadhiraja II till his death in the eighth regnal year of the latter. (For further details about Karigai Kulattur, see Appendixes 2 and 3.)

Rajaraja II had two sons born late in his life and, to ensure a smooth succession, he designated Edirili Perumal, son of Neri Udai Perumal and grandson of Vikrama Chola, as his immediate successor. At the sudden death of Rajaraja II, it fell to Pallavarayan to give effect to the late king's wish. He removed the two infants, aged two years and one year at the time, to a place of safety in Rajarajapuram from Ayirattali, and with the approval of the royal household and his own adherents (udan-kuttam) and the nadu in general, he installed Edirili Perumal as king. He further invested the new king, in his fourth regnal year, with the name of Rajadhiraja (II). Thus he came to the rescue of the empire at a crucial time of transition.

Then followed a period of external danger. The king of Sri Lanka invaded the Pandya country and drove out the ruling Kulasekhara into exile. The latter sought the assistance of the Chola king for his restoration to the Madurai throne. Under the guidance of Pallavarayan, the Chola army routed and killed the Simhalese Generals and recaptured Madurai. It was at this supreme hour of triumph that Pallavarayan fell ill and died. The grateful Rajadhiraja ordered that Pallavarayan's estate of forty velis in Cholendra-singanallur was to be made into a separate unit called Rajadhiraja Kulattur (in Kuruk-kai nadu, part of Virudarajabhayankara valanadu), rendered tax-free and distributed among the late chief's widows, sons, their wives, and other relatives. The delicate task of distribution of the estate was left to Palaiyanur Udaiyan Vedavanam Udaiyan Ammai-yappan alias Pallavarayan (presumably his namesake's successor in office). Rajadhiraja Kulattur came to be known as Pallavarayanpettai in course of time. (Lands were also assigned at this time to the widowed queen, the mother and the sisters of the late Rajaraja II).

The career of Pallavarayan is reminiscent of that of Naralokavira who as Minister and General rendered signal service in the reigns of Kulottunga I and Vikrama Chola. The temple at Pallavarayanpettai as well as the place itself is a symbol of the greatness of an illustrious 'first servant' of the Chola empire.

3. PALAIYANUR UDAIYAN VEDAVANAM UDAIYAN AMMAIYAPPAN ALIAS PALLAVARAYAN

This Chief, who presumably succeeded his namesake alias Tiruch-chirrambalam udaiyan as Chief Minister to Rajadhiraja II, is described as a native of Palaiyanur, east of Tiruvalangadu (Chittoor district). Inscriptions relating to him are found at Palaiyanur, Tiruvarur and Tirumayanam. Further, he it was who was entrusted by the king with the task of distributing the personal estate of his late predecessor and namesake among the relatives of the latter.

The earliest reference to him is contained in an inscription of the second year of Rajadhiraja II (A.D. 1168) at Tiruvarur (ARE 538 of 1904; SII, XVII, 589). It gives him the alias of Rajaraja Vilupparaiyan of Menmalai Palaiyanur nadu in Jayangondasola mandalam. He purchased two pieces of land as 'Rajadhirajap-peruvilai' and made a gift of them for food offerings to the Tiruvarur temple. The prefix 'Rajaraja' would indicate his association with the late king as well. An inscription of the 9th year of Rajadhiraja II (A.D. 1175) at Tiruvarur (ARE 542 of 1904; SII, XVII, 585) gives him the alias of Pallavarayan; he purchased some land in Rajaraja Pottur alias Ammaiappanallur (presumably named after him) for 1500 kasus and made a gift of it to the temple of Sri Mulasthanam Udaiyar of Tiruvarur. Again, in the 10th year of the same ruler, the Chief bought as 'Rajadhirajap-peruvilai' a plot of land in Solakerala-nallur and endowed it as kani to Goddess Paraloka-men-moli-nachchiyar in the shrine of Tirukkamakkottam udaiya periya Nachchiyar in the temple at Tiruvarur. In the 8th year of Kulottunga III (A.D. 1186: ARE 537 of 1904; SII, XVII, 582), he made a gift of land for the maintenance of three lamps at the shrines of Sri Mulasthanam Udaiyar, Vithi-vitankap-Perumal and Tirukkamakkottam Udaiya Nachchiyar. The land was entrusted to two persons who agreed to supply the ghee required for the purpose.

We may mention here that, according to an inscription of the 14th year of Kulottunga III (A.D. 1192) at the Brahmapurisvarar temple in Sirkali, a gift was made by the wife and daughter of this Chief to the shrine of Tiruttonipuram udaiya Nayanar for the merit of their husbands, themselves and their descendants (ARE 124 of 1896).

At Palaiyanur, there are two inscriptions, of the 12th and 13th years of Rajadhiraja II. The first (ARE 465 of 1905; EI, XXI, pp. 187-8) is historically of great value, as it gives us an idea of the role of Vedavanam Udaiyan in the Pandyan war; a copy of this inscription, of the same date, is found at Tirumayanam (ARE 211 of 1925). It narrates how this Chief (given the alias of Annan Pallavarayan) counteracted the continuing machinations of the Simhalese king, Parakramabahu; the latter had mobilised another expedition and collected his forces at Uratturai, Pulaichcheri, Matottam, Vellikamam and Mattival and was making preparations for a naval attack on the mainland. At this, the Chola king sent word to Srivallabha, a nephew of the Simhalese king and a former claimant to the throne, and placed a large army at his command. The camps of the Simhalese army were destroyed, some elephants captured and the land devastated; some Simhalese chiefs were taken prisoner. The booty was presented to the Chola king by the General Vedavanam Udaiyan Ammaiappan alias Annan Pallavarayan. Meanwhile the Pandyan king Kulasekhara had played into the hands of the Simhalese king and turned traitor to the Cholas, driving out the Chola general and army unit stationed in the Pandyan country. The Cholas counteracted this by supporting the claims of Vira Pandya, son of Parakrama Pandya (and a former protege of Sri Lanka), to the Pandyan throne. Vedavanam Udaiyan accomplished these tasks smoothly, and in recognition of this, the king honoured the victorious General by granting him ten velis of land in Rajarajan-Palaiyanur. This fact is recorded in an inscription at Palaiyanur-Tiruvalangadu.

The inscription of the 13th year of Rajadhiraja II at Palaiyanur records a gift of three lamps by this Chief to the temple (ARE 474 of 1905).

Vedavanam Udaiyan was thus another great General and Minister of Rajadhiraja II and a worthy successor to Tiruch-chirrambalam udaiyan.

TIRUVANAKKOYIL

TIRUVALISVARAR (TIRU VALAK KOYIL UDAIYA NAYANAR) TEMPLE

The village of Tiruvanakkoyil in Chingleput district and the adjacent one of Kalattur were perhaps once part of the village called Karigai-Kulattur (or -Kalattur) in Tondaimandalam, hometown of the famous Tiruch chirrambalam udaiyan alias Pallavarayan, minister and general to both Rajaraja II and Rajadhiraja II. (Presumably in fond memory of his native soil, this Chief founded a village which included the present-day Pallavarayanpettai and named it Rajarajan-Kalattur (or -Kulattur).) There is a temple here known as the Tiruvalisvarar temple but known in inscriptions as Tiruvalakkoyil—of which the present name of the village appears to be a corruption.

The earliest inscription in this temple is on the south wall of the central shrine and pertains to the 27th year of Kulottunga I (ARE 357 of 1911). It registers a gift of four cows for a lamp by a native of Arrur in Urrukkattuk kottam, and also names two Kalamukhi priests—Gomadatta Jnanasri Pandita and Sailasri Pandita. An inscription of the 10th year of Vikrama Chola on the same wall registers a gift of land situated in Siru-tandalam to Lord Chandrasekharar (a bronze image?) at Tiruvalakkoyil by a number of people—among them being one from Koduvur and another from Pattinam. An inscription of the 12th year (293rd day) of 'Konerinmai-kondan' Kulottunga II (ARE 359 of 1911), found on the west wall, registers a royal order making a gift of some lands in the village of Arumbakkam, a suburb of Ulalur alias Rajarajanallur in Kalattur kottam, to be clubbed together under the name of Anapaya nallur, for maintenance of worship in the temple of Tiruvalakkoyil udaiya Mahadevar. (A similar order was issued at Kalattur: ARE 346 of 1911, as we shall see in Appendix 3). A similar royal order was issued on the 293rd day of the same year to a Chief, Tondaiman, to grant certain lands in the village of Nenmeli in Valla nadu, to be clubbed together under the name of 'Kulottungasolan Tiru nirruch chola Nallur' for maintaining worship in the temple. The royal secretary in both instances was one Anapaya Muvendavelan. As we know, Anapayan and Tiru nirruch cholan were both surnames of Kulottunga II.

On the east wall, there is an inscription of the 26th year of Rajaraja III, registering a gift of land by one Karikalasola Tamiladaraiyan for burning a lamp on the hill north of the temple of Tiruvalakkoyil udaiya Nayanar (ARE 365 of 1911).

There are three inscriptions bearing the 3rd, 10th and 12th 'regnal' years of a Chieftain calling himself 'Sakala-bhuvanachakravartin Rajanarayana Sambhuvarayan', who assumed independence in the aftermath of the Chola empire. The twelfth year inscription records that the tiru madai vilagam and surrounding lands were given as a sarva-manyu grant to the sthanattar of the temple for maintaining worship and for repairs. This Chief was co-regent for a time (till A.D. 1339) with his father, Venru-man-konda Sambhuvarayan, who faced the furious onslaught of Malik Kafur's hordes: the son's own 'reign' lasted during A.D. 1337 to 1360, the last known record of his being of the 19th year (ARE for 1935, Part II, p. 55) at Arakandanallur. An inscription of his seventh year reveals that he was one of the valiant few who fought to defend the Hindu religious institutions of South India against the vandalism of the invading hordes. His inscriptions are found at Virinchi-puram, Mamallapuram, Siddhalingamadam, Tirumalai (near Polur) and Arakandanallur (vide ARE for 1921, Part II, p. 112).

MUNKUDUMI ISVARAM (PERUN TIRUK KOYIL)

In Appendix 2, we have referred to Kalattur in Chingleput district. One of the two temples here is now called Munkudumi Isvaram, but is referred to in inscriptions as the temple of Perum tiruk koyil Mahadevar at Kalattur. The present structure of the temple seems to be Later Chola. The earliest inscription here is one of the 5th year of Kulottunga I, recording a gift of money for two lamps (ARE 340 of 1911). There are three other inscriptions of his days. One (ARE 339 of 1911), on the west wall of the main shrine, records a gift of land by some devaradiyar ('women dedicated to the service of the Lord' in the literal sense, but often loosely and incorrectly translated into 'dancing girls'); we learn that Kalattur had the alternate name of Gangaikondasola chaturvedimangalam. Another of the same year registers a gift of land by two devaradiyar who were sisters; one of them also set up an image of Kshetrapalar in the temple. An inscription of the 23rd year records a gift of three lamps (ARE 341 of 1911). We have an inscription of the 15th year of Vikrama Chola, on the west wall of the central shrine, which records a gift of two lamps 'to the temple of Perun tiruk koyil Mahadevar at Kalattur' by a brahmana of the village. Next comes one of the 12th year (293rd day) of 'Tribhuvana chakravartin Konerinmai kondan' Kulottunga II (ARE 346 of 1911). It registers a royal order to one Tondaiman to grant certain lands in and around Kulattur, clubbed together under the name of 'Kulottunga-solan Tiruttondat-togai nallur', as devadana to the temple for the tirumadai-vilagam and a flower-garden. The royal secretary communicating the order is the same as in the contemporaneous records at Tiruvanakkoyil, namely, Anapaya Muvendavelan.

There is an Amman shrine here, built by a certain Arulala Perumal alias Rajaraja Villuparaiyan for the merit of his mother, in the 15th year of 'Tribhuvana chakravartin Vijaya Gandagopala', who ruled over the region around Kanchi, nominally as a vassal of Rajaraja III but in effect independently.

A slab built into the floor of the mukha mandapa contains a fragmentary Pallava inscription of the 14th year of 'Nandivarma Maharaja': it makes mention of the names of Kalattur kottam and Paramesvara. This fact points to the existence of a temple at the site during the pre-Chola period. There is no clue as to its form or structure.

TIRUVANCHIYAM (SRIVANCHIYAM)5 VANCHISVARAR (VANCHI-LINGESVARAR)
TEMPLE

Tiruvanchiyam lies about 18 km. north-west of Tiruvarur on the main road to Kumbakonam. The Lord of the local temple (Vanchisvarar, Vanchinathar or) Vanchi-lingesvarar has been sung by the three great Nayanmars, as also by Manikkavachakar who sings of the miracle of the Naga-kannika who worshipped this Lord and became one with Him as Ammai-appan.

The earliest inscription here is found on a pillar of the Dakshinamurti shrine in the temple. A mutilated record of the 39th year of Kulottunga I, it records a gift of land to the goddess 'Tirupalliyarai Nam pirattiyar', whose image was presented to the temple of 'Tiru vanchiyam udaiya Mahadevar' by a native of Momangudi (ARE 72 of 1911).

On the walls of the central shrine itself, there are three records: a damaged one of the 18th year of 'Tribhuvana-Chakravarti Rajarajadeva' and two, of the 3rd and 11th years, of 'Rajadhirajadeva'. Another record of the former's days lists lands owned by the temple and its subordinate shrines (ARE 66 of 1911). From a later record, dated in the 10th year of Jatavarman Sundara Pandya deva (ARE 68 of 1911), we get the alternate name of Rajagambhira chaturvedimangalam for Tiruvanchiyam: Rajagambhira was, as we have said earlier, one of the surnames of Rajaraja II.

On the walls of the Mangalambika (Amman) shrine in the temple, there is an unfinished record of the 18th year of 'Tribhuvana chakravarti Rajaraja deva', which refers to the building of this shrine and the consecration of the image of the goddess 'in the temple of Tiruvanchiyam Udaiya Nayanar' (ARE 70 of 1911). There is also a damaged record of the 20th year of the same ruler: it seems to register gifts of land made to the temple in different years of the king's reign and mentions the places Perumbarrap puliyur (Chidambaram) and Tiruvellarai (ARE 71 of 1911).

There are also a number of Pandyan inscriptions here; we have already referred to one.

On the basis of the above information, we may conclude that the original temple dates back to at least the days of Kulottunga I, and that the renovation of the entire temple and the building of the separate Amman shrine took place during the days of a Rajaraja who may be identified as Rajaraja II, especially in view of the village bearing the alternate name of Rajagambhira chaturvedimangalam. It is likely that the pillar in the Dakshina-murti shrine, referred to earlier, was earlier part of the original main shrine and that the Dakshinamurti shrine itself was newly constructed (as was the Amman shrine), at the time of renovation of the main shrine, partly with material from the older structure. (Pls. 271-3).

Rajadhiraja II

Rajadhiraja II was not in the direct line of descent of the Cholas. Interesting if somewhat incomplete information regarding the circumstances leading up to his accession is contained in an inscription found in the temple of Rajarajesvaram built at Pallavarayanpettai during Rajaraja II's days. Finding himself without a son ready to succeed him (tiru abhishekattukku uriya pillai gal inriye irukkirapadiyai parttu), Rajaraja II caused enquiries to be made into the rights of possible successors to the throne according to the prevailing practice of those days (annalile kariyam irundapadi vicharanai seydu) and in the end chose Edirili Perumal, son of Neri udai Perumal and a grandson of Vikrama Chola's, to succeed him temporarily. (See Appendix I to this chapter for other views). After four years of probation, this cousin was anointed co-ruler under the title of Rajadhiraja (in A.D. 1166), such investiture having the approval of the King's Council (udan kuttam). From A.D. 1166 to A.D. 1172, Rajadhiraja II must have served as co-regent.

The closing years of Rajaraja II saw the beginnings of a war of Pandyan succession that, after his death, was fought with fluctuating fortunes and swapping of sides by the Pandyan claimants to the throne, till almost the end of the rule of Rajadhiraja II. The first rude shock which threatened the very existence of the Chola empire came in these days, when the Pandyan claimant Kulasekhara sought the help of the Cholas to fight against the Sri Lanka forces which, at that king's behest, had taken up the cause of Parakrama Pandya, who was then in occupation of the Madurai throne. This war lasted from A.D. 1169 to 1177, when finally the Sri Lanka forces were driven out of the mainland and their ships destroyed. But it also provided the first fissures in the edifice of the Chola empire which till then had been solid and in fact had seen almost half a century of unparalleled peace (from A.D. 1120 to 1169). We shall see more on this later.

Soon after the death of Rajaraja II, we saw, Pillai Pallavarayan alias Tiruchchirrambalam Udaiyan Perumanambi, the trusted lieutenant of Rajaraja II, who played a vital role in the preservation of the Chola empire in those troubled days and bore the brunt of the Sri Lanka invasion of the mainland and expelled the Simhalese forces after bitter fighting, was evidently worried about the safety of the two children of Rajaraja II aged one and two years, as well as of the dowager queen; and so he had them whisked away from the cantonment at Ayirattali, which virtually functioned as the Chola capital during the reign of Rajaraja II, as seen earlier. Safety from whom? What was the particular interest of Pallavarayan in taking upon himself the onus of securing the safety of the children of Rajaraja II? Who were the persons likely to harm the infant children? These questions will remain sources of speculation and have been speculated upon, but are beyond the scope of this book. It was this Pallavarayan who led the Chola army to its victory in the first phase of the war, which occurred even while Rajaraja II was alive; but Pallavarayan did not long survive Rajaraja II and appears to have died sometime around A.D. 1172.

We noticed that the Pandyan kingdom never really accepted Chola supremacy and was chafing under their domination during the Middle Chola period. However, by a system of appointing ('Chola-Pandya') viceroys and stationing substantial troops at various military stations located at strategic places like Kottaru, Rajaraja I and his successors kept down the Pandyan movement for independence; and Kulottunga I had considerable trouble during his early years in keeping a firm hold over this part of the empire; how he had to demonstrate his strength in bloody battles and assert his authority, we have seen in the chapter on Kulottunga I. However, during the closing few years of that ruler, the signal for them to assert their independence was seen in the temporary loss of the Chola hold over Gangavadi and even over Vengi for a short while; and it needed all the energy and diplomacy of Vikrama Chola to re-establish and maintain his hold over these regions. After this, for some decades we hear nothing of the Pandyas till almost the end of the reign of Rajaraja II. However, from the epigraphical material relating to this region and period, it could be said that even though the Pandyan rulers owed allegiance to the Chola overlord, they exercised considerable autonomy and in fact indulged in their own wars and quarrels without reference to the centre and put out their own prasastis, a practice discontinued during the Middle Chola period and even during the days of Kulottunga I.

Three years before the death of Rajaraja II and three years after Rajadhiraja II's co-regency began, a civil war broke out in Madurai (in A.D. 1169); at that time Parakrama Pandya was occupying the Pandyan throne; finding it difficult to defend the city that was besieged by the army led by Kulasekhara, his rival claimant to the throne, he appealed to the Sri Lanka ruler Parakramabahu (A.D. 1153-86) to send him assistance to help him thwart the investment; accordingly, Parakramabahu, only too happy to interfere in the affairs of the mainland and resume the old rivalry with the Cholas, sent a big army under a general named Lankapuri. Before, however, the army could reach Madurai, the city had been stormed by Kulasekhara who killed Parakrama Pandya, his queen and children. Parakramabahu advised his commander to continue with the effort, wrest Madurai from Kulasekhara and hand it over to the scions of Parakrama Pandya. Reading the narration of the events of this period given in the Buddhist account, Mahavamsa, in conjunction with the elaborate inscriptions found in the Tamil country on this subject, we can piece the sequence of events together somewhat as follows. The Sri Lanka forces routed the army of the Pandyan prince Kulasekhara; Kulasekhara sought the Chola king's protection and a large army under the command of Pallavarayan and other generals was sent to counter the depredations of the Sri Lanka army, with orders that the Pandyan throne should be given to Kulasekhara and that Lankapuri Dandanayaka and other Chiefs commanding the Sri Lanka army should be killed and their heads nailed to the gates of the city of Madurai. We have already referred to the interesting inscription from Arpakkam dated in the fifth year of Rajadhiraja II, which contains the earliest reference to these crucial days and the fighting that was going on; it mentions that the depredations of Lankapuri in Pandi mandalam struck terror even into the minds of the people of Chola desa; worship was abandoned in the Ramesvaram temple and its treasure plundered; and a worried father, Edirilisola Sambuvarayan, anxious that the Chola army commanded by his son, Pillai Pallavarayan, should stem the tide of Chola defeat, sought the intercession of Svami devar, a holy man from Dakshina Lata in Gauda desa, who, after performing pūja for twenty-eight days* brought divine wrath to bear on the Sri Lanka army; and soon after the pūja came the news of Pallavarayan's success against the Pradhanis of the Simhalese army; their Dandanayakas (commanders) Jayadratha and Lankapuri and the entire army were driven out of the mainland. Kulasekhara thereupon returned to Madurai as the undisputed king. Another inscription dilating on the same theme, found at Pallavarayanpettai, and dated in the eighth regnal year of Rajadhiraja II, says that thus was prevented the conversion of the Pandyan country into a province of Sri Lanka (pandinadu ilanadaagadapadi pariharittu). The story does not end here. Evidently, Parakramabahu did not accept this defeat and was making warlike preparations for a fresh invasion of the mainland. Having come to know that the Sri Lanka king was mustering a big fleet in Uratturai, Pulaichcheri, Matottam, Vallikamam, Mattival and other places, Annan Pallavaraiyan alias Palaiyanur-udaiyan Vedavanam Udaian Ammaiappan set up Srivallabha, the nephew (marumaganar) of the king of Sri Lanka, as a claimant to the Simhalese throne and put him at the head of a big expeditionary force, which attacked the island and captured and destroyed the ports of Pulaichcheri, Matottam and others, where Parakramabahu was mustering his naval forces for the proposed attack on the mainland; the Chola commander Annan Pallavaraiyan gathered the booty and duly placed it at the feet of Rajadhiraja II.

In recognition of the services rendered by this Chief in the cause of the preservation of the Chola empire and thwarting the designs of the Sri Lanka king on the Pandyan kingdom, a gift of land was made which is reported in the inscription dated in the twelfth year of Rajadhiraja II found in the North Arcot district (ARE 465 of 1905).

But the war did not end here. Parakramabahu, finding the Chola diplomacy of setting up a counter claimant to the Sri Lanka throne in the person of Srivallabha who, assisted by the able Chola general, had gained spectacular successes against the Sri Lanka army, disconcerting, tried to pay the Chola king back in his own coin by suddenly withdrawing his support for Vira Pandya, the scion of Parakrama Pandya, and bestowing it on his erstwhile enemy Kulesekhara; tempted by generous presents and promises, Kulasekhara made a volte face and joined hands with Parakramabahu in attacking the Chola Chiefs in Pandi nadu with a view to driving them out; the Chola ruler instructed Pallavaraiyan to instal Vira Pandya on the Pandyan throne. These were anxious days, and evidently the Cholas were taken by surprise by the unexpected turn of events and the shifting loyalty of Kulasekhara, who, assisted by Parakramabahu's army, would appear to have made deep inroads into the Chola territory before Annan Pallavaraiyan could gather his forces to roll back the intruding Sri Lanka army and place Vira Pandya on the Madurai throne. We gather that Annan Pallavaraiyan successfully brought this about. This culminating act may have taken place in A.D. 1177. This brings us to almost the beginning of the rule of Kulottunga III, who ascended the throne in A.D. 1178. Thus it would appear that the entire reign of Rajadhiraja II was devoted to the preservation of the integrity of the Chola empire and the worsting of the attempts of Parakramabahu to interfere in the affairs of the mainland—a mission whose success was due mainly to the two Pallavarayan Chiefs. The Chola empire that Kulottunga III inherited from Rajadhiraja II was essentially the same in extent as at the end of the reign of Vikrama Chola. Nandalur, Kalahasti and Nellore contain a number of inscriptions of this period and Nandalur in particular continues to be a centre of considerable religious activity during this period.

Rajadhiraja II celebrated the defeat of the Sri Lanka forces at the hands of his generals by giving himself the surname of 'he, who was pleased to take Madurai and Ilam' (Maduraiyum Ilamum kondarulina) (ARE 36 of 1906; 731 of 1909). He also called himself Karikala, as in inscriptions from Chidambaram and Attur. His inscriptions and the prasasti sometimes combined the surnames, calling him Tribhuvanachakravartin alias Maduraiyum Ilamum kondarulina Karikala Choladeva.

We hear of another Chief from around the tenth regnal year of Rajadhiraja II. An expedition seems to have been taken out against Kollimalai (Valappur nadu), which represented the region around modern Namakkal of Salem district, under the command of Virrirundan Seman(dar) alias Pillai Akalanka Nadalvar of Tiruttavatturai (Lalgudi) in Idaiyarrur nadu, a subdivision of Pandikulasani valanadu; Kollimalai nadu is said to be a subdivision of Virasola mandalam of the Chola empire; this Chief enters into a number of agreements with local petty Chiefs, the Malayala nattar of some villages, for various benefactions to the Arappallisvarar* temple in Valappur nadu (ARE 496, 499, 500 and 501 of 1929–30). We gather from some inscriptions from Srirangam that three Kaikola Mudalis, Nayan alias Alagiya Manavala Marayan of Tiruvarangam, Araiyan alias Kidarattaraiyan and Ulagan alias Alaganaichchola Marayan bound themselves to serve this Chief unto death as velaikkarar (ARE 267, 268 and 269 of 1929-30).

*Incidentally this temple would appear to have been in existence even in the days of Uttama Chola, vide an inscription on the door-jamb (right of entrance) of the central shrine dated in his 16th year which states that Parantakan Madevadigal alias Sembiyan Madeviyar, the mother of Gandan Madhurantakan alias Uttama Choladeva, deposited 100 kalanjus of gold with the urar of certain specified villages in Kollimalai nadu for meeting the expenses of monthly sankramanas in the temple of Tiruvarappalli Alvar on the Kollimalai, the urar agreeing to pay the monthly interest to the sabha (ARE 503, 504, 505 of 1929–30).

Rajadhiraja's prasastis begin with one of three forms: kadal sulnda par magalum (madarum), similar to the prasasti of Rajaraja II; pu maruviya tisai mugatton, occurring from his fifth year records onwards; and kadal sulnda parelum. They do not furnish any information of a historical nature and seem to be purely rhetorical.

We hear of one Narayanan Muvendavelan as the royal Secretary (tiru-mandira-olai) in an inscription dated in his second year, 121st day, and again of one Minavan Muvendavelan as another incumbent of that office (Pallavarayanpettai).

Rajadhiraja II would appear to have ruled for sixteen years and his reign must have ended in A.D. 1182, though the reign of his successor Kulottunga III is dated from A.D. 1178.

APPENDIX I

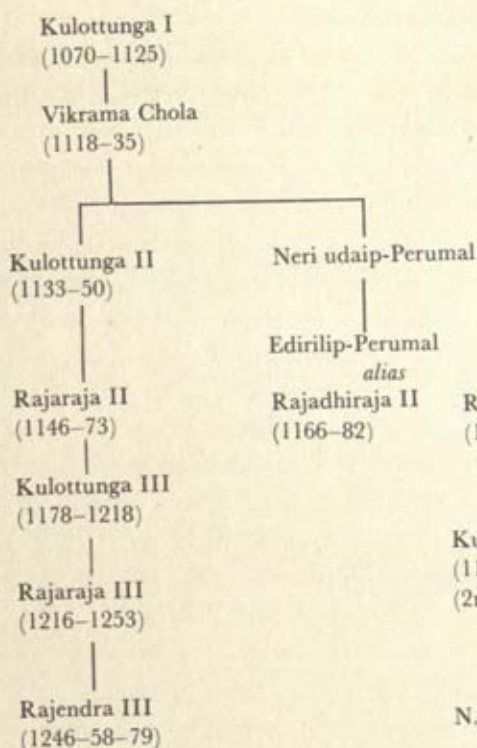

Note on N. Sethuraman's views on Rajadhiraja II.

We have described the views and conclusions of N. Sethuraman on the date of accession of Kulottunga I. In his Aruludaich Cholamandalam, he discusses fully and critically the Pallavarayanpettai inscription. He suggests a slight variation in the generally accepted order of succession. The two views are stated below:

GENEALOGY OF THE LATER CHOLAS

(A.D. 1070-1280)

(a) Accepted version.

(b) N. Sethuraman's version.

An important difference between the two views is that in the earlier view Edirilipperumal was the son of Neriyaipperumal (supposedly a younger brother of Kulottunga II) who in turn was a son of Vikrama Chola. Sethuraman suggests that Neriyaipperumal was a daughter of Kulottunga II and a younger sister of Rajaraja II, and that Edirilipperumal was the son of this Neriyaipperumal, and thus a great-grandson of Vikrama Chola. And he cites the analogy of the earlier Chola precedent in which Kulottunga I (Rajiga or Rajendra), the son of Ammanga devi, sister of Vira Rajendra, was made the Chola emperor, after the death of Vira Rajendra and his son Adhi Rajendra.

The closing years of Rajaraja II's rule were a critical period in the history of the Cholas. The king was old and ailing. He had two sons— one and two years old. The war of disputed succession to the Pandyan throne had had its impact on the Chola empire. In the face of these dangers—domestic and foreign—Rajaraja II held consultation with his Council of Ministers and (according to N. Sethuraman) got the approval of the Nadu to appoint Edirilip-perumal as his successor till one of his sons came of age to be crowned king of the Chola country. Edirilip-perumal ascended the Chola throne as a co-ruler in A.D. 1166 and ruled for 12 years under the name of Rajadhiraja II.

He stood by his promise to Rajaraja II. In A.D. 1178, he handed over the sovereignty of the Chola kingdom to Rajaraja II's second son, Kulottunga III, in accordance with his promise to and understanding with Rajaraja II and retired to Vengi desa and ruled that principality with full regal powers and authority till his death there in A.D. 1215. A noble soul!*

APPENDIX II

EIGHTH YEAR INSCRIPTION OF RAJADHIRAJA II AT PALLAVARAYANPETTAI (A.D. 1173-74) (ARE 123 OF 1912; SII, IV, 626)

Rajaraja II died in A.D. 1172. About a year later, Tiruchchirrambalam Udaiyan also died suddenly. Vedavanam Udaiyan of Palaiyanur succeeded him as the Prime Minister and General. He distributed (not a royal gift) the landed property of Tiruchchirrambalam Udaiyan among the close relatives of the deceased Tiruchchirrambalam Udaiyan, including some portions to the dowager queen of Rajaraja II. (We saw that after settling the domestic problem, Vedavanam Udaiyan carried on the second war with the Pandyas who were being helped by the Simhalese (A.D. 1170-78). His victory in this second war against the Pandyan-Simhalese alliance was rewarded by the grateful Chola ruler with a gift of ten velis of land at Palaiyanur (12th year of Rajadhiraja II, Tiruvalangadu inscription).)

Temples of Rajadhiraja II's Time

TIRUVENGAIVASAL

1 VYAGHRAPURISVARAR TEMPLE SHRINES OF SADIRA VITANKA NAYAKAR AND PIRATTIYAR (CONSORT)

In the village of Tiruvengaivasal in the Pudukkottai district, there is an ancient temple of Siva, dating back to at least the days of Parantaka I. The principal deity is called Vyaghrapurisvarar (Vyaghra in Sanskrit = vengai in Tamil = tiger). There is an inscription in Tamil verse, of the fifth year, and another, of the 28th year, both of an unspecified Parakesarivarman and found on the north wall of the mandapa in front of the central shrine (ARE 239 and 238 of 1914). The former mentions a gift of a lamp to the temple of Tiruvengaivayil by a native of Malanadu and the latter a gift of a lamp to the deity of the temple, referred to as Tirumerrali Mahadevar. Both could be assigned to the days of Parantaka I.

On the door-posts of the entrance to the same mandapa, there is a record of the 26th year of Rajaraja I, referring to a gift of a lamp by a merchant to 'the temple of Tirumerrali Mahadevar at Tiruvengaivayil, a devadana in Peruvayil nadu, a sub-division of Pandikulasani valanadu' (ARE 240 of 1914). In a record of the 26th year of Rajendra I, reference is made to an image of Nittasulamani Vitankar, to whom a gift of land for offerings is made by the Assembly of Tiruvengaivayil, described now as a devadana in Peruvayil nadu, a subdivision of Jayasinga-kula-kala vala-nadu. We have two records of the days of Rajadhiraja I; one, of his eighth year, states that the devadana lands of the temple were lying uncultivated for want of tenants and so certain private individuals bought them from the temple authorities and agreed to 'measure out' the specified quantity of paddy every year to the temple (ARE 250 of 1914); the other, of his 30th year, lists all the devadana lands belonging to the temple (ARE 236 of 1914).

In the Later Chola period, the temple seems to have received attention in the days of Vikrama Chola. There are two records, both of his 14th year, on the outer side of the west wall of the first prakara. One refers to a gift of land by the nadu and the Mahe-svaras of Peru-vayal nadu to one Elu-nattu-nangai who was to give nine performances of sandikkuttu during the Chittirai festival before the Lord Tiruvengai-vayil Andar. She was to receive 'korru' for the performance in years when the crops failed (ARE 253 of 1914, pd. 128).

Two records of 'Tribhuvanachakravartin Rajarajadeva', of his 12th and 20th years (ARE 246, 247 of 1914), refer to the installation of the images of 'Sadira Vitanka devar' and Consort (Pirattiyar) by one Sadiran Irajan alias Kulottungasola Kidarattarayan and to gifts made to them. The later record tells us that one-half of the r  venue from the 18 ma of land presented was to be used for the expenses of the main shrine and the other half for festivals in the shrines of Sadira Vitanka Nayakar and Consort in the temple. Both these records are on the south wall of the first prakara. An inscription of the fifth year of Rajadhiraja II, on the west wall of the same prakara, records a gift of land to two women for performing the sandik-kuttu during the Tiruvadirai festival in the month of Vaikasi at the shrine of Sadira Vitanka Nayakar set up by Sadiran Irajan alias Kulottungasola Kidarattarayan (ARE 254 of 1914, pd. 139).

From the contents of these records, and noting that the 20th year of Rajaraja II would correspond to A.D. 1166 and the 5th year of Rajadhiraja II to A.D. 1171, we may reasonably infer that the two Rajaraja records belong to the days of Rajaraja II.

The independent Amman shrine of Brihannayaki appears to be a later structure; there are Pandyan records on its walls which, however, do not throw any light on the growth of the temple.

The main shrine itself, though dating back to the days of Parantaka I and beyond, has undergone total renovation and contains no Chola or Pandyan records on its walls, now.

TIRUVALISVARAM TEMPLE

On the Kanchi-Uttaramerur road, after crossing the Vegavati at Kanchi and the Palar four kilometres further south, one reaches Arpakkam after another four kilometres on the same road; it lies midway between the Palar and the Cheyyar, which joins the Palar a few kilometres east at the well-known centre of Tirumukudal. The earliest-known Pallava cave temple, at Mandahappattu, is at a distance of only about 8 km. in a westerly direction from here.

There are a number of inscriptions in this temple, some on the apsidal garbhagriha wall, and others on the eastern face of the mandapa in front of the temple; an important inscription (ARE 20 of 1899; SII, VI, No. 456) found on the south-west face of the garbhagriha wall of the central shrine records an interesting document dated in the fifth year of Tribhuvanachakravartin Parakesarivarman Rajadhiraja deva (II) (A.D. 1171). It is very important from a historical view-point and also enables us to interpret the meaning of the term 'Tiruvallisvaram'. It reads as follows:

"Svasti Sri Ganapataye namaha: Kadal sulnda paar madarum poomadarum kalai madarum . . . sempon virasimhasanattu ulagudai Mukkokkilanadigalodum virrirundu aruliya kopparakesaripanmarana tribhuvanachakravartigal sri Rajadhirajadevarkku yandu 5-avadu ilappadai pandimandalattaikkaikondur maduraiyiley irunda iraja kulasekharanai pogat-turatti pinbu maharaja Sri Rajadhirajadevar samantarodey poosal porat-tudangi . . . janangalellam bayappattamaiyaikkettu edirili sola sambhuvarayanen . . . svamidevar sri padattu serachchenru . . . tiruviramesvarattil devar koyilai tirukaappukkondur poojaiyum muttupanni . . . 28 nal agorapoojai panni-yarulinar."

The Editor of 'The Inscriptions of the Madras Presidency' dealing with this inscription says as follows:

"It sets forth that the army of Ceylon having taken possession of the Pandyan country, drove away king Kulasekhara, who was then in Madurai and then began (?) to fight in battle with the feudatories of the great king Sri Rajadhiraja deva; that the danger of the spreading of the war into the districts of Tondi and Pasi struck terror into the hearts of the people of the Chola country; that Edirilisola Sambuvarayan approached Svami devar and requested him to avert the calamity by prayers, oblations and worship and that, as the result of his worship of Siva for 28 days, the Simhalese generals Jayadratha Dandanayaka, Lankapuri Dandanayaka and others fled. Sambuvarayan in gratitude gave the village of Arpakkam to the Svami who, in his turn, distributed the income from the village among his relations. The Svami was Umapati deva alias Jnana Siva deva, a native of Dakshina Lata in Gauda desa." ... "Venkayya believes that the Edirili Solan Sambhuvarayan mentioned here must have been an ancestor of Alagiya Solan of the Poygai inscriptions of Rajaraja III (SII, I, pp. 86 ff.); that his solicitude for the success arose from the fact that his son Pallavarayan was the Chola General and that he was a devotee of Siva and the Brahmanas, whose enemies the invaders were, as is seen in their removal of the sacred door and treasure of the Ramesvaram temple. Venkayya compares the account of this inscription with the Simhalese chronicle and points out that the invasion should be attributed to the third quarter of the 12th century."

One may venture to conclude that Edirili-Sola-Sambuvarayan who took his name from the Chola ruler built this temple and named the deity (Tiru-Iramesvarattu-devar) after the Lord of Ramesvaram, whose temple had suffered damage at the hands of the Sri Lanka troops and their Dandanayakas. It is now called Tiruvalisvaram, a corruption of 'Tiruviramesvaram'. Perhaps it was meant to commemorate the victory of the Cholas over the Pandyas and the Ceylonese, who, in the course of the war, are alleged to have sacked and plundered the famous Ramesvaram temple at the tip of the South Indian peninsula.

This temple was thus in existence by the fifth year of Rajadhiraja II, i.e., say, by the year A.D. 1171 and is said to have been located in Alpakkam, in Magaral nadu in Eyil kottam in Jayangondasola mandalam.

Besides the important inscription mentioned above, there are others belonging to the periods of Kulottunga (III) and Tribhuvanachakravartin Rajaraja (III). A 16th year record attributable to the days of Kulottunga III registers a gift of 12 sheep for a twilight lamp to Bhumisvaram Udaiyar at Arpakkam in Magaral nadu, a subdivision of Eyir kottam in Jayangondasola mandalam. A 16th year record of Rajaraja III registers the sale of the village Punnai in seven shares to several individuals for 42,000 pudukkasu by the Big Assembly of Ukkal alias Vikramabharana chaturvedimangalam (ARE 137 of 1923). A 19th year record of the same ruler on the south wall of the mandapa in front of the central shrine registers a gift of 500 kulis of land free of taxes, as devadana to the temple of Kailasamudaiya Nayanar at Arpakkam by the residents of Punnai in Pagur (Bahur) nadu, a subdivision of Kaliyur kottam; it adds that the gift was made for the safe preservation on the wall of the temple of the document of the 16th year of the king, referred to above, by which the Assembly of Ukkal sold the village (ARE 136 of 1923). There are two records of the 24th year of the same ruler, one registering a gift of one kalanju of gold for burning a twilight lamp before the deity, and the other, a gift of gold for another lamp in the same temple (ARE 134 and 135 of 1923).

A Vira Hariyanna Udaiyar inscription (Vijayanagara period) dated in Saka 1303 (A.D. 1381), on the north wall of the shrine, registers the sale of the village of Sirrinaippakkam by the Big Assembly of Ukkal alias Vikramabharana chaturvedimangalam in Pagur (or Bahur) nadu, of Kaliyur kottam, to a native of Magaral in Magaral nadu, a sub-division of Eyir kottam (ARE 133 of 1923). This public sale in seven equal shares to some groups of individuals by the Assembly is attested at the end by fiftyone persons including the madhyastha (arbitrator) and confirmed by about the same number of other residents. The former perhaps constituted the members of the Assembly or the relevant committee concerned with land transactions and were required to sign the sale deed. It is interesting to observe that the transactions relating to another place were recorded on the walls of a temple in a different locality. Perhaps, the transaction required to be given wide publicity and recorded permanently. Or again in a certain region, selected temples, like the Sri Ranganathasvamin temple at Srirangam or the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram, were chosen as central recording offices for maintaining important documents undamaged or securing them from being lost.

In accordance with the general practice prevailing in the Tondaimandalam region during this period, this temple is an apsidal one from the upapitham to the stupi; the Tondaimandalam region boasts of two types of Gajaprishtha temples; one in which the cella (i.e., the garbhagriha and the ardhamandapa or the antarala as the case may be upto the prastara) is rectangular, with the griva and sikhara alone being apsidal in structure; and the other in which the cella, the sikhara and the griva are all apsidal in form. This temple belongs to the latter category.

The temple faces east and consists of the garbhagriha and the antarala; it is an ekatala structure; the garbhagriha measures 12.70 m. circumferentially from side to side while the antarala portion measures 1.14 m. Inside, the antarala is 2.36 m. wide while the garbhagriha is 2.33 m. wide.

Ganapati and Durga are found in the southern and northern niches of the antarala, while on the curved outer face of the garbhagriha wall, there are Dakshinamurti, Vishnu and Brahma in the south, west and north niches, respectively. There is a mukhamandapa (11.80 m. x 7.62 m.) in front of the antarala, supported on three rows of four pillars each and four pilasters; the pillars are round. From this hall there are two doors opening to the rear into the perambulatory passage, which is pillared and covered.

The devakoshtas of the garbhagriha measure 1.22 m. x .47 m. and are flanked by pilasters which are miniature versions of the bigger pilasters which divide the outer surface of the apsidal wall of the garbhagriha into segments, there being twelve such pilasters. The plain toranas over the niches have a surface slightly raised above the wall face, and are bound by a sinuous outline sweeping downwards and sidewise to form a bracket to the mouldings immediately over the niche; there is a circular depression in the middle of the torana like a kudu but with no decorative element in it. The griva has three niches with simha-mukha designs to crown them, and in them there are kudus containing vimana designs; the same element in much bigger proportions is there in the front portion of the sikhara and the griva. There are three stupis on the sikhara; lotus petal designs in two strata run all round the apsidal sikhara, midway between the stupis and the griva.

There is a later, now dilapidated, structure for the Amman shrine in the prakara outside the central shrine. It faces south and is to the north of the mukhamandapa. The deity is known by the name of Nallalagi or Tripurasundari. In addition there are two shrines, one for Ganapati and the other for Kartikeya, both behind the central shrine.

The icons are well turned out and original. There is a fine sculpture of Pidari found on the verandah of the Ganapati shrine. We do not know its original location. In the mukhamandapa there are two fine stone sculptures of Bhairavar and Surya.

The following bronzes are there: Ganapati, Nataraja and Sivakami, Somaskandar, Uma, Subrahmanya and His Consorts, Sukravara Ambal, Chandrasekharar and Ambal, the four Saivite Saints, Astra devar, Pradosha devar and a gramadevata. They are late bronzes. (Pls. 280-3).

(PIRIDIVALICHCHARAM UDAIYAR) TEMPLE

The village of Nagar is not far from Tirumangalam in the Lalgudy taluk of the Tiruchy district. We have already dealt with Tirumangalam in our Middle Chola Temples (A.D. 985-1070) (pp. 128-132).

The earliest inscription found in the temple of Apratisvarar here is inscribed on the base and tiers of the south wall of the central shrine, and relates to the 6th regnal year of Rajadhiraja II (beginning with kadal sulnda paar elum). It records that the king granted as devadana iraiyili some land in Tiladakkudi in Nerkuppaikkandam for various services to Piruduvali Isvaram Udaiyar in Nagar in Kalaar kurram, at the instance of Akalanka Nadalvan*. The details of the estimate of the yield of paddy from the land is also mentioned (ARE 692 of 1962-63). A record of a few years later, dated in the 11th year of Kulottunga III (A.D. 1189), begins with a Sanskrit verse stating that this record in the paschimadvara was issued by the Mahesvaras. It records a samaya sasana bestowed by a congregation of the Sri rudra mahesvaras and Mahesvarars of the many mandalās and some other bodies at the Narppattennayiravan tirukkaavanam in the temple of Tayilunnallisvaram Udaiyar in Melaittiruvasal in Sri Mahesvaranallur in Mimalai nadu at the instance of the deity Chandesvara, granting some lands as silpa-achaarya-(silpin)kkani and also some honours and privileges of the samaya to Tillainayakan alias Tiruttavatturai Achariyan and his brother for their services to the said temple and to the samaya. Tillainayakan is said to have been the Tachchacharyan of Manakkaal alias Virudaraja bhayankara chaturvedimangalam in the kilaimuri of Mala nadu (ARE 691 of 1962-63). There is an incomplete record (dated in the 13th year of Kulottunga III) engraved on the right of the entrance to the mandapa in front of the central shrine (east wall). It records the sale of land in Malavanur and Nagar by the perunguri mahasabha of Pelangaavur in Kulpi-laaru in Paachchir kurram to the temple of Piridivalichcharam Udaiyar in Nagar in Kalaar kurram in Rajaraja valanadu (ARE 688 of 1962-63). An image of Subrahmanya (Pillaiyar) would appear to have been set up at the same time as the temple was built (12th century) (ARE 694 of 1962-63).

From a Pandyan record found on the south wall of the mandapa (ARE 689 of 1962-63) and belonging to Maravarman Kula-sekhara, dated in his 29th year, we gather that the mahasabha of the village made a vyavastha when it met at the mandapa in the temple, called here that of 'Prithvi-vallisvaram-udaiya-nayanar in Nagar, a hamlet of Posala Virasomisvarar chaturvedi-mangalam, an agaram of Vikramapuram (note the changes in the names of the temple, nadu etc.), apparently exempting from taxes the lands granted by one Anantanarayana Bhattan of Gomadam and his brothers to the deity set up (as a linga) in the prakara of the temple by the said Bhattan.

This temple could be attributed to the days of Rajadhiraja II (circa A.D. 1172-73). It seems probable that Tachchacharya Tillai-Nayakan honoured in the days of Kulottunga III was associated with the construction of this temple.

DEVANAYAKASVAMIN TEMPLE

Ilambayangottur village is only 2 km. south-west of Kuvam (i.e., Tiruvirkkolam), which is 72 km. by road, west of Madras city. It is 10 km. south of Kadambattur railway station. This village is on the western bank of the Kuvam lake. There is no proper road leading to the village; the lake embankment serves the purpose.

Tradition has it that Rambhai worshipped the Lord here. The main deity is known by the name of Chandrasekharar and the Amman Kodendumulaiammai. The sacred tank to the south of the temple is called Chandra-tirtham. Sambandar has sung the praise of the Lord here and the present name of the village finds mention in his verses. But the temple here does not have any early inscriptions.

On the south side of the base of this temple, there is a record dated in the 12th year of Rajadhirajadeva who should be identified with Rajadhiraja II. This record mentions that the stone temple was built by Pandari Siva Charanalayan alias Sivapadasekhara Muvendavelan (ARE 321 of 1911). On the west side of the base of this temple is a record of the 38th year of 'Tribhuvana-vira deva, who was pleased to perform the virabhishekam and the vijayabhishekam'. It refers to a former gift of land by Sengeni Ammaiappan Vanniyanayan Sambuvarayan to the temple of Ilambayangottur Udaiya Nayanar at Kottur alias Solavichchadira chaturvedimangalam (ARE 234 of 1911). Another, of his 34th year, on the north side of the base of the central shrine mentions a gift of money for a lamp by a temple woman (ARE 235 of 1910). According to an inscription dated in his fourth year, Madurantaka-Pottapich-Cholan Vira Gandagopalan makes a gift of land at Kiliyanallur in Tiruvelur nadu to this temple (ARE 233 of 1910). Kulottunga Sambuvarayan alias Alagiya Cholan makes a gift of five cows for a lamp in the 19th year of Vijaya Gandagopala (ARE 236 of 1910). The only Pandyan record found here relates to Konerinmaikondan, viz., Jatavarman Sundara Pandya and is dated in his 13th year (ARE 232 of 1910); it is inscribed on the south side of the base of the temple; it refers to a gift of money for a lamp to the temple, by a native of Vallam in Puliur kottam alias Kulottungasola valanadu. The temple is said to be in Ilambayangottur in Kanrur nadu, a subdivision of Manavir kottam, in Jayangondasola mandalam.

(EDIRILI-SOLISVARAM UDAIYA NAYANAR) TEMPLE
KARIYA PERUMAL	6
(EDIRILISOLA VINNAGAR EMPERUMAN) TEMPLE

Atti is in the Cheyyar taluk of the North Arcot district in Tamil Nadu. In ancient days this village was also known as Keralantakanallur (circa A.D. 1173, Rajadhiraja II; ARE 297 of 1912). Keralantaka Vinnagaram and Krishnarayapuram were also the names given to this place. There are two temples in this locality:

1. A Siva temple, currently called Agastisvaram and referred to in the past as Edirili-Solisvaram Udaiya Nayanar temple according to a local inscription (ARE 301 of 1912); and
2. A Vishnu temple called Kariya Perumal temple, which was known in the early days as Edirilisola-Vinnagara-Emperuman temple, according to an eighth year inscription of Vijaya Gandagopala (ARE 302 of 1912).

The Siva temple

An inscription of the 18th year of Tribhuvana chakravartin Rajadhiraja deva II records a gift of 32 cows and a bull by Niramindan alias Sedirayan, of Panangudi in Uyyakkonda valanadu of Chola mandalam to the temple of Tiruvagastisvaram Udaiyar at Atti alias Keralantaka-nallur in Perunagar-nallur, a subdivision of Venkunra kottam in Jayangondasola mandalam.

This is the earliest inscription in this temple. As Rajadhiraja II had the title of Edirilisola, it is likely to have been built during his reign and named after his surname.

This temple also contains an inscription in Tamil verse of the Pallava Chief Tondaimandalam-kondarulina Pallavandar alias Manavalapperumal, who established his authority and built a fort and capital at Sendamangalam (A.D. 1191-1213); a more detailed reference to him will be made in a later chapter. He is said to have won a great victory over his enemies at Sevur, and is described as 'the Lord of the Pennai basin, the Lord of the hill of Tiruvengadam, the conqueror of Tondai nadu by the strength of his arm etc. He was the father of Kopperunjinga (A.D. 1243-69) who dealt a deadly blow to the Chola power during the period of Rajaraja III.

The Vishnu temple

The Vishnu temple now known as that of Kariya Perumal was called Edirilisola-vinnagar-Emperumal temple, in two inscriptions of Tribhuvana Vijaya Gandagopala of Kanchi, and a local over-mighty feudatory (8th year, ARE 302 of 1912; and 18th year, ARE 303 of 1912) of the 13th century A.D. Both these inscriptions refer to gifts to the temple of Edirilisola-Vinnagar-Emperuman and the latter to a gift of land to the shrine of Krishna (Vennaikkadaiyarulina Pillai) in the Vishnu temple. There are three inscriptions of the Vijayanagara Emperor, Krishna-devaraya (A.D. 1525-26), in this temple.

Both the temples might thus have been built during the time of Rajadhiraja II, in view of their inscriptional names.

PATTISVARANATHAR TEMPLE

TIRUSATTIMUTTAM (RAJARAJAPURAM)

SIVAKOLUNDU-NATHAR

(TIRU-SATTI-MUTTAM UDAIYAR) TEMPLE

These two centres are close to Darasuram and in the ancient days formed part of Rajarajapuram and Palayarai of the Imperial Cholas. They are celebrated centres of Saivite hagiology.

Pattisvaranathar Temple

The temple of Pattisvaranathar is said to be situated in the locality called in Sambandar's Devaram hymn as Palayarai-Malapadi and the presiding deity of the temple is called Pattisvaranathar, so called because He is said to have been worshipped by Patti, one of the four daughters of the celestial cow of plenty, Kamadhenu. When Sambandar visited the place (in the seventh century A.D.), the heat was unbearable and a miracle happened. A bhutam (supernatural monster) held a canopy of pearls (muttupandal) over Sambandar to protect him from the heat of the day. The hymn on this Lord is said to have been sung by him to celebrate this event.

This place was the home of a few Saivite mathas of great prosperity and influence which had rendered valuable services to the promotion of Devaram hymns, Saivite philosophy and temple service. An inscription on the base of the sribali stone structure mentions the existence here of the Tiru-Jnana-Sambandar-tiru matham. A branch of this Tirujnana-sambandar tirumatham is said to have been established at Tiruvilimilalai in the 23rd year of Tribhuvanachakravartin Rajaraja deva (III ?). This inscription mentions a gift of land to a matham called the Alagiya-tiruch-chirrambalam Udaiyan tirumatham by a certain Jnana Siva who is said to be the disciple of Tiru-Satti-Murrattu Mudaliyar of the Tiru-Jnanasambandar-tirumatham situated in the east of the temple of Tirusattimurram Udaiya Nayanar (the Siva temple) and the Tiruk-kamakkottam Udaiya Periya Nachchiar (the Amman) temple at Rajarajapuram (Tirusattimurram) in Tirunaraiyur nadu, a sub-division of Kulottungasola valanadu (ARE 392 of 1908). There were other branches of this matham at Tirunaraiyur, Siddhisvaram during Vikrama Chola's period (ARE 164 and 177 of 1908), Tiruppalturai (Adimulesvarar temple, ARE 588 of 1908), Kovilur (Mantrapurisvarar temple, ARE 218 and 220 of 1908) and Tiruvanaikka (Sankaracharya matham, ARE 486 and 487 of 1908)*.

Pattisvaram is also closely associated with Govinda Dikshitar, the great Minister and administrator under Achyuta and Raghunatha Nayak, rulers of Tanjavur (in the late 16th and early 17th century A.D.). He was a versatile man. He was the author of Hari-vamsa-sara-charitam and the treatise on music, Sangita-sudhanidhi. He had two sons, one of whom was Yajnanarayana Dikshitar, the author of Sahitya Ratnakara, and the other was Venkatesa Makhin, the guru of Nilakantha Dikshitar, a great scholar and prolific writer. Govinda Dikshitar seems to have lived at Pattisvaram. The stone sculptures of this Minister and Philanthropist and his wife are found installed in a mandapa in front of the Amman shrine of this temple built by him. (There are stone statues also of four Nayak kings of Tanjavur.) The repairing and remodelling of the Mahamakham tank at Kumbakonam, the building of the Pushya mandapas at Tiruvaiyaru and other places on the Kaveri and the construction of the Ramasvamin temples at Kumbakonam and Srirangam are attributed to him. Thus, Pattisvaram is rich with old associations and past greatness.

The Pattisvaram temple is located in the northern street in this town-complex, close to the Tirumalairayan rivulet, and in the southern part stands the temple of Sivakkolundu-nathar of Tiru-satti-murram (or muttam). (Pls. 284-90).

*A branch of this matha is found in China.

Tiru-satti-muttam (-murram) Temple

The present-day temple of Sivakkolundu-nathar was called in the ancient days the temple of Tiru-sattimurram Udaiyar. According to an inscription of the days of Rajadhiraja II found in this temple, this place is described as being at Rajarajapuram in Tirunaraiyur nadu, a part of Kulottungasola valanadu (ARE 266 of 1927). The temple is at least as old as the days of Appar (seventh century A.D.). Parasakti (Gauri, Uma, Parvati) is said to have done penance here to win the Lord's grace, and at the end of the penance, embraced the Lord (Siva Linga) and kissed Him. There is a graphic local representation of this event in stone. The place is named Tiru-Satti (or Sakti)-muttam (meaning the kiss of Sri Sakti). Hence the modern and erroneous name, Tiru-Satti-murram.

While Appar worshipped the local deity, he prayed that he might be blessed with the placing of the Lord's sacred feet on him (puvar adich chuvadu en mer porutti vai) and with inscribing the divine feet in his heart (inmai-yun-kal en-nenjattu-eludi-vai). This prayer was fulfilled when Appar visited the neighbouring temple of Tirunallur about which he sings in his hymns at Tirunallur where there is a fine madakkoyil called the temple of Kalyanasundaresvarar. The relevant line of his hymn is: Nal-larulal tiruvadi en talai mel vaittar Nallur emperumanar nallavarey (See my Early Chola Art, Pt. I, Pls. 5 and 6, Nallur Nataraja). In his hymn there is a reference to the Lord having won him over to His grace and his having been converted from Jainism to the Saivite fold (Samanam-tavirndu-yuntan saran pugunden).

In spite of its antiquity and importance in Saiva hagiology, there are only a few inscriptions here, of the Later Cholas and of Vijayanagara rulers of the 15th century A.D. The earliest extant inscription is one on the east wall of the mandapa in front of the central shrine. It relates to the fifth year (88th day) of Rajakesari-varman Rajadhiraja deva II (with the introduction kadal sulnda) and mentions a grant of land to the temple of Tiru-Sattimurram Udaiyar at Rajarajapuram in Tirunaraiyur nadu, a part of Kulottungasola valanadu (ARE 266 of 1927). Another inscription found on the south wall of the outer prakara (the king's name and the date are lost) may also be of the days of the same king or his successor Kulottunga III. It concerns a gift of sheep and five lampstands by the famous minister of Rajadhiraja II, Vedavanam Udaiyan Karunakara devan, the Amarkon of Palaiyanur, located in Palaiyanur nadu of Jayangondasola mandalam, for perpetual lamps to Tiru-Satti-murram Udaiyar. Another gift, of the second year (102nd day) of Tribhuvanachakravartin Konerinamaikondan Kulottunga (III ?), makes a gift of money for a perpetual lamp to the temple (ARE 265 of 1927). Another inscription, of the 29th year of Kulottunga III (ARE 267 of 1927), deals with the levying of taxes on devadana lands of the temple.

On the gopuram over the second entrance to the temple, there are inscriptions of Praudadevaraya Maharaya (Saka 1369 = A.D. 1447) and Virapratapa Devaraya Maharaya (Saka 1373 = A.D. 1450). Another inscription, on the base of the gopuram (ARE 263 of 1927), mentions that the gopuram was erected by Mahamandalesvarar Gopayya deva Maharaya. No inscriptions earlier than those of the days of Rajadhiraja II are available. Perhaps they suffered damage during renovations of the temple. From the vimana devatas, we could roughly fix the age of the present fabric to the days of Sembiyan Mahadevi and the early years of Rajaraja I (about A.D. 1000).* (Pls. 291-300).

*Sembiyan Mahadevi stayed in the secondary capital of Palaiyarai when Tanjavur was the Chola capital and her son Uttama Chola and later her grand-nephew Rajaraja I were ruling from there. (For more details about Palaiyarai, see the Section on Palaiyarai).

Kulottunga III

Very few dynasties that ruled India in various spans of its history can pride themselves on having had such a succession of illustrious rulers over such a long time as can the Cholas of Tanjavur and Gangaikonda Cholapuram. With hardly any exception, from A.D. 850 onwards till A.D. 1216, over a period of 366 years, the Chola empire was ruled by giants. Kulottunga III, who ascended the throne in A.D. 1178, inheriting an empire that was solid, vast, still well-administered and where peace reigned, was to be the last of these great rulers. He was succeeded by two more of his dynasty, Rajaraja III and Rajendra III, of whom the former held very nominal sway over a truncated empire hardly extending beyond its limits as they stood in the days of Vijayalaya (who founded the dynasty), while the latter made a valiant bid, against growing odds and a powerful enemy in the Pandya rulers, to recapture the glory of the Chola empire and succeeded only in modest measure.

The prasastis of Kulottunga III, unlike those of his immediate predecessors, are historically informative and progressively richer, almost giving a chronological sequence of events. The most common, in the initial years, is one beginning with Puyal vayttu (or vaykka) valam peruga, which is borrowed from the prasastis of Rajaraja II. In his inscriptions, in addition to the prasasti, the titles of the king are added, descriptive of the wars fought and victories won. From the fourth year, we have: Maduraiyum Pandiyan Mudit-talaiyum kondaruliya. To this Ilam (Sri Lanka) is added in the 10th year, Karuvur in the 16th year (and in some inscriptions, as for instance from Kanchipuram, in the 24th year). Some other prasastis begin with: Malar mannu polil elilum, pumevi maruviya, pu maruviya tisai mugatton etc.

Kulottunga III also bore other names and titles. One of them occurring frequently in later years (after his 24th year) is Tribhuvanāvira Chola deva*. The form Tribhuvana Chola deva is also met with. Mudivalangu-sola was a name that was applied to him, after he had conquered and handed the Pandyan kingdom back to the Pandyan king. After the capture of Karuvur and the defeat of the Cheras, he called himself Solakeralan and renamed the Kongu country as Sola-kerala mandalam. Kulottunga III was also called by the name of Virarajendra Chola deva, under which name a large number of records of his period occur. He also went under other, rarer, titles, such as Neriyaichchola and Ulaguyya nayanar.

Gangaikondasolapuram continued to be the capital of the empire, though the subsidiary capitals of Tanjavur, Uraiyur, Kanchipuram and Ayirattali appear to have had their own importance.

We find frequent mention of two prominent royal Secretaries during this reign, in whose name a large number of orders are issued on behalf of the king. They are Minavan Muvendavelan who, as we saw, served even in the days of Rajadhiraja II, and Rajendrasimha Muvendavelan.

Kulottunga III was a great warrior and a great builder of temples; he was a contemporary of Ballala II of the Hoysalas of Dorasamudra (A.D. 1173-1220) and Jatavarman Kulasekhara, Vira Pandya and Vikrama Pandya of the rising Pandyan power. With the installation of Vira Pandya on the Pandyan throne, so brilliantly effected by Vedavanam Udaiyan alias Annan Pallavaraiyan, in the closing years of Rajadhiraja II's reign, one would have assumed that the Pandyan problem was settled and the Simhala king kept in his place. But again, for reasons which are not explicit, the Cholas became the allies of Vikrama Pandya, a close relative of Kulasekhara, who erstwhile had sought the help of Parakramabahu I of Sri Lanka to regain his throne. Vikrama Pandya sought the aid of the Chola emperor; we learn from an exquisite inscription of the ninth year (88th day) of Kulottunga III engraved in the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram that the Chola king supported the cause of the exiled Chief, and in the First Pandyan war (of his reign) routed the combined armies of Sri Lanka and the Pandyan king Vira Pandya (the son of Vira Pandya losing his life in the battle), captured Madurai, raised a pillar of victory at the Pandyan capital and then bestowed on Vikrama Pandya his city, his crown and his kingdom in A.D. 1187. Vira Pandya, desolate and grief-stricken, sought the assistance of the Sri Lanka king, the Chera king and other neighbouring feudatories of the Cholas, and six years after his crushing defeat marched the combined armies against the Chola emperor only to be met, routed and mauled badly at Nettur in A.D. 1193. This disaster ended Vira Pandya's six years of effort to re-establish himself as the Pandyan ruler. We generally term the Nettur battle and the connected skirmishes as the Second Pandyan war. Thus, defeated, Vira Pandya* and his Kerala allies sought succour at the feet of Kulottunga III, who seized the opportunity, pardoned the Pandyan recalcitrant Vira Pandya and crowned him king of Madurai, but as a tributary of the Chola overlord. The Kerala ruler was similarly dealt with. We gather that, with these two principalities settled, he turned his attention towards the island kingdom of Sri Lanka, defeated their army and possibly annexed the island, as claimed by him. These resounding victories were perhaps the precursors of the disasters that were to befall the Chola empire in the next few decades. Hardly had the Second Pandyan War been fought and the Chola suzerainty firmly re-established, when rumblings of disorder and uprising among the northern feudatories were being heard from the Pallava and Telugu-Choda areas. Kulottunga III gathered a massive army, marched on Kanchi (A.D. 1196) and the Telugu-Choda region, crushed the rebellion and came home triumphantly. There was unrest in Vengi due to the aggression of the Kakatiyas, who were a rising power ruling from Warangal (modern name) over a territory covering the lower middle reaches of the Godavari river. Kulottunga III claims to have marched against the Kakatiyas of Orugallu (the capital, as it was known to them) or Urangai (the Tamil name for it), captured and sacked it and returned home triumphantly (See Note 1 at the end of the Chapter). With these initial wars won, Kulottunga III entered upon a spell of peace that lasted a whole decade.

It was perhaps during these years that some of the majestic temples came into existence. Among the Later Cholas, Kulottunga III was the greatest temple-builder. Extensive gifts and benefactions were bestowed upon temples and charitable institutions. A large number of Saiva mathas flourished during the 11th, 12th and 13th centuries.

This peace was, however, only temporary and the lull in the wars was soon to terminate in the Third Pandyan War. The ferment in the Pandyan province, suppressed for a time, was simmering. Jatavarman Kulasekhara Pandya, Vikrama Pandya's son, who had, in his turn, become an exile, was unwilling to reconcile himself to the deprivation of his empire and gradually strengthened his position and declared himself independent as the king of Madurai. This provoked Kulottunga III to bitter action and he marched towards Madurai in big force, stormed Mattiyur and Kalikkottai and destroyed the combined Pandyan and Kerala forces, took Karuvur after crushing the Keralar, and triumphantly entered the city of Madurai. The inscriptions of Kulottunga III found at Seranur and Kudumiyamalai (Pudukkottai State, now district) give a vivid description of the death and destruction caused by the Chola army on the Pandyan forces and say that Kulottunga III crowned himself the Chola-Pandyan at the Pandyan Capital of Madurai, performed the virabhishekam, and made known to the world his great triumph by calling himself Tribhuvana Vira deva, 'the victor of the three worlds', paid homage at the feet of Lord Siva presiding over the temple at Tiruvalavoy (Madurai), showered precious gems and numerous jewels on Him, gilded the Indra vimana of the deity, rechristened the Pandyan country as Chola-Pandya mandalam, changed the name of Madurai and called it Mudittalai-konda-sola-puram, 'the city of the Chola who took the (Pandyan) crown'. The booty of war was used to enrich the shrine of the goddess Sivakami in the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram, of Tyagesa at Tiruvarur and of Tribhuvanesvarar (Kampaharesvarar), the Lord of the temple newly built and consecrated by him at Tribhuvanam. Finally, he gave the Pandyan kingdom to the defeated Kulasekhara Pandya, along with his army, horses and elephants. After this victory, he called himself in his prasastis, "Tribhuvana Chakravartin Tribhuvana Vira deva, the conqueror of Madurai, Ilam and Karuvur, who took the crown of the Pandya, and celebrated virabhishekam and vijayabhishekam and returned to his capital to sit on the hero's throne named Vira Simhasanam'. This third battle of Madurai (about A.D. 1205) paved the way for growing bitterness against the Cholas in the minds of the Pandyan rulers. (Pls. 352-3).

Jatavarman Kulasekhara writhed in agony at this utter defeat and humiliation at the Chola hands and sank to his death after ten years of oblivion; and in A.D. 1216, his brother Maravarman Sundara Pandya I, a bitter man, determined to wreak vengeance on the Chola power, ascended the throne at Madurai. In a very short span of two years, he mustered a huge army and invaded the Chola kingdom. The prasasti of Maravarman Sundara Pandya gives a graphic description of the invasion. Determined to "exterminate the seal of the Tiger (the Chola emblem) from the land of the Kaveri and establish in its place the seal of the Fish (the Pandyan emblem)”, heading a force comprising turbulent elephants and spirited horses, he razed to the ground the Chola citadels of Tanjavur and Uraiyur and destroyed the Chola authority altogether. The inscription says that he bloodied the quiet waters of the lakes and rivers in the Chola country, destroyed halls and forts, towers and dance halls, buildings and palaces, and looted the treasuries and caused a river of tears to flow from the eyes of the queens of the opposing kings, ploughed the enemy territory with plough-shares drawn by donkeys (a symbolic assertion of capture of enemy territory) and vented in full his pent-up anger against the Cholas. He drove the Chola king into the forest, entered the Chola capital of Ayirattali (alias Mudi-konda-sola-puram), ‘the city surrounded by a gold-plated wall of enclosure that rose to the very skies’, and performed the virabhishekam (the ceremony of the anointment of a hero) seated on the throne in the coronation pavilion known as Sola-valavan, and declared himself the king of all Lords—with only his ‘sharp wheels and red shoulders’ as his support. Then he proceeded to Tiruppuliyur (Chidambaram), paid homage at the feet of Nataraja and Sivakama Sundari and then went to Ponnamaravati, ‘the city of lakes choked with lotuses that attracted the buzzing bees in the early morning, who woke the sleepy swans from their nightly slumber’, where Kulottunga III and his queen, who had hidden themselves in the outskirts in shame at their defeat, came forth with their son Rajaraja (III) offering to name him after the Pandya. In a poignant ceremony, Sundara Pandya bestowed the captured empire back on the Chola monarch, the ceremonial bestowal being accompanied by the pouring of water, and gave him back his capital, his seal of authority and the title of ‘Solapati’ and sent him (Kulottunga III) back.

This (prasasti) proves that the Pandyan ruler paid the grand Chola emperor back in his own coin, and repeated at Ponnamaravati the ceremonial disgracing of the enemy enacted by Kulottunga III at the Pandyan capital of Madurai a few years earlier.

Maravarman Sundara Pandya assumed the title of ‘Sonadu-konda Sundara Pandyan’, i.e., ‘Sundara Pandya who took the Chola country' and, since he bestowed the kingdom back on the Chola emperor, he also later assumed the title of 'Sonadu-valangiya Sundara Pandyan', i.e., 'Sundara Pandyan who gave back the Chola country'.

The restoration of the Chola kingdom might have been partially in the tradition of the rivalry between the Chola and the Pandya rulers. Kulottunga III conquered Madurai and gave it back to them, so this war of revenge fought by Sundara Pandya was more to wipe out the humiliation than to annex the Chola domain to his empire. In this, Sundara Pandya signally succeeded. But apart from that reason, perhaps there was yet another factor that guided Sundara Pandya in returning the kingdom to the vanquished monarch. For that, we have to look to the north of the Chola empire. Ballala II (A.D. 1173 to 1220) who was ruling the Hoysala kingdom was the contemporary of Maravarman Sundara Pandya I and Kulottunga III; one of his principal queens was Cholamadevi, a Chola princess. So there should have been close and intimate (marital) ties between the Hoysalas and the Cholas. Thus, when the Chola empire was threatened soon after the accession of Maravarman Sundara Pandya, Ballala's son Vira Narasimha came down as far south as Tiruvarangam (in A.D. 1217) to demonstrate his support for the Cholas. From another record, we gather that Ballala II had, among others, the titles of 'Sola-rajya-Pratishthacharya' and 'Pandya-gaja-kesari'—'the Establisher (preserver) of the Chola kingdom' and 'the lion to the Pandyan elephant'. Narasimha also claims a similar title, 'Sola-kula-rakshaka', 'the protector of the Chola family'. From these, one can infer that at the hour of Chola defeat at the hands of the Pandyas, the Hoysalas must have tried to buttress the prestige of the defeated relative, and Maravarman as an act of political expediency must have given back the conquered empire to Kulottunga III (See Note 1 at the end of the Chapter).

Almost overnight, the Chola kingdom in almost the last year (A.D. 1216) of the reign of Kulottunga III who 'took Madurai, Ilam (Sri Lanka), Karuvur, and the crown of the Pandya' and who performed the ceremonies of virabhishekam and vijayabhishekam and crowned himself Tribhuvanavira deva, lost its greatness, its power and authority and the enviable position it had held for more than three and a half centuries. The empire that at its zenith extended from the Ganga in the north to Ilam (Sri Lanka) in the south, from Mahodai (Cranganore) in the west to Kadaram (Kedah in the Malay Peninsula) in the east, lay prostrate at Ponnamaravati at the feet of the Pandyan hero. The Chola kingdom in its three and a half centuries of existence from A.D. 850 to A.D. 1216 (the date of Kulottunga III's retirement) had known no serious reverses except the stray ones such as occurred during the days of Parantaka I, viz., the loss of Tondaimandalam in A.D. 949 to the Rashtrakuta king Krishna III. The great emperor, the Lord of the three worlds, Kulottunga III, did not survive this humiliation long; he ceased to be the ruler, after the shame of Ponnamaravati and the crowning of his son as the Chola king Rajaraja III in A.D. 1216. He removed himself from the administration and died two years later (A.D. 1218). We do not have any records of his time beyond his 40th year, viz., A.D. 1218.

The reign of Kulottunga III was one of the many glorious chapters in the evolution of South Indian Art and Architecture. Blessed with a long reign of nearly 40 years, and succeeding to an empire which had been presided over by Kulottunga II and Rajaraja II, two great patrons of the arts, Kulottunga III added greatly to the already large number of temples in the kingdom. His greatest contribution was, of course, the grand temple of Tribhuvanesvaram at Tribhuvanam, but, apart from that, his additions to existing temples in the form of new shrines and pavilions were numerous and his gifts of jewellery were also noteworthy.

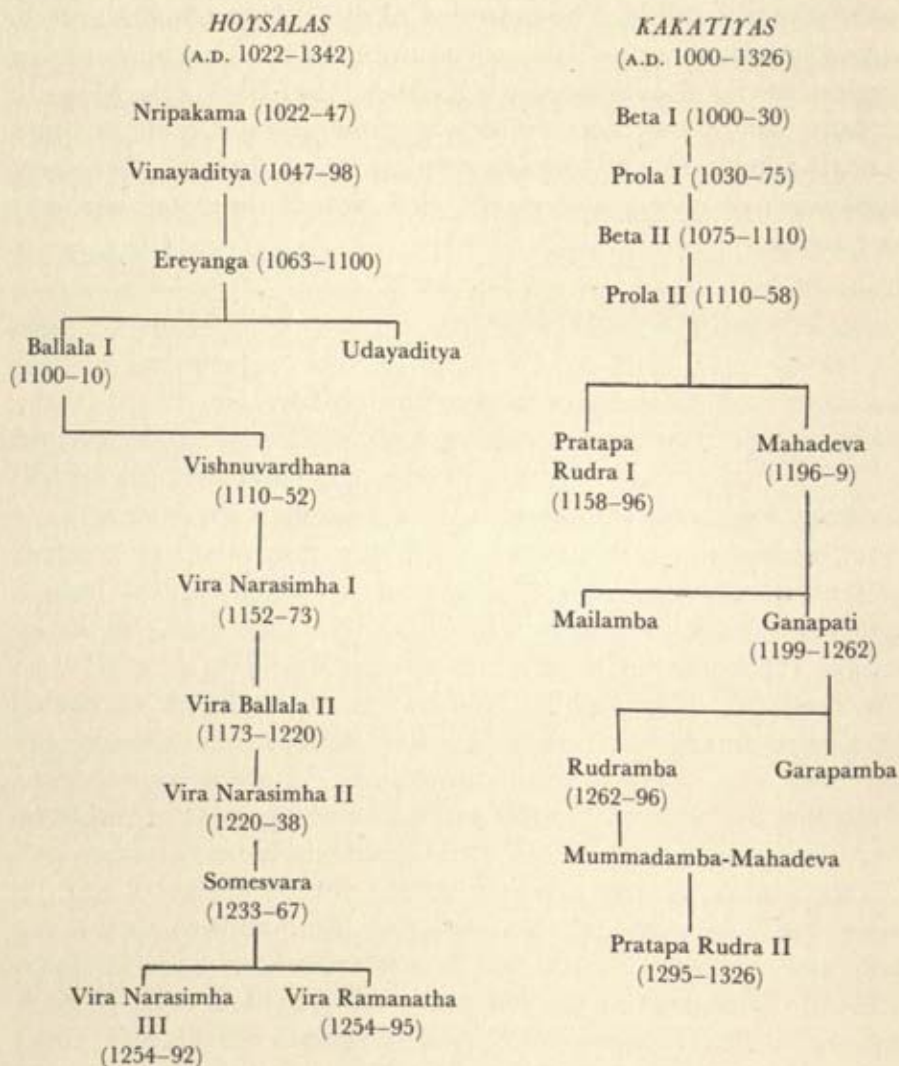

The feudatories of the Cholas played a very important part in the administration and protection of the empire. They were powerful local representatives of the central authority, deriving their strength from, and in return helping to strengthen, the emperor. During the closing days of Kulottunga III, however, the balance of power between these Chieftains and the emperor began to be unsettled and during his successor's time, their strength increased beyond limits. At this stage, it would be necessary to take note of them, for their role in temple-building activity too was none-too-insignificant (See Note 2 for further details).

Elements of Disruption of the Empire

In spite of the outward glory and expansion of the Chola empire to its farthest limits, the signs of decay and disintegration were already visible. The defection of the Telugu-Chodas and the growing importance of Chola feudatories of the Tondaimandalam region, the Sambuvarayars, the Kadavas, the Chiefs of the Magadai country and others were visible symptoms of a weakening empire. Local compacts and non-aggression pacts became necessary, indicative of unrest and revolt (See Note 3 for details on such compacts).

NOTE 1

To facilitate a comparative study of the dynastic disputes and relationships, a chart of the other ruling dynasties of the era is given below:

NOTE 2

CHOLA FEUDATORIES

Among the many feudatories who wielded great authority and power during this period may be mentioned the following:

1. The Magadai Chiefs
2. The Malaiyaman Chiefs
3. The Adigaimans
4. The Kadavas
5. The Telugu-Chodas
6. The Sengenī, Sambuvaraya, and Chediraya Chiefs.

THE MAGADAI CHIEFS

In the old days, a region partially covering the districts of Salem and North Arcot was known as the Magadai mandalam, and during the reign of Kulottunga III was ruled by a powerful Chief bearing the name of Ponparappina Magadesan. In the 35th year of Tribhuvana Viradeva, Rajarajadevan Ponparappinan alias Vanakkovariyan of Aragalur gilded the central shrine and gave a gift of three villages to the Arunachalesvarar temple at Tiruvannamalai (vide inscription on the gopuram, left of the entrance—ARE 557 of 1902; also see page 94 of ARE for 1924–25). In fact, he acquired his name consequent on his having so gilded the srivimana of this temple. The members of this family have a number of inscriptions to their credit in this region and have been reputed for the temples they built in this area and the battles in which they fought. One of the ministers of this Chief constructed a mandapa in the Kilur temple (see my Early Chola Temples, A.D. 907 to 985, pp. 85 to 88). His own contributions to the Tiruvannamalai temple are numerous. He is said to have ruled with his headquarters at Aragalur, in the present-day Salem district, from which he derived his alternate name of Aragalur Udaiyan. He was also known as Rajarajadevan. We shall see later that another chieftain of the same family built a temple for Sri Kailasapati at Kugaiyur.

THE MALAIYAMAN CHIEFS

The Chiefs of this family ruled from Kilur or Kilaiyur near Tirukkoyilur. They bore varying titles indicating their connection with Koval which was the ancient name of Tirukkoyilur (Tiruk-Koval-ur); they had close contacts with the Bana rulers of the adjoining area, the Pallavaraiyars and many others; there were close marital relations among these various groups. We have already seen the vital role they played in the preservation of the integrity of the Chola kingdom.

THE ADIGAIMANS

While dealing with the period of Kulottunga I, we had occasion to mention that the region of Gangavadi, which was conquered and made a province of the Chola empire by Rajaraja I, was being administered on behalf of the emperor by the ancient line of Chiefs known as the Adigaimans with their capital at Tagadur, identified with modern Dharmapuri in the Salem district. The Adigaimans were traditional rulers of the region known as the Kongu nadu, and it was an Adigaiman or Adiyaman Chief, who, on his refusing to surrender the region to the growing power of the Hoysalas under Bittiga Vishnuvardhana (A.D. 1100-52), was challenged to battle at Talekkad by the Hoysala Dandanayaka Gangaraja and defeated in A.D. 1116. With that the Gangavadi region passed out of the hands of the Cholas for a while. It would however be seen that during the early years of Kulottunga I's successor, Vikrama Chola, the Adigaiman Chiefs succeeded in taking back, if not all the portions, at least a sizable part of the Gangavadi region. During the middle of the 12th century, we hear of a Rajarajadeva ruling this region, in which were included portions of the Kolar and Chittoor districts as well. This Adigaiman Chief must have been a contemporary of Rajaraja II, not only on the basis of his name but also from the fact that Vidugadalagiya Perumal, who was his successor, was a contemporary of Kulottunga III. The later Chief boasts of being the Lord of Ten (southern) Tagadai and the conqueror of the land of the Kadava, the Magada and the Ganga. There is likely to be some truth in this tall claim, as we find that Laddigam, which was a part of the Ganga region, has a number of his inscriptions. In an inscription dated in the 22nd year of Kulottunga III, this Chief claims to be the Lord of the three rivers, the Palar, the Pennai and the Kaveri and to have built a temple of stone at Sirukottai on the banks of the Pennai (vide Kambayanallur, ARE 8 of 1900).

THE KADAVAS

More powerful than all the above Chiefs were the Kadavas, whose growing might was hardly recognised in the days of Rajaraja II or even of Rajadhiraja II; in fact, even in the days of Kulottunga III, they were loyal feudatories of the Chola king and it was only in the disturbed days after the defeat of Kulottunga III at the hands of the growing Pandyan power, that the Kadava Chiefs saw visions of a revival of Pallava power in the south. They all but succeeded under the dynamic leadership of Kopperunjinga, whose ambitions were thwarted only by the growing rivalry between the Pandyas and the Hoysalas. We shall see more of this under Rajaraja III.

THE TELUGU CHODAS

A small line of petty chieftains came to prominence at Pottapi, identified with a village of the same name in the Pullampet taluk of the Cuddapah district in Andhra Pradesh. The first of them was Madhurantaka Pottapi Chola, evidently so named out of some connection with a conquest of Madurai and possibly because he also founded Pottapi. During Vikrama Chola's period, we hear of Beta, the first historical figure of the line, whose son was Erasiddhi, who in turn had three sons, Nallasiddha alias Manmasiddha, Beta and Tamusiddha. The contemporary of Kulottunga III was Nallasiddharasa who, ruling from Nellore, acknowledged the suzerainty of the Chola monarch (ninth year of Kulottunga III). This Chief and others made many gifts during this period to the temples of Tiruppalaivanam, Kalahasti and Nandalur. As late as A.D. 1213 we find the Telugu Chodas acknowledging the suzerainty of the Chola king.

This review of the various feudatory Chiefs of the Chola kingdom during the reign of Kulottunga III would go to show that in spite of the mounting difficulties the emperor had to face and the debilitating wars with the Pandyas he had to carry on, he succeeded in preserving his inherited empire more or less intact. It is likely that, towards the end of his rule, there were inroads into Vengi by the growing power of the Kakatiyas, whose powerful king Ganapati had just come to the throne (A.D. 1199).

Elements of Disruption of the Empire

An inscription dated in the 11th year of Kulottunga III found at Madam registers a political compact (ARE 254 of 1919) between Kudal Arasanarayanan Alappirandan Kadavarayan and Sengeni Virasolan Attimallan alias Kulottungasola Sambuvarayan whereby both swore that they should not do anything that would be detrimental to the interests of either; that the latter should not enter into any alliance with Alappirandan Edirilisola Sambuvarayan; that he should confine himself to certain specified tracts of the country, and if these were transgressed, the mudalis would send up arms and horses and cause him injury; that, if Alappirandan Edirilisola Sambuvarayan inflicted any trouble on Kulottungasola Sambuvarayan, Kadavarayan would support him, that in case Alappirandan Edirilisola Sambuvarayan ran away from his hill (residence) leaving behind him all arms, Kulottungasola Sambuvarayan should have possession of them subject to the condition that he would not shelter or form any alliance with the other; and that, if Kadavarayan allied himself with the relatives of Kulottungasola Sambuvarayan and with Alappirandan Edirilisola Sambuvarayan against the interests of Kulottungasola Sambuvarayan, he (Kadavarayan) would demean himself to the position of "carrying the sandals of his enemies and of eating the chewed betel leaves thrown out from their mouths."

There was another such agreement for mutual help between Kovan Rajaraja Nilagangaraiyan on the one side and Rajaraja Sambuvarayan Jananatha Muvendaraiyar and Ulaguyyakkondasola Kadavarayar on the other pledging themselves to help one another in times of need (Tiruvamattur, ARE 56 of 1922).

There is a reference in the 18th regnal year of Kulottunga III to the renewal of a political compact between Rajarajadevan Ponparappinan Vanakkovaraiyan and Siyan Udaiya Pillai Akalanka Nadalvan (Tiruvanaikkaval: ARE 483 of 1908). A few more similar compacts are found to have been formed during this period.

Temples of Kulottunga III's Time

TIRUVAKKARAI

1 CHANDRAMOULISVARAR TEMPLE (MANDAPA)

Tiruvakkarai is a village on the banks of the Varaha (Gingee) river and lies about 19 km. from Villupuram on the Mailam-Gingee road. It is in the Villupuram taluk of the South Arcot district. It has a temple which has been in existence from the days of Aditya I. It is a stone temple, then known only as that of Karralip-perumal-adigal.

In the campus of this temple there are the following two shrines:

i) A ruined Siva shrine, called in the inscriptions that of Sivalokamudaiya-Paramasvamin, built by Sembiyan Mahadeviyar: vide a 16th year inscription of Rajaraja I (ARE 200 of 1904).

ii) A Vishnu shrine, dedicated to Varadaraja Perumal. It is mentioned in the Sanskrit portion of a bilingual Grantha-Tamil inscription of the second year of Udaiyar Adhirajendra deva, found on the west wall of the mandapa in front of the shrine, that the srivimana, which had been previously built of brick by Kochchola (i.e., Kochchenganan of the late Sangam period) was reconstructed of stone (ARE 206 of 1904).

We are concerned here with a multi-pillared mandapa in the second prakara of the temple. On the south wall of the mandapa, there is a second year inscription of Kulottunga Chola deva 'who took Madurai and the crowned head of the Pandya' (i.e., Kulottunga III), recording the building of the mandapa by a certain Ammaiappan Gandara-Suriyan Sambuvarayan, 'who took the Pandya Country' (ARE 190 of 1904). This is a hundred-pillared hall and not a thousand-pillared hall as has been wrongly mentioned in the records (vide my correction in Early Chola Art, Pt. I, pp. 193-95 and also Early Chola Temples, pp. 201-2). This mandapa could thus be dated as belonging to A.D. 1180. Gandara Suriyan was the builder of the outer gopuram also. (Pl. 301).

Tirumananjeri, which is in the Mayuram taluk in the Tanjavur district, is about 21 km. from the town of Mayuram and about 5 km. from Kuttalam and Tiruvelvikkudi. There are two fine Chola temples here, one dedicated to Udvahanathasvamin and the other to Madhyannesvarar. I have already dealt with the Udvahanathasvamin temple in my Early Chola Temples (A.D. 907-985) (pp. 188-190).

Here we are concerned with the Madhyannesvarar temple. On the north wall of the central shrine of this temple, there is an inscription dated in the third year of Kulottunga III which mentions a gift of a night lamp to the temple of Tiru-Edirkolpadi Udaiyar in Kurukkai nadu, by Arasukkadiyan Tirunilakandan Seraman Tolan of Kiranur, who built the temple of stone (ARE 27 of 1904).

From a record of the seventh year of the Chola king Tribhuvanachakravartin Rajarajadeva III, we gather that Vimappillai, the wife of Kannamangalam udaiyar and daughter of Puliur udaiyan Adittadevaraiyan of Milalai nadu, gave money and lands for building the shrine of 'Tirukkamakkottam udaiya nachchiar', a monastery (guhāi) called after Alalasundarar for the use of Pugalivendar of Pundi, and for offerings, lamps, etc. (ARE 28 of 1914).

Thus this temple is a foundation of the third year of Kulottunga III, and should have come into existence before A.D. 1181. The Amman shrine was added before the seventh year of his successor Rajaraja III (A.D. 1223).

TIRUVENNAINALLUR

3 KRIPAPURISVARAR (ARUL-TURAI NAYANAR) TEMPLE

Tiruvonnainallur, in the Tirukkoyilur taluk of the South Arcot district, is a famous Saiva centre known for its association with the attainment of sainthood by the Tamil Saint Sundaramurti Nayanar. It is about 6.5 km. from the railway station by that name on the Southern Railway and is about 20 km. from Villupuram in a south-westerly direction. Tirukkoyalur (modern Tirukkoyilur) is about 22 km. to its west.

There are two well-known temples in this village, one associated with the Tamil saint Sundarar, known as that of Arul-turai Nayanar (Kripapurisvarar), and the other associated with the Later Pallava chiefs of Sendamangalam, known as the Vaikuntha Perumal temple. The river Pennai runs close by the former.

Close by is a village now known as Puttur which, according to local tradition, was the scene of the scheduled marriage of the Saint Sundarar that did not take place. Hence its name of 'Manam-tavirnda-puttur' ('where the marriage was stopped'). The local tradition goes that Sundaramurti's marriage was fixed to be celebrated at Puttur, and just before the ceremony, Lord Siva in the guise of an old brahmana stormed into the marriage function and claimed the Saint as his serf and hence not entitled to marry; Sundaramurti and those assembled strongly disputed this statement and sought proof, and after disputation and exchange of angry words, they all agreed to proceed to Tiruvonnainallur, which was where, the old man claimed, he belonged, to seek proof of his contention. The brahmanas of Tiruvonnainallur did not accept the old man's contention and laughed at him, observing that they were hearing for the first time of a brahmana being a serf of another brahmana. The story goes that on insistence by the old man that he was a resident of Tiruvennainallur and that the young man about to marry was his serf, the assembled men demanded of him to show them his house in the village; the old man, the young man and the assembled disbelievers walked into the temple of Tiruvarutturai, and, all of a sudden, the old man disappeared. When they all shouted for him, there appeared before them Lord Siva on His bull-mount (vahana) in the company of Parvati; He recalled to Sundarar his earlier declaration of total surrender to Him, and bestowed His grace on him. (We have also dealt with this episode in Chapter 2 of Middle Chola Temples, pp. 31-32). The deity in the Tiruvennainallur temple is therefore called Taduttatkonda nathar ('the Lord Who bestowed divine grace after apparently placing obstacles in the way of the devotee'). The Amman is called Verkanni Ammai. It may be mentioned that there is a village about 2.5 km. from this place, called Taduttatkondavur.

The central shrine consists of a garbhagriha with a tiruch-churrunadai, and an ardhamandapa supported by two pillars. The vimana is in two tiers. On the southern wall of the ardhamandapa, there is a niche containing a fine image of Bhikshatanar and on the northern wall is an image of Durga. On the garbhagriha walls are Dakshinamurti in the south, Lingodbhavar in the west and Brahma in the north. The Lingodbhavar image in the rear niche has the usual swan on the top and varaha at the bottom of the opening, and in the middle Siva with malu and deer. Adjoining the ardhamandapa is a mahamandapa with finely carved pillars in four rows of six pillars to a row and at the eastern entrance to it is a pair of dvarapalas. On the southern wall of this mandapa (which is closed on all sides except for the entrance from the east), there is a beautifully carved decorative window. On the northern side of this hall, in a chamber with a projecting landing in front of it, is a fine set of bronzes of Seraman, Manikkavachakar, Sundarar, Paravai Sangiliyar, Chandesvarar, Vinayakar, Subrahamanyar, Sokkar and Chandrasekharar.

Obviously a later addition, the mukhamandapa which is multi-pillared is noteworthy for some special features; on the roof of this mandapa is a shrine for Sundaramurti, in the form of a cubicle with a two-tier vimana over it. This hall would seem to be assignable to the days of Rajaraja II.

This entire complex of buildings is enclosed by a tiruch-churumaligai with a wide circumambulatory passage. In the southwest of this courtyard is a shrine for Ganapati, in the west one for Subrahmanya, and, in the north-west, what was earlier a shrine for Jyeshtha (one of the Parivaradevatas) is now used to house Lakshmi. In the platform to the south is a panel of Saptamatrikas in stone.

Outside the first wall of enclosure is a second one on whose eastern wall is the five-tiered gopuram. In the north-eastern corner of the second prakara is a big mandapa which would appear to have been a 100-pillared one, but, its front portion having collapsed, only sixty-two pillars supporting the rest of the hall still stand. It is called the 'valakkuraitta mandapam'—'the mandapa where the disputation took place', obviously a reference to the argument between the old stranger and the brahmanas of Tiruvennainallur on the former's claims over Sundaramurti as his serf.

There is an inscription on the jagatippadai on the south side of the east face of the inner gopuram, which reads as follows:

"Svasti Sri tribhuvanachakravartigal Kulottungasola devarkku yandu 3-avadu Rajaraja valanattu Tirumunaippadi Tiruvennainallur nattu piramadeyam Tiruvennainallur Udaiyar Atkonda devarkku it-tirugopuravasal seyvittan Kudal Mohan Alappirandan Arasanarayanana Kadavarayan."

This confirms that this gopuram was built before the third year of Kulottunga III (A.D. 1181) by one of the Later Pallava Chiefs, Kudal Mohan Alappirandan Arasanarayanan alias Kadavarayan. There is a record of the 32nd year of a Sambhuvarayan on the north face of the entrance passage of the main gopuram, and another of the 18th year of Kulottunga III. (Pls. 302-7).

(AMMAN SHRINE)

Valuvur in the Mayuram taluk of the Tanjavur district is a small village near Mayuram, a railway station on the main railway line from Madras to Tiruchi. Here is a celebrated Saiva temple called that of Tiru-Virattanam Udaiyar. It is one of the *ashta Virattana temples celebrated in Tamil hagiology as centres where Siva exhibited great deeds of valour. Valuvur is connected with the overthrow of the asura known by the name of Gajasura.

However, this place is not sung by any of the Nayanmars. But Appar refers to this temple as a Vaippu-sthalam—a place referred to in hymns on other shrines or places, without having any hymns on its own self. In his Kshetrakovai, he refers to this temple as Valuvur Virattam (not Virattanam) and in the Adaivu Tiruttandagam, as Valuvai Virattam. Therefore the temple should have existed in some form even in the seventh century A.D.

However, the temple would seem to have lost all its ancient features as the earliest records inscribed on the walls of the central shrine of the temple relate to the 11th and 15th years of Rajaraja II (ARE 418 and 419 of 1912). This is a stone temple. Most of the inscriptions are found on the walls of the mandapa in front of the central shrine. Three of them are found on the gopuram in front of the temple.

On the south wall of the central shrine, there is a partly damaged inscription of Parakesarivarman alias Tribhuvanachakravartin Rajaraja deva II, dated in his 11th year, mentioning a gift of money for lamps to the temple of Virattanam Udaiyar at Valuvur, a brahmadeya of Tiruvalundur nadu which was a district of Jayangondasola valanadu. This inscription makes a reference to Periya devar Vikrama Chola (ARE 418 of 1912). In a 15th year inscription of the same ruler, a gift of money for two lamps and two lamp-stands is recorded. One of the lamp-stands was given by a native of SIRRARKADU in ARKATTU KURRAM of Pandyakulasani valanadu, for the merit of one KUNDAVAI (ARE 419 of 1912). There is a fifth year inscription of the days of Rajadhiraja II found on the south wall of the mandapa in front of the central shrine (built in the middle) mentioning a gift of money by a native of Mulangudi in Vela nadu, a subdivision of Kulottungasola valanadu, for getting the Tiruvembavai recited before the image of Vadavurāli Nayanar (Manikkavachakar) in the temple, on Margali Tiruvadirai festival and also for conducting the festival in the month of Panguni (ARE 421 of 1912). Another inscription of the 15th year of the same ruler, Rajakesarivarman alias Tribhuvana-chakravartin Rajadhirajadeva II, mentions a gift of money for purchasing land to maintain a lamp in the temple, by a native of Tiyangudi in Tiruvarur kurram, a subdivision of Geyamanikka valanadu. There is a mention in this record of the 16th year of Rajaraja II (ARE 428 of 1912).

There are a number of inscriptions of the days of Kulottunga III. The earliest is dated in his second year (A.D. 1180) and is about a gift of money for a lamp by a native of Modapakkam in Surattur nadu, a subdivision of Puliur kottam alias Kulottungasola valanadu in Jayangondasola mandalam (ARE 427 of 1912). In the next year of the same ruler, 'Parakesarivarman alias Tribhuvana-chakravartin Virarajendradeva' (third year, A.D. 1181), there is an inscription on the south wall of the mandapa (built in the middle) relating to a land gift by purchase, for offerings to the image of Vadavur Nayanar (Manikkavachakar) set up in the temple of Tiruvirattanam Udaiyar by a native of Mulangudi in Vela nadu, a subdivision of Kulottungasola valanadu, and it also records a gift of money for other articles required for worship (ARE 420 of 1912).

On the wall of the north verandah of the first prakara, there is an inscription, which mentions the construction, by this king's fifth year, of the shrine of the goddess in the north-west corner of the north verandah by Ekavachakan Ulagukanvidutta Perumal alias Vanakkovaraiyar, the Chief of Tunda nadu in Mudigondasola valanadu. It also records a gift of money in the eighth year of the king for purchasing land and maintaining worship in the same shrine (ARE 429 of 1912). After almost three decades, we get another record of the same ruler, dated in his 33rd year, where he is called Tribhuvanavira deva, mentioning his conquest of Madurai, Ilam and Karuvur and the celebrations of virabhishekam and vijayabhishekam. It relates to a gift of money by a brahmana lady to the shrine of Tiruchchattimurram Udaiyar consecrated by her in the 29th year of the king in the temple of Tiru-Virattanam Udaiyar at Valuvur (ARE 423 of 1912).

Another record, of the Pandyan period, mentions that a tenant of the temple absconded without paying his dues, and the amount was recovered from the person who stood surety for him, by selling his land (ARE 426 of 1912, of Jatavarman Sundara Pandya's fifth year).

Straddling both sides of the entrance to the main gopuram, an inscription records the construction of the gopuram and the prakara wall by one Alagapperumal Pillai, son of Gangeyar Ganapati nayinar Pillai of Nallavur in Irungolappadi nadu (ARE 430 of 1912). On the four sides of the same gopuram is another record mentioning the setting up of an icon of Bhikshatanamurti (see plate 198 of my Middle Chola Temples), the main gopuram, the prakara wall and the street by the same donor (ARE 431 of 1912).

From these inscriptional data we may conclude that:

- 1) the central shrine could be assigned to the early years of the reign of Rajaraja II, though there is no foundation inscription;
- 2) an image of Vadavur Nayanar was set up in the temple by the fifth regnal year of Rajadhiraja II;
- 3) by the fifth year of Kulottunga III, a shrine for the goddess was constructed in the northwest corner of the verandah of the temple by Ekavachakan Ulagukanvidutta Perumal alias Vanakkovaraiyar, the Chief of Tunda nadu in Mudigondasola valanadu;
- 4) a shrine for Tiruchchattimurram Udaiyar was consecrated in the 29th year of Kulottunga III (A.D. 1207) by a brahmana lady; and
- 5) in the post-Chola period, one Alagapperumal Pillai constructed the main gopuram and the prakara wall, set up an image of Bhikshatanamurti, and christened one of the streets after his name.

The original temple consists of the garbhagriha and an ardhamandapa; the srivimana is dvi-tala; the sikhara and the griva are octagonal in shape. The devakoshta niches house rather poor specimens of sculptures. The deities are the usual ones: Ganapati and Durga on the walls of the ardhamandapa and Dakshinamurti, Lingodbhavar and Brahma on the walls of the garbhagriha; the devakoshtas have makara-toranas adorning their top, with deities in the gadhas. The tiruch-churru-maligai round the temple has two rows of pillars supporting the roof of the peristyle. The temple is enclosed by a wall with a gopuram at the main entrance to the prakara.

There are a number of very fine bronzes in this temple. The best of them all is a marvel of casting, the piece representing Siva as the destroyer of Gajasura. It is a grandly conceived piece of metal with the aureole taking the shape of the elephant which has been shown with the head and trunk at the feet of the Lord, the forelegs as the two ends of the aureole and the hind legs held aloft in the upper part of the aureole. A twisted tail is shown to the proper left of the top of the prabha. The two top arms of this eight-armed Siva icon in atibhanga posture hold the elephant hide aloft; the other right arms wield the damaru, the sword and the spear (sula) and the left arms wield the snake, the shield and the skull cap (kapala). The kapala-mala (skull-garland) reaches down to the right foot resting on the elephant head (See plate 199 of Middle Chola Temples). The other metals found in this temple are of Somaskandar, Bhikshatanar, Nandikesvarar and Ayyanar, which are illustrated in my Middle Chola Temples (pls. 197, 198, 200 and 201).

SOMANATHESVARAR TEMPLE

Achyutamangalam is a village in the Nannilam taluk of the Tanjavur district and is about 5 km. from Nannilam, and 2 km. east of Sri Vanchiyam. The temple of Somanathesvarar here is associated with the famous religious leader Udaiyar Svamidevar (from the Radha country).

The temple which faces east consists of the garbhagriha (5.00 m. \times 3.85 m.), the antarala (2.60 m. long), the snapana mandapa (which projects 4.10 m. forward), the ardhamandapa (8.60 m. \times 8.10 m.) and the mukhamandapa (8.60 m. \times 10.40 m.). Nartana Ganapati and Durga occupy the antarala niches, and Dakshinamurti, Lingodbhavar and Brahma occupy the garbhagriha niches. There is an entrance to the snapana mandapa from the northern side. The ardha- and mukha- mandapas constitute a single block with common flanking walls, which have a number of niches, housing Dakshinamurti, Bhikshatanar, Kankalamurti, Ardhanari and Vishnu on the north wall from west to east; on the southern side are a window, Urdhva Tandava, a window, Kalasamharamurti and an empty niche. The temple is encompassed by two walls of enclosure. There are two subsidiary shrines: one for Subrahmanyar at the rear of the garbhagriha, and another for Chandikesvarar at its usual place.

The garbhagriha rises over an upapitham 95 cm. high, and an adhishthanam, another 75 cm. high.

On the north wall of the Somanathesvarar temple, there is an inscription, whose date is given in the Saka era, mentioning that one Srikantha Sambhu of the Sandilya gotra and the brother of a certain Gosvami Misra belonging to the Radha country, consecrated the deity Somanatha in this temple (ARE 402 of 1925). This date works out to A.D. 1182-83 (Saka 1104, Pushya) and corresponds to the fourth or the fifth regnal year of Kulottunga III. We may therefore conclude that this temple is a foundation of the fifth year of Kulottunga III (i.e., A.D. 1183).

We have a record of 'Kulottunga Choladeva who was pleased to take Madurai', dated in his 11th year, on the front gopuram; so we may conclude that the entire temple came into existence at or about the same time, as one integrated complex (ARE 411 of 1925). From a 21st year record of Kulottunga III, we learn of the royal ratification of the remission of taxes on the houses erected in a street then recently formed in place of the old one which was sparsely inhabited and not wide enough for the procession of the god to pass through (ARE 408 of 1925). The temple authorities also agreed to meet the expenses of repairs to their houses built in the new street, according to a 29th year record of the same king (ARE 407 of 1925). From a record of the fourth year of Rajaraja III we gather that a certain individual made a gift of $13\frac{1}{4}$ velis of land in certain specified proportions, for the merit of his father Visaya-laya Muttaraiyan, for repairs to the temples of i) Somanatha devar and ii) Visvanatha devar of Somanathamangalam, and iii) Visvedhika-Vivikisvaram Udaiyar at Somanatha chaturvedi-mangalam. There is a 20th year record of Rajaraja III which refers to the redress made to the son of one Rajaraja peraraiyan, who had suffered punishment wrongly in consequence of a decision given in a dispute between the villagers of Somanathamangalam and Somanatha chaturvedimangalam on the one side and Sidakka-mangalam on the other.

We have another inscription on the north wall of the same temple, belonging to the fifth year (376th day) of 'Tribhuvana-chakravartin Rajendradeva', which registers the ulvari (order) given by the king for a piece of land granted as a tax-free devadana in Sivapadasekhara-mangalam in Panaiyur nadu, a subdivision of Kulottungasola valanadu, for opening a tirumadai-vilagam, digging a tank and establishing a flower-garden in the temple of Somanatha-devar built by Udaiyar Svamidevar in the village (ARE 393 of 1925). There are two more records in continuation of the above inscription, which belong to the days of a Tribhuvana-chakravartin Konerinmaikondan but whose dates are not given; they could however be easily attributed to the same ruler, Rajendradeva. The first one (ARE 394 of 1925) records the royal order to grant the ulvari for the possession of the land mentioned above, from the sixth year of the king; the next one, built in in the middle and engraved in continuation of the last two records, deals with the provision made by Svamidevar for the supply of oil to the temple at Achyutamangalam alias Sivapadasekhara-mangalam, from the sixth year of the king, by raising taxes on each oil-mill in the tirumadai-vilagam newly formed round the temple (ARE 395 of 1925). There are two records of 'Tribhuvana-chakravartin Virarajendra' dated in the seventh year, 41st day and seventh year, 49th day respectively (ARE 403 and 400 of 1925), one of which records, by order of the king, an exchange (talai-marru) of land at Achyutamangalam with some addition, for the 15 velis of devadana land in Kulottunga-nallur belonging to the Somanathar temple. It makes reference to the fifth and the 11th years of Kulottunga Chola deva and mentions the sons of Udaiyar Svamidevar. The second inscription registers the ulvari for the inclusion of the devadana lands belonging to the main temple as well as to the God Srikanthisvaram Udaiyar—evidently a deity (with possibly also a shrine for it) named after the builder of the main temple—in the same temple, with the five velis of land at Somanathamangalam, originally endowed for the formation of the several adjuncts of the temple, probably those mentioned in ARE 393 of 1925. The remaining records are not of any great significance, as they relate to routine gifts to the temple, some by Kulottunga III, and others by the Vijayanagara ruler Vira Bokkanna Udaiyar dated in Saka 1326 (A.D. 1404), from which incidentally we learn that one Annamalaiyar Kalingat-taraiyar set up certain images in the temple, in recognition of which the authorities of the temple granted him certain privileges in the temple.

A word may be mentioned about the identity of 'Tribhuvana-chakravartin Rajendra deva' and 'Virarajendra deva.' The name of Svamidevar from the Radha country is clearly associated with the construction of this temple and the consecration of the deity; we have seen from a record of Arpakkam (ARE 20 of 1899) that Edirilisola Sambuvarayan, father of Pillai Pallavaraiyan, the trusted officer and General of Rajadhiraja II, who fought the war with the Sri Lanka generals and ousted them from the Pandyan country, approached Svamidevar for the safety and success of the son in the war. We also know that among the various names which Kulottunga III went by were Vira Rajendra and Rajendra as well as Sola-kerala-deva. We may, therefore, assign these records of Rajendradeva and Virarajendra to Kulottunga III, which then yields for his fifth year the date of A.D. $(1178 + 5 =)$ 1183 which is equivalent to Saka 1105 and this corresponds to the Saka date given in ARE 402 of 1925 for the construction of the temple and the consecration of the deity therein.

EKAMBRANATHAR TEMPLE

Tidaavur (also Tadavur) is in the Attur taluk of the Salem district. It is 19 km. from Talaivasal on the way to Attur via Viranganur, 5 km. from Viranganur and 14.5 km. from Attur.

There is a temple here called that of Ekambranathar. It is situated on the southern bank of the Sveta river.

An inscription of the 27th year of Kulottunga III found in this temple registers that this temple called that of Tiruvegambam Udaiya Nayanar at Mel-Gangapadi alias Tadavur, in Arrur kurram, a subdivision of Miladu alias Jananatha valanadu was built of stone, the cost being met from the gold already in possession of the temple and from what was presented by the king and the youngest queen (ARE 458 of 1913).

In a fifth year inscription of Kulottunga III (ARE 461 of 1913), one Kulottungasola Vanakkovaraiyan makes a gift of land to this temple in Mel-Gangapadi nadu, a sub-division of Arrur kurram in Miladu alias Jananatha valanadu, for worship, repairs and festivals.

In a seventh year inscription of the same ruler, it is mentioned that the village of Puttur was made a gift of to this temple and this transaction was attested by Tayilumnalla Perumal and Vilupadaraiyan and communicated to Vitadaraiyar and the accountants of the temple.

There is a ninth year record (ARE 456 of 1913), also presumably of Kulottunga III, according to which land at Virasola-nallur was gifted to the deity. This transaction is again attested by Tayilumnalla Perumal and Viluppadaraiyan and communicated to Vitadaraiyar and the accountants (Puravariyar).

From a tenth year record, where the king goes under the name of Vijayarajendra, we find that land was gifted for worship and repairs to the temple of Tiruvegambam-udaiya Nayanar and 'Kuram-erinda Perumal' (ARE 457 of 1913) (Vijayarajendra was a surname of Kulottunga III).

The temple faces east. It consists of a garbhagriha and an ardhamandapa with an antarala in between. The devakoshta sculptures are Dakshinamurti in the south, Ganga-Visarjana-murti in the west and Brahma in the north wall of the garbhagriha. On the antarala walls, i.e., between the walls of the garbhagriha and the ardhamandapa is a kumbha-pancharam on each face. There are subshrines for Ganapati, Subrahmanya and Jyeshtha Devi (on the west) and for Bhairavar on the south-east of the central shrine. The compound wall has collapsed.

This is a stone temple built in the 27th year of Kulottunga III. Evidently the temple was in existence earlier, presumably as a brick structure. The western devakoshta sculpture of Ganga-Visarjana-murti is noteworthy. The location of the Bhairavar subshrine clearly points to the fact that the eighth parivara devata is Bhairavar (for a discussion of the Parivaradevatas, see my Early Chola Temples).

KUGAIYUR

SVARNAPURISVARAR (PONPARAPPINA- ISVARAM UDAIYA NAYANAR) TEMPLE 7

Kugaiyur was an important centre in early times and has a number of temples viz., those of Svarnapurisvarar, Panchaksharsvarar, Kailasanathar (ruined) and Rajanarayana Perumal. Of these, we are concerned with the first-mentioned temple.

This is a dated one. On the south wall of the mandapa in front of the central shrine, there is an inscription of the sixth year of Parakesarivarman alias Tribhuvana-chakravartin Kulottunga Chola deva, 'who was pleased to take Madurai and the crowned head of the Pandya' (Kulottunga III). It records that a local Chief of Koval (Tirukkovalur or Tirukkoyilur) set up the image of Ponparappina-Isvaram-Udaiya Nayanar, constructed the stone temple, the Sri Kailasa of the village of Kugaiyur, the ardha-mandapa, the snapanamandapa, the nritya-mandapa, the first prakara and the gopura, the second prakara and the gopura and made a gift of land for offerings to the deity (called Ponparappina-Isvaram-udaiya Nayanar at Kugaiyur) and the feeding and maintenance of brahmanas at the temple. Kugaiyur is said to be situated in Naraiyur kurram, a sub-division of Maladu alias Jananatha valanadu (ARE 93 of 1918). A 14th year inscription of the same ruler mentions the gift by the same Chief of the village named Ponparappina-nallur, free of taxes, for worship and offerings to the deity of the temple and the village of Karpundi alias Tirujnanasambanda-nallur in Ugalur kurram, a district of Vadakarai Rajasinga valanadu, for conducting a festival in the month of Panguni (ARE 94 of 1918). A third record of the same Chief, dated in the 20th year of Kulottunga III, relates to a gift of two cows and a calf for a lamp by one of the agambadi mudalis of Rajaraja Kovalarayan to the (same) temple (ARE 95 of 1918).

The temple of Svarnapurisvarar belongs to the period of Kulottunga III and is a dated one (A.D. 1184).

8 KALAHASTISVARAR (TIRUK-KALATTI DEVAR) TEMPLE MANIKANTHESVARAR (TIRU-MANIK-KENGAI- UDAIYA NAYANAR) TEMPLE

Kalahasti is a railway station on the Southern Railway and is 24 km. to the north-east of the more well-known railway station of Renigunta (north of Madras City). The river Svarnamukhi flows close by. When dealing with the Nataraja temple at Chidambaram, we have mentioned that there are five sacred spots in South India, each housing a linga associated with one of the five elements (the pancha bhutas). Prithvi (Earth) is associated with the linga at Tiruvarur, Appu (water) with the linga at Tiruvanaikka, Teyu (Agni or fire) with linga of Tiruvannamalai, Vayu (wind) with the linga of Tiruk-kalahasti and Akasa (Ether) with the linga of Chidambaram. The name of Sri Kalahasti is said to be composed of the syllables Sri meaning spider, kalam meaning snake and hastin meaning elephant. These three are said to have worshipped the linga of this place. The place is also called Dakshinakailasam.

The Tamil Saint Kannappa Nayanar, who is often represented in panels in the posture of pulling out his eye with an arrow to replace the bleeding eye of Siva (linga) which he presses tight with his foot to stem its bleeding, is said to have attained salvation here; and along with him the brahmana devotee Sivagochariyar, Nakkiradevar, Indra, Rama, Muchukunda and others were worshippers of this deity.

The Siva temple of Kalahastisvarar is situated on a mound and faces west. North of the temple is the Durgambika hill, in the south Kannappar malai (hill), and to the east Kumarasvami hill.

The Vishnu temple (deity: Prasannavadana Perumal) is in the middle of the town.

There are a number of accounts of the greatness of this ancient centre, amongst which are Sri-Kalattipuranam of the three brothers Karunap-prakasar, Siva-Prakasar and Velappa Desikar, Tiruk-kalatti-purana sung by Anandakuttar of Veerai nagar, and Tiruk-kalatti-ula sung by Seraikkavirayar (ARE 276 to 300 of 1904).

KALAHASTISVARAR TEMPLE

There are a large number of inscriptions of the days of the Middle Chola rulers on the walls of the central shrine in the Kalahastisvarar temple. They belong mostly to the days of Rajaraja I and Rajendra I. In addition, there are a number of records found on the walls of the record-room, which belong to the Later Chola period.

There is a shrine dedicated to Mrtyunjayesvarar in the campus of the main temple, and this would appear to be a Later Chola foundation. The earliest inscription found on the first prakara is of a Rajaraja deva, dated in his sixth year, which is in Grantha and Tamil, mentioning a certain Ghattideva-maharaja with a number of Sanskrit birudas (ARE 189 of 1903).

The present structure of the Sri-Kalahastisvarar temple would appear to be a foundation of the days of the Middle Cholas, with improvements and additions during the Later Chola period.

MANIKANTHESVARAR TEMPLE

We are, however, concerned with another temple in this town, viz., the Manikantesvarar temple. On the east side of the base of the central shrine, there is an 18th year inscription of Tribhuvanachakravartin Virarajendra Chola deva, which records the building of the temple, the mandapa and a flight of steps (sopana), and the temple is called that of Tirumanikkengai-udaiya nayanar (ARE 197 of 1903). This inscription reads as follows. (Venkayya identifies this king as Kulottunga III):

"Harihi Om: Svasti Sri: Tribhuvanachakravartigal Sri Virarajendra-soladevarkku yandu 18-avadu tirukkalattiyil Tirumanik-kengai-udaiya nayanar tirukkarraliyum tirumandapamum sopanamum Seyangonda-solamandalattu Kalatturkkottattu Valla nattup Perun-tandalattil Konulan Amudalvan Mangai nayakan Malavarayan seyvitla tiruppanikku Ivarittadu kondum Siyar tukkappattaa udal kondum seydadu" (SII, VIII, No. 496: ARE 197 of 1903).

However, there is an inscription of the 24th year of Rajarajakesarivarman (Rajaraja I, A.D. 1008), found inscribed on the north, east and south sides of the base of the central shrine in the Kalahastisvarar temple, advertng to the endowment of a gift of gold, and referring to this temple of Manikkengai Madevar (ARE 298 of 1904). We have, therefore, to conclude that the temple existed even in the days of Rajaraja I and that the present stone building came into being in the days of Kulottunga III. The original name of the deity currently called Manikantesvarar was Tiru-manik-kengai Madevar or -udaiya Nayanar.

One Sasikula-Chalukki Tani-ninru-Venra Vira Narasinga deva alias Yadavaraya set up the image of Lord Mallikarjuna in the temple and made a gift to it in the eighth year of Rajaraja III (vide an inscription on the south side of the base of the shrine of the Goddess in the temple—ARE 200 of 1903).

There is also a Vishnu shrine in the temple, and on its walls is an inscription of Allun-Tirukkaladeva alias Gandagopala, making a gift of gold for a lamp to the temple of Tirumanik-kengai-udaiya Nayanar (ARE 201 of 1903). In the seventh year of Vijaya-Gandagopaladeva, Nallasittarasar, son of Bhimarasar of Tyagasamudra-pettai, makes a gift of land to the temple (ARE 202 of 1903). This record is found on the gopuram of the temple, left of the entrance.

Thus, the main shrine of this temple, which dates back to the days of Rajaraja I at least, was reconstructed in stone in the 18th year of Kulottunga III (A.D. 1196). (Pls. 310–12).

RISHABHESVARAR TEMPLE

Chengam(a) is a village in the Tiruvannamalai taluk of the North Arcot district, and occupies what must once have been a strategic location, connecting the highlands of the Deccan with the coastal belt of South India. It is 32 km. west of Tiruvannamalai on the Krishnagiri road. There is a Later Chola temple here dedicated to Rishabhesvarar. It has three inscriptions of the days of "Tribhuvana Chakravartin Virarajendra deva", who may be identified as Kulottunga III (ARE 114, 108 and 105 of 1900). All of them refer to gifts of land. One, of the 13th year, refers to the temple as that of Idavandurai (a colloquial form of Rishabhesvarar') at Sengaima—the modern Chengam(a). Two other inscriptions refer to political compacts among a few Chola feudatories affirming mutual loyalty and readiness to offer protection (ARE 107 and 115 of 1900). These reflect a period of political instability bordering on anarchy when central authority had weakened and local Chiefs were assuming semi-independent status. One, on the north wall of the central shrine, records a political compact between Karikalasola Adaiyur Madevan and Sengeni Ammaiappan alias Vikramasola Sambuvarayan on the one side and, on the other, Vidugadalagiya Perumal, a powerful feudatory of Kulottunga III who ruled almost with virtual political independence from Tagadur (identified with Dharmapuri in the former Salem district and now the headquarters of a new district of the same name: See Laddigam by B. Venkataraman, on the role of Vidugadalagiya Perumal, pp. 46–48; also see Sec. 16, Ch. 2 supra). Evidently, these loyalties were not permanent, for we find that in the second compact, this Chief has been excluded.

The Rishabhesvarar temple consists of the central shrine (with Ganapati and Subrahmanya as guardian deities at the entrance), the ardhamandapa, the antarala and the snapana-mandapa. The eastern entrance to this hall is guarded by dvarapalas. There is a mukhamandapa in front. There is no gateway at its eastern end, only a window. The entrance to the mukhamandapa is by steps provided on the south-east corner. An icon of Nataraja is housed in a cella to the north of this mandapa, and those of Somaskandar, Chandrasekharar and Subrahmanya are in a chamber south of the ardhamandapa. The four Saiva Nayanmars are found in the centre of the mukhamandapa. The devakoshta sculptures are Ganapati and Dakshinamurti in the south, Lingodbhavar in the west, and Brahma and Durga in the north. The Chandesvarar shrine is to the north of the ardhamandapa, and further north in the same prakara is the Subrahmanya shrine; again further north is the Amman shrine of Anupamambika. The srivimana rests on an upapitham and a high adhishthanam adorned with round kumudam and yali frieze. It is a dvi-tala temple crowned by a round sikhara.

10 TIRUK-KAMISVARAM-UDAIYA NAYANAR TEMPLE

Argalur is in the Attur taluk of the Salem district. It is 4 km. south-east of Talaivasal on the right bank of the river Vasishta nadi. In the Chola days, it is said to have been located in Magadai mandalam.

There are a number of temples in this village; the most important of them is the temple of Tiruk-Kamisvaram Udaiyar Nayanar. Apart from Chola records, many Pandyan and Vijayanagara period inscriptions are also found on the walls of this temple.

The earliest inscription found on the walls of the Kamisvaram Udaiyar temple is one of the 13th year of Kulottunga III (ARE 417 of 1913). It records the sale of the village of Ilattipadi to the trustees of the temple by Melaiyam udaiyan Sambaiyalvan for 135 pon. This village was made tax-free by the trustees (of the temple) in favour of the temple for maintaining worship, conducting festivals and undertaking repairs. In the 29th year of Kulottunga III (A.D. 1206), a gift of 5000 kasus was made for the sacred bath, twilight lamps, garlands, clothes and offerings to the icons of the three nayanmars (emperumakkal), Appar, Sambandar and Sundarar, set up in this temple (ARE 418 of 1913). An inscription of the 35th year of Kulottunga III records a political compact between Sengeni Ammaiappan Alagiyasolan alias Edirilisola Sambuvarayan and the chiefs Ponparappina Vanakkovaraiyar, Kulottungasola Vanakkovaraiyar and Kadavarayar for mutual protection. This again reflects the state of political unrest and lack of security in the kingdom, already referred to—a foreshadowing of the impending collapse of Chola rule (ARE 435 and 440 of 1913). We get to know of the existence of a number of temples in the neighbourhood—Tayilum-nalla-solisvaram, Ponparappina-solisvaram, Vairavana Isvaram and Kulasekhara Udaiyar (Pandya) temple, as they find mention in the inscriptions here (ARE 434, 454, 453, and 441 of 1913).

The temple has two prakaras. There is a three-tier (munrunilai) gopuram in the eastern side of the first wall of enclosure. The outer gopuram is without a superstructure.

In the covered verandah round the first prakara there are installed icons of Surya, the four Tamil Nayanmars and the Saptamatrīkas in the south, Ganapati, Shanmukha and Gajalakshmi in the west, and Virabhadrar, the sixty-three nayanmars, Rishabhavahana deva, Durga (lifesize), Bhairavar and Nataraja in the north. Surya and Bhairavar are placed in the north-east corner of the first prakara.

The main shrine consists of the garbhagriha and the ardhamandapa (slightly damaged), guarded by dvarapalas. There are a number of bronzes in the northern wing of the ardhamandapa—Chandrasekharar, Sattanathar, Bhikshatanar, Tripurantakar, Nataraja, Sivakami, Tani-Amman, Ayyanar and Kali. The outer walls of the garbhagriha are adorned by the devakoshta images of Dakshinamurti, Lingodbhavar and Brahma. There is a standing Ganapati on the south wall of the ardhamandapa. The front portion of the ardhamandapa serves as the snapanamandapa. On its northern side there is a gateway to the first prakara.

AVARANI (ABARANADANI)

11 ANANTANARAYANA PERUMAL (PALLIKONDAR) TEMPLE (OLD PARVATISVARAR (SIVA) TEMPLE)

Avarani is a village in the Nagapattinam taluk of the Tanjavur district. Its ancient name was Kilkkudi. There is an old temple here. Today this temple is dedicated to Anantanarayana Perumal (Vishnu), and the name of the deity during the days of the Vijayanagara rulers was Pallikonda Perumal. But there are a large number of inscriptions of the days of Kulottunga III and Rajaraja III, found on stones built into the walls of the temple, which furnish interesting information on the change that took place in the temple in the post-Chola period.

The earliest of these inscriptions (found in stray stones) is one dated in the 15th year of Tribhuvanachakravartin Kulottunga Choladeva 'who took the crowned head of the Pandya' and it relates to a gift of tax-free land to the temple of Parvatisvaram Udaiyar set up by Rajanarayanap-Pallavarayar of Palaikkurichchi at Kilkkudi alias Simhavishnu chaturvedimangalam and there is a reference to the land survey made in the ninth year of Periya devar (i.e., Kulottunga III) (ARE 490 of 1922). Yet another record of the 15th year of 'Tribhuvanachakravartin Kulottunga Choladeva who was pleased to take Madurai and the crowned head of the Pandya' records an agreement between the villagers of Sittiralegai-perumpalli in Mulaikkattu nadu and the temple authorities of Parvatisvaram regarding an exchange of land (ARE 487 of 1922). Another record of the same ruler belonging to the next year (16th) (stones misplaced) seems to record a gift of tax-free land to the temple of Parvatisvaram Udaiyar set up at Kilkkudi, a brahmadeya in Ala nadu, by the villagers of Rajarajan Alimulai in Mulaikkattu nadu, a subdivision of Arumolideva valanadu (ARE 489 of 1922). An undated record found on stones built into the walls and belonging to the days of Kulottunga III is fragmentary and gives another name to the Pallavarayar who built the temple, viz., Kalyanasundarar (ARE 493 of 1922). Again in an inscription whose date is lost and which is found on stones built into the east and south walls of the central shrine, a gift of land is recorded in favour of the temple of Par (which must be 'Parvatisvaram Udaiyar') built at Kilkkudi alias Simhavishnu chaturvedimangalam, a brahmadeya in Ala nadu, a subdivision of Arumolideva valanadu, by 'Kalyanasundaranar alias Rajanarayanap-Pallavarayar, a native of Tirukkannapuram.' A 24th year inscription of the same ruler (fragmentary) records the remission of certain taxes on the land belonging to the temple of Parvatisvaram Udaiyar on the occasion of the consecration ceremony of Kuttadu Nayanar (Nataraja) and His Consort by the Assembly of Simhavishnu chaturvedimangalam who were managing the affairs of the village, from the month of Karkataka (ARE 488 of 1922). In the 26th year presumably of the same ruler there is a record, found on the north, west and south walls of the central shrine (stones are out of order and some lost) mentioning a gift of land free of taxes to the temple of Parvatisvaram Udaiyar at Kilkkudi by the Assembly of Rajaya-chaturvedimangalam in Mulaikkattu nadu, a subdivision of Arumolideva valanadu. It mentions that the land concerned was an old gift for offerings to the god Kuttadu Nayanar but that the original recipients were dead. There is a reference to the land survey made in the ninth year (of the king) which confirms that this record is one of the days of Kulottunga III (ARE 485 of 1922).

There are two inscriptions of the days of Rajaraja III belonging to his sixth and his 17th years; from the latter we gather that 60 kasus were given as a gift for a lamp to the temple of Tiruviramesvaram Udaiyar at Abaranadani* chaturvedimangalam in Ala nadu, a subdivision of Geyamanikka valanadu (ARE 491 of 1922).

Thus it is clear that this temple was built in the 15th year of Kulottunga III (ARE 490 of 1922) by Kalyanasundaranar alias Rajanarayanap-Pallavarayan of Palaikkurichchi alias Tirukkannapuram. In the years following the fall of the Cholas, at some unknown point of time, the temple was converted into a Vishnu temple with Pallikondar (Ananta narayana) as the deity of the central shrine. At present the temple is known as that of Anantanarayana.

TIRUPPALAIVANAM

12 TIRUPPALESVARAR (TIRUPPALAIVANAM UDAIYA MAHADEVAR) TEMPLE

Tiruppalaivanam is a village in the Ponneri taluk of the Chingleput district. There is an ancient temple here, dedicated to Tiruppalesvarar. The ancient name of the deity was Tirup-palaivanam Udaiya Mahadevar. This temple is studded with innumerable inscriptions on the walls of the central shrine, covering the part of the Later Chola period beginning with the 11th year of Vikrama Chola. The majority of the inscriptions relate to Kulottunga III and his successor Rajaraja III. While there is no foundation inscription in the temple, it may be reasonably assumed that the temple came into existence in the days of Kulottunga I or Vikrama Chola, but we have an inscription of the 15th year of Kulottunga Choladeva 'who was pleased to take Madurai and the crowned head of the Pandya' which mentions that Sodi Vadugan alias Jayangondasola Kidarattaraiyan undertook the construction of a stone temple to Tiruppalaivanam Udaiyar and for meeting the cost of this construction he was assigned rights in several villages, two-thirds of which he gave as stri dhanam to his two sons-in-law (ARE 313 of 1928-29). The existence of inscriptions of the period prior to the 15th year of Kulottunga III on the walls of the central shrine would seem to indicate that perhaps the earlier structure of the central shrine was partially in stone and partially in brick and that the entire temple was rebuilt of stone in the days of Kulottunga III leaving the earlier stone portion intact.

Since we find inscriptions of the days of Rajaraja III, dated in his 20th year and later, on the walls of the mandapa in front of the central shrine, we could hazard the guess that perhaps this mandapa was also a part of the reconstruction programme undertaken in the 15th year of Kulottunga III; at any rate it was completed before the 20th year of Rajaraja III. The wall of enclosure (tirumadil) was constructed in the 14th year of Jatavarman alias Tribhuvanachakravartin Sundara Pandya deva (I) (A.D. 1265).

The temple received considerable attention at the hands of the Telugu-Choda chiefs, Allur-Tirukkalattideva Gandagopala devar, Vijaya Gandagopala devar and Rajaraja Gandagopala devar.

The main mandapa should be attributed to Vijaya Gandagopala, whose 15th year inscription is the earliest found on the walls of this mandapa.

From the inscriptions of this temple, we get the following interesting information.

(i) Kulottunga II's extensive benefactions to the temple of Nataraja at Chidambaram including his gilding of the 'perambalam' gave him his title of Rajakesarivarman 'who was pleased to gild Tirupperambalam' (ARE 315 of 1928-29) and Tribhuvana-chakravartin Kulottunga Choladeva 'who covered Perambalam with gold' (ARE 349 of 1927-28).

(ii) The Telugu-Choda Chief Madurantaka Pottappichcholan Siddharaisar was a contemporary of Kulottunga III and his wife Nungama deviyar (the Nikkama deviyar of the Nandalur inscriptions) made a gift of money to the Sivabrahmanas of the temple for burning a lamp (ARE 317 of 1927-28).

(iii) From a 15th year inscription of Rajarajadeva (III)

we get to know of the grant of land by Gandagopala as the gift of Panaiyandai alias Gandagopala-Manikkam, the sister of Sittammadeviyar, a devaradiyar attached to the temple of Manumasiddhisvaram Udaiya Nayanar at Nellur, for feeding devotees in the Gandagopala-manikka-madam at Tiruppalaivanam (ARE 350 of 1927-28).

(iv) We learn that an image of Karaikkal Ammai was set up in the temple, as seen from a record of the 18th regnal year of Rajaraja III (ARE 329 of 1928-29).

(v) Metallic images of Chandrasekharar and Consort were set up by Raghunayakulu raju of Koluru in Saka 1681 (A.D. 1758).

The present structure of the temple could be attributed to the last decade of the 12th century with accretions taking place over the next few decades extending to the middle of the 13th century A.D.

(TEN)TIRUVALANGADU

13 VATARANYESVARAR (TIRUVALANGADU UDAIYAR) TEMPLE

Tiruvalangadu, or to be more precise, Ten-Tiruvalangadu, is in the Mayuram taluk of the Tanjavur district. It is to be distinguished from the place of the same name (also sometimes called Alangadu or Vataranyam) in the North Arcot district, 60 km. west of Madras City. (The Madras Museum Bulletins invariably and incorrectly describe the place as Tiruvelangadu). [It was from the latter place that the copperplates and the peerless broken Nataraja bronze of Rajendra I's period (now adorning the Madras Museum) were recovered. The place must have been surrounded by a grove of banyan (Vata or Al) trees. The sthala vriksha is however the jack tree. It is a place rich with ancient legends and historical associations. Among them is one about the local Vellalas who, unable to keep their plighted word, performed self-immolation. Karaikkal Ammai, who was one of the 63 Nayanmars, assumed the form of a demon, went on a pilgrimage as far as Kailasa and rolled back here all the way on her head and finally took refuge under the feet of the Lord of Dance here. The chief deity of this temple is called Devar Singapperumal or Alangattu Adigal. The place is adorned with the Ratna Sabha, and it was reputedly here that Siva performed the dance of Urdhva Tandava and subdued Kali.]

We are however concerned here with (Ten) Tiruvalangadu in the Tanjavur district that has only a Later Chola temple which came into existence in the days of Kulottunga III. This temple does not seem to be associated with the Devaram hymnists. It is presently called Vataranyesvarar or Tiruvalangadu Udaiyar temple.

This temple was completed in or before the 15th year and 21st day of Kulottunga III. It is said to have been located on a site that was part of the larger township of Vikramasola Allur. There are sixteen inscriptions in this temple, ten of which belong to the days of Kulottunga III (ranging from his 15th year to his 36th year) and two to those of Rajaraja III (both relating to a gift to a matha called Vannar Madevar Andar Madam). The earliest inscription on the central shrine registers the grant to this temple of fifteen velis of land at Suttamalli chaturvedimangalam. The temple trustees sold some temple jewels and bought some lands as tirunamattu kani (24th year of Kulottunga III). An image of Visvesvarar was set up in the temple in the 25th year of Kulottunga III. The details of the Urkkil iraiyili lands of the temple were recorded on the temple walls (35th year of the same ruler). An agraharam of Vedic scholars called Irumarabum Tuyya Perumal Mangalam was also set up during this reign. The length of the standard linear measure called 'Tiruvalangadu-udayar kol' (based on and identical with the length of the royal linear measure of Rajaraja I's days carved in the Rajarajesvaram temple at Tanjavur) is found engraved on the gopuram here. The unit of linear measure thus evidently continued without any change.

The temple consists of a central shrine, a mukhamandapa in front and two prakaras with walls of enclosure, and the gopuram. The usual devakoshta figures are there on the walls of the garbhagriha. Opposite the Dakshinamurti devakoshta, there is a mandapa. This mandapa is in the style typical of Kulottunga III's period.

The two pillars opposite to the Dakshinamurti niche are carved and sculptured in the same style as those of Darasuram and Tribhuvanam. On the base of each pillar there is a portrait about 37 cm. in height of a royal personage with anjali hasta and a sword. The figure is looking towards Dakshinamurti. These portraits are alike.

There is yet another royal portrait, 135 cm. in height, found on one of the pillars of this mandapa, carved almost in the round. The figure has a commanding personality, and at the same time is expressive of humility, articulated by the pair of pada-rakshas (sandals) held on his head, which has a big bun-shaped hair-do at its back. Necklaces and chains and armlets and other arm-bands adorn the figure. The two hands are held together in the anjali (prayerful) pose. N. Sethuraman who first saw this portrait sculpture has identified the figure as that of Kulottunga III.*

Another interesting portrait, also taken to be that of Kulottunga III but with slightly different features and form of dress, is found on the srivimana of the Tribhuvanam temple, and has been published by T.V. Sadasiva Pandarattar in his History of Later Cholas (in Tamil, Annamalai University: opposite to page 144). I agree that it is a good guess and it may indeed be a portrait of Kulottunga III.†

One of Rajaraja I's titles was Sivapadasekharan. The first-to-be-engraved and the most important inscription of Rajaraja I on the north wall of his Rajarajesvaram temple at Tanjavur mentions (in paras 55 to 91) the gifts made by the king on the conferment on him of the titles of Sivapadasekhara and of Rajaraja (See my Middle Chola Temples, pp. 5 and 15). It seems that the title was borne by some of his successors also. As far as I know, we do not have any epigraphical evidence that Kulottunga III

*In one of Kulottunga III's epigraphs dated in his 15th year, he claims to rule the earth by divine grace (tirukkailaich-chivan-arul). This lends credence to the interpretation of this portrait as that of this king, in view of the two sacred feet (sri padams) held over his head.

assumed this title or that it was conferred on him. But the portrait at Ten-Tiruvallangadu clearly proves that Kulottunga III must have had the title of Sivapadasekharar. We know that Kulottunga III was a devout Siva-worshipper. It is unique and as far as I know the only portrait of a king who has this title. Perhaps at important religious ceremonies involving the presence of the king, he wore this garb. (Pl. 313).

PAPANASAM

SRINIVASA PERUMAL (OLD VISVESVARAR) 14 TEMPLE

Papanasam is a railway station on the main line of the Southern Railway, between Kumbakonam and Tanjavur.

On the north and south walls of the mandapa in front of the central shrine of the Srinivasa Perumal temple here, there is a record of Tribhuvanachakravartin Kulottunga Chola deva 'who was pleased to take Madurai and the crowned head of the Pandya', dated in his 19th year; the stones are out of order and lost in some places. The inscription refers to the gift of two velis of land as tirunamattuk-kani at Kundavai-nallur, a hamlet of Rajakesari chaturvedimangalam in Nallur nadu, a subdivision of Nittavinoda valanadu, by a certain Aramudu Madevan alias Vikramasola Brahmarayan to the temple of Visvesvaradeva built by himself at Panchavan Madevi chaturvedimangalam (ARE 467 of 1922); on the same walls there is another record, of the 21st year of the same ruler (also fragmentary), apparently recording another gift of land by the person mentioned above to the same temple. Vikramasola Brahmarayan is said to be a native of Rajaraja chaturvedimangalam (ARE 468 of 1922). On the east wall of the vahana mandapa, there is a 24th year record of Tribhuvana-chakravartin Kulottunga Choladeva III registering a gift of land to the temple (ARE 476 of 1922).

This temple which thus came into existence in the days of Kulottunga III was extensively renovated in the days of Vijayanagara Mallikarjunadeva Maharaya, son of Pratapa Devaraya Maharaya 'who instituted the elephant hunt', as learnt in a record dated in Saka 1370 (= A.D. 1448) found on the north wall of the central shrine; on the occasion of the reconstruction of the temple, Saluva Maharaja Tirumalaideva Maharaja made a gift of the village of Rajakesarip-parru alias Papanasam, with all the taxes levied on the village, for offerings, worship and twilight lamps and for conducting the festivals instituted in the temple of Papanasap-perumal (ARE 448 of 1922).

On a pillar in the north verandah of the first prakara, there is an undated inscription recording that the mandapa was built by Vijayapalan, and again on another pillar in the mukhamandapa in front of the temple, there is an undated Tamil verse recording the construction of the mandapa by a certain Chedipan, resident of Pudukkottai (ARE 471 of 1922). On the lintel above the doorway of the Visvaksena shrine in the same mandapa, there is an undated Tamil record mentioning a certain Velaikkaran Tirunirrusola Nambi and the renovation of that doorway (tiruvaasal) by a certain Gangarayar of Manappakkam (ARE 472 of 1922). A damaged Tamil verse at the entrance to the second gopuram (right side) records the construction of several shrines including the Pankayavalli mandapa, Suttikoduttal shrine, Kaveri mandapa, Kayyamayil mandapa and the central gopuram by a certain Ayya Nayakar (ARE 475 of 1922).

Thus this temple, originally dedicated to Siva as Visvesvara-deva, which was perhaps in existence even in the Middle Chola period probably as a brick structure, was reconstructed in stone in the days of Kulottunga III. It was converted into a Vishnu temple for Lord Srinivasa Perumal in the days of Vijayanagara rulers when it was reconstructed or renovated in the 15th century (ARE 446 to 477 of 1922).

KORUKKAI (RAJANARAYANAPURAM)

15 SIVA (KULOTTUNGA CHOLISVARAM UDAIYAR) TEMPLE

Korukkai in the Kumbakonam taluk of the Tanjavur district is to be distinguished from Tiruk-kurukkai in the Mayuram taluk of the same district; the latter is about five km. north of Tirumananjeri whose temple of Virattanesvarar, one of the eight Virattana temples, is connected with the exploit of Yama's destruction by fire emanating from Siva's third eye. Korukkai is about 5 km. from Kumbakonam in a south-easterly direction on the road to Nachchiyarkoyil. The temple is to the right of the road (proceeding from Kumbakonam).

The Siva temple here was called in olden days Kulottunga Cholisvaram. There are five inscriptions on the walls of this temple. The earliest, found on the base of the north wall of the central shrine, is one of the 21st year of Tribhuvanachakravartin Kulottunga Deva, 'the conqueror of Madurai and Ilam, who took the head of the Pandyan king' (ARE 316 of 1927). It is assignable to Kulottunga III. It registers a gift of twelve velis of land in Rajaraja mandalam in Jayangondasola valanadu by two persons of Kolattur alias Kulattur in Vandalaivelur kurram in Rajendrasola valanadu for providing worship to the deity of Lord Kulottungasolisvaram Udaiyar in the temple of Kurukkai alias Rajanarayanapuram in Tirunaraiyur nadu, a subdivision of Kulottungasola valanadu. 'Rajanarayana' was a surname of Kulottunga I and the valanadu in which the village was situated was presumably also named after him. However, as the earliest inscription here, found on the base of the central shrine, has to be assigned to Kulottunga III, I am inclined to attribute this temple to his period. The next inscription, also on the same base, is of the 38th year of Kulottunga III (ARE 317 of 1927); it relates to a sale of $2\frac{1}{2}$ velis of land for 17,700 kasus. An inscription of the ninth year of Tribhuvanachakravartin Rajaraja III records a gift of land by a lady, Karunakara Alvi, for providing worship in the temple (ARE 319 of 1927). Early in the eighteenth century (Saka 1627, Kali Era 4809, A.D. 1705), one Kumaranayyan purchased the village of Korukkai, renamed it as Achyuta Vijayaraghavapuram and distributed the lands among several temples and persons (ARE 318 of 1927). (Pls. 314-9).

KAMPAHARESVARAR TEMPLE (TRIBHUVANAVIRESVARAM)

Tribhuvanam is about 6 km. from Kumbakonam and is a well-known cultural and art centre. It was perhaps once a part of the city complex of Palayarai and Kumbakonam. It acquired great prominence in the days of Kulottunga III. There is a famous temple here known as the Kampaharesvarar temple. This temple is dedicated to Siva adored by Vishnu and Brahma. It is the last of the four great temples built by the Cholas—and the last built by the last great Chola king. We saw that Kulottunga III made three wars against the Pandyas. After his victory in the third war, he held a grand celebration at Madurai, the Pandyan capital, and assumed the title of Tribhuvana Vira devar and built, in commemoration of his great victory, a temple here dedicated to Siva in the name of Tribhuvana Viresvarar. It is now called Kampaharesvaram, based on a local legend that a certain Chola king got relieved of the evil effects of 'Sani Bhagavan' after his flight from Tiruvidaimarudur to this place where he took shelter, and so this locality was chosen for building the new temple.

The temple-complex faces east. There are two prakaras and two gopurams.

The central shrine and the shrines for the Devi, Chandesvarar and Sarabhamurti are located in the first enclosure. The subsidiary shrines are all housed on the north side of the enclosure. This must have been due to limitations of space.

Between the inner and the outer (second) walls are housed the vasanta (alankara) mandapa, the nandi-mandapa, the balipitham and the flag staff.

The central shrine consists of a square garbhagriha (which measures 3.81 m. in the interior and 18.29 m. in the exterior), a slightly narrower ardhamandapa, an antarala with flights of steps on either side of the mahamandapa, a mukhamandapa and a portico shaped like a chariot. The Somaskanda shrine is located here. The walls of the garbhagriha are thick, but it is not of the sandhara type as in the case of the Tanjavur temple. The srivimana consists of a heavy six-tala superstructure over the sanctum. The full height of the srivimana is 126 ft. (38.40 m.) and the superstructure measures 91 ft. (27. 70 m.).

The temple, as in the case of the Rajarajesvaram temple at Tanjavur, has a high upapitham which adds to the grace and majesty of the superstructure and consists of the following mouldings: upanam, padma-dalam, vyala-mala, a high kantham with gala-padas, decorated with scroll work and dancing poses between each, and crowning all is the kapotam adorned with kudus.

Over the upapitham there is a wall on the three sides and above it is the adhishthanam consisting of the following mouldings: upanam (in three tiers), padma-dalam, kumudam adorned with small-sized padma idal (lotus-petal) both up and down, kantham, kapotam, vyalamala and vedika; on the basement, there is a panel of miniature sculptures depicting stories from the Ramayana.

The walls of the central shrine have projections and recesses. The central projections have devakoshtas—with Dakshinamurti in the south, Lingodbhavar in the west and Brahma (not original) in the north. Each bay has pilasters at the ends with square base and octagonal shafts and capitals. There are shorter pilasters on the sides of the devakoshtas. On the southern side of the ardha-mandapa, there is Ganesa, and on the northern side, there is a devakoshta housing a six-armed Durga.

This temple has two gopurams in the east—the inner one is of three and the outer of five nilais (tiers). This temple has a foundation inscription. The main text is on the south wall of the garbhagriha and two copies thereof are inscribed on the outer gopuram (ARE 190, 191 and 192 of 1907). Harle and, following him, H. Sarkar also hold that the two inscriptions on the gopuram are of a later date, mainly on the ground that the kumudam on the gopuram is ribbed—a feature believed to appear only in the sixteenth century A.D. This observation is incorrect. Ribbed kumudams are found in the Amritaghatesvarar temple at Melakkadambur of the period of Kulottunga I (see my Four Chola Temples) and, in fact, even earlier, as in the Takkolam temple (9th century A.D.) and the temple at Tondaimanad (10th century A.D.).

This temple is unique in that the shrines for the Devi and for Sarabhamurti, a newly-evolved icon of the late Chola period, are contemporaneous with the central shrine.

Devi shrine

The Devi shrine stands on a highly ornamented upapitham. The garbhagriha is rectangular. The griva and the sikhara are circular. It has an ardhamandapa and a mahamandapa in front. The mukhamandapa is a later structure.

The adhishthana is common to these main structures. It consists of the following mouldings—upanam, padmam, jagati and tri-pattakumudam with padma idal on either side.

The three devakoshtas contain the icons of Ichchha Sakti, Jnana Sakti and Kriya Sakti.

Sarabha shrine

The Sarabha image, unlike its counterpart at Darasuram which is in a niche on the main wall of the temple, is housed in a separate independent shrine north-east of the central shrine. The Sarabha cult was a new one evolved in the latter half of the Later Chola period. It is said that Narasimha, an avatara of Vishnu, continued his rampage even after achieving the immediate purpose of the avatara, namely, the destruction of the demon-king, Hiranyakasipu. Devas and men suffered, and the devotees of Siva prayed to their Lord for protection. Hence Siva assumed the form of Sarabhamurti, and relieved peoples' distress by destroying the fierce Narasimha and sending back Vishnu to Vaikuntha.

The Kamikagama describes Sarabhamurti as follows:

"The body of Sarabha is that of a bird of golden hue; it should have two wings which should be uplifted. Sarabha has two red eyes, four legs, resembling those of the lion, resting upon the ground and four others with sharp claws kept lifted upwards, and an animal tail—the body above the loins should be that of a human being, but having the face of a lion, which should have upon its head a kirita-makuta. There should also be side-tusks and on the whole a terrifying appearance. Sarabha is to be shown as carrying Narasimha with two of his legs. The figure of Narasimha should be the ordinary form of a human being with the hands held in anjali pose."

The bronze image of Sarabha found in the temple is represented as an icon with three legs, the body and face of a lion, a tail and four human arms; in the right upper hand is the parasu (axe), in the lower right one, the pasa; in the upper left one, the mriga and in the lower left one, agni. With the front leg, Sarabha-murti has pinioned Narasimha who is struggling against his adversary with eight arms.

Such was perhaps the way the Saivites wanted to establish the supremacy of Siva over Vishnu among the Hindu Trinity (See Elements of Hindu Iconography, T.A. Gopinatha Rao, Vol. II, Part I, pp. 172-174).

The Sanskrit inscription engraved in this temple mentions that the consecration ceremony of Siva and Parvati was performed by Kulottunga III's guru, Somesvara alias Isvara Siva who was well-versed in the Saiva Darsana and the eighteen vidyas and had expounded the greatness of Saiva thoughts in the Upanishads. He is said to be the son of Srikantha Sambhu.

As in other periods of history, there were close and intimate cultural and artistic contacts and free exchanges of philosophical thought between the north and the south and there is evidence also of intimate contacts among the various systems of religious and philosophic thought among important centres of Saivism during the period of the Later Cholas, especially during the reign of Kulottunga III.

It has been suggested that the Philosophy of Somesvara bears close similarity to the Siva-Visishtadvaita system of Sri Kantha, the author of Brahmasutra-bhashyam. He equates Prajapati with Pasupati and identifies the golden person within the Sun with Siva, Who is higher than Narayana. Sri Kantha's Visishtadvaita philosophy had perhaps exercised great influence on the life and thought of Kulottunga III, especially because of his close connection with Chidambaram, a great centre of Saivism in all ages. Kulottunga III is described in the inscriptions as an Eka-bhakta (unrivalled devotee) of Lord Nataraja.

The Kampaharesvarar temple is the last of the four great (cathedral) temples built by the Cholas. It constitutes a landmark in the history of South Indian temples.* (Pls. 320–39).

KUTTALAM

Kuttalam is about 11 km. west-south-west of Mayuram on the Mayuram-Kumbakonam road, and there are three well-known temples here, viz., the Uttaravedisvarar, Omkaresvarar and Cholesvarar temples. We have already dealt with the temple of Uttaravedisvarar, rebuilt by Sembiyan Mahadevi during the days of Uttama Chola, in our Early Chola Temples, pp. 176–8. We shall deal with the remaining two important temples here as they both belong to the Later Chola period. Both of them are located within the town-limits. They are under worship and in a state of good preservation.

17 OMKARESVARAR (OMKARESARAM UDAIYA PARAMASVAMIN) TEMPLE

The earliest dated records found on the walls of the central shrine of this temple belong to the 25th year of Tribhuvanachakravartin Sri Kulottunga Choladeva 'who was pleased to take Madurai, Ilam and the crowned head of the Pandya' (Kulottunga III). While recording a gift of land to the temple of Omkaresvaram Udayar, one of them mentions that the temple was built by Pillai Jayadhara Pallavaraiyar (EI, X, pp. 129–30; ARE 479 of 1907). The other inscription, found on the north wall of the mandapa in front of the same shrine, records a gift of land to the same temple and confirms that it was built by (Araiyar Aludaiya Nayaganar alias) Jayadhara Pallavaraiyar; it mentions the village of Kavirinallur, a devadana of the temple of Udaiyar Sonnavararivar at Vingunirt-turutti, i.e., Kuttalam (ARE 482 of 1907). From another inscription on the wall of the central shrine, we get the name of the deity as Omkaresvaram udaiya Paramasvami (ARE 591 of 1907). There is a Chandesarar shrine in the campus of this temple, and on its north and west walls, there is an inscription of Kulottunga III dated in his 25th regnal year, recording a gift of land and mentioning Anapayapuram in Tiruvallundur nadu, a subdivision of Jayangondasola valanadu.

*This temple has undergone two renovations, in 1937 and 1963. The outer appearance of the temple has been spoiled by the recent figural paintings lacking aesthetic taste, recalling to mind a Dasara exhibition—such a licence with tradition ill-becomes venerable institutions like temples.

H. Sarkar has published an excellent and authoritative guide-book on this temple under the auspices of the Department of Archaeology, Government of Tamil Nadu (See p.12).

From these inscriptions, we get to know that the temple of Omkaresvarar came to be built before the 25th regnal year of Kulottunga III, corresponding to A.D. 1203, and that it was built by a local Chief called Jayadhara Pallavaraiyar. (Pls. 342-8).

CHOLESVARAR (VIKRAMA CHOLISVARAM 18 UDAIYAR) TEMPLE

On the south wall of the central shrine in this temple, there is a record of the fourth regnal year of a king whose name is lost, recording a gift of land and an order of Jayadhara Pallavaraiyar, presumably the builder of the Omkaresvarar temple in the same town; evidently the inscription belongs to the days of Kulottunga III or possibly Rajaraja III. This record refers to this temple as that of Vikramacholisvaram udaiyar (ARE 477 of 1907). From a record found on the north wall of the mandapa in front of the Omkaresvarar temple, we get a reference to the shrine of 'Vikrama Cholisvaram udaiyar at Kulottungasolan Kurralam in Virudaraja bhayankara valanadu', and it refers to the revenue survey in the 16th year of Sungamtavirtta Kulottungasolan (I). The king is merely called Tribhuvanachakravartin Konerinmaikondan and the royal order is addressed to one Vanadarayan. Evidently this refers to another temple or shrine, as we find that this valanadu (Virudarajabhayankara) was not far from the limits of Kuttalam, which was itself in Jayangondasola valanadu. We saw, when dealing with the Uttaravedisvarar temple of Kuttalam, that that temple got a gift of land from the brahmadeya of Bhulokamanikka chaturvedimangalam, which was in Nallarrur Nadu in Virudaraja bhayankara valanadu (ARE 491 of 1907).

This temple must have come into existence during the days of Vikrama Chola and has now come to be called by the shortened name of Cholesvarar temple.

PANCHANADISVARAR TEMPLE

Mayuram is a big town today, being the headquarters of the taluk by the same name in the Tanjavur district. It is an ancient centre of culture and religion and is located on the banks of the Kaveri. There are a number of ancient temples in this town.

We have already dealt briefly with the temple of Mayuranathasvamin in our Early Chola Temples (p.197).

Another temple of importance to our study is the Panchanadisvarar temple. It is situated in the western suburb of Mayuram called Koranadu, and was built in the days of Kulottunga I and received considerable attention during the days of Kulottunga II. There are a number of inscriptions (ARE 374 to 385 of 1907) on the walls of the mandapa in front of the central shrine, many of which are dated in the reigns of kings who cannot be identified; but there are six which belong to the reign of Kulottunga III (one dated in his 19th year, three in his 25th year, one in his 33rd year and one whose date is lost). They relate to routine transactions and gifts but we incidentally learn from them that the deity was called Udaiyar Tiruvaiyaru udaiyar at Kulottungasolan kuralam in Tiruvalundur nadu, a subdivision of Jayangondasola valanadu. In three records found on the walls of the mandapa, there is a reference to the 21st year of Udaiyar Sungamtavirtarulina devar (Kulottunga I) and because of the high regnal years (exceeding 30 in two cases) of some of these records, they have to be attributed to the days of Kulottunga III or his successors.

We may hazard a guess that the temple was originally built during the days of Kulottunga I, received endowments from him or during his time, that the mandapa in front on which these inscriptions are found was either added or reconstructed during the reign of Kulottunga III while the central shrine underwent renovation at some later time; we have no inscriptions from the walls of the central shrine.

Kulikkarai is a small but prosperous village in the Nannilam taluk of the Tanjavur district. There is a local temple dedicated to Kalahastisvarar.

On the south wall of the main shrine of this temple there is an inscription belonging to the 28th year of the reign of a Tribhuvanachakravartin Konerinmaikondan (ARE 82 of 1911) which records that a gift was made of the brokerage fee (taragu) which had remained in arrears from the fifth year of the king, to the temple of Tiru-nangalisvaram Udaiyar, by the nagarattar of Ottakkudi alias Edirilisolapuram in Arumolideva valanadu. The identification of this king with Kulottunga III becomes almost definite if we note that this privilege of collecting the brokerage fee etc. and registering this concession on stone was recommended by a certain Isvara Siva. From inscriptions at Tribhuvanam, we are aware that this Isvara Siva was the preceptor of Kulottunga III (vide ARE of 1907-08, p. 80, para. 64; also see p. 137 of my Kopperunjingan; also SII, XII, No. 216 and ARE 105 of 1934-35).

An undated inscription found on the same wall states that this stone temple was built by Ingaikkudaiyar Karunakara devar alias Gurukularayar (ARE 83 of 1911).

From a third (the only other) record found in this temple, also on the same wall, we learn that a certain Sirukkavurudaiyan Tyagapperumal built the shrine of the Goddess in this temple and that the nagarattar of the same village made a gift of land for offerings to this deity (ARE 84 of 1911).

The main shrine must have come into existence in its present form before the 28th regnal year of Kulottunga III (= A.D. 1206). We are unable to say when the Amman shrine was built, as the inscription last referred to throws no light on the milieu in which the builder, Tyagapperumal, lived.

SERANUR

21 VAMSODDHARAKANATHAR TEMPLE (KULOTTUNGA-SOLISVARAM)

Seranur is a very small village at a distance of 20.5 km. west of the district headquarters of Pudukkottai on the road to Manapparai and 1.5 km. south-east of Kudumiyamalai. It is approached by a rough country track.

It has a small and neglected temple of great historical importance known as the Vamsoddharakanathar temple. From the body of one of the inscriptions (P.S.I., 163) found on the south wall of the ardhamandapa of the temple, we learn that it was once known by the name of Kulottunga-solisvaram. This inscription, belonging to Kulottunga III, contains an almost complete narration of the conquests and other military achievements of this ruler. His first two wars with the Pandyas, and the wars with the Telugu Chodas of Kanchi and Nellore and the Kakatiyas of Urangai (Orugallu or modern Warangal) are described in this inscription. We further learn from this record that he attacked and conquered Karuvur, the capital of Kongu nadu and celebrated his vijayabhishekam there. He is then said to have proceeded to Madurai and on the way he won two battles against the Pandyas at Mattiyur and Kalikkottai and on reaching Madurai he performed virabhishekam in a grand style which is described in most eloquent terms in this inscription as well as in the one at Kudumiyamalai (which is almost a copy of the Seranur record). It is a unique record* of his military achievements and temple-building activities—unique in its grandeur even among Chola inscriptions. This inscription records a royal gift of four velis of land as devadana iraiyili to this temple to be effective from the 31st regnal year. The last Madurai expedition and conquest must have therefore taken place between the 24th and the 30th regnal years of Kulottunga III after which he assumed the title of Tribhuvanavira deva. The earliest reference to this title is found in an inscription at Tiruvarur dated in his 24th year (ARE 554 of 1904) in which the Lord of the temple is fancied as describing the king as nam tolan (Our companion). The term Vamsoddharaka, by which the deity is known, would seem to refer to the king himself as the preserver and perpetuator of the Chola race.

*This record is dated in the 31st year of Tribhuvana Vira devar. See my article "The Later Cholas—their decline and fall" for a discussion of the three Pandyan wars, in the Journal of Oriental Research, Madras, Vol. XIII, No. 1; also see "Conquests of Kulottunga III," Journal of Oriental Research, Madras, Vol. V, pt. III, 1931.

The temple consists of the garbhagriha which is a square 1.73 metres to a side, the antarala which projects 90 cm. forwards towards the east followed by an ardhamandapa measuring 4.65 metres long and 3.66 metres broad. The superstructure over the garbhagriha is in brick and square in cross-section. It is an eka-tala srivimana, with devakoshtas (niches) on the walls of the garbhagriha and griva-koshtas in the superstructure. These niches are all empty; only two stray sculptures which must have belonged to these niches are found now in the premises of the temple, one of Durga and the other of Brahma, both of them headless and in a damaged condition. They have been kept in the loose propped against the eastern wall of the ardhamandapa right of the entrance. The Department of Archaeology of Tamil Nadu would do well to restore them to their original places or arrange to preserve them in the new Museum at Madurai.

The entire structure is a composite one with a common low adhishtanam and no upapitham. The adhishtanam consists of an upanam, three-faced kumudam, kantham, vari and varimanam. The walls of all the chambers are adorned by decorative pilasters. The walls of the ardhamandapa are covered by extensive inscriptions, one of which has already been referred to.

It would be useful to observe certain noticeable trends in the art and architecture of this era. At almost the same time, say between A.D. 1205 and 1210, both the modest, obscure and simple edifice of Kulottunga-solisvaram at Seranur, and the celebrated massive and extensive temple of Tribhuvanesvaram at Tribhuvanam near Kumbakonam came up—the former in the battle-scarred region on the traditional Chola-Pandya borderland and the latter in the heart of the Chola desa. Both of them were built after Kulottunga III's third Madurai expedition and victory. The latter is a grand cathedral-type temple, built to celebrate his victory and commemorate his greatness, very much like the Rajarajesvaram at Tanjavur or Gangaikondasolisvaram of Rajendra I. In contrast, the Seranur temple is small, simple, modest and eka-tala. These two coeval temples illustrate two totally different styles of temple architecture of the era.

Another example of such co-eval contrasts can be seen between the simple single-tiered gateway (gopuram) in the Nilakanthesvarar temple at Laddigam (near Madanapalli) and the seven-storeyed, highly evolved gopuram of the famous Nataraja temple at Chidambaram, both the structures coming up at the same time, i.e., during Kulottunga I's rule.

In this connection it may be relevant to mention the case of the ribbed kumudam (kumudam is an essential moulding of an adhishtanam) found in the basements (adhishtanam) of the various constituents of the temple—the garbhagriha, the other halls and chambers, and the gopuram. Based on a theory formulated by him, viz. that the ribbed kumudam made its first appearance only in the 16th century, J.C. Harle concluded that the gopuram of the Tribhuvanesvaram temple at Tribhuvanam, which has this ribbed kumudam, should be attributed to the 16th century. Then arose the anomaly of an inscription of Kulottunga III, which was simultaneously engraved on the adhishtanam of the srivimana and the gopuram referred to. The principal inscription of Kulottunga III, which is engraved on the basement of the srivimana, refers to his extensive conquests and benefactions including temple-building activities, and the identical inscription found on the basement of the gopuram is a contemporary copy of the original engraved on the srivimana. In fact, ribbed kumudams made their appearance centuries earlier. They are found in Chola temples even from the days of Aditya I (A.D. 870–907), as for instance at Takkolam (vide my Early Chola Art, Pt. I, pp. 212–15), and Parantaka I

(A.D. 907-955), as at Tondaimanad (vide my Early Chola Temples, A.D. 907-985, pp. 101-4). The ribbed kumudam of the Amrita-ghatesvarar temple at Melakkadambur of the early 12th century is another noteworthy example (vide my Four Chola Temples, pp. 47-59 and also Plates 35-54).

Students engaged in defining canons of style should bear in mind these different aspects of co-eval art while generalising and defining features of style in art and architecture of a particular region or period. (Pl. 349).

MADHURANTAKA CHOLISVARAM (SIVA TEMPLE)

Toludur is a village in the Vriddhachalam taluk of the South Arcot district, situated about 1 km. west of the Madras-Tiruchy highway.

There are two temples in this village, one dedicated to Siva and the other to Vishnu. The Siva temple is called Madhurantaka Cholisvaram, and the Vishnu temple, situated on the western side of the village, that of Varadaraja Perumal. In this section, we shall deal only with the Siva temple.

We are not certain as to how the local Siva temple came to be named Madhurantaka Cholisvaram. We also do not know if there was an earlier structure at the site. In this temple, there are three inscriptions of the Later Chola kings. On the south wall, there is an inscription dated in the 32nd year of Tribhuvanachakravartin Tribhuvanavira deva, 'who was pleased to take Madurai, the crowned head of the Pandya and Karuvur' (A.D. 1210). It records that a certain Sedarayan Vellalan, Chief of Sambai (Jambai), built the stone temple and the mandapa for the God Madhurantakesvaram-udaiya-nayanar at Perun-Toluvur in Ugalur kurram, a subdivision of Vadagarai Rajasinga valanadu. It further mentions that he also presented to the same temple the processional images of the God and the Goddess (ARE 460 of 1913).

A local Chief named Tiru-nirru-Vira-magada-solan alias Tayilunalla Perumal would appear to have played an important part in the locality during the reigns of Kulottunga III and Rajaraja III; for, on a conch preserved in the Varadaraja Perumal temple in the village, there is an inscription to the effect that that was a gift to the temple of Madhurantaka Cholisvaram Udaiya Nayanar at Toluvur (ARE A92 of 1913). He was also responsible for the excavation of a tank called Tiru-nirru-Viramagadasolappereri (the big lake); a reference to this lake is made in an inscription of the ninth year (most probably of Rajaraja III) concerning an exchange of wet land in Toluvur granted to the temple of Madhurantaka Cholisvaram Udaiya Nayanar, in place of the one adjoining this tank at Chandrasekhara-nallur given by Vanakovaraiyan (ARE 399 of 1913).

From these inscriptions, we learn that the Siva temple called that of Madhurantaka Cholisvaram Udaiya Nayanar was built of stone in the 32nd year of Tribhuvana Vira Devar (i.e., Kulottunga III, who assumed this title after his victory in the third Pandyan expedition) by one Sediyaaraya Vellan, the Chief of Sambai (Jambai) and that it consisted of the main shrine of stone and the mandapa. The main shrine consists of the srivimana and the ardhamandapa. There is a later mahamandapa. The srivimana is dvitala. The devakoshta sculptures are Ganapati, Dakshinamurti, Lingodbhavar, Brahma and Durga. There are sub-shrines for Ganapati, Subrahmanya, Gaja-Lakshmi (in the rear) and Chandesvarar.

There are bronzes of Somaskandar, Subrahmanyar, Astra devar, Dancing Sambandar and Nataraja. Bhairavar and Surya sculptures, of stone, are housed in the eastern side of the mahamandapa. There is a Nandi outside the mahamandapa.

There is a wall of enclosure round the temple. The only gateway of the temple is in the south. It has no gopuram.

The Amman is called Brihannayaki and is housed in a shrine of the same age, in the mahamandapa. This shrine faces south.

ACHCHAPURAM

(TIRUK-KAMAK-KOTTAM UDAIYA NACHCHIYAR SHRINE)

Achchapuram, a village in the Tanjavur district, has an ancient temple dedicated to Perumanam Udaiyar, which had been in existence even prior to the days of Vikrama Chola, as we hear of a land purchase by the Assembly of Parakrama chaturvedi-mangalam for feeding the mahesvaras in a matha known as the Parasamaya-kolari matha, as early as in the third year of this ruler (ARE 534 of 1918).

We learn from an inscription in this temple dated in the 14th regnal year of Rajadhiraja II (Kadal sulnda introduction) that this village bore the name of Panchavan Madevi- alias Kulottunga-sola- chaturvedimangalam. The sabha of this village, by an executive order, reduced the rates of varam and kadamai on some lands and fixed the duties and privileges of certain classes of persons (ARE 538 of 1918). We learn of the existence in this temple of a shrine dedicated to Panpadaikka Aduvar, from a record of the 24th regnal year of Kulottunga III. This record refers to an order of one Pirudigangaraiyan of Purakkudi presenting to this shrine lands purchased from the inhabitants of Nallur alias Nigarilisolapuram. Presumably this shrine was added about this time (ARE 532 of 1918).

We are, however, concerned here with an inscription of the 32nd regnal year of the same ruler (who is referred to as 'Tribhuvanavira deva, who conquered Madurai, Ilam and Karuvur, took the crowned head of the Pandya, and celebrated the virabhishekam and the vijayabhishekam'), which mentions that a shrine was constructed in the temple of Tirupperumanam Udaiyar, for Tiruk-kamak-kottam Udaiya Nachchiyar, by one Chandrasekharan Panchanadivanan of Nerkunam (ARE 530 of 1918).

The Amman shrine thus came into existence around A.D. 1210.

There is a record in this temple dated in A.D. 1218 (equivalent to the second regnal year of Rajaraja III) that mentions a gift of land by the 'Grama Kariyam seykira Kuttapperumakkal' of Panchavan Mahadevi- alias Kulottungasola- chaturvedimangalam for offerings to Aludaiya Pillaiyar (Sambandar) and Sokkiyar (Sundarar) and for feeding apurvins after the newly-introduced service called ayirattennurruvan sandhi in the Sri Kailasam Udaiyar temple in the same place (ARE 527 of 1918).

TIRUPPERUNDURAI

24 PRANESVARAR (MAHADEVAR) TEMPLE

Tirupperundurai is a village in the Kumbakonam taluk of Tanjavur district. The local temple dedicated to Pranesvarar was an Early Chola foundation. The earliest inscription found in this temple belongs to 'Madiraikonda Parakesarivarman' dated in his 22nd year; it is engraved on the north wall of the mandapa in front of the central shrine, being a copy of an earlier grant made before its reconstruction, and registers an agreement made by the Sabha of Tirup-perunturai and the temple servants for burning a perpetual lamp in the temple of Mahadevar in the village which was a 'devadana-brahmadeya in Tirupperunaraiyur nadu', in return for the sheep received by them from a barber named Pirantakan Adittan (ARE 135 of 1931-32).

However, on the central shrine itself, there is an inscription of the days of Kulottunga III beginning with the introduction puyal vayppa, and is much damaged and incomplete. It seems to contain an inventory of the temple lands and ornaments. It further purports to contain a copy of an inscription engraved on stone when the original brick temple of Tirupperunturai Udaiyar was converted into a stone temple in the reign of 'Karikala Chola', on which occasion the inscriptions previously engraved on the door jambs and the eaves in stone (kar-kavi) were copied on the temple walls (ARE 134 of 1931-32).

During the Early Chola period, prior to the 22nd year of Parantaka I (Madurai-konda Parakesari), the mandapa in front of the central shrine was added. The central shrine itself was rebuilt in stone in the days of Karikala Aditya II and became old and dilapidated in the intervening two centuries, and in the reign of Kulottunga III was renovated; and at that stage, the old inscription was re-engraved on the wall of the central shrine and a complete inventory of the temple lands and ornaments of the deities of the temple was prepared and recorded on the wall. Thus the central shrine as seen today is a Later Chola structure while the mandapa in front of it belongs to the Early Chola period.

From a Rajaraja inscription of the 14th year, we get to know of the existence of processional images for the Goddess, Periya devar and Astradevar. It records that provision was made for offerings after their ceremonial bath in the (river) Arasilaru by a lady of Araisur in Arkattuk-kurram, a sub-division of Pandi-kulasani valanadu (ARE 137 of 1931-32).

KANCHIPURAM

ARULALA (VARADARAJA) PERUMAL TEMPLE 25 ANANTALVAR SHRINE

This shrine of Anantalvar is situated in the campus of the famous Varadaraja Perumal temple in Chinna Kanchipuram.

From a 35th year record of 'Tribhuvana-Chakravartin Tribhuvanavira deva who, having taken Madurai and the crowned head of the Pandya, was pleased to perform the anointment of heroes and the anointment of victors' (Saka 1134 = A.D. 1212), we learn that Kuvalalapuram (Kolar) Paramesvara Gangakulotbhava Siraimittaperumal (?) Siya-ganga (of the Ganga dynasty), son of Cholendra Simha, built the Anantalvar shrine of stone (ARE 589 of 1919).

Thus this shrine was built by the 35th year of Kulottunga III (A.D. 1212-13).

ADIMULA PERUMAL TEMPLE

26

Nattamangudi is a village near Alambakkam in the Lalgudy

taluk of the Tiruchy district. Nattamangudi and Alambakkam were once part of an ancient city dating back to Pallava days known as Nandipanma-mangalam. During the Early Chola period, it was called Madhurantaka-chaturvedimangalam and included in it were such hamlets as Tiruvisalur, Tirunarayananallur, etc.

There are a number of important temples in the neighbourhood—a Selliyanman temple, an Ayyanar temple, the ancient Vishnu temple now called Varadaraja Perumal temple and the Siva temple known as the Kailasanathar temple, all at Alambakkam.

On the base of the north, west and south walls of the central shrine in the Adimula Perumal temple in the village, there is a 38th year record of 'Tribhuvanachakravartin Tribhuvanavira deva who took Madurai, Karuvur, Iiam and the crowned head of the Pandya and performed the anointment of heroes and victors', which states that, as the brick vimana above the adhishtana of the temple of 'Srinandai Emberuman' at Madhurantaka chaturvedimangalam had become dilapidated, it was repaired and the original inscription of the 2nd year of Rajarajavarman incised on the jagatippadai was re-engraved, so far as it was decipherable. This latter inscription records the sale of some land to 'Sattan Madhavan alias Panchavan Brahmadarayan of Punavayil, the adhi-kari of Uttamasolamangalam, a brahmadeya in Panaiyur nadu, a subdivision of Kuladhipasikhamani valanadu' by a number of brahmanas belonging to the Assembly of Madhurantaka chaturvedimangalam, a brahmadeya in Poygai nadu, a subdivision of Rajendrasimha valanadu, for being assigned to the temple of Tiruvisalur-Pallikonda-Alvar to provide for sacred bath, offerings etc. on amavasya days. Thus the present structure of the central shrine was built in stone in the last years of Kulottunga III (See my Early Chola Temples, p. 262).

There are four records of the days of Tribhuvanachakravartin Rajaraja, who should be Rajaraja III, found on the south wall of the mandapa in front of the central shrine; they relate to his 26th, 27th and 28th years. One registers a gift of land in Mangudi alias Tyagasamudranallur by two brahmanas of Madhurantaka chaturvedimangalam, to the temple of Srinandai-Adimutti Naya-

nar. The next one records a sale of land by Nayaka devichchani, wife of Narayana Bhattan of Kottur, to the temple of Adimutti Nayanar at Srinandai-Madhurantaka-chaturvedimangalam. Of the remaining two, both dated in the 28th year, one registers a sale of land by two brahmanas to the temple and the other registers a gift of land by the Assembly of Uttamasolachaturvedimangalam, an agrahara in Poygai nadu, a subdivision of Vadagarai Rajaraja valanadu, for offerings to the god Srinandai-Adimutti-Nayanar at Tirunarayana-nallur, a hamlet of Madhurantaka chaturvedimangalam (ARE 149, 146, 157 and 148 of 1928-29).

There are two inscriptions of the days of Vira Ramanatha dated in his 13th and 17th years; the former, on the outer eastern wall of the first gopuram records an order of the king, reducing to eight kasus per loom the ayakkadamai on the weavers living within a certain area in Tirumalavadi nadu, who were unable to pay the tax at the rate then prevailing; the other inscription registers a gift of land to the temple for the expenses of the morning services.

We may conclude on the basis of the epigraphical evidence that the temple was in existence in the days of Rajaraja I who should be the Rajarajavarman referred to in the original inscription on the jagatippadai, in view of the fact that it mentions Rajendrasimha valanadu as the district in which the temple was located; the village was named presumably after Parantaka I or Sundara Chola, both of whom bore the title of Madhurantaka. In the closing years of Kulottunga III (by A.D. 1214), the central shrine which was of brick was reconstructed of stone. The mandapa in front and the gopuram should also be taken as being part of the new construction, as we get only inscriptions of the days of Rajaraja III (of his 26th year, i.e., A.D. 1242 onwards) and Vira Ramanatha (13th year) on its walls.

Madhurantaka chaturvedimangalam was originally a brahmadeya in Poygai nadu, a subdivision of Rajendrasimha valanadu. In the days of Rajaraja III, the location is given as Tirunarayana-nallur, a hamlet of Srinandai Madhurantaka chaturvedimangalam, in Poygai nadu, a subdivision of Vadagarai Rajaraja valanadu. The change in the names of the administrative units is worth noting. Rajaraja I's inscription refers to the god as Tiruvisalur Pallikonda alvar. There is a reference to the same deity in an inscription found on the north wall of the central shrine in the Kailasanathar temple at Alambakkam (ARE 718 of 1909). It belongs to the second year of Rajakesarivarman alias Udaiyar Sri Virarajendradeva and records that the Assembly of Madhurantaka chaturvedimangalam met in the temple of Tiruvisalur-Pallikondalvar of that village and made a gift of land to the temple of Tiruvalisvaram Udaiya Mahadevar at Alambakkam (in which are situated a Selliyan temple, an Ayyanar temple, the Varadaraja Perumal temple and the Kailasanathar temple). Alambakkam is referred to as being located in Madhurantaka chaturvedimangalam, a brahmadeya in Poygai nadu, a subdivision of Rajendrasimha valanadu; in fact, Alambakkam is close to Nattamangudi and we can identify Tiruvisalur-Pallikondalvar with Sri-Nandai-Emberuman (also see ARE 704 to 733 of 1909). Alambakkam was originally (Early Chola period) called Nandipanmamangalam; as for instance, the Varadaraja Perumal temple at Alambakkam is called that of Tiruvisalur Perumanadigal of Nandipanmamangalam in an undated inscription of an unidentified Rajakesarivarman. In the Middle Chola period it was renamed Madhurantaka chaturvedimangalam. Evidently the renaming was done after either Parantaka I or Sundara Chola (Madhurantaka).

PANCHANADESVARAR TEMPLE DHARMASAMVARDHINI (DEVI) SHRINE

We have discussed in detail the Panchanadesvarar temple situated in Allur, 10 km. west of Tiruchy on the main road to Karur running south of the Kaveri, in my Early Chola Temples, A.D. 907-985 (pp. 11-32). We are here concerned only with the Amman shrine in the campus of the temple. Today, the deity goes under the name of Dharmasamvardhini.

On the west side of the base of the Amman shrine, which is located in the second prakara of this temple, there is an inscription, attributable to the days of Kulottunga III, which reads as follows:

"Svasti sri : Tribhuvanachakravartigal Maduraiyum Ilamum Pandiyan mudittalaiyum konu virabhishekamum visaiyabhi yandu 38-vadu Tenkarai Irasagambhira valanattu Uraiyr kurrattu Tiru-vadakudi Udaiyar Devargal Sundaranayanar kaikolaril Avattukkattaa ndampirakaarattu elundarulivitta tirukkamak-kottam udaiya Nachchiyarkku tiruvamuduppadik kudalaa devadanam tirunamattuk kaniyai nilattup punpayir seya . . . (land is described) kuliyaal pattu ma nilam ivan taanum tanaturavumuraiyarum tangal somittu aalkooli yatti pasaan mudal tiruttal nilam tirut kadamai ittampirattiyar si-bhandaaratti nindrum kaasu purappattu irukkakkadavadaagavum. kku ittampirattiyar tirukka (ARE 372 of 1903; SII, VIII, No. 685).

From this record we learn that in the 38th regnal year of Kulottunga III the shrine for Amman (tiruk-kamak-kottattunachchiyar) was set up in the second prakara of the local Siva temple dedicated to Panchanadisvarar by Tiruvadagudi Udaiyar Devargal Sundaranayanar (evidently) of Tiruvadagudi in Uraiyr kurram, in Tenkarai Rajagambhira valanadu. The inscription mentions certain gifts of land made by the builder of the shrine in favour of the Consort of the Lord, for food offerings to the deity (amudupadi). The district south of the Kaveri lying between Tiruchy and Karur went under the name of Tenkarai Rajagambhira valanadu, after a surname of Rajaraja II.

Thus the Amman shrine is a foundation of the days of Kulottunga III datable in his thirty-eighth year (corresponding to A.D. 1216). (Pls. 350-1).

28

In the village of Palangur, in the Tirukkoyilur taluk of the South Arcot district, there is a temple dedicated to Kailasanathar.

There is a 38th year inscription on the south wall of this temple relating to Tribhuvanachakravartin Kulottunga Choladeva 'who was pleased to take Madurai and the crowned head of the Pandya'. This record states that one Tulaa Udaiyan Nambiyalvan Vidivitankan constructed a portion of the walls of the temple of Kailasamudaiya Nayanar, built by the Periya-nattar at Palangur in Kurukkai kurram, a subdivision of Miladu alias Jananatha valanadu and also endowed to the temple half of the village of Kadiyaru (ARE 210 & 211 of 1936-37).

Thus this temple could be assigned to the period of Kulottunga III.

There is a 33rd year record of a Kulottunga Choladeva, which is found on the south side of the rock adjacent to the Aiyankoyil kulam (tank); this records the construction of a shrine for Pillaiyar and a gift of 50 kuli of land for worship therein by Olvenran, son of Tyagamugil Udaiyan of Tangedilanallur (ARE 212 of 1936-37).
We do not know to which Kulottunga this record refers.

TIRUVARANGULAM

29 HARATIRTTHESVARAR TEMPLE, BRIHADAMBAL (AMMAN) SHRINE

Tiruvarangulam is a small village situated about 9 km. south of Pudukkottai town close to the road leading to Arantangi.
There is a big temple here dedicated to Haratirthesvarar; it is rich in historical inscriptional material covering the Chola and Later Pandya periods and has many post-Pandyan records also.
The Amman in this temple is Brihadambal, for whom a separate shrine was built during the Later Chola period.

From an inscription found on the east wall of the Brihadambal shrine, relating to the 39th year of Tribhuvanachakravartin Kulottunga Chola deva 'who was pleased to take Madurai and the crowned head of the Pandya', we come to know that this shrine was built by Kannudaiya Perumal alias Piratti Alvar, the queen of Kodungunram Udaiyar alias Nishadaraja and daughter of Konandar alias Nishadaraya of Ponnamarapadi in Puramalai nadu, a subdivision of Rajendrasola valanadu in Rajaraja Pandi nadu (= A.D. 1217, ARE 320 of 1914). With the defeat of Kulottunga III at the hands of Maravarman Sundara Pandya I in the year A.D. 1216, this region passed over to the control of the Pandyas, and from a record of the 15th year of this (Pandyan) ruler (A.D. 1231), we learn of gifts being given for offerings to the image of Tirukkamakkottam Udaiya Nampirat-tiyar, as the Amman is called in the inscriptions, by Maravarman alias Tribhuvanachakravartin Sundara Pandya Deva who 'having been pleased to take the Chola country, was pleased to perform the virabhishekam at Mudikondasolapuram' (ARE 322 of 1914).

From certain inscriptions found on the second gopuram (ARE 310 to 316 of 1914), we learn that this gopuram and the wall of enclosure (of stone) were built at the time of a Maravarman Sundara Pandya by one Gangeyarayar, a native of Perunjunaipur. The gopuram was named after this Gangeyarayar. Who this Maravarman Sundara Pandya is, whether he is the one who took the Chola crown, it is difficult to say. We are consequently unable to fix the date of the gopuram and the madil.

From some Vijayanagara records found on the walls of this shrine, we learn i) that in Saka 1438, the proceeds of certain taxes were gifted for celebrating the car festival of Arangulanathar by Kamalalayappadi Monnaiappan of Tiruvarur for the merit of Vira Narasinga Nayakar; ii) that in Saka 1452, the residents of Valla nadu in Rajaraja valanadu gave certain lands as kaniatchi to Sokkanar Pallavarayar, a native of Padaiparru, in Kana nadu alias Virudarajabhayankara valanadu; and iii) that in Saka 1453, land was gifted to a matha situated in the market street called Vallanadan Perunderu in the village of Arangulanathar-tiruppadaividu (ARE 319, 318 and 317 of 1915). More than three hundred years later, in Saka 1789 (i.e., A.D. 1867), a local Chieftain Ravachanda renovated the Amman shrine and performed the kumbhabhishekam ceremony of the God Haratirthesvarar and the Goddess Brihadambal (ARE 325 of 1914 in Sanskrit and Telugu engraved on the left side of the first gopuram).

Thus, the Amman shrine, dedicated to Brihadambal, called in inscriptions merely Tirukkamak-kottam-udaiya Nachchiyar, was built by the Nishadaraja Chiefs who ruled this region with their headquarters at Ponnamaravati. We have referred to these Chiefs when dealing with the temple of Cholisvaram at Ponnamaravati.

VISHNU TEMPLE

In the village of Salukki in the North Arcot district, there is an ancient Vishnu temple. From an inscription found in this temple, we get to know that it was named originally as Sola-kerala vinnagaram. This title (Sola-keralan) was assumed by Kulottunga III after his conquest of Karuvur. In the fourth year of Rajaraja III, one Puttulan Kaman Vaisravan completed the temple by building the mandapa, the sopana and the tiru-vasal (gateway) in stone and covered them with plates (ARE 477 of 1920).

This temple belongs to the reign of Kulottunga III and must have come into being after his Karuvur conquest. It is an otherwise non-dated temple.

Rajaraja III

Rajaraja III, the son and successor of Kulottunga III, had a long and unhappy rule. Ascending the throne in A.D. 1216 under such dark forebodings on the future of the empire, he was to drift through life like a hapless leaf in a storm. Indignities such as the Cholas as a dynasty had never suffered before were heaped upon him concentratedly during his reign. The empire was disintegrating before his eyes, and he looked on in utter helplessness; the roles were changed between the Cholas and the Pandyas; the Cholas who had gone to the rescue of other kings and kingdoms now sought succour from their western counterparts—the Hoysalas. Marital involvement with, and consequent sympathy from, the Hoysalas helped Rajaraja III to stem the tide of events that were crowding over one another to drive the Cholas to their doom. After thirty years of ignominious rule, the worst ever in Chola history, he stepped down in A.D. 1246 in favour of Rajendra III, his successor; but it seems probable that he lived on for another decade and more, his latest records dating to as late as A.D. 1260. His inscriptions are found in the districts of Tanjavur, South Arcot, North Arcot, Chingleput, Chittoor, Tiruchy, and to some extent in Salem, Cuddapah and Nellore. The Pandyan kingdom was no longer part of the Chola empire, nor for that matter Vengi. The Kakatiyas of Warangal were at the peak of their glory and their great ruler Ganapati (A.D. 1199–1262) dominated the Krishna-Godavari delta, which became an integral part of the Kakatiya kingdom. The Telugu-Chodas, fortunately friendly and loyal to Rajaraja III and the Cholas generally, functioned as a buffer, allowing the Chola empire to retain its boundaries without any great change since the closing days of Kulottunga III.

After the retaliatory celebration in A.D. 1218 of Virabhishekam and Vijayabhishekam by Maravarman Sundara Pandya I at the Chola capital of Mudikondasolapuram (which as mentioned earlier had become the political and cultural fulcrum of the Chola kingdom in spite of Gangaikondasolapuram continuing as the formal Chola capital) imitative in details of the same celebrations performed in Madurai (in about A.D. 1205) by Kulottunga III, Sundara Pandya gave back the Chola crown and the title of Cholapati to Rajaraja III. These celebrations in the Abhisheka mandapa at Ayirattali might have formally rung the curtain on the Chola kingdom, but for his act of generosity (or was it by expediency or compulsion not quite apparent to us?) in restoring the kingdom to Rajaraja III. Maravarman Sundara Pandya came to be known by the birudas 'Sonadu-konda-Sundara Pandyan' ('he who took the Cho (Chola) nadu') and also 'So-nadu-valangiya Sundara-Pandyan' ('he who gave back the Chola kingdom'). Ballala II (A.D. 1173–1220), who was ruling the Hoysala kingdom during these eventful years, had among his queens a Chola Mahadevi, obviously a Chola princess, and hence this marital tie should have brought Ballala rushing to the aid of the Chola in his hour of distress, and, according to one of his inscriptions, his son Vira Narasimha marched to Srirangam in A.D. 1217 at the head of a big army and demonstrated his intentions to stand by his maternal uncle. Ballala came to be called 'Chola Rajya Pratishtacharya' (the 'preserver of the Chola kingdom') and 'Pandyagajakesari' (the 'Lion to the Pandyan elephant'). The son Vira Narasimha shared the credit for stemming Pandyan inroads into Chola territory by assuming the titles of 'Chola-kula-rakshaka' and 'Mahatoorvipala Nirmulakah'.

We saw elsewhere that in the Nadu nadu region covered by the North Arcot, Salem and portions of the South Arcot districts, a line of local Chiefs claiming Pallava descent and calling themselves Kadavarayars was emerging into prominence in the reigns of Rajaraja II, Rajadhiraja II and Kulottunga III. They ruled from Kudal, and under Manavalapperumal moved into Senda-mangalam, a new fortified city, which they raised as their capital. Their meteoric rise and the brilliant military operations of Manavala's son Kopperunjinga, a contemporary of Rajaraja III and Rajendra III, further shook the Chola kingdom to its very foundations. Manavala, in spite of his growing might and the waning Chola authority, continued to maintain his feudal relationship to the Chola emperor, but his son, the more ambitious and brilliant warrior, statesman and strategist, gradually asserted his independence and authority. Seeing the growing might of the Kadava (Pallava) prince Kopperunjinga, Hoysala Vira Narasimha would appear to have realised early in the reign of Rajaraja III that the Kadava from Sendamangalam was going to be a thorn in the Chola side, and even in the second regnal year of Rajaraja III had made successful efforts to contain the Kadava's growing power and authority. In an inscription dated in A.D. 1218-19, Vira Narasimha calls himself Kanchi-Kanchana Kadavakulantaka and Kadavaraya disapatta. Kanchipuram was perhaps under Hoysala control by about this period. Hoysala inroads into the Pallava domain would appear to have become a matter of frequent occurrence after Kanchi came under their control; sometime after Kanchi was occupied, Tiruvadatturai, a village in the Vriddhachalam taluk, was attacked and sacked and terror struck among the people of this area. Perhaps this was part of the campaign to contain the Kadava chief Kopperunjinga. Affairs nearer the Chola capital were also not auguring well for the future of the Chola dynasty. In the fifth year of Rajaraja III (A.D. 1221-22), there were disturbances even in the heartland of the kingdom, viz., the Tanjavur region. These are described as duritangal (troubles) and kshobham (agitation). They were, perhaps, indicative of the general unrest in the kingdom. Even as early as the seventh regnal year of Rajaraja III (A.D. 1222-23), Kopperunjinga waged war on the Telugu Choda, Viranarasimha Yadavaraya, an ally of Rajaraja III, and worsted him in the battle of Uratti.

In spite of all these disturbing signs of impending disintegration of the empire, Rajaraja III appears to have ventured to pick up a quarrel with Maravarman Sundara Pandya by refusing to pay him the tribute agreed to at Ponnamaravati. "The Chola no longer considered it proper course to owe allegiance to the ruler who had bestowed the crown on him on a former occasion and declined to do the usual honour to the commands (of the Pandya), refused to pay the usual tribute, but instead despatched a large army and an advance guard.”:

innam vali paduvam ennadu irai marutta
tusiyyum peraniyum*

(Maravarman Sundara Pandya's 12th year (A.D. 1228); Pudukkottai Inscriptions, No. 277). This foolish venture ended in disaster. The army was met by the Pandyan king and thrown back with severe casualties, and Maravarman pressed home the victory by marching to the heart of the Chola country, and triumphantly entered the Chola capital of Mudikondasolapuram. The defeat was total and the Chola position became desperate. The chief queen and the numerous women in the royal harem were made to carry the auspicious water-pot and the ashta-mangalas before the Pandyan ruler to 'welcome' him to the Chola capital where he performed a grand Vijayabhishekam.

“ Valavan mudal devi enru per perra vanji mudataya pey valayar mangalanga lettum manikkait talattendit mudikondasolapura mandapattup pukku-t vijayabhishekam panni arul seydu ”

In utter disarray, Rajaraja abandoned the capital and sought to join the Kuntala (Hoysala) ruler who was his ally, but, on the way, the Kadava Chief Kopperunjinga, finding this the most propitious moment to assert his independence, intercepted the Chola king and his followers at Tellaru and routed them in battle (A.D. 1231); the Chola king, his Ministers and Queens and the entire entourage were taken prisoner and kept in confinement in his capital city of 'Jayantangumangalam' (Sendamangalam). The Vayalur inscription reads:

*Svasti Sri: Sakalabhuvanachakravartigal
Sri Kopperunjangan Solanai Tallarril (Tellarril) venru sakala parichchinnamum kondu, Solanai siraiyilittu Sonadu konda alagiya*

Siyan enru . . .

Hoysala Vira Narasimha, distressed by the miserable fate that had befallen his relative, the Chola king, left his capital Dorasamudra vowing that he would not allow his kalam (trumpet) to be blown until after he had reestablished his name as the defender of the Chola monarchy ('Chola mandala-pratishthacharya'). On the way, he routed the king of Magara (parts of Salem and South Arcot districts), who was evidently an ally of the Pandya and the Kadava, and encamped at Pachchur, three kilometres north of Srirangam, across the Kollidam. From there he sent an expeditionary force under dandanayakas Appanna and Samudra Gopayya to invade the Kadava territory. They sacked Elleri and Kalliyur-mulai and in rapid marches demonstrated the wrath of the Hoysala, covering Toludagaiyur (held by Solakon, a Chief under Kopperunjinga), worshipped the Lord of Tillai and devastated Tondamanallur, Tiruvadi and Tiruvakkarai, all south of the river Varanavasi (the Gadilam) and east of Sendamangalam and were about to lay siege to the Pallava capital of Sendamangalam. Kopperunjinga sensed danger to his very existence and discreetly released the Chola king and his retinue after negotiating truce with Narasimha. Very interesting (and a wealth of) material on these dramatic events is found in the Gadyakarnamrita, the 16th year inscription of Rajaraja III from Tiruvahindrapuram (ARE 142 of 1902), the Vayalur inscription and many other sources. Perhaps the release of the Chola king was brought about at Tiruvahindrapuram (A.D. 1231). But the Kadava was only temporarily subdued; records go to show that the Hoysala king was still campaigning against him for another four years at least, for we hear of Vira Somesvara camping at Mangalam (a village about 16 kilometres south-west of Sendamangalam, in the Vriddhachalam taluk of the South Arcot district) in the course of such a campaign, in A.D. 1236. Vira Narasimha, stationing himself on the northern banks of the Kollidam, campaigned vigorously against the Pandyas. Releasing Rajaraja III was only a part of the objective. The Pandyan upstart Maravarman Sundara Pandya was to be told his place. The Pandyan reaction led to the battle of Mahendramangalam (a village in Tiruchy district) and the defeat of Sundara Pandya.

The latter agreed to recognise Rajaraja III as the Chola king. Hoysala forces now had the full run of the Pandyan territory. They marched upto Ramesvaram, formally establishing their victory over the Pandyan ruler. But these victories were sublimated into alliances which were cemented possibly by marriages among the three ruling dynasties. A political settlement and not an absorption by conquest was effected. Maravarman Sundara Pandya and Rajaraja III evidently married the daughters of Vira Narasimha II (and sisters of Vira Somesvara).

Maravarman Sundara Pandya I, the avenger of the Pandyan defeat at Madurai, died in A.D. 1238, after a scintillating rule of twenty-two eventful years. He was succeeded by Maravarman Sundara Pandya II, a colourless personality who gave the Chola king no further trouble. Finding the Pandyan kingdom under a weakling, and the Chola ruler tired of his very existence after these hectic years and hapless surrender to Hoysala patronage, the Kadava chief 'Maha Rajasimha' (Kopperunjinga) saw the time propitious to declare his long-nurtured intention of becoming an independent ruler. His inscriptions from A.D. 1243 are recorded with his own regnal years and this independent status he virtually maintained till his death (A.D. 1279), over a span of thirtysix years. Rajaraja III, with the Hoysala Vira Narasimha (II) overseeing the southern states, led a peaceful existence for the remaining years of his rule till A.D. 1246.

He crowned Rajendra III in A.D. 1246 as the Chola king and retired into private life. Thus ended an unhappy chapter in Chola history which had known no weaklings for over three hundred years.

That the Hoysalas were all over the Chola kingdom is attested by a number of inscriptions relating to gifts to temples by military generals of the Hoysala armies stationed in various parts of the Chola region. Bachala devi, daughter of Bhutadeva Nayaka of Dorasamudra, makes a gift of a lamp to Attiyur Alvar of Kanchipuram in A.D. 1227 (ARE 349 of 1919; 11th year). Ammanna Dandanayaka makes a gift of another lamp in the 14th regnal year (ARE 408 of 1919; A.D. 1230). Another general, Gopayya Dandanayaka, donates a whole village to the same temple in

A.D. 1231 (ARE 404 of 1919; 15th year). These gifts pour on for many more years. A pradhani of Vira Somesvara, son and successor of Vira Narasimha (II), makes a gift in the 20th year (A.D. 1236) at Kanchipuram (ARE 369 of 1919). There were other important stations where Hoysala troops (bherundas) were stationed: Tirumalavadi (Vallala Dandanayaka, a pradhani of Vira Narasimha), Tirugokarnam (near Pudukkottai) where Vira Narasimha's queen Somaladevi's siruppillaigal (her personal establishment) made a gift, etc. The position in the Pandyan region was not very different. Singanna Dandanayaka invaded the Vedaranyam region of the Chola kingdom presumaby via Kana nadu and wrought death and destruction on the locality. This was sometime prior to A.D. 1241. Ravi deva, a general of Hoysala Vira Somesvara, captured the Kana nadu region, south of Tirugokarnam, sometime before A.D. 1245.

Temples of Rajaraja III's Time

1 ATITHISVARAR TEMPLE (VIDUGADALAGISVARAM UDAIYAR SHRINE)

Vaniyambadi today is an important commercial centre and town in the Arni sub-division of the North Arcot district. It is on the Madras-Coimbatore rail link, about 200 km. from Madras City in an almost westerly direction and about 20 km. south of Jalarpet rail junction.

There is a temple here called the Atithisvarar temple. In the 11th and 12th centuries, this area was ruled by a set of powerful local Chiefs known as the Adigaimans owing allegiance to the Cholas. This temple received much attention during their rule.

In the second prakara north wall of this temple there is an inscription dated in Saka 1143 (A.D.1221) which mentions that Vijayanallulan Singan Aludaiyan Nulambarayan of Arumbakkam in Tirumunaippadi nadu caused the construction of a shrine upto the stupi for the deity Vidugadalagisvaram udaiyar for whom he made a gift of ten cows and one bull for three sandhi lamps and entrusted the charity to the Sivabrahmanas for maintenance. From the same inscription we get to know that another sandhi lamp was set up by Kuttadum pillai, son of Urandai, for which purpose the Sivabrahmanas received $1\frac{1}{2}$ pon (ARE 185 of 1963-64). We have already seen that Vidugadalagiya Perumal was the son and successor of Rajaraja, the Tagadur Chief, and was a feudatory of Kulottunga III. This local Chief evidently outlived Kulottunga III and continued as a nominal feudatory of Rajaraja III, though it seems more likely, from the recording of the inscription in the Saka era, that he was virtually semi-independent after the third Madurai war and the defeat of Kulottunga III in the last years of his reign.

VINAYAKA PILLAIYAR SHRINE

In the main temple in Nallur, a village in the Tanjavur district, there is a shrine for Ganapati.

From an inscription of the fifth year of Rajaraja III (A.D. 1221: ARE 58 of 1911), we find that the temple servants of the Nallur temple (pala-pani-nivandakkarar) built this shrine calling it the Agambadi Vinayakappillaiyar temple; they sold to the temple 100 kuli of land at 40 kasu per kuli, together with four yielding coconut trees costing 600 kasu and four unyielding trees costing 400 kasu.

This is a dated shrine of the days of Rajaraja III.

UDVAHANATHASVAMIN TEMPLE AMMAN SHRINE

Tirumananjeri and its temple of Udvahanathasvamin have already been dealt with in an earlier volume (Early Chola Temples, pp. 188-90).

A record of the seventh year of Rajaraja III found in this temple refers to the benefactions of a noble lady, who was the wife of Kannamangalam Udaiyan Vimappillai, and daughter of Puliur Udaiyan Aditta Devan, the Chief of Milalai nadu. She raised money by public subscription for building the shrine of the Goddess in the local temple, for erecting (setting up) a guhāi called 'Alala-sundara' for the use of Pugalivendar of Pundi and for offerings, lamps, etc. Thus the Amman shrine can be attributed to this period (seventh year of Rajaraja III = A.D. 1223).

4 KARUMANIKKAP-PERUMAL TEMPLE

Tummuru or Tumuru is a village in the Nellore district of Andhra Pradesh and the local Vishnu temple is dedicated to Karumanikkap-Perumal. We learn from an inscription found in this temple that one Tyagasamudrapettai Vimarasan, belonging to the 'kingdom' of Madhurantaka Pottapichchola alias Gandagopalan Tirukkalattidevan, built the temple and the tirumaligai of Karumanikkapperumal in Tumbaiyur alias Jayangondasola chaturvedimangalam (N.I.S. 12). This record is dated in the 13th regnal year of Rajaraja III and could therefore be dated to A.D. 1229.

In the 23rd year of this ruler, a prominent local citizen, Erama Reddi, son of Rajendra Muvendavelan, the kaniyalan of Tiruvambur, gave one madai for the sandhi vilakku to Karumanikkap-Perumal (N.I.S. 17).

MAYURAM

5 MAYURANATHASVAMIN TEMPLE AVAYAMBAL (AMMAN) SHRINE

Mayuram is the headquarters of the taluk of the same name in the Tanjavur district.

We have discussed the Mayuranathasvamin temple here and its renovation by Sembiyan Mahadevi in the days of Uttama Chola and also the retention of the original stone devakoshtha sculptures during the later reconstruction of the temple by the Nagarattars of Chettinad (vide my Early Chola Temples, A.D. 907-985, p. 197).

There is an inscription of the 14th regnal year of Tribhuvana-chakravartin Rajaraja III (A.D. 1229) found in one of the shrines on the north side of this temple. It refers to the existence of a shrine for, and records a gift of land to, the goddess called Tirup-Palliyarai-Nachchiar in the temple of Tiru-mayil-aduturai Nayanar (ARE 372 of 1907; also EI, X, p. 134).

The Amman shrine would thus appear to have come into existence during the period of Rajaraja III. Till then, there must have been only a Bhogasakti bronze in the sanctum of the central shrine as was the practice till separate Amman shrines were introduced by Kulottunga I.

This shrine has a fine set of bronzes.

ARUMBAVUR

KAILASANATHASVAMIN (VADA-KAILASAM-UDAIYA NAYANAR) TEMPLE 6

Arumbavur lies in the region which was dominated by the Magadai chiefs in the 13th century, among whom was the well-known Chief Rajarajadeva Ponparappinan alias Kulottungasola Vanakkovaraiyar. Arumbavur, called in local inscriptions Arumbar, has a Siva temple now known as that of Kailasanathasvamin. In earlier days it went under the name of Vada-Kailasam-Udaiya Nayanar temple.

We have already seen that the region falling under Tiruchy, North Arcot, portions of Salem, and areas of South Arcot districts came under the rule of powerful local chieftains who wielded considerable local authority during the late 12th and the whole of the 13th century, with headquarters at Aragalur, Koval, etc.

There are five inscriptions on the walls of this temple belonging to the days of Rajaraja III, ranging from his 14th to his 28th years. There is no foundation inscription.

On the west wall of the central shrine, there is an inscription of his 14th year (ARE 5 of 1913). It records that all devadana lands of the temple and those of Tiruk-kattu-Udaiya Nayanar, Durga, Pidari and Ayyanar, situated in this village and at Rajarajanallur and Kiraippadi, were made tax-free by the Chief Vanakkovaraiyanar. The next inscription, of the 16th regnal year, records a gift of land to this temple, which is called here as that of Vada-Kailayam-Udaiya Nayanar at Arumbar, by one Malaiyan Vanarayan (ARE 3 of 1913). Another of the same year records a grant of land to a private individual by a Vanakkovaraian (ARE 4 of 1913). An inscription of the 23rd year specifies the extent of the devadana lands 'below the tanks Sirreri and Pereri of Arumbar' as fixed by Tondaiman Perumal Pillai alias Sediraya devan. A measuring rod called magadesan (named so after the Magadai chief) is mentioned in the inscription (ARE 7 of 1913). The community priests living in the districts of Vembar nadu, Perambalur nadu and Mulai nadu granted the taxes due to them from the devadana villages for repairs in the temples of Vada-Kailayam-Udaiya Nayanar and Kulottunga-Vinnagara-Emperuman at Arumbar. The charitable disposition of the priests discloses their devotion to the institutions in their charge and spirit of self-sacrifice. Some scholars have drawn an unfavourable and undeserved picture of their greed and selfishness (ARE 6 of 1913). (Pls. 354-360).

From inscriptional evidence, this temple could be safely assigned to the reign of Rajaraja III, though we do not have a foundation inscription to place this deduction beyond doubt.

The existence here once of a Vishnu temple named after a Kulottunga is brought out by the last-cited inscription. We do not know its location and identity.

APATSAHAYESVARAR TEMPLE

Alangudi is a village in the Papanasam taluk about 15 km. south of Kumbakonam in the Tanjavur district. Its ancient name was Irumbulai, and, during the days of the Cholas, it became part of Jananatha chaturvedimangalam, located in Mudikondasola valanadu. The temple here is dedicated to Apatsahayesvarar. We have already dealt with this temple under 'Vikrama Chola's Temples' (Ch. 4). It received considerable attention during the days of Vikrama Chola. It was perhaps extensively remodelled by him. On the walls of the main shrine is one of Vikrama Chola's more important inscriptions, dealing with his extensive contributions to temple building activity, particularly at Chidambaram.

An inscription found in this temple and dated in the 15th regnal year of Rajaraja III (= A.D. 1231) (with the sir manni irunangu introduction) mentions that land was gifted by Vanadaraya alias Rajendra Korramangala Nadalvan for constructing with stone the second prakara of the temple and for offerings (ARE 516 of 1920). Thus additions were made to this temple during the days of Rajaraja III.

MANUMASIDDHISVARAM TEMPLE

Nellore was the headquarters of the Telugu Chodas, and became important during the late 12th and the entire 13th century. Close allies of the Cholas, they played a vital role in the preservation of the Chola kingdom during the days of Rajaraja III.

We infer from a record found at the Palaivananathar temple at Tiruppalaivanam in the Chingleput district and dated in Saka 1152 (corresponding to the 15th year of Rajaraja III, i.e., A.D. 1231) that there was a temple by the name of Manumasiddhisvaram at Nellore. Evidently the temple was built during the days of Madhurantaka Pottapichchola Manumasiddharasan Tirukkalattidevan alias Gandagopalan, who was a contemporary of Rajaraja III and a loyal, though nominal, feudatory. The temple was named after him. We shall see that another temple, also called Manumasiddhisvaram Udaiyar temple, was built at the close-by port of Krishnapatnam, during the same rule. The Tiruppalaivanam record mentions that one Panaiyandai alias Gandagopala Manikkam, the sister of Sittama deviyar, was a devaradiyar (a lady dedicated to the service of the temple) in the temple of Manumasiddhisvaram at Nellore and that Gandagopala (the ruler) gave some lands as a gift on behalf of Panaiyandai for feeding devotees in the Gandagopala-manikka madam at Tiruppalaivanam and for the maintenance of a garden (ARE 830 of 1929). We have already noticed that the Telugu Chodas had control over the Kanchipuram region during this period.

KOVILUR (USATTANAM)

9 MANTRAPURISVARAR (USATTANAM UDAIYA NAYANAR) TEMPLE, AMMAN SHRINE

Kovilur is in the Pattukkottai taluk of the Tanjavur district. There is a Siva temple here called that of Mantrapurisvarar. In the past, the place was named Usattanam and the presiding deity of this temple was called Usattanam Udaiya Nayanar.

There are forty-seven inscriptions in this temple, engraved on the walls of the mandapa in front of the central shrine, the verandah and the inner gopuram. They belong to the days of three of the Later Cholas, viz., Vikrama Chola, Rajaraja III, Rajendra Chola III, and of the Later Pandyas. None of them is recorded on the walls of the central shrine. It has to be presumed that all the early records before the days of Vikrama Chola suffered destruction at the time of its renovation.

The earliest inscription is one of the fifth year of Tribhuvana-chakravartin Vikrama Chola found on the north wall of the mandapa in front of the central shrine (ARE 194 of 1908). It mentions a gift of land to the Lord of Sakkanam (a mistake for Sattanam or Usattanam) alias Kerala-kulasani chaturvedimangalam (Kerala kulasani being a title of Rajaraja I, A.D. 985–1014). It is a pity that all the early records of this temple in the southern border of Chola desa have been destroyed during its renovation.

Another, later, unfinished, record gives the boundaries of certain rent-free lands belonging to the temple and incidentally mentions the name of Periya devar Vikrama Chola devar (ARE 200 of 1908).

There are two inscriptions of the 25th year of 'Kulottunga Chola devar who took Madurai, Ilam and the Pandyan head', viz., Kulottunga III. The first (ARE 181 of 1908) mentions a gift of a servant to the temple of Usattanam Udaiya Nayanar by a native of Salgalur in Idaikka nadu, a subdivision of Rajendra-sola valanadu. The other (ARE 183 of 1908), built in at the end, records a gift of land to the temple of Usattanam Udaiya Nayanar at Usattanam, a brahmadeya in Purangarambai nadu, a subdivision of Rajendrasola valanadu.

There are seven inscriptions which could be assigned to the days of Rajaraja III (A.D. 1216-46). One, of his eighth year (A.D. 1223), which is found on the walls of the Chandesvarar shrine (ARE 215 of 1908), records a gift of land for offerings to the image of Pallavanisvaram Udaiya Nayanar set up in the temple by Pichchan Pallavarayan, a native of Poiyyur. An inscription of his tenth year (on the north wall of the mandapa, ARE 197 of 1908) mentions that the local Assembly of Usattanam assigned for temple repairs certain taxes collected on temple lands upto the tenth year.

The next inscription is important. It relates to the 20th year of Rajaraja III, equal to A.D. 1237 (ARE 195 of 1908). It records a gift of land by the Assembly of Peruvalvutanda chaturvedimangalam (modern Peruvalandan) in Purangarambai nadu of Rajendrasola valanadu for offerings to the shrine of Tirukkamakottam Udaiya Periya Nachchiar (the Amman shrine) set up by Prince Purosaikkudaiyar. The gift was made for the health of the king and for the victory of Prince Perungolar, evidently, a local Chola feudatory. The date of this Amman temple is thus well attested (built in or about A.D. 1237).

The next record which is dated in the 21st year (ARE 196 of 1908) refers to a gift of land to this Amman shrine by the Assembly of Suttamalli chaturvedimangalam, which was in charge of the village duties (grama karyam), for the health of the king and for the victory of (the same) prince Perungolar, the local Chief mentioned in the earlier inscription.

A record of the 26th year mentions a gift of land in Sundarasolapuram to the temple by the order of Villupadarayan, a native of SIRRARRUKKADU in Pandyakulasani valanadu (ARE 182 of 1908). Another, of the 30th year (ARE 193 of 1908), registers a gift of land to the shrine of Subrahmanyar (Parivara devata?) by the Assembly of Peruvalandan perumal chaturvedimangalam

Surya Devar shrine

An inscription (ARE 198 of 1908) of the 11th regnal year of Rajaraja III (i.e., A.D. 1227) records a gift of land for offerings to the shrine of Surya devar in the temple of Usattanam Udaiyar by the residents of Vikramabharanapuram in Ambar nadu. In the 31st year of this king, another gift of land was made to this deity by the residents of Parantakapuram in Ambar nadu (ARE 199 of 1908).

The construction of an independent Amman shrine in the temple premises and the setting up of a shrine for Subrahmanyar and the installation of an image of Surya devar in this temple are of great importance. (We shall deal with further developments in this temple under 'Temples of Rajendra III's Time', Chapter 16).

(alias Gandagopala chaturvedimangalam)

KALAMEGHAPPERUMAL TEMPLE (GANDAGOPALA VINNAGAR)

We learn from an inscription found in Kanchipuram (ARE 415 of 1919) that a temple dedicated to Vishnu, called that of Gandagopala Vinnagar Kalameghapperumal, was in existence by the 22nd year of Rajaraja III and that the village of Pundi was given as tiruvidaiyattam by Madhurantaka Pottapichchola Manumasiddharasan Tirukkalatti devan alias Gandagopalan. This Vishnu temple must have been built around A.D. 1238.

PULIVAYMAHAMUNISVARAR (VYAKKIRAPADA-MAMUNISURAM UDAIYAR) TEMPLE 11

Pulivay is now a small village in the Chingleput taluk of the district of the same name. Here is located a small temple named the Mahamunisvarar temple. In ancient days, the deity bore the name of Vyaghrapada-Mahamunisvaram Udaiyar.

There are three records on the south wall of this temple, one of which is undated; the other two belong to the 23rd year of Tribhuvanachakravartin Rajaraja devar (III). The undated record, which is fragmentary, mentions that one Raman Tali alias Sivabhattan, belonging to the regiment of Narasinga Vikkiramavirar of the king's army, built the temple and made a gift of 90 sheep for a lamp (ARE 159 of 1923). One of the dated ones registers a gift of 1,000 kasus by a certain Rajaraja Villuparaiyan for a twilight lamp to the god Vyakkirapada-Mamunisuram Udaiyar at Pulivay in Pulivala nadu, a subdivision of Kaliyur kottam, a district of Jayangondasola mandalam (ARE 157 of 1923); the other records that the repair of the temple was the work of Peruman alias Gandagopalan-Pichchan of Nerkuppai in Tanjavur kurram, a subdivision of Pandikulasani valanadu. A later Kannada inscription on the door jamb of the temple records the reconstruction of a mandapa for the god Mahamunisvarar by Sangaya and Tayappa, sons of the Mahapradhana Mamchapa Danayakka Vodeyar (ARE 160 of 1923).

This temple is a foundation of the early 13th century and was built before the 23rd year of Rajaraja III (also see The Colas by K. A. Nilakanta Sastri, p. 457).

NEYYADIPPAKKAMAMMAN SHRINE

Neyyadippakkam is a village in the Chingleput taluk, where there is a temple built during the Later Chola period.

From an inscription dated in the 27th year of Rajaraja III found in this temple, it is learnt that one Igaiyamandal belonging to the village of Naiyadarpakkam (which was the ancient name of the present-day village of Neyyadippakkam) constructed a temple in stone in this village and that Kottattal Perumal Igaiyamandal gave a bell and an incense-burner (dhupa) for the worship of the Goddess. Thus this temple came into being (by A.D. 1243) in the closing years of Rajaraja III's rule (ARE 262 of 1922).

Vayalaikkavur is a small village in the Chingleput district. There is a small Siva temple in this village.

From an inscription dated in the 27th year of Rajaraja III found in this temple, we learn that one Varanavasi Udaiyan Kalappalan constructed a stone temple and a mandapa at the village of Vayalaikkavur and consecrated the image of the God. He also made an endowment of one madai for burning a perpetual lamp.

This is a dated temple (A.D. 1243) which came into existence in the closing years of Rajaraja III's reign.

VAIKUNTHAPERUMAL TEMPLE

We have discussed the Siva temple in this locality in Section 3 of the chapter on 'Temples of Kulottunga II's days'. There is a Vishnu temple here, close to the Siva temple. The deity is now called Vaikuntha Perumal. In the earlier days it was named, as seen from inscriptions, Tiru-mer-Koyil-Virrirunda Perumal. Both the main shrine and the Consort's shrine (Tayar sannidhi) attached to it belong to the period of Rajaraja III.

There are five inscriptions found on the walls of the shrines of this temple. Four of them are inscribed on the walls of the central (Vishnu) shrine and one in the Consort's shrine. Three of the four in the main shrine belong to the same year, viz., the 28th year of Rajaraja III, and record gifts of lamps (ARE 221, 222 and 223 of 1901). The fourth one on the Vishnu shrine records the building, by the 23rd year of that ruler, of the central shrine, the ardhamandapa, another mandapa, the sopana (the flight of steps) and the sripitham for Vishnu (ARE 224 of 1901). The relevant portion of this inscription reads as follows:

"Tribhuvanachakravartigal Sri Rajaraja devarkku yandu 23-avadu Jayangondasola mandalattu Eyirkkottattu Magaral nattu Magaral Tiru merk koyil Virrirunda Emperuman koyil Sri-vimanamum tiru-ardhamandapamum tiru-mandapamum sopanamum sri-pithamum ivvur pattiya Poyan-maniyan Perugan Seyvittan—Harihi".

The inscription thus records that the temple complex was "caused to be built (seyvittan) by Poyan Maniyan Perugan of the same place, viz., Magaral, situated in Magaral nadu, in the district of Eyirk-kottam in the province of Jayangondasola mandalam". The temple must have been completed in or possibly before the 23rd regnal year of Rajaraja III (A.D. 1239), the date of the inscription. This is thus a dated temple, one of the few with a regular foundation inscription.

About the same time as the construction of the central Vishnu shrine was in progress, the shrine of the Consort must also have been under construction and was in fact completed much earlier: above the entrance to this shrine, there is an inscription in Tamil verse which states that it was built in the sixth year of Rajaraja III (A.D. 1222). The central shrine of Vishnu with all its adjuncts obviously took a longer time to complete.*

1) Nandikesvarasvamin temple and Nallanayaki amman shrine

2) Kasi Visvanathasvamin temple

*ARE 225 of 1901 (SII, VII, No. 375): "Svasti Sri Sri Rajarajar ... Tiruvankalan Murugan Tirukkoyil-seydan sirandu".

3) Venugopalasvamin (Vishnu) temple

The small town of Turaiyur is situated in the taluk of the same name in the Tiruchy district. It lies north of Namakkal. There are three temples here, which have to be assigned to the thirteenth century A.D. According to a local inscription, this place is said to be on the banks of Kilp-palaru in Panchil kurram, a subdivision of Rajaraja valanadu. It finds mention in the Karandai Tamil Sangam Plates of Rajendra I.

Of the three temples, the most important is the one dedicated to Nandikesvarar. In ancient days, it went under the name of Tiruvalisvaram Udaiya Nayanar temple (ARE 701 of 1908). It consists of the garbhagriha, the antarala, the snapana-mandapa, the mukhamandapa and the mahamandapa. There is a gateway in the east and a five-storeyed gopuram in the south. There are subshrines for Ganapati, Subrahmanyar and Chandesvarar. Bhairavar is installed on the north side of the mukhamandapa. There is also a Nataraja shrine in the campus. It seems to have been built by a local Chief.

A third year inscription of Rajaraja (III) mentions a gift of land to the shrines of Nallanayaki and Subrahmanya Pillaiyar in the temple of Valisvaram Udaiya Nayanar at Turaiyur. This temple must have come into being by about this time. Is this Amman shrine the same as the one of Mahasapta-Gauri Amman found in the north-west corner of this temple? This shrine faces east and has devakoshtas in which are installed the icons of Ichcha Sakti, Mahesvari, Vaishnavi, Brahmi and Durga (ARE 701 of 1908).

Six hundred metres north-east of this temple is another called Kasi Visvanathar temple. It has a two-storeyed srivimana with a round griva and sikhara. The figures in the devakoshtas are Ganapati, Dakshinamurti, Lingodbhavar, Brahma and Durga. There is a shrine for Amman to the north of the ardhamandapa, and another for Nataraja further east.

South-west of the Nandikesvarar temple is the Vishnu temple of Venugopalasvamin. There is an inscription of Rajaraja III on its north wall. There is also an inscription of the eleventh year of Jatavarman Sundara Pandya I (acc. A.D. 1251). (Pls. 363-73).

All these temples may be attributed to the days of Rajaraja III.

Rajendra III

(A.D. 1246 to 1279/80)

Crown Prince Rajendra was of a noble mould, a proper scion of the Chola stock, and given somewhat more conducive circumstances might have restored the Chola dynasty to its traditional greatness and glory, but he came when all the dykes against misfortune had broken and ruin came flooding down the Kaveri. Even prior to A.D. 1246 when he became the (co-ruler) king, Rajendra started in earnest to mend matters. His task was considerably facilitated by the weakened Pandyan hold over Madurai. He set himself the task of avenging the humiliation of two successful Pandyan invasions of the Chola capital and apparently succeeded in wresting the Pandyan Crown from Maravarman Sundara Pandya II (sometime around A.D. 1238-39). The prasasti of Rajendra says that he enabled Rajaraja III to wear two crowns (the Chola and the Pandya) for three years:

'Iru mudigalai munru andugal Irasarasanaṁ sudum paḍi seyda viran'

A 15th year record of Rajendra III from Tripurantakam refers to this in the following terms:

'Iru var Pandiyar mudittalai kondarulina'

Rajendra's initial successes led to a shift in Hoysala strategy; the latter now switched their support to the weakling Pandya prince. The capture and occupation of Kana nadu and the sacking of Vedaranyam between A.D. 1240 and 1245 were in pursuance of the new strategy of keeping the balance between the two southern kingdoms so that Hoysala hold over the peninsula was not impaired.

The Telugu Chodas ruling from Pottapi and Nellore, faithful allies of the Cholas, felt that their fortunes were interlinked with the fate of the Cholas and so Gandagopala (alias Tikka Nirupana alias Madhurantaka Pottapi Chola Betarasa Allun Tirukkalatideva, son of Madhurantaka Pottapi Chola Nallasiddha alias Manumasiddha) declared his solidarity with the Cholas by capturing Kanchi from the Hoysalas in A.D. 1234; in this battle for Kanchi, Gandagopala claims to have killed the Hoysala king Vira Narasimha (from a record of the 23rd year of Rajaraja III). Tikka (who could be assigned the period A.D. 1230 to 1250) rapidly established his authority over a vast area in the present-day Nellore, Chittoor, Cuddapah, North Arcot, Chingleput and Salem districts. He fought against many mandalikas and brought under his sway the Kanchipuram region, the Chedimandalam and even claims to have suppressed Kadupatti (Kopperunjinga). The Hoysalas were kept at bay and their ruler Somesvara left him to rule in peace, confining his attention to other parts of the Chola and Pandya kingdoms. Tikka helped in restoring the fallen pride of the Chola family. We find Rajendra III, even as early as A.D. 1240, six years prior to his formal accession to the throne, actively campaigning far and near to piece together the broken kingdom. In this effort, the Telugu Chodas were a great and abiding ally; Tikka even assumed the title of Cholasthapanacharya. The Hoysalas made repeated efforts to break up the Telugu Choda hold over the Tondaimandalam region, but with no notable success.

Narasimha's son Vira Somesvara attacked Kanchi in A.D. 1246. We do not know the results of this second battle for Kanchi. Whoever won and ruled here had however a short lease. Tikka alias Gandagopala perhaps was succeeded by his elder son, also called Gandagopala, sometime in A.D. 1250. But shortly thereafter, in A.D. 1257-58, Jatavarman Sundara Pandya, the new and powerful Pandyan ruler, attacked Kanchi and captured it. It is claimed by him that Gandagopala was despatched to Heaven (Gandagopalanai vinnulagir pokkiya pin). Perhaps there is truth in this claim because we are aware that Tikkan (i.e., Tikka Nirupana) had two sons and that the younger son became Manumasiddhi II—who later on became the patron of Tikkanna Somayaji, the author of the Telugu composition 'Nirvachanottara Ramayana'. This Manma-siddhi II may be Vijaya Gandagopala.

That, right through the fluctuating fortunes of the Cholas, the Telugu Chodas owed allegiance to Rajaraja III is clear from records of Kanchipuram that occur till A.D. 1245; after that date, however, there is a total absence of Chola records or reference to Chola regnal years. We may presume that the Chola hold over Kanchi was lost around this time (Circa A.D. 1245) and it was never regained. We may say with some degree of certainty that, between A.D. 1243 and 1246, the Chola kingdom had disintegrated to a point, where Chedimandalam, Nadu nadu, Tondaimandalam, Pandi Nadu and even portions of the present-day South Arcot and Pudukkottai districts had ceased to acknowledge Chola overlordship; and the Chola kingdom remained confined to the Kaveri delta.

Rajendra III's valiant struggle deserves praise. His birudas were not mere vainglorious titles. He was called Jagadekaviran—the 'one hero of the world', Khadgaviran, Manukulattai Uyarttiyavan, Raja Paramesvaran, Raja Paramamahesvaran, Rajanarayanan, Cholakulattu erpatta paribhavattai nivarttitta Vikkiranman, Eka-dhiran and by such other names.

The establishment of a temporary Chola hold over the Pandyas after the victory of Rajendra III over Maravarman Sundara Pandya II was followed by his campaign against the Sambuvarayas, ruling in the Tindivanam, Villupuram and North Arcot regions, who called themselves the Vira Rakshasas—after which he assumed the title of 'Rama who conquered the Vira Rakshasas of Uttara Lanka' (Mavilangai near Tindivanam).

The conflict between the Hoysalas and the Cholas would appear to have gone on for a while, Rajendra claiming victory over Vira Somesvara and the latter claiming victory over Rajendra, each claiming that the other fell at his feet and sought succour. Kopperunjinga, however, seems to have had the run of the entire region between the Kollidam (in the south) and the Palar (in the north). He would appear to have been left to rule his domain uninterrupted both by the Cholas and by the Hoysalas, for quite some time.

In A.D. 1253, the Hoysalas made another big bid to reduce the Kadava prince to his earlier feudal state, but Kopperunjinga was too powerful to be suppressed. In that year, he engaged the Hoysala troops in battle at Perumbalur and captured their Dandanayakas Kesava, Harihara and Yatipati Deva, and their women and treasures (pendir b(h)andaramum), and as an expiation for this act bestowed upon the Lord of Tirumudukunram temple at Vriddhachalam a forehead plate (tirup-pattam) named 'Avani-alap-pirandan' after his own biruda (ARE 73 of 1918). The Hoysalas never again bothered the Kadava chief.

Meantime, what the future was to prove the greatest star in the Pandyan firmament, Jatavarman Sundara Pandya I, ascended the Madurai throne in A.D. 1251. He was the greatest among the Later Pandyas and built up an unprecedented empire in a short time. Within seven years of his accession, he set out at the head of a huge army on a digvijaya campaign. He defeated the Cheras, annexed the Malai nadu, captured Senni and invested Kannanur Koppam, the southern capital of the Hoysalas, and drove them to the Mysore plateau. A renewed attempt on the part of Somesvara to recapture lost power over Koppam resulted in defeat and death at the hands of the Pandyan king. Vira Ramanaatha succeeded to the gadi of Koppam. This campaign evidently lasted more than two years. His prasasti describes in glowing terms the great victories Sundara Pandya won wherever he went, subduing the Sri Lanka king, defeating the Pallava Kopperunjinga and compelling him to pay tribute after capturing his elephants and gold and giving back his kingdom to him; then, according to the prasasti, he proceeded to Tillai Ambalam (Chidambaram) and paid homage to Lord Nataraja, then marched to Uraiyur (Koli-ma-nagar) and performed the tulabhara ceremony at the feet of the Lord of Srirangam, where he ceremonially ascended the throne in the temple and rounded off and crowned the first phase of his digvijaya with homage to the Lord there. It was in this campaign that he defeated and killed the Telugu Choda king Gandagopala (A.D. 1258-60) and 'sent him to Heaven', as we saw earlier. Thus the Telugu Chodas became subordinate Chiefs of the Pandyas. He drove out the Kakatiyas from the Nellore region and performed a virabhishekam at Nellore, the Telugu Choda capital. In A.D. 1262, Sundara Pandya waged war with the Kakatiyas, and in this campaign he evidently had the support of Kopperunjinga, who fought with and for him. We find the Pallava chief's inscriptions at Draksharama dated in Saka 1184 (= A.D. 1262), referring to his gifts to Bhimanatha; from these inscriptions we find that for a while he allied himself with the Kakatiya king, seeking his help to fight the rising Pandyan might. Soon after A.D. 1262, he ceased to send his usual tribute to the Madurai throne, and in A.D. 1267 the Pandya king despatched a big army under the co-ruler Jatavarman Vira Pandya II, who defeated Kopperunjinga again and then proceeded to Tillai Ambalam, where, in the Hundred-pillared Hall, he celebrated virabhishekam and vijayabhishekam: ("kochchadaya-panmarana tribhuvana-chakravartigal porp-Puliyur virrirundu virabhishekamum vijayabhishekamamum panniyaruliya Vira Pandiya devar": Pudukkottai State Inscriptions—370/192/1914).

The Hundred-pillared Hall at Chidambaram, which was built by Naralokavira and bore the name of '(Im-mandapam) Akalankan' (Akalankan tiru-mandapam) was re-christened after Vira Pandya, as attested by a few pillars which still bear the inscription 'Svasti Sri Virapandiyar tirumandapam'. Jatavarman Sundara Pandya was succeeded by Maravarman Kulasekhara in A.D. 1268. He was an equally great warrior and a worthy successor of Sundara. He conquered Malai nadu, Iru Kongu, Ilam, and Tondaimandalam and assumed the title of 'Emmandalamum kondaruliya Kulasekharadevan'. Thus in the face of the rising tide of Pandyan power, Hoysala Vira Ramanatha and Rajendra III found it expedient to forget their differences and rule over whatever territory was left to them to control, under the overall vigil of the Pandyas. We have evidence of this renewed close link from two records from Tiruchchorrutturai (ARE 207 and 208 of 1931). From these we find incidentally that Vira Ramanatha's 10th and 15th years correspond to Rajendra's 20th and 25th years respectively. But even this alliance was of no avail against the Pandyan giants Sundara Pandya and Kulasekhara.

We saw earlier in this chapter that, between A.D. 1243 and 1246, Kanchi was wrested from the Cholas. But for two stray records, one from Nandalur dated in A.D. 1259, and another from Tripurantakam dated in A.D. 1261, one could say that soon after the fall of Kanchi, the Chola kingdom shrank back to the traditional narrow limits of the Kaveri delta. But, after A.D. 1261, no inscriptions in the name of Rajendra III are found outside the traditional Chola country.

The latest regnal year of Rajendra's inscriptions is his 33rd year, corresponding to A.D. 1279. We may conclude that the last of the Cholas disappeared from the stage of history in that year. We hear of them no more.

The Cholas reigned for over 430 years, a glorious succession of rulers, giants of their time and great warriors. Like all institutions human, the Chola empire too had to have an end. But the Cholas have left behind for posterity a tradition and a tale that any nation can be proud of. Their temples and Gods, their art and culture will live for ever.

Temples of Rajendra III's Time

MANTRAPURISVARAR TEMPLE

In Section 9 of "Temples of Rajaraja III's Time" (Ch. 14), we have already dealt with this temple dedicated to Mantrapurisvarar and traced its growth till the death of Rajaraja III. Kovilur, which went under the name of Usattanam during the Chola days, is a village in the Pattukkottai taluk of the Tanjavur district.

The Usattanam temple renovated in Vikrama Chola's days received considerable attention from the last two rulers of the dynasty. Here we deal with the expansion of and additions to this temple during the days of Rajendra III.

There are about twenty inscriptions assignable to the reign of Rajendra III. One, of his fourth year (ARE 185 of 1908), records a gift of paddy to the temple by the tenants of the temple lands. From this inscription, it is learnt that the king had the title of Manu-kulam-edutta Perumal.

i) BHUVANAPATI NACHCHIYAR SHRINE

Two inscriptions of the same (i.e., the fourth) regnal year and one of his fifth year (ARE 187, 188 and 189 of 1908) mention a shrine for Bhuvanapati Nachchiyar—which has to be distinguished from that of Tirukkamakkottam Udaiya Periya Nachchiyar built in the 20th year of Rajaraja III (ARE 195 of 1908); these inscriptions refer to gifts made by one Ponnambalakkuttan alias Irumudi Solap-pallavaraiyan to burn a lamp in the shrine, gifts by the lady-servants of the temple and a gift of land for offerings to the Goddess by the residents of Mummudisolapuram in Purangarambai nadu, a part of Rajendrasola valanadu.

ii) SAMBANDAR AND APPAR SHRINES

An inscription of the tenth year of Rajendra III (ARE 186 of 1908) records a gift of land for offerings to the shrine of Pillaiyar Nayanar (Sambandar) and of Tirunavukkarasu Nayanar (Appar). Another of the same year (on the north side of the base of the verandah of the first prakara—ARE 212 of 1908) records a gift of land for offerings by the Assembly of Suttamalli chaturvedimangalam in Purangarambai nadu of Rajendrasola valanadu.

There are four inscriptions of the eleventh year of this king (A.D. 1256). Of these, two mention a local Chola feudatory, Paiyulan Periyar Alagiya Perumal alias Solagangan. One (ARE 202 of 1908) records a gift of land for worship and repairs in the temple of Usattanam Udaiya Nayanar by the order of this Chief. The other (ARE 205 of 1908) records a gift of land to this temple by the same Chief. Yet another (ARE 204 of 1908) records a gift of duties payable (in kind) on each 'bullock load' (podu) of paddy and rice carried by the road called Jananathan-padai, to the temple of Usattanam Udaiya Nayanar by order of the villagers of Mummudisolapuram in pursuance of the directions of the prince' (king). A sale of land is mentioned in the fourth inscription of that year (ARE 208 of 1908). It also refers to the land-survey in the 38th year of 'Periya Devar Tribhuvana Vira devar' (Kulottunga III) (= A.D. 1216).

Of the three inscriptions of the 12th year of this ruler, one refers to a gift of land to the temple by Aditta devan, a native of Vellur in Paiyur kottam, a district of Perun-Tondaimandalam (ARE 206 of 1908; see also ARE 207 of 1908, an inscription relating to the 13th regnal year).

iii) PALLAVAN MADEVISVARAM SHRINE

In the 12th regnal year of this king, an officer of the king, called Vanaraya alias Soliyavaraiyan, made a gift of land to the image of Pallavan-Madevisvaram-Udaiya Nayanar (ARE 210 of 1908); another records a gift of land for a matha called Vanarayan matham.

iv) KUTTADU NAYANAR MATHAM

From another record (ARE 218 of 1908), which mentions a gift of land to a matha, we come to know of a Saiva teacher called Paripurna Sivacharya who headed that matha, called Kuttadu Nayanar matham, said to have been located on the western side of the temple; he is said to have come of the lineage (santana) of Tiruchchatti-murram-mudaliar. The same guru is said to have made a gift of money for offerings to the image of Alagiya-Tiruch-Chirrambalam Udaiyar set up by him in the temple (ARE 220 of 1908).

A gift of land for the maintenance of a flower-garden was made in the 17th year of the king (= A.D. 1267, ARE 223 of 1908). An inscription of the 28th year (ARE 216 of 1908) records a gift of land for offerings to the image of Tirujnanam-perra-pillaiyar (Sambandar) by a merchant of Mummudisolapuram. It refers also to the revenue survey of the 38th year of Kulottunga III.

The last Chola inscription is one of the 30th year (A.D. 1276) of Rajendra III (ARE 193 of 1908). It records a gift of land to the shrine of Subrahmanyar by the Assembly of Peru-valvu-tanda-Perumal chaturvedimangalam (i.e., modern Peruvalandan) in Purangarambai nadu, a subdivision of Rajendrasola valanadu. We are not clear about the surname 'Peruvalvu tandan'—whether, and, if so, in what sense it is applied to Rajendra III.

This was a period of great popularity of the Nayanmars. In many temples, their images were set up; numerous Saiva mathas for the propagation and encouragement of Saivism were set up and flourished during Rajendra III's days. The practice of Devaram hymns being sung by a band of singers in temples is mentioned in one of the inscriptions. A gift of land was made by the order of Sokkarayan alias Rajagambhira Soliyaraiyar to the Tirukkaikotti Oduvar; a relic of which practices we see in the modern Devaram Oduvars of our temples.

- i) Tiru-Anaikka-Udaiya Nayanar temple
- ii) Nachchiyar Tiruk-koyil (Amman temple)

We have already referred to the temples of Narttamalai in Early Chola Art, Pt. I (pp. 44–52) when dealing with the temple of Vijayalayasolisvaram and in Middle Chola Temples (pp. 191–201) when studying Tirumalaik-Kadambur.

Narttamalai is a small village in the Pudukkottai district, about 4 km. from the railway station of the same name on the Tiruchy-Manamadurai section of the Southern Railway. It was a centre of great commercial activity in early days and its present name of Narttamalai is merely a corruption of Nagarattar-malai (a commercial town). In the 11th century, the place went by the name of Telinga-kula-kala-puram, and in the 12th and 13th centuries, it was renamed Kulottungasola-pattinam (after Kulottunga III).

In the earlier volumes, we have traced the origin and growth of the cave-temples and the other main temples of Vijayalayasolisvaram and Tiru-malaik-kadambur-Isvaram.

According to a record of the seventh year of Tribhuvana-chakravartin Rajendradeva III (inscription no.200 of the Inscriptions (Text) of the Pudukkottai State and ARE 357 of 1904) the Adi-Chandesvara Devakanmis of the Tirumalaikkadambur temple of Telinga-kula-kala-puram alias Kulottungasola-pattinam (Narttamalai) gave a gift of iraiyili land to Tachchar Acharyan Poreru Seman alias Akalankan Asari as acharya-dakshina for the temple-building works done by him and his father in respect of the Tirumalaikkadambur temple, the Tiruvanaikka-Udaiya Nayanar temple and the Nachchiyar Tirukkoyil (shrine for the Goddess), and the installation of the Tiruk-kodi-devar (the flag-staff of the temple).

Chennur is a small village in the Gudur taluk of the Nellore district in Andhra Pradesh. It is about 6 km. from Gudur town in a westerly direction on the road leading to Saidapuram. There is a local temple dedicated to Chennakesava.

During the 13th century, the Pottapi Chola Chiefs held sway over this region and were virtually independent of the Chola central authority. On a round pillar in the south-western corner outside the central shrine in this temple is a short Tamil inscription (ARE 72 of 1963-64) dated in Saka 1176 (= A.D. 1254-55) recording the grant, of dry and wet lands irrigated by a tank, evidently the one behind the temple, for food offerings to god Chennagopala by Hageraya Singaradevan for the merit of Pottapichcholan alias Manumasittaraisar. From the date of the record, 'Manumasittaraisar' should be none other than Manumasiddharasa II alias Viragandagopala (acc. A.D. 1250). There is an image of Venugopala in a niche very near the pillar on which the inscription is engraved. The sculpture is in high relief, carved on a single slab and depicting a four-armed Krishna playing on the flute with his two consorts on either side. The image is not under worship any longer, being damaged, and may be dated prior to A.D. 1254-55, both on stylistic and on epigraphical grounds. The Chennakesava temple bears the alternate name of Chittirameli vinnagaram alias Kesavapperumal koyil in two other inscriptions found in this temple (ARE 70 and 71 of 1963-64). The temple was evidently built by the well-known merchant-guild 'Chittirameli'.

This must be a foundation of the days of Rajaraja III or Rajendra III and Viragandagopala, the Telugu Choda chief of Nellore.

SIDDHESVARA TEMPLE

Krishnapatnam is now a small village close to the seacoast, about 22 km. by road from Nellore in a south-easterly direction, and is accessible from the Nellore-Muttukuru road. It can also be approached from the Venkatachelam railway station, which lies between Gudur and Nellore. It is in the Nellore taluk of the Nellore district. It was once a flourishing sea-port, which served the international merchant-guild that built up extensive commerce with the far-eastern and south-eastern Asian empires of those days.

There is a temple in the village dedicated to Siddhesvarar.

The original name given to the temple by its builders was Manuma-Siddhisvaram, from which the (present) name of Siddhesvarar for the deity is derived.

On a slab fixed to the left of the entrance to this temple, there is an inscription which belongs to the days of 'Virarajendra' (i.e., Rajendra III) which records that the uravar of Kollitturai alias Gandagopalap-pattinam and the Padinenbhumi samasta paradis gathered in the Desinayakan tirukkavanam in the temple of Chandattiraip-pillaiyar and arranged for the contribution from certain levies from among themselves towards the various offerings to god Manumasiddhisvaram-udaiya Nayanar (named after Manmasiddhi II alias Vira Gandagopala). The levies included among others those charged on marakkalam, padavu and kalavam, terms that denote marine vessels. The inscription contains some post-scripts, of which one, of the 15th regnal year, refers to a grant of land made according to the orders of Nayanar Manumasiddharsar (II), the Telugu-Choda chief.

Another inscription, also found on a slab built into the wall to the right of the entrance into the temple (ARE 78 of 1963-64), relates to the second year of the reign of Tribhuvana-chakravartigal Irumadi Tirukkalattidevar; it is in Tamil and is dated in Saka 1201 (= A.D. 1279). It records that the Ainjuvanna vanigar and Padinenbhumi-samasta-paradesigal of the nadu, the nagaram and the Malaimandalam, all of Kollitturai alias Gandagopala-pattinam, met in full strength at the Ainnurruvar-tirukkavanam[†] and agreed to assign the income from a levy on all commodities that passed through the port at the rate of 1/4 per cent of their value, for worship and food offerings to the god Manuma-siddhisvaram Udaiyar and repairs and maintenance of buildings (see Appendix to this Section).

Reading these two inscriptions together would indicate that considerable maritime activity took place through this sea-port called Kollitturai, which was given an alternate name after the Telugu-Choda Chief Gandagopala; and the commercial community comprising the various trading societies or companies met and transacted business and codified rules of business and regulations of port administration.

The temple called Manumasiddhisvaram in the inscriptions was founded in the name of Manumasiddharaisar II, the Pottapi-Chola Chief, who 'came to the throne' in A.D. 1250. The temple has evidently undergone renovation at a subsequent stage; however, there is a mandapa in front of the central shrine, with pillars containing figures of deities such as Indra, Agni, Vayu and Varuna with their respective iconographic weapons. It is apparently this mandapa which is referred to (in ARE 78 of 1963-64) as the Ainnurruvan tirukkavanam, wherein the Assembly is stated to have met to conduct its deliberations. One can infer from the identity of the names of the merchant-guild and of the hall that this body was concerned with the construction of the hall.

Thus the temple and the hall in front could be attributed to the second half of the 13th century. This inference is confirmed by the stylistic characteristics of the mandapa. The central shrine has undergone subsequent renovation.

NANADESIS

The Nanadesis were a trading organisation. They claimed descent from Vasudeva, Mulabhadra or Virabhadra. They were devotees of Bhagavati, Paramesvari or Nachchiar. They have described themselves as Nanadesi Tisai Ayirattu-ainnuruvar, 'the Lords (adhipatis) of eighteen bhumis (padinen bhumi or vishaya), thirtytwo valarapuram (muppat-tirendu valarapurangal) and sixtyfour ghatikai-tavalam'. They travelled over land and by sea and traded in six 'continents' (khanda). Among the lands they covered could be mentioned: Chera nadu, Chola nadu, Pandya nadu, Malaya nadu (Malay peninsula), Magadha desa, Kosala desa, Saurashtra, Dhanushtiram, Kurumbam, Kambojam (Cambodia), Gauda desa, Lata desa, Paviru, Parasam (Persia), Nepalam, Ekaparam, Lambakarnam, Sri Rajyam (Sri vijayam), Kolamulam and others. Among the goods/articles they traded in were elephants, horses, indranilam, chandrakantam, pearls, diamonds, vaiduryam, gomedakam, maragatam, pushparagam and other gems, cardamom, sandal-wood, camphor, kasturi, ahil, clover (lavanga) etc.

The earliest reference to them is contained in an inscription discovered by me in the village of Munisandai in the present district (and the former princely state) of Pudukkottai. It is dated in A.D. 870 in the reign of Vijayalaya. It was found near the lake in the village (See plate 33-a in my Early Chola Art, Pt. I). It mentions that the lake (eri) known as Ainnuruvar pereri was maintained by this guild or trading organisation, and towards the provision of funds, a sub-group known as the Valamsiyar Ainnuruvarar, on behalf and in the name of the main body (viz, the Tisaiyirattu ainnuruvar), deposited 2 kasus from whose interest the repair and maintenance of the lake was to be looked after. A similar epigraphical reference in Tamil was found at a place known as Loebe Tiva in the island of Sumatra in Indonesia dated in Saka 1000 (= A.D. 1078), referring to a grant by the Tisai ayirattu ainnuruvar. This relates to the period of Kulottunga I. An inscription from Pranmalai in Pudukkottai district gives a detailed account of their activities. They set up their own establishments in India and abroad and each had its own distinctive status and designation. They had extensive godowns and necessary security personnel. An interesting grant was made by this corporation to the temple of Alagiya Tiruchchirrambalam Udaya Nayanar located at the foot of the Tirumalai at Tiruk-kodungunram (modern Pranmalai) in Tirumalaà nadu. Certain taxes, levies and duties on a number of commodities were to be collected and gifted to the temple for tirup-podi-marru, tirup-pani, tirup-parisattam, tiru-merppusu etc., besides meeting the needs of the attached madam (matha), tirumadaivilagam and the sacred tank. The items taxed were: salt, paddy, rice, dhals like green-gram, horse-gram etc., castor-seed, areca-nut, pepper, turmeric, ginger, onions, mustard, jeera, amla (nelli), tanri, iron, steel, cotton, yarn, pudavai (sari), ulandu pili, wax, honey, sesame, konigaip-pattu, sandal, ahil, silk, pannir kudam, Savari (hair fly-whisk), karpurattailam, sandu-pulugu (a paste for the forehead, scented), javvadu, semodu, horses and elephants, on all of which octroi (sungam) had been levied.

We have another detailed reference to them from Avur dated in A.D. 1272 (i.e., corresponding to the 30th regnal year of Kopperunjinga, the Later Pallava Chief), which mentions a gift of an image of Astra-devar to the temple of Udayar Tiru-Agattisvaram Udaya Nayanar of Avur, in Sedi-(Chedi-) mandalam, which was on the north bank of the Pennai. They are described as padinen-bhumi tisai vilangu tiral ayirattu tugal vanigar. The local Chief who made this grant was Surandar alias Seya Sevaganachchedirayar.

This organisation comprised perhaps followers of many religions, Saivism, Buddhism, Jainism, and Vaishnavism.

They were thus a powerful lot, of extensive international links, with privileges and powers, and duties and responsibilities; and the wars and feuds between the kingdoms where they traded left them unhindered, as they discharged a function so essential for the smooth running of societies. Their ideals were noble and are summarised in the following succinct words:

'Aram valara; kali maliga

pugal peruga; pagai taniga'

(May Dharma increase; May Darkness disappear; May fame (grace) spread; May enmity decline!)

How long after the Cholas and Pandyas disappeared this international trading organisation survived is not known. But one would presume that they had a long record of trading service to the known world of those centuries and played a quiet but important role in the life of the peoples and the nations they served.

MANNARGUDI

5 KAILASANATHASVAMIN TEMPLE
NACHCHIYAR) SHRINE

We have dealt briefly in Middle Chola Temples (pp. 358–9) with the temple of Kailasanathasvamin built during the days of Rajadhiraja I at Mannargudi (the headquarters of the taluk of the same name, in the Tanjavur district).

A local inscription (ARE 97 of 1907) records the setting up of the shrine of the goddess (Tiruk-kamak-kottam Udaiya Periya Nachchiyar), and a gift of land to it for offerings and repairs, by the Mahapradhanar (Prime Minister and General) Kampaya Dandanayaka of the Hoysala ruler Vira Somesvara in the 26th year of that king. This would fall in the reign of Rajendra III. This Amman shrine was thus built by the Hoysala general in about A.D. 1260 when the Cholas were still in power though in a very attenuated manner, and very often there was loose joint control over the various parts of the empire by both the Cholas and the Hoysalas.

6 CHOLISVARAR TEMPLE

There are four inscriptions, on the south, west and north walls of this temple; one of them relates to Vira Ballaladeva, the Hoysala king (ARE 150 of 1908), two of them to a Tribhuvana-chakravartin Konerinmaikondan, whose identity is not known (ARE 151 and 152 of 1908), and the fourth one to Tribhuvana-chakravartin Konerinmaikondan Sundara Pandya deva (ARE 153 of 1908). From them we learn that the temple was called that of Virarajendra Solisvaram Udaiyar. This is obviously a reference to Rajendra III, who went under the name of Vira Rajendrasola deva; Manur gets the alternate name of Vira Rajendrasolanallur in Vaigavur nadu.

Chola-Pallava Phase (The Later Pallavas)

MANAVALAP-PERUMAL AND KOPPERUNJINGA

With the defeat of Nripatunga and the extinction of the Kanchi Pallavas in the 10th century A.D., one does not hear of the Kadavas (Pallavas) for more than two hundred years; during the reign of Rajaraja II, we noticed local feudatories rising to varying degrees of prominence, partly as a result of decentralisation of the authority of the Chola court. One such family of local Chieftains, calling themselves Pallavas or Kadavas and bearing the title of Kadavarayans, make their appearance in the Vriddhachalam-Villupuram region (Pennai and Vellar basins corresponding roughly to Nadu nadu). We do not know their centre of power or their origin and how, if at all, they were related to the Early Pallavas of Kanchi. Two inscriptions in Tamil verse (one a copy of the other) found at Vriddhachalam and Tiruvennainallur mention five generations of this Pallava line which flourished in the 12th and the 13th centuries, from the time of the Chola king Rajaraja II to that of Kulottunga III, and enumerate their achievements. The third in this line claims the biruda of Elisai Mohan and is called "the conqueror of the four directions". The fifth Chief of this line claims to have conquered Kudal and is called "Arasanarayanan Kudal Alappirandan" alias "Virasekhara Kadavarayan". All his successors claim this biruda. (Kudal is perhaps to be identified with Tirthamalai in Puramalai nadu (in the modern Salem district); the deity of the temple there is called Kudal Alvar; Kudal might have been an important fortified centre ruled by a local Chief.) He might have lived in the early years of Kulottunga III (vide an 11th year inscription of Kulottunga III at Madam; ARE 255 of 1919).

The chief next in succession (the sixth) is one described as Tondaimandalam konda Pallavandar alias Viraviran Kadavarayan. His inscription at Atti, in Tamil verse (ARE 296 of 1912), describes him as Tondaimandalam konda Pallavandar alias Kadavarayan, son of Kudal Alappirandan alias Kadavarayan. He is eulogised variously: as a matchless warrior, who won a great victory over his enemies in all directions; as one who brought the Tondai nadu under his control and spread his sway over the region watered by the Pennai; and as the Lord of Sri Vengadam and Kanchi. In the Munnur inscription, he is called Kudal Alappirandan Alagiya Pallavan alias Kadavarayan (ARE 62 of 1919). In a Sendamangalam inscription also, the same title is found (ARE 73-A of 1903). His Tiruvennai-nallur inscription (ARE 481 of 1921) describes him as Alagiya Pallavan alias Manavalapperumal. He is known as Jiya Mahipati or Maharaja-simhan in the Tripurantakam inscription of Kopperunjingan (ARE 197 of 1903). He is also known as Kudal Alappirandan Alagiya Siyan, according to a Sendamangalam inscription.

The most important of his inscriptions is at Sendamangalam in the Tindivanam taluk of the South Arcot district (ARE 73 of 1923; SII, VIII, 350). It was issued in the fifth 'regnal year' of Sri Sakalabhuvana chakravartigal Sri Manavalapperumal. It mentions that he chose this place for his capital, founded a city known by the name of Sendamangalam, and made it a fortified military station (padai vidu); and he also built a temple there whose deity was named after his surname, Valnilai Kandisvaram Udaiya Nayanar (valnilaikandan may mean a peerless swordsman, equivalent to Khadgamallan, a biruda applied to Kopperunjingan) and instituted a service called Elisiamohan sandhi; a grant of land was made for its observance and for the burning of ten lamps. This was a great step forward to political independence, which came to his successor Kopperunjingan in the days of Rajaraja III. His death and the consequent incompleteness of the Alagiya Pallava vinnagar at Tiruvennainallur is referred to in an inscription in that place dated in the 33rd regnal year of Kulottunga III (= A.D. 1211) (Ayyan Manavalapperumal abhavattale ...; ARE 486 of 1921). A grant of land was made two years later, in the 35th year of Kulottunga III, by the mother of Alagiya Pallavan Sri Kopperunjingan (ARE 487 of 1928).

These events must have happened between the 13th and 35th years of Kulottunga III (i.e., A.D. 1191–1213).

In the 14th regnal year of Rajaraja III, a subordinate of Pallava Kopperunjingan made a gift of a perpetual lamp to the Lord of Vriddhachalam. So the year A.D. 1230 seems to be the latest date of the nominal acknowledgment by these "Later Pallavas" of Chola overlordship (ARE 136 of 1900). Then Kopperunjingan took advantage of the weakness of the Chola kingdom and made serious efforts for its overthrow by his aggrandisement. He collected a powerful army and attacked Rajaraja III at Tellaru. This event is graphically described in the inscription at Vayalur (ARE 418 of 1922). The Chola king was defeated and he, his queen, and his ministers were taken* prisoner and kept in confinement in the capital of Sendamangalam. Soon, however, followed the anti-climax described in the 16th year inscription of Rajaraja III (A.D. 1231–32; ARE 142 of 1902) found at Tiruvendipuram in the South Arcot district. It mentions that the Hoysala king, Vira Narasimha devar, despatched troops on two routes to converge on Sendamangalam for the relief and rescue of the imprisoned Chola emperor. When he found the impending fall of Sendamangalam and his options closed, Kopperunjinga offered truce on promise of the release of the Chola emperor. Accordingly, Rajaraja III was set at liberty at Tiruvendipuram. Even after this setback to his rising career, Kopperunjinga continued to increase his military strength greatly and declared himself independent, crowned himself king in A.D. 1243, and ruled for 36 years, playing a leading role in the politics of South India as far north as Warangal and Draksharama. He defied Rajendra III, the successor of Rajaraja III, the Hoysalas and the Kakatiyas; and spread his influence as far as Tripurantakam and Draksharama (ARE 419 of 1893) in Andhra Pradesh, till his death, at a battle with Ambadeva, the Kayastha chief ruling in the region of Nellore, Cuddapah and Kurnool districts, terminated his meteoric career.

*His horses, the inscription describes, quenched their thirst in the Kanni, Kaveri and the Ganga (rivers); his feudatories waited at his gate to pay him tribute. The Kannadan (the Hoysala king) suffered defeat at his hands. From this inscription, we also learn that he was a staunch devotee of the Lord of the (gilded) Ponnambalam (Nataraja of Chidambaram).

Kopperunjinga was a powerful personality; he was a great soldier and general. He had many surnames: he was 'Avani Narayanan'; he was 'the Lord born to make Sen-Tamil flourish'; he was 'the master of Mallai (Mamallapuram = modern Mahabalipuram) and Puhar' (Kavirippumpattinam); other surnames are: Mindan Siyan, Arasar Tambiran, Nripatungan, Avani-Alapirandan and Sökkachchiyan (vide ARE 418 of 1922); Bhumipati, Kripanamalla, Sarvajna Khadgamalla and Nissanka-malla (ARE 191 of 1904).

In spite of his preoccupation with the struggle for political supremacy, he gave attention to the welfare of his subjects; he excavated tanks and increased irrigation facilities for the promotion of the welfare of the people (ARE 191 of 1904, Tiruvakkarai; ARE 182 of 1919, Tribhuvani); he was a deeply religious man and made many gifts and endowments to temples for the conduct of worship. The Lord of Dance, Nataraja of Chidambaram, was his patron deity. He performed the tulabhara ceremony and offered gold to decorate (gild) the east gopuram of the Nataraja temple; he gifted the entire income of the village of Attur for meeting the expenses of building the south gopuram, which is his creation. The western gopuram of the Vishnu temple at Tiruvendipuram was constructed during his time for the merit of the king

Note: I reject the theory of the late V. Venkatasubba Ayyar of two Kopperunjingas (I and II) (see S.I.I., XII, and paras 1 and 2 of page XV—Ins. Nos 119, 120–125 and 128); and for an amplification of my view that there was only one powerful Later Pallava ruler of that name and that he ruled from A.D. 1243 to A.D. 1279, refer to my article in the Journal of the Madras University, Madras and my Tamil book 'Kopperunjingan' (Paari Nilayam, Madras).

(ARE 146 of 1902). He was a patron of Tamil and Sanskrit and the fine arts, especially Bharata Natya; he was eulogised as the king who was born to encourage and enrich Sen Tamil and as Bharatam vallan. Sendamangalam, the creation of the line of the Kadavas of Kopperunjinga, has rich associations and has played a notable role in the history of South India.

PART II

CONTRIBUTIONS OF THE LATER PALLAVAS TO THE CHOLA-PALLAVA PHASE

SENDAMANGALAM

APATSAHAYESVARAR (UDAIYAR VALNILAI- 1 KANDISVARAM UDAIYA NAYANAR) TEMPLE
TIRUK-KAMAK-KOTTAMUDAIYA PERIYA
NACHCHİYAR SHRINE

Sendamangalam village is on the 185th km. stone from Madras City on the Madras-Tiruchy trunk road. It is in the Tindivanam taluk of the South Arcot district. Tirunamanallur is only 4 km. north-north-east of this village and the river Gadilam flows about 3 km. north of this ancient fortress. Mangalam, Vriddhachalam, Elavanasur, Tiruvennainallur and Tiruvadigai are all within distances of 20 to 25 km. It is located in a strategic place where the Chola and the Hoysala influences met and could be kept at bay.

The entire fort and the two temples within are in an unspeakable state of ruin. The fortified city must have had an outer fortification spread over a km. square, of which only the north-western corner is discernible as a mound of earth and rubble, with a fine Ganesa figure dominating the crown. The inner fortification, also in total ruins, would measure about 100 metres by 60 metres. The remains of the grenels and arrow-holes are still visible in the corners of the wall. In this campus are the two shrines, one dedicated to Apatsahayesvarar (current name) and the other to the Consort. The main temple is in alignment with the entrance to the inner fortification. The fort and the two shrines face east. In the north-eastern corner, immediately after entering the fort wall is a 100-pillared hall, in ruins, built in consonance with the tradition of the day to have multipillared halls in the temple campus for coronations, festivals and expounding the vedas and the puranas. This hall faces south.

The main temple, built by Manavalapperumal and named (after one of his surnames) the temple of Valnilaikandisvaram Udaiya Nayanar, faces east and consists of a square garbhagriha, an ardhamandapa, a mukhamandapa and a mahamandapa. From a brief epigraph engraved on the south wall of the mahamandapa, we learn that the mandapa was named "Ahankarakuttarayan Tiru-mandapam", presumably after a local noble and donor. None of the three niche-figures on the three wall-faces of the garbhagriha is in position, the niches being empty. Fortunately, the beautiful image of Lingodbhavar (with the boar and the hamsa) which (at some distant past) should have adorned the rear niche, is leaning on the balipitham east of the temple within the innermost wall of enclosure; the Dakshinamurti and Brahma figures have been taken into the ardhamandapa and kept there. As at Melakkadambur, a shrine for Dakshinamurti, housed in the southern niche of the garbhagriha, had been built as an integral part of the temple. On the base of this subsidiary shrine is inscribed the name (one of the many surnames) of the founder of the temple. It reads: Kudal Alappirandan Alagiya Pallavan Kadavarayan. Manavalapperumal was also called Kudal Alappirandan Algiya Siyan (ARE 73-A of 1903, SII, VIII, 351). There is a shrine for Chandikesvara, in its usual place. On the door-jamb of this shrine, there is a brief epigraph (ARE 81-A of 1903) which reads as follows:

Svasti Sri Rajakkanayan

Tirukkoyil Svasti Sri

We may conclude this shrine was a later addition made by the Pandyan ruler who was famous through his surname of Rajakkanayan.

The entire central complex of halls is surrounded by what once must have been a beautiful circumambulatory passage with a covered colonnaded platform and the wall of enclosure

(the prakara and the tiruch-churru-maligai). Now only the western part of the wall and the platform remain. The entire prakara is covered with debris and fallen stones from the prakara wall. There is a well-covered balipitham in front of the entrance to the mukhamandapa. It is strange that Kopperunjinga who raised such massive seven-storeyed gopurams at Chidambaram and Tiruvendipuram should have let his father's temple go without a grand gateway. If any once existed, these gopurams are no longer there. The stone gateway portion, again in ruins, without the tiers, however, is there at the entrance on the first wall of enclosure (in the east), and at the rear on the second wall of enclosure. (Local tradition goes that it was meant as the gateway to a Vishnu shrine which does not exist any more).

The srivimana is square in cross-section and eka-tala. In the first tier, there are kutas at the corners and salas in the middle. The griva and sikhara are circular in cross-section and rise over a high platform resting on the first tier. A close look at the srivimana of the Vaikuntha Perumal temple built about this time by the Later Pallava Chiefs at Tiruvennainallur brings out a close parallel with this srivimana. Basically eka-tala, the srivimanas give the impression of great height as the griva rests on a high platform. The garbhagriha has a simple basement (adhishtanam) consisting of the upanam, the tri-pattakumudam, a token kandam, the vari and the varimanam. The garbhagriha walls are adorned with octagonal pilasters with wide palagais and padmam mouldings, tenoned, three-pronged corbels supporting the entablature consisting of the bhutagana frieze, a modest cornice and the yali frieze.

The Amman shrine facing east lies to the north of the Siva temple and is a modest structure with a garbhagriha, ardhamandapa and mukhamandapa. This shrine is also in utter ruins.

The crucial inscription of Manavalapperumal in this temple is found on the south base of the mandapa (ARE 73 of 1903; SII, VIII, no. 350) and reads as follows:

"Svasti Sri: Sakalabhuvana-chakravartigal Sri Manavalapperumal Udaiyar(kku) yandu anjavadu Sendamangalattu Urom padai-vidu seydu udaiyar Vanilaikandisvaram udaiya Nayanaraiyum elundarulapanni in-Nayanarkku nam kanda Elisai Mohan sandikkum.....

Manalavapperumal eluttu".

Thus epigraphical evidence is available to establish that this site of Sendamangalam was chosen for establishing a cantonment (padai-vidu) or military station, in which, within the fort, a temple dedicated to Lord Siva named "Va(l)nilaikandisvaram Udaiya Nayanar" was also built by the king Sakalabhuvana-chakravartigal Manavalap-perumal udaiyar in the fifth year of his reign. Valnilai kandan and Elisai Mohan are among the surnames of Manavalap-perumal, the father of Maharajasimha (Ko-perum-Singan). In the 17th year of Kulottunga III (= A.D. 1195), we find a reference to Kudal Elisai Mohan Manavalap-perumal Vanilaikandar, alias Kadavarayan, who is referred to as a feudatory of the Chola emperor (ARE 213 of 1902). We continue to get references to this Chief till the 28th and 29th regnal years of the Chola ruler (= A.D. 1206-07).

There are three inscriptions in the main temple belonging to Kopperunjingan (A.D. 1243-79). One, of the second regnal year (ARE 70 of 1903; SII, VIII, 346), refers to a gift of 32 cows by one Arulalan alias Tyagavinodan of Jananatha chaturvedimangalam to Udaiyar Vanilaikandisvaram Udaiya Nayanar.

There is a ninth year inscription of Kopperunjingan (ARE 71 of 1903; SII, VIII, 348), which refers to a gift of 32 cows and a bull made to Udaiyar Valnilaikandisvaram Udaiyar by one Tirumalai Alāgiyan Virakavira Pallavaraiyan, a kaikolar of Tiruvennainallur.

A third inscription, dated in the 17th regnal year of Kopperunjinga (ARE 69 of 1903; SII, VIII, 345), deals with a gift of 4000 kasus, out of whose interest two lamps were to be maintained by the Sivabrahmanas of the thirty vattams in the shrines of Vanilaikandisvaram Udaiya Nayanar and of the Tirukkamak-kottam-Udaiya Periya Nachchiar (the Amman shrine). The gift was made by Tondaiman Udaiyar, the araiyar (i.e., Chief or Lord) of Pennagadam. This leads us to conclude that the Amman shrine must also have been built along with the main Siva temple.

The temple complex was enclosed in an inner fortification, and the city or cantonment, along with the royal palaces, would appear to have been enclosed by an outer wall of fortification. (Pls. 376-81).

VAIKUNTHA PERUMAL TEMPLE 2 (ALAGIYA PALLAVA VINNAGAR)

In addition to the famous Saivite temple of Kripa-purisvarar associated with Sundaramurti Nayanar, there is a historic Vishnu temple at Tiruvennainallur in the Tirukkoyilur taluk of the South Arcot district, built by the local Kadava Chiefs (the Later Pallavas). The old Alagiya Pallava Vinnagar was perhaps named after Alagiya Pallavan alias Manavalapperumal, the father of Kopperunjinga. (According to me, there was only one Pallava king of this name, who ruled a large part of South India between A.D. 1243 and 1279: see my thesis published in the Journal of the Madras University and my fuller version in Tamil "Kopperunjingan"—published by "Paari Nilayam"). This temple was renovated in the eleventh year of Kopperunjinga (SII, XII, 170; ARE 486 and 487 of 1921). The earliest records and the ones engraved before the renovation of the earlier structure were copied and re-engraved on the north and south walls of the renovated temple. Its renovation seems to have been started about the 29th year of the Chola king Tribhuvana Vira Deva (Kulottunga III) (circa A.D. 1207, ARE 320 of 1932). The first of the copied inscriptions mentions that in the 12th year of Rajaraja II (A.D. 1158), a gift with the object of being blessed with a son was made by Atkolli Kadavarayar (the second Chief of the Vriddhachalam record) (ARE 74 of 1918 and Chapter 3 of "Kopperunjingan") who is said to have set up images of Tiruvaykkulattalvar and His Consort and to have made a gift of land for offerings and worship. In this inscription, the temple is called Vaikuntha Perumal temple.

The next copied inscription belongs to the 35th year of Tribhuvana Viradeva (Kulottunga III—A.D. 1213). It refers to a gift of land at Senji as tiruvidayattam to the image of Periyapirattiyar set up in the name of the mother of Alagiya Pallava Kopperunjinga (Alagiya Pallava Sri Kopperunjinga Devar Irasakkal Tiruttayar) in this temple of Vaikuntha Perumal.

An original inscription (not dated) is an order of 'Kadavarayar', who should be none other than Kopperunjinga, (recorded on the north wall of this central shrine) to the trustees of the temple whose deity is called for the first time Alagiya Pallava Vinnagar Emperumanar. The work of its reconstruction formerly started by his mother (Engal Achchi) remained suspended on account of the death of his father (Ayyan Manavalapperumal abhavathiley ittirumurram novupadugaiyaley); he had it reconstructed in his name (nammudaiya peyaral ugandarulappanni) and made a gift of land for effecting repairs as tiruvidaiyattam (see SII, XII, 257; ARE 484 of 1921).

In the 11th year of Kopperunjinga, corresponding to A.D. 1254, the renovation of this Vishnu temple at Tiruvennainallur was completed by Kopperunjinga himself (SII, XII, no. 170), and named the Alagiya Pallava Vinnagaram. (Pls. 382-87).

OMAMPULIYUR

3 PRANAVA VYAGHRAPURISVARAR (VADA-TALI UDAIYA NAYANAR) TEMPLE

Omampuliyur is a village on the banks of the Kollidam 24 km. south-west of Chidambaram and 6.5 km. west of Mannargudi in the Chidambaram taluk of the South Arcot district.

There is a temple here called Pranava-Vyaghrapurisvarar temple. A hunter in the face of an attack from a tiger climbed up a vilva tree and spent a whole night on it. He plucked the leaves by way of passing the time and threw them down, and they by chance fell on a linga. Siva was pleased with this 'adoration' by the hunter and granted him grace. This place is described as the home of scholars versed in the Vedas and the Vedangas. Both Appar and Sambandar* have sung hymns on the Lord of

urta pal—pugalar—Omampuliyur-Udaiyavar—vada-tali-aduvey"— Sambandar's Devaram

the temple of this place "Omampuliyur Udaiya Vadatali"; and this Vada tali is said to lie east of the present temple which seems to be a foundation of Pallava Kopperunjinga.

There are three records, all belonging to Sakalabhuvana-chakravartin Kopperunjingadeva's 14th year, on the west and south walls of the central shrine in this temple. Two of them relate to the same day and record transactions relating to the sale of certain jewels of the temple and the purchase of land with the money received from such sales; in one case the seller of the land makes further gifts of land for the worship of the deity, which in these and the other inscriptions is referred to as Vada-tali Udaiya-Nayanar. The donor in this case is Arasalvan Aravamudalvan; in another gift transaction, Tiruvalanjuli Udaiyar of Alisupakkam purchased some land from one Alappirandan Sani, a prominent lady from Perumarudur, in Ulagalandasola chaturvedimangalam, a brahmadeya in Merikkaa nadu.

We may hazard a guess that this temple (in its present form) must have come into existence in or before the 14th year of Kopperunjinga deva (A.D. 1257).

Chola-Hoysala Phase

The crushing defeat suffered by Kulottunga III in about A.D. 1216 at the hands of Maravarman Sundara Pandya was a turning point in the fortunes of the Chola empire. That marks the beginning of the fall of the empire, that dragged its feet, however, for sixty more years before disappearing without a trace. We have seen how the forces of disintegration cropped up all over the kingdom during the next two decades. This was also the signal to the neighbouring growing power, the Hoysalas, to intervene in the affairs of the southern kingdoms, to restore the balance that had been upset. The Hoysala power had by then been growing for more than a century, since the days of Vishnuvardhana, who had embarked on a policy of quiet consolidation at home and had pushed the Cholas out of the Mysore plateau. In the sad closing years of Kulottunga III, Hoysala power was at the peak of its glory, Pratapachakravartin Vishnuvardhana Vira Ballaladeva II was ruling over Nonambavadi 32,000, Banavase 12,000, Huligere 3,000, the two Beluvolas and Masavadi right upto Heddore, from his capital Hallavura alias Vijayasamudra, and his Queen Padumaladevi is stated to have been ruling at Hose Hadangili (ARE 495 of 1914). Another of his queens was a Chola-mahadevi, probably a Tamil Chola princess, which connection would explain his predilection towards the Cholas in their struggle for survival against the growing might of the Pandyas. Ballala's contribution to the prolonging of the life of the Chola empire is handsomely conveyed by a description of Ballala as 'Chola-rajya pratishtha- charya' (= the establisher of the Chola empire) and 'Pandya-gajakesari' (= the lion to the Pandyan elephant). His son Vira Narasimha is said to have marched against Srirangam during the reign of the father (circa A.D. 1217). He too assumes various titles to the same effect, like Chola-kula-eka-rakshaka, Mahadoorvipalanirmulaka, Chola-sthapana, and Pandyakhandana. From their first interference in the affairs of the southern dynasties in the crucial years A.D. 1216-18, for at least about a quarter of a century, the Hoysalas made a big bid, and almost succeeded in the attempt, to establish their influence and power over the entire peninsula. We hear of the presence of Hoysala troops at Kanchipuram about this time, while their records are found at Tirumalavadi and Tirugokarnam, and even south of Pudukkottai in connection with the efforts to confine the Pandyas to their traditional boundaries. Vira Somesvara, the son and successor of Vira Narasimha II, in fact settled himself down in the heart of the Chola country with his capital at Kannanur-Koppam, eight km. north of Srirangam, to control the strategic and commanding position over the entire southern region. One of his generals Ravi deva captured in A.D. 1245 Kana nadu, which lay south of the Pudukkottai region, the traditional Chola-Pandya boundary. Some semblance of a struggle was maintained even as late as A.D. 1264, when Vira Somesvara made a fresh attempt to challenge the Pandyan ruler, which resulted in his defeat and death in a battle fought near Kannanur, his southern capital. Somesvara was succeeded by Vira Ramanatha, whose powers were soon curtailed by the decisive victory of Jatavarman Sundara Pandya I over the Chola Rajendra III, who was supported by the Hoysalas. Vira Ramanatha and Rajendra III dragged on, and in a final act of destruction, Maravarman Kulasekhara, the successor of Sundara Pandya, inflicted a death-blow to the Cholas in a battle fought about A.D. 1279, thus formally closing in that year the grand chapter of Chola history. We hear no more of Rajendra III or of the Cholas.

But, in the years between A.D. 1216 and 1279, the Hoysalas under three successive rulers* contributed considerably to the temple-building activity in and around their southern capital of Kannanur Koppam. Their benefactions to the Sri Ranganatha-svamin and Jambukesvarar temples have been dealt with in the respective sections.

Here we shall deal briefly with the temples and shrines that they erected on their own in this region. They are:

1. Vallalisvaram, Tiruvanaikka
2. Padumalisvaram, Tiruvanaikka
3. Somalisvaram, Purisaikkudi, Pachchil kurram
4. Tyagavinodisvaram (in the third prakara of the Tiruvanaikka temple)
5. Prasannisvaram, Tiruvanaikka
6. Posalisvaram, Kannanur
7. Venugopalsvamin shrine, Srirangam

TIRUVANAICKA

1 VALLALISVARAM

2 PADUMALISVARAM

With the establishment of his (secondary) capital at Kannanur, Vira Somesvara converted the Srirangam island and the area around it into a veritable citadel, and in addition embarked upon a temple-building activity that, for the short span of time that the Hoysalas were there, should be termed profuse. Vallalisvaram, the first of the two temples built in the northern suburb of Tiruvanaikka, was in memory of his grandfather (Pratapachakravartin Vishnuvardhana) Vira Ballaladeva II who ruled from his capital of Hallavura alias Vijayasamudra (Hadagalli taluk of Bellary district). His queen Padumaladevi also joined her husband in ruling the kingdom, and from a record at the old capital, we learn that she ruled at Hose Hadangili (ARE 495 of 1914). In the name of this grandmother, Somesvara built the other temple, the Padumalisvaram.

There were at least three royal ladies by the name of Somala devi in the Hoysala family; one of them was the queen of Vira Narasimha II and mother of Somesvara. An inscription (SII, VII, No. 1043) found on a rock to the north of the Gokarnesvarar temple on the way to the natural spring at Tirugokarnam reads as follows: 'Svasti sri: tribhuvanachakravartigal Sri Irasarasadevarkku—yandu 10-avadu Toraisamuttirattu Sri Posalavira Sri Narasingadevar maganar Somisvara devar maataa Somaladeviyar'. Another was a sister of Narasimha's (Ep. Car. IX, Intro., p. 21), and a third one was the queen of Somesvara, who died in A.D. 1253. From a record in the Jambukesvarasvamin temple at Jambukesvaram, we get the location of this temple as being at Purisaiikkudi in Pachchil-kurram, a sub-division of Rajaraja valanadu; we also learn that it was built by Vira Somesvara as a pallippadai for Deviyar Somaladeviyar. It seems probable that the Somaladevi for whom this sepulchral temple was built was his mother and the queen of Narasimha II, referred to in the inscription quoted above. The record, dated in the fifth year of Vira Somesvara, gives the details of the income in paddy from different kinds of lands made over by the king to provide for worship and offerings to the deity in the temple of Somalisvaram Udaiyar (ARE 124 of 1936-37). In dealing with the Sri Ranganathasvamin temple, mention was made of a Somaladeviyar (ARE 22 of 1891), in the 25th year of Rajaraja III (i.e., A.D. 1241); the Government Epigraphist considers that this lady should be identified with the sister of Narasimha who was one of the queens of Rajaraja III. This construction lends weight to the support that the Hoysalas gave their kinsman by marriage which determined the direction of the Chola-Pandya conflict for power for the next few decades.

TYAGAVINODISVARAM

Another record from Jambukesvaram found on the north wall of the third prakara of the Jambukesvarasvamin temple, dated in the 22nd year of Vira Somesvara (beginning with the introduction Samastabhuvanasraya) mentions that one Kalvakkur Tyagapperumal of Posala Vira Narasimha chaturvedimangalam built a shrine for 'Tyagavinodisvaram Udaiyar' in the third prakara of the Jambukesvarasvamin temple and bought land belonging to the temple for 40,000 kasus and endowed the same for worship and offerings in the shrine. Incidental mention is also made of his gifting a tiruvasi (aureole) for Chandesarar (ARE 118 of 1936-37).

PRASANNISVARAM

Very little is known about this temple; possibly it was erected in the time of Vira Ramanatha, as the king figuring in the relevant record assumes the title of Rajakkal-nayan. On the gopuram of the Rajarajesvarar temple at Jambukesvaram is a record of Pratapachakravartin Vira Ramanatha of doubtful date mentioning a gift of land by a servant of Nagala Mahadevi to the shrine of Prasannisvaram Udaiyar alias Rajakkal-nayanar situated on the western side of the temple of Tiruvanaikka Udaiyar. The signature (Malaparoluganda) of the king is given at the end of the record (ARE 92 of 1910). (All records of Somesvara also contain at the end the sign manual of the family, viz., Malaparoluganda engraved in Kannada characters).

KANNANUR KOPPAM

BHOGESVARAM) UDAIYAR TEMPLE

About 16 km. north of Tiruchirapalli lies Samayavaram, the centre of a celebrated Sakti cult; a little to its north is the temple called Posalisvaram (or Hoysalisvaram, 'Posala' being the Tamil rendering of 'Hoysala') in the inscriptions, the name current being a corruption thereof, namely, Bhogesvaram.

In the 25th year of Hoysala Vira Somesvara, this temple was built of granite stone by the Hoysala ruler in truly Chola style in the new southern Hoysala capital called Kannanur Koppam, in the Chola country. By a strange irony of fate, it is again here that the Hoysalas were overthrown by the Pandyas.

On plan the temple consists of the garbhagriha (8.15 metres square), the ardhamandapa (5 metres long) and the mukhamandapa (11.20 metres square), all resting on a common adhishtana. There is a manimandapa in front with flights of steps in the flanks. The vimana is two-tiered and the sikhara is round. There are devakoshtas but now there are no sculptures in them. The simplicity, immensity and majesty of the building are admirable. Over the cornice of the garbhagriha, there is a row of birds. The Devi shrine, close to the mukhamandapa, is perhaps a later structure.

The Posalisvaram is a Hoysala monument built in the Chola country with all the characteristics of the Chola style, and is a striking relic of a great dynasty that ruled in South India for more than three centuries.

In the 25th year of Vira Somesvara is a record from the north wall of the third prakara of the Jambukesvarasvamin temple at Jambukesvaram, which mentions that he consecrated a temple at Kannanur for the merit of his mother Kalaladeviyar, called Posalisvaram Udaiyar temple, and made a grant of the paddy derived from the villages of Narasingamangalam, Kannanur, Ottanur, Sengavur and others in Rajaraja valanadu ('on the northern bank'). We learn from this record that the river Kaveri had breached its banks and had caused extensive damage to some lands and that these lands were reclaimed during that year (ARE 18 of 1891; also ARE 122 and 123 of 1936-37).

Some of these temples and shrines are referred to in another inscription from Jambukesvaram belonging to the reign of Vira Somesvara, beginning with the introduction Samasta-bhuvanasraya. It remits taxes from the third year of the king on 32 velis of devadana land belonging to the temple (of Jambukesvaram) and to the shrines of Viracholisvaram, Padumalisvaram, Vira-Narasingisvaram and Somalisvaram in Vada Tiruvanaikka; these lands were subsequently converted into tirunamattukkani land for the consideration of a payment of 1,10,000 kasus (ARE 119 of 1936-37). (Pls. 388-90).

VENUGOPALASVAMIN SHRINE

In the southwest corner of the fourth prakara (Akalankan Tiruvidi) of the Sri Ranganathasvamin temple at Srirangam, there is a small Hoysala shrine called the Venugopala Krishna shrine. It has certain purely Hoysala stylistic features and so is not in harmony with the otherwise typical Chola idiom of the main temple.

The Venugopala shrine consists of the garbhagriha, the ardhamandapa, and the mukhamandapa and it seems to rise from a pit, as the area round about has risen in level during the past eight centuries. The stone used is granite, unlike in the Hoysala temples of the homeland, built of soft soapstone. The outer walls of the garbhagriha are not covered with panels of sculptures of gods, men and beasts, of delicate workmanship, as in typical Hoysala temples of Dvarasamudra (Halebidu = old town) and its neighbourhood, but are ornately decorated with devakoshtas and kumbha-pancharas. These niches are adorned with female figures of exquisite beauty, bedecked with beautifully sculpted clothes and ornaments. One is playing with a parrot, another is having her toilet, applying the tilak with the help of a mirror. Are they Gopis dancing around Krishna? The ceiling of the mandapa contains contemporary paintings, for whose preservation credit is due to the State Department of Archaeology, Tamil Nadu. (See figs. 10, 11, 12, 13 of Sri Ranganathaswamy temple by J. Auboyes, and N.S. Ramaswami, Sunday Standard, Dec. 12, 1976). This is a gem of a Hoysala temple set in an outstandingly Chola realm.

Thus the Hoysala period marks a phase of considerable activity in the field of temple-building, and their preoccupation with the Pandyas did not prevent them from promoting this activity; unfortunately, these buildings do not share with the temples in the heartland of the Hoysalas either their charm or the ornate quality of stone-carving. These temples, however, belong to a class of their own, which we would term Chola-Hoysala. (Pls. 391-400).

TIRUVENKADU

1 SVETARANYESVARAR TEMPLE

Tiruvengkadu lies midway between Sirkali, the taluk headquarters (12 km. from it) and the famous Sangam period seaport of Kaverippumpattinam in the Tanjavur district. It was the birth place of the saint Pattinattar, who came to be called Tiruvenkadar after his native place. The wife of the Tamil Saint Siruttondar also hailed from this place and hence bore the name of Tiruvenkattu Nangai. Appar, Sambandar and Sundarar have sung the praise of the Lord of Tiruvenkadu. In ancient days, Tiruvenkadu was part of the larger complex known as Nangur, which name is applied today to a small village about 5 km from Tiruvenkadu. So in the inscriptions of the Chola period, Tiruvenkadu is referred to as Nangur and the deity of the temple here is referred to as Tiruvenkattu Udaiyar. According to local legends, the Asura Maruttuvan performed severe penance and the Lord pleased with his devotion gave him his sula as a boon, which the asura used for the destruction of the devas and the mortals; and Siva to destroy this evil doer took the form of Aghoramurti and killed the asura. A majestic representation of this deity is housed in a south-facing shrine in the northwest corner of the first prakara.

The oldest inscriptions of this temple are found not on the walls of the central shrine or its mandapas but on the eastern and western gopurams and on pillars which are now found round the mulasthanam. The earliest of these inscriptions is engraved on a pillar forming part of the mulasthanam wall on the north side. It relates to the second year of a Rajakesari who on the basis of the biruda of Perunarkkili Solar mentioned in the inscription should be none other than Aditya I (A.D. 870 to 907). Thus this temple existed in some form even in the days of Aditya I. Among the other Early Chola period epigraphs may be mentioned three, all relating to gifts to the temple—one by Sadirayan Uttamasiliyar, wife of Vannadudaiyar, another by a queen of Uttama Chola and a third by a lady called Aruran Ambalattadigal (ARE 482 to 486 of 1918). On the west inner gopuram there is a record of the fourth year of the Parakesarivarman 'who took the head of the Pandya' (ARE 497 of 1918).

The earliest inscription found on the wall of the central shrine belongs to the second year of Rajaraja I referring to a gift of gold by a merchant of Adirayamangalyapuram in Merka nadu and mention is made of an organization called the 'Parthiva sekharaterinda kaikolar'. A sixth year inscription of Rajaraja I's time lists out the gifts to this temple made by the members of the royal family including Sembiyan Mahadevi, though no chronological pattern is followed in the enumeration. The gifts include the copper vessels presented by this royal lady in the fourth regnal year of her son, Uttama Chola, gold ornaments studded with precious stones gifted in the sixth year of the same ruler, a gold image of Chandrasekhara devar, gold and silver ornaments studded with precious stones and a gold pot, all gifted in the sixth year of a Rajakesarivarman and finally gifts made in the tenth and the 11th regnal years of Uttama Chola by his queen and his mother Sembiyan Mahadevi.

(a) In the 26th year of Rajaraja I, one Kolakkavan set up the image of Vrishabhavahanadevar in the temple and made a gift of money for offerings and jewels for the image (ARE 456 of 1918).

(b) In his 27th year, certain persons of the Rajaraja Jananathaterinja parivarattar jointly set up a copper image of the Consort of Rishabhavahanadevar (ARE 457 of 1918).

(c) From a 28th year record of the same ruler, we hear of Nakkan Lokachintamaniyar, mother of queen Villavan Mahadeviyar of Rajaraja I making a gift of gold for a lamp. In this inscription Nangur nadu is said to be in Vadagarai Simhendra valanadu (ARE 447 of 1918).

(d) In the same year mention is made of an image of Adavallar in the temple of Tiruvenkadudaiyar in Nangur in Nangur nadu, a sub-division of Rajendrasinga valanadu for whom gifts of gold were made by Kuttan Viraniyar, a queen of Rajaraja I (ARE 449 of 1918).

(e) In the 27th year of Rajadhiraja deva I, an image of Pichcha devar (Bhikshatanar) was set up (ARE 451 of 1918) and extensive endowments were made for its worship; gold and silver ornaments were also gifted. (Incidentally we find the nadu being also called Vadagarai Nangur nadu).

(f) In the 29th year of the same ruler, a lady by name Tuppayan Uttamasoli set up the now famous metallic image of Ardhanarisvarar and made tax-free endowments for its worship.

(g) In the 30th year of 'Rajakesarivarman alias Udaiyar Rajadhirajadevar', it is mentioned that one Amalan Seyyavayar set up this image (of Pichchadevar) and gave lands for its requirements, presented gold and silver ornaments, opened a charity house and sought and obtained from the king's father Rajendra I lands which he gifted to the temple (ARE 450 of 1918). We learn from another record of his 34th year that he had a queen by the name of Trailokyamudaiyar whose mother Araiyan Nambanangai made a gift of sheep for lamps (ARE 446 of 1918).

(h) In the tenth year of Vikrama Chola there is a reference to a pavilion in the temple called Vikkirasolan tirumandapa (now found in front of the shrine). The king was seated on the south side of the steps of the pavilion when he made a gift of land in Peruntottam, called Kaliyugakanna chaturvedimangalam in Adiyamangai nadu in Rajadhiraja valanadu for a matha set up in the street called Vikramasolan tiruvidi (ARE 473 of 1918). In the 15th year of his successor there is mention of an image of Devara devar (ARE 470 of 1918).

(i) Thus throughout the Chola period, particularly during the Middle period, this temple received great attention at the hands of the kings, queens, noblemen and local citizens, who made extensive endowments for worship and festivals. During the Later Chola period, the deity acquired the sanskritised name of Svetaranyesvarar, meaning Ven-kadu-udaiyar.

(j) In the post-Chola period, the Pandyas who held sway over this region and later the Vijayanagara chiefs in charge of Solamandalam paid equal attention to the temple.

The present structure is attributable to the early years of Rajaraja I, in whose period and his immediate successors' the temple received the attention of the king as well as the community, their major contribution being the set of beautiful bronzes.

Some of these were miraculously recovered in big treasure troves unearthed in stages some years back. The icons included the famous images of Ardhanarisvarar and Chandesvarar now kept in the Madras Museum. Images of Nataraja identified with Adavallar, Sivakami, Somaskanda, a seated Devi and a Bhoga Sakti are now in the temple itself. Metallic images of Subrahmanya with His Consorts, Vrishabhavahana devar and His Consort, Bhikshatanar, Kalyanasundarar, Kannappar and others are now housed in the Tanjavur Art Gallery besides a pair of metallic images of Nataraja and Sivakami (see illustration).

The Nataraja* image bears an inscription on the pedestal which reads as follows:

"Svasti Sri Desi Abhayaniidhiyabharana Nayakar Sri."

This beautiful icon representative of the age is highly ornamented and demonstrates a pose in the dance style known as Desi as different from Suddha Nritha. The expression has the following meaning:

Desi: a style of dance; Abhayaniidhi: a store-house of sympathy and protection; abharana: bejewelled; Nayaka: lord—the Lord who is the embodiment of abhaya, whose person is heavily bejewelled and who stands in a pose of the Desi style of dance.

On stylistic grounds, as well as on the basis of the epigraphy of the inscription, this image belongs to the Middle Chola period and is coeval with the Ardhanarisvarar icon (plates 350, 351, also plate 349 of Middle Chola Temples). Though one cannot be quite as assertive about the date of the Sivakami icon as one could be in respect of Nataraja, it would not be far wrong if we would date it as of about the same date, though the delineation of the face would tend to indicate a subsequent date. These icons are, however, both of the Middle Chola period.

MEL-SEVUR

VRISHABHAPURISVARAR TEMPLE

Mel-Sevur lies in the Gingee taluk of the South Arcot district. There is a Siva temple in this village called that of Vrishabhapurisvarar. It contains fifteen inscriptions. One of them, dated in the second regnal year of a Parakesarivarman, is found on the base of the central shrine (ARE 215 of 1904). We are not certain if it could be assigned to Parantaka I. If it could be, then it would be the earliest inscription in this temple. But there is another inscription here of the 21st year of 'Maduraikonda Parakesari'. This is certainly an inscription of Parantaka I (ARE 217 of 1904). This is found on the south face of the mandapa in front of the central shrine. It records a gift of sheep for a lamp. It is evident that both the central shrine and the mandapa in front of it belong to the period of Parantaka I. In the same (south) face of the mandapa there is a mutilated inscription (ARE 218 of 1904) of the 37th regnal year of a Rajakesarivarman. This makes mention of Kannaradeva, the Rashtrakuta king. We cannot identify the ruler. Its regnal year is too high for it to refer to Rajaraja I. We do not know if it belongs to Kulottunga I.

There are three inscriptions of the days of Rajaraja I (A.D. 1008 to 1011). One, of his 23rd year, (ARE 212 of 1904) registers an allotment of paddy to certain temple servants: that of his 24th year records a gift of two lamps. The 26th (or is it the 29th?) year record is built in.

Of the two inscriptions of the days of Rajendra I, one has lost its date (ARE 211 of 1904). The other, of his 10th year (A.D. 1022; ARE 214 of 1904), is damaged. It relates to a gift of a lamp.

On the south wall of the central shrine, there is an inscription of the 27th year of Rajadhiraja deva I (A.D. 1045), which records a gift of ninety-six sheep for a lamp.

A gift of 32 cows was made in the 45th year of Kulottunga I (= A.D. 1115). On the east wall of the first prakara, there is an inscription of the 13th year of Tribhuvanachakravartin Rajadhiraja deva II which records a gift of land made by Sengeni Ammaiappan Pandi alias Rajaraja Sambuvarayan. This mentions that in the fifth year of the king's reign, the donor's grandfather conquered the Pandyan country. The last inscription here is one of the 13th year of Kulottunga III (A.D. 1191; ARE 223 of 1904) which records that two Chiefs pledged themselves to be loyal to Sengeni Ammaiappan Rajaraja Sambuvarayan 'who took the Pandyan country'. The Sambuvarayans were a powerful class of distinguished warriors closely associated with Rajadhiraja II and Kulottunga III in their wars against the Pandyas.

The hard core of the temple comprising the central shrine and the mandapa in front of it was thus in existence at least from the period of Parantaka I.

An image of Goddess Uma Bhattarakki was set up by an individual belonging to the regiment, Jananatha terinja valangai velaikkarar in the 22nd year of Rajarajakesarivarman alias Rajaraja deva (I) (A.D. 1007), according to an inscription found on the south wall of the mandapa in front of the central shrine.

Krishnan Raman was a great general under Rajaraja I, and among the numerous contributions made by him towards temple building in the Chola-Desa, mention was made in Middle Chola Temples (pp. 22-23) of the construction of the tiruch-churru-maligai in the Rajarajesvaram temple at Tanjavur, the then Chola Capital. He hailed from the village of Amangudi, otherwise called Keralantaka chaturvedimangalam in Ve nadu, a subdivision of Uyyakkondan valanadu in Chola mandalam. This village, the birth place of the brahmana general, who bore the alternate name of Mummudisola Brahma-marayan, has retained its old name to the present day and is now a beautiful, small village in the Nannilam taluk of the Tanjavur district.

There is a Siva temple here which in ancient days bore the name of Rajarajesvaram, according to epigraphs found on its walls and it is further learnt that it was built by the general in the name of the emperor. A respectfully small temple, it came up coevally with the great royal chapel at Tanjavur, bearing the same name. The temple appears to have undergone modifications and repairs; but the garbhagriha and the antarala retain their old features. Sculptures of Vishnu, Brahma and Durga are found in the devakoshtas.

Mutilated inscriptions of the days of Rajaraja I and Rajendra I are found on the temple walls. References are found in them to the alunganattar of the brahmadeya of Amangudi, to a Malayalam Kailayan, a madhyastha, to Rajarajavadi, Mummudisola-vaykkal, Rajendrasolan-vaykkal, Parakesari-vaykkal, Madhurantaka-vilagam, provision for feeding three sivayogins daily in the prakara under the supervision of the srikarya, the Rajarajan-kol, the rod for measuring land, a tank called Munnurruvan kulam, provision for the feeding of Mahesvaras on all the nine days of the Chitra festival by a noble lady named Marayan Cholakulasundari, provision for Tiruppadiyam singers, musicians, potters, uvachchars, florists and other service tenure holders.

BILVANATHESVARAR TEMPLE, NAKULESVARAR SHRINE

We have already dealt with the Siva temple at Tiruvallam in our Early Chola Art—Pt. I (pp. 215–220). In the campus of this temple there is a shrine now called that of Nakulesvarar. On the north wall of this shrine is found engraved an inscription dated in the fourth year of Rajendra I, from which we learn that the famous Perumdaram in the court of Rajaraja I and later of Rajendra I, named Irayiravan Pallavayan alias Uttamasola Pallava(rai)yan and the chief of Pambuni kurram in Nittavinoda valanadu (Middle Chola Temples, p. 65) caused to be built a shrine for Rajarajesvaram Udaiyar in the temple of Tiruvallam Udaiyar in the city. He gifted 50 kasus for the purpose of providing for two perpetual lamps to the shrine of Rajarajesvaram Udaiyar described as being in Araisur Vadagai, a hamlet to the west of the city, which is called Tikkali Vallam.

This shrine is thus a foundation of the days of Rajendra I.

NAGANATHASVAMIN TEMPLE

The village of Manambadi, which is in the Kumbakonam taluk of the Tanjavur district, lies at a distance of 10 km. in a northerly direction from Kumbakonam on the Kumbakonam-Lower Anicut-Madras State Highway. On the same road, about a kilometre short of Manambadi, is another village of importance called Solapuram. In the 10th, 11th and 12th centuries, these two villages were part of a common mercantile village known as Viranarayanapuram. In the days of the Middle Cholas (i.e., from A.D. 985 to 1070), this larger village bore perhaps the name of Ilaichchikkudi as we find it referred to in inscriptions of Rajendra I by this name alias Viranarayanapuram (the latter name after a surname of Parantaka I). Today, however, these are two distinct villages separated by a kilometre. There are five main temples in these two villages. One of them is in Manambadi and the others are in Solapuram.

The temple at Manambadi is now known as the Naganathasvamin temple; but in ancient days it bore the name of 'Kailasam Udaiyar temple, situated in the village of Ilaichchikkudi alias Viranarayanapuram in Milalai nadu of Rajendrasimha valanadu' (ARE 97 of 1931-32). It is located south of the main Kumbakonam-Lower Anicut road.

This is a very important temple of the Middle Chola period, attributable to the reign of Rajendra I (A.D. 1012–1044). It is one of a very few temples of this period having a unique group of devakoshta figures, of which mention will be made later. In this respect, it resembles the temple of Panchavan Madevisvaram (now known as Ramanathan-koyil) in Kil-Palaiyaru built by Rajendra I in memory (and perhaps over the mortal remains) of Panchavan Mahadevi, his step-mother and one of the more famous queens of Rajaraja I.*

As many as nine interesting and informative inscriptions have been recorded from this temple (ARE 90 to 98 of 1931–32). The earliest among them (ARE 98 of 1931–32), found on the south wall of the garbhagriha, relates to the fourth regnal year of Parakesari Rajendra I. It refers to a grant of land free of taxes by the nagarattar of Ilaichchikkudi alias Viranarayanapuram for raising a flower-garden, named after the king, for the use of the temple. On the south wall of the garbhagriha is an inscription (ARE 97 of 1931–32) of the fifth year of a Parakesarivarman beginning with the introduction tiru manni valara (so it refers to Rajendra I) which records an agreement made by the Sivabrahmanas of the temple of Sri Kailasam Udaiyar (in Ilaichchikkudi alias Viranarayana-puram in Milalai nadu of Rajendrasimha valanadu) to burn three perpetual lamps in return for the money received by them from one Marai Kodan Patanjali Bhatara of Nangur who was the Devaranayakam of Rajendra Chola deva. There is a fragmentary inscription (on the north wall of the central shrine: ARE 92 of 1931–32) which, from the introduction 'tiru manni valara', is to be attributed to Rajendra I.

On the same wall, there is another inscription (ARE 90 of 1931–32), dated in the 18th year of Rajakesari Kulottunga I and beginning with the introduction pu madu vilanga. It refers to a grant of land in Naganpadi as kuttattuk-kani by the Nagarattar and the temple authorities to Vikramadittan Tirumudukunran alias Virudarajabhayankara Acharyan for enacting the Tamilak- kuttu on five occasions during the Chittirai festival in the temple of Kailasam Udaiya Mahadevar at Viranarayanapuram in Milalai nadu. There is again an inscription (ARE 96 of 1931-32), dated in the 23rd year of Rajakesarivarman Kulottunga I (beginning with the introduction pugal sulnda punari), that records an agreement given by the Sivabrahmanas of Kailasam Udaiyar temple to feed the Apurvi-mahesvaras (pilgrims) in the temple, with the interest on the paddy received by them from a merchant of Gangaikondasolapuram. There is a 38th year inscription (ARE 91 of 1931-32) of 'Rajakesarivarman Chakravartin Kulottunga Chola deva' beginning with the introduction virame tunaiyaga. This is found on the north wall of the srivimana and deals with a gift of some land by the Nagarattar of Viranarayanapuram for the expenses of tiru-vidi festival of the God in the month of Chittirai. There is another inscription (ARE 93 of 1931-32) of the same year (38th year) of the same ruler beginning with the introduction pugal sulnda punari recording a gift of land after purchase, making it tax-free by payment of a consolidated amount to the Assembly of Viranarayanapuram in Milalai nadu, by a merchant of the village for offerings etc. during the seven days of the Chittirai festival. This record is found engraved on the north and west walls of the central shrine.

Another inscription (ARE 94 of 1931-32) found on the west wall of the srivimana mentions a 'Parakesari' (which is a mistake for Rajakesari) Kulottunga, beginning with the introduction pugal madu vilanga, and deals with an agreement entered into by the Sivabrahmanas and the sthanattar of the temple to measure out 111 kalams of paddy annually as interest on 444 kalams owned by the merchant mentioned in the earlier record (ARE 93 of 1931-32) in addition to the gift of the same land for the festival. From the same record we learn that provision was also made for the performance of a kuttu (dance recital) and for feeding the devotees in the Bhaktargal-bhakta matham. Finally there is an inscription (ARE 95 of 1931-32) on the south and west walls of the srivimana dated in the 36th year of a king (whose name or details do not find mention in the record) which registers the order (sam-madaniyoga) issued by the Nagarattar of Viranarayanapuram to the devakanmis and mahesvaras of the temple of Srikailasam Udaiyar permitting the latter to supply daily 2000 lilies from the tank called 'Nambi-Nangai' during the seven days of the Chittirai festival. In this record there is the mention of one Mahesvara Mara Nambi Pichchar.

In one of these records, as we have seen, there is mention of a gift of land in the village called Naganpadi, which was perhaps a part of the village of Viranarayanapuram. It is likely that the present-day village of Manambadi derives its name from the ancient name of Naganpadi—corrupted in course of time.

The temple which is entirely of stone is surrounded on all four sides by a thick brick wall of later origin measuring 36 metres by 20 metres. It consists of a garbhagriha and an ardhamandapa separated by a narrow recess. The entire structure measures 11.45 metres in length and 5.35 metres in breadth. The garbhagriha is a square of 5.35 metres side, each of the three free walls being divided into three bays of 1.30, 2.25 and 1.30 metres width. The ardhamandapa projects eastwards from the garbhagriha by 5.60 metres, its side walls being divided into three bays of 1.80, 2.00 and 1.80 metres. On the south wall of the ardhamandapa there are three niches, one in each bay, which contain three fine stone sculptures exhibiting features of the period. They are: Bhikshatanar, Nataraja and standing (dancing) Ganapati (from east to west). Similarly on the northern wall (outer face) there are three niches, housing Gangajathadharar, Durga and Ardhanari (from east to west). On the faces of the central bays of the three free walls of the garbhagriha there are the images of Dakshinamurti in the south, Lingodbhavar* in the west and Brahma in the north. On the flanks of the three devakoshtas of the garbhagriha, there are decorative koshta-pancharas. In the recesses between the ardhamandapa devakoshtas, there are similar koshta-pancharas; and again in the demarcating recess between the garbhagriha and the ardhamandapa, there are similar koshta-pancharas. Each of these nine devakoshtas is crowned by an ornamental makara-torana, in the centre of which is a low relief sculpture of unusual beauty and clarity. The sri-vimana is ekatala and the griva and sikhara are both circular. The adhishtanam contains kumudam, jagati and padmam mouldings, and all the inscriptions found in the temple are engraved on it.

There is an Amman shrine facing south, located immediately to the north-east of the ardhamandapa.

There are some fine stray sculptures located at odd places in the campus of the temple. An image of Chandesar is found in a brick-shrine at its appropriate place. An image of Surya is kept inside the ardhamandapa; four of the seven matrikas are housed in provisional niches on the inner face of the northern compound wall. The others are not readily traceable. An image of Bhairavar (very fine but broken below the thigh) has been loosely positioned on the eastern face of the ardhamandapa, south of the entrance to that chamber. The temple had evidently the full complement of the ashta parivara devatas.

On epigraphical grounds as well as on sculptural features and distribution, this temple must be attributed to the period of Rajendra I.

Continuing the architectural tradition and style of Sembiyan Mahadevi temples like the ones found at Olagapuram (the Siva temple: see my Middle Chola Temples, pp. 137-141) and bearing, as mentioned earlier, a near-identical relationship to the Panchavan Madevi-Isvaram temple built at Kilpalaiyaru at almost the same time (see ibid., pp. 269-272), the Naganathasvamin temple at Manambadi set the pattern for temple-design and disposition of icons that we find in the Later Chola temples of Kulottunga I's period, as exemplified for instance by the Bhairavar (Siva) temple at Solapuram (close to Manambadi) and the Kulottunga-solisvaram at Chintamani Agaram near Villupuram (see secs. 27 and 47 of Chapter 2).

MANIMANGALAM

- 1 RAJAGOPALA PERUMAL TEMPLE
 2 DHARMESVARAR TEMPLE

Manimangalam is a village in the Kanchipuram taluk of the Chingleput district about 10 kilometres west of Vandalur, a station of the Southern Railway. This place was already famous during the Pallava period, having been the site of one of the battles in which the Pallava king Narasimhavarman I defeated the Western Chalukya king Pulakesin II. Reference to this village is found in the Kuram plates also.

Manimangalam bore the alternate names of Ratnaagrahara or Ratna-grama (SII, III, 27 and 40) and bore also various other names from time to time. During the Middle Chola period, it went under the name of Lokamahadevi chaturvedimangalam; Rajachulamani chaturvedimangalam and Pandiyanai-irumadi-ven-kanda-sola chaturvedimangalam were other names.

In this ancient place, there are a number of temples dedicated to Siva and Vishnu. Rajagopala Perumal temple, Vaikuntha Perumal temple and Krishnasvamin temple are the three Vishnu temples, and the Dharmesvarar and the Kailasanathar temples are dedicated to Siva. We will make a brief reference to only two of them.

Rajagopala Perumal Temple

The ancient name of the deity of this temple was Dvara-pati or Dvaraka-pati, the Lord of the city of Dvaraka, i.e., Sri Krishna, and in Tamil the name was Vanduvarapati. It also bore other names like Sri Kamakoti vinnagar (SII, III, 28, 29 and 30), Puravuvuri Vinnagar and Tiruvaykkulam.

The earliest inscriptions found here relate to Rajadhiraja I. A sixth year Rajakesarivarman inscription that does not mention the name of the king could also be attributed to him, because it refers to the village of Manimangalam by the alternate name of Lokamahadevi chaturvedimangalam. Thus this temple was in existence well before the sixth year of this king (A.D. 1024). In other words, even during the lifetime of Rajendra I, this temple in its present form had come into existence.

The niche sculptures of Vishnu, Tumbikkai Alvar, Vaikunthathar and Vishnu-Durga are noteworthy.

During the days of Rajendradeva (II), the village went under the name of Rajasulamani chaturvedimangalam, in Maganur nadu, in Sengattu kottam, in Jayangondasola mandalam and in another record the later name of Sri Kamakoti Vinnagar alvar is found (SII, III, 29). We come across another General evidently of Rajadhiraja I named Senapati Jayangondasola Brahmadhiraja. He is said to be the son of Kamakavvayal, who gifted certain sums of money to the great assembly and also land at Amanpakkam purchased by her husband Jayasimhakulantaka Brahmamarayar, a nobleman. The above-mentioned senapati is seen making a gift of 4450 kulis of land to the temple of Srimad-Dvarapati alias Sri Kamakoti Vinnagar alvar in the village of Manimangalam, alias Rajasulamani chaturvedimangalam, vide a sixth year inscription of the reign of Vira Rajendra (A.D. 1068). In the records dated in the last decade of the rule of Kulottunga I, the village assumes the name of Pandiyanai-irumadi-ven-kanda-sola chaturvedimangalam in Kunrattur nadu in Kulottungasola valanadu (48th year inscription, SII, III, 31). 1050 kulis of land is purchased and gifted by a private citizen to the temple for carrying the god in procession on new-moon days. In the 18th year of Rajaraja III (A.D. 1234), two brothers, Brahmapriyan and Ahavamalladevan, the sons of Manimangalam Udaiyan Panchanedi Lakshmanan Malaiginiyaninran 'caused to be made' the stone work of a flight of steps with a tiger's head at the bottom (puli mugamana sopanam) for the abhisheka-mandapa in the temple of Vanduvarampati-emberuman (SII, III, 39). An image of Narasimha (Singa-perumal) was set up in the 18th year of Rajaraja III and the main deity is called Mannanar. The village acquires a new name of Gramasikhamani chaturvedimangalam in this age.

Dharmisvarar Temple

The same brothers referred to earlier made provision in the 18th year of Rajaraja III for burning of lamps in this temple whose deity is called in the inscription Tanmisvaram Udaiya Nayanar (SII, III, 41). Some fine bronzes belonging to the Middle Chola period are found in this temple, particularly of Nataraja and Somaskanda.

KADAGODI

7 KASI VISVESVARA (RAJADHIRAJA BHANGISVARAM UDAIYAR) TEMPLE

Kadagodi is a village in the Hoskote taluk of the Bangalore district in Karnataka State. There is a temple here, now called Kasi Visvesvara temple. Its original name was Rajadhiraja Bhangisvaram Udaiyar temple. According to an order inscribed on the basement of the temple (north-east part), 'certain lands, including those that were being enjoyed as kudangai by the Bhangiya family of Kalamangalam, were granted, with exemption from taxes, for the deity Rajadhiraja Bhangisvaram Wadiyar of Pattandur', described as being in Sennai nadu in Vikramasola mandalam* (A.D. 1150?: Epi. Carn., Hoskote, 143). According to an inscription found in the upper portion of the northern wall (to the east), at about the same time, one Kulottungasola Sennai nattu Kularajar granted some lands for the temple (ibid., 145). Another inscription, also on the basement (to the north-east), tells us that certain devotees (among them one Semba Bhattar, son of Naga Bhattar) paid some money to meet the demands of the temple (A.D. 1151?: ibid., 143 a). Apparently, one of the Sivabrahmanas, one Damodara Samundan alias Mudikondasola Brahma marayan of the Bharadvaja gotra, was appointed to hold all the lands of the temple on trust, according to an inscription found on the upper part of the north wall (A.D. 1150?: ibid., 144).

* Vikramasola mandalam was the name given to the geo-political unit known as Tadigaivali mentioned in Rajaraja I's prasasti as among the regions conquered by him (like Tadigaipadi, Nolambapadi, Kudamalai nadu): some portions of the present-day Devanahalli and Hoskote taluks fell under this mandalam.

Mannai nadu seems to have covered a region falling in modern Dodda Ballapur and Nelamangala taluks. Epi. Carn., Vol. IX, No. 11 relating to the former taluk and No. 25 referring to the latter both speak of Mannai nadu of ... nnappadi alias Vikramasola mandalam. Jayangondasola Vanakkovariyan was the commander-in-chief of the Chola army at Mandikere in the days of Kulottunga I (A.D. 1115) and Sattayan alias Virudaraja bhayankara Mannai nadalvan was the gamunda of Mannai nadu. We also learn, from Epi. Carn., Bangalore, IX, Nos. 75, 76 and 77a of Devanbath, that Sennai nadu was part of Vikramasola mandalam, otherwise called Tadigaivali, of which nadu, Rajendrasola Brahamamarayar was the Senapati during the days of Rajadhiraja I, and Kuradi Vasavayya Viman, the gamunda (29th and 33rd year records).

This temple could be attributed to the Later Chola period, and must have been built after the Cholas regained this territory (in the days of Vikrama Chola) after a short spell of reoccupation by the Hoysalas. Could the Rajadhiraja in the name of the deity refer to the first Chola of that name? The temple might then have been renovated in the days of Rajaraja II.

Epilogue

After a long period of splendour, the Chola sun set in A.D. 1279–80. Vijayalaya was the founder of this illustrious line which lasted for four hundred and thirty years (A.D. 850–1280). Their deeds of valour, their magnificent achievements in administration, and their great contributions to art and culture will continue to compel the admiration of generations yet unborn. The Chola ethos is very much a part of our cultural heritage. Not the least of their achievements was the smoothness of transition from one reign to another, unmarred by wars of succession, and the early nomination and association of the heir-apparent with the running of the empire.

The Pandyas who were instrumental in the decline of the Chola empire were themselves overrun by the Muslim invasion from the north, and the struggle for regional independence and religious freedom was carried on by the Vijayanagara empire for about three centuries from A.D. 1336. When the last of their dynasties, the Aravidu, declined, the mantle of the struggle against the invader-rulers fell on the Marathas under Chhatrapati Sivaji, who crowned himself king in A.D. 1674. The kingdom passed from his weak successors into the hands of their powerful ministers, the Peshwas, who became hereditary rulers and made gallant efforts to enlarge the kingdom at the expense of the Later Mughal emperors, but their ambitions received a rude blow at the third battle of Panipat in A.D. 1761.

Meanwhile, the English merchants who had come to trade under the name of the East India Company stayed on to rule, and gradually extended their sway over a large part of India. The angry Chiefs and princes rose in arms in the name of the nominal Mughal Emperor in the first great struggle for independence of 1857-58; this was crushed and India was brought directly under the British Crown. The seeds of Indian independence unsuccessfully sown earlier sprouted not much later, with the formation of the Indian National Congress in A.D. 1885 under the inspiration of Indian and British Liberals who, however, envisioned for India nothing more radical than gradual self-government under the Crown.

After a protracted struggle over several decades, India finally attained freedom (albeit in an attenuated form) in A.D. 1947.

APPENDIX

The kudu ornamentation

The kudu forms the nucleus of all ornamentation on the superstructure of the vimana in Indian temples, whether of the vesara, nagara or dravida styles. In fact, this superstructure is an aesthetically pleasing build-up and elaboration of the kudu or the chaitya window and derivatives thereof.

Kudus with inset figures adorn the cornices of the Pallava rock-cut cave-temples of the seventh century A.D.

In Cave No. 9 at Ellora in the Aurangabad district of Maharashtra State, also of the (early) seventh century A.D., the facade has a frieze of sculptures and two rows of cornices, each adorned with kudus having inset figures.

In the first tala of the dravidian vimana (of Chola temples of the ninth century), a facade of salas (elongated waggon-roofed decorative miniature shrines) is to be found in the middle, with karna kutas (also decorative miniature shrines) at the ends, immediately above the garbhagriha walls on every side.

In the (ruined) Harihara temple no. 3 at Osian near Jodhpur in Rajasthan, phamsana ('wedge-shaped') ornamentation is introduced in place of the salas, with nagara style miniature decorative shrines at the ends.

The Melakkadambur temple has a different set-up. A full-blown kudu is perched astride the first tala, and its crowning simha-mukha rises above the griva and reaches upto the level of the base of the sikhara. Highly evolved decorative miniature shrines serve as karna kutas (see Pls. 102 and 103).

(For a discussion on the phamsana ornamentation, see the article by Michael W. Meister, "Phamsana in Western India", Artibus Asiae, Vol. 38, 2/3 (1976), 167-188.)

A detailed line drawing of a traditional Chinese architectural structure, likely a pagoda or temple tower. The structure is shown in a side profile, revealing multiple tiers. The roof is composed of several layers of eaves, each decorated with a row of stylized, upward-curving tiles. The eaves are supported by ornate brackets (dougong) featuring intricate carvings of mythical creatures and floral motifs. The main body of the tower is divided into sections by vertical lines, suggesting a multi-story design. The drawing is executed in a clean, black-and-white line-art style on a light background.
